PROLOGUE

NIKOLAI STARED DOWN at the man he'd called a friend for many a year he had already grieved as lost out in the winter wonderland, but one whoped against hope had survived somehow. And to see his body now in front of him in this state—having been shot by the woman his frie attacked in the middle of the night in the very military training cer shooter had forsaken for whatever dumb-ass reason—was completely Nikolai's understanding.

He didn't even know what to say, yet he knew that this dead m immediately under suspicion by everybody else. But Nikolai didn' anything and certainly had no explanation for the actions of his frie couldn't even begin to believe that his "friend" had done this.

He looked over at the others and declared, "It's him, no doubt about, before you ask me a million questions ..." He paused, shaking hi "I don't know why he's done whatever he's done. I don't know who been or how's he's been getting by since he disappeared. I don't ever why he would have left in the first place," he explained. "I don't reall how he could possibly have been fine out there all this time." T stopped and added, "Well, that part I probably could answer, at least t degree. His family, his uncle, was from Siberia. If anybody woul winter survival skills, it would be him."

"So why was he here then?" Magnus asked. "Why come f training?"

"I think he wanted to see if you all had any other skills he didn' about. He used to laugh about it," Nikolai shared reluctantly.

"And yet, you are part of the Russian team, so you ought to have the skill set."

"No, that's incorrect," Nikolai stated flatly. "I'm not part of the I team. I'm part of the Swiss team. Just like you have people from countries here on your US team, I am from the Swiss team," he re

"My family moved to Switzerland when I was very young," he shared looked back to the body of his supposed friend. "This guy," he pointed cold dead corpse, "wasn't even part of the Russian team. I don't ... Hover on a special assignment for Russia, but he was talking about I about finding a way to switch his team somehow. He wanted somewhere else, but I don't know that he ever did anything about, a manthing about him was that he was all talk. He had lots of plans, big plans ho he'd I've done actual missions with him. I've been on bases worldwide w laid out too. But never have I seen him do anything even remotely like he's does and had time."

"Yeah, well, apparently I don't know what that means anymore," stated bitterly. He looked over to see Emily, one of the few women an was base, standing and staring at him. He looked at her and frowned. "Hor t knowdon't know anything about this," he said to the men, not wantiend. He discussion to be out in the open.

Yet Emily wasn't moving. He turned to her and asked, "Don't yout that, someplace to be?"

is head. "No, I don't," she snapped. "I think, at this point in time, anything the he's happening in the training base needs to be something the rest of us get n know about. Instead of us finding out through the grapevine afterward," sly know shooting Magnus a look, which spoke volumes about the confidence then he in all of them telling the truth.

o some Magnus stared at her for a moment and didn't say anything, to some Magnus stared at her for a moment and didn't say anything, to some didn't say anything more?"

"Not really, outside of the fact that he came over on the Russian te wanted to shift to another country. And, yeah, I'd thought we were taken but I obviously can't tell you much more than that."

"Is he married? Does he have family? Would he have been coerc ne samedoing something like this?"

"No, he would have thought it was a lark," Nikolai declared flat Russian always thought he was better than everybody else around him. He n other knew that he was very, very good at winter survival skills, and he kneed he could live out here way easier than anybody else. Honestly he le came "And you didn't think to tell anybody that?" Magnus asked.

eaving, "Tell them what? He disappeared. Besides, all that he could do to bethat he was must be in his file. I didn't know what had happened it. The After being missing all this time, I assumed he probably died out the ins. I...just didn't know how or why," he noted. "And, for that, I'm sorry bec ith himhe needed my help, I presumed he would have asked for it, and, some this didn't, I have to presume he had plans all on his own."

"And yet, if he wanted to move to another country, such as to the l. somewhere else, this is hardly the place to do it."

Nikolai "I know. I know, and he talked a lot about that, but I don't kno on theever would have gone." He looked over to Emily again, still staring at nestly, Ihard look on her face. He frowned. "You don't need to be here. Thing this private business."

"A man is dead," she stated. "It is no longer your private business.' Du have He flushed, realizing that she wouldn't back down, and that none men here seemed to want to help him in that regard. "I don't have also that iselse to tell you. I don't know what happened. It doesn't look good for to hearand I guess in your minds it doesn't look good for me," he stated, as he said, his head. "But I didn't have anything to do with this, and I don't see he she hadcan possibly blame me for something that he's done."

"We aren't blaming you," Emily said immediately. "So take the chen heyour shoulder already."

It him? He glared at her. "A little hard to do when everybody's staring at n this is something I'm involved in. I don't know what he was up to. am andmy friend, but he was also an arrogant know-it-all, and, if he though friends, would be something he could do to mess up everything here, he would

DAY 1 EVENING

Nikolai Kersaf didn't even know where to go or what to do. Houtside, bundled up, and he had a craving worse than he ever had bef wanted to smoke so bad, but he'd quit years ago. So even the fact wanted one right now revealed his elevated stress—which needed to d because it wouldn't get any easier, at least not for a while. When the burst open behind him, he stiffened. When he heard a woman's voice him, he wasn't surprised to find Emily Deshawn. "I'm fine," he mi with a wave of his hand. "Go back inside."

"You say that, but you've received a major shock and want to be a deal with it. Yet this is not the place to do that."

