Why is that? What secrets is this man hiding from me? Why the hell does he come across as all tough and mean on the outside and broken on the inside? Well, shit... The classic combination. The bad boy rock star who's hurting and waiting for the right woman to come along and save him... Ha! I snort. That's one that belongs in romance novels.

In real life, it never works that way.

In real life, the bad boy breaks the heart of any female who dares get close to him. He'll push her away, trample over her feelings, and walk away...

Don't let him push you away.

Shit, that's what Meredith had said. Guess she'd anticipated his reaction—no surprises there. Not that I care... I mean, this entire thing is a transaction, huh? A way for me to make money while I figure out what to do with my life. What do I want to do with my life?

Pursue my non-existent career as a clay artist? Continue as a nanny? Why can't I have both? Why can't I have the career I yearn for and the kids of my own that I'd hoped to have by now. I mean, I am only twenty-six. I'm not old...but hell, if I don't feel my biological clock ticking. Which is crazy. Women have kids into their forties... But me? I'd always hoped to have them early... Only things hadn't worked out that way...yet.

If he'd come inside me earlier... Shit, I'd wanted him to come inside of me. Bloody hell... I hadn't realized, until now, how much I want to be pregnant... And not with just anyone's child. With Damian's child. No, no, no, don't go there. You stupid idiot, don't fall for him. Do something else... Anything else... Think of how you're going to spend the money you've already earned. Orgasms in exchange for cash. The deal is crazy, too good to be true.

And I don't, for one second, buy that all this is a test.

It's more. Something more. But what? Shit, I need to find out. I've got to figure out why he's so frustrating, complex, and gorgeous, yet obnoxious and dominant. And yet, I sense, he harbors such a melting heart, which is never more evident than when he talks about his daughter. Just why is he the way he is? What makes him tick?

What does he want out of this weird set-up? Got to find out. Got to... I pivot, head for the bathroom. First things first: a bath, then a call...

The next day, the sun is already dipping down into the horizon, when I lean across the bar at the top floor of the National Portrait Gallery in Trafalgar Square.

"Thanks for coming." I raise my wine glass at the two women who flank me.

"Of course," the petite woman with flashing eyes replies.

The last time I met her, she'd been all business as she'd ensured the flat I occupied was secure from future break-ins. Yeah, when Amelie lived there, a burglar had surprised her. Thankfully, Weston had been there with her, and according to Amelie, she owed the burglar, because it was thanks to that incident that Weston had confessed his feelings for her. Well, bully for her... If only it were that easy with Daddy Savage, huh?

"So, you want to know about him?" Karina reaches for her glass of sparkling water.

I blink, "Uh, yeah. I mean... I confess, it's refreshing that you come straight to the point, but I need something stronger than wine for this conversation."

I drain my glass of wine, then reach over the counter, "A shot of tequila?"

"Coming right up." The bartender pours out the golden liquid of my faithful lover, the one who's stayed with me through thick and thin, the one who never cuts and runs, who never abandons me when the alarm on his phone goes off... Not that I begrudge Damian that, really. I love that he's devoted to his kid. It turns me on, to be honest... Still, if only there were a way to take up more of his time without feeling guilty about it. Aargh. I reach for the shot glass, drain it, then cough.

Isla pats my back, "There, there." She draws soothing circles on my back.

"Thanks," I swipe my hair over my shoulder. "You didn't have to come."

She frowns, "Of course, I did."

"I didn't mean to drag you away from your job."

"Pfft." She waves a hand in the air, "This is more fun. Seems even I need a break from planning weddings. For once, all that talk of true love and celebrations..." she winces. "It was getting to me."

"Or is the hangover from meeting Liam, yesterday?" I shoot her a sideways glance.

She freezes, then reaches for her own margarita and downs it. "Who?"

"You heard me." I stick my tongue in my cheek. "I'm not the only one with an alphahole-shaped hole in my heart, apparently."

"What does that look like?" Karina places her glass back on the table; the perfect red of her lipstick stains the side of the rim. Damn it, why does this woman ooze sex like she owns it? Why the hell can't some of that confidence rub off on me, huh?

"What?" I frown.

"The alphahole-shaped hole," she elaborates.

"Like sex and chocolate and an incomplete shag fest."

Both women look at me, then Isla bursts out laughing. Karina cracks a smile. Whew, this one's a tough cookie.

"Yeah, well, forget I said that," I mumble.

"No, no, no, no." Isla taps into her phone, "I am absolutely gonna use it."

"Fine," I signal at the bartender for another drink, "just don't attribute it to me."

"So," Karina turns to me once I have my grubby fingers around another filled-to-the-brim shot glass, "you want to know about Damian Savage."

"Yeah."

"You know I can't break client privilege."

"So why are you here?" I snap.

"Hey, hey." Isla waves her hand between us. "Be nice, Julia. You know Karina didn't have to be here at all, considering she takes care of the security for all of the Seven, and she has a vested interest, considering her prior relationship with Arpad."

Karina's fingers tighten around her glass and some of the water spills over the side. "I have had prior dealings with Mr. Beauchamp."

"Ooh, it's Mr. Beauchamp, is it?" I lean forward in my seat, taking in the tightness at the corners of Karina's lips. Apparently, Ms. Hoity Toity successful business woman here has a soft spot, or is it an Arpad-shaped spot, in her life.

"Asshole," she snaps, then drains her sparkling water like it was champagne.

"Want something stronger?"

"I don't drink," she retorts.

"Fine," I sniff. "Don't take your frustrations out on me, girlfriend. You didn't have to come. You know you could have simply said that you wouldn't help me."

"But I want to," she draws in a breath, "help you." She reaches for a napkin from her designer purse—Jesus how much did that cost, huh? No wait, I can afford that now that I have money in the bank. So what, if I sold my body to line my bank account? And shit... I don't like the sound of that. Not at all.

I slump into my chair. "Thanks," I mumble. "I didn't know who to turn to, and with my best friend now married... Well," I glance between the two women. "Apparently, and despite my having grown up in this city, it's the two of you I know best, at this stage in my life."

My lower lip trembles and pressure builds behind my eyes. No, no, no I am not going to bawl! Nope. I sniffle, reach for my shot glass, which is empty. "Crap." I signal toward the bartender.

"Go slow, babe," Isla cautions. "We're here for you."

Karina watches me from under hooded eyelids.

"I don't care what you think of me," I burst out at her. "Clearly, you have your shit together and I don't. Well, some of us are late starters, and hell, what the hell is wrong with me, yelling at you, huh?"

I reach for the paper napkin, and Karina grips my hand. "It's okay," she says.

I glance up at her.

"I've been there." She holds my gaze.

"You have?"

"Of course, babe, so have I," Isla offers. "I mean, it's definitely not easy when your friends get married one after the other, and you're left bringing up the rear..."

"Literally," I scoff under my breath.

"I don't understand." Isla squints at me.

"It's... nothing." Definitely need that drink now.

Karina folds her arms in her lap.

I signal to the bartender, who tops up my shot glass.

"Did you mean that he...uh..." Isla clears her throat, "you know..."

"If you mean anal? Yeah." I throw back the drink, then smack the glass back on the counter.

"Oh, hell... And wow. I mean... OMG," Isla chokes on her drink. "Not that it's unheard of, but so early in the relationship..." Isla's voice tapers off.

"Yeah." I hunch my shoulders, "Why do you think I was in the bath, and why do you think that asshole sent you to help me out?"

"I thought that perhaps the two of you made out, that he got so passionate that he ripped your dress, and then you decided to take a bath and—"

"You thought wrong," I snap at her.

Isla frowns.

I redden. "Sorry, sorry, sorry! So, he fucked me afterward, the right way, I guess, and this time he came all over me."

"Wait... Where?" Isla

"On his bike, on a deserted country road, in the middle of nowhere, and I let him. I'm not proud okay, and you," I stab my finger at Karina, "seriously, why the hell am I spilling my guts in front of a total stranger?"

"Almost stranger," she offers.

"Whatever." I drag my fingers through my hair, "You'd think I had no filter, considering how I seem to lose it in front of Big Daddy D...but..."

"It's kismet," Isla nods sagely.

"What?" I scowl.

"That's what my mother used to say."

"What's fate got to do with it?"

"When two people can't stop rubbing each other up the wrong way..."

"Oh, trust me, it's more than that. The man clearly hates me. It's why he doesn't allow me anywhere near his kid, even though I am a nanny."

"Nanny, huh?" Karina stares at me. "I didn't realize he had a kid."

"Oh, but didn't you do the security for his home?" I drum my fingers on the table, "Didn't you see Riley, then?"

"Maybe she was away." She raises her shoulders, "Anyway, he didn't let me inside the house. The rich can be eccentric that way." She runs her finger up the side of the glass. "He had me boost the security for the grounds and the front door, especially after his stalker broke into his property. Thankfully, he didn't get inside the house though."

I stare at her in horror. "He had a stalker?"

"One of many." She takes a sip of her drink. "It's one of the reasons he unplugged his social media accounts."

"Right." I stare into my glass. "All that's interesting," and every piece of information helps piece together the enigma that's Damian Savage, "but it doesn't change the fact that he doesn't trust me."

"But he does want to offer you a job as his nanny?" Karina probes.

"First, I have to pass a test, or rather, a series of tests...with an 'sssss'." I hiccup.

"What? You mean the shagging?"

"Uh, not only." I hiccup again, then reach for the water.

"How much is he paying you?" Karina asks.

Isla gasps, "Hold on, don't go accusing her..." She glances at my face, "Oh..." She swallows. "OH!"

"Oh, shut up." I bury my face in my palms. "Shit, I've done it now, haven't I?"

"Don't blame yourself," Karina pats my shoulder. "These Seven, they use money to get their way."

"Including Arpad?"

"Especially Arpad."

"What's the story with the two of you?" I stare at her through the gaps in my fingers.

"No story." She raises her shoulders, "Anyway, that's not why I'm here, right?"

I shake my head.

"What did you want to ask me?"

"Tell me whatever you can about Damian—"

She begins to protest and I hold up my hand, "I know, whatever you are allowed to tell me, client confidentiality, notwithstanding."

She draws in a breath.

"I just need to know what I am dealing with here," I plead. "Everything I've read about him in the media doesn't tell me about the real man."

She nods. "You're going in prepared. That's wise."

I tilt my head.

"And this is for the sisterhood, huh?" She half smiles, and her features soften. "I know how it feels to be alone in a city."

"You do?"

She nods. "I moved to London from LA only a few months ago. It takes some getting used to."

"Well, you have me and Isla now."

"Of course." Isla nods, "We single women, we need to stick together, huh? Not that I have anything against our married friends... Just, it's different when you're still searching, ya know?"

Am I searching? What if I've found him, but he doesn't want me? What if he's the man, but he's all wrong for me? What if I am not the kind of girl who's right for him? Shit, now I'm tying myself up in knots.

"So, Damian Savage." Karina leans in, "Here's what I can tell you."

25

Damian

"You want to watch Frozen again?" I stare at Riley.

Last evening, I'd rushed home after dropping Julia off. I wanted to make sure I was home in case Riley woke up at any point during the night.

Today being a Sunday, she'd normally have swimming lessons at the gym, followed by ballet, but when she hadn't wanted to go, I hadn't insisted.

Instead, I'd made her pancakes, as promised. Then we'd played in the pool in my backyard, and spent time in the greenhouse, where I'd repotted some of the flowers and she'd been happy to help. I'd also introduced her to online chess which she'd taken to like a champ. (After all whose daughter is she, eh?)

At dinner she'd happily devoured the mac and cheese I'd cooked, and now we're settled on the couch for her Sunday night treat... Which normally means an hour and a half of watching a movie... Which, apparently, means re-re-re-watching the adventures of Elsa—no getting away from that four-letter word—and her sister, whatever her name is.

"Daddy, you promised." She pouts, then thrusts out her jaw, in that expression of stubbornness I am coming to recognize. I should. It matches my own. Once I set my mind on something, I don't give up...

Which is why there is no way I am letting that little minx of a woman get away with the havoc she's creating in my life. I am happy right here with Riley, and once she goes to bed, I'll have time to work on the lyrics which have been buzzing around in my head... Something I have stopped taking for granted.

Clearly, the double orgasm I had wrenched from Flower yesterday is responsible for this burst of inspiration.

Which means I need to write down the lyrics fast... And that means... Yeah... "Fine, fine," I grumble at Riley, and reach for the remote.

"Yay." She dives down into the sofa, cuddles up against me. "I love you, Papa."

She only calls me that when she's very happy or very sad.

My throat closes as a ball of emotions crowds my chest. This little girl right here, I'll do anything for her. Anything. Ask me to lay down my life for her and I'd not hesitate. If anyone dares hurt her, I'd... I'd... No, don't think about it. She's safe here with me. I wrap my arm around her, tug her close and she snuggles in. I switch over to Frozen and the characteristic tune of the opening credits flows over me. I begin to hum along to it under my breath.

"Daddy," she admonishes, "shh!"

"Okay." I chuckle. I may be a rock star, with fans clamoring to hear me and see me play on stage, but in my own home, I clearly come second to the characters on screen. Trust your family to always take you down a notch, huh?

I settle in to watch the movie. Half an hour later, I glance down to find her yawning. "You tired, sweetheart?"

She rubs her eyes, then sits up, "No, of course, not." She focuses on the screen and ten minutes later I find her fast asleep.

I carry her up to her bedroom, tuck her in. I kiss her forehead, inhale the baby shampoo, then head down to my studio. I check the baby-cam on my phone, to make sure I see her asleep, then pick up my guitar.

*I still remember the outline of your lips,
the warmth of your touch,
the curve of your eyelashes as you raised them to glance at me...*

*And then you were gone;
I ache to caress your neck.*

*If I were to touch you between your thighs
Would you come again—?*

I—

My phone vibrates with an incoming call.

Hell, I should have switched it off, except I don't anymore. Not since my daughter arrived, and with her, that unfamiliar sense of vulnerability, the one that has me checking around corners, under the bed, around the house, to make sure that she is safe. The one that makes me want to carry a gun and guard her every moment of every day. For now, she is young and I can protect her. As long as she is under my roof, I can take care of her, ensure no harm comes to her. As long as I can keep her close, I will, which also means I don't let anyone—except the most trusted of my inner circle—near her. Doesn't mean I can't take this call from another woman... The only other person who has penetrated the shield I've put up against the world, hmm?

"Hello," I bark into the phone.

Silence, then her voice comes over the phone line. "D... Damian?"

"Who else?"

"Oh... I didn't expect you to answer the call."

"So why did you call?"

"I—" There's the sound of footsteps, then female voices speaking. The noises recede. "Sorry about that," she mumbles.

"Where are you?" I frown.

"Outside."

"So late?"

"It's... 9 p.m."

"It's late."

"For you, Daddy." She laughs lightly.

My cock jerks. Hell, is it because she called me the D word? Or is it simply her laugh. This is crazy. I have a five-year-old who calls me Daddy, so why the hell does Flower calling me by the same title make me want to reach across the phone line and drag her flush against me?

"Go home," I order.

"What?" she says, breathless, "No."

"Don't defy me."

"Don't order me around." I sense her pout, see those pink lips in my head. And I'm instantly hard. This crazy reaction to her; I'll never get used to it.

"I'll do what I bloody want and you'll obey me, you understand?"

Her breathing grows ragged. Hell, is she turned on by my show of dominance? Of course, she is. The woman's the most natural submissive in denial that I have met, and she doesn't even know it yet.

"Hey, baby," a male voice calls out, "who are you talking to there, when all the man you can handle is standing right here in front of you?"

"Who's that? I can only see a jackass," she snaps.

"Julia," I begin to pace... When the hell did I stand up from my seat, huh?
"Julia what the fuck is happening there?"

"Nothing," she hiccups. "Need to teach this guy a lesson."

"Don't," I roar, then dig my fingers in my hair and tug at it. "Don't do anything that will end up with you being hurt."

"Hold on—"

"Don't you dare put me on hold. Don't—"

Crash.

The sound rips through the phone and up my spine. Fuck. Did she drop the phone? I hear the sound of scuffling, "You ass, take that." The sound of someone's palm connecting with a face. Her's? His?

"Hey, you little bitch—" the man howls.

"Julia," I yell into the phone, "Julia, what the hell? Are you all right, babe?"

My heart begins to thud. Why the hell am I not there, taking care of her? Why the hell am I not able to manage everything better? My daughter, my woman... She's not my woman... But hell, if something were to happen to her... Why the hell haven't I done a better job of protecting her? I can't lose another person I am beginning to care about, and when the fuck had that happened? When had I begun to feel some kind of ownership toward her? "Julia?" I roar, "What the fuck—?"

"Damian?"

A woman's voice, not Julia's, comes over the phone.

"Karina?" I draw in a breath. "You're with her?"

"Of course, you told me to keep an eye on her, remember?" Her voice is calm.

Male groans, a woman's chuckle floats over the phone.

"What the fuck is happening there? Is she okay?"

"Your woman's a fighter." She half chuckles, "I think you underestimated her."

"You're telling me," I rake my fingers through my hair, "And she's not my woman—"

"Gotta go."

"Don't fucking hang up on—"

The line goes dead.

She hung up on me.

"What the fuck!" I grab my phone and am about to hurl it. Then stop...

Nope, that won't help. Not when I have the baby-cam on it as an app. I stare at the screen. At least, Riley is safe. But Julia. What the fuck is Julia doing out? How dare she endanger herself?!

The phone vibrates and I accept the call from Karina.

"Is she okay?"

"She's fine." Karina's steady voice comes through. "And she didn't need my help, by the way. She had the situation in hand."

"Stay with her," I snap.

"Of course."

"Don't let her out of your sight."

"I can't do that without making her suspicious."

"I pay you good money to keep my family safe."

"Wasn't aware she was family."

"She isn't—" I swear aloud. "She's an asset. And her safety is priority."

"Noted."

"You're the best security expert that money can buy. Don't fail me."

So, I've put Karina on the task of keeping tabs on her. What's wrong with that? So, it's creepy, maybe stalkerish. Too bad. I've learned my lesson, and while I can't always be there in person to protect Julia, I've ensured she'll be protected.

"I know how to do my job," Karina murmurs. "And that means, while I can look out for her, if you want her protected a 100% of the time, then someone needs to be with her 24/7, and that can't be me."

"What do you mean?"

"It means, why don't you arrange for her to stay with you? That way, you can ensure—"

"No."

Silence.

"I mean, I can't... I mean." I squeeze my eyes shut. "Fuck, fuck, fuck."

"You okay?" she asks.

"Yes."

No, of course, not. How am I supposed to juggle both? Take care of my daughter while protecting my woman, without hurting either of them?

"Listen, I've gotta go." I hang up the call, ready to hurl the phone again, then stop myself.

Only one way out. I dial Meredith's number.

"Damian," she answers on the second ring, "everything okay?"

"I need your help."

26

Julia

I walk up the sidewalk toward The Shard.

That catch-up with Isla and Karina... It did wonders for my confidence... Oh, wait, maybe that's the alcohol that's running through my bloodstream. The cool night air wakes me up. I'd taken a cab here after Karina had told me what she could about Damian...which was not anything I didn't already know, except for the information about his family.

Seems he has a sister who is married and has a daughter, and he is close with her and her family. His own parents? Not so much. Which isn't unusual. And he dropped out of the public eye about a year ago... And no, she couldn't tell me why... So overall, I am back where I started. Which is why I am here... I mean, no way, am I headed home after what happened today. My own flat, it feels strange... But this apartment—Okay, Damian's apartment, with its view over the city... I feel invincible here. Or closer to him... Okay, that too... And it's past ten pm, and on a Sunday. So what, if he's busy today? I can still come over, right?

Maybe he is waiting here...or not. I snort. Like Big Daddy D would ever wait for anything. God forbid, it might put a dent in that inflated ego of his... Or in other parts of him, which are also inflated... Like his dick. Man, that is gigantic. I've never seen anything like it... And how the hell had he actually shoved that thing inside of me? Gah! Next time, I am going to pay more careful attention to it... That is, if I'm not squirming under him and don't have my eyes shut in ecstasy and in agony and—my sneakers catch in a crack in the pavement and I tumble forward.

A strong pair of hands grips me, "Whoa, there."

I straighten, lift my head to glance into a pair of bright eyes. Tanned skin, teeth flashing against firm lips.

"Hello?" He tilts his head and his dreadlocks dance around him.

He releases me, steps back, "You okay?"

"Y...yes. Thanks. " I grab my backpack, tuck the strap under my arm. "I must be the only woman in this city who loses her footing despite not wearing heels, huh?"

"You were lost in thought." He raises his shoulders, "It happens."

He retreats, then walks around an upturned hat and sinks down onto a makeshift seat that seems to be made out of newspapers. Huh?

"Next time, keep your eyes on the goal."

"Goal?"

"The task at hand; don't let go of the big picture."

"Big picture?"

"Like I do." He snatches up a board that had been facedown and waves it in my direction.

What care I for the wreaths that can only give glory?

"Byron?" I turn to him, "Why Byron?"

"Why not?"

I scowl, "A privileged full-of-himself, opinionated twat."

"That he was."

"You agree?" I tilt my head.

"Sometimes, you have to separate the words from the man."

I stare, "You've lost me."

"Don't disregard the words because of the man he was. If you separate what someone's saying from what they've made of themselves? Well, the words take on a different meaning." He nods towards the prose, "Get me?"

"I'm not sure." I shuffle my feet, "Why do I get the feeling you're trying to tell me something?"

"Me?" He places the board back on the ground, "Not at all. How is it my place to tell you how to differentiate right from wrong? Truth from fiction?"

"Who else but you can point that out?" I look at him, then at The Shard that towers over us, "With your vantage point of all the comings and goings around here, who better than you to tell me the things that I can't see from where I am?"

"So, you'll heed my advice?"

I flip my hair over my shoulders, "Why not? I have nothing to lose."

"Make him sweat."

"Huh?"

"Don't make it easy on him."

"Who?"

"Your man."

"How do you know I have a man?"

"Don't you?"

"Yeah." I lower my chin, "I... I am not sure, actually."

"Bet he's thinking the same thing right now."

"Is he?"

"Only one way to find out."

"What do you mean?"

"Test him, force the issue, do something out of character."

"Like what?" I chew the inside of my cheek.

"What's the one thing about him that you want to find out."

I stare at him. "You mean..."

He nods. "Don't take no for an answer."

"And if he still refuses to divulge the truth?"

"Do something unexpected, something that will catch him off guard..."

"Hmm." I frown.

"Meanwhile, you got a cigarette for me?"

"I don't smoke." I shove my hand in my bag, pull out my wallet and rifle through it. Shit, I have Australian dollars, no pounds though. "Hold on."

I glance around, spy an ATM machine. I stalk toward it, insert my card and pull out a few notes. I spin and walk toward him, drop a couple in his hat.

He glances at it, then back at me, "A cigarette... I'd die for one right now."

"Don't say that." I frown.

He chuckles, "Don't like the big 'D' word?"

"Oh, I like 'Big D' all right." I snicker to myself. "It's just, my boyfriend has a thing about my saying that..." I pause. Why the hell did I refer to Damian as my boyfriend? I shake my head. "I know just the thing."

I walk the other way, toward the all-night corner shop I'd passed earlier.

A few minutes later, I drop a pack of cigarettes and a lighter into his hat, on top of the money, which he still hasn't touched. How strange.

His face lights up. He reaches for the pack of cigarettes, tears off the foil and lights up. "Thanks." His lips curl. "He's lucky to have you, you know?"

I blink, processing his words. His accent... Shit, it's definitely not that of a street bum. In fact, it's posh. Not that he couldn't have gone to a private school then dropped out, but still. What are the odds, huh?

"Who are you?" I ask.

"A friend." He grins back, then nods to the side, "Speaking of, isn't that someone you know?"

I glance up the street to find a familiar motorcycle turning onto the road and heading toward me. My heart begins to pound, my pulse thuds, and my throat goes dry. The last thing I want is to be spotted here as if I've been waiting for him. Hold on. I turn to the homeless guy, to find he's not there. Huh? I glance the other way to see him walking up the road, with his sign over his shoulder. His gait is steady, his long legs eating up the distance as he puts more space between us.

"How odd."

The double barrels of the approaching bike cut through my thoughts. I pivot and race toward The Shard.

27

Damian

By the time I park and take the elevator to the apartment, she's nowhere in sight. Not that I'd expected to see her. In fact, I'd been on my way to her apartment, but as I'd turned the corner at the top of road and spotted her outside The Shard, my heart had stuttered. It had bloody stuttered. What the fuck is wrong with me? For that matter, what am I doing here?

I had fully intended not to come, but after hearing her cry out on the phone and knowing that she was in danger... And then, unable to do anything about it. I'd felt so helpless... Fucking helpless. For only the third time in my life—three times too many—this is it!

I am never going to put myself in that position again. I am going to find a way out of this.

I am going to fuck her out of my life, once and for all. I am going to make her orgasm over and over again, create a stockpile of her beautiful climaxes so I have enough inspiration to write all the lyrics I need. Then, I am going to leave her.

I use the keycard to let myself in. The place is quiet; the only light is from a floor lamp at the far end of the room. She stands with her back to me, her back pack on the floor at her side, her jacket placed over it. She's wearing her usual jeans and plaid shirt, dark hair in a cloud around her shoulders, as she stares ahead.

I walk to her. "Julia?"

She doesn't reply.

I reach her, touch her shoulder, and she trembles.

"Why?" she asks. "Why did you do that?"

I follow the direction of her gaze to the potter's wheel, and next to it, a counter that has been set up, complete with all of the tools she'd need for molding clay.

"You said you didn't have a studio."

"So, you set one up for me?"

Her voice is low. I walk past her, switch on the spotlight. The glow bathes both of us.

"How dare you?" She turns on me. "How dare you do this?"

"Hold on." I scowl, "I'm confused. I thought you wanted to work again, that you wanted to sculpt me?"

"I did, but not like this."

"What do you mean?"

"The one thing I want to do on my own, the one thing that's sacred to me, you had to go and spoil it with your money."

"Wait," I hold up hand. "My money's good enough for you to accept in return for sex, but not good enough for me to buy you something to help you pursue your passion?"

"That's exactly right." She curls her fingers into fists at her sides. "This is important to me. It's what makes my life worth living. All this time, people have come and gone from my life, people like you—"

I wince.

"People who I thought cared for me, when actually, they were toying with my feelings. Not even my father cared enough to hang around to find out what kind of a person I'd grow up to be—"

"That's why you became a nanny?"

"What?"

"Is that why you decided to take care of other people's children?"

"Maybe" She frowns. "That's not the point."

"Then, what is?"

"When I work with my hands, when I can dig my fingers into a shapeless form, mold it to my liking, breathe life into it, it satisfies something primal inside of me..." She hesitates, seems to struggle with her words before whispering, "Something that I feel only when I'm with you."

"You do?" My heart begins to beat hard. "What are you trying to say?"

She swallows. "That..." She peers up into my face and peruses my features. My pulse rate ratchets up. Say it, say what's on your mind, Flower.

"That?" I hold her gaze and she glances away.

"That working with clay is the one thing that gives meaning to my life, other than taking care of kids..." She squares her shoulders, "It's what I do for myself, and you had to go and sully it."

I stiffen, "Because I set up a studio for you?"

"Because you're trying to buy me again."

She tips up her chin and I take in her flushed features, her erratic breath, the color that smears her cheekbones. "Why are you upset?"

"Why am I upset?" She throws up her hands.

I nod. "You clearly missed having a space of your own where you could create, where you could give form to your dreams."

"Are you hearing yourself?" she snarls.

I scowl, "You have to help me here, Flower. I thought you'd like this."

She stares at me, then chuckles, "You thought you could simply walk in and occupy the one space in my life which is sacred, which I have kept for myself, the space where I can be myself and not worry about being judged... Or have to pretend to be someone else. You thought you could take over even that part of my life, you—"

"I thought you would appreciate it."

"No, you thought I should appreciate it, that you could ingratiate yourself to me, maybe make me dependent on you," she draws in a breath, "but you know what?"

I tilt my head.

"You can't buy me anymore."

"No?" Anger thrums against my veins, my balls harden, and fuck me, this is wrong. I shouldn't feel so turned on. I take a step forward and she holds her ground. Bloody hell, this woman, she has the kind of strength and fire that makes me want to consume her. Bury myself in her and allow her to burn the darkness inside, fill the empty spaces and paint my blank canvas, fill my sheet with the kinds of lyrics I haven't been able to create since...forever.

"No." She closes the distance between us, then shoves her index finger in my chest. "The deal is off."

"No, it's not."

She tips her chin up, meets my gaze head on, "You're not hearing me."

"I am," I glare down at her, "and I'm telling you, we're not done yet."

Her green eyes grow stormy and golden flickers dance in their depths. So real, so vital, so bloody full of the kind of fearlessness that I had forgotten I once had myself. I inch forward until my shoes bump the tips of her sneakers, bend my knees and thrust my face into hers. "Strip."

"What?" She straightens. "No."

"Strip, or I'll do it for you."

"Fuck you."

"Oh, I intend to." I reach for her, she feints to the side, grabs her backpack and races for the door. I pull out my phone and tap the screen. The locks on the door engage with an audible click as she reaches it.

She turns the handle, and the door doesn't open.

She jiggles it, puts her shoulder to it, then straightens, only to kick the door. "Ow," she gasps, then grabs her leg and hops about. Her backpack slips from her shoulder, weighing her down further. "Ouch," she cries out again.

I rush toward her. "Did you hurt yourself?" I reach for her.

"Don't touch me." She stumbles back and her bag hits the floor with a thump. She tumbles over it, then falls on her arse. "Argh," she gasps out a breath, then clutches at her hurt leg. "This is all your fault," she cries.

I can't stop the chuckle that rumbles up my chest.

"Don't you dare laugh at me, you ass."

Me?" I wipe the smile off of my face. "I wouldn't."

"You would." She rubs at her hurt foot, then stares up at me. "Open the door."

"Nope." I hold out my arm.

She stares at me, then up at my face. "You're joking," she snarls.

"Am I?" I tilt my head, "Take my hand, or I'll be forced to pick you up."

"No." She glowers at me.

I stare back at her.

"Fine, whatever." She grabs my hand.

I haul her up to her feet, then tug her so she careens into me.

"Let me go."

I bend my knees, heave her over my shoulder, "Now, where were we?"

28

Julia

"We were... Nowhere." I shake the hair out of my eyes. "You were leaving. No wait, that was me."

"Neither of us is going anywhere." He heads for the bedroom and my stomach trembles; my core clenches. No, no, no, this is not happening. I will not be turned on by him going all hot and dark and caveman on me... Not when he's done something that has completely shaken me... I mean, paying to fuck me is one thing. Not that that is acceptable, in any way... But hell, if it's not a transaction, fair and square, something I can catalogue and put into a tidy box.

But his setting up my studio without telling me about it? It's tantamount to his declaring that he cares for me... Which he doesn't. No way.

I struggle in his grasp, "Put me down."

"No." He increases his pace.

Oh hell, if he places me down on the bed, if he touches me, kisses me... I'll be gone. I won't be able to resist him, damn it. It's not him... It's me, I fear more. I fear the reactions he causes in my body. I fear how I react to him when he holds me, touches me, kisses me... None of it is real. It's simply my body's reaction to his very expert skills, something which I need to put an end to right away.

"Let me go, you...you complete reprobate."

I lock my fingers and bring my fist down on his side and kick out at him, at the same time. He slaps my butt and hell, I'd been expecting it, and yet, nothing prepares me for the flash of lust that pierces through me. Bloody hell, I can't let this happen. I can't! "Damian, no!" I yell.

"Julia, yes." He mocks me as he steps into the bedroom.

"Don't you dare," I snarl.

"Ooh, I am so afraid." He laughs.

Anger ripples up my spine. My belly twists, moisture leaks between my legs. Jesus, this is wrong. I shouldn't be so turned on. I shouldn't. He bypasses the bedroom and heads for the sliding doors that lead out onto a deck I hadn't noticed before. What the hell? I stare as he reaches out to flick on lights. An infinity pool? I gasp. What the hell is a pool doing here on the 68th floor? And it stretches out as if reaching out to the city. "Wow!"

"Like it?"

"I didn't say that."

"Oh, you'll be saying more than that in a second. I hope you know how to swim, Flower."

He marches toward the edge of the pool and I begin to squirm in earnest, "Don't you dare, Rockstar, don't you fucking—"

The water comes up to embrace me, then pours over me, envelops me as I scream and swallow several mouthfuls of chlorinated water as the shock of being dunked smashes through me. What the hell? I come up choking, my hair sticking to my forehead, covering my eyes. "I hate you," I sputter.

"Finally," he sneers. "You're being honest. How's the water by the way?"

I right myself, and my feet touch bottom. At least, he didn't throw me in at the deep end, and the water isn't all that cold... A heated pool. Of course, it is. I swim toward him, hold onto the rim of the pool and scowl up at him. "Asshole."

"Cooled off yet?" He smirks.

"No, but I will, as soon as—" I hold out my hand and he takes it. I tug and he stumbles forward. I yank more; he tumbles over and into the pool. Water splashes over me, over the edge.

He comes up for air, his hair plastered to his scalp, and outlining the shape of his beautiful face. "You've done it now." His voice is hushed.

My nerve-endings crackle.

"Umm..." I push back and away from him. "I... I didn't mean it."

"Of course, you did." He peels back his lips, showing off those sharp, white teeth. I gulp. Hadn't meant to bring out the predator in him. I should have known I'd never be able to outwit him... Doesn't mean I can't try to outrun him... I clamber over the side of the pool; my feet slip, I cry out, then right myself.

"Come back, Flower."

"No." I take off for the sliding doors, hear a thud, glance over my shoulder, then gasp when I find he's in hot pursuit. His leather jacket drips water, and what I can see of his shirt outlines those sculpted abs, his jeans molded to every muscle of his powerful thighs. My throat closes. I reach the doors, dive through, then grab the handle, and slide the door closed, only to encounter an obstruction. "No, no, no." I glance down to find he's planted his leg in the opening between the door and the frame. Shit, I tug on the door and he grabs it from the other side. Hell, I am no match for his strength. I release the door, then pivot and race around the bed, only he grabs me around the waist.

I shriek as he hauls me up and over his shoulder again. I yell, swing my fists and brush his side; my hair falls over my eyes, I brush it aside, find he's entering the bathroom. He kicks the door shut, lowers me to the ground.

"Strip," he orders.

I glower at him even as I squeeze my thighs together. "I will, if you will," I retort.

"Oh?" He smirks. "If you don't remove your clothes, I'll have to do it for you."

"Whatever," I snort.

"And I won't stop there."

"No?" My voice trembles and I purse my lips. Why the hell am I so nervous and excited at the same time?

"No." He looks me up and down. "I'll tie you up, blindfold you, and then I'll fuck you so hard, you won't have any choice but to obey me after."

Goosebumps flare over my skin and it's not only because I am wearing wet clothes. His filthy promises... It's decadent and completely wrong.

I tip up my chin, grab the bottom of my blouse and peel it off. His gaze drags to my breasts, down my navel, to my thighs. I toe off my sneakers. I unbutton my jeans, lower the zipper, then drag them down my legs to my ankles. I step out of them, along with my socks, then kick them aside. Goosebumps race across my skin. I straighten to meet that hot, hungry gaze of his. My throat closes and warmth suffuses my chest.

Shit, the way he's looking at me, like I am his favorite rock song and most hated melody, all rolled together.

"Take it all off," he commands.

I reach behind my back to unhook my bra and my breasts spill out. He inhales sharply. A flush steals up my throat. Don't stop, don't, not now. Show him he doesn't scare you. I drop the bra, then slide my fingers into the waistband of my panties. I slide them down, and his entire body stiffens. I kick aside my panties, straighten, and cry out to find he's stepped forward, into my space.

"D... Damian."

"Shh." He reaches out to push aside a tendril of hair that's stuck to my cheek. "So beautiful."

My knees tremble. I press them together to stop myself from losing my balance.

He drags his finger down the line of my throat, between my breasts, to my bellybutton. My toes curl. He pauses at the top of my pussy, and I shiver. An aching emptiness claws in my lower belly. It's always like this... Jesus, he only has to touch me and I am sure I am going to come apart or go right over the top, and he hasn't even touched me properly.

"Tell me what you want," he commands.

"No." My voice cracks and I swallow down the ball of nervousness that blocks my throat.

"You sure about that?" He sinks to his knees between my legs, fixes his mouth on my cunt.

I yell out, "Ohmygod!"

He grabs my butt, one large palm on each butt cheek, and squeezes.

A trembling sweeps up my back. "Oh," I gasp. "Oh!"

He plants his shoulders between my thighs so I don't have a choice but to part my legs, then he proceeds to lick me from my backhole to my clit, again and again. My entire body bucks; I dig my fingers into his hair and tug. He growls against my core, the vibration seeping into my center and mixing with the melting hunger inside that ebbs and flows and throbs in tandem to each suck of his mouth as he devours my pussy.

"Jesus," I throw my head back and pant.

He thrusts his tongue inside my channel and I moan.

He slides his finger in between my butt cheeks and fingers my puckered hole, and I whine. It's filthy, damn him. It's the part of me that I'll never get used to him touching, and yet... Oh, my... Shivers of pleasure trickle down my legs, up my spine, radiating out from where he's touching me, kissing me, biting me.

"Damian," I howl as he tugs on my swollen clit. "Damian."

He rises to his feet, carrying me by the tops of my thighs as he swivels around and backs me into the closed bathroom door. He reaches between us to lower his zipper and I glance down in time to see his cock spring out. Thick, large, with a vein running up the side, the swollen head is angry and throbbing and "Holy crap!" I gasp, "A piercing? You have a P/A! How the hell didn't I notice that earlier?"

"Maybe you were too busy?" I hear the smirk in his voice and know I should retort, but bloody hell... Not only is Big Daddy D well-endowed, but also the best part of him wears a crown.

Umm, hello, back up. I snort.

"What are you thinking?" He frowns.

"Umm... Just that..." I reach down and tug on his P/A. He growls and his dick lengthens. I swear, it lengthens further.

"Oh, wow," I gasp, "That's, uh, bigger than I thought."

"But you knew that already."

"There's knowing and, uh, seeing." I swallow, "How the hell did that... that monster cock of yours fit inside of me."

"Only one way to find out." He wraps his massive fingers around his thick dick...which stills does nothing to make it seem less threatening. If anything, it brings home just how large this man is... Everywhere... I steal a glance at his feet, still in his motorcycle boots... Yep, definitely big.

He pumps himself once from base to head and precum oozes from the tip. I swallow, my throat seems to dry up, and my core pulses, warming, throbbing, aching... I groan, "Please, Damian," I beg, "fuck me."

A shudder seems to grip his shoulders, "When you say my name, it fucking ruins me, woman."

He begins to push into me, then groans, "Fucking condom. I don't have one."

"I... I am on birth control."

"And I am clean."

I set my lips "A bit too late to worry about that," I mumble, "considering."

"I want you to know that what we have is different."

"That's what they all say," I scoff.

"Flower," he growls, "look into my eyes."

I peer up into his face, "There, happy?" I tip up my chin.

"Not until you tell me that you believe me."

"What?" I swallow, "What do you want me to believe?"

"That I've never felt like this with anyone before. I've never felt this connected to any woman." He thrusts his face into mine, so I have no choice but to meet his eyes, "Not until you."

"Not even," I lick my lips, "not even Riley's mother?"

"Not even her."

There's no hesitation in his tone, his gaze direct. The expression on his features, one of sincerity. Holy shit, he actually means it.

"Damian," I whisper and his control seems to shatter. His jaw tics and a vein throbs at his temple, then he pushes his hips forward and buries himself inside of me in one single thrust, and I scream again. Ohmygod, the thickness, that heaviness between my legs, it's like being impaled.

"Damian," I gasp again.

He grits his teeth; sweat beads his brow. He slams his big palm into the door by my side and I swear the entire barrier shudders. He's bigger, brawnier, than any man I've ever known... Than anyone I've ever met... Likely, he isn't aware of his own strength.

He draws in a breath and his chest expands, his shoulders still clad in his leather jacket seem to grow bigger, if that were possible.

Reaching up, I cup his cheek, "Why the hell do I feel so much for you?"

"The same reason I do?" He glares into my eyes. Anger rolls deep in their depths, and frustration and something else—the same confusion that's haunted me since I set eyes on him. And does that make it worse? Or better? God knows...

Except, something inside of me empathizes with him. "I know," I whisper, "it's not easy."

"Tell me about it." He chuckles, then tilts his hips and slips further inside my channel. A groan rumbles up his chest, "You're so tight, Flower."

"Oh." A trembling shudders out from the point where his massive cock disappears inside my aching pussy. "I thought you like to fuck hard," I mutter.

"I'm trying to be gentle."

"Who said I wanted gentle?"

"I don't want to hurt you," he insists.

"Too late." I slide my palm around his nape and tug until his face is right above mine. "I very much want to hurt you." I bury my teeth in his lower lip.

29

Damian

What the fuck? The coppery taste of blood fills my mouth, pain shivers down my spine, my dick lengthens, and my thigh muscles bunch. "Fuck," I snarl, "you're crazy, woman."

"You make me crazy," she replies against my mouth. She licks my wounded lip, swallows down my blood, and all my senses hone in on her.

My vision narrows, and a pulse throbs at my temples, across my eyelids even in my balls. "You've done it now," I grit out through clenched teeth. I shrug out of my jacket, suddenly burning up.

"Ooh," she bats her eyelids, "I'm soooo scared, I'm—" She huffs as I kick my hips forward and drive into her, burying myself to the hilt. She hits her head back against the door, "It's too much, too hard, too large, too everything —"

"Quiet," I order and she presses her lips together.

"Look at me when I fuck you," I growl, and color smears her cheeks. "Shit, you love it when I talk dirty, don't you?"

"What?" she squeaks, then lowers her chin. "Of course, not. What gave you—?"

I pull out, then thrust into her again and she moans, "Ohmygod."

"I'm right here," I answer.

"Jesus, you've got such a big ego."

"You're welcome, sugar."

She peers at me from under hooded eyelashes, "If you weren't so good at fucking, I'd take exception to your corny dialogue."

"You're welcome, again." I laugh. "And it's not corny, when it's the truth."

"Why you—"

I piston my hips, and sink into her with such force that the entire door shakes. She gasps, digs her heels into my sides, grabs onto my shoulders with such impact that my nerve-endings pop in response. "Shit." The pressure at the base of my spine builds in intensity, my vision tunnels, my cock lengthens... "Fuck," I growl. "Come with me, Flower." I thrust into her, my balls slapping against her inner thighs. "Come all over my dick," I command, and she shatters.

She cries out, arches her back, thrusts her breasts up and into my chest, squeezes her pussy around my cock and shudders as her climax crashes through her.

I watch her face, her flushed features, the beautiful column of her throat, the beads of water that dot her shoulders, the creaminess of her breasts, the swollen tips of her nipples. Leaning down, I suck on one and she shivers. I raise my face to hers. "Julia," I whisper, "open your eyes."

She flutters her eyelids, gazes at me with pupils so dilated that my groin hardens. I plunge into her again and again as my climax crashes over me. I erupt inside of her, shooting long streams of my release. She leans up, presses her lips to mine, offering herself up—her sweetness, her vitality, her life—and I know then, I can't see her again. I need to leave, need to get away from her before this...thing spirals out of control. Before I allow her further into my heart, my soul...my home... Introduce her to my daughter. No, I can't do that.

I pull out of her.

"What's wrong?" She scowls.

"I need to leave."

She stares at me, "What? You don't mean it."

I lower her to the floor; her knees seem to give way. I reach for her, then pull back. If I touch her, I am gone. I need to put distance between us. Fast. Reaching down, I grab my jacket and pull it on.

"You can stay here for as long as you want."

"I... I don't understand."

"The arrangement is over."

"So, do I get to meet your daughter?"

I look her up and down, "What makes you think you are worthy of meeting her?"

Her features crumple, "Asshole."

"Yep." I attempt to smirk, but it feels plastic. "That's me. You didn't think that I wanted more than to take your arse and your pussy... Couldn't get to your mouth, but..." I shrug, "not that it's much of a loss, considering you aren't even a great kisser." What the fuck was that? What is wrong with me?

She gapes. "Are you..." She shakes her head, "You're a horrible, horrible man."

I swallow the words I want to say and nod. "What-fucking-ever." I jerk my chin, "Would you mind getting out of my way? I need to get home to my daughter."

30

Julia

What the hell happened there? One second, he's inside me; the next, he can't get away from me fast enough. I sink down against the closed bathroom door. He'd fucked me, and I swear, it seemed to mean something to him. He'd said as much. Maybe too much, considering he'd gone and insulted me almost as if it were in self-defense, like he was getting in too deep and wanted a way out.

He'd lashed out at me in that typical Damian fashion, where he was trying his best to hurt me. And he'd succeeded. My lower lip trembles. Bastard had hit me where it hurt. How dare he? I fist my fingers at my sides. How dare he leave without a second glance? Was it that easy for him? Like I was another notch on his bedpost that he could fuck and leave?

But hold on, he said he hadn't felt like this with anyone before. That he'd never felt this connected to any woman as he had with me... Not even Riley's mother. And I believe him when he says that.

Is that why he's running from me?

From what I've pieced together, he'd dropped out of sight after Riley's mother left him— Again, how the hell had he kept that out of the papers? That's what must have prompted him to take a sabbatical, and focus on taking care of his daughter. And that had been a year ago. A year since he'd withdrawn from his gigs, to focus on bringing up his kid, to the extent that he doesn't even want a nanny involved. I chew on my lower lip.

Apparently, he is done with me, and my orgasms too... Hell, now that, I am going to miss. How he'd glare at me and the tingles would start in my belly, how he'd touch me and my nerve-endings would fire in hyperdrive, how he'd kiss me and I'd instantly grow wet, how he'd lick my pussy and... Oh hell. I bury my face in my hands. Why the hell did everything have to turn out to be so, so complicated? Why the hell had I accepted his crazy-ass proposition in the first place? What is wrong with me?

Money is important, all right, but it has never featured high on my priorities... I mean, I could definitely do with that infusion of cash to pay off the debts I racked up while traveling. Not to mention that I wanted the money to ease the retirement years of my mother. But hell!

I'd been swayed by the cash and screwed up the chance I had to really understand this man. Face it... He'd ensured that the money thing stood between us... He'd wanted our relationship to be transactional. I'd proposed a one-night stand; he'd turned it into something more. On the one hand, he'd wanted to spend more time with me, but on the other hand, he'd reduced it to something financial.

In fact, he'd gone to great lengths to ensure that he kept me out of his life, out of his house, out of his head and heart. And despite all that, he'd sensed the deepening connection between us. Damn it, when we fuck, it is more real, more primal, more electric than any experience in my life. And he senses it. He has to. No wonder he is running scared. Coward.

No wonder he'd walked out on me without a second glance. He'd had an escape clause all along—the fucking money. This was all an arrangement after all, something he could pull out of at any time. Just another business decision.

And hell... Those orgasms he'd wrenched from me? I squeeze my thighs together... No one else could give me those. He's spoiled me for any other man. After the complex, growling, broodiness that is Daddy Savage... No way, can I be happy with anyone else. Which means, I am, basically, fucked. Gah! My throat hurts and my head pounds. What the hell am I going to do now, huh? A shiver runs across my skin, and if I stay here naked, I'll freeze to death. I rise to my feet, stagger over to the shower.

Twenty minutes and a whole lot of hot water and tears later, I feel somewhat human. My head still hurts and my nose is stuffy, and my eyes must be swollen, but fine... At least I'm warmer. A chill grips me and I press my fingers together.

Okay, not really. Nothing compares to the warmth that comes off of Damian's big body. That man is a bloody furnace, and there is so much of him to go around, I could plaster every centimeter of my body to every centimeter of his and there'd be enough of his body left for me to press myself to his body twice over. OMG, what am I thinking? I have certifiably gone mad. My imagination is clearly in overdrive, or else I have OD'd on Damian enough that he's gone to my head and lodged himself under my skin, in between my legs, in my heart... No, not there. Never there.

I turn off the shower, wrap myself in one of the long, fluffy towels I find on one of the shelves and step out. That's when I catch sight of a bathrobe laid out on the bed. What the—?

So, he left me aching and angry, and yet, he'd stopped to ensure I had something to wear when I came out. How strange? I walk to the bathrobe, push my arms into the sleeves, and his scent teases my nostrils. My toes curl, my belly flip flops, and it feels like I am wrapped up in the man all over again. The pressure builds at the backs of my eyes again. No, no, no, goddammit, this is not happening. I am not going to cry over him.

Nope. I march back into the bathroom, notice that my wet clothes are gone. Huh? I head across to the kitchen, find that the washer-dryer is running. What the—? He ran a wash for me? And—the scent of coffee draws my gaze to the percolator, the coffee ready to be poured from the jug. He made coffee so I could have something hot to drink? Next to it is a covered plate, with a note.

Heat and eat this.

I trace the bold cursive and it blurs in front of my eyes. Why are you doing this Damian? You've been such a bastard to me, and yet, you want to take care of me. You don't want to introduce me to your kid, and yet, you treat me like I'm special. In fact, that's what you told me right before you decided to cut and run. You're a complete mystery, Big D... One I am going to solve.

The dryer beeps, and I retrieve my clothes from the washing machine, only to find them entangled with his. Guess he'd changed before he'd left? Of course he wouldn't have wanted to drive back in wet clothes, not to mention he had extra clothes in the closet.

I disentangle my blouse from his jeans, my jeans from his shirt. If only it were that easy to disentangle my life from his? Tears prick my eyes and I brush them away. Damn it, now I am getting sentimental about laundry?

Once dressed, I pour out some of the coffee, and carry it, along with one of the muffins that I'd heated up. I walk toward the worktable with the clay molding tools laid out. I set my coffee down, reach for the armature, the framework on which the sculpture can be molded. It's not what I'd normally use, but it will do. I reach for the ready-made moist clay in the tub on the side. Again, not what I'm accustomed to using, but hell, if it isn't of the finest quality money can buy. The man had certainly not spared any expense.

I walk over, pluck my phone from my bag, and pull up my favorite music mix. The haunting tunes of Damian's first album fill the air. Much better.

I pick up a fistful of the clay, shape it in between my palms, then get to work. I must lose track of time, for the next thing I know, I hear the door opening. I whirl around, to find Karina stepping through. Followed by Isla.

"What the hell?" My voice cracks. Shit, how many hours have I been here? My throat is scratchy, the way it gets when I am too focused on my art. "How did you two get here?"

Karina exchanges a look with Isla, then both walk over to me. "What are you working on?" Karina asks.

"Umm, it's not ready yet." I glance around, then grab the folded burlap cloth, also part of the supplies he provided. Goddamn it, did the man have to be so perfect? Only when it comes to being thoughtful in things outside of sex, that is... Okay, hold on, even during sex, he'd made sure to take care of my needs, made sure that I'd orgasmed... Hell, my life had become one long, hot, sweaty climax since I'd run into him... Except when he had commanded me not to come, of course. Okay, stop. Don't think of him anymore.

I place myself between the unfinished sculpture and my friends.

"Well?" I frown. "What are you doing here? How did you find me and—" I scowl at Karina, "How did you get a key to the apartment?"

She stares back at me.

"Right." I blow out a breath, "You're the security expert for the Seven so, of course, you have access to their properties."

"You don't have to sound so upset about it." She half smiles. "I haven't been inside his bedroom."

Right.

I dig my fingers through my now dry hair, then realize I must've gotten the clay in my hair. Crap. I glower at Karina's perfectly coiffed hairstyle. "Do you always have to look so perfect?" I glance out of the window at the pinkening skies, "So early in the morning?"

"I'm far from it." She peers into my face, then holds out the bag she's been carrying. "It's for you."

"What's that?"

"Open it."

I wash my hands in the bowl of water on the table and dry them, then take the bag from her, peek inside. "Oh!" I glance up at her. "You brought me clothes?"

She tilts her head, "He was most insistent and very detailed about what to get you."

"You mean... D... Damian?"

"Who else?"

I glance down at my clay flecked garments. Damn it, Damian, how the hell do you think of everything? No one else has taken such good care of me before. Why the hell do you have to make it so difficult for me to hate you?

Karina's features soften, "Why don't you freshen up and join us? And then we can talk?"

Ten minutes later, after a quick shower and wearing a fresh pair of jeans and a T-shirt that is a perfect fit—I wouldn't have expected less from him—I join the two girls in the kitchen.

Isla adds some chopped herbs to the frying pan.

"You're making breakfast?"

