Van Turner: A Titan Rising from Retirement

By Lisa Kuhne

From Vermont's serene landscapes, Van Turner, the former defenseman for the Carolina Cold Fury, is poised to make a dramatic comeback to the ice. The 31-year-old, who was instrumental in clinching the Cold Fury's second Cup championship three years ago, is leaving his quiet retirement to join the Pittsburgh Titans. Titans coach, Cannon West, confirmed Turner will bolster the team's defense on the third line.

Turner's story is not all ice and glory. In the midst of the Cup finals, it was revealed that he was the offspring of notorious serial killer, Arco VanBuskirk, whose life sentence ended not in parole but lung cancer two years ago. The revelation spurred speculation that Turner's retirement was a response to this unwelcome attention, but in all his press interviews, he maintained that he was content settling down with his now wife, the former Simone Fournier, starting a family and relishing his hockey achievements. The Fournier connection isn't lost on hockey fans as Simone's brothers, Lucas and Max, currently wear the Cold Fury jersey.

While it's big news that this former powerhouse of an enforcer is back on the ice, it's somewhat overshadowed by a tell-all biography recently published that delves into the chilling world of VanBuskirk, including his son's life, through a series of prison journals gifted to a reporter. Turner, who has refused so far to comment on the biography, remains a tantalizing mystery to the hockey world, but it's clear he's prepared to reenter the spotlight. The motivation behind his return may be uncertain, but what's undeniable is his resolve to leave an indelible mark on the ice once more.

CHAPTER 1 Van

CHAPTER 2 Simone

Studying the two open suitcases on my bed, I mentally calculate if I bring dressy clothes. On the one hand, there could be some functic require more than jeans, cargo pants or leggings. On the other hand, there are team events, it's highly unlikely I'll be invited to them.

CHAPTER 3 Van

As I drive home from the arena, I take stock of my emotions. I thought I'd feel different following my first game back. I skated on the line against the Columbus Hawks and had a decent game, considering been out of professional play for three years. My conditioning held fueled by adrenaline, I wasn't as rusty as I thought I'd be. The value fucking good.

It's just... once I walked out of the locker room and left that all the emptiness returned. Of course, I also felt empty walking into th and it doesn't take a genius to figure out I'm mourning the loss of and the game only took my mind off things temporarily. Granted, I'm who cut her loose, but it doesn't mean it's not without effect.

I declined invites to join the team over at their postgame hangor called Mario's. Despite assurances and support from the owner management, coaches and players, I'm too on edge over Arco's book myself up to anyone. I dread the inevitable questions and the risk of rechasing me into a bar is too real. I don't want to fucking deal with besides, I've never been a big people person, anyway.

At least not before Simone came into my life and now that she's took no time at all for me to regress to my surly, walled-off sel preservation and being alone—this is where I feel safest.

Fucking Arco.

I've never felt actual hate toward a single person, but I feel it throughout me every time I think about him. If he weren't dead alread could get away with it, I'd murder him in cold blood without a single my conscience. He was pure evil, a sociopath who thrived on not only and killing but on torturing his son after it was all said and done.

I visited Arco three years ago—ironically after Simone and I has intimate for the first time. He had lung cancer and was dying. I was a

CHAPTER 11 Simone

A RECEPTIONIST SITS inside the lobby of the arena's executive suite. It the second time I've been to the facility, the first being the game day yesterday. Brienne had directed me to where I'd catch an elevator up top floor where double wooden doors lead into the inner sanctum higher-ups who run this organization.

A pretty young blond looks up from surfing her phone. Her immaculate and there's no computer. I wonder if her only purpose is people or answer the phone. She smiles brightly. "You must be Turner. Ms. Norcross told me you'd be coming in to see her for lunch."

I'm surprised she knows that, given she has no apparent apportalendar on her spotless desk, but I nod. "Yes, that's right."

"Follow me," she chirps as she stands.

I'm treated to a short tour as she points out various offices and con rooms. We happen to walk by one office where I see Jenna at a desk, on the phone. She's a media liaison for the team.

Jenna sees me and waves with a bright smile. I wave back and co following the receptionist to a corner office.