"Really? And who made you the expert here?"

"Nobody, but I learned from watching other people in this base d the same foolhardy, egotistical attitude of always being right."

Startled, he looked over at her. "I'm not egotistical, and I'm sure not any of those other things you're thinking, and I'm especia suicidal," he snapped. "So, you can get that idea right out of your head

"I'd love to," she declared in a clipped tone, but her gaze was sea as she studied his features, making him that much more aware of l their surroundings. Her cheeks were quickly turning bright pink, and s slapping her hands together to try to stay warm.

He motioned at her body. "You'll freeze to death if you don't ¿ inside."

"I won't," she argued, "at least not while I try to coerce you back building." She had a forced smile on her face. "Look. I know you friend, and you're bound to be really upset right now."

"More than a friend and more than a loss," he bit off. "It's a betraga lot of things that I'm still trying to figure out, and I don't know pigeonhole it yet. I'm out here trying to think, and I do that best alo stated pointedly.

"I get it," she noted, with a half smile, "but that doesn't mean yo that option right now. If you don't want to hear it from me, one of the will tell you the same thing." She shook her head, as she motioned at t behind her. "I volunteered."

hing of "That's correct," Nikolai confirmed. "Eric hadn't really wanted to and do the games either. He thought them foolish and felt he was about tothings. He wanted to go out with live rounds and told me, if people we like angood, then they wouldn't get shot."

At that, Magnus looked at him with one eyebrow raised. "So, he v friendskind of a maverick, was he?"

of those "Yes," Nikolai agreed. "He didn't have a whole lot of respect for d makeas you can tell."

ed that "Got it. So did he have any other friends here?"

"Not that I would have called his friends. He was friendly enough people here, but I'm not sure how many people really understood weel, and, was on the inside though."

It "Did he ever get violent with you?" Emily asked. When he frow Nikolaiher, she shrugged. "The guy reappeared here just to attack Chris fit." Whalen—twice. Did you ever see that level of violence?"

Magnus "Umm." Nikolai stopped and frowned.

"Obviously that question took a little more thinking," she noted which islooking straight at him. "What is it that you're trying not to say?"

I don't "It's not that I'm trying not to say it. I'm trying to put into hateversomething that I hadn't really considered."

"How about spitting it out," Mountain declared. "We really don eded to time for more than that."

owever, Nikolai glared at him. "For you guys, this is easy. However, as flatthing," Eric was, this was a friend of mine."

"I'm not sure he's a friend as much as he might have used you rection.him fit in," Emily suggested.

n't that Nikolai frowned, then surprisingly slowly nodded. "And that is sor he would do."

"Was he socially awkward or something? Because I sure don't rer ve beenseeing that side of him," Emily noted.

It hand. "Not at all. He always seemed to have a group of people aroungly here almost as if he developed fan clubs easily. People either really loved games really hated him, but he generally had more fans than enemies, if that ad livesense."

ret Eric "It does." Magnus nodded. "I've seen people like that before to here is the real question. Does any of that help us?"

"I think it does," Nikolai stated. "If Eric was trying to set up som ve suchhe wouldn't have had any trouble getting people to do his bidding." ere any "You mean to help him?" Mountain asked.

"Yes," Nikolai agreed. "And Eric would have done it in such a was that they would have thought it a lark or a game, or that he had some tog clearance, or that he was the chosen one to do a special mission. An others, had done something such as that, I don't know that anybody woul jumped to participate because the consequences would have been rough, and Eric wouldn't be around to back them up."

to other "Right," Emily noted. "So you're saying that, if somebody got ca ho EricEric's web of magical lies, they wouldn't have told anybody?"

"I don't think so," Nikolai murmured. "He was really a specialist vned atkind of winter survival living, and yet it didn't occur to me to ask wissy andbothered to come. Everybody here came to learn, and Eric had already all."

"So why was he even here?" Emily asked.

calmly, At that, Nikolai looked at Emily with raised eyebrows. "On a assignment. And if this was something he had planned, who would he wordswith? How would he plan it? And more so, why would he have comfirst place, unless to implement this plan somehow?"

't have "What plan though?" Magnus asked, looking at Mountain. "What plan? Eric attacked Chrissy and Whalen in the middle of the night, but wed as Mountain shrugged. "Because Eric thought Chrissy knew som What went wrong in Eric's world that he would go this pathway to helpwith?"

At that, all of them turned to look at Nikolai. "I don't know, and, nethingnever did drugs, if that's the question. He thought drugs were nasty, i and made you do things you didn't want to do. He believed continembereverything. Eric was... he was both a man's man and a ladies' ma women loved him because he was really macho, even arrogant, but ir id him, that they seemed to love." Nikolai shrugged. "Not sure how that wo him orthe men also really liked Eric. He had that ... charisma, I guess you makescall it. I think that's why everybody was so stunned when he disappecause, from their perspective, he could do everything. Yet, when it so. Buthe'd been caught out there and had presumably died, they didn't knothey were supposed to think about him anymore because it didn't gel viething, image they had of him."

The conversation died at that point in time, and Emily turned and around the dining room, then whispered to Magnus, "Will you tell exay that about Eric?"

ld have She frowned at him. "In case somebody here is involved?"

"Of course," he stated. "Wouldn't you?"