"I found the ingredients for a quick omelet." Isla divides the contents of the pan onto three plates and sets them on the counter. She follows up by placing a fresh croissant on each plate. "We picked these up on the way over, but, the entire kitchen is stocked, enough that if you planned to stay here, well," she glances at me, "you wouldn't need to leave this place for a week... Maybe longer."

"Oh." I slip onto one of the bar stools, reach for the cup of coffee that Karina hands me.

Isla raises her cup, "Salut, babe."

I clink my cup with Karina's, take a sip, and set it down. Then cut into the omelet. The flavors burst on my tongue and I blink. "Wow," I take another bite, "this omelet is—"

"Delicious." Karina nods.

I turn to Isla, and she raises her hands, "Not that I am not a good cook, but it's the ingredients. Everything is farm fresh, organic, top of the line."

"I am sure it is." Everything Damian owns is top-notch and he's choosing to share it with me. I set down my fork. "This doesn't make sense," I groan.

"What? The omelet?" Karina asks.

"No." I draw in a breath, then lower the glass. "Damian," I exclaim. "He...he's killing me with his consideration."

"Huh?" Isla exchanges a glance with Karina. "So, what's bothering you, babe?"

"Everything." I stab my fork into the omelet and play with it. "Nothing. I don't know." I drop the fork with a clatter.

"Eat first." Karina tucks into her own food. "Bitching about men is best done on a full stomach."

"Yeah." I half smile, then sample the croissant. "This is good," I tell them. "Thank you for bringing this. And thank you for making breakfast, Isla."

"Not a problem at all, when you're cooking in a kitchen that induces an orgasm by just being in the space," she retorts.

I choke, then reach for my coffee, and take a healthy sip.

Karina pats me on my back, "You okay?"

"Yeah."

"Something I said?" Isla watches me with a curious gaze.

"Orgasms," I mumble. "If there's one thing the man got right, it was that."

"I knew it!" Isla giggles. "How many O's have you had since you got together with that panty-melting hunk?"

"Too many to keep track of," I grumble.

"Ooh." Isla fans herself, "That's sooo hot; don't stop. At least, I can live vicariously."

"Get your own." I frown.

"I do, babe." She nods, "Ben keeps me happy."

"Ben?" Karina asks. "You have a boyfriend?"

"My vibrator."

I choke again, this time on the gasp that has me inhaling the spit in my mouth. Jeez. "Sorry," I finally manage to rasp.

"You named your vibrator?" Karina chuckles, "Good move."

"It makes the experience much more intimate, you get me?" Isla laughs.

"Oh, one dick's as good as another. The name only gets in the way," Karina jokes.

"Unless the name is Arpad, huh?"

Karina jerks her head in my direction, her features taking on a stunned expression, then she nods. "You're perceptive."

"You sound surprised." I take in her features. "Ah," I nod, "I see."

"What?" She tilts her head.

"You thought I was the nanny, so clearly, someone who doesn't have much ambition, or an IQ, for that matter. And then, of course, I'm screwing Damian so, well, how could I possibly be anything other than a bimbo, huh?"

Karina winces, sips from her cup, "Guilty."

"You're not denying it?" I blink.

"Why should I?" She glances between me and Isla, "I admit, that's what I thought about both of you, actually."

Isla gapes, "Gee, thanks." She frowns, "Straight talk is okay and all, but thank God, I don't suffer from that affliction."

Karina does a slow blink, then laughs, "I like both of you."

"Thanks," I mutter.

"No, really." She glances between us again. "I admit, I had you girls down as... Well, there's a type who hang around the Seven. You have to understand, in my line of business I see a lot of things—"

"You mean, thanks to the security agency you run?"

She nods. "It's a man's business I am in. I mean, what isn't? But this one, particularly. And then, having to make a success of it... I admit, it's probably increased my testosterone levels to a degree even I am not comfortable with."

I frown at her. What a weird remark. Why would she say that? "You... you want a child, don't you?"

Karina's shoulders jerk.

Isla makes a noise in her throat.

"I'm sorry," I mumble. "Guess the events of the last few days have me on edge... It's sent my empathy radar into overdrive, and I'm an artist... And a nanny... Means I sense things..." I shut up. "I didn't mean to pry."

"No, it's okay." Karina's lips twist. "I do want a child, more than anything, but there is no man on the horizon, so..."

"IVF?" Isla ventures.

"Maybe." She shakes her head, "I am trying to work up my courage toward it." She half laughs, "Seems I am more old-fashioned than I thought when it comes to these things."

Tell me about it. I thought I'd be alright with the strange association Damian had proposed. Turns out, I need more. I want to see him more often, spend more time with him, get to know what makes him tick, how he is when he sleeps, when he is composing, when he's taking care of his child.

"I need to get inside Damian's house."

Karina stares at me. "You know I can't help you with that."

"You can." I nod. What has gotten into me? I must have absorbed some of Damian's authoritarian attitude, for I hold Karina's gaze. "You believe in the sisterhood, don't you?"

She frowns. "I wouldn't have come this far if it weren't for my mother, and the women along the way who helped me," she says slowly.

"Take one for the team." I tilt my head.

"I can't put my professional reputation at risk. If word got out..."

"We'd never tell anyone." Isla mimes zipping her mouth and throwing away her key.

Karina folds her arms over her chest. "I can't believe you'd ask me to do that."

"What were Damian's instructions to you?"

"Instructions?"

"Yeah, yeah." I shake my hair from my face, "What did he tell you with respect to me? What is it that forced you to become friendly with me?"

Karina's face flushes. "I admit I befriended you because Damian wanted me to keep an eye on you, but honestly, the more I got to know the two of you, the more I liked both of you."

"We are highly likable." Isla laughs. That woman, she is as friendly as a puppy. She's already forgiven Karina for starting out this relationship with us under false pretexts. Me? I'm not giving in that easily.

"What else did he tell you to do?" I hold Karina's gaze.

She scrutinizes my features, "He told me to watch out for you, protect you —"

I nod, "Either you tell me how to get into his place, or I'll have to break in, and the walls around his place are really high."

"Hmm."

"I may hurt myself." I stab my tongue into my cheek. "And that would make Damian unhappy."

"Very unhappy," she agrees.

"So...?" I hold my breath.

"So," she raises her cup, "at least, let's finish breakfast first?"

I clink my cup against hers, "Done."

Several minutes later, she sets her coffee cup down next to her empty plate and leans forward, "Listen carefully..."

29th Dec
Damian

After leaving Julia, I'd called Meredith and asked her to stay the night. She'd agreed. Then I'd gone on a ride to clear my head. Turns out, that wasn't as easy as expected. My thoughts were filled with Julia, what she had come to mean to me, how I want her in my life... All of which is impossible.

By the time I'd made it home, it was dawn.

I'd jumped into the shower and changed into clean clothes, then walked into the living room to find Meredith waiting for me.

"You can't do this on your own, Damian." She folds her arms across her chest.

"I don't need anyone's help." I scowl at her as I pace the floor. Some of Riley's toys are scattered on the carpet. I pick them up and drop them into the box next to the settee. The pink hairband that she'd worn catches my attention. I pick it up, take in the shiny unicorn on it. "Girl's obsessed with fairytales and rainbows," I mutter. "And that damn Frozen." I shake my head, "I can't get the lyrics of the song out of my mind." I turn to Meredith, "Do you think Riley would enjoy the books as much as the movies?"

"Damian." She frowns.

I hum the tune from the theme song, then drag my fingers through my hair. "See?" I tilt my head. "That goddam tune is burned into my brain."

"Maybe you should try your hand at writing songs for kids."

I study her expression, "You think so?"

"You're a born father, Damian."

I swallow the ball of emotions in my throat. "You're being too kind."

"It's the only time you act human, when you talk about Riley."

I squeeze my eyes shut. "It's the only time I feel human." I shuffle my feet, "That's why, you see, I can't allow anyone else in. I can't let anyone else help me with this...situation I am in."

"You're going to have to give in and get help eventually. You can't go on like this."

"You're right," I thrust out my chest, "but surely, I am allowed to treat her as my little girl for a while longer."

Meredith's forehead wrinkles; she opens her mouth as if to say something then firms her lips. "I'll call later to check, in case you need my help with anything."

"Thanks." I walk toward her and kiss her cheek. "Thanks for everything. I don't know how I could have managed without you."

She pats my shoulder, scrutinizes my face. "Damian." Her forehead furrows, "You know how much I care about you. You know the Seven of you are the closest I have to family?"

I nod.

"If I hadn't come across you kids when you were picking fights on the streets after the incident, I don't know what I'd have done with my life."

"Meredith," I grip her arm, "you've been a quasi-mother to all of us."

"I could never have my own children, but being with all of you has meant I haven't miss that part of my life as much as I would have."

I nod.

"And then there's Peter."

"Peter?" I frown, "Sterling's chauffeur?"

She nods, a gleam in her eyes.

"What does he have to do with...?" I stare. "Jesus, Meredith," I mutter. "You mean, you and Peter?"

"Don't tell me the lot of you didn't guess?"

"Hmm, well." My neck heats. "It's not like we talk about you that way, and besides, Peter...uh..."

"He's protective about you lot, too, huh?"

"Yeah," I nod. "Still, I mean," I shuffle my feet, not knowing what to say. It's a bit like finding out that your parents have sex. I mean, they do and that's how we were born, but somehow you want to pretend that they are these perfect creatures with no wants or passion or— "Hell," I roll my shoulders, "why are you telling me this, now?"

"Just so you know that we all have our secrets, Damian."

"Right." I tip my chin up and glance past her.

"And we all need help with our demons."

I scowl, "Why don't you tell me what's on your mind?"

"Julia." She stares up at me.

I meet her gaze. "Julia?"

"Let her in, Damian. She wants to be part of your life. She can help, if you let her."

"I don't need anyone's help." I step back, "This is something I need to deal with myself."

"Do you, though?" She reaches up and pats my cheek, "Don't delay until it's too late. Don't let Julia get away."

I blow out a breath. "Thanks for the advice."

"Now, I feel like I've been put in my place."

I stare at her in horror. "Meredith, no. You know you are much more than an assistant to all of us."

"Of course, I do." She chuckles, "And trust me, I won't take any lip from any of you boys, either."

"You're tough," I grumble.

"No shit." She laughs, then turns to leave. I wait in the doorway until she's driven off and the gates have closed behind her, then head inside.

Later that evening, after putting Riley to bed, I make my way toward the study at the far end of the ground floor. I check my phone to make sure my app is open and tuned into Riley's bedroom. Placing my phone upright on the table next to the sofa so I can see the screen as well as access it, I pour myself a whiskey, then sink down into the comfortable settee and grab my guitar.

I begin to strum the guitar, composing the song in my head.

Whisper your kisses in my ear

My lips on yours

As you fall apart all over my cock

As lust swells your eyelids

And your pussy weeps

As you come so prettily, I am sure that I will never feel as alive again...

I draw in a breath. Shit, that's bloody emo, and hot... And what the hell am I writing now? A lust song, an ode dedicated to the woman who's turned my life upside down. Who I need to stop seeing, stop thinking of, before she turns me into a bumbling idiot who'd give up his life for one more touch, one more fuck, one more time to sink my cock inside of her. "Bloody hell." I toss the guitar aside, rise to my feet and head for the snifter of whiskey, when the app on my phone beeps. I top up the liquid in my tumbler, head for the phone and snatch it up. The security app has a notification. I swipe to it and the image of a woman opening the front door and walking in fills the screen.

"What the—?" I take in the familiar tilt of her chin, her slender shoulders, the curved hips, the dark hair piled on top of her head. What are you doing here, Flower, hmm?

I track her progress across the living room, and into the hallway. She glances right, before turning the other way. She heads toward the study.

I glance up as she walks in.
"Hello, Damian."

31

Julia

Of course, I expected him to know when I had walked into his house. Just because Karina had given me the passwords to his gates and to his front door didn't mean Damian was going to be unaware of when I'd entered his domain. I fully expected him to be waiting for me... I hadn't expected the impact of how it would be to see Daddy D, in his own surroundings, in a pair of sweats and a thin black T that hugs his torso and clings to his abs and shows off the angle of his beautiful shoulders...

OMFG. A bead of sweat runs down my back. I glance around, taking in the cozy surroundings, the faded leather of the settee, the bookshelves, the drum set in a corner, a piano at the other side, with the thick rug in front of the fire that begs to be used and caressed. Like me...my skin, my heart. I rub the skin over my chest.

"You okay?" He frowns.

No.

No.

I nod, gesture to the space. "This is not what I expected."

"I didn't expect to see you here, either."

"Umm." I shuffle my feet. "Me, neither."

"And yet, here you are."

"You don't seem too surprised."

"I'm not." He frowns. "I suppose it had to happen."

"What?"

"You deciding to take a tour of my place, wanting to see how I live, wanting to get close to me. It's normal."

"It is?" I frown.

"Uh-huh." He rubs his chest and his biceps bulge. The sleeve of his T-shirt pulls tight against his muscles. Whoa! Surely, the cloth's gonna snap any second? I swallow.

"It's my overpowering charisma, my larger-than-life personality, my magnetism." He tilts his head. "Admit it, you had to see me again."

"I... I." I take a step inside, and stare at the rat's-ass of a man, every inch a rock star, with the tattoos that peek over the collar of his T-shirt. How weird. He's been inside me, and I haven't even seen him completely naked.

"What are you hiding?" I frown.

His features freeze, "What do you mean?"

"I've never seen you without your clothes." I take in the inverted triangle of his torso, the tapered waist, the corded thighs that stretch the material of his sweats, his feet...which are naked. My throat dries. His beautiful toes, large feet...and wide, with toenails that are blunt cut. I can't take my gaze off of them... My thighs clench. Jesus. Clearly, I have a foot fetish.

"I began sculpting you from memory."

"Excuse me?"

I jerk my chin up to meet his gaze, "I began working on your bust." Why am I telling him that? Is it to try to catch him off balance? Is it to try to get my brain, which is stuck in some kind of Damian Savage sex-filled haze, to kickstart and function again?

"You didn't need me to pose then?"

"Your features are etched in my mind." Heat sears my cheeks, but I don't look away. What the hell am I trying to do here? Fessing up like that? Walking in here without a plan seemed all brave, but this, faced with six-foot four-inches of lethal alpha male, in his den... On his turf, where he knows the rules and I don't...? OMG... How stupid can I get? I take a step back; he shakes his head.

I angle my body toward the exit; he holds up his phone. He taps a finger on the screen and the door to the study begins to swing closed.

I yelp, leap toward it...too late. The door shuts with a snick. There's a click. Oh no, he locked it. He did. I know he did. I move forward, more out of habit than anything, intent on testing the handle to check if he did lock it, then stop. I won't give him that satisfaction. I will not repeat the stupid scene from earlier when I had tried to open the bloody door and had to give up and turned around to— Heat envelops me from behind. I gasp.

He tugs on my backpack and I allow him to lower it to the ground.

"Unbutton your coat," he orders.

I pause.

"Do it," he snaps, and all thoughts drain from my head. I reach for my coat, release the buttons. He reaches around, to pull the lapels aside. He lowers the coat down my arms, then eases it off of me.

I should feel cooler without it. Instead, the heat of his body cocoons me, thrums across my skin.

He pulls on the hair that I'd piled on top of my head, and the strands come loose and slither down and around my shoulders. Goosebumps pop on my skin. How can I be hot and cold at the same time? I curl my fingers into fists so he can't see how much I am trembling.

"Look at me," he whispers.

I shake my head.

"Please," he urges and I freeze. OMG, Damian... Asking me for something? That's a first, and somehow, so apt, in the quietness of this space, with the crackling of the wood fire in the background and the heat of his big body that burns me deeper than any flames ever could. It feels right to turn around, raise my gaze to meet his. Cerulean, bright, blazing brighter than the fire I have seen in any kiln. What a strange thought. I bite the inside of my cheek.

"You're amused about something?" His beautiful lips kick up in a smile that mirrors the rightness I feel inside. Shit, what's wrong with me?

"Your daughter," I venture. "Is she asleep?"

"She's fine where she is."

His features take on that slightly remote expression I am coming to recognize, the one that signals he's put up a barrier between himself and the world, the one which is as clear as a sign that says 'fuck the hell off.' What the hell? Why did I have to go and blurt that out right then?

I glance at the settee and spot a few sheafs of paper with his writing on it. "You've been composing?"

He glances down at the pages, then sweeps them up and sets them aside. "They're not for public consumption."

"I'm hardly a member of the 'public,'" I make air quotes with my fingers. "Please?" I wheedle, "I want to read the lyrics."

"Not happening." He ambles toward the piano.

I reach for the pages on the settee and he clicks his tongue, "Don't even think about it."

I pout. Does he have eyes at the back of his head or what?

"Considering it was my orgasms that fueled the words,"—seriously can you believe this?—"you could at least let me take a peek."

"I explicitly forbid you from looking at the lyrics," he snaps.

And now, I definitely need to read them.

He saunters over to seat himself in front of the piano. That's when I bend down, grab the papers and glance over them quickly. Oh, wow! These are good...different...but so good. Better than anything I've heard him sing before.

He begins to play a few notes, and I place the pages back, then walk over to him. "Is that the tune for the new lyrics?" I ask.

"Maybe." He continues to play the instrument with those long thick fingers which shouldn't seem so at home at the keyboard, but they do. Gah! He can play me anyway, too. I shake my head, and clearly, his influence is rubbing off if I can't stop the word play on my own thoughts. I take in his features, his tense shoulder muscles, his spine which is ramrod straight. I reach him, place my hands on his shoulders and begin to massage. He stops playing. I dig my fingers into the knots, begin to ease them out. He grunts.

I drag my knuckles down either side of his spine, in the hollows between his vertebrae, and he heaves out a sigh. "You're good at this."

"Comes from all the clay I've molded," I say, only half-jokingly.

"Oh, baby, how I'd like to mold you," he smirks.

"Ugh," I frown, "you can't resist the bad puns, can you?"

"Do you blame me?" He chuckles. "When I find an opening, I take it."

Speaking of taking openings... Nooooo, stop, right there. Just because alphahole here likes to twist meanings out of words where none existed before, doesn't mean I should, huh?

"I think you use it more as a diversion," I retort.

"Oh?" He lowers this chin, "How's that?"

"You're an asshole, that's for sure, but there's something inside of you, some mystery, something hurt maybe, something that keeps pulling me back even though I try my best to stay away."

"Like the Pied Piper?"

"You calling me a rat?" I bristle.

"In the story, the Pied Piper got all of the children to follow him too. Maybe you're the Pied Piper. But I was thinking of you more like a little mouse who has run amuck and turned my life upside down. You know, if you give a mouse a cookie, she'll never leave. No matter what you do to make her."

I slap his shoulder, "Seriously, you're horrible."

He chuckles. "Comes with the territory."

"How is it to be a rock star, with so many people eager to find out everything about you?"

"First," he holds up a finger, "I am a reclusive rock star and second, that's why I am not on social media anymore."

"That's brave of you."

He folds his arms over his chest, "Are you being sarcastic?"

"No, really. How many celebrities would take that step, and risk alienating their followers?"

He drops his arms and rotates his shoulders, "You means the ones I still have left?" He chuckles wryly. "For a while, I felt unconnected to the songs I was creating. I hoped that if I disengaged with the world it would help me to look inward more, connect with my imagination once again." He laughs, "I can't believe I admitted to that aloud."

He rakes his fingers through his hair. "Also, this way, I don't have the incessant pressure to engage with my fans. I don't have to justify what I say or do. I don't have to worry about if I am pleasing people or not."

"And when you are on stage, what then?"

"Then I am ready to entertain, to be that other person. Still me, but different."

"I'd love to see you perform live."

"That's not happening for a while."

"No," I protest, "I've seen videos of your shows and you are incredible."

"It doesn't interest me anymore."

"Then what does?"

He looks over his shoulder, scrutinizes my features. He half turns, pushes back the bench, then wraps an arm around me and pulls me around to stand between his legs.

"You do."

"Oh." I stare at his gorgeous features—the high cheekbones, the hooked nose, that mean upper lip, the fat lower lip that I want to chew on.

"Like what you see?" He smirks.

"Very much." I swallow.

Heat from his big body pours over me, surrounds me, the strength of his dominance pushing down on my shoulders, holding me immobile as he urges me closer, closer.

"Open your mouth," his voice lowers to a hush and goosebumps pop on my skin.

I part my lips. Just like that, he leans up, slides his forefinger over my tongue and I suck on it.

His blue eyes deepen to that cerulean that sends a thrill right up my spine. I bite down on his digit and his lips twist. "Such a hellion."

He pulls his finger from my mouth, drags it down my chin, my throat, the valley between my breasts. He pinches my nipple and I yelp.

"Who does this belong to?"

You, it belongs to you, is what I want to say. Hah! As if I am going to make it that easy for him. "Who do you think?" I ask.

He peels back his lips, slaps my breast.

I jump, "What the—"

"Who do your breasts belong to?"

"Not to—"

He slaps my left breast, then my right, my left again.

I yell, "Stop, stop, you asshole."

"Alphahole," he snaps. "Tired of correcting you, tired of having you challenge me, go toe-to-toe with me. You think you can defy me and win, you thought wrong."

"Fuck off," I choke.

"Wrong answer."

He cups both of his big palms around my breasts and squeezes, like I am a shapeless mass of clay for him to mold, or a bust that he is sculpting. Okay, so it is my bust that he's massaging and kneading and pummeling like he can't keep his hands off of me. And I don't want him to stop touching me. I need him to stop teasing me, and fuck me, only I am not going to ask for it. Ever.

"You don't scare me," I blurt.

"Oh?"

I lower my chin, stare at his beautiful, cruel, mean features. "You can't make me submit."

He bares his teeth and I shiver.

Jesus, what the hell is wrong with me? I'd come here, wanting to push him over the edge... I hadn't realized that it's me that I'm challenging, that I want him to take me, show me how it could be when I'm not thinking too much, simply taking what is in front of me. "Do your worst," I mutter.

He releases my breasts, only to grab my hips, spin around, and hoist me up and onto the wooden top of the piano.

I stare down at him, at his cold features, the stern lips, how he frowns at me as if trying to solve a puzzle. "Why are you here?"

"Why do you think?"

"I think you're trying to provoke me."

"Am I succeeding?"

"Maybe." He tilts his head. "Maybe not." He reaches forward, cups his big palm around my pussy. "Maybe you want to push me until I take you, so you can pretend you didn't really want it."

"I don't."

He laughs, "Your presence here says otherwise."

I swallow. Can't refute that, can I?

I glance away and he chuckles, "Thought so. Tell me what you want me to do and I will."

I bite down on the inside of my cheek.

"And if I don't?" I mumble.

"Then," he pushes back the piano bench and rises to his feet, "I am leaving; you can see yourself out."

He angles to go and I swoop down and grab his arm, "Please."

He glances down at my hand then back at me. I release my hold.

He glares at me, and my throat closes. He holds my gaze with his, raises an eyebrow, and I know then, if I let him leave now, he'll never see me again. He'll ignore me, walk away from me, never allow me to get close to him again, and damn it, I want it, just once. I want to feel the full power of his presence, the weight of his body on mine, his tongue dancing over mine, his fingers entwined with mine, his dick inside my pussy as he rams into me over and over again.

"Please," I swallow, "ruin me."

Damian

"You don't mean that."

"I... I do." She tips up her chin.

"You don't know what you're asking for."

"Don't I?" Her lips twist. She begins to unbutton her shirt.

I shake my head. "Stop."

"Make me." She reaches for the next button.

I swoop down and grab her wrist. "Told you not to do it."

"Oh?" She smiles wider. "What are you gonna do about it?"

I draw in a breath. She's teasing me, testing me, and I shouldn't give in to the allure of her body, her scent, the way she peers up at me from under heavy eyelids, then slides her palm between her jeans-clad thighs, "Don't you want this Damian?"

"Don't play with me," I warn.

She throws back her head, laughs in a sultry husky tone.

A ripple of lust pulses down my spine.

She brings her other hand up to cup her breast, "And this...? I know how much you'd like to fuck my tits, Daddy D."

"Daddy D?"

She blinks, "Ignore I...said that."

"No." I lean into her. She pushes her shoulders down into the lid of the piano. Her foot hits one of the piano keys and the sound rings out through the space. The vibrations roll up from the surface against where my thighs meet the slip of the keyboard. My groin hardens.

Hell, music and this woman. Together, they are a lethal combination. One I can't live without, the other I can't have enough of. One is my livelihood... The other my...life? What am I thinking?

She's only someone I find appealing, someone I need to fuck out of my system, someone whose orgasms unlock the dead place inside of me where I have hidden for so long. She brings me alive, and that's not a bad thing, considering I am finally able to write. She's the key to my muse and I need to keep her in that space. As long as I don't let her intrude into my everyday life, I'll be fine.

"So, you like role play?" I ask.

"I didn't say that."

"Don't lie," I snap at her.

She winces. "I... I'm not lying."

"Yes, you are." I lean over her, until my head is positioned right over hers. "Admit it."

"I... admit nothing," she whispers.

"Hmm." I lick her lips; she winces.

"Am I hurting you?" I peer into her eyes.

"No...no," she shakes her head.

"Then I need to rectify that."

"What—?"

I grab at the half-open fronts of her shirt and tug. The buttons pop off, she gasps, and her shirt gapes open in the front. I glance down at her beautiful tits that spill out from the top of her demi-bra. "So pretty." I pull the shirt apart, on either side of her, over her arms and hold her in place.

"D... Damian," she moans.

I stare down at the dark pink of her nipples visible through the almost transparent cloth. Hell, she's bloody gorgeous, so edible, a fucking sonnet that I need to memorize until I forget everything else. I bend down, close my mouth around one of the pebbled peaks.

She moans, the sound so hot, so needy, blood drains to my groin.

I bite down on her nipple and she yells, "Jesus."

"Not the name I want to hear," I growl, then turn my attention to her other breast. I tug on the nipple and she groans. "Oh..." she murmurs, "ohmygod."

"Try again." I release her shirt only to cup her tits, squeeze them together. I bury my face in the fragrant valley between her flesh, and her scent goes straight to my head. My cock throbs, my balls hurt... What the hell is Flower doing to me? I've never been this close to losing control, to forgetting why I wanted to make her come in the first place. I raise my head peer into her face. "You're driving me crazy," I mutter. "I need to fuck you out of my system."

"What?"

I nod. "I need to make you come over and over again, store up enough of your orgasms to last me a lifetime, and then I won't need to see you again."

Her forehead scrunches and her gaze narrows, "So, I was right?"

I tilt my head.

"You really have this thing, that my orgasms help you write."

"It's worth a try."

"At least, admit it." Her green eyes blaze. "Give me recognition where it's due."

"Why should I?" I drawl, and it's not because I don't want to acknowledge the role she's begun to play in my creative process, it's just... I have a thing to see her pissed off. It's so much more fun when she sets her jaw, curls her fingers into fists, throws a punch at me. So sweet. As if she'll ever catch me off balance.

"Wanna fight me, huh?" I smirk.

"What I want to do is kick you in your balls." She strains against me, pulls up her knee. I lean down and into the 'V' between her legs, massage her breasts with enough force that she groans, "What the hell?" She draws in a breath, and her chest heaves, more of her tits filling my palms.

My shaft hardens further, as I lean into the hollow between her thighs. Another note from the piano reverberates across the space. That was me, or more precisely, my cock, that rang that particular note.

What the fuck am I thinking? Clearly, she's getting to me, twisting up my thoughts...and my balls. And no way, can I let that happen.

"If you think I am gonna fuck you under the same roof as my daughter, you're wrong."

"Oh." She swallows. Her shoulders droop and her lips turn down, "I understand."

"You do?"

She nods. "I actually think you went up in my estimation when you said that."

"Don't give me too much credit," I release her breasts, take a step back, sink down onto the piano bench, "for it's not going to make me stop from giving you an orgasm."

"What?"

I grip her waist, pull her forward until she's balanced at the edge of the piano's lid.

Julia

The chords from the keyboard fill my ears; the vibrations roll up my legs, sink into my center. My core clenches. My pussy spasms. OMG, this is insane. I glance down in time to see him lower the zipper of my jeans.

"Damian what—"

He tugs on my jean legs, pulls them down past my knees, then lowers his face to my center. He draws in a breath, and his shoulders seem to swell. "Your scent, it haunts my dreams, laces my every waking moment. I want to write an ode to that sweet cunt of yours, do you know that?"

He hums a tune and the sub vocals ladder up my core, sink into the crevasses between my pussy lips, coil inside my womb. My thighs tremble. I raise my chin, glance up at the ceiling. What the hell is happening to me? I'd come here, hoping to meet his daughter, sure that I'd surprise a reaction out of him, definitely goad him into fucking me... But this...almost worshipful stance of his is...different. It's deeper than what I'd anticipated, more moving, and so, so arousing. I gulp, try to close my legs.

He clicks his tongue, "Don't hide from me, Flower."

He blows on my center, and the heat of his breath crawls into my secret space. A whine bleeds from my lips. I slap the back of my palm to my mouth. How can I sound so needy? So ready, so willing for whatever it is he wants to take from me.

He licks my core through the cloth of my panties and a shudder grips me. "Ohmygod," I moan. "Oh."

"Damian," he growls. "Say my name, Flower."

"Damian," I croak, and he stills.

I look down to find his gaze fixed on me. "You have no idea what you do to me, do you?"

"The same thing you do to me?" I venture.

"Which is?"

I frown. "Is that a trick question?"

"There are no trick answers." His lips curl, he dips his head, closes his teeth around my swollen nub that's outlined against the cloth, and my back shoots up and off the piano.

"Damian," I screech, "what are you doing?"

"What do you think?" He straightens, then holding my gaze, grips the waistband of my thin nylon knickers. He yanks and they snap; he pulls them off of me. Cool air brushes my lower lips a second before he bends and swipes his tongue from my backhole to my clit, and then again.

"Damian," I gasp.

"Shh!" he admonishes me. "Keep your voice down. You'll wake Riley."

Right. I bite down on my lower lip, curl my fingers into fists and swallow down another moan when he lowers his head between my thighs again. He closes his mouth around my clit and my back shoots up and off of the piano. "Ah!" I can't stop the moan that bleeds from me. He swipes his tongue between my pussy lips, then curls his tongue around the swollen nub of my clit and my eyes cross. I swear, they do. "Ohmygod."

I open my eyes, and he looms over me. He stuffs my panties in my mouth as I gaze at him wide-eyed. He puts a finger to his lips, then drops back into his seat. He forces his shoulders back between my thighs, forcing me to spread even wider apart, then closes his mouth over my pussy again.

A groan boils up, as I grip the edge of the piano and hold on.

Bloody hell, I'll never get used to how he aims for my throbbing core with a single-minded focus. How he slides his fingers around my upper thighs, holds me in place and licks me, and sucks on my pussy and fucks my channel with his tongue, in-and-out and in-and-out.

I slap my fingers against the wooden lid of the piano, dig my heels into the keyboard, and the music rises in a wall of noise that surrounds me, engulfs me, pours over me, as he tears his mouth from my center, replaces it with two-three-four of his thick fingers, all at once, and curves his digits inside, hitting that spot that only he is aware of, while he reaches up to pull the panties from between my lips. He thrusts his thumb inside my open mouth. "Come," he orders. "Come all over my piano."

I don't want to obey him. I don't want to give him what feels like something too personal, too intimate, to shatter right here under his roof, on his musical instrument that he plays with those skilled fingers... Oh, wait, that's me. It's my body he wields like it was contoured for his fingertips, that he can press, and dip into, and strum and spank into a miasma of broken notes and searing prose, his very own composition that he hates...and loves... And he does, in his own way. He just doesn't know it yet.

"Come for me, Flower." He lowers his voice to a hush and I am gone. The climax encloses me, sheaths me, throws me up high, then releases me, and I plunge down, down, down, back into his waiting arms, his teasing mouth, his wicked lips, that tongue of his that gives and takes from me. I crack open my eyelids and watch him watch me. He lowers his chin, licks the moisture that glistens on my inner thighs. He swallows, then rises to his feet. "Get dressed." He stalks away from the piano and heads for the door.

"Coming?" He glances at me over his shoulder, "I don't have all day."

Of course, not. I lower my feet to the floor, my knees buckle, and I grab at the keyboard. The rich tones of the keys fill the space.

His gaze narrows and he seems on the verge of saying something, then desists.

I shove my panties in my back pocket, zip up my jeans, then head over to where he holds up my coat. I thrust my arms through the sleeves, and he buttons me up, his forehead furrowed in concentration. When he reaches my chest, I step back. "I'll do it."

He glares at me and I subside. Damn it, when he looks at me like that, I can't deny him anything. Not even this small token of my defiance. Bah! What defiance. I had given in to his touch, come apart completely and he... He hadn't even broken a sweat. Had I been wrong to think he was falling for me? Wishful thinking, maybe?

He snatches up my backpack and offers it to me, then steps aside to let me pass. Only to guide me toward the living room. Guess he can't wait to get me out of here. I glance around the space, at the thick rug in front of the fireplace. My foot brushes something. I glance down at a doll which is face down on the carpet; next to it is a worn-out toy dog. I pick it up.

"Benjy." He clears his throat.

I stiffen. Don't breathe; don't look at him. Finally, he's revealing a little more about himself. Let him speak. Don't say a word. Don't. "Is that her favorite toy?"

"How did you know?" He frowns.

"It has a well-worn look about it. Also," I pat the toy's furry head, "I had one of my own that I held onto, into my teens."

"You didn't want to grow up, huh?"

"You could say that," I toss my hair over my shoulder, then shoot him a sideways glance. "Don't get any ideas, buster."

"Me?" He smirks. "Not likely. I am too busy trying to get my next album out."

"For which you need me as an inspiration, huh?"

"Don't get any ideas." He echoes my earlier words.

"Not likely." I head for the door, "You've made it clear what you want from me."

"And—?"

"And," I twist open the door handle, then turn to face him, "I decline."

"What?" He frowns.

"My orgasms are not for sale anymore."

His jaw tics, "Everyone is for sale."

"Not me; not anymore."

"I paid good money."

"Check your records, I've returned your payments."

He frowns, "And your debts?"

I raise my shoulders, "I'll live with them, pay them off over the next twenty years, like other people."

"You're not other people." He takes a step forward, then stops. "You're different."

"Yeah, that's why you treat me like I'm—"

"Special."

"Expendable." I toss my head.

"I let you into my home."

"I broke in." I set my lips.

"Why do you think Karina gave you the passcodes?"

"You...?" I blink, "You knew?"

"I was the one who encouraged her to share them."

"She deceived me?"

"Not her fault. She didn't know. Not really." He widens his stance. "I told her to do what was needed to ensure your safety. And clearly, giving you the means to enter my home rather than breaking in, was in your interest."

"You...you liar."

"Everything between us was true. Every time I touched you, I meant it. Every orgasm I drew from you was more than real..."

"I don't believe it."

"Don't tell me that you didn't feel it."

"What I feel is manipulated. You used your money, your dominance, to steer my life the way you wanted."

"I work with what I have."

"So do I." I draw myself up to my full height. "You want to see me come, yet you won't allow me to meet your daughter. What do you call that?"

"I am protecting her... Protecting you..."

"How is treating me like a second-class citizen, who you don't trust, protecting me?"

"I don't want you getting close to her, not when this relationship between us is fake."

"And who's fault is that?" I throw up my hands. "You could have let me in, allowed me to take care of her and do my job."

"Your job..." he smirks, "is to come when I command you to."

"This entire conversation is insane." I glance around. "In fact, why the hell am I here arguing with you, when clearly, you have no intention of doing the right thing."

"The right thing is for you to leave." He jerks his chin at the door. "Good bye, Flower."

A ball of emotions closes my throat. Why the hell does he have to call me by that stupid pet name? "I fucking hate you," I choke out the words. "I wish I had never met you."

"That makes two of us." His gaze sharpens. He glances over his shoulder, then back at me. Huh? Did he hear something I didn't? Was that his daughter calling?

"Have a good life." He turns to leave as I step over the threshold. The door snicks shut behind me. I stand there, stare straight ahead, my heart thudding in my chest.

I should go, should get out of there, should leave the rock star and his manipulations behind and live my own life, find my own way, look for another job as a nanny, as I sculpt on my own time. My life was complete, right? I had found my calling in the two things that spoke to me... A career, unorthodox as it may be, but I was able to follow my passion—both of my passions. How many can say that? And if there's no one special, too bad. I lower my foot to the first step, glance at the gates in front that are swinging open.

I should get into my car and drive away, leave the asshole who sees me less as a person and more as a—a thing to get his creative juices flowing—no pun intended.

I should...turn around, march inside, and confront him. And ask him why the hell did he insist on holding me at arm's length? Why did he never make love to me? Why did he create that damn studio for me? He had to have felt something... So, why did he allow me inside his home, only to turn me out again?

He wants me... He does... So, what stops him from claiming me as his?
I stiffen, stare at the path beyond the gates.

If I leave, this is really it. He'll let me walk away, no questions asked. I'll never see him again... Not even online, considering he isn't on social media anywhere. And he may not release another album again. Not if he's as blocked as he claimed. Which is a pity. The alphahole is bloody talented. He was meant to compose, to sing, to burn up the stage with his presence and dominate his audience, as he'd taken control of me...my reactions...my orgasms. And the truth is, no one can make me come like he does.

I owe it to myself... Well, at least, for the future of my sex life—which he's spoiled completely for me, now that I know how it could be with him. Aargh! I drag my fingers through my hair. What the hell do I do?

I step down, turn to walk away, then hesitate. So, he told me to leave, and what? I am going to obey him? I am going to turn my back on him? When had I ever done as I was told, huh? Not with my parents, and certainly not because a certain rock star has ordered me to. At the very least, he owes me an explanation for why he's turning me out of his life.

Turning, I key my password into the keypad, then push open the door and slip in.

33

Damian

"Fuck this shit." I raise the guitar by its neck then fling it aside. It hits the fire head-first and the flames flicker up its body. The blaze fills its sound hole, leaps up to wrap lovingly around the inlay. "Fuck." I curl my fingers at my sides. I'd let her go. I'd made her come, then hurt her with my words and escorted her out.

A noise reaches me... I jerk my chin toward Riley's room. What the hell is wrong with me? I'd flown into a typical spoiled rock star rage. I'd slipped up and made enough noise to scare my daughter. When will I stop being selfish? Stop thinking solely of myself, and put my daughter's needs first? I race toward her room, come to a stop inside the doorway.

"Angel?"

Riley blinks up at me from the bed.

"Daddy?" She frowns. "I am scared." She sucks on her thumb, and my heart stutters.

"Shh!" I walk toward her. "Daddy's here now; you are safe."

Her chin trembles. "Will you read to me?" She snuffles.

"Of course, baby."

I sink into the chair next to her, "Which story, honey?"

"Alice." She cuddles her kitty cat doll close, "Will you read Alice and the white rabbit?"

"Alice in Wonderland," I correct her.

"Alice in W a n d e l a n d," she pronounces, using the phonetic spelling.

"Good girl," I praise her.

"Story, Daddy," she prompts.

"Last one, Poppet." I take in her features, her pink cheeks, the tousled locks, "Then you have to leave."

"B...but, I don't want to go." Her lower lip trembles.

"I don't want you to leave either," I confess.

"So why are you sending me away?"

"Because," I swallow down the thickness in my throat, "because sometimes we all have to do the things that we hate, because it's the only way to move on. When the time comes, baby, we all have to leave."

"When will my time come, Daddy?" She rubs her cheek into her pillow.

My heart stutters. "Not for a long time, baby."

"Will you stay with me until then?" She smiles at me and a pressure builds behind my eyes.

I reach over and kiss her forehead, "I promise."

She yawns, snuggles into the bed. "Read to me, Daddy," she mumbles. "I love to hear your voice as I'm falling asleep."

I pick up the book and begin.

Alice sighed wearily. "I think you might do something better with the time," she said, "than waste it in asking riddles that have no answers."

The earthy scent of clay mixed with the sweetness of vanilla reaches me. I stiffen, but continue to read out loud.

"If you knew Time as well as I do," said the Hatter, "you wouldn't talk about wasting it. It's him."

I hear the soft sound of her sneakers hit the floor as she takes a step into the room.

"I don't know what you mean," said Alice.

The floorboards creak as she walks toward me. I don't stop. I glance down at the book, the words swirl in front of my eyes, and I continue reciting from memory.

“Of course you don’t!” the Hatter said, tossing his head contemptuously. “I dare say you never even spoke to Time!”

She draws abreast, pauses, then glances at the bed. "Damian," she gasps, "What’s...what’s happening?"

A tear runs down my cheek, falls onto the page of the book.

“Perhaps not,” Alice cautiously replied: “but I know I have to beat time when I learn music.”

"Damian?" She turns to me, "What is this?"

I place the bookmark in the right place, then close the book. "What do you think it is?"

"You...you’re scaring me, Damian."

"Am I?" I rise to my feet, place the book back on the sideboard. "Why are you here, Julia?"

"I... I heard the noise of something crashing and ran back in. I wanted to make sure you were okay."

I turn to face her, fold my arms over my chest, "I am perfect."

She glances at the bed, then back at me. "You...you’re not."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because." She swallows, angles her head in the direction of the bed, then back at me, "You know why."

"No, I don’t."

"Don’t make me say it, Damian, please," she begs.

"Say what?" I twist my lips, "What is it you want to say to me, Julia?"

"Damian," she shakes her head, "don’t do this."

"Don’t do what?" I roll my shoulders. "Don’t do what, Julia?"

"Make me point out that..."

"That?"

"There’s no one other than us in the room, Damian."

"Isn’t there?" I walk toward the bed, glance down at the shape of the figure under the covers. "You mean this, don’t you?" I rip the sheet off and Julia screams.

I snatch up the bolster and fling it aside, then grab the cushion from where it's placed on the pillow, and rip the cloth from it. Goose feathers dot the air like snowflakes. They float down over me, stick to my cheeks, cover the fabric of my T-shirt. I see her stuffed kitty on the floor and kick it aside.

"She's dead," I say, the coldness growing in my chest, reaching out, growing faster, harder, until it reaches my extremities. I lower my arms to my sides. "She's gone. My child... I couldn't save her. I wasn't there for her. Her mother took her and left, and I didn't stop her."

"Damian." She touches my shoulder and something inside of me snaps.

I turn on her, grab her by her neck and haul her close, "I was fine, getting along. I was ready to give up everything to spend time with her, take care of her for the rest of my life. I would have given up my career, my songs. I would have sacrificed myself for her, and then you had to do it."

"Wh...what?" She swallows. "What did I do Damian?"

"You swept into my life with your sassy comments, and your perky breasts, and your curves. You forced yourself under my skin."

"F...forced?" She frowns.

"Don't lie to me." I squeeze her neck and her gaze widens.

"Damian, stop." She scratches at my wrist. "Damian, please, you don't mean this."

"I mean it all." I nod. "It's because of you that I kept leaving her alone and coming to you. It's because of you that I realized that—"

I pause and take in her wide-eyed look of confusion.

"That I couldn't live like this."

"Like what, Damian?"

"Alone, trapped in my head. In the past, grieving for what may have been. One look at you, and I wanted more. I wanted a life with you, Julia. And I knew I didn't deserve another chance at happiness, not when my daughter would never see another day. She died and it's my fault. I'll never forgive myself...and now," I take in her beautiful features, her parted lips, her gorgeous tits that heave under her coat, "I am going to do my best to forget you, after..."

"After?"

"After I fuck you." I swivel around and thrust her backward.

34

Julia

"No, you can't do this." The backs of my knees hit the mattress and I tumble backward onto Riley's bed. I try to rise up, and he reaches down and flattens his palm against my chest.

"What's wrong?" he asks. "Don't want me now, Flower? You wanted me to fuck you, you were begging for it earlier. Now, when you know that I think of my dead daughter as still being alive, you don't want anything to do with me?" he growls.

"It's not like that." I push up; he shoves at me and I hit the bed with a thud.

He looks me up and down. "Take off your coat," he snaps.

"Don't do this," I beg him.

His lips curl and his eyes gleam. He rolls his shoulders, plants his fists on his hips. "That's not what you've been saying all these days, sugar."

"Don't call me that," I snarl back.

"Sugar?" He tilts his head, "Why not? You're deceptively sweet, you make people think you are innocent, that a little time in your presence won't hurt anyone. Then when their back is turned, you crawl under their skin, you ensure they grow addicted to you, can't live without you. Is that what you did to your last boyfriend too? Is that why he dropped you?"

"Fuck you," I spit out.

"Thought you'd never ask." He steps forward and I raise my foot and kick out. I catch him in the chest, and the man doesn't even stop. Bloody hell, he simply chuckles, then advances. I jump up on the bed, throw up my fists, "Don't you dare come closer...you...you twat."

"You have the twat, not me."

"What?"

"Twat," he replies, then stares down at my crotch. "It's another word for pussy."

"Oh?" I knew that. Of course, I did, so why the hell do my cheeks heat? We are past the kissing and touching stage. Hell, he's made me orgasm so many times, and yet he mentions the 'p' word and I am blushing like a virgin on her first date?

He rolls his shoulders, snaps his fingers at me, and damn it, I know then, that if I don't stop myself, he'll fuck me with such force that I'll feel like a virgin all over again. I squeeze my thighs together. Damn it, why am I turned on, when he's acting like a complete bastard?

"Let's fight," I suggest.

"What?"

"Fight," I hold up my fists, "a fair one, and winner gets—"

"Dibs on how to fuck."

I swallow.

"Where to fuck." He stares at my mouth, then at my breasts, before lowering his gaze back to my crotch, and... Jesus, I am completely wet, and this... This is all kinds of fucked up. He's just confessed that he's been babysitting his imaginary—scratch that, dead—daughter, in whose room we are, and on whose bed I am... And all I can think of is how I want to shag her father. Aargh, this is...beyond messed up. I keep my fists raised, stay focused on him as he licks his lips.

"How many times," he raises his gaze back to mine, "to fuck."

My nipples harden. Heat flushes my belly, sears up my spine. Sweat pools in my underarms. Shit, it is getting too hot. I definitely need to take off the coat.

"Fine," I snap.

"Fine," he rasps.

I reach for the button of my coat, and he stiffens.

"Relax," I mutter, "you wanted me to take this off, right?"

"Hmm." He watches me from under hooded eyelids as I slip off the buttons, then shrug the coat down one shoulder. I peek up to see his lips parted, his chest heaving as he pays close attention to my every move. Hell, this...thing between us, it's potent enough that I have his complete focus. Or rather, he's tuned into every move of my body. Well, that's one thing I can use in my favor, right? I slide the coat down over the other shoulder. Then hold it out in front of me.

His gaze latches onto my breasts. His nostrils flare and his breathing grows ragged. He leans forward on the balls of his feet and his fists tremble—no, did they actually tremble? I cup one breast, play with my nipple and he swallows.

Oh, my. Why hadn't I realized before now that I have as much power as he does in this relationship? I mean, I knew he wanted my orgasms, but all along, his money had tilted the scale in his favor—or so I'd thought. Fact is, the money really doesn't matter. When it comes to this—me and him, in this room filled with memories and happiness and sadness... It is just us. A broken asshole of a man and a woman hellbent to make it everything right for him... For me... For what we can have together.

I release the coat, then run my palms down the skin bared between my shirt and the waistband of my jeans. He growls. It literally rumbles in his throat. My heartbeat ratchets up; my pulse begins to pound. I slide my fingers inside my waistband.

His biceps bulge and he takes another step forward, until his knees are flush against the bed frame.

"Take off your T-shirt," I whisper. "Please, Damian."

He reaches behind himself to wrench his T-shirt up and over his head. I take in the broad expanse of his chest, the ripped planes, the eight-pack abs which I've seen online before, but I've only caught glimpses of the real thing. I can hardly count the time he begrudgingly opened his shirt, before taking my arse. "Oh! My God." Heat flushes my skin; my pussy clenches. I rake my gaze across the tattoo written along the inside of his left forearm. "Riley," I read the cursive.

He blinks, brings up his right hand to massage the skin over his heart. "Fight." He shakes his head, then holds up his fists again.

Well, hell, now I've done it. Whatever chance I had of taking him by surprise is gone. I hold up both of my fists. "Let's do this."

I throw a punch; he angles his body and avoids me easily. I raise my other fist and he tilts his head so my fist brushes the air near his neck. Damn it, this won't do. It won't. I take a step back, then another, and lower my fists. "Your turn." I jerk my chin, "Come on, give it your best."

He hesitates. "I don't want to hurt you." He frowns.

"But maybe I do." I race forward, kick out at him.

I'd been so sure that he would duck, and I'd been braced for that, but he doesn't. My foot connects with his chest and the momentum carries me forward. I crash into that hard barrier of him. He takes my full weight, staggers a little, then plants his broad palms on my hips to hold me in place. Only he crashes into the chair he'd been sitting on, which tips back, and he tips with it. The world tilts, and his big body pitches backward as he lands on the chair. He angles his body to take my full weight and the chair splinters. The back of his head connects with the floor with a thwack—and he does have a hard head, but hell, if that wouldn't have hurt.

He stays sprawled on the remnants of the furniture, his arms wrapped around me, my legs around his trim waist. Thud-thud-thud. I hear my heart thud in my chest. Or is that his? I turn my nose into the skin of his throat, draw in his scent. My head spins as all of my senses seem to open to absorb as much of him as I can.

"Damian," I whisper. He doesn't move. I raise my head to glance at his features, his closed eyelids, the dark lashes that are too long for a man, but which only enhance the masculinity of his features, the hollows under those spectacular cheekbones, that pouty lower lip, the tendons of his beautiful throat that move as he swallows.

I crawl up to cup his cheek, "Damian?" I rub my thumb under his eye and my finger comes away wet. I swallow. "Babe?" I mutter, "You okay?"

He stays silent. His arms hold me close, his heart beats against my breast, but his eyes remain closed. Another tear rolls down his face.

"Oh, hell." My throat constricts. I frame his face with both of my palms, "Hey, Big D, please..." I bite down on my cheek. Please what? Please don't mourn your kid who you lost too early, the mother of your child who's no longer with you? The remnants of your past that you haven't been able to move on from? "Damian, sweetheart."

I watch as he draws in a breath—his shoulders flex, his chest planes rise up and down. The rest of him is still, too still, locked in a place where he is alone with his memories, the sadness, the anger... Which is directed at himself, not at the world, or at me. That mockery, the jabs and digs... Not to mention, the crude puns he loves to lob— All of it comes from a place of self-loathing. And Jesus, I really should have been a shrink.

"D?" I pat his cheek, but he doesn't respond. My pulse begins to race and my heartbeat ratchets up. What the hell? "Are you hurt?"

I tilt his head one way, then the other. Hmm, his jawline really is spectacular. And his ears? They are perfect! Don't get me started on all that luscious hair of his that curls around his shoulders... Hold on. Hello? Are you checking him for any possible wounds or are you checking him out? Uh... both? Can't it be both? No, it's wrong. The man's down. Don't take advantage of him now.

But he's taken advantage of me all along. Besides, I need to pull him out of this funk he's fallen into.

I need to do something...anything, to pull him back to the present... I glance down at those sexy as f lips of his, and my belly trembles. Don't do it, don't do it...

Oh, what the hell? I am here, so is he, and he's alive, and I need to do something to comfort him... And I'm just a woman surrounded by a 100% macho male who, for the first time, is at my mercy. So, I do the only thing I possibly can in the circumstance.

I lower my lips to his. Soft and hard, at the same time. How can he be a confluence of so much? I lick his lower lip and he opens his mouth. I ease my tongue inside. Hot, sexy, dark and edgy, and for the first time, there's a hint of something more... Something...vulnerable. The band around my chest tightens. My core clenches.

I tilt my head and deepen the kiss. I hold his chin and press my lips to his, until my nose bumps his, and I draw in his breath, and inhale more of that spicy scent of his and my ovaries go into overdrive. I lean over him, dig my fingers into his hair and proceed to fuck his mouth with mine. My thighs tremble, I hook my knees over his hips for purchase, push my breasts into his naked chest, press as much of myself to him as I can, and lean in even closer. A shudder grips his body, his grip around me tightens, but he doesn't kiss me back. He allows me to assault his face as I press kisses to his mouth, nibble kisses up his cheeks, rain kisses over one closed eyelid, then the other, the salty taste of his tears clinging to my lips. Lick his forehead, bite the tip of his nose. My nipples harden and moisture pools between my legs. I push my pelvis forward, to cradle the tent in his crotch, but there's still no participation. I rub my core into the hard column outlined in his pants, bring my lips back to his, brush my mouth over his. Nothing.