The brass nameplate says Adam Norcross and I assume this mu been Brienne's brother's office. He died in the crash and she took o team. I bet it's still hanging not because she hasn't had time to chang but because she has no intention of doing so. It's an honorable nod and the work he did for the team.

The door is open and Brienne looks up to smile at me. The rece disappears and I'm motioned in as Brienne stands. "I'm so glad you come over this way to have lunch with me."

She moves from behind the desk and walks straight to me for "Thanks for making time," I say as we pull apart.

"Come sit over here." She motions to a table that seats four in the

CHAPTER 12 Van

As I drive by my house, I frown seeing that Simone's car isn't parked in front. I glance to the other side of the street, in my mirrors t I passed it.

Maybe she parked in the back alley by my single-car garage t would be foolish. It's dark back there with only one streetlamp on the for the entire short street. I've never specifically told her not to parthere because I was trying not to initiate contact or show her my conce assumed she was smart enough not to. Plus, she's been parked out fror single day since arriving.

I circle the block and my frown deepens as I note Simone's c there.

"Hmmm," she said on the very first day we met, her tone suggest was trying to figure me out since I'd been pretty standoffish. "I'm goir with brooding. It's a better fit for the hotness you exude."

What the fuck was she even talking about?

"Hotness?" I was at a loss as to how to deal with a woman withings I didn't understand.

"Oh, come on." She let her gaze roam brazenly up and down m before smirking at me. "Just look at all you got going on. All l muscley. And those deep, sensitive eyes filled with mystery. Total and totally broody."

I tried to pay her no mind. Ignored her, actually. And yet deep a knew that I was going to be in trouble where she was concerned.

Lucas jolts me out of my memories. "Going to kill you tonight," in a low voice, and he's not joking. The words are stone cold and lac malice.

CHAPTER 16 Van

 I^{\prime} M not sure if this is a good idea, but I'm committed now. I follow and Drake into the UPMC Children's Hospital, a photographer a Titans' staff members right behind us. We're here to visit the inpatient dole out jerseys and signed sticks in an effort to brighten their day.

Boone set this up and I was surprised to learn that he visits the ho lot in his free time. He approached Brienne about having the Titans surprises and publicize it to help raise money to offset the cost of I expenses some families can't afford.

It's a fucking brilliant idea but not something I would've necessari on my own had he not invited me. It's better than sitting in my hote today, moping about my broken marriage and my serial killer father.

Boone is arranging for all of our teammates to take turns with higher the first invite and Drake pulled rank, being the fiancé of the team and got in on today's visit.

We're greeted by some hospital executive whose name I didn't ca we pose for pictures in the lobby. Then Boone leads us to the eleva stops on the fourth floor. Today's agenda includes the oncology was honestly, I'm a bit terrified to see kids with cancer. "But she's in Vermont. You're in Pittsburgh. You've got a home game tomorrow night."

That is indeed a problem. "I'll look into chartering a plane. It can't be more than a couple of hours' flight time. Surely I can fly there, win my wife back and get back home to Pittsburgh in twenty-four hours, right?"

Anna's silent a moment, then says, "If you can't find a private charter, call me back. I'll see if I can requisition one of Jameson's planes."

"Thanks, Anna." My voice is gruff with emotion that she's willing to help me out, especially since I know her husband wouldn't lift a pinkie finger. "I'll reach out to Brienne first to see if she's got some contacts, but I'll let you know if I run up against a wall."

"Good luck, Van. But something tells me you're not going to need it." She laughs to herself and adds, "I'd still grovel if I were you."

CHAPTER 17 Simone

 P_{OKING} at the burning logs in the fireplace, I watch the sparks fly thinking they're hell's little fireflies. There's room for another log s one. We never go to sleep while a wood fire is still burning but I'l awake and know I can outlast it this evening.

The temperatures dipped way low tonight and I'm feeling the chil teen numbers outside. There's no shame when nine o'clock rolls arou I'm snug in my fleece pajamas and fuzzy socks, I make myself a cup cocoa the best way... with heavy cream, sugar, Ghirardelli chocolated dash of cayenne pepper to warm me up from the inside. Van taught r to make it that way and he learned it from Etta.

When I'm settled on the couch and holding the steaming mug before I look down at my belly and give it a slow rub. "Don't worry, little be went light on the pepper. Still, I hope you come out as spicy as me."