"Sure," she said, "absolutely I would. And, if someone was involught inthis point, when things have gotten so bad and so deep, I'm not sure I they might go in order to hide that."

in this "Depends on what level of involvement it may have been," Nikola hy he'd"If we find any implication that they had something to do with these done itthey'll do a lot to hide that from us. DAY 2 WEE MORNING HOURS

BY THE TIME the meeting was over, a matter of hours before by Emily's mind floated in circles at the horrible options. The news to village had been attacked several times was troublesome. That some elders had been hurt bothered her more than she could imagine, as she back to her room slowly, her arms wrapped around her chest.

She wondered if she could get any sleep, when Nikolai called out She turned and watched as he strode to her. "Hey," she greeted him.

"You okay?" Nikolai asked her.

She nodded. "Tired." Even as she said it, she yawned.

"Go get some sleep," he murmured. "We'll talk later this morning with that, he headed toward his room.

She watched him go and noted he was only a couple doors awa her.

Before he went in, he turned and smiled at her. "Thanks for com and looking after me tonight." He went inside and closed the door.

She was surprised but pleased at his attitude shift. It wasn't long she was in bed and crashed.

LATER THAT MORNING, Nikolai sat back in the general assembly meetin on base, deliberately trying to keep an eye on everybody as they he news. There were moments of complete shock, followed by a fl questions, as everybody wanted answers as to where Eric had been he'd been doing, why he'd come in, and it went on and on.

Finally Magnus lifted a hand and cut off the ruckus. "Look," he can in a raised voice. "We don't have all the answers, but we're working anybody knows anything about Eric's last few hours, days, weeks we was here, anybody who was friends with him, anybody who knew a about him... please contact us."

One of the men seated at the front shouted, "That would be Nikola "Nikolai has already come forward. However, we need to hear a and everything. One way or another, we'll be talking to everybody base."

eakfast, "Turning everything upside hasn't done a damn bit of good an that the time, has it?" asked one of the men in a surly tone.

of the "Look at how many people are dead," added another one, "but headednow we can find out why and who might be behind some of it."

"Do you really think Eric was behind any of those deaths?" asked to her the other men, who stiffened and straightened up, glaring at ev "Obviously something got to him, or he was injected with dr something."

Nikolai stared at the man. He thought his name was Spencer, the "And, wasn't sure, but he was acting the way people around Eric often acted Eric could walk on water and could do no wrong.

ing out "Sure, I knew him. He was a good guy, a great guy," he declare too proud, as if he were honored knowing him. "He could do dan before anything. That's why I know he wouldn't have done this. I don't kno the hell that story is about him attacking Chrissy and Whalen becaus not the kind of guy he was."

"When you say that's not the guy he was, what kind of guy was Magnus asked immediately.

"Hey, give him a puzzle, and he could sort it out in five minute g of all him a dismantled gun, he'd put it together in seconds. Give him a early the ridiculously far away and a nearly impossible shot. He'd hit it, or, if he urry of hit it quite right the first time, he'd make damn sure he hit it the sean, what third time ... or die trying," he stated. "He was driven, but he was guy. So I don't know what the hell is going on here or how whatever lled outdoing may have been misinterpreted, but he wouldn't have tried on it. If Chrissv."

Thile he "Interesting," Magnus replied. "Okay, we'll talk more in a few mile He looked around at the rest of the room. "Anybody else?"

"And yet, according to the rumors I'd heard, Teegan had some walkedwrongdoing here at the base and was likely taken out because of it." ostly all "I heard those rumors too," she said, "and we should ask Magr Mountain about that now, rather than jumping to any conclusions."

"Notice "Wouldn't that be nice?" he quipped, with a half laugh.

She shrugged. "I would much prefer going to the source. Misinfor runs rampant in this place because everybody's on a need-to-know Since we apparently didn't need to know, we've only now found out t le wereway that this is an issue. "Yeah, things can get like that." He checked the dog barn area and her casually, "You want to take them out for a ski?"

"Yes, absolutely I do." Emily bounded to her feet, laughing, as jumped around, barking.

"I'm taking Benji over there for some more exercise," Joe shared one of my two dogs that got shot. I'm not real happy with the way that healing, and I suspect his sledding days are over."

"Oh, ouch, sorry about that."

"He's also seven, so maybe his days need to be over," Joe muttere a shrug. "Anyway, I need to take a bunch of them out. No games today

"Do you take them out every day?"

"Of course," he confirmed, looking at her.

She nodded. "Anybody else come with you?"

"Lots of times, Magnus, Egan, Barret. Hell, everybody comes of spends time with the dogs." Joe smiled and she laughed.

"I think that's selfishness on their part." She bent over and gave I big hug. "I love having the dogs here."

He grinned. "I know. I have the best seat in the house. Unfortunal many shenanigans are happening at the base to make me happy. So, I' to stay here and to keep hidden away." Joe shrugged. "Whatever the going on with that base is bad news."

"I know," she agreed. "I don't want to be scared all the time, but in not to, especially when I'm there."

"Of course it is, with all the shit going on all the time." Joe "Doesn't mean that it's yours to deal with though. If you stay out of t you might stay out of the line of fire."