I reach between us, slide my hand under his waistband. My fingers brush the crown of his cock, and two things become clear. One, he's not wearing boxers. Gulp. And two, the man is very much here and with me—at least the part of him that is under me is. I tug on his P/A and his entire body jerks. I wrap my fingers around his thick length—and OMFG, my digits don't meet around the circumference, and okay, so I have short fingers, but hell!

This...monster dick of his, once more, lives up to its reputation. I gulp again, and my throat closes. I squeeze the base of his dick, and I swear his shaft lengthens further. Oh, wow... That was instantaneous. I swipe my fingers from base to crown and the wetness of his precum greets me. My mouth waters and I groan as I close my eyes and lick my lips. Heat flushes my skin. Will he taste as good as he smells? I open my eyelids, stare into those blue eyes of his, which glare at me. He releases his hold on my waist, only to clamp his palm around my neck.

"You've done it now," he growls. "I am going to fuck your mouth."

35

Damian

What the hell is wrong with me? She's trying to comfort me and I...can't stop myself from lashing out at her, pushing her away. It's second nature. I want to open myself up to her, hold her close, wallow in the sense of rightness that this moment holds...but I can't. I won't. I deserve every second of unhappiness, of restlessness and frustration, of berating myself for not making the time to take care of my daughter when she was alive.

And now, Flower knows my secret. No doubt, she'll hate me for it when she comes to her senses... But for the moment, she is here with me, and I intend to make the most of it. I intend to lose myself in her sweetness, her heat, the warmth of her mouth—yes, I heard her moan, saw her lick her lips, and know that's what she wants—the tight grip of her cunt as she milks me. I want to forget everything that has happened and grab this moment for myself. I tighten my fingers in her hair and her gaze widens.

"Damian," she gasps, then smiles before she slides down my body, until her face is level with my crotch. She pushes down the waistband of my sweats and my dick bobs free. She tightens her hold on me, massages me from crown to base. She squeezes my swollen length and the blood empties to my groin.

"Suck me off," I order.

She holds my gaze, then lowers her head to close her mouth around my cock.

"Bloody fuck," I growl. She licks the crown, wraps her tongue around my piercing and my cock jumps in response. She tips down her chin, takes me in and down her throat, and I can't stop myself from thrusting forward. She swallows and stars burst behind my eyes. "What the fuck are you doing to me, Flower?"

I shake my head to clear it, glance down to where saliva drips down her chin. "You're killing me, taking everything from me." I scowl. She pulls back leaving a trail of wetness on my cock, and the sight of her lips wrapped around my thick length... It's everything. She bobs her head, takes me in again and heat coils in my belly. My balls tighten and pressure builds at the base of my spine. "Oh, hell." My vision tunnels, my lungs hurt, my thigh muscles bunch, but it's not enough. "I need to do this my way." I glare at her and she pales.

"You understand?" I ask.

She peers up at me, licks her tongue up the underside of my shaft. The hair on the nape of my neck rises.

"Nod your head if you do."

She doesn't respond.

I lower my chin to my chest. "Do it," I draw in a breath, "or walk away. Right now."

Her gaze flickers; she hesitates.

All right, then. I begin to withdraw, but she grips my length, then jerks her chin.

Something hot stabs at my chest. She's not leaving. Not yet. She's staying. For now, at least.

"You sure?" I snap, then curse myself. Jesus, get a grip, asshole.

She bobs her head, takes me down her throat again. The tight heat encloses my shaft and the muscles in my belly lock. "I gotta do this. Now." I thread my fingers through her hair, and pull back until only the tip of my cock is positioned between her lips.

"Ready?" I scan her features.

She licks the underside of my swollen head and the blood rushes to my groin. I push her forward until the base of my cock scrapes her lips, then pull her back, again and again. She grips my thigh with her other hand, stares up at me as tears leak from the corners of her eyes. I pull her back, then tug her forward, over and over again. More saliva drips down her chin, her pupils dilate until only a circle of green remains around the black of her irises, and I see myself through her eyes.

Depraved, filthy, selfish, the kind of man she should have never met. The kind she'll, hopefully, never meet again. I pull out of her so suddenly, she gasps. Then grip her under her arms and rise to my feet, bringing her up with me. I kick the chair out of my way, scoop her up and deposit her on my daughter's bed. She stares up at me from her prone position, watches me as I shove my sweats down and out of the way. I reach for my dick and pump it once.

Her gaze drops to my crotch. "Damian," she mumbles, "you're so big."

"I'm exactly what you need," I insist. "Are you ready for me?"

She nods, then reaches down to lower the zipper of her jeans. She pushes them down, along with her panties and sneakers, then parts her legs. "I want you." She holds out her arms, "Come to me."

My heart hammers in my chest. I rake my gaze down her swollen breasts, her slightly rounded stomach to the wet flesh between her legs, and damn it, I can't stop myself. I sink to my knees, and swipe my tongue up her pussy lips.

"OMG," she groans, "Damian, Damian...please... Damian."

I massage my throbbing girth, as I grip her thigh and hold her still and make love to her pussy, her cunt, her clit, that gorgeous hot channel between her legs into which I thrust my tongue—in and out, in and out.

"Damian," she screams, "I can't bear it, please, baby, please."

I rise above her, place one knee on the bed, then the other. I position myself between her legs, then thrust forward.

She screams, "Jesus." Her eyes roll back in her head, as I stay still, allowing her time to adjust. When she lowers her chin and holds out her hand, I twine my fingers with hers. I twist her arm over her head as I lean into her and sink in another inch, and another. She moans, and I kiss her breast, suck on her nipple as I hook my arm under her knee and drape her leg over my shoulder. The angle allows me to breach her further.

She gasps, "You're so deep inside of me, Damian..." She whimpers, "Please."

"I know," I whisper as I press little kisses to the pulse fluttering at the base of her neck, to her chin, her lips. "Take me, baby. Take all of me."

I pull back, then plunge forward so her channel sheaths all of me. Heat sweeps up my spine and my heartbeat ratchets up. The pulse thuds at my temples, my wrists, even in my balls. I tear my lips from hers to gaze into her eyes. "Look at me," I command.

Her breath hitches, she widens her gaze, and I discern the outline of myself in her eyes as I thrust forward into her with enough force that her entire body moves up the bed. I release her hands only to hook my arm under her other leg and place it over my other shoulder. "Hold on." I reach over to cover her breasts with my palms and squeeze.

She groans, and the sound lodges somewhere deep in my belly. I close my mouth over hers, then thrust into her over and over again. I swallow her every scream, commit her every moan to memory. I drag my mouth from hers, stare into her eyes and whisper, "Come."

36

Julia

I'm coming. I'm coming. I may have screamed that, or simply repeated it to myself over and over again. I curve my back and scream as the climax crashes over me. That blue gaze of his is burned into my head, the curl of his cruel lips etched on my heart as the orgasm slams into me. The aftershocks ripple up my spine; my limbs tremble as I cling to him with my legs wrapped around his neck.

His shoulders seem to swell; his biceps expand as he continues to plunge in and out of me. He impales with a thrust so hard that his balls slap against my arse. His dick seems to extend, his chest planes undulate, and a hoarse groan rips from him as he empties himself into me. "Fuck."

He lowers his forehead to mine and kisses me—slowly, gently, tenderly. He nibbles on my lower lip, licks the corner of my mouth, then buries his nose in my throat and inhales. He curves his palm around my breast, draws circles around my nipple, then the other. He drags his lips down my throat, to the valley between my breasts, smooths his big palms down my stomach, before he touches the part where we are joined. He glances up at me, his expression tortured.

"Damian?" I whisper, "What are you doing?"

"I'm sorry I deceived you," he searches my features.

"You didn't." I reach for him and he pulls back and out of me so suddenly that my pussy clenches on the emptiness where he'd been a millisecond ago.

"Where are you going?" I sit up, panicking, as he pulls up his sweatpants.

"Stay." He stabs a finger at me, then walks to the bathroom.

I hear the sound of the water running. A second later, he appears in the doorway. He walks over to me, then presses a cool washcloth between my legs. "Did I hurt you?"

His voice is bland. I glance at his features to find a mask, devoid of emotion.

"Damian, what's wrong?" I clear my throat, "Please, talk to me."

He cleans off the remnants of our joined cum from my thighs, then flings the cloth aside. He steps back, reaches for my clothes and hands them to me. "Get dressed," he orders.

I stare at him for a moment; he glances away. What the hell?

My heart begins to race. This is crazy. We just made love... Okay, we fucked, and it was insanely hot, and the orgasm? Why the hell does each one seem better than the last? And now, why is he turning away from me? I pull on my jeans, tie up my sneakers and straighten my shirt the best I can.

"Sit." He gestures to a chair, then walks around to the other side of the bed. Like that would put enough distance between us?

I watch him as he paces the carpet, Riley's now mussed-up bed between us.

"Do you want to talk about it?"

He pauses mid step. "About what?"

"This." I point at his daughter's bed, "How long has this been going on?"

"Since she died in a car accident, a year ago. Her mother drove her car with the two of them over a bridge."

"Oh, my God," I gasp. "I am so sorry, Damian. I can only imagine—"

He holds up his hand, then turns away. "Save your pity," he throws at me over his shoulder, "I've had enough of it."

I purse my lips, wait as he continues to pace, back-forth-back.

"Meredith—?" I finally venture.

"Is aware that I am in therapy."

"So, when she comes over to help—"

He nods. "It's the only way I can manage to leave the house, if I am confident I have someone at home with—" He squeezes his palms at his sides. "At home."

"I understand," I reply.

"Do you?" He tilts his head.

"Of course, I do." I tip up my chin, "You're in therapy and this is one way of helping you get through the ordeal. It may sound strange to an outsider, but grief can do the most bizarre things to anyone. I am happy she has been there for you when you've most needed support. I only wish—"

I draw in my inner lip, glance away.

"Tell me." His voice softens, "You know you can say anything that's on your mind to me, Flower."

I release the breath I'd not been aware I was holding. "I wish you'd let me in earlier. I wish you hadn't felt the need to hide the situation from me. I wish it had been me that you'd turned to for help."

His shoulders uncoil, and that's when I realize how nervous he'd been about sharing this part of himself with me.

"I... I do understand, Damian," I say softly.

"Do you?" He laughs. "The delusional rock star who messed up the only thing that was of any worth in his life."

"Don't say that." I frown.

He continues to pace back-forth-back as I track his movements. Finally, he stops, then turns to me. "What?" he barks.

"I didn't say anything," I point out.

"I am getting help for it," he clarifies.

"I don't doubt that." He glares at me and I tip up my chin. Do not back off, not now. Don't look away. I hold his gaze as he takes a step forward and comes around to stand in front of me.

"Does anyone else know about what you are going through?"

"The Seven are aware that Riley and her mother died in an accident." He rubs the back of his neck. "They helped me keep the news from the media."

I can only imagine the circus it would have been if they'd found out that, not only did he have a daughter and a girlfriend, but also that they were dead.

"And your...uh—"

"Affliction?" He chuckles without humor. "Only Meredith and Arpad are aware of the true extent to which I haven't been able to let go of her." He hesitates, "And now...you. So you see, in my own way, I have turned to you. Maybe from the moment I saw you... My subconscious has known that I wouldn't have a choice but to let you in."

My heart stutters. What does that mean? The fact that he revealed his secret to me? Okay, to be fair, I had barged in on him, had literally forced him to share this part of himself... But still... He'd trusted me enough to be open about it. He hadn't hidden this from me.

"I have a proposition for you." He turns to face me.

I grimace. "If you're going to offer me money again—"

"No money," he snaps. "I do need your time, though."

"Time?"

"And your orgasms."

"Orgasms?" I frown. "You're out of your mind, you know that?" Oops. I wince, then look up to gauge his reaction before continuing, "Sorry, but... It's one thing to believe that giving me orgasms fires up your creative muse, another to—?"

"To?" He folds his big arms across his chest, and of course, I clench my thighs. I take in the breadth of his shoulders, the smattering of hair across his chest that felt so good, so delicious when I was pressed up against him.

"—to live it." I clear my throat.

"Are you complaining about it?"

"No." I fold one leg over the other and he lowers his gaze to my thighs. My pussy clenches and my toes curl. I fold my hands in my lap, wriggle around to relieve the gnawing that's creeping up in my core. "Umm."

"What then?" He frowns. "What do you want in exchange?"

"I want." I lick my lips. Jeez, can I say it? Can I?

"Say it." He slaps his hands on each side of the chair and brackets me in. "What is it? What do you need?" he peers into my eyes. "Tell me, I'll do anything."

"Anything?" I tilt my head.

His gaze narrows as he considers what I've said. "Anything," he confirms.

"Marry me."

Julia

"You did what?" Isla shrieks.

I stare at her from over my glass of wine—which she had brought over, because I've barely been in the apartment long enough to order in provisions since arriving from Australia. Not to mention, my time has been taken up by an alphahole of a rock star... The one who's agreed to become my husband.

"Yeah," I nod.

"And he...?" She takes a healthy swig from the wine glass, "He agreed?"

"He set a date and everything," I mutter. "And of course you're helping me organize the wedding."

She hesitates.

"You are, aren't you?" I frown.

"Of course I am." She nods, cautiously, "But you mentioned something about a date?" She swallows, "When...when is it?"

I open my mouth and she raises a hand, "No, don't tell me. Let me guess. It's next week?"

I shake my head.

She pales, "It's in five days?"

I raise my hand, palm face up.

"Four?" She gulps.

I stay silent.

She blinks rapidly. "Three days. Please tell me I have at least three days to organize this event?"

"Afraid not." I purse my lips.

She sinks back in her chair. "It's tomorrow, isn't it?" She wrings her fingers together.

"No." A chuckle wells up, and I swallow it down. I mean, this entire thing would be hysterical, except for the fact that it is my life and this is actually happening.

"It's the day-after-tomorrow."

"What?" She chokes. "You mean it's on New Year's Eve? Do you know what kind of a logistical nightmare this is going to be? Not to mention, having to organize your dress and the venue... How the hell am I supposed to manage everything?"

"About that." I grab my backpack, pull out his credit card and hold it up.

Isla snatches it out of my hand, "Now we're talking. Though I have to warn you, that all the money in the world, may not be enough to pull this off, given the crazy timelines."

"You're telling me," I mutter. "I asked him what the hurry was and he said," I raise my shoulders, "why delay?"

"Maybe he doesn't want to wait, in case you change your mind?" Isla offers.

"Not likely, considering I was the one who proposed." I huff.

"Maybe he doesn't trust himself to not change his mind...?"

I stare up and into Isla's shrewd gaze. "May...be," I concede. "More likely, he thinks money can buy anything." Typical Damian, to throw money at a problem and expect it to resolve itself. I wrap my arms about my waist. "Just like he didn't think twice before he commanded me to move into the apartment in The Shard, because no fiancée of his is living in a crummy apartment." I air-quote his words.

I glance around the tiny one-bedroom, which is small, but comfortable... But it isn't mine. Which is fine. I belong nowhere, remember? It's why I had gone half-way across the world to find a place I could fit into.

I mean, sometimes you need to go full circle before you find where you belong... Which is where? In his arms, in his home, between his thighs as he wraps his massive arms around me and holds me down. Argh! Stop.

I bury my face in my glass of vino. "What the hell have I done, Isla?"

"Umm...seems you got yourself a hubby, Julia." She coughs.

I scowl back, "You're laughing at me."

"No," she shakes her head, "not really."

I frown.

She raises a shoulder. "Okay, maybe a little. You've got to admit, the situation is slightly humorous."

"Not from where I am," I purse my lips.

"Tell me what happened. Why don't you start at the top, hmm?" She drops her voice to a soothing tone and I give her a dirty look.

"What?" She throws up her hands, "I am only trying to help."

I drain my glass. "You can help by topping up my wine."

She reaches for the carton of wine, then turns it upside down. "Sorry, that was the last of it, babe."

"You'd think Amelie would have stocked up better, considering she was in the middle of a rollercoaster of a relationship with the doctor," I grumble.

"Maybe that's why there isn't enough wine here," Isla offers. "She probably drank it all as she came to terms with being hitched to an alphahole for life."

As I soon will be.

My heart begins to thud, sweat beads my palms, the wine glass slips from my grasp, and crashes onto the floor. Good thing it's plastic, huh?

I pick it up, then walk over to the garbage can and dump it in. I straighten, then stare out of the window. "Jesus, what a mess!"

"You should have thought of that before associating with one of the Seven."

"Hey, not fair." I pivot to frown at her, "You're the one who encouraged me to go for him."

"I meant that you shag him, not propose to him."

"Yeah." I hunch my shoulders. "Why the hell did I do that? More to the point, why the hell did he accept? Especially after he'd told me that he wasn't going to marry anytime soon!"

"He said that to you?"

"Yeah."

"And yet, when you proposed, he agreed?" She frowns.

"He did."

"Maybe he changed his mind?"

"Ha, that's not something Damian does. That man... Once he makes up his mind, nothing can sway him."

"Maybe this is different...?" she suggests.

"And maybe this is all a dream?" I wrap the strands of my hair around my hand and tug; the pain squiggles down my neck. Okay, so this isn't all a figment of my imagination. This is really happening. "Help me," I implore her.

"Maybe you could take it back?" She tilts her head, "Tell him it was all a mistake?"

"What was a mistake?" A new voice sounds from the doorway and I scream. So does Isla.

"It's me, girls." Karina holds up both of her hands. "Just me. Sorry, I guess I should have knocked."

"Or something." I frown. "How did you get in?"

She stares at me.

"Right. You did the security for this place, so you have all of the passwords."

She walks over and places a bottle of champagne—expensive by its label, no cheap almost-vinegar type plonks for Madam, here.

"Glasses?" she asks, then glances down at the plastic cups in distaste.

"Surely there's something better here?" She walks over to the shelves, opens and shuts a few, then produces glasses. The kind from which you drink water. "This will have to do."

She walks over as Isla pops the cork of the bottle. "Woo," she squeals, "that's a happy sound."

"Har, har." I slink down into my chair, "I am never going to be happy again."

"Because you're marrying the Rockausarus?" Karina asks.

"You mocking me?" I accept the glass from her.

"Not at all," she raises her glass, "I am here to commiserate."

Hmph, I frown as she throws back the contents of the glass.

"Not bad, but personally, I prefer vodka," she declares.

"You're certainly drinking it like it's vodka." I grimace.

"Old habits." She tips back her chair, fixes me with her gaze, "What the hell were you thinking anyway, proposing to him? If I'd known it would come to this, I'd never have given you the passcodes to the house."

"He wanted you to," I retort.

"Huh?"

"He set you up, coaxed you in the direction of parting with the information."

"So, he knew I'd..." She sits up straight. "Hell, I should have known he was playing me. These Seven..." She pours out another glass of champagne, then tosses it back. "I should have told you to stay clear of them."

"You've known them longer than us though, right?" Isla chimes in. "You and Arpad—"

Karina glares at Isla with murder in her eyes, but Isla, of course, ignores it. Or doesn't care. Maybe she notices, but continues anyway. That girl has no filter, honestly.

"—I mean, the two of you have that love/hate thing going on, which is hot," she continues.

Karina drains her glass, fills it up again.

I reach for the bottle and top up my own and Isla's. I mean, I want my share of this expensive shit, as well.

"Admit it. The two of you have a thing for each other." Isla chuckles. "What, with those horny looks you trade—"

"My looks are not horny," Karina's tone grows glacial, "and I'd rather shoot myself in the head than spend any time with that asshole."

"Alphahole," I automatically correct her.

"What?" She stares at me.

"He's trained you well, already," Isla murmurs.

"No, he hasn't." I jump up and begin to pace. Yeah, I'm mirroring what said a-hole rock star did earlier, but whatever. I am too agitated and I need to think, to come up with a solution. "And I really need to find a way out of this."

"Why?" Karina's voice rings out.

I stop, turn to stare at her. "What do you mean, why?"

"You took the bull by the balls—"

"It's by the horns," Isla pipes up. Both Karina and I stare at her, and she stares down at her drink. "Never mind. Proceed," she mumbles.

Ha, everyone here is a clown today, for some reason. After all, it's only my life that's going down the shitter.

"Can you explain your bull and balls reference?" I glower at Karina.

"It's bull and horns—" Isla ventures.

"Shut up," both Karina and I echo without looking at Isla, who coughs.

"Yeah, I want to hear your reasoning, too, Karina," she mumbles. "What did you mean by that?"

"Just that, you could do worse." Karina stares at me.

"She could do better," Isla huffs.

"Sure," Karina drags her finger around the rim of the glass, "considering he is famous, rich, handsome—"

"Career on the decline, may not recover after his last flop, has loads of issues—" Isla counts off on her fingers.

"How do you know about his issues?" I scowl.

"Tabloid speculation." She raises her shoulders. "Besides, no one can get to be that successful without some skeletons in their closet... And definitely not, one of the Seven."

"So, he does have issues?" Karina asks.

"Boy, does he," I nod.

"Good, so you can help him resolve them."

"Me?" I frown "How can I help him?"

"He feels something for you."

"She means, he's hung up on you," Isla adds.

"It's true. I'd say he's in love with you, except I don't believe in that emotion."

"Wow." I look her up and down, "Now I see why the Seven trust you with their security. You're pretty cut-throat, aren't you?"

"I do what I have to do to survive." Her features harden. "And I have seen all kinds in this line of work. Which is why I also know that there's something genuine between you and him."

"Is there?"

She nods. "Marriages have been built on worse." She licks the champagne off her finger, then holds up her glass. "You two have a lot more going for you."

"Like what?"

"You want security and he wants..." Karina shoots me a glance from under her eyelashes, "Well, you know what he wants."

"You mean sex?"

"I mean, whatever it is that floats his boat, and which he, clearly, is getting from you."

"What if he gets tired of me?" I wring my fingers together.

"Julia, Julia." Karina shakes her head. "You're a strong, beautiful, intelligent woman, and he's just a man who thinks with his dick. Trust me, you know what you have to do to keep him hungry enough so he keeps coming back for more. Besides, you love him."

I stare at her. "Shit, is it that obvious?"

"To us," Isla mumbles under her breath, "and only because we're your friends..." Her voice trails off. She glances at me, then away. "Sorry, babe, but yeah, it's kind of written all over your face. I mean, that's why you proposed to him, right?"

Because I love him? I gulp down more champagne, then choke again. Bloody hell, I do love him. Only he doesn't... He can't possibly be in love with me. I am just the means to his relaunching his career. So why the hell did he accept? It makes no sense.

I shake my head. "No, no, no, this is all wrong. I should call him and tell him it was all a joke and that it's off."

"But you won't," Karina drawls.

I stare at her again. "How do you know?"

"Because you want him, and you have the courage to fight for him. Question is, will you act on that now?"

38

Dec 31st

Damian

"This makes no sense." I glance down at my button-down shirt, my tailored slacks, that I'd paired with my sneakers, then up at Arpad. "What the hell are you smirking about, you douche?"

"Me?" Arpad straightens from where he's leaning against the window. "Maybe it's the venue?" He glances out and I know he's seeing the arena of Shakespeare's Globe with the three floors of seating.

"It's too small for the event, don't you think?" he drawls.

I glance up at him, "Ha! Sarcasm, huh?" I glower.

"Can't you take a joke?"

"Not right now." I glance around. "Where's my jacket? Shit have you seen my jacket?"

"It's with me, ol' chap." He thrusts the beaten leather jacket at me.

"Thanks." I slip it on, then smooth my palms over the sleeves. "How do I look?"

"Terrified."

I glare at him, and he chuckles.

"Relax," he takes a step back and looks me up and down, "You look like a rock star about to get married."

"Is that good?" I frown. "Is it too obvious that I didn't opt for something more formal."

"Nah," he scratches his chin, "maybe."

"Which is it?" I growl.

"Both?" He smirks. "Neither."

I scowl at him, "Enjoying yourself, brother?"

"You have no idea." He laughs. "I've waited years... Years, to get back at you."

"You mean for all the times I whipped your arse when we sparred?"

"You mean that I whipped yours, don't you?" He folds his arms over his chest.

"Let's say, we were evenly matched," I reply. "I'll give you that, considering I'm not in a mood to fight today."

"What kind of a mood are you in, huh?" He waggles his eyebrows. "Can't wait to see the wife, then?"

I frown at him, "Wife to-be, and this is all your fault."

"What, you mean for spotting the fact that there was something between the two of you before you realized it, and ensuring that she turned up at your doorstep?"

"I'll never forgive you for that," I growl.

"You're welcome." He nods.

"Oh, fuck off." I drag a finger under my collar. Shit, maybe the button-down was a bad idea. Why the hell hadn't I opted for my normal T-shirt and jeans?

"Don't even think about it." Arpad grabs the bottle of whiskey from the table, along with two glasses, then walks over. He hands me a glass, pours some of the amber liquid into it.

I sniff it. "Macallan's," I nod. Can't fault the man for his taste in whiskey, at least. I take a healthy swig, and the taste of oak fills my senses.

"Limited-edition," he adds. "Had a pal save one for me."

"No doubt." I toss back the rest of the contents, hold out my glass for more. He fills me up and I down that too. "More," I mumble. "Top me up."

"Easy, tiger," he cautions, "you don't want to be drunk for your wedding now."

"Don't I?" I mumble. "She blackmailed me into this."

"Did she?"

"It was either marry her or lose her."

"And you didn't want to let go of her?"

I stare at the contents of the glass; the amber sparkles under the watery sunlight. "Wonder if it will rain?" I glance up at the overcast sky.

"Now you're deflecting." Arpad shakes his head, "And PS, I thought you had more balls than this."

"What are you talking about?"

"No one's ever coerced you into doing anything you didn't want to do."

"Except the women in my life, huh?"

"Riley," he says softly.

I shoot him a glance, "Be very careful what you say next."

He leans forward on the balls of his feet. "I've never been a father. God knows, I can only imagine how it felt for you to have known her for such a little while, only to lose her, but you need to let go of her, bro."

"Don't talk about her as if she's—" My throat closes and a burning sensation fills the back of my eyes. Shit, what is this? Will I ever reach a stage when I'll be able to think about her without my heart breaking, without my stomach twisting itself up in knots, without every part of me insisting that I was in the wrong?

"She's gone, bro," Arpad says softly. "She's not coming back."

"Don't you fucking think that I know that?" My voice cracks, and I squeeze my fingers around the glass of whiskey. "If only I could turn back the clock... If only I'd taken the threats more seriously... If only I'd taken steps to protect them."

"It wasn't your fault."

"Of course, it was," I snap. "I was too focused on my next album, my career, my image. It was always the next thing. I didn't appreciate what I had in front of me—my daughter, my angel, the light of my life." I squeeze my eyes shut. "It's my fucking fault that she's dead."

I've said it... the dreaded 'D' word that I've never been able to enunciate before. "She's not with me anymore," I choke out the words. "I'll never be able to hold her again, smell that baby scent of hers, or teach her to ride a bike. Or whip her first boyfriend when he comes to pick her up on her first date. Fuck!" I fling the glass and it shatters against the floor. "Bloody fuck, what the hell am I doing here anyway? I should be home, working on my album, taking care of—"

I draw in a breath. I have to stop talking about her as if she is still here... My logical mind knows it. My brain insists on it.... But my heart... My soul... All of it, refuses to accept the irrefutable proof of what I face every day. My daughter, my child, my little girl, will never smile again, will never look at me, or call me Daddy, will never ask me for her favorite toy, or ask me to read to her again.

"Fuck." I drag my fingers through my hair. "This marriage. It's all wrong. I shouldn't be doing this."

"It's the one thing you should definitely see through," Arpad admonishes me.

"Oh, yeah?"

He nods. "This is your chance to put the past behind you, to finally move on with a woman who—"

"Sees this as, as much of an arrangement as I do?"

"It's a start." He surveys my features, "The attraction between you two is off the charts. It's definitely the right start for building a marriage."

"Since when have you become an advocate for the old ball and chain?"

"Since I saw you struggle and fail to get over your grief; since I saw you become a shadow of your former self; since I saw you begin to self-sabotage your own career."

"Self-sabotage?" I frown. "What do you mean?"

"You've been releasing your worst-ever work since their accident."

"Understandable."

"Is it?" He walks up to stand in front of me. "Or have you been using the grief as an excuse to not create? Maybe you don't want to give it your best shot. Maybe you can't stand the thought of being successful."

"Do you know how crazy you sound?" I chuckle.

"Is it though?"

He steps into my space, and I growl, "Back off, man."

"I won't," he snaps back. "It's time you stop punishing yourself for what happened."

"So, you keep saying."

"So, you lost something very precious to you—"

"You have no idea," I snarl. "No one... No one should have to bury their own child...."

"I know, I know where you're coming from."

He lays a hand on my shoulder and I shake it off. "No, you don't." I step back and begin to pace again, "No one can understand what I am going through."

"Maybe she can."

"Oh?"

"You found something that's very rare."

"What's that?"

"A chance at true love."

"Love?" I bark out a laugh, "Didn't know you believed in that emo shit."

"I don't," he mutters, "but Jesus, man, when I look at you and how you're wasting away your life... Hell, if I don't want it to work for you, if it drags you out of the spiral of self-destruction that you've been stuck in—"

"I was fine where I was."

"Were you now?" he raises an eyebrow, "Going off social media, dropping out of sight, and fueling speculation that you were losing your shit. Not to mention, not hanging out with the Seven like you used to."

"I was there for the others when they needed me. I got on the bloody calls with them and held their hands as they found their women."

"The bare minimum," he sneers, "and only because I didn't give you a choice."

"Get off my balls, man."

"No."

I glance around, curl my fingers at my sides. "I can't do this. This was a bloody stupid idea. Fuck my career, fuck the next album, fuck everything. I'm leaving." I head for the exit.

He plants his body in my way. "I am not letting you sabotage the one good thing that's come your way since the accident."

"You can't stop me," I growl.

"But we can."

I glance past Arpad as Edward walks into the room.

Of course, he's not alone. Sinner, Saint, Weston and Jace follow him. "Bloody hell, the only one missing is that joker Baron showing up, to complete this shit show."

"If that's what it takes," Arpad growls.

"What do you mean?" I frown.

"No one told him yet?" Edward ambles over to the arm chair in the corner and drops into it.

"Do you want to, or should I?" Sinclair drawls.

Weston and Jace take a stance by the door. Clearly, they don't trust my not making a break for it. Obviously, they know me too well. Shit. This is what happens when you have friends you've known since you were teens. They think they can take liberties with your life. Well, it is time to set them right. No one can make me do what I don't want to do. No one.

I glower at them, "You wankers thought it would be a good idea to stage an intervention?"

"Just returning the favor, ol' chap." Saint smirks.

He's referring to how the rest of us had cornered him when he'd been in the middle of his courtship with Victoria. We'd been his sounding board as he'd explained all the justifications for why he wanted to fake-marry her... We'd goaded him along, steered him onto the right path, which was to put the ring on her finger, and well, hell, look at the two of them now. In happily wedded bliss, with a kid on the way.

"Oh, no, no," I shake my head, "this isn't the same situation as you and Victoria."

"Oh, no?" He folds his arms over his chest. "Pray, tell me, what's different here?"

"You married her to get to the Mafia," I point out.

"I married her because," he shuffles his feet, "because I love her."

"You barely knew her." I scowl at him. "No way, could you have fallen for her so quickly."

"Couldn't I?" He draws in a breath. "I knew from the moment I laid eyes on her that she was the one for me. I kept fooling myself otherwise, but I knew." He slaps his chest, "Deep inside, I knew, brother. It took me long enough to admit it, after I put her and our child in danger. I don't want the same to happen to you. It's why I'm telling you—"

"What?" I growl, "Confess to feelings I don't have and marry her?"

"Marry her because she's the only thing standing between you and complete destruction. Besides," he looks me up and down, "you have feelings for her."

"I don't," I growl. "She's simply a means of accessing my muse."

"Didn't Shakespeare marry his muse?" Arpad pipes up.

"What's that got to do with anything?" I crack my neck, "And what was it that you guys were going to tell me before we were sidetracked?"

Arpad glances at the others, "Shall I?"

Sinclair nods, "Go ahead."

"Baron contacted me." Arpad declares.

"What?" I blink. "Baron? Our Baron? The one we haven't seen in nearly a decade?"

"Know of another?" Edward leans forward in his seat, "Go on, tell him the rest."

Arpad pulls out a sheet of paper from the pocket of his slacks, "Of course, the douche used snail mail. Not like it's going to stop us from trying to track him down."

"We've tried and failed so far," I point out, "What's new now?"

"What's new is that he's addressed this communication to all of us, sans you." He jerks his chin at me.

"But you're reading it to me?"

"He wants us to share this with you."

"Well, spare me the suspense," I mumble, "not that I am fucking interested or anything in what he has to say."

"So, you don't want to know how his advice to you is to not marry her."

"Hold on," I pause, "I decided to get married two days ago, and he's found out about it and had enough time to send Arpad here a letter stating I shouldn't do so?"

"Seems like it." Arpad nods.

"Something doesn't feel right about this."

"You think?" Sinclair smirks.

"It means he's not far off." I glance around at the faces of my friends, "Likely in this city. Close enough to keep tabs on us."

"So we think," Edward agrees.

"Why would he do that?"

"Who knows why Baron does anything?"

"Isn't he over-dramatizing this entire incident thing, considering it wasn't he who got the worst of the experience?" I glance at Edward, who pales.

He rises to his feet, walks over to me, "You have something to say?" His jaw tics. "Something you want to get off your chest, perhaps. Considering you escaped the incident, more or less intact, only to fall apart at the first sign of a personal tragedy."

"What do you know about personal tragedies, huh? You, who took the easy way out, and decided to leave the world and its day-to-day matters behind, after all? You renounced everything and ran away, Edward. You left it to the rest of us to hold each other up. You weren't here when we went off on the bender, when Saint got into such intense fights it was clear he had a death wish, when Sinclair decided to pursue business success to the detriment of everything else, when Weston fell apart after his father died, when I lost my..." I swallow, "lost my daughter and her mother, and knew it would change me forever. I needed you then Edward, and where were you? You were off in some monastery somewhere, trying to find yourself."

"I would have been no good to you if I had stayed," Edward mumbles. "Hell, I was so out of my head with pain, I was no good to myself in the state I was."

"So were all of us," I growl. "But we stayed on, we helped each other, we worked through our crises."

"You had each other. You didn't need me." Edward's throat moves as he swallows. He glances around the room, "Isn't that right, fellas? You had the six of you—"

"Five," Arpad cuts in. "Baron cut and ran not long after. He'd have stayed, if you had."

"Wait, so this is all on me?" He stares at the assembled men. "Weston? You're the most level-headed of these tossers. Do you feel the same way?"

Weston snorts, "Me, level-headed?" He scratches his beard, "Maybe in comparison to the rock star hellbent on self-destruction, with his continuous string of failed concerts and the worst-performing Christmas single in history —"

"Hey," I protest, "it wasn't that bad. In fact, it hit number one—"

"In what, the worst Christmas songs of all time?"

"Close," I mumble. "It was called the least festive song ever, I believe. At least, get your facts right. And weren't we talking about how Father, here, did the vanishing act on all of us?"

"You're deflecting, Savage," Weston admonishes. "And for the record, yes. If you'd stayed, Edward, things would have been different."

"Hold on, hold on." Edward throws up his hands, "Why is all of this coming out now? Why have none of you mentioned this to me earlier? And hey! You guys had each other, while I was away dealing with my own shit, alone."

"Your choice," I growl. "If you'd stayed, we could have dealt with it together, as a team, as we always did."

"Except you didn't." A familiar voice rings out. I turn as Julia glides into the room. She's wearing a simple white dress that covers her from throat to wrists, tucked in at the waist, clinging to her thighs as she walks, before flowing down to swirl around her ankles. She looks ethereal and beautiful and completely not what I expected. She's worn her hair piled up on her head and my fingers tingle to pull out the pins and have the strands scattered around her shoulders, her back, over my pillows. I'd lean down and sink my nose into the glistening locks and draw in that sensuous, exotic scent that is so uniquely Flower.

"What are you doing here?" I growl.

"Have you told them?" She moves closer, her features serene, those green eyes darting between the others, then back to me. "Tell me, Damian, do they know?"

"About what?" My heart begins to thump in my chest. Why is she here? What is she going to share with the rest? I allowed her a peek into the part of my life that is a secret from all of them, except Meredith... Hell, not even she knows the extent to which I have been caught up in my grief, unable to move forward... Until Julia had flounced in and shined a spotlight on the dark recesses of my mind. "What are you talking about?" I snap.

"You know." She tips her chin up.

"Do I?" I tilt my head, take in the set of her jaw, the nervous tremble of her fingers as she clenches them together in front of her. "What are you doing here, anyway? It's bad luck for the groom to see the bride before the wedding."

"Thought you didn't want to get married," Arpad coughs into his hand.

"Yeah," Edward nods, "thought you were going to call it off?"

"Call what off?" Julia glances around at them. "What's going on?"

"You tell me, Flower." I drawl, "To what do I owe the unexpected appearance of my fair bride to-be in what, I confess, is a break with tradition that even I find surprising."

"What's surprising is that you haven't revealed your secret to them," she retorts.

"Secret?" I curl my fingers at my sides. A bead of sweat drips down my back. Not that the Seven wouldn't understand why I had to keep the memory of Riley alive a little longer, but hell, some things... Some things are sacred, you know what I mean? And no one...is allowed in. And I had let her peek in where no one else had, and now I am going to pay the price. "My secret?" I glare at her.

"Of course, babe." She pauses in front of me, then places her hand over my chest. "Shall I tell them?"

39

Julia

"What?" He lowers his voice to a hush, "What are you going to tell them, Flower?"

I tip my chin up, gaze into his beautiful features. His jaw tics; a nerve throbs at his forehead. He watches me like the predator he is, a man lost in the darkness that comes to the fore in his stage performances. If I'd wanted to know what troubled him most, what drove him to leave the frantic lifestyle he used to have, only to drop out of sight, I know the reason now. And he thinks I am going to reveal his secret to the world?

"What do you think?" I mutter. "Want to take a guess at what it is?"

"I think," he snaps, "it's time for us to leave." He swoops down to grab my wrist, but I swerve to the side.

"Hold on," I yelp, "I haven't told them yet."

"And you won't, either." He stalks to the door, pulling me in his wake. I dig my heels into the wooden floor, stumble against him.

He turns, rights me by the shoulders. "Hell, you okay?" He scrutinizes my features, his eyes filled with concern that takes my breath away.

"Y...yeah," I stutter. "Let me just complete what I have to say?"

He schools all emotion from his face. "No." He glares at me. "Don't do it."

"I... I have to," I mumble, "I don't have a choice."

"You always have a choice," Damian snarls. "I knew I shouldn't have trusted you." He releases me so quickly that I lose my balance once again.

This time I right myself.

"You're right." I flip my hair over my shoulder. "But it's too late now." I turn, face the rest of the Seven. Saint widens his stance, Sinclair sets his jaw, while Arpad glowers at me. Weston, Edward and Jace, who's lurking in the far corner, survey me with something like confusion.

"You should know—" I draw myself up to my full height. "You should know that—"

Behind me, I sense Damian's body grow rigid. The anger rolls off of him in waves and slams into me. My thighs tremble and my core melts... Jesus, the fact that even his anger turns me on so is depraved. I stare around the room, take in another breath, "You should know that he's writing again, and his lyrics are nothing short of genius."

"Knew it!" Arpad stabs a finger in Damian's direction. "Those words on your phone were yours, weren't they?"

"Who's writing?" Edward rises to his feet. "Is it Damian, you mean?"

"Lyrics?" Weston gasps in mock horror.

"Genius?" Saint's brow furrows.

"We talking about the same person here?" Sinclair finally drawls.

"Totally." I flex my fingers, which tremble. "You should read some of what he's written. It's vintage Damian Savage. The kinds of words which broke hearts and made his early album a cult hit—"

"Hold on," Damian snaps from behind me. "You read what I wrote."

"Oops," I curls my fingers at my sides, "I shouldn't have said that, huh?" I turn to him, "I can explain—"

"You read my work when I specifically told you not to."

"D... Damian... No, it's not like that."

"Then what is it like, huh?" He closes the distance between us and the tips of his boots brush against my stilettos. Yeah, I'd actually decided to pull out all the stops, gone in for the entire bride-in-white look. Not that the man has noticed, apparently, for he hasn't said a word on that. Not that I'd allowed him to, considering I'd pulled this crazy stunt on him.

"Damian," I whisper, "let me explain."

"Oh, you will." He curves his fingers about my shoulders, then lowers his forehead to mine. "Later, when we are alone, you can tell me all about your little spying trip in my space."

"I told you it's not like that," I insist. "I didn't go into your studio."

He frowns down at me. "Still lying to me, I see?" His gaze darkens. He releases me, then turns me around to face the rest of our very interested audience.

"Well, now that the bride to-be is also here, we may as well as commence the ceremony."

"Hey, hold on, you weren't going to start without us, were you?" Summer marches in, Victoria at her heels.

Isla races inside, "Hey, has anyone seen Julia? I can't find her in the dressing room and—" she steps inside and spots me, "Oh, hell, Jules, what are you doing here?"

I bite the inside of my cheek. What should I say? I did something stupid? I got cold feet, and decided to come in search of my bridegroom—stupid I know, but too late—and found he was getting cold feet too, and that had made me angry. I knew I had to do something, but then the guys had begun to rib him, and well, I had to step in. Damn it, why do I feel so protective about this alphahole, when, clearly, the tenderness is something that is not yet reciprocated?

"She's exactly where she should be," Damian's voice rings out in the silence.

I glance sideways at his countenance. The skin around his lips is stretched tight and that vein at his temple is throbbing with such vehemence, I swear it's going to pop.

"Damian," I whisper, and he tightens his hold on my shoulder.

I wince. "Ouch," I protest, "you're hurting me."

"Good," he hisses under his breath, then glances back at Isla. "Change of plans. We are getting married here."

"What?" I gasp.

"Here?" Isla pales. "B...but the press who've been invited?"

"Fuck the press," Damian growls.

"Now, now, ol' chap." Arpad steps forward. "Let's think this through. You need the press."

"I've done without them for this long," Damian barks back.

"And this is the start of a new chapter in your life. It's why you agreed to invite them here... To witness you taking the first steps to your reformation," Edward adds.

"Says the man who couldn't wait to turn his back on the world," Damian snorts.

"I cannot believe you just said that," I gasp at him. "Honestly, Damian, you need to apologize."

"What?" He glowers down at me from his superior height, "No."

I tip my chin up, stab a finger into his chest, "You tell him how sorry you are."

He scowls.

"Right now," I hiss at him.

"Fine," he hisses back, "but you're going to pay for this."

"Oh?" I flutter my eyelashes, "I'm counting on it."

His blue eyes blaze with those familiar sparks, his nostrils flare, he lowers his head, and I'm sure he's going to kiss me, or yell at me, or both. Instead, he brushes his nose up the side of my throat, and I shiver. He releases me and steps back.

"I apologize." He nods in Edward's direction, "I was out of line."

Edward seems taken aback, then he glances between us. "Don't say it because your wife-to-be asked you to," he sneers. "I can live without your fake repentance."

"Jesus," Damian swears, "does everything have to be so...so...packed with OTT sentiment with you?"

"That's me," Edward's lips curl, "I'm an OTT kind of guy."

"Huh?" I stare at the Father. And I'd always thought him to be a mellow kind of guy. Guess I thought wrong. Still waters always do run deep, apparently.

Isla's phone rings. She switches it off, then walks over to us, "You guys, if you're sure you don't want the press to be witness—"

"I'm not—"

"I'm sure," Damian snaps at the same time.

I stare up at him; he ignores me.

"Tell the press they'll get to do a short q-and-a with us after the wedding, as man and wife."

As man and wife. Of course, he would say that, rather than husband and wife. Gah! Big picture, Julia. He means to go through with it then. After everything I heard earlier, when I'd been sure that he would back out... He throws me for a loop again. Apparently, my little scene had worked. Too well. Now I am well and truly stuck.

"B...but," I force the words out, "what about the guests?"

"Ohmygod, the guests." Isla digs her fingers into her hair. "What do I do with them?" She stares between us. "Don't tell me you're not going to let them witness the wedding after they agreed to attend, and at such short notice?"

Damian widens his stance; his muscles tense.

"Let's allow the guests in," I plead with him. "It's not fair that I asked Isla to help organize the wedding, which she pulled off in less than two days—"

"More like twenty-four hours," Isla pouts. "I should have known none of the Seven would do this the normal way. Have any of you all heard of planning things and not getting married on a whim?"

"Uh, I think I am the one to blame this time," I offer.

"You. Him." She scowls at Damian. "Once you women hook up with the Seven, it's like everything changes. All of you expect the world to bow down to you."

"So, what's wrong with that?" Damian frowns down at her, and honestly, he's being serious. Like, totally serious, here.

OMG. I dig my elbow in his side. "Stop," I reprimand him. "You're not helping."

"So?" He turns that blue gaze on me, "What do you recommend?"

"I recommend that we go ahead with the wedding, as planned—"

"No."

"Then we invite the guests up here instead?"

"Hmm. Let me think." He taps a finger against his cheek, gazes into the distance, "Not happening."

"What?" Isla gasps.

"No," I protest. "Don't do this. It will, likely, destroy your career."

"Which I stopped giving a fuck about a long time ago."

And I should too...but apparently, I can't. This man. He's too bloody talented to hide away from the world, and somehow, now that I know his secret... Not that it means I have any power over him... In fact, quite the opposite... I feel like I am responsible, somehow, for making sure he shares his talent again with the world... Hence, when he'd suggested inviting the press and the guests to the wedding, I had gone along...

All of this was his plan, and now he doesn't want to go through with it, settling instead, for a more intimate affair, which honestly, is what I prefer too... But the backlash from the press and the guests who, I am sure, would only be too happy to spread more rumors about Damian's downfall... And which bothers me more... And which—

Hold on! Why the hell am I so upset about it, somehow, while this man...? He stands there watching me watch Isla have a nervous breakdown?

I lean up on tip-toe and tug at his sleeve. He lowers his head. "Please," I whisper, "for Isla's sake. Let's, at least, invite the guests up."

"For Isla's sake?"

"Yeah."

"So. It's another favor."

"Actually, you're doing yourself a favor by agreeing to have them here
—"

"Then, no." He straightens.

"What?"

"You heard me."

I open and shut my mouth, curl my fists at my sides, then mutter, "Fine, fine, it's a favor to me."

"To be repaid in full, as I want, when I want, how I want...?" He leans in closer, "In whatever form I want?"

I swallow, hesitate.

He turns to me, places his palms on my shoulder.

"Agree now, or forever hold your peace." He meets my gaze, "Well?"

40

Damian

Yes, it's a dick move—me arguing with her when she's trying so hard to save this shamble of a ceremony that I don't give a fuck about... And yes, it had been my idea to invite the press and the guests... Nothing like giving them a ringside view to my downfall, huh? After all, that's what I do best, right? Allow the world to sit centerstage as I detonate before them.

So why the hell is she so hellbent on saving my career? My reputation. As if she cares? Is it the money? The opportunity to rub shoulders with fame? Perhaps the chance to take credit for resurrecting a rock legend... More like a rolling stone that had gathered too much moss, excuse the sorry pun. And while we're at it, also excuse me for not being more trusting for how she begs me to go through with this sham of a wedding. One she'd initiated, by the way, so why the hell should I comply with what she has in mind? Unless... Well... I can use the situation to my own advantage, which you bet I am going to do.

"What is it to be, then?" I rake my gaze over her features. "Tell me, Julia. Yes or no? Are you in or out?"

She draws in a breath and her lips tremble. She glances around the room, no doubt, takes in the expressions of the rest of the Seven—whose opinions matter, of course, but not as much as she thinks. They're my friends, my brothers in arms, but none of them have been through what I have. To have bounced back from the incident only to have my soul shattered all over again? Well, let them try to recover from losing a part of themselves as I had.

I guarantee they wouldn't have made it as far as I have. Which isn't saying a lot, considering I've managed to screw up my life completely. And even now, when I should be thanking my good fortune that she came along, here I am, screwing it all up, all over again, and I can't stop myself.

She glances at Isla, then back at me. "Yes," she mutters, "I'll do as you please."

"Good." I take in her pale face, her huge eyes, the hair piled on top of her head. I reach down and she flinches, as I pull the pins from her hair.

She gasps and I hear a few murmurs from the women as her hair tumbles around her face. I arrange it about her shoulders to my satisfaction, then nod. "That's better." I lean down and kiss her cheek. "You're a good friend," I whisper in her ear before I tug on her earlobe, and she gasps.

"Just don't expect me to be the same," I growl. Her shoulders tremble. I step back, turn to Isla, "You can ask the guests to come in here, and we'll have a meet and greet with the press later."

Her forehead scrunches, then she nods, "Fine." She turns to leave.

Amelie walks up to Julia, "Let's get you freshened up, okay babe?" She hooks her arm through Julia's and leads her out, with Victoria and Summer at her heels.

I glance around the room, take in the expressions of the rest of my friends. They glare at me as if it's my fault. "What?" I rake my fingers through my hair. "I'm doing my best," I growl.

"It's not enough." Edward frowns.

"Do better then," Arpad snaps.

"Now, it's my fault?" I snap

"Always."

"You bet."

I stare at the traitors, "Whose side are you on?"

"Hers," they reply in one voice.

I dig my fingers into my hair and tug, "You guys can't be serious."

"You can't be serious, you complete ass." Arpad stalks forward and grabs my collar.

"Hey," I protest, "What's wrong with you?"

"What's wrong with you?" he snaps back. "The woman's in love with you, you shithead. She's trying to save your bloody soul—which is a lost cause, if you ask me, but whatever—and this is how you repay her?"

"How?"

"You know how." He drags me up by my collar, "You're being a complete, unreasonable prick—nothing new and I don't care— Hell, none of us cared if you stayed where you were, hiding behind your wall of grief like a coward—"

"I'm not a coward," I argue.

"Oh," he laughs, "that's not what I see."

"Don't say it," I warn him, "don't..."

"It's clear as hell that you want her by your side, even as you do your best to push her away. You want her to help you see the light, yet you do everything possible to drag her down into the darkness with you. Just like you've held the rest of us at arm's length, but here's what you should understand..."

"What?" My heart begins to race. There's a ball of fucking emotions in my throat that won't go away as much as I swallow. "You may as well as complete your little speech," I say through gritted teeth.

"We're not going anywhere," Arpad snaps.

Behind him, Edward chuckles. Sinclair and Saint stare at me with determination in their eyes. Weston folds his arms over his chest and raises one eyebrow. Jace crosses his legs, leans against the wall. "You heard the man," he says.

"That woman is worth ten—"

"A hundred—" Edward chimes in.

"A hundred," Arpad corrects himself, "of you." He nods. "And she cares about your fucking black heart—God knows why—and the rest of us can see what you can't."

"What?"

"That you love her, you prick."

"No."

"You fucking care for her for the first time since..."

I stare at him.

"Since your daughter died."

I squeeze my eyes shut. "It never gets easier," I mutter. "It's fucking killing me, man, that I'll never be able to read to her again, kiss her cheek, smell her baby scent, teach her to ride a bike, buy her a dog, run with her across the heath, buy her makeup, fight off the boys who dare glance at her... F-u-c-k, I'll never get to see her again and it's eating me from the inside! I can't go on."

"You must."

"It's tearing me apart... This... This thing is so real, I can see it, feel it, touch it... This horrible nothingness that's gnawing at me... It's tying me up in knots." I lower my chin to my chest, "It's suffocating me slowly."

"Write it out."

"Eh?" I glare at him, "You think I haven't tried."

"You have your muse with you now."

"Hmm."

"You and she both said you're finally writing."

"It's all crap."

"Not from what she said." Edward moves toward us.

"It is," I insist.

"That's for us to decide," Arpad replies.

"Right." I snort. "The day I show my early ideas to you knob-heads will be when I know I've finally lost it."

"Not us. Share it with her." Weston closes the distance to us. "Trust me, bro, having your woman by your side is like no other feeling on earth. The trust, the selflessness of what she brings to your relationship, how she reacts to your creative output, will be the most honest, the most loving, yet the most critical. You can trust her."

Can I?

"If I, the most cynical mofo on this side of the Atlantic, found my soulmate, I believe there is hope for you." Sinclair stalks toward me. He wraps his arms around me and Arpad. "You gotta believe in her, believe in yourself. You have to get through this."

"The wedding?" I mumble.

"That, too," Edward closes in from the other side to grip my shoulder, "and the grief that you have been holding inside and not sharing with us..."

I frown.

"You don't have to allow us in. I mean, as your priest, I'd love for you to confide in me. But as your friend, hell, if I want to peek into that twisted heart of yours." He chuckles.

"Thanks, man." I grimace.

"But you can open yourself up to her."

"Right." I crack my neck, "Who are you guys and what have you done to the Seven?"

"I can't speak for the others, but personally, the love of a good woman changed me." Saint's lips twist. He prowls forward and grabs my neck to pull me toward him, then smashes his forehead to mine.

"Ow," I half yell, "What the hell, you dumbfuck? That hurt!"

"Good." He smirks. "Had to find the fastest way to get some sense through that thick skull of yours."

"What-fucking-ever."

Arpad laughs; the others chuckle.

"Now what?" I protest. "What is it you guys are trying to tell me?"

"Something that even that tosser Baron realizes, and he isn't even around." Jace joins us to complete the strange whatever-it-is that is going on here.

"Which is?" I finally ask.

"That you love her."

"You can't live without her."

"You need her and you better not fuck this up."

"You better take this opportunity and run with it and turn your life around or else—"

"Fine, fine," I half yell. "You guys are scaring me, with this weird emo, group hug thing."

"Group hug?" Arpad snorts. "What is a group hug of alphaholes called anyway?"

"A hole in the heart?" Weston offers.

"An alpha pit?" Edward grimaces. "Maybe not."

"Shitholes?"

Arpad laughs, "Forget I asked. The fact is, we may act like we don't give a fuck—which often, arguably, we don't—but in this instance, we're not giving you a choice, man. You're going to embrace this chance and make the fucking most of it."

"Stop yelling in my ear; I can hear you just fine," I grumble.

"It's time." Arpad glances around the group, "Shall we show this chap we mean business?"

My heart begins to race, adrenaline laces my blood, and I sense their intent a second before the tossers haul me up and carry me, up and toward the sliding doors of the room that opens out onto the rooftop where the tables have been laid out for the reception later. Beyond that all of London can be seen; but that's not what interests me as much as the glimmer of blue in the center... A fucking pool.

"Don't you fucking dare, you wankers, you dicks, you...pratholes."
I hear their laughter as I fall through the air.

41

Julia

"You ready?"

Isla straightens from where she's righted the hem of my skirt. My very short skirt that comes up to mid-thigh. I shuffle my feet—now clad in leather boots that come to over my knees. And the heels? Well, let's just say I feel like Wonder Woman right now, or Lady Gaga in her heyday... God knows, I need the confidence of both, rolled up together, to walk into that room. I stare at the double doors that are currently closed, and gulp. My fingers tremble and I clench them together. No flowers... Okay, so no real flowers. Instead, I have a bouquet of flowers made out of long-life clay, the kind that will last a long time, and become a true family heirloom. Something I hope to, one day, pass down to my children... When I have them... Me and Damian and our children. Jesus, will I have his kids? Will this marriage, that came out of nowhere—so what, if I had initiated it?—result in something that will last at least as long as this clay flower bouquet? Or will it wither away like those made of real flowers? Destined to be pressed into the pages of a book and be remembered for its shortness, the intensity with which it took place, only for things to implode? Are we destined to become a fly-by-night headline of the paparazzi? Here today, gone tomorrow? With not even the printed word having recorded our brief encounter? St-o-p right there. Talk about having an overactive imagination, huh? Jesus H, I need to get out of my head.

"Is it too much, you think?" I glance between Isla, who's listening to something on her ear piece, to Summer, who looks me up and down, to Victoria, who flanks me, serene as always, in her pale green gown. They'd all agreed to be bridesmaids and walk me up the aisle, more out of encouragement than tradition. Not that anything about this wedding is old school. Far from it.

"You look like a rock star's bride." Victoria smiles at me.

"Is that good?" I wonder aloud.

"You look perfect." Summer smiles at me, her pale pink gown molding her slim curves and setting off her dark hair with the pink tips that she recently added. Her eyes gleam and she chuckles as she looks me up and down, "Karma had this couriered to me. Thank God, I got it to you in time."

"Karma?" I frown. "She's—"

"My sister." Summer nods. "She's been holed up with her Italian hunk forever." Summer flicks her hair over her shoulder. "If she doesn't show herself soon, I'm going to have to go to Sicily and find out what she's hiding."

"You think she's hiding something?"

Summer's forehead furrows. "It was a figure of speech, but now that you mention it, I wonder if there isn't a grain of truth to it."

"What are you going to do?" Isla asks her.

Summer wrings her fingers together. "The last time I spoke to her, she sounded odd. I asked her if something was wrong and she dismissed it, saying she was down with the flu." Summer rubs her fingers over her forearm. "As sisters, you know, we've always shared everything, but I simply can't get over this niggling instinct that there's more than she's letting on. Know what I mean?"

No, not really. I am an only child, so I've always wanted the kind of relationship with a sibling that Summer talks about, but I've never had access to it. Which is why, maybe, I love kids and want my own family... And now I'm getting married... And hell, I am starting this chapter of my life on a big fat lie. Shit, shit, shit, I can't stop the sobs that grip me.

"Ohmygod," I hear Isla gasp aloud, then she steps up to wrap her arm around my shoulders. "Babe, what's wrong?"

"N... nothing," I blubber.

"Something is." Summer walks over to rub my back, in slow steady circles, "It's okay, honey, let it all out. So much has happened in the past few days, it must be catching up with you."

"Well, I wish it had caught up with me later. I need to feel stronger, I do, but damn, if everything doesn't seem...like...like..."

"It's all out of control?" Amelie joins us. She holds out a wad of tissues and I grab them, dab at my eyes. "Yeah," I sniff. "I mean, what if he hates me for what I'm making him do?"

"You did the right thing," Amelie insists.

"I know, but what if he never forgives me for it?"

"He will," Isla replies. "Maybe not immediately. I mean, when did a man recognize when something good happened to him, huh? Not even when it hits him over the head, does he admit that it's the right thing for him."

I blow my nose, then look for a way to discard the tissues. "Here," Isla holds out another tissue and I drop them in there. She wraps them up, then carries them over to the wastebasket. "Look, babe, if you don't feel this is the right thing for you, we can call it off."

"What?" I blink.

Isla glances at Summer, who nods, "Sure, doll, you say the word and we'll take care of the groom. Not to mention, the alphaholes in there. We'll hold them off—"

"And the press and guests," Victoria adds. "We'll take care of them all, if you want to leave."

"Oh," I swallow, then glance around their faces. Do I want to do that? Do I want to get the hell out of here? Out of what could be the biggest mistake of my life, or the biggest opportunity to...to find true love, to find out what makes Damian tick, to figure out how to help him, to help myself by helping him... Yeah... I know, it's warped... But something about this man... Since I'd first seen him in person, I'd known there couldn't be anyone else for me. I need to... Want to hold up a mirror to him, to show him the man I see, the soul he hides from the world... The words that he writes when he's alone, the melodies that bleed from his fingers when he thinks no one hears, the... Tenderness that he has yet to show me with any consistency, but which I know is hidden under that veneer of alphaholiness he likes to draw around himself like a cloak, because I've seen glimpses of it... Unless I am mistaken about him? And my instinct says, no, I'm not. That things will somehow work out... Will they?

I drag my gaze across the faces of my friends, "Will it all work out?"

Victoria moves forward and wipes a tear drop from my cheek, "When I married Saint, I thought it was the end of life as I knew it, and I was right."

"You...you were?"

She smiles, a secret uplift of her lips that hints at so many things, I can't put a name to all of the emotions. "Turned it, was the start of my best life, my only life, the dream life I wanted, but thought I'd never have. The Seven, you see... They under-promise and over-deliver."

"You make it sound like a business transaction," I tilt my head.

She chuckles. "Maybe it is. They, together, have interests in one of the biggest financial services companies in the country. Making money is a passion for them, pushing things to the very edge is their specialty, and then there is the non-profit they started together."

"Is that FOK media?" I remember reading about it in the press.

"FOK media," she nods, "the full name of which is, Full of Kindness."

"You're kidding?"

"Nope." She laughs. "It's a nonprofit that identifies and manages upcoming fresh talent. They extend interest-free loans to the most deserving ones, to start their own businesses."

"The Seven instituted that?" I start.

"Yes..." she smiles, "stuff they don't like to talk about, but which you'll find out as you get to know them better."

"O-kay." I scan her features, "What are you trying to say?"

"Give Damian a chance. Get to know him. While this is not a traditional arranged marriage, in some ways, you are marrying a stranger."

"Except he isn't," I say. "Not really."

"Exactly." She pats the space above my heart, "Where it counts, you know."

"Yeah," I swallow, "you're right. I do know him. I know that he's not as self-destructive as he wants me to believe, not as cruel as he tries to portray himself, not as...lacking in heart as he often signals with his actions, not as," I swallow around the lump in my throat, "not as much of an alphahole as the persona he portrays to the world." I stare into her face. "So... You're saying, there's a chance that things will work out?"

She wipes a stray tear off of my cheek, "Only one way to find out, babe. You ready to go in now?"

Damian

I tug on the sleeve of my button down, then glance at Arpad, "How do I look?"

"Your usual sorry self." He grins.

"Jesus, why the hell did I bother to ask?" I glance forward through the now-open doors onto the rippling waters of the pool where I had been unceremoniously dunked and held captive by the rest of my ex-friends... Yep, I've officially disowned them, as of fifteen minutes ago—when they'd not allowed me out of the pool until I'd promised I'd go through with the ceremony... Which, to be honest, I had no intention of skipping. Not after that promise I'd obtained from Flower. And while I had been upset with her having sneaked a peek at my work—How the hell had she come across it, anyway?—it had, more, been surprise at her coming to my defense in the face of the rest of the Seven turning on me. Including that bastard Baron.

Bastard knew exactly what to say in his letter. He'd goaded me, knowing I'd do the exact opposite of what he suggested. I curl my fingers into fists.

How the hell had he found out about my upcoming nuptials anyway?

A mystery that Arpad has taken upon himself to track down, given the letter had been sent to him.

I roll my shoulders in the perfectly-fitted tux—which Edward had produced, along with the rest of this tailored suit that I am wearing. Seems this is his wedding gift to me. He'd had it arranged, right down to the formal shoes. I glance down at my feet. I am actually wearing Italian-fuckingloafers. When was the last time I put on such formal wear? At Stella and Riley's funeral.

I draw in a breath, waiting for that familiar pain to stab at my chest... And it does, and my guts churn, and my belly coils in knots, and yet... Somehow, I also swallow down the taste of my grief and turn to where the rest of the men are lined up to my left. "I'm going to get back at you guys," I warn.

"Looking forward to it, brother," Arpad chuckles.

"Better make sure it's not an empty threat this time, Savage," Jace laughs, before blowing a kiss across the space to his wife Sienna, who just walked in with their newborn in a sling. The tiny baby looks fucking sweet, I'll admit. How the hell can I even look at the kid without tying myself in knots like I used to, huh? Apparently, sharing my grief, first with Julia, then with Arpad and the rest of this lot, seems to have loosened something inside of me. Maybe there is hope for me? Perhaps I can get past the darkness that has gripped me for so long?

"You okay, Savage?" Saint asks.

"Yes." I shake my head, "No. Shit..." I drag my fingers through my still damp-hair... Yeah, I'd managed to jump into the shower in the changing rooms by the pool, which is where I'd also gotten dressed. My wedding day and I am actually dressed in a formal tux—something which is so far from my own style that, honestly, I have to ask... How the hell did this happen?

"Also, you're welcome," Sinclair drawls.

"For what?" I scowl.

"For making sure you turned up for your own wedding, you shoe stain."

I wince, "Getting creative with your insults, finally, I see?"

"Getting antsy as the time draws closer, I see?" Arpad chuckles. He pulls out his phone and snaps a shot.

"What the fuck?" I mutter. "You're in disgustingly good humor."

"Unlike you." Edward smiles from his place in front of me. "Not long now, Savage." He smirks. "Any last wishes before this last step?"

"Hey," I protest, "you're my priest, for fuck's sake—"

"No swearing," he says mildly.

"And you smirked," I accuse him. "Didn't think you had a mean bone in your body."

"Much you don't know about me." Edward's eyes gleam. For a second, I am sure I glimpse something beyond the affable, if quiet, priest and friend I've known for so long—something darker, more violent... Unpredictable?

Hell, I should know. I was—am—the same.

"Jesus, Ed," I mutter, "you're going to get into so much trouble one of these days."

"Nothing I can't handle." His smile widens as he stares past me.

"Straighten up, Savage," Arpad calls out to me.

"What?" I tug down the lapels of my shirt. "What's wrong?"

"The doors are opening."

"Shit." I curl my fingers into fists at my sides. I've faced a crowd of millions at Wembley Stadium, so compared to that, this should be a moon walk—I mean, cake walk—right? There are, what, fifty handpicked guests, at the most, in the room, all of whom I know, in one capacity or another. So why the hell are my palms damp? My stomach churns; my guts heave. "Fuck, I am going to be sick," I mutter.

"You're not." Arpad laughs

"Wait until it's your turn, you prick," I growl.

"Na-a-ah." He waggles a finger. "Not falling for the oldest trick in the book, my man. Besides, I am going to have my hands full, seeing how you cope."

"Ha-fucking-ha." I widen my stance, push my shoulders back. Easy now. This is a walk in the park, a simple ceremony. A few minutes and it'll all be over. All you have to do is— I turn toward the doorway, and that's when my world turns upside down.

What the hell is she wearing?

Julia steps into the room and a hush descends. The guests stop talking, sensing the presence of an angel. A goddess? The epitome of femininity, who is every fantasy I ever had. She takes a step forward and the long sweep of her leg gleams in the sunlight that chooses that moment to stream down from the open window. The ray spotlights her, bounces off the tiny stars in the thin veil that floats above her face, and entwines with her dark hair that cascades about her shoulders. The lace of her bodice encircles her neck and flows down to meet the beading that starts above her breasts; the corset cinches in, showing off her impossibly small waist before flaring over those gorgeous hips and ending at mid-thigh.

Slim thighs, made for being wrapped around my waist, the muscles moving and giving as I haul her up against the nearest door and pin her to it with my cock buried inside of her. "Fuck," I swear aloud and Arpad elbows me in the ribs. Get your mind out of the gutter this once, will you? But how can I stop the lascivious thoughts that run through my mind as she glides closer, closer, her arms encased in that same ivory lace that sets off the creamy skin I'd caressed not so very long ago?

And now she is baring her body to the people here. My muscles tense, my groin hardens, and something primitive coils in my chest. Lust? Jealousy? Possession? How dare she reveal herself in front of the world when the only person who is allowed to see her, feel her, hold her, make love to her, is me? She's mine. All mine. And no way, do I want anyone else laying their gaze on her beauty. So what, if they appreciate her? Too bad. She belongs to me. Only me. I take a step forward and Arpad grabs my arm.

"What are you doing?" he mutters.

"What?"

"You okay, Romeo?"

"Huh?" I shake my head to clear it. "You can let go of me. I am not going to do anything stupid."

"You sure?" He leans in close then brushes some imaginary dust off of my shoulder. "You're not going to pick her up and run out of here, or something?"

I had considered it. I flex my fingers, feel my pocket. Good. My surprise is still there. "Nah," I wrench my shoulder from his grasp, "I'm done running." I glance up at my bride, who walks past the gathering and toward her future, "Besides there's something I need to complete first."

"You not going to do anything stupid, are you?" There's a note of concern in Arpad's voice.

"Can't promise that," I allow my lips to curl, "but whatever I do, it will make for a great headline." I focus on looking relaxed, lock my gaze with my bride's.

She comes to a stop in front of me, tips up her chin.

I glance down at the green eyes that stare up at me through the barrier of her veil. I take in her flushed features, the quivering lips, the upturned nose.

I glare at her; she trembles. She gulps, tips up her chin. I reach for her veil and raise it over her head. A sigh runs through the audience.

I bend down, press my mouth close to her ear. "Nothin' lasts forever," I whisper, and the bouquet slips from her fingers.

43

Julia

The bouquet slips from my nerveless fingers. He swoops down and grabs it before it can hit the floor. A ripple runs through the crowd. Yeah, talk about unorthodox weddings, huh? Other than the fact that I am dressed like Axl Roses' freakin' bride from November Rain, and that Damian has changed into a tux—sans tie—and fitted dress slacks, complete with pointed Italian loafers and a blue handkerchief tucked in his left breast pocket, which means that he looks like James Bond—Daniel Craig not Pierce Brosnan—with that hard jaw, mean lips and piercing blue gaze of his, which had eaten me up from the moment he'd turned and stared straight at me.

For a second there, his entire body had tensed, his features had taken on an expression of... Shock? Lust? Need? Ha, I must have been dreaming. Damian f'ing Savage would never need anything from me. No, he'd demand and simply take; and I'd let him. When it comes to the rock star, I can't say no, and hell, if that isn't the reason I am standing here, even after that cryptic statement of his: Nothin' lasts forever. Does he mean us? This marriage, this relationship that never was? I open my mouth to ask, when he shakes his head.

"But—" I protest and he turns and hands the bouquet over to Isla, who steps up to take it. She moves away, and Damian faces forward. I clasp my fingers together, follow his lead to face Edward.

He glances between us, then gestures to the crowd behind us, who subside.

"We are gathered here today to celebrate the union of Damian Savage and Julia Child Andrews.

I cringe. Yep, not making that up. That really is my middle name, and now you know who my mother's hero was—a travesty, considering I can't cook... Unless you count baking clay a form of cooking, which, coming to think of it, it is.

"I believe the couple would prefer to recite their vows to each other directly, instead of having me officiate?"

We would? Eyes wide, I stare at Edward, then shoot a sideways glance at Damian who nods.

"Why didn't you warn me?" I hiss at the rock star, who curls his lips.

"You didn't ask."

"You could have told me," I whisper-scream.

"You're the one with all the answers." He turns to me, "I am sure you'll think of something. Meanwhile..."

"Meanwhile?" I mirror his stance. "What's happening, meanwhile?"

"Meanwhile, I say my vows, of course." He smiles.

"Vows?"

His grin widens. He holds out his hand, palm face up. "Take it," he coaxes me.

I glance down at his hand, then up at his face, "Is this a joke?"

"I've never been more serious." His features grow intense and his gaze narrows. He jerks his chin, and damn it, but I can't refuse him. I place my hand in his.

His warm fingers dwarf mine. He rubs his thumb over the back of my hand and my pulse rate ratchets up. His lips curl and I know he's aware of exactly how his proximity affects me. Jerk. I try to pull my arm away and he curls his fingers around my hand, holding me in place.

Then he pulls out a piece of white ribbon from his pocket.

Huh?

He proceeds to wrap the ribbon around our joined hands, once, twice, thrice, then he raises his gaze back to mine, "You changed my life from the moment I met you. When I look into your eyes, I see my future. All I want is to hold you and protect you through sickness and sorrow, through happiness and life's challenges. I promise to always take care of you, to be there for you when you need me, and when you don't, I promise not to be an ass."

The audience laughs.

"I promise to cherish you and shield you, and walk by your side through life's ups and downs. Say you'll be mine, Julia. Only mine."

I stare up into those piercing blue eyes; the darkness in his irises deepens with an intensity that's so palpable, my knees tremble. The heat of his big body reaches out to me, envelops me in a warm embrace—solid, dependable. In that moment, I believe his words, the honesty that thrums in the space between us. The vibration of something powerful, something bigger than either of us, grips me. I curl my fingers about his hand, or as much as I can reach of his broad palm.

"I will," I whisper, and his features seem to take on an expression of relief. Huh? Did he think I would refuse him and flounce off? If he only knew. "I promise to walk by your side through the good days and the bad, through ups and downs. When things get tough, there's no one else I'd rather turn to than you. When the moments of celebration arrive, there's no one else I'd rather rejoice with than you. When my spirits nose dive, and that happens quite often, I warn you—"

There's a titter from the assembled women.

"—there's no one else I'd rather have to cheer me up than you." I swallow, place my other hand over our joined palms, "for, I love you."

His throat moves as he swallows.

"I have loved you, Damian Savage, from even before I knew who you were, and when I laid my eyes on you, there was no one else."

His face pales.

"There can be no one else."

His features harden.

"But you. Only you, Damian."

Silence descends.

I glance up as he holds my gaze. A vein throbs at his temple. The skin around his eyes tightens. He searches my face with such single-minded concentration, I am sure he's memorizing my features.

"I now pronounce you husband and wife." Edward's voice sounds like it comes from somewhere far away. "You may kiss the bride."

He places his free palm over mine, then tugs. I lean in, raise my chin as he lowers his face to mine. Closer, closer. Not breaking the connection between our eyes, he presses his lips to mine.

Soft, sweet, he holds his mouth in place as he shares my breath, and holds my gaze. He's so close, I can discern the golden dot in the iris of his left eye.

The crease of fine lines that radiate out from the edges of his eyes, the single grey hair at his right temple. And it's the most intimate moment of my life. And the most erotic. More than all the times that he's fucked me... For this time... Something feels different, almost as if he means his vows, as if he's trying to tell me something with his body language.

He wraps his other arm around my waist, pulls me to him. My lips part and he slides his tongue over mine. A shiver runs down my spine and desire flares low in my belly. A moan swells up my throat. An answering groan rumbles from his chest. This... This, I know. This dance is familiar. Whatever our differences, our bodies have always been in sync. I expect him to deepen the kiss, to ravage my mouth and take...and take... And he pulls back.

Huh? I flutter open my eyelids to find him staring down at me with something like wonder and bemusement and heat. I rise up on tip-toe, try to reach his mouth again.

He chuckles, then lowers his lips to mine and kisses me—softly, deeply, nerve-wrackingly, heartbreakingly, genuinely... Oh, I don't have the words to describe how it feels when he coaxes me to open my mouth and swoops his tongue inside to drink from me, suck from me, mold my body to his as he ravages my mouth, and I want him. Oh, how I want him, right there, in front of everyone. I moan, and he brushes his lips over mine again.

"Julia," he whispers against my cheek, "my beautiful bride, I—"

A shot rings through the space.

Damian

I hear the shot a second before she gasps. Her gaze widens.

"Julia?" I frown down at her.

"Damian." She shudders. "Damian, I love you."

"I know," I snap.

Her knees buckle and I twist our joined hands behind her and haul her even closer. She's so damn slim, I can barely feel her weight. "Julia, what's wrong?" I growl. Around me, the scene explodes and I am aware of the rest of the Seven moving to plant their bodies between us and the source of the shot. "Julia?" My heart begins to race and my pulse thuds at my temples. "Julia?" A wetness bleeds into my hand. I raise it, and I know what it is even before I spot the scarlet on my fingers.

"Oh, my fucking god! Julia, you're hurt."

Her eyelids flutter. "Why are you always so angry?" she whispers. "Is it me? Do you hate me Damian?"

"No." I shake my head; my throat closes. I try to yank my hand free of the binding that ties me to her and the goddam ribbon refuses to give. "Fuck, fuck, fuck."

"Don't swear." She half smiles.

I tug again and manage to pull free. I wrap my arms around her, cradle her against my chest, and she glances up at me. "I love the view from here," she says.

"And I love you," I cry out. "Julia, baby, I love you. You hear me?"

"I know." Her voice is serene. She raises a hand to my face and cups my cheek. "My beautiful man." She closes her eyes and my heart explodes in my chest.

"No!" I howl. "Fucking fuck, Julia, don't you dare die on me! You hear me?" I shake her bodily, and she coughs. She opens her eyes and I draw in a breath. The oxygen rushes to my lungs and for a second the world tilts. I righten to find she's staring up at me.

"Damian?"

"I'm here."

"Don't let go of me," she whispers.

"I won't; I promise."

She closes her eyes again, her black lashes a dark fan against her white skin. No, no, no. "I will not let you die. You hear me?" I scream. "Don't you dare leave me. Not after the promises you made, Julia, Flower... Please, baby."

There's a commotion, another shot going off. I gather her close, turn my back on the rest of the audience, blocking out the room... Everything else... The world.

Why didn't I learn my lesson? I lost my daughter and found Julia and refused to acknowledge what she meant to me. I'd waited until the last moment to tell her I love her. I had failed my marriage vows, broken them within seconds of making them. Typical.

"Damian?" There's a touch on my shoulder and I shake it off. "It's Weston, let me take a look at her."

"No." I shake my head, refusing to relinquish my hold on her. If I do, I'll never see her again.

"Rockstar, let me help her. I'm a surgeon, remember?" Weston's words cut through the chaos in my head. I glance over into his calm features. I know him. I can trust him with my Flower.

He nods and I lower Julia to the floor.

I kneel next to her prone body, watch as he pulls off his jacket and presses it to her wound, to stem the bleeding.

"Damian," someone grips my shoulder, "the intruder has been apprehended."

I glance up into Edward's face. "I want to see him."

Edward nods.

"I want to see the face of the motherfucker who dared take away the most precious thing in my life. I want revenge," I state in a voice that's so calm, so precise. How the hell am I even alive when my darling wife, the love of my life, is gone?

"I'm not sure that's advisable—"

"I will not stop until I have my revenge. You understand?"

He nods.

"Damian," Arpad squats down next to me, "the ambulance is here."

There is more commotion behind me, then a paramedic looms over us. "We need to look at her, Sir."

"No." I spring to my feet and grab the paramedic's collar, "Don't you fucking touch her."

"Damian," Arpad hauls me back, "they need to help Julia."

"Julia," I swallow, "my Flower, my wife."

"Yes," he grips my shoulder, "let them examine her."

The paramedic reaches for her and I shove away his hand. "No. Please," I beg, "don't take her away from me."

Edward grips my other shoulder, "I promise, they won't."

"No," I growl, "I don't believe you. I don't believe any of you. I need to be with her. She asked me to stay with her. I can't allow her to leave. You understand? She's all I have left, and I love her, and I didn't realize it until now. Do you understand, I—?"

Edward's hand connects with my cheek and the shock of it—not only the physical impact of the slap, but that it's Edward behaving out of character again—is enough for me to loosen my grip.

Arpad and Edward drag me away. Weston steps back and the paramedics move in.

My friends keep ahold of me and I watch as one paramedic takes over trying to stem the bleeding from the wound while the other fits an oxygen mask over her face.

They strap her onto a stretcher, begin to carry her away. Edward coaxes me to follow and I force myself to put one foot in front of the other.

Isla stops us, "The press conference, the reporters..."

"Fuck the reporters," I growl.

"Let's not alienate the press," Arpad cautions.

"Fuck that," I snap, "My wife was just shot and you think I care about the world?"

He grips my neck and forces me to meet his gaze, "Take two hours," he says. "Then, you need to talk to them. Julia would want you to do this."

Right. I draw in a breath, force myself to focus, focus. "At the hospital," I finally mutter, "I'll issue a statement in two hours."

Isla nods and darts off.

I head for the doors, supported by Arpad and Edward on either side, like the fucking loser that I am. I can't even walk on my own, it seems. I twist away from their grasp; they don't protest. I stalk forward, my friends in tow, past the few remaining guests, out the open doors, down the steps, toward where the paramedics are loading in the stretcher with my life, my heart... How am I even breathing right now?

I stumble and Arpad rights me, "You okay?"

No, I never will be again.

I reach the ambulance, grab hold of the handle to pull myself inside, when another woman stops me. "The cops will need to speak with you."

I stare at her, not able to place her features.

"Karina?" Arpad steps forward.

Karina glances at him; her features tighten. "The cops," she repeats. "They need his statement."

"Not now, we need to go to the hospital," I snap.

Arpad shoots me a warning glare.

I hold his gaze for a second, then turn to Karina, "At the hospital, after the press conference."

She nods. "Three hours, no more. Also," she scowls, "the shooter was the same man who broke into your place a few months ago."

A paramedic interrupts, "Sir, we need you to get in so we can close the doors now."

"Motherfucker," I say to Karina as I pull myself into the vehicle. "I am going to make sure he goes down for a long time."

"You do that, Rockstar." She turns and heads toward the waiting cops .

I sink down into the seat next to Julia and hold her hand.

As the doors begin to close, Arpad calls out, "I'll be right behind you."

Julia

The darkness is so soothing, it envelops me, cocoons me. I want to stay here, and yet, something niggles at my subconscious mind. Him. Where is he? I reach for him and find nothing. Panic grips me... I need to go to him. I can't leave, not now, not when he said he loves me. He LOVES me. Of course, he'd said it under duress... On my last breath... Last breath? No, I am not dying, am I? I can't die. I don't want to die. Goddam it. I snap my eyes open and the light blinds me.

"Ow," I protest, "I hate fluorescent lights."

"Julia?" The light cuts out, to be replaced by his face—his hard chin, those high cheekbones, the skin stretched across it, now pale and with hollows under those beautiful eyes. "Julia?" His stern lips form my name and I watch, fascinated at the few grey hairs that thread his stubble.

"You're old." I cough, and my voice sounds strange, even to me.

"You're back, Julia." He turns my palm, the fingers of which are entwined with his, I now realize. He lowers his head and presses his lips to my knuckles. "Thank God, you're back."

"Where did I go?" I frown.

"Nowhere," he places his other palm over mine and presses our joined palms to his cheek, "you were right here with me, all this time."

"Where am I?" I glance around, taking in the fixtures, the clean lines, the fluorescent lights above—I had been right about that—the screen which monitors my heartbeat... Oh. "I'm at the hospital?"

He nods, "Do you remember what happened?"

I turn to him, "I was shot?"

"Left shoulder, the bullet scraped the skin."

I try to raise my left hand and a dull throbbing sensation shoots down my back. I glance down to find my arm is in a cast. "Oh," I swallow. "But I am okay?"

"More than fine." He cups my cheek, turns my face back to his. "You are going to make a complete recovery."

His blue gaze is clear, almost innocent. His hair is disheveled, the wrinkles at his eyes more prominent. The tendons of his throat move as he, once more, presses his lips to my fingers. "Damn it, Flower, I thought...you were... That you were..."

"Dead?"

He winces. "Told you never to say that word."

"And I am telling you now that I am not going to let you go so easily."

"Huh?"

"We just got married! You didn't think I was going to pop off and allow you to walk away a free man?"

He laughs, "I'd forgotten how sassy you can be sometimes."

"Sometimes?"

"Okay," he concedes, "most of the time."

"Wow." I blink at him, and he frowns.

"What?"

"Nothing."

"Tell me," he coaxes. "What were you thinking?"

"Just that, you've never agreed to my point of view so easily."

He rubs his cheek against my fingers. "Don't get used to it," he mutters.

"Of course, not." I glance at the sleeve of his tux, now ripped over his right shoulder.

"Your jacket is torn."

He glances at it, then back at me, "The same bullet that grazed you—"

"Tore through your sleeve?"

He nods.

"Ohmygod." I grip his fingers with my other hand. "Ohmygod, Damian, it could have hurt you."

"Instead, it's you who took the bullet. Meant for me," he mutters, a strange expression stealing over his face. "If something had happened to you?" His features contort. "If anything had happened to you, Flower... I'd have... Never recovered from it. I'd have killed myself."

"Hush." I place my fingers over his lips. "Now who's talking about the 'D' word, huh?"

His mouth twists. "I am allowed."

"Not on my watch." I smile.

"About that," he looks to the side, then back at me, "I have something to tell you."

The hair on the nape of my neck rises. I peruse his features, the vein that thuds at his temple, his eyes, which are clear with a decision that he'd made at some point in the last few hours while I was out cold. He strokes my hand with a fervor reserved for near-death experiences which, yeah, I admit, I'd been through. But I am here and alive and so is he, so why does he harden his jaw, lower his forehead to our joined hands as if paying homage, right before he leans over and kisses my brow? His touch—gentle, soft, caring... So not like the Damian I know.

"Baby?" I whisper, "What's wrong?"

He releases me and sits back in his chair. Why is he putting distance between us?

"Damian?" I plead, "Speak to me. Tell me what you're thinking."

"I'm sorry," he says.

"For what?"

"You're going to hate me, but later, when you are happy, and with a family of your own, you'll know that I was right."

"About what?" I try to sit up, but the goddam pillows are all at the wrong angle. "And I want to have a family with you, Damian. You know that."

"I know," he nods, "and so did I, but that was before."

My heart begins to race so fast, I am sure I'm having a cardiac. Good thing I am in a hospital, huh? And no, I am still breathing. No other pains or anything, so not a heart attack. Just this stupid oaf, trying to pull another alphaholish stunt on me, I think. "Stop it," I growl.

He looks at me with so much helplessness, so much anguish, so much regret that tears fill my eyes. "Damian, no," I choke out. "Don't do it."

"It's done." He half smiles. "I am getting the marriage annulled."

"What?"

He nods.

"This was all a mistake."

"But you love me."

"I do." He looks down at his lap, studies his hands. "I've never loved another woman as much as I do you."

"Then?" I stare, "Why... Oh!" I draw in a breath. "Oh. That's why you came to this stupid-ass decision."

The look of bewilderment on his face would be amusing if I didn't want to strangle him right now. "What do you mean?" His jaw tics. "And it's the right decision."

"It's clear that you are running scared. Typical," I snarl. "All you men who talk big and have larger-than-life personas and are fucking dominant and don't hesitate to take what you want, and when it comes to the real stuff, when the rubber hits the pavement—"

"The road," he corrects me, "when the rubber hits the—"

"Whatever!" I yell. "When it's time to face up to your true feelings and make tough decisions, you're the first to blink." I snort. "And who, exactly, is this the right decision for?" I push myself to an upright position, succeed this time, then wince when my shoulder protests.

He reaches for me, and I slap his hand away. "Don't you dare touch me."

He doesn't glare at me, simply folds his hands back in his lap, and damn it. Damian, asshole Damian, being compliant... Bloody hell. My belly knots and the band around my chest tightens. This is not good. Not good at all.

"I made this decision in a cogent frame of mind and it's right for you," he states.

"You mean it's right for you," I spit out. "You're so fucking selfish. Why didn't I realize that? You're doing it just to save yourself heartbreak. So you don't have to experience the highs and lows of a relationship. You'd rather not try. You prefer to give up a chance at true love and a marriage and all the experiences you could have because... You. Are. A. Coward."

"I'm not—"

"You are," I snap. "In fact, you are so afraid of heartbreak, that you've been using your daughter as a shield all along. By pretending Riley is alive, you protect yourself not only from the pain of losing her, but also from the pain of losing anyone else."

His features harden. "You don't know what you're talking about."

I shake my head, "That's where you're wrong. I know you better than you know yourself. And, it's only now that I'm realizing why I proposed to you."

"Because you love me?"

"You actually have the audacity to throw that in my face, now?"

He glances away, then back at me. "You love me; that's why you asked me to marry you."

"Not only," I snarl. "I proposed to you, because I knew you didn't have the guts to ask me to marry you. Because I knew if I left it to you, you'd put it off, or never come around to it, or always have an excuse as to why it wasn't right for us. You'd always reduce what we have to a transaction or something where our feelings were irrelevant. It's why I took the opportunity when I saw it. Because I knew you loved me, even before you told me. Before you could even admit it to yourself. Because I know we are right for each other. We'd be so amazing together, Damian."

"You're wrong." His jaw firms, "I am completely wrong for you. In fact, I am the last person you should associate with."

I gape at him, then throw up my one good arm, "You're pathetic, Damian Savage, you know that? You're a wuss."

He winces, then straightens his shoulders. "Now you know." His lips twist. "Now you realize why there can't be a future for us, in any form."

I open and close my mouth. "Really?" I stare. "You're doing this now? After everything we've been through, you're backing away?"

"This is the only way."

"It's not." My eyes begin to burn.

"It is."

"Don't do this." I reach for him and he pushes his chair back.

"You promised you wouldn't leave me," I choke out through a throat gone dry.

"And you know, I never keep my promises." He holds my gaze, leaving me in no doubt of his intent. His eyes are clear, his expression vacant.

Asshole. How can he do this? How can he be so calm when my entire world is collapsing around me? "I hate you," I cry. "I wish I'd never met you in person."

"Good." He nods, as if this were his intention all along.

I gape at him. "That's all you have to say to me?" I sputter.

"Not only." He rises to his feet. "You can keep the flat." He pivots and stalks to the door, and damn him, but I can't let him go, not without saying or doing something to hurt him as much as he's hurt me.

"Tell Riley I said goodbye."

He pauses mid-step. His big body jolts as if I'd just whipped him or shot him all over again. He stays there immobile, a beat, another. Then straightens up to his full height.

"Goodbye, Julia." He heads for the doors and walks out.

45

#DamianSavage delivers another flop, this time his joke marriage

#DamianSavage are you coming? Or going? Pun intended...

#DamianSavage he's free girls, but baby daddy material he sure isn't anymore...

Damian

I stare across the garden at the greenhouse. The greenery creeps up the transparent panels of the walls, to crisscross the area. It lends a spider-web kind of appearance to the entire space. A bit like my life right now. Only difference is, I am caught in a web of my own making.

How could I have fucked things up so royally? I had married her, and she had almost died. That... That says it all. If something had happened to her...? I could have never forgiven myself. For a second there, when I'd said my vows, I'd almost believed that I could make a go of it, have a happily ever after. Who the hell had I been kidding? Those kinds of happy endings don't exist for assholes like me who can't put a step forward without getting it all wrong.

There's a noise behind me. I turn to find Arpad leaning against the door of my studio.

"You?" I growl.

"Expecting someone else?"

"You're on the wrong side of the door," I mutter.

"You're on the wrong side of life, you bloody coward," he roars.

"Tell me something I don't know." I cross the floor to the settee in the far corner and sink into it. Then lift my bottle of whiskey in his direction, "Want some?"

He frowns. "Christ, Savage, it's not even noon."

"It's noon somewhere in the world."

He glares at me. "Pull yourself together."

"What does this look like?" I swig from the bottle of liquor.

My stomach protests; I ignore it. I deserve to be stinking drunk, enough that I wipe out the memory of her eyes, her face, how she'd paled when I'd announced that I was getting the marriage annulled. Hell. I raise the bottle of whiskey and swig from it again.

"Are you done destroying what little there is left of you?"

"Done?" I laugh. "I'm barely getting started." I tilt the bottle to my lips, suck on empty air. "Shit." I glance around, then lean over to place it right next to its twin, equally empty, as are all of the others that I have arranged in a line on the coffee table in front of me. "You have to admit I'm at least a tidy drunk," I mumble.

"What you are, is a bloody pussy."

"No argument from me on that." I stagger to my feet and weave my way to the bar, where I reach for another bottle of whiskey. A hand stops me... Not mine... Which means it must belong to that ass, Arpad. I follow the arm attached to it, to the face of my friend, who glowers at me. "What?" I groan. "Can't a man enjoy his liquor in peace, at least?"

He snatches the bottle from me. I reach for another. He pushes that out of my reach and I stumble around the bar toward the bottles placed against the wall.

"Don't do it," he snaps.

I raise my middle finger in the air. "I just did it."

I hear him move; the hair on the nape of my neck rises. I know he's coming for me, and I turn, but hey, guess what? All the liquor I drank has, in fact, slowed down my reflexes. Imagine that? He grabs me by my shoulder and begins to haul me toward the door of the study. "What the fuck man?" I protest, "What the hell are you up to?"

"Thank me for the fact that I still care enough to come here and haul your ass away from the path of self-destruction you are on."

He shoulders open the door and marches me down the hallway.

"So, what's new?" I laugh. "It's what I do best. Destroy everything good that ever comes into my life."

"What the hell, Savage?" He releases me so quickly that I stumble, then right myself.

"Hey, watch it," I mumble.

"No, you watch it," he yells.

My ears begin to ring. "Pipe down, man," I mutter. "If you make too much noise, you'll wake up Ri—" Shit. I flatten my lips.

"Riley?" His features take on a stricken look. "Damian... What are you talking about? Riley's gone. Your daughter's dead, Damian."

Of course, I know that, and yet hearing it from his mouth, makes it seem all final and real and I know then that she is never coming back. She's never going to be with me again. She's gone, and so is my love, my Flower, my Julia. She's gone, and it's my fault.

I straighten, "Thanks for letting me know." I brush down the front of my sweatshirt. "You can leave now."

"Damian, don't do this. Let's talk, at least."

"Since when do you believe in talking, huh?" I chuckle. "Thought you preferred to speak with your fists?"

"You're right." He widens his stance. "Let's take this outside, shall we?"

"Fuck that." I raise my fists, throw the first punch. He ducks. I see two of him and I think, maybe, I managed to brush the side of his face... At least, I think I did, then he plants his fist in my side and pain slices through me. I yell, "What the fuck!"

He throws another punch. I swerve, bury my fist in his stomach. He groans, doubles over. I grab his shoulders, double my knee up and into his chin, but he's too fast. He twists his shoulders, breaks free, grabs me around the waist and throws me over his shoulder. I land on my back, my head connects with the floor, and sparks explode behind my eyes. White noise thuds in my ears.

I open my eyes and see her. Green eyes, lush pink lips, that beautiful thick hair of hers flowing down toward me. "Damian?" She smiles, "What are you doing down there?"

"What are you doing here?" I ask.

"I belong here." She laughs. "And you belong with me." She holds out her hand. I take it.

"I love you, Damian," she whispers.

"Damian?" Hard fingers grip mine. "Damian, you with me, buddy?"

I snap my eyes open to find Arpad looming over me.

"Where did she go?" I frown.

"Who?" He hauls me to my feet.

My guts churn and my belly twists. "I think I'm gonna be sick."

Fifteen minutes later, I accept the cup of coffee Arpad hands me. I take a sip and wince when the liquid burns my lip. I deserve it, of course. That, and every punch that Arpad got in. Not that I'll ever admit that to the bastard.

"Why the fuck did you come by anyway?" I mutter.

"The cops had a breakthrough with the intruder." He tilts his head.

"Oh?"

He nods, "Turns out..." He stares at me, "You ready for this?"

My heart begins to beat faster. "What is it?" I set my jaw.

"Go on; I can take it."

"He confessed to running Stella's car off the bridge."

"What?" The breath rushes out of me and I clutch the edge of the table as if it's the only thing tethering me to this world. "He caused the accident that killed—" I can't bring myself to complete the statement.

"Seems that way." He reaches over to grip my shoulder, "Sorry buddy, I know it's a lot to take in."

I dig my fingers in my hair and pull, "And all along, I've been thinking it was my fault. That I should have stopped her from leaving after we fought. I thought if I had asked her to stay a while longer, somehow the accident would have been averted." I lower my hands to my lap, suddenly exhausted. "It wasn't me." I stare at him. "But why the hell would he do that? Why would he kill my daughter? My little girl..." "Why?" My voice cracks and I curl my fingers into fists.

Arpad shifts uncomfortably. "I caught up with the other guys, and we think—" He straightens, looks me in the eye, "It's a possibility—nothing's confirmed—but we believe there's a good chance that—"

"The Mafia are involved," I finish for him.

He nods.

"Motherfucker." I slam my fist into the table and the coffee slips over the sides of our mugs. "We need to do something about this. Need to track down whoever is the brains behind this. The asspricks turned our lives upside down with the incident and now... This?" I crack my neck. "The day I get my hands on whoever is behind this," I take a deep breath then let it out, "I am going to kill the bastard."

He smiles grimly, "Get in line. At any rate, the shooter's going down for a long time for what he did."

"And the link to the Mafia? Are the police aware of it?"

He shakes his head. "Our pact on that stays in place. We keep the cops out of it and go after the Mafia ourselves. I've taken it on myself to spearhead the efforts, and by the way, you're welcome."

"For what?" I crack my knuckles, "It's about time you pulled your weight on this."

He gapes at me, "Seriously? After everything I've done for you, that's all you have to say?"

I laugh. "What else do you want me to do, kiss your feet?"

"A thanks about now would not be remiss, you wanker." He stares at me, then takes a sip of his own coffee. "At least, I can't fault your taste in this stuff." He swallows another mouthful. "You still buying that fancy Colombian coffee?"

"Nope." I stare at him. "This one's Black Ivory. You know, the coffee they make from the beans that Thai elephants shit out?"

He gags, "What the fuck?" He slaps the cup on the island. "You're shitting me."

"That was the elephant shitting, actually," I retort.

He stares at me. I hold his gaze for a full second before I chuckle.

"Asshole," he growls. "Apparently, your sense of humor is still intact." He reaches for his cup of coffee, then thinks better of it. "Now that you've had your fun and games, ol' chap—"

"My fun and games, is it?" I growl. "You're the one who came into my house and proceeded to rough me up." I touch my nose—which had, thankfully, stopped bleeding after the shower and after the icepack I'd applied to it—and wince.

"Someone had to do it." He chuckles.

"No doubt, you were the first in line," I grumble. "What about the rest of the Seven?"

"What about them?" He shrugs, "They know the two of us have a special bond, considering—"

"Considering when we were kidnapped the bastards had us beat the shit out of each other on every possible occasion, until only one of us was left standing? Yeah." I roll my shoulders. "We survived it, though."

"Did we?" He stares across the table at me. "Sometimes I wonder how we would have turned out if we hadn't been kidnapped."

"And I wonder how it would have been if Riley hadn't died."

He starts, then takes in my features.

"I know... Hell, we all know how tough it's been for you since you lost your daughter, but that's no excuse for what you did to Julia."

I squeeze my eyes shut.

"You need to get your shit together and make it up to her."

"Don't tell me what I have to do to get my woman back," I snap.

"Someone has to. Considering you've got the attention of the entire media. For a man who's not even on social media, you sure manage to grab the headlines."

"Might have something to do with the fact that I recounted an annulment instead of a tête-à-tête with my newly-married bride at the much-delayed press conference that finally took place at the hospital." Yeah, I'd done that.

He laughs. "You have balls. I'll give you that. You faced them, told them the truth, misguided as it was."

"Fuckers wanted a scandal. They got it." I raise my shoulders. Fuck, if I care what the media wrote about me... But since I have their attention... I have them primed for what is going to come next. I am going to use them to get back the one thing that matters to me the most.

"Give Karina my thanks for helping out with the cops." I nod at him.

"Tell her yourself." His jaw hardens.

"Oh?" I take in his features. "What happened? You two not talking?"

"There's nothing between us," he mutters.

"That's not what I asked."

He scowls. "That's all I'm going to say on the matter."

"Hmm." Whatever there is between the two of them, it is going to turn out to be bloody entertaining to watch as it plays out. Meanwhile, I have my own shit to sort out. Namely, one gorgeous, green-eyed, dark-haired, curvy sprite to whom I have a lot to make up. I place my cup on the island, then walk past him toward the door.

"Hey," Arpad calls out, "what are you going to do now?"

"Something I should have done a long time ago."

46

Julia

I drag the needle across the surface of the clay, smoothing away some of the excess material. My hair falls over my face and I shove it out of the way. I need to get this done if it's the last thing I do. After that horrible debacle of a wedding that shouldn't have been. Thankfully, I don't have a ring from it to remember him by. Of course, he hadn't gotten a ring. Why would he? The biggest douchebag rock star in the world, and I had to fall for him. On the other hand, I have nothing to remember him by. Which is good, right? It means I can go on with my life.

Luckily, the press hadn't known who I was. They'd tried to come sniffing around after the press conference Damian had held at the hospital—or so Isla and Karina had informed me. Karina had made sure I had the maximum security possible, and even then, a journalist had been caught snooping in the corridor outside my room. She'd made sure to hustle him away, then helped me disguise myself and leave the hospital. I'd wanted to go to my apartment, but she'd told me it wouldn't be safe. The press had gotten wind of it and had parked outside. So, I'd agreed to return to Damian's apartment at The Shard. Only for the time-being, and only until this entire sordid scandal blows itself out. Oh, and this was only after she'd confirmed to me that the camera in the flat—yeah, the one in the mirror, as I had suspected—had been disabled.

As for the scandal involving me and Damian, the articles which mentioned my name were taken down almost as soon as they went up. That must have cost him a fortune... Good... I hope it cost him a lot more than the money he'd offered to pay me when we'd first met. The later articles in the media don't mention my name.

Of course, the guests and the press who'd been invited to the wedding know who I am. They know it's me that the media is talking about every time there's mention of 'the woman' Damian had married and broken up with in the space of a few hours. A few very intense hours, during which time, he'd vowed to take care of me, to cherish me, protect me, to love me...

He loves me. He'd confessed that right before he'd walked out. And I know it's true. That ass. My fingers tremble, as the sculpting needle slips from my hand, marking the surface of the likeness I've been working on. Argh! I can't do anything right, can I? I slap the sculpting tool down on the work-surface, then glance around the space. I am in Damian's apartment, surrounded by the memory of how he'd fucked me, working on his bust, and I think I am going to get over him here? Ha! Fat chance. I've set myself up for failure, as always. I cover the piece I am working on.

I head to the bathroom to wash my hands. Then grab my purse, and coat, change into my sneakers, and march out of the apartment. I leave the building and keep going. I need to simply get away from everything that reminds me of him... Need to move out as soon as possible. Need to... Forget how he kissed me, touched me, shared his secrets with me... Told me how he'd loved his daughter... Allowed me a glimpse of how he mourns for her.

Jesus, the man had taken the passing of his daughter to heart when he hadn't been fully over being kidnapped as a child himself. Still, none of that forgives what he did to me. It doesn't. So why the hell am I still thinking of him?

I stalk past the homeless man on the sidewalk who calls out to me. "Hello there, young lady."

"Hello," I mumble back.

"I have something for you."

"Not interested," I snap.

"I promise, it's something you need to see."

"I promise it's not anything I need in my life right now."

"It's from Damian."

"Eh." My feet skid on the pavement, I stumble forward, manage to steady myself, then turn around. "What did you say?"

"It's Damian." He holds out his phone to me. "You should see this."

I stomp back, grab the phone—guess homeless people do own phones, right? I'm not being judgmental or anything—open my mouth to ask, but he tips his head to the screen. "Don't miss it," he says.

I glance down, catch a glimpse of Damian on the feed of his social media account, huh? When did he reactivate that? He's in what I recognize as his greenhouse. I peer at the screen, taking in the shrubs, the flowers...the yellow daffodils that grow in profusion from the pots, the hanging urns, the trough in the background. It's early in the year for them, so how did he manage to coax them to blossom from almost every available surface?

He stares into the screen and I swear it's as if he's glancing straight at me, into my eyes, my soul.

"This is for you, Riley." He strums his guitar, then begins to sing.

Would you know me
If I saw you from afar?
Would it be the same
If you held my hand again?

I must stay on
And live as if it counts,
Even though nothing matters
Now that you are gone.

For I won't see you run across a field,
Grow up to become a teen,
Smile up at me
As I kiss you goodnight.

I'll move forward,
Through seconds, minutes, days...
'Cause I know I just can't stay
Hidden behind the veil.

Time. Will it heal?
Can it conceal?
Will it allow me to embrace
What you meant to me?

Can I ever forgive myself
For not knowing you better?

He stops playing, stares into the camera. "My name is Damian Savage, and I am a failed rock star. I was also once a father." He swallows, "I lost my daughter, Riley, in a car crash that also killed her mother."

I gasp. Oh, my God, he's sharing his story with the entire world.

"That was a year ago." The tendons of his throat flex. "I have mourned her since. I opted to stay in my grief, unable to let go of her memories and move on. I was on a path to self-implosion until an angel crossed my path."

I clap my palm to my mouth. Oh, wow, what is he saying? What is he doing?

His lips kick up, "She was the most incredible thing that had happened to me in a long time. One look at her and I was gone. I knew she was it for me. The chance to crawl out of the darkness I had spent so long in." He pauses, "But you know me." He raises his arm. "Asshole that I am, I fucked it up." He grips the neck of his guitar. "I hurt her. I allowed my flower to wither without keeping up my promise to protect her from the elements. I failed her."

A ball of emotions chokes my throat.

"I walked away from her. I broke her heart. I failed myself." His jaw tics. "You told me, Flower, that I was a coward, that I could not face up to the reality of my emotions." He draws in a breath, "You're right." He leans forward, the skin around his eyes stretching. "This is me saying that you were absolutely, 100% accurate. About everything." He chuckles. "I suck, babe. I am not worthy of your attention. Not at all... But if you're listening to this, and I hope you are... And if anything in what I said strikes a chord, then come to me." He seems to choke, "I'll be waiting." He swallows. "I love you."

The camera switches off.

I stare at the blank screen. "How dare he?" I scowl. "How dare he do this?"

"Impressive, huh?" The homeless man crows, "A rock star laying out his heart like that on social media?"

"A gimmick. That's what it is," I rage.

"Is it?" He frowns, "The man sounded sincere."

"He's a bloody liar," I growl. "How dare he...he do this?"

"Maybe he wants you back?" The homeless man ventures.

"The bastard left me..." I begin to pace, "and now... Now... He dares go on record, in front of everyone and..."