DAY 2 LATE MORNING

Swearing to Herself, she quickly contacted Mason via text. He's loyou. Nikolai. He knows you, thinks you might be the one to help him out.

Help him out how?

Yeah, that would be between you two.

He called her and, in a low voice, asked if she was clear to talk.

"I'm in the dining area, and I'm all alone."

"That area always has eyes and ears, so don't ever believe that."

"No, I get that. I was explaining where I am."

"When did he say this?"

"A few minutes ago."

"What's his last name?"

"No idea," she replied cheerfully, "but he knew you. Told me he done several training missions with you in Europe."

"Nikolai, huh? ... Oh, six-two or so, blond, blue eyes? Scar on tl side of his chin?"

"Yeah, that's him."

"Damn, I didn't know it was that Nikolai. If it's him, then I de know him. I'll call him." And, with that, he hung up.

She stared at the phone, shaking her head, wondering if Nikolai come back and talk to her or if this was a done deal for the night. Wl looked up, Magnus strode toward her. He sat in front of her an "Something happened, and I don't know what."

"Lots of things happened, but I'm not sure what you're talking she replied.

"Why don't you fill me in?" She explained about the ski trip an they'd found.

Magnus nodded, explaining that he'd sent the others out to the ca since he was tied up here. Then she'd explained about Nikolai wanting to Mason, and, at that, Magnus's eyebrows shot up, and then he k "That figures. It seems as if Mason's getting to be pretty-damn popular

She looked around and added, "I sure hope dinner is out soon." So to stifle a shiver. "I got a chill out there again." Immediately he frow her. She shrugged. "I'm fine. It's just that waiting for dinner now is me on edge."

"You could go ask for a bowl of something hot, if they have it."

"You also know that they don't appreciate it when you interrup with special requests, right when they're trying to get a meal out."

Almost immediately he smiled. Since her back was to the kitch didn't know what was happening. Magnus laughed. "Somebody ob w he'dnoticed."

Sure enough, Emily turned to see Chrissy walking toward her, can ne righthot bowl of soup. Placing it in front of Emily, she smiled. "No, we do this all the time, so consider it a one-time deal. Don't tell anybody." Just that, she was gone, leaving a very happy Emily behind.

"Oh, he'll have answers, if only to help understand the mind-set of a killer who doesn't give a crap," Mason noted, with a sharp tone. "Remember. Lots of people have died at that base this session, and we need to know how much, if anything, your friend had to do with it."

"To start with, stop calling Eric my friend," Nikolai said, "and I'll start digging into the past and get you as much information as I have. I don't even think a lot of it's on record because he was there, but often on secret missions for his own team. I'm not even sure that Eric would consider what he did as being wrong. I think he would consider it fair game, and God help us if he did have anything to do with the deaths here. That is not something I want on my shoulders."

"It isn't on your shoulders," Mason declared. "That's never been on your shoulders. It's on Eric's."

Mason may have said it, but Nikolai knew in his heart that he was as much part of it as Eric was.

DAY 2 DINNER

EMILY LOOKED FROM her soup, as Nikolai raced back in the dining ro saw her, stopped for a moment, then determinedly walked toward her with a thud across from her and leaned closer. "I spoke to Mason."

"Oh, good," she replied. "I'm glad you got through so quickly."

He nodded. "As I mentioned, we're acquaintances. I didn't realize might have anything to do with this place."

She gave him a wry look. "Not a whole lot Mason doesn't have in," she noted. "Whether he likes it or not, he gets tapped for a troubleshooting."

Nikolai nodded at that. "He's asked me to dredge up informatic Eric's past that I know about, but I never really said anything abc admitted. "I did report something to my CEO at the time, but completely dismissed as being ludicrous. But now I need to get some pen, or maybe even a laptop would be better." He looked at her intent you have anything?"

Frowning, she nodded. "Yeah, I have a laptop."

"Good, that's a good place to start.

He winced. "I know it's a long shot, but any chance I could get yo call Eric my friend anymore?" She was not surprised at his reques starting to realize I didn't know this man at all."

"Absolutely," she said. "Do you want dinner first?"

He nodded, then looked around. "How about we go to you afterward, then nobody will think anything of it—outside of thinking v a relationship going on?"

"That's fine," she agreed smoothly. "Let's eat first, and then I more hot tea back to my room."

"You're really cold, aren't you?" he asked, concern in his voice.

"Yeah, but I'm not sure how much is actual cold versus the fee wondering who this Eric person was."

 $E_{\text{MILY HAD STAYED}}$ up with Nikolai, going over everything that he hawith Eric while here on this base, which was shockingly little.

Nikolai looked at the pad of paper, where she'd been writing do notes. "It doesn't sound like much, does it?" he asked.

"No," she agreed. "However, it does seem that you're rememberi as he was in the past, not as he was here."

Nikolai nodded slowly at that. "Nothing quite like realizing ju much you didn't know somebody."

"Even the idea that your father's death could have had somethin with this is mind-blowing."

"I doubt it's connected. Eric was cocky, as if he had some big dea on here," Nikolai noted, staring off in the distance. "I have no idea w big deal could possibly have been."

"And because he may have had a big deal doesn't mean it was a t that you could have done anything about," she reminded him.

He sighed. "Look. You're almost dead asleep, so go to bed, and we in the morning."