"Profess his love?"

"Exactly." I grip the phone in my hand. "That...that conniving, full-of-himself, ready to spot a chance to promote himself—"

"Hold on." The homeless man blinks. "It took courage to do that. Maybe he wanted you to know he meant it and this was his way of showing how serious he was?"

"By professing to love me on social media?"

"Considering he hasn't been on social media in over a year, is there a better way he could have shown how important you are to him?"

"He could have called me."

"Would you have taken the call?"

"N...no." I stare down at my shoes. "But d...did you hear him?"

"I did," he nods, "I think he meant every word."

"He asked me to come to him..."

"Right before he said he loves you."

"I never doubted that," I growl.

"So then?" He stares at me.

"So what?"

"What are you still doing here?" He raises an eyebrow.

"Why the hell should I go to him? He should come to me... That... That ass."

"Aha," he exclaims.

"What's that 'aha' for?" I say suspiciously. "I don't like the sound of that 'aha' at all."

"So, you have as much of an ego as him, huh?"

"Of course, not," I counter. "I mean, I do... But not as much as him."

"So, you're going to let your ego get in the way?" He raises an eyebrow, "Everything you want is right there, and you're going to do a 'Damian' and flounce off?"

"He wouldn't flounce," I point out. "And you don't play fair."

"Ha," he chortles, "knew it. I knew you were a better woman than that... douchebag of a rock star."

"Hey" I snap, "Don't call him a douche."

His eyes twinkle.

I flush. "Fine, you've made your point."

"Go on, then." He nods, "Go get your man."

I turn to leave, and he calls out, "My phone."

"Oops! Sorry." I pivot, hand the phone over, then begin to run. Hold on... The phone... It was a top-of-the-line, latest model iPhone. A homeless man couldn't afford that, could he? I stop, turn around and find... He's gone? Hell. I glance around to find he's hurrying up the street. And why the hell had I spilled my guts to a stranger? Why had it been so easy to talk to him? Why the hell had he felt so familiar? And how the hell had he known that Damian had been talking about me, huh?

"Hey," I call out, "who are you?"

He pauses and looks back. "No-one of consequence."

"I don't believe that," I shout back.

"You have a date with a rock star. Don't be late," he admonishes, then turns and continues to walk away.

"Weird." I shake my head, then spot a cab. "Taxi," I hail the driver, who pulls up to the curb. I grab the handle, open the door and slide in. "How fast can you drive?"

Damian

I place my guitar on the settee that I had pulled into the greenhouse with Arpad's help. Before leaving, he'd also helped me arrange the daffodils about the place in such a way that they couldn't be missed. He'd offered to help shoot the video but I'd refused. Somehow it hadn't felt right having anyone else in this space with me as I prepared for the most important performance of my life. Now it is done; the video is out there. My song, that I'd been working on for the past few days—the one I had started writing, not quite sure what it was about... I still don't dare pull apart what the words mean. Being with Julia has given me the courage to push forward, to trust my instincts again. If I could make her come, if I could coax her to fall apart so beautifully under my fingers, then I can trust myself to pour what I feel into words... I can trust the world to understand what I mean... And if they don't... If they hate it... Well, then... I've done my best. I've given myself in the truest way an artist can do, and the rest... Well, it is out of my hands anyway.

I rise to my feet and begin to pace... It has only been ten minutes since the video went live; my phone had begun to buzz almost immediately. No doubt, the media is reaching out.

It looks like I'll need to reach out to Summer and take her help in managing my PR, after all. After years of turning my back on everything career related, while pretending to go on as if I weren't self-sabotaging myself, guess it's time to face the music after all—pun intended.

I glance at the feed of the security camera pointed at my gate. Where is she? Why hasn't she come yet? A car drives up to the gate, an unknown car, and a man—a reporter?—gets out. I watch as the guards that Karina posted at my gates ask him to leave. At least, I won't be bothered here. I'd known once the video went live that the press would be all over me. It's why I'd ensured there was extra security. It's also why this is the safest place for me to be now... And I had asked her to come—I stiffen.

I had asked her to come to me. After I'd walked out on her, I'd still demanded that she return, that she take the initiative. Shit, I really am a complete prick. A wanker of the first order. Why the hell should I expect her to come? Am I hiding again, in my fortress, trying to avoid the real world? No, that's not it. I had gone live to the world for the first time... Hell, I had set up my social media profiles again, just for that. I am going to face the fallout from this, one way or the other...so. No, it's not...that...but clearly, I hadn't been thinking right... I have to make amends for what I did. I have to go to her. I stalk out of the greenhouse to the garage, where I climb onto my motorcycle. Kicking it to life, I gun it down the driveway, through the space between the still-opening gates. I spot one of the security guards racing for his car to follow me as I drive past the cars pulling up. More media, no doubt. I race toward Julia.

Half an hour later, I pull into the parking garage of The Shard. I park my bike, wrench my helmet from my head, and race for the elevators, bursting into the apartment a few minutes later. Even before I cross the floor of the living room, I know it's empty. "Fuck!"

I walk over to the bedroom, check the closets; they're empty. I check the bathroom—there is no sign of her toiletries. I stalk over to the terrace by the pool—also empty. I walk back to the living room, glance about the space. "Fuck, fuck, fuck."

I missed her. Again. I should have come earlier. Should have not walked out on her at the hospital. Should have held her close and never let go, and now... It is too late. "F-u-c-k!" I fling my helmet on the floor, where it bounces once before rolling to the side. I tear off my gloves, then dig my fingers in my hair and tug; pain lances across my scalp. My knuckles hurt and my face still hurts from the earlier altercation with Arpad. My chest hurts.

I stare about the room, wanting, needing, something to vent my anger on. I stalk toward her worktable, where she's covered something with a burlap cloth and pull it off.

"What the—?" I stare at the likeness of myself.

I'd known that she was working on it... and while it is me... There's no mistaking those familiar features, the hair, the mouth, those ears... Yet, it is not. I look larger than life. A dominant male, one with intent writ in every nook and crevasse on his face, and yet, those eyes... There's something in them I don't see often. Something I don't allow myself to feel...

Hope. A light in the darkness, a simple optimism that things will get better, there will be a tomorrow and things are always meant to be as they are now. I can't take my gaze off of the sculpture, which she created from memory, and her bare fingers.

I gulp. A hot sensation stabs at my chest. Jesus, I've been such a fucking fool. A complete and utter wanker. I reach out a finger to touch the sculpture when I hear her voice.

"It's not that great, I know... I've been working on it. I'm just not that good yet—" I turn on her and she stops.

"You're right; it's not great." I stare at her and she tips her chin up.

"I... I hope you don't mind that I worked on it." She swallows. "I did ask you to pose but then... Things happened and—"

"I do mind," I snap.

She freezes. "I didn't realize it was such a big deal to you that I captured your likeness."

"It is though." I stalk toward her, and she takes a step back. "It's a very, very big deal that you spent your time molding a piece of lifeless clay into my features."

"Fine," she says stiffly, "I'll throw it away."

"You will not," I growl.

"No?" She scowls. "You're confusing me now."

"Good," I come to a stop in front of her, "because you've confused me from the moment I set eyes on you."

She draws in a breath then surveys my features. "Why are you here, Damian?"

"Why do you think?"

She walks past me, heads for the bust, "I... I don't know." She drops her backpack on the ground next to her, shrugs out of her coat and flings it aside. "Either way, I am done here."

"Are you now?"

She nods. "You made it very clear to me in the hospital that you didn't want anything to do with me."

"Did you see the video that I recorded?" I glare at her.

"What if I did?" Ignoring the bust, she walks over to the potter's wheel that I had set up for her, in my apartment, where she still is. She flips the switch so it begins to turn, then grabs a lump of clay and places it in the center of the wheel.

"You have nothing to say about it?" I frown.

"It was a beautiful song, if that's what you want to know. The lyrics made me cry. It brought out all of your pent-up grief over Riley in a way that is deeply moving," she replies, her tone sincere. "I think it's your best work so far."

"Thanks to you," I reply. "You showed me how to dig deep inside and channel my emotions into words. If it hadn't been for you, I couldn't have written that."

Her shoulders freeze. She leans forward, dips her fingers into the bowl of water and cups it around the clay. The thrum of the wheel fills the space; the slurp of her flesh against the clay reaches me. I prowl over to her, watch over her shoulder as she bends in concentration, her gaze focused on the beauty taking shape under her fingertips. She scoops up some water, dribbles it on the clay again.

I reach past her, dip my fingers in the bowl of water, then splash it in her face.

"Hey," she protests, "don't do that."

I cup more water in my palm, hold it over her hair. It drips down her face, splatters on her shirt, molding the fabric to the curve of her breasts.

"What the—" She glances down at herself, then flicks her hand and clay splatters across the front of my jacket.

"Stop that," I admonish her; just as the clay instantly droops in the center of the wheel.

"Look what you did now!" she cries.

"Hmm." I glance down at the wheel, then back at her, "Maybe I should rectify it?"

"What do you mean?"

"Scoot forward."

"What?"

"Do it," I order.

She scowls, then moves closer to the worktable.

I shrug off my jacket and toss it aside, then swing my leg over the seat.

Julia

He fits his big body behind mine in that narrow seat and the heat of his body instantly envelops me. His powerful thighs bracket me from either side. He has to bend his knees to fit into the space, and the result is that he squeezes me even tighter in the 'V' between his legs.

"Wh...what are you doing?" I gulp.

"Nothing." He leans forward and the planes of his chest mold against my back and the hardness at his crotch throbs against my hips. I'm instantly wet.

"Damian," I protest, "I...need to continue with my—"

His warm breath whispers against my ear and I shudder.

"Continue with your—?" he prompts.

"With, uh—" I glance down at the now-shapeless piece of clay. What was I going to do? Oh, yeah, I was going to pretend to work on my next piece, in the hope that he'd leave, but clearly, he's not. "With my work," I respond.

"You go right ahead, Flower," he murmurs, "I am going to be an innocent spectator."

"Innocent, my ass." I swipe up the clay, mash it up, then smack down the ball as close to the center of the wheel's base as I can. With the weight of my body acting as a brace, I begin to mold the clay.

He watches from over my shoulder for a few seconds, then reaches out to align his arms over mine. The skin of the insides of his arms slides over mine; I shiver. He wraps his big palms over each of mine, that are wrapped around the clay. A ripple of sensations bursts from the contact and travels up my arm. My nipples harden; my inner thighs flex. "Damian," I whisper.

"When you say my name like that," he swallows, "I'd do anything for you. I'd tear the world down to protect you.... I'll never forgive myself for putting you in a position where someone could hurt you."

The intensity of his tone whispers across my nerve endings. All of my senses seem to pop at once. "That wasn't your fault," I reply.

"If I hadn't agreed to marry you, if I hadn't decided to turn the entire ceremony into a media circus, you wouldn't have been shot."

"It was barely a scratch." I can't stop the faint smile from curving my lips. There—this is the Damian I've come to know. The sensitive, caring man under all that bluster he wears for the outside world. The part of himself that he's revealed to me over and over again, only to retreat. "Besides, you forget something."

"What's that?" He crowds me further, if that were possible, so his front is plastered to me from chest to crotch, his thighs molded to mine, his arms and fingers flattened to mine...

I am surrounded by him, drowning in that edgy masculine scent of his. My mouth waters, and I swear, if I turn my head and offer him my lips, he'll take them at once... But not yet. First, I need to tell him something. "You didn't have a choice," I declare.

I sense him scowl. "About what?" he asks.

"I wouldn't have taken no for an answer," I retort.

The muscles of his thighs flex, his shoulders inch forward and his entire body seems to curve around me, protectively, half-threateningly... In that way that is overpowering and dominant and oh-so sexy.

"Is that right?" he purrs.

I nod. "I would have married you, one way or another."

There's silence, filled only with the smooth clatter of the wheel.

Then he laughs. A glorious, easy, mirth-filled laugh that rolls across my body, and arrows straight to my core.

"I have no doubt." He places his chin on top of my head. "I knew you were going to be trouble. I just hadn't realized how persistent you were going to turn out to be."

"Someone had to be," I mutter, "considering you refused to acknowledge what was there right in front of you all this time."

He places his mouth close to my ear, "And what was that?"

"That you can't live without me."

"Oh?"

"That you need me."

"Hmm."

"That you're the only one for me."

His fingers squeeze mine and the clay tumbles over again. "Now look what you've done," I huff. "I'll have to start all over again."

"Will you let me do the same?"

I freeze, stare at the shapeless lump of clay on the wheel that swirls in front of me. "What do you mean?" I whisper.

"I mean, can we start over again, you and me?"

There it is. The words I wanted to hear, and it's a start, but I want more.

"When you said your wedding vows, did you mean them?"

"You know I did." He reaches past me and throws the switch that shuts down the momentum of the wheel.

In the silence that descends, I can hear my heartbeat. Or is that his? "And yet, you walked away from me. You left me when I needed you most."

"I had to," he insists. "Don't you see? If I had let you stay, I would have only hurt you more. The way I hurt my daughter. Hell, even the mother of my child, who I should have treated better."

My belly clenches and a burning sensation fills my chest. Shit, why am I jealous of a woman who is already dead?

"None of that was your fault."

He laughs, the sound hard. "My rational mind realizes that, but tell that to my heart, Flower. The thought of being without you, of living with the guilt of something happening to you is a powerful motivator. It makes me want to spirit you away somewhere, away from the eyes of the world, where nothing and no one can harm you."

I close my eyes; my pulse thuds at my temples. This man. Only he can string together words to form a sentence that punches me straight in the gut. I turn my face, so my lips are next to his. "Then do it," I say. "Hide me away where no one else can see me but you, no one else can touch me but you, no one else can make love to me but—"

He closes his lips over mine.

49

Damian

I'd raced to her with the intent of talking to her, making sure she knows how I feel, but one glance at her gorgeous features, a whiff of that delectable feminine scent of hers, a single touch of her skin, and I am a goner. I need to hold her close, kiss her lips, nibble my way down her body and lick my way up every single curve to reassure myself that she is still with me. I slide my tongue inside her mouth, suck on her essence and kiss her, drawing her breath into every part of me. The blood rushes to my groin, the pulse pounding in my balls. I cup her cheek, hold her in place as I kiss her. She moans low in her throat, strains against my chest. I fold my arms over hers and wrap them around her body, holding her immobile. She wriggles her hips, thrusting back and into the cradle of my hips. I can't stop the growl that rips from me. "Jesus, Flower, you're so damn responsive."

She arches her spine back, rolls her head into my shoulder. I release her arm, only to cup her breast and squeeze.

She whimpers and the sound goes straight to my head. I pinch her nipple through the wet cloth that clings to her curves and she cries out.

"Who does this belong to?" I ask.

"You, Damian," she mumbles.

I drag my hand down to cup the flesh between her legs. "Who does your pussy belong to, Flower?"

"You," she gasps. "Only you."

"You drive me crazy, you know that?" I growl.

She moans again, turns her head, reaches for my mouth with hers, but I pull back. I reach over, scoop up some of the slip and smear it across her chest, around her breasts, outlining her nipples. I survey the results, then nod. "Now that's my idea of a bust."

She glances down, then chuckles. "Not very artistic, but it'll do."

"I've been dying to do that since you first told me that you were a clay artist."

"So, I'm an artist now, huh?"

"You were always one to me," I say. "You were always more creative than me," I correct myself.

She turns around, takes in my features, "You don't mean that." She frowns. "Your songs, your words..."

"Are meaningless without you." I hold her gaze. "I began a band out of some twisted sense of rebelling against the world, and what it had done to me."

"The incident?" she ventures.

"I was older than the rest of the Seven, when we were kidnapped. Not as susceptible to the mind games, and physically, in better shape."

"That's why they made you fight?"

"For their pleasure." I stare out of the window. "Initially, they pitted me against Arpad. We had to fight until one or both of us lost consciousness. It became a game for the two of us, how to keep hitting each other, without hurting the other too much, but making it believable enough for our kidnappers to buy it. When they caught on, I took the blame for it."

"You?" She swallows.

"Arpad was much smaller than me at that time. No way, would he have survived whatever twisted plan they had in mind."

"What...what did they do next?" she whispers.

"They blindfolded me, took me to an underground fighting ring, where they pitted me against men stronger than me. I fought them, of course. I wouldn't back down. I wasn't going to die there, that much I knew."

"Then you were found?"

I nod. "The cops got a lead, tracked us down, sprung us, we went home, end of story."

"Or the beginning?"

I draw in a breath, glance down at her. "The rest of the Seven went through a lot more mind games than me. No wonder it warped them completely."

"But the experience changed you too..."

"Of course." I wipe my hand across my face, "I came out full of anger and with a taste for sparring, which you already know."

"But it hurt you in ways you didn't realize..." She presses her palm to my cheek and I turn into her touch.

"Not until much later. Apparently, the shock of what had happened to me manifested with another trigger."

"Riley," she replies.

"My daughter," I nod. "When I confirmed that Stella was pregnant with my child, it was a complete shock." I rub the back of my neck. "I wasn't ready for a family, or for a relationship with her, but I knew I had to do what was right. I wanted my daughter to have a stable home, but I knew I couldn't be around to provide it. So, I found an apartment for the two of them and I paid for whatever they might need so that Stella could take care of Riley."

"So, did you see Riley on weekends?" She tilts her head, "Or on certain days of the week, maybe?"

I shuffle my feet. "We didn't have a formal arrangement, as such. My career was just taking off. I spent more time away than at home. Whenever I was in town, I made it a point to see both of them, but with the schedule of tours I had, it became more and more infrequent." I rub the back of my neck. Bloody hell, I'd been such an ass. I could have gotten to know my daughter better; instead, I'd run from my responsibilities.

"Stella became increasingly frustrated. It wasn't enough for her that I provided all the material requirements for her and Riley."

"She wanted more?"

"Understandably," I reply. "I thought I had been clear from the beginning. I wasn't interested in a serious relationship with her, but I can see where she might have started to believe I might come around to the idea. She was the mother of my child, so we functioned as co-parents, but only insofar as I paid for everything and she took care of Riley."

She stares at me and I wince, "I know, I know." I rub the back of my neck, "I thought if I threw enough money at the problem it would suffice, that I could buy my way into my daughter's life." I raise my hands, "It was a mistake." One I have regretted every day since.

"We began fighting more. I barely saw Riley, even when I was in town, preferring to conform to my rock star image by carousing about town."

"I saw the headlines," she remarks.

I grimace. "It wasn't pretty. Then, after one particularly vicious argument, during which she told me exactly what she thought of my fathering skills, she took Riley and walked out. I think she had planned to leave Riley with me for the night, but I was such a jerk... She accused me of being insensitive. She told me that paying for everything wasn't enough. I needed to be more present in my daughter's life."

I press the heels of my palms to my eyes.

"She threatened to take Riley and leave me. Told me I probably wouldn't even notice. The worst thing is, she was probably right. I was furious. I knew she was upset and I shouldn't have let her drive. But I was so angry." I squeeze my eyes shut. The ball of hurt in my chest grows bigger, wider, until it seems to consume all of me and I shudder. Tears prick the backs of my eyes. "I should have stopped her. I should have been the father Riley needed me to be. Instead, on her sixth birthday, I stood over a rock with her name engraved on it, and cried."

She makes a sound deep in her throat. "Oh, Damian." She wraps her arms around my neck and pulls me close until our lips meet. She kisses my mouth, my cheeks, reaches up to kiss me across my closed eyelids.

"The memories of those we love don't fade; they become a part of us. They're imprinted in our cells, in everything we do, and as time passes, everything you do, they do with you," she whispers against my skin. "You did the best you could at the time; it does no good to look at the past and berate yourself. You need to forgive yourself for what happened, Damian."

"I'm sorry I tried to make our relationship transactional, sorry I tried to turn what was between us into a business arrangement. Can you ever forgive me for that, Flower?"

"Shh!" She presses her fingers across my lips, "It's forgiven. You are a good man Damian, and you tried your best to be a good father. We can only work in the moment with the information we have. The rest is not really in our hands, is it?" She cups my cheek, "Behind that alphasolic persona is a sensitive man who feels deeply, who cares a lot about those in his life. It's what makes you the kind of artiste whose words resonate with millions. Don't ever lose that, Damian."

I glance down into her serious green eyes, "When did you become so wise?"

"Just the life I've lived, I guess." She laughs lightly. "I ran away to broaden my horizons, and came back with the realization that everything I needed was right here." She takes my hand and places it over her heart, "Know what I mean?"

"I do." I tuck a strand of hair behind her ear. "Will you ever forgive me, for everything I put you through?"

"On one condition." Her lips kick up. "Make love to me."

50

Julia

His gaze intensifies. He lowers his head and kisses me—softly, sweetly, then with increasing urgency. The world tilts and I open my eyes to find he's on his feet. He lifts me up, then walks inside to the bedroom. He lowers me to my feet in front of the bed, then whips off his T-shirt.

I rake my gaze down his ripped eight-pack and gasp. "What's that?"

His lips quirk, "What do you think it is?"

I close the distance to him, then run my fingers across the cursive tattooed over his heart.

The font is the same as the one he'd used to ink Riley's name on his forearm.

"You inked my name on your chest?" I finally ask.

"I got it before the wedding and never got to show it to you. Every time I saw it, it only made me feel worse about walking out on you the way I did."

"Oh." My heart flips in my chest.

"I didn't realize what I was going to do, not until I'd walked into the tattoo parlor and found myself under the needle. I knew then, what I wanted inked into my skin. I hadn't even told you how I felt yet, but somehow, it felt right, you get me?" He tilts his head, "I had to do something to show you that you are part of me. Then," he squeezes his eyes shut, "I walked out on you at the hospital." The tendons of his throat move as he swallows. "When I realized what a fool I'd been, how I'd hurt you, even that gesture didn't seem enough."

"That's why you declared your feelings on social media?" I raise my gaze to his.

He cracks open his eyelids and that fiery blue gaze of his fills my line of sight. "I had to do something to make up for the anguish I caused you."

"What you did," I swallow, "it was incredibly brave of you. And moving... No one's ever done something like that for me," I glance back down at my name written across his chest, "or like this."

"And no one else ever will."

I lean up on tip-toe and kiss him. "You're crazy, you know that?"

"Crazy in love with you." He deepens the kiss, then bends his knees and grips the backs of my thighs. I climb him, wrap my legs around him, throw my arms around his shoulders and open my mouth to him.

He reaches the bed, lowers me onto the mattress then follows me down and covers my body with his. I cling to him, dig my heels into his back, drag my fingers down his thick neck.

He leans back, then reaches between us to grip the lapels of my shirt. He rips it and I gasp.

"Old habits." His lips kick up. "I'd apologize for it, but I happen to know that it turns you on."

I chuckle, "So bloody cocky! Even when you're apologizing to me, you're full of yourself."

"And you love it." He lowers his head and kisses me deeply.

I reach down between us, unzip his pants. "Take them off," I demand, "I want to have you naked on me."

He raises one eyebrow, but complies.

I release him long enough for him to straighten. He toes off his boots, then shoves down his jeans and his boxer briefs. He stands still, allowing me to appreciate the full expanse of his chest, his narrow abdomen, the thickness of his cock that juts up against his lower belly, those powerful thighs, peppered with hair, the thick calves, and those beautiful feet that move toward me as he takes a step forward. He reaches down, pulls off my sneakers and socks, then unzips my jeans and pulls them off. I pull off the remains of my shirt and toss it away then lie back as he looks his fill. He rakes his gaze down my breasts, to the hollow between my legs. His nostrils flare. He curls his fingers around his thick shaft and pumps it once. The piercing glints against the almost-purple flesh. Moisture glistens at the tip and an answering dampness pools between my thighs. I part my legs, hold out my arms. "Come to me, baby, please."

He swoops down, covers my body with his. Oh, that solid weight of his. I've missed it. I draw in a breath and my senses explode with his scent. My core clenches and I can't stop the groan that bleeds from my lips. He pushes up on his elbow, reaches between us to grip himself, and positions his dick against my entrance. He peers into my face, holds my gaze. "I love you," he whispers, then pistons his hips forward, impaling me.

A jolt runs up my spine as the width of his hips forces me to widen my stance even more. "Ohmygod," I gasp, "Damian."

He grips the back of my thigh, loops my knee over his arm, and folds my leg up and to the side.

The new position allows him to slide in even deeper, until he bottoms out against my pelvic bone. Ripples of heat, sensations of pleasure, coil in my core and I swear more moisture fills my channel.

"I can't," he says through clenched teeth, "can't hold on Flower. You're too tight, too much."

I take in the gleam of sweat on his forehead, the color that smears his cheeks, the tendons of his throat that strain, as he holds himself immobile.

I flex my inner muscles around him and a growl rumbles up his chest. "Julia," he warns, "if you do that again, I—"

I clench around his cock and a shudder grips him. His shoulder muscles bunch and his lips twist, "I am going to fuck you now, babe." He pulls out, then thrusts forward with such force that my entire body moves up the bed. He plunges into me again and again, and the bed slams into the wall.

"Damian." I lock my arms around him, strain against his massive chest, as he pounds into me.

He lowers his forehead to mine, stares into my eyes. "Come with me," he commands as he buries himself inside me with a powerful thrust that sends a jolt of pleasure twisting up my spine. I throw my head back, tip my chin up and can't stop the scream that boils up. He closes his mouth over mine, absorbs it as I shatter completely.

He pumps into me again and again. His muscles tense, his shoulders bunch under my arms, then with a hoarse cry, he empties himself inside of me. His climax seems to go on and on, as my body trembles in the aftermath of my own orgasm. I hold him close as he buries his face in the crook of my neck. His big body covers mine as his muscles twitch with the aftershocks.

Finally, he flips onto his back, and takes me with him so I am positioned on his chest.

I press my cheek into the hard planes, count the beats of his thundering heart, as he folds his arms about me, enclosing me in his heat.

"Thank you," he whispers, and twines his fingers with mine.

"For what?" I turn to stare up at his face. This view... I'll never get used to it.

"For being yourself," he replies. "For putting up with me. For taking me back."

I chuckle. "OMG, the alphahole being this polite?" I shake my head, "I bet it's going to be sunny today."

As if in response, sunlight slants in through the windows and lights up the space with a bright yellow glow.

"The bust?" he asks after some time has passed. "I want it."

"It's terrible," I tell him. "I can do better than that."

"It's perfect." He smirks, "You didn't think I was going to allow you to throw away my likeness, did you?"

I slap his shoulder.

"No, seriously." He opens one eye. "You cut through all of the macho bullshit and revealed a part of me that I have never acknowledged."

"It's your strength," I say quietly, "that you feel things so deeply. It's what makes your work so different."

"Only as long as you are with me." He cups my cheek, "Say you'll be by my side, wife?"

"Wife?" I blink. "The marriage?"

"I didn't annul it." He swallows.

"You didn't?" I sit up. "But the headlines?" I ask.

"All speculation. You know how the journalists are." He pulls me back to his chest.

"And you encouraged the conjecture?"

"I didn't do anything to stop it. I was too busy beating myself up for not being able to protect you."

"But you told me..." I frown.

He shakes his head.

"But—"

He presses his finger to my lips, "I tried... God help me, I truly wanted to, but I couldn't bring myself to do it." His tone dips. "You belong to me, and while logic told me that I had to let you go, my heart... My heart insisted I shouldn't." He frames my face, and gazes into my eyes. "My soul was already yours. You're my muse, Flower. You are inside of me, imprinted in my every cell, you are the reason for my existence."

Warmth fills my chest. I stare up, knowing that he's speaking the truth, that he's never been this open, this completely bare as he is in this moment.

"I belong to you and there is no way I could knowingly sever the bond between us." His lips kick up in a smile that illuminates his features. "Besides, you don't think I'd let you go, not after I have you where I want you, do you?"

"And where is that?"

"By my side; always mine."

CHAPTER 51

Epilogue

Julia

*For Riley Alice Savage who loved this park
Forever in my heart*

"It's beautiful." I glance from the epitaph on the bench in Waterlow Park to the stern profile of the man at my side. Damian stares down at the bench, his features reflecting complete focus. His gaze is trained on the bench, yet his eyes are unfocused. Is he recalling her as he last saw her, the day her mother took Riley from him and left? Or is he remembering the happier times when he read to her, played with her in this park, watched movies with her? He's told me that those were the best times they had together as father and daughter, when he'd put her to bed and read to her.

"She was beautiful." He exhales, then turns to me, "You're beautiful." His lips tip up. "Riley will always be with me." He wipes the tear that slides down my cheek, "But you Flower, you are my present and my future."

"Oh, Damian." I rise up to my tip-toes and press my lips to his throat. I wrap my arms around his neck, bury my face in his chest. His heartbeats mirror mine as he folds me in his arms. He kisses the top of my head. "I mean it Julia. I am never letting you go."

I tip my chin up, peer into his gaze. "There's nowhere else I'd rather be than right here by your side."

He presses his lips to my forehead, "I love you Julia Child Andrews." He peruses my features, an intent look in his eyes.

My heart begins to race and my pulse rate ratchets up.

He releases me, only to slide his hand into his pocket. Then he bends his knee into the ground, holds up a ring, "Be mine."

"Oh." Sensations course through my veins and my stomach trembles. I glance down at the platinum ring with the emerald in the center, surrounded by tiny pink stones. It is simple, joyous, gorgeous, and so utterly charming and so...so perfect.

He holds out his palm and I place my hand in his. He slips the ring onto my finger. "The green is for your eyes, the pink..." he swallows, "the pink is for—"

"Riley," I whisper.

He nods. "She'd have loved to meet you. She'd have loved you."

"I would have loved her. And I love you, Damian." I swallow the ball of emotions in my throat. "You think she'd have approved of us?"

He rises to his feet and pulls me to him. "She'd have enjoyed getting to know you better." He presses another kiss to the top of my head. More tears prick the backs of my eyes. Oh, hell, the last thing I want to do is to blubber. I wind my arms around his lean waist and press myself closer.

We stay that way for a few seconds...maybe minutes. Around us, the wind whistles through the leaves. The screams of boys playing ball reach us, then the barking of a dog, which fades away. Silence a beat, another.

"I'm sorry I didn't tell you about her earlier," he says. The vibrations of his deep voice, rumble up his chest. "I wanted to... Many times, I wanted to share everything about my life with you... But it felt too early, and I didn't want to scare you off... God knows, I was trying to figure out what I felt toward you myself."

"I think... I may have subconsciously guessed," I finally breathe out.

He stills, then pulls back enough to glance down at me. "You did...?" He frowns.

I tip my head back, "Not consciously. I mean, I wanted to meet Riley, but every time I asked about her, you kept deflecting, and that only made me more curious."

"Of course, it did." He chuckles, "I should have known that a sassy little thing like you would not have stopped until you'd uncovered the truth."

"I am sorry I burst into her bedroom like that... I shouldn't have invaded your privacy but—"

"I'm glad you did." He smirks, "You can invade my privacy anytime you want, baby."

"Argh." I shake my head. "Guess that's a sign that you're feeling yourself again, huh?"

"When I'm with you, I always feel like I have everything."

"But I want more," I whisper.

"You do?"

I nod, then reach up and whisper into his ear, "I want your child, Damian."

His shoulders bunch and his features take on a strange look, one I can't decipher. "Damian," I mumble, "I... I'm sorry if I hurt you. If it's too soon, I understand. It's just, I've always wanted a big family and—"

"Yes." He nods.

"Yes?"

"I want you to have my child... My children, Flower." He cups my cheek, "I've never wanted it with anyone else, but with you...it feels right. You're the woman I've been waiting for my entire life."

"And Riley's mother?" Shit, why did I ask that? I shouldn't have, but when it comes to Damian, I have no filter. I seem to blurt out whatever's floating around in my subconscious with him, which is probably a sign that I trust him... Which is good, right?

"She wasn't you." He peers down into my eyes, "I never missed her when I was away from her, never wanted to spend every night with her, never feel like a part of me was missing when she wasn't in the same room as me." The skin at the edges of his eyes crinkles, "But you... You, my Flower, are the most important thing in the world to me. I can't live without you. When I thought I had lost you, it felt like I had cut out a part of myself. No worse, it felt like I was dying inside, like I was—"

I slap my palm over his mouth, "Shh, no D word, remember?"

He kisses my fingers and all of my nerve endings seem to come to life. He wraps his fingers around my wrist and lowers my palm to his chest.

"Say you'll never leave me."

"Never."

"Say, you'll always be mine," he demands.

"Yours," I whisper. "Always yours." I tip up my chin, meet his searing gaze. "You sure do have a way with words, Mr. Savage."

"It's because of my muse, Mrs. Savage."

I shiver... That's me. He's referring to me. OMG, I am married to a rock star. The man who half the world's female population covets, and the other half, well... They are, clearly, blind.

"Do I know this muse?" I giggle.

"Want to meet her?" He waggles his eyebrows, "She inspires me most when she's naked and spread over my lap, so I can spank her until she's wet, right before I turn her over and make sweet love to her."

Heat blooms between my thighs. "What if she wants to be fucked instead?" I squeeze my legs together.

His grin widens. "That can be arranged too." He leans down and kisses me again, hard, then turns and leads me down the hill. "To think, I have Arpad to thank for you showing up at my door," he mutters.

"Wait, what?" I gasp, and turn to him, "What's Arpad got to do with anything?"

"Asshole called up your agency and asked for you to take on the assignment as my nanny."

"What?" I gape, "So it was him—?"

"Yep," he nods. "In a way, I am grateful to him. If he hadn't sprung that on me, we wouldn't be here today."

"He's a good friend." I reach up and he dips his chin, closing the height-gap between us enough that I can touch his face. This casual gesture of affection, this ability to touch him anytime I want... Wow, it's something I'll never take for granted. "He knew you were hurting, that you needed a reason to come out of the dark place you were in. He saw the opportunity and took it."

"Hmm. Perhaps you are right." He rolls his shoulders.

"I am," I say with a smug smile. "Thanks to him, your video went viral; with your song already making it to the top of the charts in the country."

Yep, the notoriety of the supposed annulment, within hours of being married, followed by his from-the-heart song and declaration of love, had broken the internet.

"I am not complaining, though that's not why I did it," he replies. "And the song was all you. You inspired me, Flower."

My heart feels like it's going to burst. As closed off as he'd been earlier, he doesn't hold back now. He cuts out his heart and offers it to me every opportunity he gets. My hard-ass, sensitive artist of a rockstar. There are so many layers to him that not even a lifetime will be enough to get to know him. He'll always manage to surprise me at every turn, and God, I can't wait to experience this beautiful life of ours together.

Stupid tears fill my eyes and I blink them away,

"The song..." I glance up at the view of his hard jaw. "It was more than beautiful... it was—

"It was probably the first completely honest piece I ever wrote." He pauses, turns to me. "Was it cathartic? Yes. Could I have done it without you? No. Every time I saw you come apart under me, Flower... It healed something inside of me. The honesty of your response to me, the way you looked at me, how you held on to me and allowed me a glimpse of your soul as you shattered... It loosened the walls I had built between me and myself..." He laughs, "Am I making sense?"

"Yes," I whisper, "more than you know." I flatten my palm against his chest, "It's the same for me. When I am with you, I feel free. I feel supported enough to be able to explore my own creativity."

"We're good for each other." His grin widens.

"Told you so." I chuckle.

"Remind me never to get on your bad side, babe."

"As long as you don't forget to bring your mean side to bed."

He slaps my arse and I jump. "Hey, what was that for?" I protest.

"Enough dallying, woman. Let's get going. We need to make an appearance at Sinclair's place before I can drag you back home and ravish you."

"Do we?" I pout, "Couldn't we give it a miss?"

"We'll put in a quick appearance." He pulls me into his side. "I promised the guys I'd be there. Besides, I need to pay back Arpad for what he did to me, and I promise, you'll want a front seat for what's going to happen next."

CHAPTER 52

Epilogue 2

Karina

Why the hell had I accepted the invitation to this New Year's Eve party? Technically it's past the New Year, but the Seven, minus Baron, had spent New Year's Eve first at the hospital in solidarity with Damian; and later, trying to console the rock star, who'd shut himself off, before emerging with the track that had changed everything. So, today is the official party, to stand in for the New Year's bash.

I ring the doorbell of the townhouse on Primrose Hill. This isn't my scene, at all. So what if the Seven are my best—read: only—clients right now in London. It is because their business is too important to lose, that I had moved half-way across the world from LA. It is thanks to their security concerns for themselves and their growing circle of friends and family that I am making enough money to be able to grow my business. So yeah, that is my answer. That's why, when Sinclair Sterling, business man extraordinaire, who, together with the Seven, owns one of the biggest financial services companies in this country, had asked me to attend this event, I couldn't refuse.

I blow out a breath, then straighten when the door is flung open.

Light spills out, along with laughter and the clinking of glasses. The hum of conversation envelops me with almost as much warmth as the wide smile on the face of the woman who stands in the doorway. "Karina." Summer

Sterling grins up at me, her impish smile lighting up her face. "You came."

"I could hardly refuse your husband," I mutter.

She laughs, "Sinclair can be persuasive."

"That's putting it mildly."

She chuckles, then pulls me into a hug, "Happy New Year. It's wonderful to have you here with us today."

"Ah." I pat her shoulder. Awkward... That's me...with any kind of demonstration of affection. Comes from being the daughter of a single parent, who also happened to be a career military man.

Summer steps back, then links her arm through mine. A liveried man darts forward to shut the door, "Sorry I didn't get here in time, Madam." His rich, plummy accent has me staring at him.

"It's alright, Jeeves," Summer sings out, "I prefer to get the door for my friends anyway."

"Very good, Madam." He stands to attention as we walk past him.

"Is his name really Jeeves?" I whisper to Summer.

"No, but that's what I call him," she whispers back.

"Honestly, Summer." I stare down at her.

"What?" She raises her shoulders. "It suits him. Besides, it gives me the perfect excuse to practice all of my Bertie Wooster trivia questions on Sin."

"You mean Sinclair Sterling unbends enough to answer them?"

"He's still in training." She nods, "But he'll get there."

I laugh, "You're good for him, you know that?"

"Those of the Seven who've gotten hitched have been lucky in finding the right women."

"And who is that?" I ask, "The right kind of woman for one of the Seven?"

"Someone who can hold her own, who doesn't hesitate to go toe to toe with them and challenge them, who doesn't back down when they go—"

"All alphahole on you." I nod.

"See, you know what to do. So, what's stopping you?"

"What do you mean?" I frown down at her.

"I mean you and Arpad. What's stopping the two of you from—?"

"Kar-e-e-na." I look up to find Julia walking toward me.

"Hey," I wave back. "How are you?"

"I'm very good." She beams, "Also, I have news for you."

"I knew it!" Summer squeals. She grabs Julia's hand, "OMG, he did it?"

You guys are back together?"

Julia's face breaks into a wide grin, "Yes... Yes, we are."

"Congratulations!" Summer exclaims. "About time Damian did the right thing."

"This is amazing news." I smile, "I am so happy for you, Jules."

"I couldn't have done it without your help." She grips my shoulder, "Thank you, Karina."

"I didn't do anything," I mutter.

"You put your job on the line when you gave me the access codes to his house."

"Nothing that he didn't want happening." I stare past the women to the congregation of men at the bar. Weston's behind the counter serving, Damian's typing out something on his phone, while Sinclair and Saint, are engrossed in discussion.

"Where are the rest of the Seven?" I ask

"You mean Arpad?" Julia's lips quirk.

"I mean—" My phone buzzes and I pull it out of my handbag.

Arpad Ahole: The security camera on my yacht is not working. You need to check it out right away.

Me: I'm at a party

Arpad: I don't pay you to drink on my time. I need this fixed ASAP.

"What the hell?" I huff

"What's wrong?" Julia turns to me.

"Nothing." I grouse. I drop the phone in my bag, then reach over to grab a glass of champagne from a passing waiter.

"Wait... What did I miss?" Isla walks over to join us. "Who's engaged? Whose wedding do I need to plan next?"

"Not mine, thank you very much," I assure her.

"That's what you say now." She looks me up and down, "Speaking of, you look awesome, girl. I don't think I've ever seen you in a dress before."

"It's not an attire that's suited to my line of work exactly," I reply. Running a security agency means being on call 24/7, and the physical nature of the work involved means pants are more practical outfits.

"Just take the compliment, already," Isla teases.

"You're right." I nod, "Thanks." I run my fingers down the fabric that clings to my figure, "I quite like the results, actually."

"Has Arpad seen you in this outfit yet?"

I blow out a breath, "Okay, stop. He's my employer, and he hates my guts."

"Maybe he's secretly in love with you," Isla counters.

"No, thank you." I hitch my handbag over my shoulder. "I want nothing to do with him or the Seven."

"And us?" Summer grins. "What about us?"

"You girls are the best," I say sincerely. "These alphaholes don't deserve you."

"Hear, hear." Victoria walks over and embraces me warmly. "Shall we toast?" She raises her glass of water, "To girlfriends."

"To women who know what they want," I raise my glass.

"To alphaholes who know what we want." Julia chuckles.

"To us." Isla raises her glass and we clink.

"Am I too late for the toast?" Meredith walks over, champagne glass in hand.

"How are you?" Julia cries.

"Much better, now that I know Damian came to his senses and made things right with you." She chuckles, then nods at Julia's ring, "Told ya, you'd get your HEA."

"You did." Julia laughs, "Thank you for all of your help."

Something passes between the two of them, then Meredith leans over and hugs Julia, who returns the embrace. The two women hold onto each other for a few seconds.

Finally, Meredith, pulls back, and wipes a tear from her cheek. "I am truly happy for you and Damian." She raises her glass. "A toast," she declares, "to the bad boy rock star and the woman who brought him to heel."

"Hear, hear." Summer raises her glass, "To Julia." She glances between us, "Let's down this in one, ladies."

"To Julia." The others raise their glasses. That's when my phone buzzes again. I pull it out.

Arpad Ahole: I trust you are en-route to my yacht to fix the camera? Else...

Me: Are you threatening me?

Arpad Ahole: Call this your first and last warning. I set off at dawn. The work had better be complete before that.

What the hell? What's wrong with this guy. I grip the phone, contemplate dropping it on the ground and smashing my heel into it—but that's not going to solve anything. Bet the bastard would find another way of reaching me. Instead I drop my phone in my bag. "I've got to go."

"No." The women look at me with varying expression of disappointment.

"Sorry, apparently, the a-hole has found a new way to make my life miserable."

I glance around for a place to put the glass. Isla takes it from me.

"Thanks," I flip my hair over my shoulder. "This shouldn't take too long..."

TO FIND OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT TURN THE PAGE TO READ ARPAD AND KARINA'S STORY IN THE BILLIONAIRE'S BABY

THE BILLIONAIRE'S BABY

1

Karina

"Gah, you're a frustrating man, Wolfgang." The radio announcer groans. "You know that?"

"Exactly why you like me." Wolfgang chuckles. "And Ivy?" There's a pause when, I swear, I can imagine him leaning in closer to her. "The name's Wolfe."

"Errm," Ivy clears her throat over the airwaves, "so that's our favorite TV trope, brought to life by Wolfe and me...which sounds like something out of Red Riding Wood."

"Hood." Wolfe chuckles.

"That's what I said." Ivy huffs. "Red Riding Hood. So, as I was saying, that's our favorite TV trope. Can you guess what it is? This is Ivy—"

"—And Wolfe," the male announcer interjects.

"And we are so very pleased to be guest hosting the Evening Show on your fave, Smile London FM. Email us, call us...and let us know—"

I lean forward and shut off the car radio. What a couple of twerps those two are. Firstly, the attraction between them is off the charts. Secondly, they have no idea about it and are clearly dancing around it, all but punching each other in the face with the force of the tension building between them. Thirdly...well...if they don't sort it out, they are going to blow up on the show in front of everyone. No doubt, smack each other in the face before smacking each other on the lips. Ha! I snort aloud. Good to know my sense of humor is somewhat alive... Especially considering I have to spend the evening evaluating and repairing security on the boat of Mr. Full-of-Himself-Douchecanoe, aka Arpad f'ing Beauchamp.

A man whose demeanor is every bit as pompous as his name. Yeah, he comes from old money, la-dee-dah. Like I care. But to see him stomp around with that giant stick up his ass, you'd think he's conscious of his status every single second of his life. Which, he probably is. Which is why he'd ordered me to get to his boat and fix the security camera on it that he claims has stopped working before he sets off to whichever island it is he is sailing off to next.

A camera, which had been set up by someone else before I came on board as his security consultant.

Some of us have to spend the evening working; others party till dawn, then sail off into the sunrise. Of course. Admittedly, he and the rest of the Seven pay me a lot... Like a l-o-t; enough for me to leave my life in LA and move to London to ensure that their security detail is top notch.

The Seven had been kidnapped as pre-teens by the Mafia. They had been rescued, but not before it had left them with a burning need to get even with the perpetrators of the incident. It also means that the men are ever vigilant about the Mafia attacking them or their loved ones. That's why they had asked me to increase the security on them and their families. Add to that, the fact that most of the Seven had recently met and married the women of their dreams... And it means I have a shitload of people to protect, from a security standpoint.

Which means... Yeah, I have never been busier. From finding the right talent to add to my team, to constantly upgrading the security details for the ceremonies when any of them decide to get married—the latest being Damian, the rock star who married his almost-nanny and produced a single that knocked the socks off of every single critic and countdown chart.

So, I can't complain. My bank account is happy...which means I should be happy. Only I am not.

I am not one to rest on my laurels, not one to bask in my success... I know what I want next—a family of my own. Good news is, I am already working on it.

In fact, I have a date tomorrow night to fire the first salvo in that direction. No pun intended. I snort aloud. I just have to get through this last chore on my list and then I can get some rest—and god knows, I need it—and be ready to get started on this latest project.

I ease the car into the parking lot of St. Katherine Docks, then grab my bag—which, while being stylish enough to take to a party, is also spacious enough to hold my emergency tools—and head down the line of gleaming vessels. Trust London’s wealthiest to bag a spot in the center of London to park their toys. I search for one yacht in particular... What had he called it?

Heartbeat. A weirdly sentimental name for someone who is known as Killer... Not because he kills in real life, but for the killing he makes as an Angel Investor in Silicon Valley. Yep, that’s how Arpad f’ing Beauchamp makes his money.

Investing in those who have the ideas but not the financial wherewithal to bring them to fruition. He has a knack for spotting talent, I’ll give him that.... And that’s all I’ll ever concede, and definitely not to his face.

The man has a mean streak a mile wide, if any of our brief interactions are any indication. Rumor has it, he doesn’t even spare the women he dates... But then, the kind of women he prefers are known for their taste in men who take charge in the bedroom... And push things beyond the point of comfort. Good thing I am not one of them.

I prefer my men amenable and my food spicy. See, the thing with food? It never lets you down. Finding the best restaurants in town and eating out is a particular fancy of mine. Table for one, please. Oh yeah, nothing like the silence of my own company to unwind in the evenings. I am not lonely, just alone. And there is a difference between those two words, right?

I reach Heartbeat and clamber overboard, then walk over to the cabin and key in the password. Letting myself in, I glance around and press what I think is the light switch. Bingo. The door clicks shut behind me as I glance around the space. Whoa, this is a yacht? More like a floating mansion. It had seemed reasonably sized from the outside, but in here... Wow! I walk down the steps to the sunken living room. Plush leather seats span one entire side, with a coffee table in the center, and a flat screen on the opposite wall. I walk through to a galley that has an island table, but only one chair. Huh? That’s weird. Doesn’t he entertain on the boat? Bet he does, so what’s with the lone chair?

On the other hand, the gleaming kitchen equipment is more what I expected. It’s top-of-the-line and would rival any five-star hotel, I am sure. Not that Mr. Alphahole, here, would ever deign to step into a kitchen. He probably travels with an entire crew to fetch and carry for him. Bet he spends his time jerking off to porno that he watches on that screen as he shoves his hand down his pants and... Please... Argh! Don't go there.

I walk past the kitchen and push the sliding doors apart to find—OMG! A complete, fully-furnished, massive bedroom. Complete with a super king-size bed that takes up almost all of the center of the room. On the far end is a door that, I assume, leads to the bathroom. There's a set of mirrored doors beside it that must lead to a walk-in closet? Clearly, he's spared no expense in doing up this space. Everything is gorgeously designed, if space efficient.

On the other side of the cabin is a narrow freestanding table, and on it, a neat coil of what looks like... A rope? How weird. I move closer, then reach out and brush my fingers across the cord. It's soft to the touch, almost sensual, the material reddish in color, with sparks of gold flecked through it. I bring it to my nose and sniff. An edgy, almost nutty scent tugs at my nostrils. My core clenches. Wow, what the hell does he use this for anyway?

I step back, glance around the room, take in the massive, sliding glass doors. Beyond them is the view of the now-darkening water, rays of sunlight from the setting sun painting the sky a smoldering red and orange.

I stare at the bed again... Leave, turn and leave, right now. Come on, surely, a sniff won't hurt? Besides, there are no cameras in the bedroom. At least, there were none indicated on the security detail for this boat I'd inherited from the previous agency... So he'll never find out, right?

I cross the floor, walk around the bed and run my hands across the pillow. Soft... Egyptian cotton, thread count innumerable, no doubt. Only the best for the asshole, after all. I lean over, bury my nose in the pillow... Don't judge.

Notes of bergamot and cloves, and something dark, musky, edgy—something dangerous—envelops me. I'm instantly wet. What the hell?

How can his scent turn me on so? And when I loathe the man? And his attitude, and the way he thinks he can boss me around, and expect me to drop everything and prioritize him above everything else. A shiver runs down my spine. Only my sense of hate getting the better of me, of course.

That's why my stomach flutters. That is the only reason my heart beats so fast in my chest. Shit, now I am turning myself on, and that will not do. Not when I have work to do. I pivot, then retrace my steps toward the cabin, and head for the captain's area. There, at the extreme right, I pull up the controls for the security cameras.

I get to work fixing the controls...and am done in fifteen minutes. There, that was easy. It took more time to drive here through the late evening traffic.

I stretch and yawn, suddenly overwhelmingly tired. It's been a long day, long week, long year, actually, setting up business in this city. But I am in a good place, confident my business is going to do well. I pack up my tools, head for the door, then hesitate.

Should I? Why not? It shouldn't matter. I pivot and head back toward the bedroom, then glance out the large window and admire the spectacle. So damn beautiful. If only I had someone to hold my hand while I enjoy it. Nah, doesn't matter. I have me...don't I? And my love for yoga. The only way I know how to unwind. I roll my shoulders, and my muscles protest. Shit, I am too tense.

I place my handbag on the bed stand, then raise my arms high above me. The skirt of my dress pulls tight against my thighs. This won't do. It's why I hate wearing dresses. Damn. I pull off the dress, drape it over the foot of the bed, then kick off my heels and walk over to the center of the room.

I face the window of the yacht, then raise my hands again, bring them down, flow down onto my hands and the tips of my feet, then push up into a downward facing dog. I hold the pose for a few seconds, until my hamstrings burn, my biceps stretch, give. I rock back and forth, then swoop up, back to downward facing dog, then jump forward, straighten. Take a breath in and out, then repeat the process.

By the time I'm done with my routine, my muscles are limber, sweat beads my forehead. I wipe it off, then stretch and yawn. A pleasant tiredness buzzes in my blood.

Yeah, I could rest for a little while, then get out of here.

Hold on, bad idea. Honestly, are you actually thinking of staying on here for more time than is absolutely essential?

I reach for my dress then stop, glance at the bed. It looks so comfortable. I yawn again. Coming down from a yoga routine always relaxes me so much. My limbs grow heavy, my eyelids seem to be weighted down, and I can barely keep them open. I could nap in the car, of course...but it's almost dark and that doesn't sound safe. And I know it's not safe to drive home without catching a few minutes of shut-eye.... I sneak a peek at the bed again; it looks so comfortable.

Just a short nap. That can't hurt... Can it? It'll rejuvenate me enough for the ride home which, again, I am in no condition to navigate when I am this exhausted.

I slip into the bed and draw the covers up to my chin. His dark scent wraps around me. Goosebumps flare on my skin. It's as if I am surrounded by him, as if he's cocooned me with his body, and he's all around me, with me, in this bed. Should I set an alarm on my phone to wake up? Nah, I'll be fine. It's only a quick nap, after all.

Besides Arpad a-hole isn't going to come back before the morning, and I'll be long gone by then...

A delicious warmth envelops me and I close my eyes.

A rumbling creeps into my consciousness and I push it away. I press my cheek into the soft pillow, draw in that scent of bergamot and cloves. His scent. Mmm. A languid heaviness tugs at my limbs. My muscles relax and I drift off again. Until a loud creak tears through the silence in my mind. I jackknife up to sitting position, my heart pounding in my chest. My pulse rate ratchets up. I strain to see through the darkness. Where the hell am I?

That's when the entire room seems to tilt. I scream and slide off the bed. I hit the ground on my ass, roll over to hit the glass wall of the cabin. I turn and press my nose into the transparent barrier and stare out. Darkness, broken only by the white-tipped foam that crashes against the side. I gasp, then scramble back until I hit the bed. The boat! I am on the boat, which is no longer harbored. It's at sea, with me on it.

The entire yacht creaks again, the walls seem to groan, the boat lurches up, and I hold onto the edge of the bed, anchor myself, as it seems to grunt and screech like it's possessed, then straightens. Silence, for a second. The hair on the back of my neck rises, I smell the ozone in the air, then the boat groans, and hurtles down.

The momentum carries me forward toward the wall of the cabin.

I throw out my hand, manage to grab the edge of the bed, hold on as the boat seems suspended in space, before it hits something—the water I presume?—with a crash. The sound echoes in my ears, reverberates down my spine. Then the vessel tilts in the opposite direction. I glance out the glass wall and scream again. Water. So much water, I am surrounded by a wall of water. What the hell is happening? How did the boat get here? I hit the ground on all fours, crawling my way up to the door. Grabbing the handle, I pull myself up, then twist the knob open. I lurch forward as the entire boat goes into another incline. Damn it. I race forward, throw myself onto the couch in the living room and hold on until the boat rightens again. Then cross the living room, up the steps toward the captain's cabin.

That's when I see the man silhouetted against the wheel. He's wearing shorts that cling to his tight ass. And what an ass it is. The fabric outlines the indentation on each side, only to stretch across the girth. The waistband shows off his inverted V figure and his back... I gulp. The planes of his back flex and buck as he grips the wheel of the boat, widens his stance, and leans into the next wave. The next wave... What the—? It's a huge, huge wave. A behemoth of a WAVE. I glance up and cry out, for he's driving the boat straight up the crest of a monster of a wall of water. There's a crash of thunder, then lightning flickers beyond the boat and I gasp again. An entire sea of darkness, capped by furious white tips, and in the foreground, his massive shoulders that bunch and knot as he grapples with the wheel, holds the boat on course.

Another clap of thunder in the distance, and the alphahole—for it is him, Arpad f'ing A'hole, the bloody owner of this boat, my crazy-ass employer, my frigging boss, who's driving this boat straight into the storm.

He throws back his head and laughs. What the hell? Is he crazy? Does he have a death wish or something? I stomp forward to ask him just that, when the boat groans and begins to slide back, taking me with it. My legs seem to go out from under me. I scream as I hit the decking and roll back. The boat pitches and I am thrown against the wall. Darkness envelops me.

When I open my eyes again, I am back in the bed, in the bedroom of the boat, the sheets pulled up to my chin. Huh? Was it all a dream? I sit up and pain slices through my forehead. I groan, fall back against the pillows.

"Take it easy." A low voice rumbles across the space. I glance over to meet familiar grey-blue eyes.

"You?" I cough. "What the hell are you doing here?"

"It's my boat?" He leans forward and my gaze takes in his bare chest, the sculpted six-...no, eight-pack? Nah...not possible. No one has an eight-pack, do they?

"Enjoying the view?"

I tip my chin up, meet his gaze.

"I've seen better," I lie.

He chuckles. "You must be feeling better. Though, I admit, I preferred it when you were flat on your back in my bed, naked."

I peek under the sheet. "What the hell?" I gasp, "Where are my underclothes?"

"Had to take them off, since you bled all over them from your head wound."

I touch my forehead, and the pain flashes behind my eyes. "Ow," I moan.

"Let me see that." He leans over me and his scent intensifies. His chest planes ripple and his biceps bunch as he reaches across.

I pull away. "It's fine," I grumble, "it's just a bump. It's not bleeding."

"I won't hurt you," he rumbles.

Why don't I believe you?

"Unless you want me to..." His lips twist, "Do you want me to, hurt you, my little stowaway?"

"What?" I scowl, "Of course, not."

"Then why are you here?"

2

Arpad

"Not by choice." She tips her chin up. "Trust me, I'd rather be a million miles away."

I grin. "And yet, here you are."

"I came in to check the security cameras—which are working now, by the way. The next thing I know, I am waking up to the apocalypse." She scowls. "What the hell were you doing driving the yacht into a storm?"

"What the hell are you doing on my boat?"

She reddens. "I checked the camera—which is functional, by the way—you can thank me later—" She tosses her hair and winces. "After which, uh, I guess I was too tired, and decided to work out?"

"Work out?" I drum my fingers on my bicep. "Exactly how did you decide you were going to work out?"

"I was tense, and decided I need to do a quick yoga session."

"Hmm." I rub my chin, trying to understand this. "So, you decided to do a quick yoga workout, dressed in..." I glance at her dress laid out at the bottom of the bed.

"No, I took off the dress," she mutters.

I tilt my head. "Good thing. I don't like that color on you anyway."

She gapes, "You don't?"

I shake my head. "Black doesn't do you justice. You're such a fiery personality, you need to wear red."

"Red?" she murmurs.

"Yep," I bend over her and lean in enough to share my breath with hers, "it brings out the highlights in your hair."

"Oh." Her pupils dilate and her breathing goes ragged. She inches closer, close enough for her breasts to graze my chest. And damn it, I'm instantly hard.

I straighten and she blinks, as if coming out of a trance. I can't stop the smirk that curls my lips. "Your heels," I murmur, "you took them off as well?"

"What?" She straightens, then glances around her, "Sorry, what did you say?"

"Your stilettos," I point to where I'd placed her footwear by the side.

"Right," she swallows, "of course, I took them off."

"And then you proceeded to work out in my cabin?"

"It was just a basic routine with few stretching poses." She blinks rapidly, "You know, like downward facing dog?"

Oh baby, I'd love to downward dog you. The thought of having her balanced on her hands and toes, butt in the air...tits thrust out as she arches into the pose... I clear my throat. Jesus, is it hot in here or what? I widen my stance. "So, you came into my cabin, where you shouldn't have been in the first place, did a quick workout, then crawled into my bed?"

She wrings her fingers together in front of her.

I stare at her.

She flushes. "In my defense, I wanted to find out if the living quarters were secure or if you needed a camera or something here as well so—"

I hold up my hand, "Hold on, back up. So, you came into my bedroom to check if there were cameras...and then what? You decided to stay on?"

"Not really." She hunches her shoulders. "I came in here and it was so calm, I decided to do my yoga routine. Then, the bed was so inviting, and I was so tired, and I might have uh, decided to take a nap..."

"A nap?"

She nods. "Yeah, stupid idea, but I was exhausted and I didn't think you'd be back for a while," she mumbles, "and besides, you owe me for coming in and fixing your security camera, on what should have been an evening off."

"Had plans, huh?"

"Kind of." She sits up. "Shit, what time is it?"

I raise my shoulder, "Beats me."

"Where's my phone?" She glances round the space. "Please, please I need my phone."

"Phone?"

"So, I can check the time." She spots her bag on the table, and her features light up. "Can you get me my bag?"

"Why?"

She scowls at me, "So I can get my phone from it, you ass."

"Get it yourself," I drawl, then drop into the chair and lean back for good measure.

"I don't have any clothes on."

"So?"

She gapes. "You're a complete alphahole, you know that?"

"I'll take that as a compliment." I smirk.

"Oh, F off." She pulls the sheet up and around her shoulders, then swings her legs over, and hitching up the sheet, walks over to the table. Still holding the cover, she manages to grab her bag, unzip it and pull out her phone.

"What the hell?" she yelps. "It's almost 10 am."

"It is." I tip back my chair, watch her as she waves her phone in the air.

"Turn this boat around."

"No."

"I have to get back."

"Too late."

"You don't understand," she snarls. "I have somewhere I need to be."

"So do I." I scratch my chest and her gaze drops there. She swallows. I drag my hand down to my waist and her breathing grows shallow. Hmm, interesting. Apparently, little Miss Perfect here is not as impervious to my presence as she'd like me to believe.

"Don't do that," she mutters.

"What?"

"That entire showing-off-your-torso thing."

"Was I?"

"You were, and you know it." She tips her chin up. "I demand that you get back to land right now."

"It's that important, huh?" I frown at her.

She tosses her hair back from her face. "Of course, it is. That's what I've been trying to tell you all this while."

"Why don't you tell me what made you get that tattoo, first?"

She scowls, "What tattoo?"

"How many tattoos do you have?" I smirk.

She opens her mouth, and I raise my hand. "Yes, I saw it, when I took off your underwear. Deal with it."

Color smears her cheeks.

"You're a piece of work, you know that?"

I chuckle, "That's not the answer to my question."

She tugs up the sheet then, purses her lips. I wait as she seems to consider her options. "So, if I tell you the rationale behind the tattoo, you'll take me back to land?"

I shrug.

She glowers at me, then snaps back her shoulders. "The line you saw that I had tattooed... It's from my favorite poet."

If you but knew the flames that burn in me which I attempt to beat down with my reason.

I recite it at the same time as her.

"You know the poem?" She frowns.

"Pushkin." I nod. "I know who wrote it. I want to know why you have it tattooed on your back." I hadn't missed the cursive written on one side of her spine; it was beautiful, evocative and unexpected... And yet, exactly the kind of verse I'd expect her to love. Deep, intense, yet fiery and passionate. It is so much Karina, that I have to find out more about it. "Well?" I lift one eyebrow. "Why did you get it?"

She draws in a breath, then glances away. "Because I was so rebellious as a kid and it got me into so much trouble. I got it to remind myself that it's okay to pick my battles. I don't have to win everything. Just the important ones, you know?"

I stare at her. "You don't like to lose," I mutter, and she tips up her chin.

"Neither do you," she states.

"Which leaves us at a stalemate."

"Which leaves you on the yacht, and me back on land," she insists.

"No," I drawl.

"What?" Her features tighten. "You promised to take me back."

"I did no such thing."

"B... but..." she stutters, "you said...."

"No, I didn't." I waggle my finger at her.

"You...you liar," she chokes out.

"Wrong—" I swallow down the chuckle that bubbles up. Karina—angry, all flashing eyes, and glowing skin. My god, the adrenaline from the chance to spar with her is better than the thrill of closing a killer deal in Silicon Valley. "I didn't say anything. You asked if I would take you back if you told me about the tattoo. I shrugged and you assumed that meant yes." I pretend to yawn. "You need to pay more attention to the details, doll."

She walks over to the side-table near the bed, places her phone on it, then swivels to stand over me. "What the hell is wrong with you?" she demands.

"What's wrong is that you are naked in my bedroom and I haven't touched you yet."

She frowns. "Don't try to intimidate me, you ass."

"Oh, you'll know when I'm trying to intimidate you, Stowie."

"Stowie?" She blinks. "I have a name, you know."

I look her up and down, "I'm not in the habit of remembering the names of my hired help."

"Hired help?" she splutters. "How dare you?" She launches herself at me, and hits my chest with such force that the impact knocks me and the chair over.

I land on my back; my head connects with the hard floor and her knee connects with my stomach. "Uff," the breath rushes out of me. She scrambles to get away, and I grab her around the waist, flip her over onto the ground and lean over her. "There... Much better," I mutter.

"Let me go." She makes that little snarling sound at the back of her throat again. How cute.

"Now, now, is that any way to thank your savior?"

"Savior?" She huffs, "More like a kidnapper."

"If the title fits." I raise my shoulders. "I did patch you up, and put you to bed."

"So?" She snorts.

"And saved you from being lost at sea in a storm."

"You were saving your own hide, you... You complete tosser."

"Apparently, living in London has improved your insults, at least."

"It's done nothing for your attitude, you bastard."

I click my tongue, "I think I need to wash out your mouth." I stare at her lips. "Or maybe I should shut you up another way, hmm?"

"Don't you dare." Her golden eyes blaze at me.

"You have no idea what I am going to do."

"Don't I?" she mutters. "You were thinking of kissing me."

"Hmm." I lower my face until my nose bumps hers, "Now that you mention it..." I hold her gaze and the gold of her irises deepen to a burnt amber. "Fucking beautiful," I mutter.

She blinks. "You don't have to flatter me."

I take in her features, the slope of her creamy shoulder, the shape of her curves so soft and under me. "The first thing you should know about me," I growl, "is that I never lie."

"What's the second?"

"I never back away from a challenge."

She purses her lips. "I am not challenging you."

"Hmm, I could have sworn that's what your earlier words sounded like."

"I was simply asking you to turn the yacht back and drop me off."

"Can't, babe."

Her gaze narrows. "You don't understand. I need to be back by 5 pm."

"Hot date?"

She glances away, then back at me. "Something like that," she mutters. "It's just...someone I have to see."

My gut twists and something hot stabs at my chest. "Drop him," I command.

"What?"

"Whoever it is, you're not meeting him again."

She opens and shuts her mouth, "You're completely off your rocker."

Tell me about it. Why the hell do I care who she's going to see? It's not like I have a claim on her. Still, when I'd tucked her into my bed, something had felt right about it. And not just that she had her eyes closed, and wasn't glaring at me like she wanted to rip my head off, which is her natural response whenever she sees me. So why the hell am I still holding her down, with my hips between her legs, my groin flush against hers, my chest wearing the imprint of those beautiful breasts? "Stay with me, for the next thirty days," I snap.

"What?"

"That's how long this trip is for."

"You're joking."

"Told you, I never joke."

"Get off of me." She slaps at my shoulder.

"Not until you give me your answer."

"Then my answer is no."

"Refuse me and I'll strip the contract for the security details for the Seven from your company."

"You can't do that." Her features twist, "You wouldn't dare do that. I'll take you to court."

"Don't dare me, Stowie."

"Don't call me that."

"What would you prefer?"

"My name, for one, you ass. You can call me Karina. On the other hand," she pushes up against me, "don't call me at all."

"I prefer Stowie." I take in her flushed features, the pulse beating at her throat. "So what do you say? Do we have a deal?"

"No."

"I am not letting you up unless you agree."

"What is this? Compulsion?"

"Coercion." I allow my lips to kick up in a smirk. "Or would you prefer seduction?" I lower my gaze to her lips. "Will you taste as sweet as you smell or will you be as prickly as your demeanor, hmm?"

"You'll never find that out." She makes a noise deep in her throat, and the sound travels straight down my spine. My groin hardens. Bet if I look down, I'll see the crotch of my pants tented. She must sense it, or rather, feel the thick length jab into her stomach, for her gaze widens. She gulps, the sound audible in the silence.

"Thirty days," I stare at her parted lips, "during which we explore this chemistry between us. Then we can go back to our individual lives as if nothing happened."

"Thirty days." Her tongue darts out. "That's it? And we both walk away?"

"Seven-hundred and twenty hours to explore each other." I peer into her face. "That's forty-three-thousand two-hundred minutes to give into the attraction between us and find out exactly what it holds."

She blinks, then shakes her head. "You mean we shag each other, don't you?"

"Not giving it names, babe. Why don't we let nature take its course?" I glance up into her eyes. "With a little help from us, of course."

Something passes across her face, an expression I can't quite discern.

"What?" I scowl, "What is it?"

"Thirty days." She nods. "I'll agree, but I have a condition of my own."

3

Karina

"You're not exactly in a position to add stipulations," he rumbles.

His big body holds me down, the weight of his hips on mine not altogether unpleasant... Okay, so it's delicious, actually, having him pin me down like this. The heat from his big body surrounds me in a cocoon of intimacy. The strength of his dominance slams into my chest, holds me in place. A moan tumbles from my lips and his gaze drops to my mouth again. "Where were we?" he asks.

"I have a condition," I insist.

He frowns, "I don't take kindly to negotiations."

"Not a negotiation. It's a..." I bite the inside of my cheek, "a way to leverage the situation for the benefit of both of us."

"Oh?" He tilts his head. "Now you're talking."

Of course, the a-hole billionaire businessman needs to be spoken to in the language he understands. No problem. I got this then.

"I want something out of this, uh, association."

"You're getting your company."

"I already have that," I point out.

"You're ensuring the survival of your enterprise and your employees."

I fight the urge to roll my eyes. "I want more," I press. "Surely, you understand that, don't you—capitalizing on any given situation to ensure you optimize your return?"

"Hmm." He swipes back a strand of hair that's stuck to my cheek. "What is it you want?"

"A child."

He stares. "Excuse me?"

"You heard me," I retort. "Thanks to you, I am going to miss a crucial appointment this evening, where I was going to have an intrauterine insemination."

"A what?" He blinks.

"An IUI," I explain, "where I would have been inseminated artificially with sperm from a donor."

"A donor?"

I nod. "I've been on fertility medication to stimulate my egg production. My peak ovulation window is this evening, and if I don't get there in time, all of my work will go to waste."

"Hold on." He shakes his head. "You had an appointment this evening, to inseminate yourself with some man's sperm—"

"Not some man, someone I chose after careful screening."

"Right." He nods. "And now, since you can't do that, you want me to—" He seems at a loss for words, and honestly, the spectacle of this confident alphahole at a loss for words, is more than funny. I can't stop the chuckle that escapes me.

"Weren't expecting that, huh?" I mutter. "Surprise," I sing out.

"So, you want me to stand in for your sperm donor?"

"Damn, you're bright." I widen my gaze in mock surprise. "So, what do you say?"

"To what?" He scowls.

"To donating your sperm to my cause, of course... Only, you'd do it the old-fashioned way."

"So unprotected sex, huh?" he rumbles. "Resulting in possible offspring?"

"It's known to happen," I deadpan. "So, what do you say?"

"Huh." He glances down at our position, then springs up to his feet, as if he can't wait to put distance between us.

Ha, knew it. Nothing like talking about real stuff like family or kids or, god forbid, the L word to have an alphahole backtrack and give you a wide berth. Jeez, I should have used this conversation earlier. It would have saved me so much time.

I wrap the sheet more securely around me, then try to stand up. My feet entangle with the bloody sheet, and I fall back. "Bugger." I huff. Yep, I'm American, but damn, if I don't love using the British insults. They have a certain Je ne sais quoi about them, don't you think?

"Let me." He holds out a hand, and I stare at it.

"Take it," he mutters. "After what you told me, I am not likely to jump on you—not that I would have earlier either—but trust me, until this...whatever this insane conversation between us is sorted out, I am not likely to...you know..." He frowns down at me as if still not comprehending what we'd discussed thus far. Typical male attitude. Instead of trying to talk it out, pretend the problem doesn't exist in the first place.

I grab his hand and he hauls me to my feet, then abruptly releases me. He retreats and it's as if he's sucked out all of the heat in the room with him. I tug the covers under my arms, then fix my gaze on him. "So? What do you think?"

"What do I think?" He drags his fingers through his hair. "I am not ready to have children."

"You don't need to take responsibility for the kid."

He turns on me. "It's my sperm," he points out. "That's if I decide to donate sperm the old-fashioned way and shag you, which I haven't agreed to yet."

"Thought that's what you suggested?"

"That was before." He draws in a breath. "Look, this is all a bit sudden."

He pats the pockets of his shorts, then frowns. He glances around the room, walks over to the bedstand, snatches up a pack of cigarettes from the drawer. He pulls out a cigarette, places it in between his lips, but doesn't light it.

"You smoke?"

He drops the pack back on the bedstand. "I'm trying to quit."

"You'd have to if you wanted anything to do with the child."

He levels a dirty look at me and I raise my hands. "I mean, that's the point I'm trying to make. You wouldn't have to change anything if you didn't have anything to do with the kid. I'd take care of him or her. In fact, I'd insist you don't have any relationship with them."

"Hey," he protests, "you're acting as if I would be a bad influence on the kid."

"Wouldn't you?"

"Of course, not." He draws himself up to his full height. "I'd be a bloody good father."

"Of course, you would," I say in a soothing voice. "In this instance, though, I would have sole custody of the child, since this is all my idea. You'd sign away your rights to the child after conception, so your only role would be limited to that of—"

"The sperm donor."

"Exactly." I nod, "You only have to show up, uh, do the deed during the time we are together. Then we part, and hopefully, by then, I am pregnant."

"With my child," he snaps in a low voice. "My. Child."

The hair on the back of my neck rises. Okay, this isn't going as I'd intended. I'd broached the conversation because I really didn't want to miss the opportunity when my eggs are ripe for fertilizing, and I had thought he wouldn't have a problem with it. After all, I am still offering him what he wanted in the bargain—the chance to sleep with me. Only it isn't completely without strings— Okay so maybe it is a bit of a surprise to spring on the man, but still, come on. Surely it isn't a big deal to him. Is it?

"Well, technically," I venture, "it would be my child once you sign the rights over."

He frowns.

"See? There'd be no responsibility, no ties to bind you. You'd have fun in the creation process and then you'd walk away."

He moves the unlit cigarette to the other corner of his mouth.

"Just how you like it, right?" I tilt my head, "You can continue to play the field, continue with your merry lifestyle, piloting this yacht around the world, whenever you want, wherever you want, at the drop of a hat."

He growls low in his throat, and the sound chafes across my skin. All of my nerve endings seem to fire at once.

"Do I, uh, take that as a yes?"

"Yes." He folds his hands over his chest, then glares at me. "On one condition."

"What's that?" I frown. "What other condition could you possibly have for this situation?"

"Marry me."

Arpad

"What?" She gapes. "Marry you? Why the hell would I do that?"

"Hold on," I protest. "Marrying me wouldn't be as bad as you're making it out to be."

"It would be worse," she mumbles under her breath. "And why would I do that, anyway?"

"Ah, why wouldn't you do that?" I stare at her. What's wrong with this woman? "There are many women out there who would have loved to hear that proposal from me, I'll have you know."

"Well, then marry them."

"I want to marry you," I insist.

Her cheeks flush. "No way." She shakes her head. "This is not happening."

"Relax, it would be a fake marriage," I assure her. "We'd just pretend to be married for the time it takes to meet my family."

"Meet your family?" Her gaze widens. In surprise? Horror? "I'd rather dive off this boat right now."

"Hey," I scowl, "they aren't that bad." I draw in a breath, "Okay, so they aren't the easiest either... Hell, what family is? Which is precisely why I need you with me when I go to visit them."

"Why the hell do you need backup?" She looks me up and down. "You seem like you could manage almost anything and anyone on your own."

"You haven't met my family." I roll my shoulders. "They are, shall we say, quite full-on."

"All the more reason that I am not the right person for this. I am no good with situations of the, uh, emotional kind. Why do you think I opted for artificial insemination?"

"Because you couldn't find a man who wanted you enough to start a family with you?"

She pales; her breath hitches. "You know what? Forget it. This entire thing is a bad idea. It's best we keep our distance from each other for the time that we are on this boat." She marches past me. Something glimmers on her cheek.

Aw, hell, is she crying? Something hot stabs at my chest. I swoop down and grip her arm, "Hey, I'm sorry. I didn't mean that."

"Of course, you did." She stares down at where I've locked my fingers around her. "Let me go."

"No."

"You don't want to fight me," she says in a low voice. "I run my own security agency. I have learned more than my share of self-defense skills, enough to take on men far more dangerous than you."

"Now, you're daring me, and you know I can never back down from a challenge."

"Is that right?" She lifts her gaze to my face. "We'll see, shall we?" She yanks on my grasp; I tighten my hold. She feints, locks her leg around mine in a seamless move and tugs. I throw my arms around her, press her close as she kicks my legs out from under me.

The world tilts and I hit the floor of the cabin with a resounding thud as the back of my head connects with the hardboard. The breath whooshes out of me; pain slices down my spine.

"Let go of me, you oaf." She struggles in my hold. The covers slip down to bare her luscious breasts.

I take in the pink areolae, the beaded nipples that seem to pebble further under my scrutiny.

"Avert your eyes, you mofo." She smacks my head.

"Ow," I gasp out a pained breath even as I squeeze my arms around her, and haul her to my chest.

"Dammit, unhand me." She pushes her knee into my groin and I groan.

"What the hell? If you keep that up, I won't be able to father any children, Stowie."

"Aargh." She punches my shoulder. "I," she punches the side of my face, "hate," punch, "that," punch, "name."

"What the fuck?" I growl, then scissor my legs around her, flip her over so she's once more on her back. The sheet she's draped around herself tightens further. She wriggles about, tries to free herself, and I lean more of my weight on her, imprisoning her under me.

"You big bully," she fumes, then lashes out with her arm. I duck, only to grab her arm and twist it above her head. She throws a punch with the other, and I catch her wrist and pull it up, then shackle both her wrists with my palm.

"Much better." I take in her flushed features. At least, the color has returned to her face. "Now where were we?"

"Nowhere," she growls. Her eyes flare; her dark hair falls across her forehead. She's fucking gorgeous and beautiful and so vital. I want a piece of that; something... Someone so alive that she could fire up the dark corners of my life.

"Wrong answer," I retort. "Care to try again?"

"Oh, sod off." She blows the hair off of her face. "So easy for you to use your strength to overpower me, huh?"

"I use everything I have at my disposal." I hold her gaze, "Including you."

She makes that sound of anger deep in her throat that fucking cuts me off at the knees.

"Jesus," I growl. "Why the hell did you have to be so... so irresistible?"

"Speak for yourself," she mutters. "Let me off this boat."

"No."

"I need to get back," she insists.

"There's no need for that, considering everything is settled."

"Nothing is settled." She yanks at her hands and I tighten my grip. "Except that you are officially out of your friggin' mind."

"Maybe," I whisper. "Maybe not. All this off-the-charts chemistry between us, you gotta admit, it's best put to good use."

"And I told you what I want out of it." She glowers.

"So did I."

"It's unacceptable to me," she snaps. "I am not marrying you."

"It's a pretend marriage."

"Oh." She blinks, then firms her lips. "I'd still have to put up with your presence."

"You'll have to do more than that if you want to get pregnant by me." I stare into her eyes and she swallows.

"That... would be different."

"How?"

"It would be working toward a bigger goal."

I can't stop myself from leaning into her further. My hardness stabs into her belly. "You have no idea how true that is."

"Argh," she makes a gagging sound, "you're so full of yourself."

"And you can be full of me too."

Her cheeks redden. "Jesus, that's a terrible pun."

"Welcome to my part of the woods, Sparks." Okay, now that... nickname... That wasn't intentional...but I have to admit, it does fit her better.

Her golden eyes flare. She opens her mouth and I click my tongue. "No more arguing. You pose as my pretend, newly-wedded wife on my annual trip home to visit my family, and I'll be more than happy to impregnate you."

"It's not that simple. It's not like I can get pregnant in one shot." She snorts. "Pun intended."

"Oh, I intend to keep trying as many times as needed, and a few times more for good measure," I promise.

"For the duration of this trip, you mean?" she corrects me.

I frown. "Yes, that's what I mean. Next thirty days, you and me, Sparks, and as much of my semen as you can hold. What do you say?"

"Fine," she mutters, "but it doesn't mean I have to like you."

"Fine," I reply, "but it does mean that I get to kiss you, and do with you as I please."

"Wait, what?" She opens her mouth. "What do you mean?" She begins to struggle under me. "You bastard, I should have known you'd have something filthy and underhanded hidden up your sleeve."

"So, are you turning down this offer?"

She balls her fists. "Don't tempt me."

"So, you're accepting this agreement?"

"I don't really have a choice, do I?"

"That's not an answer." I peer into her face. "Yes or no, Sparks?"

She draws in a breath, glances around the space. Then she exhales heavily and says, "Fine, you have me. Okay, I need this—"

I lower my head to hers.

4

Karina

He holds his lips close to mine, so close that I breathe in his air. So close that the heat of his body surrounds me, cocoons me. So close that I can hear his heart thud in his chest. Smell the salt of the sea mixed with that primal, dark maleness of him, the thing that had attracted me from the moment I'd seen him, a year ago in LA.

I'd walked into the conference room of my office, the sun had poured in through the windows, too bright, as always, in LA. The rays had framed this tall figure that had seemed to fill my entire line of sight. The light behind him had thrown his face into shadow while highlighting the rest of his magnificent physique.

The fitted formal shirt had stretched across his chest, only to be tucked into the waistband of his slacks that had molded to his thighs. He'd taken a step forward and the muscles of his legs had uncoiled. A primitive fear had gripped me then. This man—he was trouble. If he came closer, I'd be sucked into his presence, his larger-than-life persona that dominated the room and sucked the oxygen from the space. Then he'd walked out of the light and the full impact of his blue-grey gaze had smashed into my chest. I swear, I'd forgotten how to breathe... My lungs had burned; my stomach had bottomed out. My knees had buckled under me and I'd had to hold onto the back of the chair in front of me to keep myself upright. He'd stared at me, no hint of any emotion on his face. He'd looked me up and down with an expression I can only describe as cold and calculating.

"Karina?" He'd spoken my name and the deep timber of his voice had rolled down my spine, coiled in my belly, and heat had pooled between my legs. That's when I'd known that I had to stay away from him. Keep as much distance as possible between me and his overpowering presence, the way he'd eaten me up with his gaze, had glared at me and peered into my soul as if he'd gleaned my secrets.

"Karina..." he whispers my name against my mouth and all of my senses pop to life; my pulse begins to race. I shove at his shoulders, and this time, he rolls off of me. Then rises to his feet. He holds out his hand to help me up; I ignore it.

I secure the sheet under my arms, then push myself up to standing position.

He peruses my features, his gaze intense. Heat sears my skin; my pulse pounds at my temples. There's no denying there's something between us. Shit, is that going to complicate the situation? Only if I let it. Which I am not going to do. Of course, not. I have more sense than to let that happen... Right?

I clear my throat, "you mentioned you could do anything you like with me?"

"Does that bother you?"

Yes.

Yes.

No. I scoff. "Nothing you do could possibly shock me."

"No?"

"It's what I'd expect from you, needing props to enhance your performance in bed."

"Is that what you think?" He laughs and his entire face lights up. His grey-blue eyes seem to glow with some kind of inner joke, one I am obviously not privy to.

"Why don't you enlighten me then?"

He shakes his head. "What would be the fun in that? Why can't you simply let the events unfold, take things as they come?"

"Is that what you do?" I frown. "Let things come to you?"

He looks me up and down. "After all, you did come to me."

"After you insisted that I check the camera on your yacht."

"Were you doing anything better?"

"Anything else would have been better than having to be here."

He clicks his tongue. "That's why you decided to stow away and fall asleep in my bed?"

I redden, then jut out my chin. "I was tired," I snap.

"So am I." He drags his fingers through his hair. "I don't want to fight with you, Sparks, much as it is refreshing as a form of foreplay—"

"Hold on." I fold my arms across my chest. "Is that what you think this is?"

"Are you denying that the attraction between us makes you antsy? That it doesn't make you want to throw yourself at me, and tear my clothes off, and jump me right now? That, as we speak, you're not undressing me, wondering what I have on below these?" He hooks his finger in the waistband of his shorts, and of course, my gaze darts to his crotch, at the trail of hair that disappears, at the tent in his crotch that he makes no pretense of hiding.

"I am not admitting to anything," I mutter.

"You will; it's only a matter of time." He smirks.

"Keep dreaming," I scoff.

"What makes you think I haven't been?"

"Huh?" I stare at him. "What do you mean?"

"Unlike you, I don't fight my instincts. Since the moment I laid eyes on you, I knew this day would arrive, when I'd have you with me, on my boat, in my bedroom..." he leans in close enough for his nose to bump mine, "at my mercy."

"Everything I'm doing is of my mercy." I tip up my chin.

"That's what I like about you." He chuckles. "That's what attracted me to you in the first place. The fact that you want to come out the winner in any situation. In that sense, we are very alike."

"I am nothing like you." I swipe my hair over my shoulder. "I am not the one taking unfair advantage of the situation I find myself in."

"Is that right?" He raises his arm and I flinch. He tucks a strand of hair behind my ear, "Keep telling yourself so and you'll still not believe it."

He peers into my eyes and I hold his gaze, stare into those deep fathomless eyes of his. "On the other hand, I agree that I need to make the most of this situation I find myself in. I want a child, the timing is right, and I could do worse for a father."

"Are you admitting that your genes and mine together could make for an extraordinary offspring?" He smirks.

"Any child of mine would be incredible," I glance up at the ceiling, "and yeah, you'll do for a father."

He laughs, then cups my cheek. "And I changed my mind. I want some rights."

"What?" I blink. "What do you mean?"

"Visitation rights, babe."

"I already told you I get sole custody of the child."

"And I am telling you now that I want visitation rights."

My heart begins to thud. This is going completely wrong. This isn't what I wanted. My child...belongs only to me. I am going to bring him or her up on my own.

"No," I snarl. "No way."

"Think about it." He raises his hand. "Don't turn it down so quickly."

"I don't want you in my child's life." I flatten my lips. "I don't need to think about it."

"You sure that you want to waste the opportunity you've been given of actually becoming pregnant? And all because of your own ego."

"My ego?" I gape. "Look who's talking. Only the most full-of-himself asshole that I've ever met."

"At your service." He straightens. "I don't make any pretenses about who I am. I like control, I like challenges, and I never turn down a dare."

"Is that why you like to chase storms?"

He straightens and I have to tilt my head further back to meet his gaze.

"Clearly, you have a death wish," I allow my lips to twist. "or maybe you like to challenge the elements?"

His gaze intensifies, his nostrils flare, and he clenches his fists at his sides. "What's it to you?" he finally growls. "You're still here, and so is this boat."

"Is that what you do when you disappear on one of your sailing trips?"
Shut up, already. What are you trying to do, push him? Goad him into losing his temper? Why can't you simply walk away from this entire deal anyway, huh?

"You have no idea what you're talking about," he barks.

"Oh?" I swallow down the dryness in my throat. "Enlighten me then."

"You haven't earned the right to that yet." He steps back and the heat of his body recedes. A chill grips me. I rub my fingers down my arm. Shit, why the hell do I already miss his proximity?

"Make up your mind about what you want. It's in your hands now." He looks me up and down. "Meanwhile, I'm going to take a shower."

Turning, he heads for the bath.

5

Arpad

I shove down my shorts and toss them aside. What the hell was I thinking, asking for visitation rights? And the kid is not even here. I mean, she isn't even pregnant and I am planning out some kind of future for us. Is that why I'd proposed the mock marriage, as a way to keep her close?

No... That much was true... I need to get my grandmother off my back about my family life, or lack of... And this is too good an opportunity to squander. Besides, what could be better than spending 30 days with the woman who's intrigued me since I'd first laid eyes on her. Fuck her, get her out of my system, and use her to divert my family's attentions. It's a perfect plan.

So why the hell are the visitation rights so important? The thought of her pregnant with my child, having one of my own... Something that had never occurred to me, not until she'd raised the topic. And no way, would I walk away from her if she became pregnant as a result of our possible liaison. Hold on...

A child? A fake marriage? Actually tying myself down to another in some form? Holy hell, how the fuck had my thinking changed so completely, and in a matter of minutes? I should have left her in my bed and walked away, but of course, I hadn't been able to resist watching her sleep. And when I'd undressed her earlier... Not that I would have taken advantage of her when she was asleep, but hell, I am man enough to appreciate the creamy flesh of her tits, the impossibly small waist, the rounded hips, the smooth thighs, and the sweet flesh between them.

The blood rushes to my groin. I can't stop the groan that grumbles up my chest. I've been sporting a hard-on since. Oh, I'd covered her up and walked away, but I hadn't been able to leave the room after that. And then I had to complicate it all. I flick on the shower and step under the spray. The steam from the shower rises up and I drag my fingers through my hair, pull it back from my face.

What the hell am I doing, even considering some kind of future between us? And why am I not repulsed by it? In fact, it feels... Different, new... Something to look forward to. Is that how bored I've grown with my life? Not even setting out on my yacht to sail off on another adventure holds the same appeal.

Just a phase. That's all it is. Just until I find the next takeover to occupy myself. Another storm to chase and conquer. She had been right about that, as well. How had she guessed my motivations so quickly?

Only the Seven know of my penchant of challenging the elements. I plot my trips carefully, to ensure I run through the eye of at least one storm; though the one last night had been just a spot of heavy weather. The real storm is still a few days off and that's where I am headed. With her on board, though, I need to change my route fast. Putting myself at risk is one thing... but her... No... I can't put her in jeopardy. Not in that way.

I reach forward to turn off the shower, when cool air touches my back. The door to the shower cubicle opens behind me, and before I can turn, she's slipped in front of me, straight in the path of the shower.

I stiffen. "What are you—"

"Shh." She reaches up to place a finger on my lips. "You get one hour per week in visitation rights."

I take in her bare shoulders, the curves of her gorgeous breasts, the flare of her bare hips. The water flows between her legs and droplets glisten above the cleft of her pussy.

My mouth dries; my fingers tingle to touch her.

I reach for her and she prompts me, "What do you say?"

I drag my gaze up to peer into her features. "It's not enough." I frown. "One day per week." I drag my fingers across my chest and her gaze drops there; her pupils dilate.

"Two hours," she whispers. "Please." She opens her mouth to speak and I shake my head. I squeeze her shoulders so she drops to her knees in front of me.

"Show me how much you want this deal."

She stares up at me, her eyelashes spiked from the water. Her dark hair sticks to her forehead, and ripples down her back. She draws in a breath and the tops of her tits tremble. Fuck me, but I want to grab those sweet globes and squeeze them. "Do it, Sparks," I order.

She sets her jaw, curves her fingers into fists at her sides. Her gaze narrows and color smears her cheeks. My cock instantly lengthens... This woman—her fire will be my undoing.

"Don't keep me waiting," I growl.

"Don't talk to me like that."

"I'll do anything I want to you for the next thirty days, and you'll take it."

"No." She rises up and I push her down again, and hold there. "Tick-tock, babe. You only have a few more hours when you are at your most fertile. You need this more than me."

"This isn't going to help me get pregnant, asshole," she growls.

"Alphahole." I peel back my lips and she glowers back.

"Last chance," I snap. "Take me in your mouth or—"

She reaches up, curls her fingers around the base of my cock and wraps her lips around the head.

She holds my gaze as she licks around the rim. My stomach muscles clench. She presses her other palm to my thigh for balance and her touch sets off flickers of lust in my groin. She squeezes the fingers of her other hand around the base of my shaft and I widen my stance to support myself better.

She bobs her head, takes me in further, and I can't stop the groan that rips from me. I dig my fingers into her hair, watch as more of the length of my cock disappears inside her mouth. She swallows and heat sears up my spine.

"Bloody hell." I cup the back of her head, pull her back, until I am balanced at the edge of her mouth. She stares up at me, her golden eyes daring me. She licks around the head of my dick, then releases the base of my dick to cup my balls. She squeezes and my adrenaline spikes. Fire laces my nerves and my groin tightens. I pull her forward so my cock slides down her throat. She gags; saliva drools from her lips and combines with the water from her shower.

"You're so bloody hot, Sparks," I growl. "I am going to take your mouth."

6

Karina

Blowjob, huh? I am going to suck his soul through his cock. I am going to blow him so hard he's going to see stars for days. At least, that had been my intention... Until he takes control. With him, there's no giving... Arpad f'ing Beauchamp always takes and takes... He tugs on my hair and pulls me away, "Breathe through your nose," he orders.

I draw in a breath, then another. He nods, then thrusts me forward so his cock hits the back of my throat again. He pulls back, then forward, again and again. His cock fills my mouth, my throat, the soft skin curved around the steel of his shaft. He digs his fingers into my hair and tugs. Pinpricks of pleasure sear my scalp.

Moisture pools between my legs and it's not from the shower. I reach down to touch myself and he snaps, "Not until I let you."

I stare up at him, at the water that clings to his shoulders, the marks of some kind of friction burns now faded against his skin, the tendons of his throat that stand out in relief under his skin. His jaw tics, as he continues to tug me forward and back, and forward. My teeth graze across his shaft and he hisses. "Fuck." He slaps his other hand against the shower wall as if to keep his balance. He widens his stance, looms over me as I dig my fingertips into his thigh, continue to massage his balls with the other. "Bloody hell." His thighs twitch, his upper body shudders as his chest rises and falls. "I'm going to come," he growls, right before his balls contract and he shoots his load. The salty taste of his cum fills my palate, overflows down my chin as he seems to come and come. I swallow and his entire body shudders. He pulls out, only to haul me up to my toes. He closes his mouth around mine, drinks from me, sucks on my tongue and ravishes my mouth. My core clenches and my knees threaten to give way. Without breaking the kiss, he bends, grabs me under my thighs and hauls me up and against the wall.

He nudges his dick against my opening and I shiver. He pulls me to him and thrusts into me in one smooth move. Too much, too full, he stretches my channel, crammed into me with such precision that it feels like we are two halves of a puzzle. There's so much of him, surely, he'll consume me. He'll split me open and I won't be able to resist him. I want him, want this... This...crazy hunger that tears at my gut, that crawls inside me, urging me to thrust my breasts up and into his chest. I lock my ankles around him, fold my arms around his neck and try to hold on as he begins to fuck me in earnest. The planes of his back flex; his hips contract as he pulls out, then plunges deep into me. I can't stop the howl that rips up my chest, but he swallows it. He cradles my head with his big palm, then he continues to plow into me again and again. My entire body jolts with the momentum. My tailbone smacks into the wall and pain sweeps up my spine. I moan and the sound coils in my core. His length throbs inside as he holds me pinned to the wall. "Arpad," I groan, "Goddam you."

He pulls out once more, then tips his hips forward and nails me with such force that my entire body jerks. Tendrils of pleasure curl in my core, I throw back my head and groan, "Ohmygod." My eyelids flutter down.

"Look at me, Sparks."

I snap my eyes open and stare into the depths of those grey-blue eyes.

"I am going to fuck you now."

"Wh... what?" I stutter.

He bares his teeth, in that primal look I am coming to classify as an Arpad special. He brings his fingers down and rubs his thumb into my swollen nub. Shockwaves course through me. My pulse rate ratchets up and my blood pounds so hard in my chest that I am sure I am going to black out any moment.

"Don't you dare," he growls. "Stay with me."

He holds my gaze, then he tilts his hips and drills into me again. He sinks so deep inside me that I am sure he's cleaved me in half. "Ah!" I throw back my head and connect with his palm.

"Eyes on me, Sparks."

I crack open my eyes, stare into his blue-grey ones which seem to have turned almost colorless. A nerve throbs at his temple.

He lowers his hand to curve his fingers around the nape of my neck. "Come," he growls, and the orgasm sweeps up my spine, shatters behind my eyes. Flashes of light consume me as I scream. He fits his lips to mine, absorbs every last sound. The climax fades away and I slump into him. He pulls out of me, then reaches behind me to shut off the shower. He carries me out of the cubicle, and lowers me to my feet.

I press into him and he holds me with one big arm around my waist. He reaches for a towel, wipes me down, slides it about his big body then throws it in the direction of the laundry basket. He swoops me up in his arms, carries me back to the bed, and tucks me in.

I crack my eyes open, drag my gaze down to his semi-erect cock. How the hell had he come so much and still not gone flaccid? "You didn't come inside me?" I mumble. "Why didn't you? It would have been the perfect time."

"Not yet." He circles his thumb across the edge of my lips. "I need you to be completely rested for what I have in mind."

He straightens and I am about to ask him what he's talking about. That's when he turns to go and I see the marks on his back. Had he been whipped? The lines crisscross his skin, turning his back into a patchwork of scars. My guts twist. Shit, that must have hurt a lot.

"Ari," I call out, "what happened to you?"

He pauses at the door, then glances over his shoulder. "You haven't earned the right to find out about that yet."

I open my mouth again and he shakes his head. "Sleep. You are going to need it."

Turning, he leaves.

How annoying. He could share a little more of himself. Not that I had done anything of that sort, or intend to let him closer. Still, he could open himself a little more about what had happened. After all, he could well be the father of my child... Not yet, considering he hasn't come inside of me. Why didn't he, though? How the hell had he restrained himself so? Why the hell is he holding back? I have to find out... Right after this nap. Darkness engulfs me and I close my eyes.

When I awake, the light radiates through the sliding doors. I grab my phone, check the time, then blow out a breath. It's only noon.

There's still time for him to shag me. In actual fact, I'll still be fertile in the next few days... Now, if only I can figure out why he didn't come inside me earlier.

I sit up and glance about the space. I spot the glass of water on the bedstand and down it. The muted thrum of the boat's engines rolls through the space as I swing my legs over and stand. My thighs protest. A sensation of him between my legs... Of how he'd pounded into me, how he'd kissed me. I touch my lips and wince. Hell, I feel raw all over. Like he fucked me hard... Which he did and didn't, and damnit, where is that jerk anyway? I need some answers. I glance around and find my handbag on the table. The coil of rope on the table is gone. Huh? Was it displaced when the boat hit the storm?

Where the hell are my clothes?

I glance around, then stalk over to the closet, pull it open. There are a few T-shirts, jeans, one set of formal wear, hung in one corner. I search for a pair of sweats, but can't find any. How strange.

I settle for a pair of his jeans, tying them at the waist with a belt—because that's the only way they'd stay up—then shrug into a sweatshirt. Of course, I am swimming in the clothes, but at least, I am covered. I roll up the sleeves of the sweatshirt, then pulling on a pair of thick socks, head out and into the living room. I walk up the small flight of steps to the captain's cabin and find him at the wheel.

He's changed into a pair of jeans and a sweatshirt that defines the breadth of his shoulders. He's so big that he blocks out the light that pours in from the windshield in front. His hair curls around his collar. His feet, clad in worn boots, are planted firmly on the floor. He seems at peace, more so than any other time I've seen him.

"You like being at sea."

"It's the only place where I feel free."

"Were you restrained a lot as a child?"

He freezes, doesn't reply for a few seconds. "What do you mean?" he finally asks.

"Were you disciplined a lot? Maybe you were sent to boarding school and found it stifling—?"

"I went to a day school with the rest of the Seven."

"Oh." I swallow. "Was that where you guys were—" I hesitate.

"Kidnapped from?" he drawls. "You can say it. We survived the ordeal. It made us who we are today."

"And what's that?" I scoff, "Ruthless, obnoxious, too confident..."

"Focused, goal-oriented, not hesitant to go after what we want..." He looks me up and down. "I rest my case."

"You didn't come after me," I protest.

"No, you came to me." He nods.

I stare at him. I mean, he is right, in a way. "It was a mistake, my being aboard this boat when you left the dock. You know that, right?"

"Or maybe a Freudian slip?" He curls his lip. "Maybe you wanted to stow away, maybe you wanted to be found out by me, and maybe you wanted to spend time with me."

"Maybe I did want you to be my sperm donor..."

"Did you?"

"I admit, there is something here," I wave at the space between us, "but most of the time, I want to slap your face."

"Getting kinky, are we?"

I scoff, "Only you would enjoy that."

"Don't be so sure you wouldn't."

"Don't you dare." I fold my fingers at my side.

"Don't challenge me." His features harden. "For the next thirty days, you do what I ask, no questions."

"Yeah, yeah," I mutter. "So, what's next? You going to throw me down and fuck me?"

"Don't be crude." He smirks. "And by the way, my clothes look good on you."

I shiver. His clothes. I am wearing them, and while it is out of necessity, it seems more intimate than I care for the situation to be. "It's temporary," I mutter. "What did you do with my clothes?"

"You won't need them anymore."

"Wait, what?" I blink. "What do you mean?"

"You wear what I allow you to, for the next—"

"Thirty days, yeah, yeah." I throw up my hands. "You sound like a broken record."

"Calm down." He presses a few buttons on the dash, then slaps a lever in place. "There, that should do to keep the boat on course for a while."

Which is more than I can say about my life right now.

He turns to face me, "Are you hungry?"

7

Karina

Twenty minutes later he places a plate of French Toast on the table in the galley.

"Breakfast for lunch?" I ask.

"Are you complaining?"

"No, actually, this is my favorite dish." I glance up at him, "I could eat it all day."

"I'll keep that in mind."

Alphahole being nice to me? I scan his features but his expression seems sincere enough. Hmph. I stare down, take in the perfectly presented plate.

Damn, he's even dusted powdered sugar on the French Toast. For someone who's an obnoxious grumpy-pants, he's gone to great efforts to prepare this meal for me. Fine, fine, so he can cook. So what? Doesn't make him more appealing. Of course, not.

He seats himself at the lone chair, then proceeds to uncork a bottle of champagne. The liquid fizzes out.

"What are we celebrating?"

"You, us... The start of a beautiful relationship?"

"Nothing beautiful about it so far," I snort, before turning it into a cough.

"What's that?" He smirks. "You say something?"

"Me?" I widen my gaze, "Of course, not. Just admiring your presentation of the food. I had no idea you could cook."

"I had no idea you couldn't."

I frown, "How do you know that?"

"Lucky guess?" He pours out a glass of champagne, then holds it up to me. "To us."

I don't respond. I watch as he takes a sip, then nods in approval. "Want a taste?"

I shake my head. "I am not...drinking."

He blinks, then comprehension fills his face, "Because you're uh..."

I nod, "Yeah, because I'm readying my body for a possible pregnancy."

He takes one more sip, then places the glass aside. "I won't either, then."

Huh? I stare. "You don't have to... I mean, you can..." I shake my head. "Why would you do something like that?"

He frowns down at the plate of food, then back up at me, "Seems the right thing to do. After all, I am one-half of the equation here... At least, for the next—" he stops and chuckles, "few days."

"Good save," I mutter. "Is that food for me?" I jerk my chin toward the plate.

"It's for us."

"I don't see a chair for me."

"I never have company on this boat."

"You mean you've never..."

"Never had a woman on board," he confirms. "You are the first."

"Not sure how I feel about that." I walk over to the table, reach for the sole fork and knife he's placed there. He slaps away my hand.

"Ouch." I shake out my fingers. "What was that for?"

"No eating until I feed you."

"What?" I exclaim. "This is complete bullshit. Don't tell me you have no other cutlery."

"This is it," he confirms to me. "I don't carry any extra weight aboard this ship."

Except for me, apparently.

He pats his lap, "Come here, Sparks."

I stare at him. "And if I won't?"

"Where will you go?" He glances about the space. "We are at sea, in case you've forgotten."

Not likely.

"Come on," he lowers his voice to a hush, "be a good girl now."

I set my jaw. Hate being called that. Good girl, huh?

He cuts himself a piece of the French Toast and eats it. "Mmm." He licks his lips. "Sure you don't want to share?"

My stomach rumbles. He cuts another slice, then forks it up, and offers it to me. "Go on, you know you want to."

"Only if I can feed myself."

"Not happening."

I fold my hands about my waist.

"If not for yourself, then think of the child you want to conceive. You need all the nutrients you can get for that, don't you?"

I pale. "Bastard."

He blows out a breath. "This is getting tiresome. Apparently, you still haven't committed to our agreement."

I have and I haven't. I mean he's definitely the best candidate for my plan to have a child of my own. If only I weren't this attracted to him. Or if I weren't actually looking forward to sleeping with him...

Hell... This isn't supposed to be remotely enjoyable. Not something I should be looking forward to... But the thought of those fingers on my skin again, those lips on mine, the rasp of his whiskers across my inner thighs as he swipes his tongue up toward my core... A shiver runs down my spine. My toes curl. No doubt, he is virile enough that I'll be pregnant by the end of the week... But what will I have given up by then? And it isn't about the fact that I'll see him afterward, accompany him when he visits his parents, or the possible visitation rights that he wants... Which, by the way, I have no intention of granting him...

It is...the fact that I will not come out of this entire encounter unscathed. Our interaction in the shower had confirmed to me what I already knew... The man will seduce me, bulldoze through any barriers I may have built, and imprint himself on my body, my soul...my emotions... No way, am I going to let him do that. I need to find a way to protect myself. I need to...be compliant to what he wants, pretend to give in, while I guard that part of me deep inside that belongs only to me. If he thinks I am giving him anything more than my body, he is so wrong. The only way out is to beat him at his own game.

"Fine," I mutter, "have it your way." I brush past the table and plonk myself on his lap.

He frowns at me, then reaches down to scoop up some of the food. "Open," he holds the fork to my mouth. I part my lips and he feeds me. I curl my tongue around the tines and lick up every last remnant of the morsel.

His eyelids grow heavy as he watches me chew, then swallow.

He holds up another forkful to me, and another, follows my every move closely. I wriggle around to make myself more comfortable in his lap, and my thigh brushes the hard column at the crotch of his jeans.

"Oh." I freeze.

"Surprised?" He holds out another forkful to me.

"I'm more unsure why you didn't allow yourself to come inside me earlier," I mumble.

"Patience, Sparks." His lips curl. "I plan to take my time with you, savor your every curve, lick your skin, taste your cunt, spank your butt and suck on your nipples, until you come from the sensations."