THE NEXT MORNING, Emily woke and stretched, feeling an odd soreness system. And now it was morning ... and the last thing she wanted to roll out of bed. Even as she lay here, she heard the wind howling outs predatory storms seemed to be the norm right now. But she got up dressed. By the time she made her sleepy way into the kitchen, Chrisbusy pulling out a pan of hot cinnamon buns.

Emily's eyes widened as she stared in delight at the treat, and the Chrissy, "Are you trying to make us fat?"

Chrissy laughed. "No," she declared, with a grin on her face. "I been a stressful couple days, and I absolutely love to bake, especially get upset and stressed out." She rolled her eyes. "So, you guys benefit."

"Oh, I'm not complaining." Emily smiled. "That's something shared that his mom used to do."

DAY 3 AFTER BREAKFAST

As soon as they finished breakfast, which happened at a fairly rap given the conversation, Nikolai and Emily walked to meet Magnus a room. Just as they went to step inside, Mountain stepped out.

He looked at Nikolai, and then saw Emily behind him. "I wanted t talk to you after this anyway. Come on in, and let's have a look at where." Mountain frowned at Emily as she tried to get in. When he hand, she shrugged.

"I think I need to see it too."

"Why is that?" Mountain asked, as she stepped forward.

"It's hard to explain, but, more or less, somehow I think I'm Nikolai to trigger stuff, and that's bringing up more information." S determined, and effectively in Mountain's face, or as much as she cc given their size difference.

Nikolai spoke from inside the room. "She's right. She's helped bit," he admitted. "So maybe you should let her come in and take a loo

"Maybe, but what does it mean to you?" Nikolai asked.

"We've got survival needs. We've got ..." She turned back to Mc "Did Eric have a phone on him?"

He nodded. "He did, but it's encrypted."

"Ah, so nobody here can break into it?"

"We have someone," Mountain replied, with a note of amusement working on it. He hasn't got through it yet."

"Ah." She nodded. "I figured somebody here would have that skill

"There is, but it's taking a minute to break in because that phone c huge. Besides, that is our one and only lead, so we are being excautious, trying to gain access to that info."

"Given Eric's history, the psycho may have rigged it," Emily sugge "That could be," Mountain confirmed, "and it could also be nothin we can't count on anything until we get in there."

She didn't say anything to that but watched as Nikolai slowly so through the clothing and the personal belongings. "Is there anything he aric didn't have also at the base? "My father's."

Emily immediately walked over and sat beside him, heari devastation in his voice. "When you say it's your father's name, is "He's common name?"

He looked at her blankly, and then his vision cleared slightly, nodded. "Yes, it's Peter here. Pete, Pedro."

"The thing is, my father' happened a long time ago, so how would Eric even have known?"

I think you two grew up in the same town," she noted. "But did he know a ountain who was involved? Did Eric ever do any research during the time that here on this base?"

"Hmm Voc pour that

"Hmm. Yes, now that you mention it. I did ask him one time what doing, and researching was his answer, but he gave me a halfway la look. When I asked what there was to research, he said something at life after this."

"Right, so that could be his plans for his life, when he got a whole right. I would be what he was doing with his life here, or could be the is I had "I like the life here."

"Yeah, I'm sure whoever Mountain and Magnus have working on through the encryption is probably under the gun to get it finished. Ho they can recover everything Eric was doing."

er, and "That could give us some answers."

"It might, but I still don't see how my father's death could he anything to do with this."

"It depends," Emily added, with hesitation. "Maybe Eric found of somebody who was related to whatever happened to your dad. May hrough, was putting the heat on someone and wanted money to keep quiet about veak or He shook his head. "That won't wash."

"The only people here who are old enough to know anything abo father's death would be who?" She stopped for a moment and then an her own question. "Chef Elijah, the colonel, and Joe?"

He nodded. "Three pretty stand-up guys in my book."

"Sure, but times haven't been easy on any of them all the time, s death knows? Maybe something from their past isn't so honorable," she sug then shook her head. "But still, that doesn't even seem feasible, does it "No, and they're all American, not Russian," Nikolai stated, "a nybody father was killed outside of Siberia."

"I can't imagine what it was like, growing up there."

"Ah, it was fine." Nikolai waved his hand. "The thing is, that he was you're used to, and you don't know any different, so it's not some laughing place to grow up. It's just home." He smiled. "And I was well loved makes all the difference too."

"It does."

"It was hard after my father died, but I had some friends. Whe some, obviously Eric was part of that, but he wasn't a big part of my li lmitted, then. So, who is to say what happened back then?" He frowned. "It fee wrong discussing Eric's world like this."

"Maybe so, but the investigators will do it anyway, so would robably rather be at the forefront of it? And then, if you end up defending Ericopic of as long as there's something good to defend," she stated. "Maybe you should." Magnus eyed him closely. "And, if you don't mind, I'd like to stay close, so I could hear it too."

Nikolai groaned. "Am I under suspicion?"

"No, you're not," Magnus stated, "but something is seriously wrong here, and we don't want to let anybody else out of our sight, not until we have an idea of what's going on," he explained. "So, no, we're not watching you in order to keep an eye on you. We're watching you in order to keep an eye on you," he said, with a laugh. "There's a difference. Meaning that we want to keep you safe. You're the next connection to this mess."