I swallow.

"That...uh, that sounds uncomfortable."

"Oh, trust me, I am going to make you very uncomfortable."

"You...you are?"

He nods.

"Make no mistake, I am going to worship you. I am going to dominate you. I want more than sex with you." He leans in closer until his eyelashes brush mine. "I am going to make art with you—dirty, filthy, impossibly screwed-up, emotionally moving art, that's going to consume you and me, and by the end, you won't know where you begin and where I end."

Heat blooms between my legs; I squeeze my thighs together.

"And what happened earlier in the shower?" I force out the words through cracked lips.

"Just an appetizer." His smile widens, "I am going to swallow all of you, Sparks. And by the time you realize it, it will be too late. I won't stop until you're a part of me, until I am imprinted in every cell of your body. That's what you agreed to and I intend for you to honor this understanding."

My throat closes and my nipples harden to pinpoints of pain. Bloody hell, if he can turn me on with just his words, how will it feel when he goes through with what he has in his mind?

"That's only for the duration of our arrangement, isn't it?"

His forehead creases.

"Tick-tock, Alphahole." I curve my lips. "You are wasting time already. Or maybe you are better at threats than actual action, huh? Maybe..." I close the distance even further until my lips almost touch his, "maybe your threats don't measure up to what you can actually deliver, huh?"

Arpad

What the hell? Why is she provoking me? Her pupils dilate, her breath hitches, and if I glance down, I have no doubt that I'll see her nipples outlined against the fabric of my sweatshirt.

"It won't work," I drawl.

"What?"

"Your less-than-effective attempt at getting a reaction from me. No one forces me, of course. Least of all, you, Sparks."

"Is that your opinion?"

"It's my experience." I grab her waist, then lift her up and plant her on her feet. She squeaks.

"Take it off," I growl.

"What?" She frowns.

I jerk my chin at her clothes, "Those are mine."

"I don't have anything else to wear."

I glare at her.

"You expect me to be naked?"

"You challenged me. You lost the right to wear clothes."

"Have you lost your mind?" She gapes. "This is the twenty-first century. You don't get to treat me like...like..."

"My possession?" I kick up my lips. "Oh, but you are sweetheart. You're on my yacht, where my word is final."

She opens and closes her mouth. "This is ridiculous."

"Is it?" I fold my arms across my chest. "Strip," I snap, "or I'll make you do it."

Her cheeks tinge red, and the pulse at the base of her neck speeds up. She reaches down, grabs the hem of the sweatshirt and pulls it up and off of her. Her breasts capture my gaze instantly. Creamy with pink areolas and dark nipples that stick up at me. My fingers tingle and the blood rushes to my groin. I stare down at the jeans that hang low on her waist. "Take them off, but first your socks."

She bends to slip off her socks, then unknits the belt. She slips her fingers under the waistband and pushes them down to reveal the length of her thighs; her tiny waist, the flare of those beautiful hips that I'd had under my fingers not too long ago. I draw in a breath, can't take my gaze off that gorgeous smooth-shaven pussy that I want to suck on; right before I thrust my tongue inside her and eat her out until she comes again. My groin hardens. A bead of sweat drips down my temple.

I ball my fingers at my sides, watch as she kicks off her jeans.

She plants her hands on her hips, tips up her chin and meets my gaze. "Enough?"

"Not really."

I circle the air with my fingers and her nostrils flare. Her golden eyes blaze at me. She draws in a breath and I shake my head. "You need me more than I need you, babe. Remember, you need me to pump you up with my cum before the end of the day.

"You're so damn crude," she splutters.

"It's the truth."

"Fine. Fine." She spins around on her heels, then faces me. "Happy?"

"Once more, and slowly."

She grits her teeth. A chuckle boils up and I press my lips closed. Wouldn't do to tell her just how adorable I find her right about now.

"Do it," I snap instead. She stares at me then pivots on her heel. By the time she's done a full circle, goosebumps pepper her skin.

"You're cold."

"Of course, I'm cold, you ass. I'm naked and it's the middle of winter, and we are out on the godforsaken sea."

"That won't do." I click my tongue. "I think it's best I warm you up."

I step forward and she skitters back.

"Do I scare you?"

"Of course, not," she scoffs. "In my line of work, I've seen all kinds. Especially egomaniacs, who think they own the world, are a dime a dozen.'

"You've never met someone like me, I promise."

"Oh?"

"I don't think... I actually do own everything I see right now, including you."

"So you keep saying." She purses her lips. "Except, you haven't delivered on your promise yet."

"Eager to have me inside you? Do you want me to fuck you right here on the table, Sparks?"

She swallows; her gaze darts to the table then back to my face.

"Is that what you're going to do?"

I tilt my head, pretend to consider it. "No."

"Then what?"

"I am going to tie you up, first."

"What?"

I bend my knees, thrust my face into hers, "Run, Sparks. The longer you evade me, the easier I'll go on you."

"Are you serious?"

"Go," I snap.

She turns, then dashes out of the galley. I follow her at a leisurely pace, as she races down the steps, across the living room, to the door that leads out to the upper deck.

"What the fuck?" My heart slams into my ribcage. I race forward, reach the door to the deck in time to see her disappear under the waves.

"No fucking way," I roar. "What have you done?"

I run back to the cabin, drop the sea anchor to limit the progress of the yacht; then race back to the deck, toe off my sneakers, and dive in after her.

I hit the water and the impact shudders through me. The cold overpowers me, flash-freezes me from head to toe for a second. I dive down into the depths, then open my eyes. Where the hell is she? Why the hell did she do this? This woman... Wait until I get my hands on her.

I catch a glimpse of white from the corner of my eye. I swim through the darkened water toward it, when something grabs my ankle. My pulse rate ratchets up. I glance down to find it's her. She yanks me down. I reach for her. She evades me, pulls me down with a sharp tug. I lose my equilibrium, descend further. By the time I find my balance and swim upward, she's far above me. Of course, the woman swims like a fish and when I get ahold of her... Adrenaline laces my blood. I kick my legs, propel forward, up through the depths. I reach her as she breaks the surface. I swim after her, swoop forward to grab her, miss. She pulls forward. I put on a burst of speed and grab her ankle as she reaches the yacht.

"Let me go," she pants. She kicks out at me.

I duck to avoid her, then yank her to me, "What the hell were you thinking?" I yell.

"I wanted to get away from you," she gasps.

"So you jump overboard?"

"Seemed like the thing to do." She tosses her head.

"You're in so much trouble." I thrust my face into hers. "Get on the boat."

"Oh, fuck you."

"Oh, I'm going to do that too," I growl. "But first, I am going to whip your arse for what you did."

8

Karina

"Ow, you asshole, let go of me." I strain from my position where I am sprawled across the bastard's lap.

He'd shoved me onto the boat, climbed on after me, then dragged me inside the yacht. He'd held onto me as I'd shivered in his grasp, while he hauled anchor, and pressed a few buttons. The boat had restarted, he'd pulled a lever, then he'd turned me over on his knee.

"W...wait," I stutter through the trembling that grips me, and it's because I am chilled to the bone. Honestly, that's all it is. "Don't you... n...n...eed to steer the boat or something?"

"Auto-pilot," he bites out.

"I... I'm...cold." I try to pull away from him. "I think I need a hot shower.

"I have a better way to warm you up." He drags me back onto his lap, before his palm connects with my left asscheek.

"What the hell are you doing?" I yell.

"I've gone easy on you so far. I should have known you'd take advantage of my good nature."

"Good nature?" I shove the hair back from my face, "You don't have a bloody good-natured bone in your entire body."

"If that were true, I would have let you drown. Instead, here I am, trying to pound some sense into you."

He spans my right butt cheek, then the left again.

"Ow, that hurts, you bastard."

"Say you're sorry for what you did," he demands.

"No," I snap. "You told me you'd go easier on me the longer I could evade you."

"So you decided to put yourself at risk?"

"It's my life, you...you...complete cock. I'll do with it what I want."

"Wrong answer. Your life belongs to me, for the duration of the arrangement, and I forbid you to do anything that will jeopardize it. You understand?"

He spans me with such force that my entire body jerks.

"Say you understand."

"I do," I howl. "Okay, I understand."

"Good."

He smacks me once more across my butt and I scream.

"What the fuck? Why did you do that?"

"Just insurance."

"Stop," I beg. "No more, please."

Tears prick the backs of my eyes. Seriously? I can't be crying. Not now. I'd refused to bend to him; I'd been right in that... Though diving into the water? That had been spur of the moment, and probably stupid, to say the least.

"It's all your fault," I huff. "You are so bloody high-handed, it makes me want to defy you."

He cups my burning asscheek, massages the pain into my skin. I shiver. Only because I'm cold. It's nothing to do with how warm his palm feels against my skin. Nothing to do with how wet I am between my legs. And no, it's not due to the dunking I just took.

Another shudder grips my shoulders.

He pauses, then straightens to his feet and throws me over his shoulder.

"Hey," I protest, staring at his very hard, very hot backside. Jesus, why the hell does he have to be in such good shape? I reach down to pinch his ass, and he clicks his tongue.

"Don't," he growls, "not unless you want the favor returned."

The skin on my backside twinges in reaction. Nope, no way, can I deal with any more of his attentions on my posterior. Not right now.

He hauls me into the bathroom, turns on the shower and dumps me under it. I turn into the hot water, then wince when my backside protests.

The cubicle door shuts, and he steps in behind me. "Don't hog all the water," he commands.

He pours shampoo into his hand, washes the sea water out of my hair, then turns me around and begins to soap me.

"Hey," I grab his wrist, "what the hell are you doing?"

"Taking care of my property." He glares at me, and I shiver. "Lower your hands to your sides," he orders.

Only when my fingers touch my thighs do I realize I've obeyed him. Jerk.

He washes every part of my body—my hips, my thighs, between my legs—with clinical precision. He squats down, then raises one foot onto his thigh. I hold onto his shoulder for support as he cleans between my toes, brushes across the underside of my feet.

A giggle bursts from my throat.

He glances up at me. "Ticklish, huh?"

I purse my lips.

He repeats the action with my other foot, as I try desperately not to laugh, then rises up and begins to wash his hair with the motions of a man who's done so almost every day of his life.

I pour out some of the liquid soap, then rub it across his pecs, down his cut abs, across his thighs. I soap between his legs and his shaft throbs in my grasp.

I glance up to find him staring down at me.

I hold his gaze, move aside to allow the water to wash off the soap from his groin. Then I sink to my knees. Without breaking eye contact, I take him inside my mouth.

"Hell." His knees seem to buckle; he digs his fingers into my hair and tugs. Goosebumps rise on my skin. I bob my head, take him in and his cock hits the back of my throat.

His gaze intensifies. His nostrils flare. He pulls out, then hauls me to my feet, reaches behind me to shut off the shower.

"I wanted to—"

"You'll do as I say—no more, no less. You get me?"

"Yes..." For some reason I want to say 'master,' but no way, am I going to give him the satisfaction of that.

He walks out of the shower cubicle, holds out a towel. I step into it and he rubs me down. Once more, he takes his time and pays special attention to my breasts, my hips, my thighs. He pats down the flesh between my legs and I shudder.

He tosses the towel aside, grabs a fresh one and dries himself off. Then he hauls me up in his arms.

"I can walk," I protest.

"Something I intend to remedy."

"Wh...what do you mean?" My belly flutters and moisture laces my core.

He smirks down at me. "You'll see."

He stalks outside, lowers me to the floor half-way between the bed and the door. "Stay," he commands, then walks over to the bed and seats himself. Legs wide, his already hard cock juts up against his stomach.

He jerks his chin, "Crawl to me."

"What?" I stare at him. "No."

"Look outside," he orders.

I glance through the glass windows to find the sunrays lengthening. It's approaching 5pm. I know because I'd checked my phone earlier.

"How many hours do you have left in your ovulation window?"

Bastard. So that's why he hasn't put his dick inside me yet? He wants to wait until he makes me submit? We'll see.

I glare at him and he glances down at the floor, then back at me.

"Do it," he says.

I sink to my knees, then lower my palms to the floor and crawl across the floor. When I reach him, I pause, then tip my head up.

"Good girl."

I flush. Why the hell do his compliments mean so much?

He reaches for the first aid kit I only now notice on the bed-stand. He pulls out some cotton, dabs on some antiseptic, then proceeds to dab at the bump on my forehead which, honestly, I'd forgotten all about until he'd brought my attention back to it.

I try to pull away and he grunts, "Hold still."

He pinches my chin so I don't have a choice but to obey. He cleans the wound, pastes on a fresh plaster, then leans back to survey his handiwork.

"Not so hard, was it?" he grunts.

"Why are you doing this?" I mutter.

"Shh," he notches his knuckle under my chin, leans down and brushes his lips over mine. "You don't get to talk, Sparks. Not until I give you permission."

I scowl. "I am not so sure I like this agreement."

He peers into my eyes. "Want to cancel it, then?"

I swallow, stare at him.

"Giving up so soon?" He curls his lips. "Didn't take you for a quitter."

I'm not. I firm my lips. Besides, I've come this far, and I am so close to my goal. So close to getting what I want—a chance at a baby of my own.

"Want to call it off?" he asks.

I shake my head.

"So, you'll do as I say?"

I nod.

"Good, close your eyes."

9

Karina

I close my eyes, and instantly, all of my other senses come into focus. That dark masculine scent of his magnifies; the force of his dominance crashes into my chest, pins me down and holds me in place. My nerve endings thrum. Every part of me is focused on him...The slide of his feet on the wooden floor, the warmth from his body as it envelopes me.

I sense his gaze raking over my features, my breasts, the flesh between my legs. Can't stop the blush that rises to my cheeks.

"You're beautiful," he rumbles.

That hard voice rolls down my front, coils low in my belly as he, no doubt, intended.

I sense him rise to his feet, turn my head to follow as he steps past me.

I must have made a sound or he must sense my discomfort, for he presses his hand into my shoulder. "I'll be right back."

And damn, if his touch isn't reassuring?

I track his footsteps across the floor, then the sound of the closet door opening. The rustle of fabric, the whisper of something else... Something soft that slithers against his skin. The hair on the nape of my neck rises.

His footsteps approach; he pauses behind me. I shiver. Somehow, even with my eyes closed, I am aware of how he must tower over me, how he must glance down at me, how at his mercy I am right now.

A soft cloth wraps over my eyes.

I whimper.

"Shh," his warm breath grazes my ear, "I'll take good care of you."

That's what I'm afraid of.

He knots the cloth behind my head, then places his palm on the flat of my back. He urges me to place my cheek onto the mattress.

I sense rather than hear the slither of something. A rope, maybe?

"What are you doing?" I stutter.

"I won't hurt you."

Won't you?

His breathing is steady as he slides what I assume to be a knot up each of my arms and around my shoulder. He cinches the rope at my back over my spine, then slides it up and round my biceps.

"You alright?"

I swallow.

"Nod, if you are."

I nod.

"Does it feel okay?"

I draw in a breath. It feels strange. It feels...not bad. It feels restrictive, but not in a bad way. I nod.

His actions seem to speed up as he knots the rope again at my back, then slides two more knots up my arms to above my elbows.

He leans in and presses a kiss to the back of my neck, "Okay?"

I nod.

"How does that feel?"

Strange, but not as much as I would have expected. It's actually freeing... Like I don't have to do anything but follow the sensations as he ties me up. OMG, he's tying me up! What the hell is he going to do to me after? My heart begins to thud and my pulse quickens. I draw in a breath, but I can't seem to get enough air.

"Hey." He wraps his arms around me, and pulls me up against his chest. "You okay?"

I shake my head vigorously. No, no... Jeez, this isn't what I signed up for. Give me the cold impersonal touch of the technician who slides the sperm into my uterus.

He tucks my head under his chin, tightens his hold about my body. The hard warmth of him sinks into my blood. The planes of his chest dig into my back. The pain is almost a comfort.

"Shh." He lowers his head, presses his cheek into mine. "You're safe, I promise. I'll never let anyone harm you."

But who will keep me safe from you?

Bloody hell, stop with that line of thought. Alphahole, here, is simply screwing with my head. Mean one moment, soft the next, and this entire tying me up thing... Bet it's simply to signal to me that he is the dominant one in this relationship. To flout his ownership, no doubt. Doesn't mean anything. A shudder grips me. I set my jaw, take a fortifying breath.

"Ready to resume?" he asks.

I straighten my shoulders. I can do this. I can match him step for step. I nod.

"You're fucking perfect." He presses a hard kiss to the corner of my mouth. A flush ripples over my skin. He moves away and I lean in his direction.

He chuckles. "Soon. First I want to ensure you're relaxed."

Relaxed? He's kidding right? How am I supposed to relax when I'm all bound up?

He continues to knot the rope at my back, then slide the knots—

"They're called wings." He says as he tugs on the ropes that slide up each arm.

He tugs the center of the binding that sits in a heavy chain down my spine.

"How does it feel now?"

I tilt my head. Not sure really.

"Would you like it tighter?"

Yes.

Yes.

No. I shake my head.

"Okay, maybe next time?"

Keep dreaming.

He continues placing the knots against my spine, then finally, pulls my wrists together at my back. He places my palms together and whispers the top around my palms. He knots and tugs, then sits back. "Beautiful."

The reverence in his voice makes me blink behind my blindfold.

He guides me up to my feet, then hoists me up onto the bed, on my knees. He presses down on my upper back and I bend over and press my cheek into the mattress. He grips my thighs and pries them apart. Cool air hits my center. I shudder. My breathing grows more shallow. I am painfully conscious of where I am—on his yacht, in the middle of nowhere, away from anyone I could reach for help, and bound and blindfolded with my ass up in the air. My core clenches, moisture pools between my legs. I swallow and wait... Wait.

"You're gorgeous." His low voice shudders up my spine. I press my palms together, and damnit, if he hasn't orchestrated it so that I seem to be praying to him... Begging him... Pleading to him... For what?

He grips my hips on either side, his palms so big, so warm that surely, each fingerprint is burned into my flesh.

Something nudges at the opening of my slit and I stiffen.

"Shh." He massages the curve of my waist. "Relax." He stays right there, with the head of his cock teasing the opening of my entrance. I draw in a breath, another, force my shoulder muscles to unwind. I am not giving in to this man, not that easily. I will not allow him to overwhelm me. I push my cheek further into the mattress, widen my knees further.

He slips inside me, and a shudder of heat ripples up my spine.

He pulls out, then rubs his dick across my pussy, and again. My belly flip-flops. My thigh muscles shudder. He drags his cock up the valley between my butt cheeks, teases my back hole. I clench my butt. No. I shake my head. Don't you dare.

"You're going to ask me to take you there one day. You know that, right?"

I snort, then cry out when he thrusts into my melting channel in one smooth move. Goddamn him, how does he always find a way to surprise me?

He stays there, his throbbing length buried inside of me, stretching me, allowing me to adjust. As if that were possible? How can he fill me up so? How can he be so bloody big?

He bends over, and the warmth of him sears my back. He wraps my hair around his palm, tugs my head up and toward him. He presses his mouth to mine. "Give in to me," he whispers.

No! I shake my head.

He straightens and pulls out in one smooth move, only to thrust into me with such force that my entire body jolts. The bed frame protests. He plunges in and out of me, in and out.

He releases his hold on my hair, only to squeeze my butt with just enough force that I squeeze my inner muscles around him

A groan rumbles from him. "You're so hot, so tight. You feel incredible, Sparks."

He propels his hips forward and impales me, hits that spot deep inside me again and again with such precision that I gasp. The climax sweeps up my thighs, my spine... Explodes behind my eyes with enough force that I throw my head back and scream as I fall apart. He continues to thrust in and out, then wraps his fingers around my neck. He bends over me, kisses me on my lips once, then whispers, "I am going to fuck you now."

Wait, what? What the hell is he talking about?

He pulls out, then impales me in one long, smooth stroke that fills me up completely. I can't stop the moan that spills from my lips. He begins to pound into me, fucking me as he'd promised. With every stroke his balls hit my sensitized clit. Each time he sinks into me, ripples of heat shoot up my spine. My knees tremble and my toes curl. I can't come again, not so soon, surely not.

He tightens his grip around my neck, enough that my lungs begin to burn. Spots of darkness creep in along the sides of my vision. He tilts his hips and buries himself inside me with such force that I can feel every ridge and bump of his shaft.

A trembling grips me. He releases his hold around my neck, allowing the oxygen to rush to my lungs. He leans over, and commands, "Come," and I shatter as he comes inside me.

10

Arpad

I watch her sleep, her eyelashes dark against her cheeks. Her lips are parted. Her hair in tangles from how I'd wrapped it around my palm and tugged. She'd climaxed again, and watching her fall apart on my cock had been the sweetest thing ever. I'd unbound her right after, pulled her up the bed and into my arms. She'd fallen asleep with her head on my chest, her arm flung around my waist. I'd wanted to drift with her, but the thought that she could possibly, very soon, carry my child... A hot sensation stabs at my chest. Somehow, this is not what I had bargained for when I had set out on this trip. Or when I had proposed that she accompany me on my trip home as my pretend wife. I hadn't expected to feel...this pull...this need to take care of her. This need to push her away, yet make her climax again.

I slide out from under her, pick up the rope from the floor and fold it into a figure eight. I place it on the coffee table, slip on my jeans, and walk to the cabin of the ship.

I pick up the satellite phone and dial.

"Mr. Beauchamp?" Edward answers the phone. "Where are you calling from this time?"

"I'm on my way to Lille in France to see my family."

"Don't you like your alone time on these trips? To what do I owe this pleasure?"

"Considering four of the Seven have seen fit to tie the knot and Baron's unreachable...well..."

"You mean I was your last option?"

"Currently, my only option."

"Don't tell me," his sigh is loud over the waves, "woman trouble, huh?"

"What makes you say that?"

"It's the only time you Seven want a sounding board... That, or when you want to get married."

"About that," I cough.

"No," Edward begins to laugh, "don't tell me. Not you too, Arpad? What the hell is happening to you guys?"

"There's nothing like that," I assure him.

He only laughs harder.

I pull the phone away from my ear and stare at it. What the fuck is wrong with him?

"Come on, man," I bark down the receiver, "get a grip."

"Fine." He chokes down a chuckle, then seems to compose himself. "So, what's up with you and Karina?"

"What the fuck do you mean by me and Karina?"

"Aw, come on. You don't think the sparks between you two have gone unnoticed by the rest of us, do you?"

"What sparks?"

"Really?" He scoffs, "You're going to deny that there's something between the two of you."

"I would have if you'd asked me a few hours ago."

"What do you mean?"

"She's with me."

"What?" he exclaims. "On the boat?"

"It's a bloody expensive yacht," I growl.

"Hmm."

"What do you mean by that?" I frown.

"You could always turn around and drop her off, couldn't you?"

"I was too far from shore by the time I found out about her presence."

"So, you're taking her along for this trip?"

"Taking her to meet the family."

"A bit premature, isn't it?" He chuckles again.

"Stop cackling," I mutter, then rub the back of my neck. "She's agreed to pose as my wife."

"Wife?"

"Fake wife."

"Right."

"Why do you sound like you don't believe this?" I complain.

"If you only knew the number of conversations I've had with each of the four who got hitched." He pauses and I can sense him shaking his head. "They each insisted there was nothing to it, yet they all ended up married. Not that I am complaining. I, for one, happen to think marriage is a gift from God."

"Right."

"You don't believe me?"

"Not here to debate the merits and demerits of the institution." I scowl. "And I called to speak to Edward my friend, not Edward the priest."

There's silence, then Edward replies, "Not that the two can be differentiated from each other."

"Come on, man, I could do with a second opinion."

"None needed, you're in love," he declares.

I swear, "Thought you, at least, were beyond that childish stuff."

"Think what the others found with their women is childish?"

I blink. "They were exceptions. Lucky bastards, who connected with the right woman at the right time."

"And here you are, on a boat, with the woman you've worshiped from afar—"

"Worshipped?"

"—but never had the balls to tell her how you feel about her."

"Now, hold on." I plant my phone on my other ear. "That's a bit harsh, don't you think? Considering she's been a thorn in my side all this time."

"No kidding. You guys have had it bad for each other since you first met."

"Yeah, we can't stand the sight of each other."

"And yet, you didn't throw her off your boat."

"Not like I could have dumped her out in the middle of nowhere."

"Instead, you're passing the time how?"

"Uh, she wants me to father a child with her."

"What—?" he shouts. "And you're telling this to me... A priest?"

"And my friend."

"You know what I'm going to advise you then?"

"To marry her?" I venture

"Or walk away from her."

"I don't know..." I ponder my choices.

He blows out a breath. "So how can I help you then?"

"Is it wrong for me to want to be a part of this child's life?"

"Assuming a child does result from your relationship, you mean?" he reminds me.

How strange, I've been so very sure that I'll have her pregnant very soon. I shake my head, "Yes, exactly."

"I'd expect no less from you."

"Hmm." I squeeze the bridge of my nose.

"You don't sound convinced."

"I am a bit confused," I mutter. "And don't ever tell the rest of the Seven I admitted to that."

"Your secrets are safe with me."

"Did Baron confide in you too?"

"Huh?" I hear his surprise across the phone line. "Why do you ask that?"

"Only because all of us tend to confide in you."

"It's natural, since I am a priest."

"And a billionaire."

"My money's in a trust, which supports various charities."

"That's noble of you, Father."

"We're not talking about me, though," he reminds me.

"True." I rub the back of my neck. "So, what should I do?"

"Nothing."

"That's your advice?" I growl. "To stay put—"

"And let nature take its course."

"Meaning?"

"Even when you think you're doing nothing, forces beyond your control are at work."

"Is that your belief?"

"It's the way life is."

"Damn, I hate how fatalistic you sound."

"All I'm asking is that you trust the process."

"You mean trust in God?" I mutter.

"You said it," he says lightly.

"Hmm." I roll my shoulders. "So, go ahead with this plan, take her home to see the family?"

"If your instinct says that's right."

"Thanks, Father," I grumble. "Good talk."

"You did all the talking." He laughs.

"Yeah, that's what I mean. How is it that you manage to say so much without saying much at all?"

"It's an art. One I've had time to perfect."

"Of all of us, you were always the most slippery."

"Why, because I forged my own path?"

"Because—" The screen in front of me beeps with an incoming weather forecast. I glance at it, then speak into the phone. "It's because you were the most courageous of all of us."

"You mean the weakest, right?" he replies. "After all, I'm the one who renounced the world and took the easy way out."

"What you did was no mean feat. You dug into yourself, found what your conscience demanded of you and pursued it. Only question is, did it work?"

His sigh is heavy. "I'll let you know when I know."

The computer screen in front of me beeps again, "Before I go, there's one more thing. Can you call Karina's second-in-command and let her know that she's taking a few days off and can't be reached? Meredith—" I refer to our assistant, "has all the information you need."

"Okay." I sense Edward nod down the phone. "Remember what I said? Follow your instinct."

I disconnect the phone call, glance down at the weather report again. "Fuck me."

A sound behind me has me swinging around.

I scowl, "What are you doing here?"

11

Karina

"Jesus, you're touchy today." I hold up my hands, "See, no weapons. I am no threat."

"Snooping on me, huh?" He smirks, "Did you miss me?" He looks me up and down, takes in the T-shirt—his T-shirt—I'd pulled on before I'd wandered over.

"Of course, not." I scowl back. "I was simply curious."

I nod toward the computer screen he'd been looking at, "Everything okay there?"

He glances back at the screen, "It will be."

"What's that supposed to mean?" I walk over and peer around him at the screen. "What's that?" I point to the concentric circles splayed over blotches of red and green.

"The weather forecast."

"Huh." The images on the screen blip and change. "It's like no forecast I have seen before."

He chuckles. "I'd be surprised if it were. These here are files from the Numerical Weather Prediction programs."

"What does that mean?"

"It's raw weather forecast data, that helps me plan ahead."

"How's that?"

"It allows me to look at the overall pattern being shown by the files, rather than the wind at points." He scans my features, "Does that make sense?"

"It gives you the big picture?"

He nods. "It's the raw prediction with nothing added and nothing taken away, which allows me to be in control of what factors I should consider on top of this standard information."

"What other factors would you consider?"

"I tend to use this app," he nods toward another screen, "to share how the fronts and wind systems are developing over time. It's a three-step approach, effectively." He gestures with his hand, "You have the coastal waters on the English side first. So, I would look at what sort of acceleration I'll be getting there and consider the tide. Then I'll look at some other coast-specific forecasts to see if that is predicting any sort of thermal enhancement. Then, the further offshore you get, the more the accuracy of these files," he taps at the screen I'd first seen, "increases. So, I'd be focusing on them and what I expect to come in, based on what has been developing out there. When I get to the other side of the Channel, I would, once again, look at high-resolution files, compare them with a coastal waters forecast, or something similar for that side, to see if they are matching what the weather prediction files suggest and what I expect."

I stare at his face.

"What?" He scowls.

"It's the first time I've seen you this excited about something other than ___"

"You?" He smirks.

"Making money?"

"That ol' chestnut." He studies me. "You shouldn't always go by appearances."

"I could say the same."

"Touché" He tilts his head. "No mistaking you for what you are."

"Which is?"

"A strong, confident woman, who knows what she wants and doesn't hesitate to go after it."

"And yet, here I am."

"Exactly," he agrees. "You saw a good deal and grabbed it with both hands."

"Hmm." Is it though? Is it what it appears to be on the face of it? What happens if... When I get pregnant? Can I do this on my own? Will he stick to his end of the bargain? Do I want him to?

"You're overthinking this." He says this while glancing, once more, at the screen. "Take each day as it comes, Sparks. Don't jump ahead."

"Is that what you're doing?"

He straightens, then turns to me, takes in my appearance. His eyelids grow heavy. "I'm deciding what to do to you next."

A shiver runs down my spine and my thighs clench. "About that," I clear my throat, "you could have warned me."

"What would the fun be in that."

"When you practice Shibari—"

"Kinbaku."

"What?" I scowl.

"Shibari in Japanese means to tie."

"Isn't that what you did?"

"While Kinbaku translates to tying tightly or tying deeply." He raises one eyebrow. "It describes a practice where connection between the nawashi, that is the rope artist, and the dorei, i.e. the slave or rope bottom, are important."

"Are you calling me your slave?" I mutter. "I'm not sure I like that—"

"—Yet." He grabs my waist and hoists me up.

I squeak, then wrap my arms around his waist. "What are you doing?"

"How long does your fertile phase last, you said?"

"Umm," I swallow, "technically, the peak was a few hours before my appointment yesterday, but I am sure the days following would count too."

"Let's feed you first."

He carries me across to the galley, lowers me onto the chair, then pours me some orange juice from the open pack.

"How much have you got stocked away?"

"Enough for one person on this trip."

He walks over to the stove and busies himself, chopping vegetables.

"What do you do when you're not sailing?"

"What do you do when you're not running your security business?" he retorts.

My company. My employees. Shit, I haven't thought of them since I got on the boat. When was the last time I went through an entire twenty-four hours without stressing about my responsibilities? When was the last time I took my eyes off my goals, huh?

He adds butter to the skillet, then casts me a sideways glance, "Where did you go to?"

"Nowhere."

"I must not be doing a good job if your mind is elsewhere." He smirks.

"You're full of shit," I mumble.

"And you need to submit to me," he declares.

I spit out the orange juice and he chuckles.

"Some warning please?" I choke out. "I haven't had my breakfast."

"So, it's fine to get kinky with you after you've eaten?" He shoots me a glance over his shoulder.

"The rope play was all well and good," I glower at him, "but I'm not doing it again."

"Oh?" He peruses my features. "Not only will you be my rope bottom, but you are going to enjoy it."

"Says who?" I frown.

He turns off the flame on the stove then turns and glares at me, and my pulse flutters. Moisture laces my core. Oh, hell, what is it about his dominant ways that gets me all hot and bothered inside?

I tip up my chin, and he jerks his chin to the ground. "On your knees," he orders.

"What the hell?" I gape. "Is this one of your stupid mind games?"

"Do it," he commands.

"And if I don't?"

"You don't want to know."

"Try me." I sniff. "You and your stupid threats."

He moves so quickly, I gasp. The next second he's seated on the chair and I am bent over his knee... Again. For a man his size, how the hell does he move that fast?

"Count to ten—" His gravelly voice shudders down my spine.

"What?"

He pulls up the T-shirt so it's bunched around my neck, and his palm connects with my naked backside.

I squeal. "What the—?"

He spansks me again. "Wrong response."

"Wait—"

He slaps my ass a third time. I shudder, dig my core into his thighs. His palm connects with my ass again and I wheeze. "Why are you—?"

"The more you delay starting the count, the more I get to spank you,

Sparks."

"This is so not fair," I burst out, and he flattens his palm across my butt. He massages my skin and the pain sinks into my blood. My core clenches again. "Arpad, what the hell are you doing?"

He drags his fingers across the flesh between my legs and I groan.

"Start counting."

He squeezes my ass with enough force that I yelp, "Fine, fine."

He slaps the curve of my flesh and I squeak, "One."

He spanks me again.

"Two," I huff.

Slap.

"Three."

Slap.

"Four."

Slap.

"Five," I wail.

He doesn't stop after that until he's reached nine, each of his slaps punctuated by my counting. By the time he's done, I'm shaking, tears running down my face. I blink them away. At least, I didn't give him the satisfaction of yelling or protesting. If he thought he was going to make me submit this way, he has another think coming.

He swipes his fingers between my legs and a shiver runs up my spine.

"You're wet already," there's a note of wonder in his voice, "and I haven't even begun."

"I am done here." I strain against his hold and he leans his weight across my back, effectively holding me in place.

"We're not done until I say we are."

I turn my head to stare at him, "You're so...so..."

"Irresistible?"

"Full of yourself."

"And you like me that way."

"Ha." I shake the hair out of my eyes. "Keep deluding yourself."

"You're the one denying your need to give in to me."

"Keep dreaming, buster," I growl.

"Oh, I'm gonna do more than that." He raises his hand again. "I'm going to withhold your orgasms until you behave."

His palm connects with my ass with such force that my entire body jerks forward.

"Ten," I snarl, then clamp my lips together. I will not cry out. Will not allow him the satisfaction of finding out how much he's hurting me and turning me on. No, no, no. I squeeze my thighs together. Curl my fingers into fists and squeeze my eyes as he slaps me again.

"Give in to me, Sparks," he rubs his palm across the burning skin of my arse, "and everything will be okay."

"Nothing will be okay," I grit out through clenched teeth, "and I am not going to—" He presses his lips to the curve of my butt and I shiver. He licks the abraded skin he'd just smacked and a groan spills from my lips. Damn it... The contrast between the pain and this tenderness... It's too much.

"Arpad," I breathe.

"Hmm." He presses little kisses up the curve of my spine, while he slides his fingers between my legs again. He slides one finger inside of me and I gasp. He adds a second and a third, then begins to work them in and out of me.

I shudder and he pushes aside my hair, then tugs down the T-shirt to kiss the nape of my neck. Goosebumps pop on my skin. Oh, my goodness, how can the touch of his lips on my skin be so...everything? He licks around the shell of my ear, then sucks on my earlobe. My toes curl. I clench down on his fingers and a groan sounds from above me. "You're so hot, so wet, Sparks."

He presses his lips against the side of my neck, then bites down gently. I buck in his hold and he straightens, then folds his fingers around my nape. I shiver. His grasp is both dominating and soothing...somehow. He slides his hand down, presses his palm to the small of my back, and warmth pools between my legs. He scissors his fingers inside of me, then twists, and I gasp. Tremors begin at my toes then spiral up my legs.

That's when he pulls his fingers out.

12

Arpad

Her shoulders bunch, her thighs spasm, the sweet scent of her arousal fills the air, and damn it, but I don't want to stop. I want to turn her over, bury my face in her pussy and suck on her clit, lick her lower lips and bite on that swollen flesh until she comes all over my face. But... I will not. The hard column between my legs protests. That's when I know I need to get her off of me, need to put distance between us for a little while... Just until she's learned her lesson. I lick her cum off my fingers then swing her off my lap to place her in front of me.

Her knees buckle and I hold her until she finds her balance.

"What are you doing?" She gasps as I tug the T-shirt, my T-shirt, down about her knees.

"This looks better on you; you should keep it."

"What?" She gapes as I straighten and brush past her to the stove. I flick on the flame under the skillet.

"Arpad," she snarls, "what the hell are you playing at?"

"Not playing, just teaching you how to behave." I add the vegetables to the skillet, then crack the eggs into the bowl and whisk them.

"I'm not a bloody pet," she snaps.

Adorable. I can't stop the smile that tugs at my lips. "No, you're more than that." I pour the egg mixture into the skillet.

"You could have fooled me," she mutters.

"Doesn't mean I don't need to tame you." I glance over my shoulder.

She folds her arms around her waist, draws herself up to her full height. "I need to call my office and make sure everything is okay."

"It is."

She gapes at me. "How do you know? Did you—" she pauses, scans my face. "You didn't." Her cheeks redden. "You did not get in touch with my team and tell them where I am."

"Someone had to do it, so they wouldn't get alarmed, considering you were," I look her up and down, "otherwise occupied." I smirk.

Her cheeks grow fiery, then she curls her fingers into fists. "So help me, Arpad, if you messed with my company and my employees—"

"Relax, Sparks," I drawl, "I had Edward pass on the message to your second in command that you were taking a few days off and couldn't be reached."

"Right." Her shoulders sag, then she tosses her head. "I'm never not reachable." She sniffs.

"You need some time off. Isn't too much stress a deterrent to conceiving?"

Her features freeze. "You bastard," she snarls.

"It's true, isn't it?" I tilt my head, "You want to get pregnant. I am happy to oblige. In fact, I am doing everything in my power to ensure that our joined mission is successful."

"You sound so sincere," she stares at my face, "I almost believe you."

"That's because I am." I turn back and pop the bread into the toaster. "I have your best interests at heart, Sparks."

She scoffs, "Sure, you do. That's why you tied me up, huh?"

"It's part of our agreement." I turn to glare at her.

"It's not what I agreed to."

"You agreed to submit to anything I want," I point out.

"This," she waves her hand in the air, "this isn't what I expected."

"You concurred." I tilt my head.

"You could have warned me." She holds my gaze.

I survey her flushed features. "Fair enough." I place the spatula to the side, turn off the flame under the skillet and cover it. "I won't tie you again until you ask." I prowl over to her. "And ask, you will, I promise."

Her pupils dilate.

She bites down on her lower lip and my gaze drops to her mouth. Pink lips, swollen from where she's been worrying it between her teeth.

I reach out, drag my thumb across the puffy flesh.

She shivers, then steps back, "Stop that."

"You don't get to dictate this arrangement."

She throws up her hands, "Hello, this is about me getting pregnant, isn't it? So clearly, I need to get a say. Besides, left to you, I'm not even sure you're going to copulate with me."

"Copulate?" I blink. "Did you say copulate?"

"It seems more official than using the F word," she mutters. "In this situation, I mean. After all, we have an arrangement, right?"

I stare at her, and she folds her arms across her chest. "Look," she draws in a breath, "I'm trying to figure out what the hell you want from me, okay?"

"That's where you are going wrong." I tuck a strand of hair behind her ears. "You don't need to overthink this. Just surrender yourself to me for the next few days."

"Surrender?" She stares up at me. "You're asking me to put myself in your hands."

"What do you have to lose, hmm?"

"My control?" she snaps back.

"Would that be so bad?"

"You don't understand." She rubs her fingers across her arms. "I've never gone a day without working. Not in a long time. I've devoted every second of my working time to building my business, and now, out of the blue, you tell me to switch off."

"It's good for you to occasionally pull back."

"You mean slack off?"

"I mean gain perspective." I take in her agitated features, the way she shuffles her feet, then twists her fingers together in front of her. "Something you could do with," I add.

"Now you're accusing me of what? Being too close to my business?"

"All I am saying," I shove my hands into the pockets of my jeans, "is that you need to take some time to breathe, to recalibrate, and give your body and emotions a chance to readjust to this new reality you want."

"Which is?" She frowns.

"A child."

"Yes, of course. I know that." She huffs. "All of this is about me having a kid, isn't it?"

"I get that." I peer into her face. "Your wanting a child? I get that, loud and clear. What I don't understand is how, if you are so career-oriented, you are going to have time to bring one up?"

"I'd, uh, I'd prioritize the baby, of course," she purses her lips, "if I get pregnant."

"When you get pregnant," I correct her, "you'll have to rearrange your entire life around the child. You can't be this focused on your career. If all you think about is your job, how will you make the space in your life for a kid?"

She rakes her fingers through her hair, "I'd, uh, I'd manage."

"Will you?" I fold my arms across my chest. "It seems to me, you haven't really thought through the dynamics of how you're going to raise a child."

"Oh?" She draws herself up to her full height. "And you know everything about childcare, huh?"

I do, because I wasn't prioritized when I was young, but she doesn't need to know that.

"Are you going to elaborate on the details for me?" She huffs.

"No, I am giving you the space you need to think things through." I lean forward on the balls of my feet. "Being away from your job and your daily life is the perfect opportunity for you to process the issues. You'll be surprised how much clarity you get with distance."

"Is that what you're doing?" She glances around the space. "Putting distance?"

I chuckle, "Now you're reading too much into my statement."

"But that is what you're doing, aren't you?" She searches my features. "You're running."

"Next, you'll tell me it's because of the incident, where I was kidnapped as a kid, that I like to spend time away from the world and on my own, sailing around the world."

"Don't you?"

I roll my shoulders. "No."

"No?" Her forehead wrinkles. "Then why do you—?"

"Prefer the company of the waves to the city?"

"And your friends."

"The Seven." I nod. "I keep in touch with them via regular calls. Besides, the frequency with which they have been getting married, I've seen them more in the past few months than I have since right after the incident."

"You guys supported each other a lot during that time?"

I rub the back of my neck. "More like, used each other as punching bags."
"You mean sounding boards?"

"Punching bags." I widen my stance. "Put seven boys who've been through an emotional and physical rollercoaster, not to mention impending puberty which has all of us in a tizzy, and the last thing we want to do is talk."

"Ah," she nods, "and how did your families react to what happened?"

I set my jaw. "The incident was hard on mine. But they supported me. They were there for me, when I needed them most."

"You're close to them?" Her eyes brighten with interest.

"Close enough," I mutter. "It was a relief, in a way, when my father moved back to Lille. Not that I didn't enjoy having him in London, but it put too much pressure on me to stay in touch, visit him. This way, I have my space, and whenever I need to see him or my grandmother, I just hop across the pond."

"You're lucky to have them so close." She drops into the chair, then crosses her legs. The slim line of her thigh beckons. My fingers tingle. Only when my thigh grazes the chair, do I realize that I've followed her.

I bend down, tuck a strand of hair behind her ear.

Her breath catches. She parts her lips.

Something electric springs between us and the hair on the nape of my neck rises. Bloody hell. This chemistry between us has been there from day one, when she'd spilled her chai tea latte all over my slacks. One side of my lips kicks up and she frowns.

"What's so funny?"

"Just thinking about how we met."

"You were an obnoxious, self-obsessed businessman, intent on having his own way."

I smirk.

"And only you'd take that as a compliment." She sighs.

"Only you'd go toe-to-toe with me, from the moment we set eyes on each other.

"Doesn't happen often, huh?"

"Never," I confess.

"I'm glad I didn't make it easy for you." Her lips curve.

"Oh, but by the time I'm done, you'll be on your back, on your front, on your hands and knees, upside down with your mouth open," I lower my face to hers, until her scent sinks into my blood, "ready and willing and waiting to service me. Asking me to tie you up and take you any way, every way I want, begging for the orgasm that I, and only I, can grant you, you feel me?"

Her breath hitches, her pupils dilate until there's only a circle of color around the outside, then she slaps me.

13

Karina

His head snaps back with the impact. His gaze narrows, his nostrils flare, his hand swoops out, and I squeak when he wraps his fingers around my neck. "You know what attracted me the first time I saw you?"

"Wh...what?"

"Your fire. Your attitude that you didn't give a toss about anything, that you could take on the strongest challenge and overcome it."

"And...now?" I swallow.

"Now, I think it's that very outlook that's going to get you into so much trouble."

I flick out my tongue to lick my lips and his gaze drops to my mouth.

"Do that again and all bets are off." He releases me so suddenly that I crash into the back of the chair.

"I won't forget this, Sparks," he adds. "I am going to repay it with interest. That, I promise you."

The ding of the toaster interrupts the silence. I jump and his lips curl. He straightens, then walks over to rescue the toast. He slides them onto the plate with the omelet, then walks over to place it on the table in front of me.

He jerks his chin and I frown. He tilts his head and I rise to my feet. He sinks down, then pulls me onto his lap.

"What the hell?" I protest. "What are you doing?"

"Feeding you before I fuck you."

My skin tingles. Jesus, this man has a filthy tongue...and a filthier mouth.

The things he'd done to me with that mouth earlier. I wriggle around in his lap and the hard column in his pants jabs in between my asscheeks.

"Keep that up and I'll lay you out on the table and eat you instead."

Moisture laces my core and I squeeze my thighs together. "That was a terrible line," I scoff.

"So why are you turned on?" He leans over to scoop up some of the food then holds it to my mouth, "Open."

I flatten my lips together, and he chuckles. "You're cute when you're annoyed."

"I'm not annoyed, I—"

He slides the food inside my mouth. I lick the food off the fork tines and his gaze intensifies. "Careful," his voice rumbles up his chest, "you're testing my patience."

"Wasn't aware you had any." I chew the food and swallow. The flavors linger in my mouth. "This is good." I frown at the food, then up at him.

"Why are you surprised?"

"Just thought you, with your billionaire lifestyle...."

"Billionaire lifestyle—?" He forks up more of the food, offers it to me. I wrap my lips around the fork, and once more, the buttery taste of the eggs underlined with the fragrant notes of basil, seeps into my consciousness. "It's really good." I say with my mouth half-full.

"I cook better than most people."

I blink, then laugh, "Of course, you do."

"It's the truth." He feeds me a few more mouthfuls of the omelet along with the toast.

I open my mouth, and he bypasses me. Instead, he wraps his succulent lips around the fork tines and licks it clean.

My belly flutters, my mouth waters, and trust me, it's not only for the food.

He reaches for the food, offers it to me again. I lean forward, and this time, he brings it to his mouth.

"Hey," I protest as he repeats the previous action; this time he seems to curl his tongue around the fork even longer.

I should look away, should get up and walk out and... Go where? It's a freakin' boat. And I'm trapped here with him. And we have a deal, for better or worse. He's promised to give me what I need most. The price I have to pay for it is not that much, in the larger scheme of things. If anyone can get me pregnant quickly, surely it is this very virile a-hole of a man, right?

He reaches for the remaining food on the plate and I wrap my fingers around his wrist.

He freezes.

I trail my fingers across his knuckles and goosebumps dot his skin.

Huh. Imagine that. Apparently, alphahole, here, isn't impervious to my charms, either. I slide the fork from his grasp, scoop up the last piece of food from the plate. I turn and hold it up to his mouth. "Open," I murmur.

He parts his lips and I slide the fork between them. He swirls his tongue around the tines and my core clenches. He curls his fingers around my wrist, moves my hand down. He squeezes and the fork slips from my fingers to clatter onto the table.

The sound ricochets between us as he leans in closer, closer. He places his lips right in front of mine. The heat from his big body enfolds me, sinks into my blood. The scent of him—bergamot and edgy darkness goes straight to my head.

His gaze holds mine. Those blue irises lighten until they seem almost transparent. A mirror that reflects back some of the sensations I am feeling right now. Lust, need, a gnawing emptiness that spills from my core.

"I am going to kiss you now." His breath sears my mouth.

I lean in closer, until my lips almost touch his. Until there's only a hair's breadth of space between us. No, not even that. Less than that, actually.

He stays that way for a beat, another. My hairline prickles; my toes curl. This anticipation... It's w-a-a-y sexier than anything I've ever experienced. My throat closes and my breath comes in small pants.

"Ari," I whisper, and his gaze intensifies.

"Say that again."

"Arpad."

"No what you called me earlier."

"Ari?"

His lips kick up, "I like the sound of my name from your lips."

"Does anyone else call you that?"

He shakes his head.

"That'll be our secret, huh?"

"Here's another." His smile broadens. "I've fancied you since I first laid eyes on you."

I chuckle, "I thought you were angry with me."

"I was."

I wrinkle my forehead. "I don't understand."

"Somehow, you got under my skin. You made me want to haul you close and ravish you. And this feeling of being so near the edge, of not knowing why I felt what I did, of not wanting to let you go until I found out why I was having this reaction to you... It made me feel—"

"Uncomfortable?"

"Out of control." He says simultaneously. "It made me want to push you away and keep you close at the same time."

I take in the sincerity of his gaze, the depths in those grey-blue eyes of his which invite me to trust him, to drown in them. "It's why you had the Seven offer me the contract for the security of your businesses?"

He doesn't blink, and if I hadn't been looking for it, I might have missed the twitch in his left eye.

"That's it, isn't it?" I lean back to put distance between us. I am still in the circle of his arms, but whatever. "It was you who was behind my getting this contract. You did it, knowing if I accepted it, I'd have to move to London."

His jaw tics, "Are you accusing me of wanting you near me?"

"I am saying that you manipulated my career, so you could have me in a place where you could control me."

"You're getting ahead of yourself."

"And you're delusional if you think your over-the-top, interfering ways are going to win you any favors with me." I jump up and he drags me right back down into his lap.

"I'm not done with you."

"Oh, but I'm done with you."

"We're just getting started, Sparks. Remember, you need my cum inside you."

"Maybe I don't care anymore. Maybe I'll simply miss this window, then inseminate myself with the sperm of another man."

His jaw hardens. A nerve throbs at his temple. He glares at me and that hint of meanness that I've become so familiar with reveals itself in his eyes.

I swallow and my nerve-endings jangle. Don't poke the beast. What the hell do you think you're doing? And when have I ever backed down from a challenge, huh?

"Actually, I think I need to find another man. Someone who doesn't impose stupid conditions and who'd be more than happy to fuck me and—"

He swoops out his hand and curls his fingers around my throat. "What did you say?"

"I said I need to find someone else to sleep with—"

His grasp tightens. I try to draw in a breath and my lungs burn.

"What are you doing?" I cough, grab at his wrist as he thrusts his face into mine, then licks his tongue up my cheek.

"Don't talk about another man when you're with me," he growls against my skin. The vibrations sink into my blood, span my chest, then dip straight down to the flesh between my legs. I can't stop the panting sound that spills from my throat.

"Nod, if you understand."

Yes.

Yes.

I shake my head.

"What a little liar you are. And just when I thought we were getting along so well."

"Oh, bugger off," I choke out the words and his eyes gleam.

He loosens his grasp only to lower his head. He bites down on my lower lip and my breath catches. He presses little kisses down my chin, my neck, then fastens his mouth over the fabric surrounding my nipple, and bites down. I feel the tug all the way down to my core.

"Stop," I gasp. "Stop that."

He brings his other hand up to massage my other breast and, honestly, my insides liquify. The warmth of his fingers on my flesh, the scent of him lapping at my nostrils, the heat from his big body that surrounds me, and presses down on my chest, to pin me in place. He raises his head to nuzzle at the curve of where my shoulder meets my neck. I shiver and pinpricks of pleasure dance across my skin. He's not even trying really hard and I am turned on. When it comes to him, I can't resist the allure of how my body responds to his touch.

He releases his hold on my nape, only to bury his fingers in my hair. He tugs and I bare my neck. "Look at you, all ready for the taking."

"I'm not," I grit out through clenched teeth.

"So, you don't want your orgasm?"

That's not what I said. I clamp my lips together, refuse to groan when he buries his nose at the base of my throat and draws in a long breath. The hard column in his pants throbs against the curve of my butt, and my stomach flip-flops. Jesus, how can I resist him when I am completely engulfed by his presence?

He licks the skin between my clavicles and a moan spills from my lips. He presses little kisses down to the valley between my breasts and heat flushes my skin. He tugs down the collar of the T-shirt, then laves my nipple with his tongue. Moisture pools between my legs. My eyelids flutter shut. Oh, my god, this is crazy. How can he make me come apart, so quickly?

"You're more responsive than any ship has ever been to my touch."

I snap open my eyelids. "Did you just compare me to a boat?"

"It was a compliment." He turns his attention back to my other breast, then curls his tongue around my nipple. He sucks on it and my fingers tremble. Jesus, it's as if all my erogenous zones are connected to parts of me in a way I didn't think was possible at all.

"Only you," I gasp out, "would turn around the meaning of the words to suit your needs."