"Why me?"

"Because, depending on what Eric was up to and who he was working for or against, someone might come to you next, either for information or to tie up loose ends."

DAY 3 MIDMORNING

Outside with Joe, Emily spent a few precious hours with the belove laughing, talking, and visiting. Especially with Bertie. She took them for short walks around the compound. They had outdoor facilities as indoor, just because they were the kind of dogs that they were and absloved to bury themselves in snow piles for a good sound sleep. Who were out there, they clearly slept better, deeper than any other anir could possibly imagine. As it was, she was happy to get away from the and the unanswered questions for a bit.

Joe commented on how stressed she looked. She smiled at h nodded. "Yeah, somewhat," she stated, staring off into the white lan "but it's all good."

"Any progress?" he asked, his head tilting toward the complex.

She shook her head. "No, not really. More questions than answers."

He snorted at that. "That's probably a pretty standard proto anything that goes on out here," he noted. "One answer, two answe then it all blows up in your face again."

She smiled. "I've always been of the opinion that the answers happen fairly easily." She snorted. "Instead they seem to be cl themselves all around, and we're not really getting clear-cut explanat any of it."

"That's always the problem, is it not?" Joe chuckled lightly. "The why, and, in this case, Why would he stay out there alone?"

"Here's one theory. It's been suggested that Eric was kind of ego and might have done it as a lark, maybe to prove to everybody that he so he could come back in with a big 'Ha-ha, you idiots were all about me' attitude," she shared. "Personally that seems pretty far-fetc me, but I've certainly seen guys do plenty of stupid things."

Joe pondered that, as he studied the surroundings that he wa comfortable in. "An interesting thought, I suppose. I didn't know well, but I can't say I got along with him either."

She stared at Joe. "Really? And here I thought you got alor everyone."

"Nope, I sure don't," he declared, sounding bitter to boot. "And right. Eric was egotistical. Near as I could tell, he could do almost a better than anybody else and made a point of making sure they all k d dogs, He didn't like taking orders, and he really didn't like being told he c all outdo something or have something. He was a spoiled kid, and, whenew well as had to discipline him"—Joe smirked—"Eric wouldn't budge."

"Did you have to discipline him?" she asked in astonishment.

en they "I don't have to discipline anybody," Joe replied, followed by a la nal shejust tell the bosses. Then they take care of it."

he base "Ouch. I bet that can make you pretty unpopular in a hurry."

"Sure, but I don't care," Joe stated, with a snarly expression. "I'm im and protect the dogs and to help educate the lot of you," he explained, wit dscape, of a smile. "Though some educate better than others."

"Some people just don't want to learn," she declared, sending a k look in his direction.

"They don't want to be told anything," he corrected. "That's pa col for Some people think they know everything, and Eric? He was a prime e ers, and of that."

"What about that Spencer guy?" she asked. "He seemed pretty shoulddefending Eric."

"I've assumed that they felt, with me being nonmilitary, that I shed for have the right to order them around," he suggested, with a grin. "I quite like stomping on their egos a bit to make them all sit up and s quite They can do whatever the hell they want, but I won't have them n the kiddogs if those yahoos don't behave."

"Another difference here is, these are your dogs," she noted,

DAY 3 EVENING

EMILY SIPPED HER tea, and tried to immerse herself in the book aga couldn't. When Nikolai didn't return after ten minutes, she stared watch. When he didn't come back after twenty, she got worried.

Finally she dressed, adding another layer over her long johns, head to see what happened to him. She used the cup of tea as a guise, walked into the kitchen. Several men sat around the dining room in a but the conversation stopped as soon as she got there. She ignored th headed over toward the teakettle, which she put on, and sat quietly, wa

She didn't bother them; they didn't bother her, and neither did th her way, outside of that initial warning. And yet that initial warni probably already enough to start whatever problem there was off again

As she waited, she heard some of their conversations resume, discussion was very nonspecific, which she understood too. If she hadeemed as part of the enemy, that was their problem. She didn't had enemy bones in her body, unless it was against injustices, and that whole different story. But the fact that she was also now friendly Nikolai would only add to her isolation problem.

The reality that she would prefer to be a whole lot more than 1 with him was something for her and her alone to sort out.

Maybe Nikolai too.

As soon as anybody else knew that she was heading in that dromantically, it would change things again—and not in a good wanever understood how you could wind up with a situation of them or u yet that's exactly what she felt she was up against.

She sympathized with the rest of the guys investigating here, tr solve the problems because it seemed as if they were being blackbal for doing their jobs. How did anybody get answers if you did questions? Particularly when so many people were intentionally information. All it would take is a little bit of honesty to get this all But everybody had secrets and things they didn't want to let out in th and, because of that, things would probably get dicey before they lik any better.

As she looked around, she saw no sign of Chef Elijah or anybo from the kitchen staff, but then it was already nine at night. Even it was cold. That same chill crept up on her too, but she knew that Niko in, butcome in here, looking for tea. Yet she saw no sign of anybody in he at her here now. She wondered if Nikolai had gone to bed without coming be checking in on her, but that didn't make sense. He'd made it very claim out he would check in on her, if for no other reason than to stop he as she worrying. Right now, worrying is exactly what she was doing. As she group, around at the dining room again, there was still no sign of him.

em and When she'd had enough of it, she walked over to the dining room iting. With people seated all around it. "Hey, have you guys seen Nikolai at a ey look Smothered grins came from several of them, but they all shocing was heads.

"He came here to get a cup of tea, and yet I don't see him."

Ive any She looked at him intently and tried to remember his name. "I was athink checking in is what I'm asking for," she declared, "but, hey, you ly with any way you want." He glared at her, and she shrugged. "Honestly, v number of accidents and injuries and disappearances around here, you riendly think that everybody would be on a buddy system."

One of the other men nodded. "I was wondering about that," he ac "because it's pretty-damn strange that we're having so much bad luck. irection "I don't know about bad luck," argued one of the men in a hard sy. She "Pretty-damn sure all of this luck is man-made, and that's an us. And different scenario."

She didn't say anything, but her teakettle whistled, which gave her ying to excuse to head back over and to make a cup of tea on her own. As a led just she was done, she smiled at the guys and walked out, knowing to n't ask conversation would immediately turn to her, as soon as she left.

"I have keys," she shared, looking at her with a smile. "So go ahe sleep. It's not an issue."

"Won't that defeat the purpose of me being here?" Emily asked.

"I suspect you'll be tired enough that you drop off anyway."

"No, I won't because I won't allow myself," she declared, determined tone.

"Okay, good enough then." Sydney checked the clock and nodde amazing how time goes by when you're having fun." She gave chuckle. "I'll head off and get some sleep, and I'll see you in a litt And, with that, she walked out the door and closed it quietly behind he

Emily walked over and quickly locked it. Even as she did so, she eerie loneliness creeping up on her. Being here all alone in the clir giving her a weird vibe. Everybody else on the base was asleep or commission, one way or another, and she was all alone in this eerie sile

A career in the military hadn't exactly been something she had planned on doing, yet it felt right from the minute she'd joined up. But diately, being here and dealing with all this, lent a completely different meathe work that she did. Adrenaline had kept her up so far, but now she l't wantfull blast of what was happening all around her. Everybody here skilled as she was, if not way more. Some of the people here had ye years of experience. However, she had to remember that, just because you might feel as if she wasn't as good as some of them, that didn't meantrue. Plus, right now, the job of looking after Nikolai was something was planned on taking very seriously.

That did Nikolai woke several times in the night, mostly a case of a charawareness, confusion over where he was, and that inner sense of sor patient wrong. Even as he woke and drifted off to sleep again, several times Emily on the other bed and surmised that she had refused to return quarters, choosing instead to stay with him.

He appreciated her concern but didn't want her to think that he was or lacking. Such a strange thing to find himself in the position of a care. He'd always been one of those tough, strong guys who never nebody help. Yet here he was, as least until the drugs were out of his system. When he woke the next time, Emily was still crashed in the other led, and bed beside him and Sydney sat at her desk, filling out some paper before Sydney looked up, saw him awake, and walked over.

ngry at He nodded at Emily. "Did she stay all night?"

"She did, indeed," the doc confirmed. "I suggested she head back times, but she wasn't interested. She seemed to think that the intrude come back again."

e door, "I doubt it," Nikolai said, "and, the more I think about it, he mawanted to talk."

at even "Which might lend credence to the idea that he was working wi friend, Eric."

"Either "Maybe," he acknowledged, "and, if that's the case, he's likely to one hasas well versed in survival out there as anybody else in this place."

"They do have a much better idea of what they're looking for oking atleast," Sydney added, with a nod.

"Maybe we need to take the dogs out," Nikolai suggested, "becaus ans thetracker is among them ..." Then he frowned. "One of the two dogs the 's beenshot, he's a tracker."

ke sure At that, she eyed him intently. "And you know that for sure?"

"Yes," he declared. "I didn't want to bring it up earlier, b "wondering if maybe that one was shot on purpose. To put him "And, commission, so that everybody here was even more vulnerable."

"And anybody who would shoot a dog ..."

"I know. Believe me. I'm right there with you," Nikolai stated. "I what someone like that could do to humans. The world's a shitty pla sometimes really shitty people are in it."

She smiled and nodded. "And sometimes really good people are in nething we can't hold them accountable for all the rest of those shits out there."

He laughed, feeling remarkably good. He pulled back the covers and to her of the washroom."

She got up, helped him to his feet, and double-checked her patien took a few tentative steps. Then she let him stand on his own for a sinfirm and he looked good to her. "As long as you think you're okay goin needed alone—otherwise I can give you a hand getting there."

"No, I think I'm fine. You keep an eye on sleeping beauty here with that, he entered the hallway and slowly made his way to the bat hospital As he got there, several other guys stepped out.

DAY 4 BREAKFAST

EMILY SAT IN the cafeteria area and ate breakfast. She would brin something for Nikolai, but his stomach was still too touchy to get food Under orders to go and feed herself, she'd come in, picked up some fo sat in the far corner on her own.

She didn't want to talk to people. She was still rattled about the attack on Nikolai, not to mention the visitor they'd had during the r made her even more concerned about everything going on.

Several of the guys she'd seen around had stopped and asked if s okay. She nodded, while one of them called out, "She hasn't slept wel you?"

"I don't think any of us did, after being rousted in the damn nig replied, as he took a seat across from her.

She nodded. "Right? Not exactly helpful for going back to sleep eithe snorted at that.

Another buddy joined them, and very quickly her table was full. I surprise because it had been a while since anybody had been that for But again, calamity brought people together, and maybe that was thing, or maybe she didn't know anything at all. She wanted to hu finish, but she didn't want to be rude and break up any conversation might happen too.

"Any idea if they found anybody?" one of the guys asked her.

She shook her head. "Not that I know of."

"If anybody here would know, it'd be you," he noted cheerful frowned at him, and he shrugged. "You think everybody doesn't know one of the favorites?"

Frowning, she shook her head. "I'm certainly not one of the favoring not even sure any favorites are here."

At that, he laughed. "That proves it."

She wasn't sure what to make of it or of the odd grins on their face not sure what you guys are talking about, but, no, I don't know anything that happened."

They looked at her in a way that was more of a leer.

She winced, not at all sure she liked what they were implying, the determined to stay out of trouble if she could.

Ig back Then one of the men stated, "We're looking at having a party here lown. or maybe tomorrow night. Why don't you join us?"

od, and She hesitated, not sure what kind of party they were talking "Hardly seems like a party atmosphere," she murmured.

deadly "Maybe that's why we need to do something," he added. "You ca night. It join us."

She gave him a half smile. "Yeah, I'll be sleeping though. I didn't she was sleep last night, so you can bet I'll be trying to tank up on that com l. Have tonight."

"Maybe you need somebody to sleep with," he suggested, with https://example.com/shetone.

She stiffened slowly and then looked directly at him, with a se ther." gaze. "I really don't." And, with that, she got up and walked out.

She may have left the table, but his comments stayed with her for it was a of the day, as she headed over to visit with Joe and came back lookin riendly. Nikolai several times. When she returned later that afternoon, Nikola a goodher over and took her hand.

DAY 4 AFTERNOON

EMILY WAS DISTRACTED, finding it hard to keep focused on her especially when wondering how Nikolai was doing. Yet the fact t work assignment today was physically taxing helped a lot. She was v on the skis for the sleds, which always needed to be waxed. The weather here in the Great White North was known for snow co However, when it became an icy crust, it ate through the wax coating skis pretty fast.

She warmed up the wax, using the hot irons that stayed on the stove, in order to apply the wax. All kinds of modern methods were ave but Joe preferred the old traditions, and she was okay with it. She for relaxing actually, almost numbing. She could do what she needed to in the end, physically exhausting enough that it kept her thoughts of about Nikolai at bay.

Emily kept her head down and continued to work hard. When Joe out to her a little later, she looked up to find Nikolai standing there, g at her, his big hands cuddling a blissful Bertie. Emily immediately back from the skis and glared at him. "What are you doing up?" S beyond mad.

He rolled his eyes at her. "How did I know that would be yo response?" he muttered, with a twinkle in his blue eyes.

She shook her head. "You should be lying down."

He laughed. "Like hell." He gave her a teasing smile. "I've been done that, and I'm not going back again. Sydney also cleared me, by the I can go to bed at my own discretion"—he waggled his eyebrows—" as I'm not alone."

She flushed and cast a quick glance over to Joe, who was g broadly, happy in his own world. She sighed. "You shouldn't say thir that," she muttered.

"Maybe not." He gave a careless shrug. "I don't particularly care moment."

"What are you doing out here?"

"I was here earlier, checking something out," he shared, his face serious. "And now I'm back again, looking at something else. Yo doing what you're doing, and I'll do my own thing over here."

work, "Now that you've interrupted me, I can't ignore you."

DAY 4 EVENING

Hating to be left behind, but knowing this was how this would go waited a good forty minutes for Joe to come back. When he did started to get edgy. In her mind, she had to wonder if he was somehow of this. Had he seen what had happened? Did he have any indication was going on?

She hated the thoughts running around her head, but she found it he to go there, especially when she had nothing to do but sit here and cut dogs. She laughed and played with them and generally took up the equof another hour with them.

Finally she got to her feet and looked down at them. "Maybe I nee track him down," she muttered to herself, and, before she had a ch think it through, she was moving. She quickly pulled on her jacket, up, and, as she did so, the door opened. and Joe walked in. She looked "Hey, I was coming to look for you."

He chuckled. "Oh, I sat down and had a game of cards with th Haven't done something like that in a while. But, with everybody's being so difficult right now," he added, "it seemed prudent to I something, or to at least just sit and visit for a bit."

"I'm sure they all appreciated it too," she said, relieved that he w "With so many people going missing, and you not coming back, I was worried."

"Didn't realize you were waiting for me," he replied, a question tone. "What's going on here?"

"Not a whole lot," she replied, trying to keep the lid on it as long could. "Everybody's happily tucked in here against the storm outside."

He nodded. "They're generally a pretty happy lot." He walked or cuddled a couple of the dogs that had come to meet him.

"They do love you, don't they?"

"Sometimes they love too many people," he replied in a gentle vehice the cuddled them. He straightened up, and she realized he had a big t in his hand. "What's that, dinner or coffee?"

"Coffee," he replied, with a smile. "Nothing like trying to stay w here." She nodded. "You go on now, we'll be fine."