"And I thought this was all about fulfilling your needs."

He slides his hand between my thighs and I tremble.

"Thought so." He raises his head and smirks. "You're ready for me. Admit it."

"No."

He peels back his lips and his teeth glint against his tanned skin. He releases his hold on me, only to shove the utensils on the table aside. Then he grabs my waist and hoists me onto the table.

"Hey," I squeak.

He plants his big palm in the center of my chest and applies pressure. The world tilts. The next moment I am on my back, on the flat surface, staring up at the ceiling of the boat.

He wedges his shoulder between my legs, forcing them apart. Cool air hits my exposed skin a second before he grips my ankles and places them over each of his shoulders.

I glance down to find him peering up with a wicked look on his face.

"Wha—" I clear my throat, "what are you doing?"

"Eating the rest of my lunch."

14

Arpad

I swipe my tongue up her pussy lips and she moans. I slide my tongue inside her channel, grip her thighs and spread them apart even further. She thrusts her hips up and into my face, and that sweet scent of her arousal goes to my head. I weave my tongue in and out of her, then slip my fingers in between her arsecheeks. She freezes, and I lick her clit, circle the swollen nub with my tongue. Her thighs tremble. She buries her fingers in my hair and tugs. The pain heads straight to my groin. Hell. My cock lengthens in my pants. I slide my other hand up her smooth skin and squeeze her nipple. She shudders, then locks her thighs around my head as I suck on her pussy, then close my mouth around her clit and draw it in between my lips. Her entire body bucks. A groan bleeds from her, and my balls harden. I raise my head, then rise over her, to fasten my lips to her mouth. The taste of her lips combined with that of her cum, sends the blood rushing to my groin. I pull back, stare into her flushed features, her wide eyes, the tendrils of hair stuck to her brow.

"Jesus, you're gorgeous." Something hot coils in my chest. I plant my elbows on the table and bracket her in. "Why the hell did it have to be you?" I frown at her.

She stares back at me, her golden eyes wide, beseeching.

I reach down, release my cock, then position it against her entrance. I thrust into her and she gasps. Her mouth opens and closes. I bend, fit my lips to hers, slide my tongue inside her mouth at the same time that I pull back and impale her in one long, smooth move. Her entire body jerks. The table creaks. I begin to fuck her in earnest, plunging up and into her. A groan trembles up her throat; I swallow it, dig my fingers into the curve of her hip and hold her as I continue to move in and out of her. In and out. I wind the strands of her hair around my palm and tug. She moans, then flings her arms around my shoulders, digs her fingernails into my back with enough force that pain shivers down my spine. My balls tighten and my shaft thickens inside of her. I pull all the way out, stay poised at the rim of her channel. She pushes her pelvis up, and I tear my lips from hers. "Tell me you want me."

She firms her lips.

"Say it," I order.

She pouts, then reaches down between us. I slap her hand away. "You don't get to touch." I snap. "Not unless I allow you."

"And when is that?"

"When you admit that it wasn't an accident that you stowed away on my boat."

She stares. "You're crazy."

"I am only just beginning to understand what's between us."

"What's that?"

"You're infatuated with me."

"What?" She gapes.

"It's true. Don't deny it. In fact, your subconscious had picked me out as the father of your to-be child, even before you realized it."

Her gaze narrows. "You're doing this purposely, aren't you?"

"What?"

"Trying to make me angry?"

"I won't deny that having you livid at me is a turn on."

"That's why you're accusing me of some utter bullshit?"

"Is it?" I drag the crown of my cock up her pussy lips and her eyes dilate. "Tell me you need this. Tell me you can't wait for me to fuck you, to bury myself inside your hungry, melting pussy and shag you so hard that you'll feel me inside of you for days."

Her breathing grows ragged and she moans, "Fuck you, Ari."

"I will. All you have to do is give me what I want." I reach down, sink my thumb inside her asshole and her back bows off the table.

"Jesus," she pants. Sweat beads on her upper lip. She digs her fingers into my hair and yanks me close to her. "Damn you," she snarls. "Damn the day I set eyes on you."

"Say it," I growl.

"Fine." She heaves out a breath. "I want you," she swallows, "I want you to make me orgasm. I want you to fuck me until—"

I propel my hips forward and impale her in one long, smooth stroke. Her eyes roll back in her head and she tightens her grip on my hair. Fire sizzles down my spine, warming my blood. My pulse begins to thud at my temples. "Look at me," I growl.

She mumbles under her breath.

"Eyes on me, Sparks."

She opens her heavy eyelids, then holds my gaze as I pull back then sink into her, burying myself to the hilt. She parts her lips and a tear runs down from the corner of her eye. I bend my head and slurp it up. Then without taking my eyes off of her, I thrust in and out, in and out. She holds onto me, moving with me, holding herself open to the battering I am subjecting her to. She meets me thrust for thrust, pushing up to accept me, as I plunge into her, again and again.

A shudder grips her and color smears her cheeks. "I am going to—"

"Come with me," I command as I pull out, all the way out, then lunge forward until my balls slap against her arse.

She throws her head back, and shatters. The ripples of her climax shudder up her body, her pussy clenches around my dick, and that's when I come deep inside her. My orgasm seems to go on and on, until I slump over her body.

We stay that way, skin slick with sweat, her fingers entangled in my hair. Her body shakes under me and warmth spreads against my shoulder. I pull back, then glance down to find her crying.

My heart stutters and my skin suddenly feels too tight for the rest of me, "What's wrong?" I pat at her hair, not sure what to do. Jesus, bringing a woman to fulfillment? That I can do, but a weeping woman...? How the hell am I going to calm her down? "Sparks?" I cup her face, "Did I hurt you?"

She only cries harder.

I pull out of her and straighten. She throws her arm over her eyes. Why is she trying to hide from me? I scoop her up and into my lap. She buries her head in my shoulder and continues to sob. Shit, this isn't good. Why the hell is she still weeping? I rock her, run my fingers through her hair, try to calm her. We stay that way for a few more seconds until her crying slows down.

"Feeling better? I ask.

She snuffles, then rubs her hand across her face. "Let me go," she hisses.

"What?" I glance down at her in confusion.

She pushes against me and I raise my arms. She slips off my lap, almost falls on her arse, then straightens. She heads out of the galley area and toward the bedroom.

"Karina, stop." I jump up to my feet and follow her, through the bedroom and into the bathroom. She closes the door and I hear the snick of the lock.

"Karina," I bang on the door, "let me in."

"Go away." Her voice reaches me—brittle, angry, hurting. Why is she hurting?

"What is it? What happened?" I place my ear against the door. "At least, tell me what's wrong."

"Nothing's wrong, I..." She turns on the shower, which drowns out the rest of her statement. Aargh! I dig my fingers into my hair and pull on it. "Open the damn door." I slam my fist into the wooden barrier. "Open, right the fuck now, or I swear, when I get my hands on you, I'll make you pay."

The shower shuts off. There's silence, a beat. Another.

Then, her voice barely audible through the door, she asks, "How?"

Huh? "What do you mean?"

"How will you make me pay?"

15

Karina

Is that all you've got to say for yourself after falling apart in his arms? Jesus, that orgasm... It was more than that... It was a seismic wave of epic proportions that carried me higher and higher, then fell away, leaving me to crash to earth. Had I blacked out for a second there? Maybe. I'd never come this hard before. In fact, I'd come with more vengeance than the last time when he'd tied me up; and I'd thought that first time had been intense. Ha, I should have known better.

Every time he fucks me, it will only solidify the connection between us. It is going to tie me to him, going to churn my guts inside out and spit me out, and I won't be able to do anything about it. Hell, I don't want to stop it. As soon as he glances at me, I'm all but ready to throw myself at his feet and beg him to take me.

This...is not how I'd envisioned this association of ours progressing. I am not the kind of person who loses control... Not when my father had treated me like one of the boys and forced me to run ten miles every morning.

Not when I'd stood up to him and proven that I could successfully run my own business. I'd proven to the world that I could take care of myself without anyone's help.

So, why the hell had I fallen apart when this bastard of a man, who has no idea about me or where I come from or what I've been through, had put his hands on me—and his cock inside of me?

I wipe my arm across my face. It was only sex—until it wasn't. Every encounter with that man is turning out to be far more intense than I'd expected. At this rate, I am going to walk away with a child... But without my heart. I cannot fall for this guy, no way.

"What did you say?" He raps on the door again.

I unlock it and swing it open. "I said," I tip up my chin, "how do you plan to make me pay?"

He peruses my features, then frowns. "What was that about?"

"You first." I fold my arms over my chest.

"I don't answer to anyone."

I snort. "With that attitude, it's a wonder you've had any success in business."

"Or maybe it's because of this very attitude, that I am willing to take the kinds of risks no one else will."

"Is that what I am? A risk?"

"You're an investment, an asset, make no mistake about that, Sparks. An easy way for me to get my family off my back about my bachelor status. And if I get a few free fucks along the way—"

Only when my hand connects with his face again, do I realize I've closed the distance between us. For the second time, his head snaps back, and the imprints of my fingers stand out against his face.

His eyes gleam and his nostrils flare. He cracks his neck and a thrill of fear slithers down my spine.

He takes a step forward.

I skitter back. "I... I'm sorry." My voice wavers. Hell, that won't do. I can't allow him to see how this mean angry side of him scares me, and turns me on. Shit, why am I behaving in such a stereotypical manner? Just because he is a dominant son of a bitch, doesn't mean I have to connect with my inner submissive, right? Wait... What? Inner submissive? What the hell? I am used to being in charge—at home, at work... And no rich, prick alphahole is going to take that from me.

He prowls toward me and I dig my heels into the ground. Don't give in. Don't allow him to overpower me. "You... You deserved it, though. How dare you insult me that way? How dare you act like...like I am your property, like you own me, like you can command me to do anything you want."

"Oh?" His lips twitch. He drums his fingers on his chest, as he looks me up and down. "Are you telling me you didn't give me that right once you agreed to this partnership?"

"Partnership?" I scoff. "More like a one-way street, where your word is law."

"See?" He drags his thumb across that plump lower lip of his, "You do get it, after all. I knew you were clever, Sparks. Knew I'd made the right choice all along."

"You..." I gape at him, then snap my jaws shut. "You made the choice? I was the one who proposed that you father my child."

He grins and I stiffen. Damn it, I walked into that. Somehow, everything I tell him gets twisted around to suit his own needs. No way, am I going to let him get away with it this time. I am going to show him that I am not like his other women. He cannot simply walk all over me.

I grab the hem of my—okay technically his—shirt then pull it up and off.

His chest muscles go solid. He freezes in place. The twin orbs of fire that are his eyes seem to blaze, a blue flame, the hottest of all. He rakes his gaze down my breasts, down my stomach to my smoothly shaved pussy—I did it for myself, just so you know. I like to feel good in my skin and taking care of my body is an essential part of my regimen.

I jut out my hip, prop my hand on it, then watch as he approaches me.

He sinks to his knees, stares straight at my core. And my thighs tremble. "Jesus." His hot breath sears my center.

Goosebumps pepper my skin. He pushes his face into my core, and inhales. And the sheer intimacy of the moment, the animalistic way that he hums under his breath, that he stares at my center with adoration, is more than I can bear. Sweat beads my upper lip and my thigh muscles tremble. I fold my fingers at my sides, don't move as he blows on my heated, throbbing pussy.

"Damn it," I swear aloud, and his lips kick up.

"Want me to make you come again, huh?" He smirks.

"How about I make you come instead?"

He glances up at me, then shakes his head, "You don't get to call the shots, sweetheart. Have you forgotten that?"

"It was simply a suggestion." I flutter my eyelashes at him, and his breathing speeds up. Oh, this could be fun, after all. I slide my fingers down to strum my pussy lips and he tracks my movements. I part my legs, slide my fingers inside my cunt and a fat drop of cum trickles down my inner thigh. He licks his lips, lowers his head and slurps it up.

Goosebumps pop on my skin. Bloody hell, did he just do that? The carnal nature of this man overpowers all other aspects of him. Perhaps, I had underestimated him, huh? Perhaps he's not as easy to control as I'd thought, after all? Had I been wrong in that spontaneous suggestion that he become my sperm donor? I try to slide back, but he places his big palms on either side of my hips and holds me in place.

"Don't move," he commands.

And simply because he said that, because he asked me to obey him, again, I shuffle back. His grasp tightens, his fingertips digging into my hipbones with enough pressure that I yelp.

He glances up. "Shh," he admonishes me. "Watch me as I eat out your pussy."

That's when a loud beeping sound cuts through the silence.

16

Arpad

The beeping sound cuts through the lust-filled haze in my head. I freeze.

Her gaze widens. "What's that?" she asks as it dies out.

I rise to my feet. My heart begins to race, but I school all emotion from my face. "Get dressed," I order.

"What?" She folds her arms in front of her. Her beautiful tits thrust out as she draws herself up to her full height... Which still means she only comes to the level of my chest. "Don't tell me what to do."

"This is not a drill, babe," I growl. "Wear your clothes, and your boots."

"I don't have any, remember?"

Well, crap. Of course, she doesn't. "Follow me." I turn around and stalk to the door. I pause and glare at her over my shoulder, "You coming, or what?"

The beeping starts again. "Suit yourself, but don't blame me if you're caught out in the open sea without any clothes on."

"What?" The color drains from her face. "What do you mean?"

I draw in a breath, force myself to calm down. "Nothing." I jerk my chin, "Just put on some clothes and come to the cabin."

"No," she crosses over to me, and grabs my arm, "don't treat me like a stupid female who needs to be mollycoddled. I've been running my company since I was eighteen. I've seen lots of hostile takeovers, employees who tried to ruin my company by stealing from me... You name it, I've faced it and emerged unscathed—"

"But have you faced the fury of Mother Nature?"

She blinks. "What?"

"That's a storm warning." The beeping ratchets up in intensity. "Shit." I turn and hurry into the room. Pulling on boots, and a sweatshirt, I head for the closet door at the far end. I grab hold of a handful of clothes, then a pair of shoes and throw it on the bed. "Help yourself," I tell her.

She walks over to the clothes, picks up the jeans and the sweatshirt. "They're your size," she says accusingly.

"That's because they're my clothes. Sorry they don't fit your sense of style," I growl.

She hesitates.

"It's either that or you go without clothes," I point out.

The beeping increases in pitch, and she jumps. I head out the door, and to the closet in the living room with the survival gear. I grab a life jacket shrug into it, then turn to find she's right behind me. She's rolled up the legs of the jeans almost in half so I can see the over-sized boots, and the sweatshirt cloaks her like a tent, but at least, she's covered—in my clothes. A hot sensation coils in my stomach.

I slap the other life jacket to her chest. "Wear it," I command.

She sets her jaw, but shrugs into it. Good.

I head for the cabin, shut off the beeping instrument, then check my weather coordinates, and swear aloud.

"What's wrong?" Her voice sounds right behind and I want to tell her to leave, but hell, if there is no time for that.

"Storm's headed for us," I grit out through clenched teeth.

"But we just passed one last night."

"That, sweetheart, was a rainstorm."

"A... rainstorm?" She gulps.

"Idle sport, the kind I wouldn't hesitate to take on with my eyes closed."

"And this...this is—"

"A category 3 which, if you weren't on board, I wouldn't hesitate to face head on, but since I do care about your sweet little ass, I am going to have to find a way to steer around it."

"So, I was right then, you like to drive your boat straight into rough weather?"

"You could say it's a specialization of mine."

I take in the progression of the storm...which is too rapid for me to outrun. Even at top speed, there is no way we can beat it. I can only think of one way out... But I have to be sure. I begin to plot out the coordinates on the map as she leans around me to peer at the screen.

"You do realize how crazy that sounds, right?" She moves closer and her scent intensifies. My cock twitches in response, and damn it, why is it, that even trying to figure out how to save our lives, I am so aware of how completely edible she is?

"What's crazy, is that you are still here trying to distract me while I plot a course to get us to safety."

"What are you going to do?"

"Find a place to take shelter until the storm blows over."

"And how long will that take?"

"Hours, days..."

"Days?" She scowls, "I'm assuming those days are part of the thirty days I have to spend with you?"

"No."

"No?" Her eyes widen.

A chuckle breaks free and I turn it into a cough.

"It's not part of the deal," I reiterate. "You'll simply have to put it down to time invested in your attempts to have a baby. Not to mention, time invested in saving your life."

"Aargh," she makes a noise deep in her throat, "this cannot be happening. As it is, I'm regretting having made this deal with you, and now you're telling me I'm going to have to spend more time with you?"

"More time to ensure that you get pregnant...unless," I jerk my head in her direction "you're already with child?"

A strange sensation flutters in my chest. A child. My child. With Karina—the woman who'd entranced me from the first day I'd laid eyes on her; the sassy spitfire who'd never hesitated to go up against me. How would a baby we created look? Would she have her golden eyes, my dark hair, her pert nose, my stubborn jaw? A little girl...or boy... Either is good... Ideally, twins. Shit, that means we'd have multiplied by two overnight. We? Did I just think of myself in the plural there?

She pales, "You...you don't think I'm already...?"

"Well, if the right sperm found its way up your Fallopian tube and fertilized an egg, then—"

"Stop," she holds up her hand, "I know how it works, you ass."

"So why do you look like you're going to faint?"

"Just... It's too sudden."

"What were you expecting, anyway?" I frown, as she sways. "You okay?"

"Yes." She shakes her head.

"Is that a 'no' or a 'yes'?"

"Don't you have to focus on taking shelter from the storm?" She folds her arms around her waist, then stares past me at the sea ahead. The waves seem calm, nothing out of the ordinary, but I am not fooled. I know how quickly the weather can change. I glance at the weather data, then consult the map.

"Well," she insists, "what are you going to do?"

"Why don't you leave that to me, huh?"

"What, so you can play the big macho male who can shelter the woman —"

"His woman."

"I'm not yours."

"And yet, you may be carrying my child."

"Don't go getting all possessive on me now. We had a deal remember? I get custody of the child, if there is a child at all, and you get visitation rights."

"For the next 30 days you are mine."

"I don't recall agreeing to anything of the sort."

"Are you denying that you willingly acquiesced to pose as my wife, for the duration of this time?"

She throws up her hand, "Yes, but that doesn't mean—"

That's when the first wave hits the yacht.

17

Karina

One second, the water is serene. The next, a swell hits the boat. The vessel pitches to the side and I scream. My feet seem to go out from under me and I stagger. My heart races and my pulse pounds. The ground comes up to meet me; the next instant, I am pulled up and against his hard chest. His scent, bergamot laced with the salt of the sea, fills my nostrils. His heart thuds against my cheek, or more likely, it's mine, since he's wearing a vest.

"You okay?" His voice rumbles and the vibrations surround me, cocoon me. I turn my nose into the material of the life jacket across his chest. I stay there for a beat, another. I don't want to let go. I wrap my arms around his waist, and he blows out a breath. He pulls me into his side, then behind him. "Hold on." His voice sounds from somewhere above me, "I need to steer us out of the way of the rough weather and toward our hurricane hole."

I turn my cheek into his back, and I am not ashamed to say that I follow his instructions, for once. I lock my arms around him.

"Hurricane hole?" I clear my throat, "What's that?"

"We need to find port, but not just any port will do. It needs to have high cliffs or mountains surrounding it.

"To shelter from the storm?"

"That's right." He turns the boat a steep right. "And I know just the place."

I close my eyes, not because I am tired, not even because I am afraid—okay, maybe I am, a tiny bit apprehensive. Okay, a little more than that. I am a city girl. I've lived in crowded metropolises all my life, and I enjoy the rush, the traffic, the ability to drive my car wherever I want. It means I am in control. I can steer my way. I can see where I am going, get my bearings. But this... Surrounded by waves that seem to get bigger with every passing second, this...pitching of the boat as it climbs up yet another wave, only to slide down the other side, then scale the next swell... My stomach churns and my breath catches in my throat. I am not afraid. I am not. I squeeze my eyes tightly.

He squeezes my hand, the one which has a death-grip on his life jacket, as we speak.

"Not long now," he reassures me.

I nod, want to say something in reply, but honestly, my throat is dry. The boat climbs up a wave, slowly...slowly...like the ascent up a rollercoaster—that first part, when you know they are simply setting you up, taking you higher and higher—then a pause, and the boat seems to hurtle down. Another scream boils up, and I bite the inside of my cheek to contain it. I am a strong, career-driven woman, who has built my life to be exactly the way I want—that's why I am still single at thirty.

Gah. Stop that. Now's not the time to think about the mistakes of the past. As my life coach had mentioned, you do what is right for you in the moment and it is the right decision, always. And yes, I have a life coach. Cliché, I know, but it seemed the best way to visualize the kind of life I want—a career, a family, and a man... Okay, I had hoped for a man, but honestly, after the kinds I'd met in my twenties... Not that there was anything wrong with them, but none of them had what I was looking for—that kind of animalistic attraction combined with sensitivity; a mixture of dominance and the ability to give me enough space to find myself... Know what I mean? Well, that was until Arpad... And he... Well, our very first encounter had been enough to convince me that I certainly didn't want him in my life.

I have no time for men who think they own the world and any woman they meet, and insist on taking charge. A car can't have two drivers, right? And I am the driver in my life. So, what the hell am I doing clinging to his broad back while he steers the yacht?

I loosen my grip, just as a screeching sound fills my ears and the boat seems to go into freefall. My heart pounds in my throat and a low moan escapes my lips. I lock my arms more tightly around his waist, squeeze my eyes shut as the boat hits the bottom of the wave-valley with a thump, then begins the journey all over again, and again. I lose count of the number of times the boat rises and falls. With each descent, my stomach plummets. With each ascent, my heartbeat seems to fill my ears. Sweat beads my palms while a ball of panic bubbles in my chest, and grows bigger, wider, until it seems to fill all of me. I plaster myself to him, squeeze my eyes shut, draw in one breath, then another, then block out the sound of the wind, the waves that scream and try to get to us, the creak of the boat, the groan of the various components of the vessel as they resist the elements, and try to hold on. I cling to him with all of my strength.

Hours pass... Or maybe they are just minutes. I must have dozed off... How could I? In the middle of that storm? Is it because I'd felt so safe with him? Because I knew he wouldn't let anything happen to me? That I could be in the middle of a world gone crazy and he'd still protect me? My protector. My savior. Mine.

"Karina?" His voice reaches me and I shrug it off.

"Sparks?" Warmth seeps up my arm from where he's dragging his knuckles up the side of my forearm. He grips both of my hands in his and squeezes. "Time to wake up."

"Wh...what?" I flicker open my eyelids and stare at the scene through the large windshield in front of me. We seem to have docked at a wooden jetty that juts out on a calm sea. On either side, we are surrounded by mountains. Clearly, we are in some kind of inlet shelter. Exactly the kind that would protect us from the elements.

Beyond that, a pebbled beach stretches up to a line of trees. "Where... where are we?"

"We have to go." He tugs on my wrists and I lower my hands. When I step back, my knees buckle. He turns and grasps my shoulders. "You all right?" His blue gaze takes in my features. My stomach flip-flops again. A warmth spans my chest, then slides down to my core.

"Karina?" His voice is impatient. "How many do you see?" He holds up two fingers.

"Two," I mutter, "and yeah, I am fine. Just a little shaky."

"Understandable." His forehead furrows. "We were lucky we managed to get here before the storm hit, but we need to get off the boat."

He walks out of the cockpit and into the living area, heading to the closet at the far end. He pulls out a backpack—already packed, by the look of it—and heaves it over his shoulder. Then he swings the strap of a gun—a gun?—

over his other shoulder.

"What's that for?" I nod toward it as he walks back and grabs his mobile phone and charger from the counter.

"It's a flare gun." He grips my hand and pulls me out of the door of the cockpit and onto the deck. He bends, grabs the bowline and swings it out and onto the pillar that protrudes from the jetty. With a tug, he secures it, his movements smooth.

I watch as he steps off the boat and onto the jetty. He holds out his hand, "Come on."

I hesitate.

A gust of wind blows over me and whips my hair back from my face. "Karina, come on," he orders. "Jump, I'll catch you."

I glance down at his outstretched palms, then up to his face.

I swallow, not sure why my heart is racing, why it feels like if I take this step, I'll lose myself forever. Why the hell am I being so fanciful, huh? I measure the distance between the boat and the jetty, then spring forward. He plucks me from the air, his hands warm and solid against my waist. Placing me on the ground, he grabs my hand, then turns and sets a brisk pace up the jetty with me in tow. The flare gun is hooked over his other shoulder as we head across the sand.

"The gun," I clear my throat, "do you think you'll need it?"

"Probably not." He forges forward through the gathering darkness. "But it's best to be prepared."

"Ah."

He casts me a sideways glance. "You don't have to worry. I'll take care of you."

That's exactly what I'm worried about. I am not used to feeling this helpless, this dependent on another person. And somehow, we've ended up here on an island, just the two of us...and... "Where are we anyway?" I take in my surroundings—the pebbled beach beneath our feet, the waves crashing on the shore behind us. The wind picks up and buffets us. I lean into it, trying to push my way forward. His grip firms and he pulls me along. Clearly, the breeze is no deterrent for him. "How did you find this island?"

"I own it."

Of course, he does. Considering I am the security consultant for his business, you'd have thought I'd know about it. Apparently, not. How many other secrets does this man have, huh? I take another step, stumble—because, of course, the shoes are too big for me—and he rights me. Then, the first drops of rain hit me. He speeds up. "Come on, let's get inside before we get drenched."

I allow him to haul me away from the beach, up the flat grassy slope and through the tree line. We walk fast until we reach a clearing. There, in the middle of the space, is a single-story structure with sloping roofs and large windows.

We walk up the pebbled path to the door. He releases my hand, then places his palm on a flattened board next to the doorway. Nothing happens for a second, then the door swings open.

18

Arpad

I step in through the doorway, then feel around for the switch on the wall. My fingers hit it and light floods the space.

I walk through the living room, past the circular settee that faces the fireplace, and to the table pushed up against the big window.

Behind me, I hear the door snick shut. I place my bag on the table, turn to find her standing on the rug in the middle of the room.

"It's a little bare, huh?" She sweeps her gaze about the place.

"I like it that way. It's my place to get away from the rest of the world and be myself, a kind of hideaway. Besides, as long as the water and electricity work, we should be fine." I shift my weight between my feet, "Of course, it's not like we had a choice. Better to be stuck here out of the path of the storm—"

She snickers, "Relax, Ari, I was kidding."

Right.

She holds out both of her hands, "This is pretty luxurious for an out-of-the-way getaway cabin."

"Chalet." I correct her.

She turns to me, "Chalet?"

"That—" I gesture behind me, "the kind of space you find on a yacht is a cabin. I prefer to call this," I jerk my chin toward the structure in front of us, "a chalet."

"Of course, you do." She takes in the space, "Nothing rustic about it,

huh?"

"I don't stint on creature comforts."

"I'm with you there." She half smiles. "I mean, life is short. Why not enjoy the best of everything it can offer along the way?"

"Apparently, we agree on something." I grin.

"What a shocker." She rolls her eyes. "Speaking of, how many rooms do you have here?"

"Why don't you explore, while I start a fire?"

"Fire?" She glances at the fireplace. "How are you going to do that?"

"Umm, with wood?"

"Where are you going to get the wood from?"

I flex my biceps. "I'm going to chop it of course."

Her jaw drops. "Really?"

I snort, "Of course, not. I have a caretaker from the mainland who comes by every few weeks to make sure everything is in working order. He also stocks the wood in the shed adjacent to the house."

"Oh."

"You almost look disappointed." I chuckle.

"Kind of." She rubs her nose. "The image of you stripped to the waist, chopping wood as you sweat, had a kind of appeal..."

I raise my eyebrow.

"—for all of one second," she adds hastily.

I smirk. "It's fine to share your fantasies. In fact," I tilt my head, "I very much want you to share your fantasies."

"No fantasies."

"Aww, come on, don't hold out on me now, especially since we were finally having a real conversation—"

"Not." She tips up her chin, and walks toward the open plan kitchen that adjoins the room. She takes in the oven, the coffee maker, the counter that separates it from the living room. She opens the refrigerator and whistles, "You weren't kidding about the caretaker. This place is stocked. If I didn't know better, I'd think you had anticipated coming here..." Her voice trails off. She closes the refrigerator and turns to me. "You hadn't, right?" She tilts her head.

"What are you asking?"

"You didn't engineer all this to get me here on an island away from everybody and—"

"At my mercy?"

She swallows.

"And if I had?"

She twirls a lock of hair around her finger. "Then I'd have to wonder why you went to all the effort." She frowns. "Although, not even you could have anticipated the storm," she laughs nervously, "right?"

"Right."

I shrug out of the lifejacket, then walk over to the closet by the doorway and hang it there. I proceed to remove my shoes and put them aside. When I straighten, she's still watching me. "Your shoes." I point toward them, "You're tracking mud across the place."

"Oh." She clomps over to me, then toes off her shoes. The wind bangs against the door and she shivers.

"You cold? Want to take a shower?"

"Yeah, sure."

"Straight through to the bedroom."

She nods, then walks inside.

I head to my backpack, and pull out the things I'd managed to pack before our hasty departure. Spare clothes, extra flares, a torch, a rope... I lay them on the table.

"What's the rope for?"

I turn to see her eyeing me from the doorway.

"What do you think it's for?" I ask.

She juts out her hip and props her hand on it. "You seriously weren't thinking about..."

I tilt my head, "About—?"

"Never mind." She walks back inside. I hear the bathroom door close, then open again.

Wait for it.

Wait for it.

She flounces out and into the living room. "There's no latch on the bathroom."

My lips begin to quirk, and I turn away to hide my smile. "I tend to be alone when I am here," I reply, then walk over to the kitchen, top off the coffee maker and switch it on.

The sound of the percolator fills the empty space.

"Still." She huffs, "Whoever doesn't have a latch on the bathroom door?"

"Be thankful I am allowing you to keep your clothes on," I drawl.

"What's that supposed to mean?" She throws up her hands, "Jesus, Arpad. Can you stop with the riddle-like answers and tell me what the hell your game is?"

"Game?" I turn, then lean a hip against the work top. "No game, babe. We ran into a storm. I made sure we got to shelter before it caught us."

"Somehow, I don't believe you."

"Somehow, I don't care."

"Somehow..." she shuffles her feet, "I can't get past the idea that you orchestrated all this."

"So you've said before."

"I mean, if you wanted to shag me, all you had to do is ask."

"And you'd have agreed?"

She shakes her head.

"I rest my case." I tilt my head, "I suggest you better get that shower in before it's time."

"Time?" She frowns. "Time for what?"

"Time for me to fuck you, of course."

"What the—?" she blinks. "You didn't just—" She shakes her head. "You can't just throw those words out like that."

"You mean, I can't declare my intent? After all, isn't that what you want? For me to fill you with my cum?"

Her cheeks redden. "You're being filthy just to upset me."

"You have it all wrong."

"I do?"

I nod, "I am being filthy because I know it turns you on."

"Oh, bugger off." She twirls a strand of her hair around her finger, a sure sign that she's nervous. Funny, how I know her gestures so well.

"Are you denying you like my talking dirty to you?"

"That's exactly what I am saying," she states.

"So, if I come over there and pull off your pants, and stuff my fingers inside your cunt, you won't be wet?"

She shudders, her pupils dilate and she twists her fingers together in front of her. "You wouldn't dare."

I tilt my head.

"Shit, I didn't mean it that way."

I take a step forward and she backs away. "I mean, yeah, I am turned on,

but it doesn't have anything to do with you."

"No?" I prowl toward her and she stumbles back, until her hip brushes against the settee.

"No," she mumbles, "it's my hormones. It's, uh, what I have been taking to amp up my egg production. It makes me more sensitive, you know, and moody and edgy and—" I reach her, and she flinches.

I bend my knees, peer into her flushed features. "It's not good for you, whatever drugs you are on to stimulate egg production."

"And you know that how?"

"Anything artificial that forces your body to go against its natural rhythm can't be healthy."

"Let me be the judge of that."

"In fact, you are going to stop taking these drugs."

"No."

"Yes." I whisper my knuckles across her cheek. "At least, for the time we are together. I want you to be as nature intended you to be."

"And what's that?" she chokes out. "A woman whose biological clock is ticking down? Someone who's older than any of the girls you've dated before?"

"What are you talking about? You are far more beautiful, inside and out, than any woman I have met before. As for your biological clock, you're what, twenty-two?"

"Thanks for humoring me. I'm twenty-nine."

"I'm thirty-one." I raise my shoulder, "Age is just a number."

"Spoken like a man," she mutters. "Anyway, I can't believe I let that slip." She flattens her lips, "What the hell is wrong with me?" She squeezes her eyes shut. "How could I blurt that out? Why is it that when I am with you, I am not able to control what I say?"

"Maybe because I make you nervous?"

"Maybe it's because I loathe your presence."

"Do you?" I wrap my fingers around the nape of her neck. "Do you hate me, Sparks?"

She tips up her chin and stares into my eyes. "No," she holds my gaze, "I don't have any feelings for you."

"I, on the other hand, can't wait to show you how it can be when you put your trust in me."

"Trust?" She frowns.

"We may have fucked a few times, but you weren't there with me, Sparks."

"Of course, I was."

"You resisted me every step of the way."

"That's how I am." She raises her shoulders. "I am not a shrinking violet. I don't need to be protected and coddled. I stand up for myself, don't hesitate to go head-to-head with people who cross my path."

"Thank god for that." I pinch her chin, then press my thumb to her lower lip. "It's why I want you, Sparks. I know I can be myself with you, and while it may surprise you, you won't back down. I know you'll meet me every step of the way. You'll challenge me, annoy me, question my commands. It's what makes you so...attractive."

"Because I am a challenge?"

"Because I can't wait to have you fall apart over and over again. Because I can only hope to piece you back together in a way that makes sense for both of us. Because," I lean in close enough for my lips to ghost hers, "I want to be there when you subsume yourself in me and find out exactly what you've been missing all these years."

"You want to tame me?"

"I want to give you a chance to forget about the outside world. I want you to trust me to take you to the kind of heights where you won't remember anything else outside of you, me, our joined cum, our wet skin slapping against each other, your breathless sighs, your moans, your pants, your sweat-drenched tits, your reddened arse after I've spanked you enough times that even a gentle touch on your behind sends spirals of delight through your pussy."

She draws in a breath.

"Will you allow me that?"

Her pupils dilate, she licks her lips, lowers her gaze to my mouth and stares for a long second. Then she firms her lips. "No," she mumbles, "I don't think so. The deal was for you to impregnate me and me to pose as your wife. Doesn't mean I have to enjoy it."

"Too bad." I straighten. "I intend to wring pleasure from you anyway."

Karina

With that pronouncement, he'd turned back to the table and whatever it was he'd been doing earlier. I'd flounced back into the bathroom, shut the door behind me, and stood under the hot shower for a long time. What the hell is he up to? Why do I get the feeling I am in over my head?

Have I been played? Surely, not. I've known Arpad since LA. We have friends in common—Jace, for one, who is a friend of the Seven. It was Jace who'd first suggested that I take on the security for the Seven, and Arpad had backed him up. So why do I get the feeling that it had been Arpad's idea all along? It would be just like him to manipulate the events so it felt like the suggestion hadn't been his. And then, the messages to my phone, and getting me on the boat... There is no way he could have envisaged my falling asleep on his boat... And yet, here I am... Marooned with him, on a bloody island.

It seems like something out of a movie, except this is my life. My future he is playing with. And for what? Because he had an itch he needed to scratch? Men like him always think they can get what they want. Well, too bad. He has gone up against the wrong woman this time. I am going to keep up my side of the bargain and ensure that he delivers on his. But more than that... No way, am I giving him anything more. Definitely not my trust... Absolutely not my heart. No way, am I going to allow myself to fall for him.

I switch off the shower, step out and dry myself. I stare at the clothes I'd been wearing in disgust. No way, am I going to wear those again. I step out to find a bathrobe laid out for me. Huh? I glance at the bedroom door, then turn my back on it and manage to slip on the bathrobe before I pull off the towel.

I gather my soiled clothes and walk out to find him in the kitchen. He's changed into another pair of jeans and a T-shirt. His hair is mussed up like he's been running his hands through it. Of course, he has an extra set of clothes here. How often does he come here anyway?

The scent of something cooking fills the air. My stomach grumbles, loudly. He looks around at me, then points to a door on the other side of the kitchen. "Washing machine's through there."

I walk through, add my clothes to the ones already in there, and run the machine. By the time I step back into the kitchen, he's laid the table for two. He places a bowl of stew in front of each of the two seats. He pulls out a chair for me to sit, then walks around to the other chair where he sits facing me. He gestures to the food, "Eat."

I dig into it and the hearty taste of potatoes and onions laced with rosemary explodes on my tongue. "It's good." I lick my lips. "Did you put this together from scratch?"

He chuckles. "Not even my talents stretch that far." He wipes his mouth with the back of his hand, "I had my favorite chef cook it then freeze it and send it over."

I chew, swallow, then stare up at him, "You don't compromise when it comes to food."

"Why would I?" He shoves the stew into his mouth, chews as he holds my gaze.

"Just because you have money doesn't mean you have taste, and when it comes to food, you'd be surprised how many people compromise on ingredients. Not because they can't afford it... Or okay, sometimes it's also that, but more often, because they don't care enough about what they put in their bodies. I mean, we are what we eat, right?"

"And that's why I don't want you taking the fertility drugs." He arches an eyebrow at me, and I flush.

"Fine, fine," I grumble, "but we're not talking about the same thing here."

"Aren't we?" He stares at me.

I blow out a breath. "Deciding what food you put in your mouth is a choice."

"So is deciding what drugs you subject your body to."

I throw up my hands, "I had no other option. I wanted a kid, and I had no time to find a man. All of my waking moments were spent building up the company."

"That's something you care about a lot?"

I nod. "My father started the firm, and when I took over from him, I was determined to make it a success."

"You're close to your family?"

I purse my lips. "As much as my father would tolerate it."

He frowns. "What do you mean?"

"He was in the military when I was a kid. He left when I was ten but the ways of the army stuck with him. He was very strict, very firm... And brought me up the same way as my brothers."

"How many siblings do you have?"

I hold up my hand.

"Five?" he asks.

I nod.

"Five brothers?"

I nod again.

"All older than you?"

"Yep."

He raises an eyebrow, "Should I be worried about them landing on my door ready to beat me up or something?"

I stare at him, then glance away. If he only knew. "No," I shake my head. "When I turned eighteen, I had a choice. Join the very lucrative family enterprise that my father started after he left the army; or use the money my mother left me to grow my own business."

"You opted for the latter?"

I nod. "I took over the security agency which was part of the family business but which I could run independent of them. I had no wish to be associated with the family venture."

"Why is that?"

I glance at him, then away. "It wasn't to my liking."

"Why?" He frowns. "What is it they do?"

"Oh, you know," I raise my shoulders, "import, export, that kind of thing."

"But you weren't interested in it?" There's a strange look in his eyes.

"No," I stare down at my plate, "I didn't want to be involved in it."

"You didn't?" His jaw firms and his features grow hard. How weird. What is he upset about now?

I shake my head. "I wanted to do something of my own, get out from under the protective gaze of my family. You know what I mean?"

He stares at me, then finally nods.

"I wanted to branch out on my own," I explain.

"Why a security company?"

"Why not?" I raise my shoulders. "I'd heard so much about my father's experiences in the army, and much of it stayed with me. And unlike other girls, I wasn't drawn to the more feminine things in life. I didn't want to become a dancer or a singer or..."

"Yoga instructor?" He tilts his head.

"Now that?" I half smile, "I could see myself doing that. But I love yoga too much... It's too personal to turn it into a job, if you know what I mean."

"It's like sailing for me." He glances about the space. "It's in my blood; it's my passion. I'd never want to make it a livelihood for me."

I blink. Wow, we are talking. Like, really talking. And damn, if I don't like the man under the alphaholish exterior.

"How's the head wound?" He points to my forehead.

I'd taken off the plaster earlier and the wound had already scabbed over.

"It doesn't hurt anymore," I say truthfully.

He reaches over, touches the site of the wound, and I flinch.

"You said it doesn't hurt."

"It doesn't," I mumble. "You surprised me, is all."

I pick up my spoon and dip it into the stew again. "My mother died when I was eighteen." I stare into the mixture in my bowl. "That's when my father had a heart attack. My eldest brother took on a leading role in the family business, and I decided to branch out on my own."

"I'm sorry about your mother." His voice is earnest.

"Thank you." I place my hands in my lap. Even after all these years, it isn't easy to talk about her passing. I hadn't considered how much of a rock she was in my life until I realized that I'd never see her again. I tug on my hair, then wrap a strand around my finger.

"Mine died not long after the incident." He glances down at his bowl, then back at me, "But you knew that already."

I nod. As their security consultant, I was privy to the details of the personal lives of all of the Seven. Still, Arpad sharing that part of his past with me? It means something.

"You miss her?" I ask softly.

"Every single day." His expression grows bleak. "I often wonder how the seven of us would have turned out if the incident hadn't marred us."

"It also united the lot of you, made you all friends for life."

He grimaces, "More like uneasy passengers on a boat where each of us has to pull our weight behind the paddles to keep afloat."

"I can't figure you guys out." I frown. "Sometimes I am sure you can't live without each other. Other times it seems you hate each other."

"More often, it's a little of both." He smirks, "And you? So, you weren't tempted to join the family business at all?"

Something in his voice makes me peruse his features. "No," I shake my head, "I want nothing to do with it."

His gaze narrows. "You sure about that?"

"Of course, I am." I frown at him. "Why do you ask?"

"Relax." He laughs. "All I meant was, it must have been difficult for your family to let you go, and then, it wouldn't have been easy to run a company on your own. But you didn't stop until you made it a success."

My cheeks flush. "Thanks." I busy myself looking into the depths of my stew... Or what is left of it. It really had tasted yummy, or maybe, I'd just been hungry.

"And you?" I ask. "Is this your life then?" I wave my hand in the air. "Footloose, fancy free, and able to do what you want, when you want?"

"That's the power of passive income." His lips curl. "My money's busy earning more money for me, while I am here with you, sheltering from a storm."

"You're deflecting."

"What was your question?"

"Doesn't matter." I scoop up the last of the stew and finish it off. "I was simply trying to have a conversation. If you'd rather I not speak, you simply have to say so."

There's silence. He blows out a breath, "The incident," he says. "You know about it, obviously?"

"You asked me to investigate the perpetrators, remember?" I point out.

He nods, then takes a bite of his stew before glancing up at me. "It's what brought the Seven of us together. We'd known each other before that...but that occurrence ensured we'd have a common background, unique to just us." He leans back in his chair. "It changed our lives forever. One second, we were average—well, as average as you could get with the kind of money most of our parents had—but still, we'd been preteens with the usual problems—football practice, videogames, and sneaking off to use our remote-controlled planes to spy on girls... The next... We'd been imprisoned in a basement without knowing if we could make it out alive."

"It affected all of you in different ways. I get it."

"Do you, though?" He holds my gaze. "You were eighteen when you had to grow up. We were preteens... All except Damian, who, at sixteen, was the oldest..."

A chill runs down my spine. "You were all very young."

He nods. "And then we weren't." He places his elbows on the table, then joins the tips of his fingers together. "Isn't it strange that, despite your best efforts, we've never managed to track down the brains behind the operation?"

I stiffen. "Are you faulting my capabilities?"

He tilts his head. "It was merely an observation; one professional to another."

I take in the earnest look on his face. Should I believe him? No reason not to, right? I nod, "Fine." I blow out a breath, then rise to my feet and begin to pace. "It's not for lack of trying. But every lead I've followed has turned out to be wrong, every clue I've unearthed seems to lead to a dead end. I've had my best operatives on the job, but nothing has come to light."

"Whoever they were, they are too well-hidden, probably in broad daylight, where you can't tell them apart from an average person."

"Exactly." I turn to him, "That's the point. They are probably not hiding at all, which makes it even more difficult to find out who they were."

"You wouldn't think the Mafia would be that clever."

I chuckle, "You'd be surprised. The Mafia no longer conforms to the stereotypes of men you see on screen. Their businesses are no longer limited to those that are illegal. In fact, many of them run their corporations like any average CEO would, employ people who probably don't even know the background of their employers, or that the work they do helps hide the illegal origins of the capital that built the company, and oftentimes, continues to build the company."

"You have a thorough knowledge, then, of the inner workings of their organization."

"They happen to be a peculiar fascination of mine," I prop my hands on my hips, "especially after—"

His eyebrows draw down, "After?"

"After the Seven contracted me to find out everything possible about the men behind the incident, of course."

"Of course." His lips firm. "Not that you've made much progress—"

I open my mouth and he raises his hand. "Not that I fault you for that, either. It's a tough case to crack. I get it. Not something that's easy for someone like you to handle."

"What the—?" I open and shut my mouth. "You're joking, right?"

He yawns, then gets to his feet. "Just calling it as it is, babe. It's understandable though."

"It is?"

He nods. "You being a woman and this being a man's business, after all. It can be a little too complex, not to mention, dangerous, for you to track down the Mafia."

"Of all the chauvinistic things to say—"

"Save it." He scratches his jaw. "In fact, it's probably good you haven't managed to find them."

My heart begins to race; adrenaline laces my blood. Just when I thought we were actually having a proper conversation, he had to go and say something that completely wrecked whatever truce we had found. "And why is that?" I ask.

"You'd have only gotten yourself into trouble, and then guess who'd have needed to come after you and save you?"

"Not you." I draw myself up to my full height. "In fact, let's forget we ever had a deal. After what you just said, you'd be the last person I'd choose to be the father of my child."

He clicks his tongue, "Not so fast. You are posing as my fake wife when we head over to meet my family, and I am holding you to that."

"And what if I didn't want to do that? What if... I refuse?"

He closes the distance between us, and the heat of his body thrums around me, and coils between my legs. He glares down at me with those burning blue eyes of his and I shiver. "I don't take kindly to a people reneging on their agreements." He peels back his lips and his teeth glint against his dark skin. For the first time, a sliver of fear licks at my nerves. I am alone with him, on his island, and no one knows we are together. Even my employees think I am away on vacation. As do my friends. I wouldn't be missed for a long time. By the time anyone got concerned, it would be too late. By then, he'd have, no doubt, carried out whatever plan it is he has in mind.

"What are you planning to do?" My voice cracks, and I clear my throat. Don't show him how afraid you are. Don't. I tip up my chin and his lips kick up.

"Isn't that clear?"

"No."

"Before we leave here, I am going to have you begging me to bury my dick in your pretty little pussy, to bring you to fulfillment and put you out of your misery. You are going to plead with me to fill you up with my cum, to ensure that I've impregnated you with my child. You are going to beseech me to complete what I started."

"No." I firm my lips.

"Yup." He reaches out, scoops up something from my chin and sucks on his finger. A thrill suffuses my skin. Damn it, and after he'd insulted me... Why the hell do I find his filthy words and his actions meant to subjugate me, so...so...much of a turn on?

"I don't give in easily," I warn.

His grin widens. "Neither do I."

"So, this is it, then? A stalemate?"

"Call it a challenge." He draws himself up to his full height and his wide shoulders seem to block out the rest of the room, "One I don't intend to lose."

19

Arpad

What the hell had I been thinking, throwing all those clues out at her? The last thing I need is for her to be suspicious about my intentions.

I turn over on my side in the bed... The big bed, in which I am sleeping alone. She'd opted to take the couch in the living room...and I hadn't offered her the bed. Damn it, I should have, but she'd made me so mad, I'd stalked out of the kitchen and headed here. And she hadn't followed. I'd heard her retreat to the living room, then the light had gone out a little later.

And she hadn't taken any covers or pillows, either. How the hell is she sleeping without something to keep her warm?

The wind slams into the windows and the panes rattle. It hadn't rained much yet...but clearly, the storm had hit not far off. Another gust hits the chalet and the entire structure seems to rock. I sit up, shove off my covers, then swing my legs onto the floor and stand up. I stalk into the living room. The fire I'd started earlier has died down and the room is freezing. I cross over to her huddled form on the couch.

She's in a fetal position, her arms around a cushion, another cushion under her head. She pulled on her now-dry clothes from the wash, including her socks, and it looks like she tried to use the robe as a blanket, so there's that. As I watch, she shivers, then pulls her knees closer to her chest.

The wind howls outside and she mutters something under her breath. I freeze, hold my breath as she subsides into slumber again. The light from the window dances across her face, highlighting the hollows under her cheekbones. She really is skinny, except for her tits, of course. My fingers tingle. As if she senses my gaze, she moves onto her back and the cushion falls from her grasp.

There's a flash of lightning, then the roll of thunder in the distance. Rain begins to pelt the windows, contrasting with the silence in the room. The fact that I've been standing here in my underwear staring down at her...for at least ten minutes now. Shit. I drag my fingers through my hair. What the hell is wrong with me? Why can't I seem to keep away from her? Awake or asleep, she holds so much power over me... If she only knew.

Her chest rises and falls, and her body twitches. Her breathing deepens. I turn to leave, then turn back to her. My feet thud on the wooden floor and cold seeps into my skin. Fuck this. No way, can I leave her here in this unheated room, and without anything to keep her warm. I place my arms under her and scoop her up. She stirs, murmurs something I don't catch, then curls into my chest and falls asleep again. Warmth pools in my chest. My belly tightens. She's so damn light...so tiny... When she's awake, her persona is so prickly, so full of fire, I often forget she's half my size in weight...and barely comes to the level of my chest.

To think, she's been on her own since she turned eighteen... And forged her success in a business that is notoriously dominated by men... And macho men, at that. I shake my head. The woman has a spine of steel. Something like pride grips me. Hell, she is a fighter, a worthy opponent, the possible mother of my child.

I stumble, then right myself, glance down at her features. She doesn't stir.

Why the hell do my thoughts always head in the direction of her possible pregnancy? Why does the thought of having a family not seem like such a stretch suddenly? Everything I want is here in my arms... All I have to do is reach out and grasp it. Except, she wouldn't see it that way, would she?

She is hellbent on having this kid by herself. What is that about anyway? She is only twenty-nine... There is more than enough time for her to meet someone and— I tighten my grasp on her, and she stirs. I pause, wait until she settles, then walk with her in my arms into the bedroom. I place her on my side of the bed, then slip in beside her and pull the covers up over both of us.

The sweet scent of her crowds me and my cock throbs. I glance toward her, take in her parted lips, her flushed features and know this was a bad idea. Hell, I'm the one who threw down the gauntlet, and told her I'd wait until she begged me before I took her. I intend to stick to my promise. Doesn't mean I have to keep away from her though, right?

I apply enough pressure on her shoulder to turn her over to her side, then I tug her close and spoon her.

20

Karina

Heat curls around me, sinks into my skin. I curve my back, thrust closer into the warmth. Mmm. So comfortable. I rub my cheek against the pillow, twine my fingers around his...his? I snap my eyes open, and find that, indeed, I have my fingers entangled with thicker, longer, darker digits... Which are attached to an arm that's thick and veiny, with dark hair that peppers the skin. I gulp, angle my body, only to realize the heat at my back is courtesy of the long, broad body that presses flush into me. I wiggle my butt and something stabs between my asscheeks. I swallow. I know that length. Am intimately acquainted with the girth, the thickness, the way that width of his had impaled me and brought me to fulfillment. My core clenches and moisture trickles down from between my thighs. Gah, I only have to think about how he'd taken me and I am melting...melting.

I try to move and find I'm pinned down by his thick arm that rests on the curve of my hip. His fingers are splayed across my stomach...across my naked stomach, for my shirt has helpfully ridden up to give him access. Just as my channel had expanded to sheath his cock.

Gah, get your mind out of the gutter, woman. Though you can't blame me for where my thoughts are straying, considering alphahole, here, is wrapped around me tighter than a boa constrictor around its prey. Not that I am prey, or that he is a snake. Okay, maybe he is... Especially that thing between his legs, which is one massive python. Ugh... That's it. I need to get out of this bed. I thrust one foot out of the blanket and the cold instantly grabs me. I shiver, push another foot out, try to slide out from under his arm, when his grasp tightens about me.

"Where are you going?"

His voice rumbles across my back.

I shiver... This time, from that chafing, gnawing sensation that curls in my belly.

"I...ah...have to pee."

"Liar." He hauls me against his large chest, settles me with my head tucked under his chin, his arms wrapped around me again. The contours of his body follow my curves, with his knees folded up against the back of mine. If there is heaven on this earth, surely, it is here, next to him, surrounded by his scent, wrapped up in his presence, which pins me down, and against him— No, that's his massive forearms, which he's wrapped around me. I wiggle my butt and am rewarded by the throb of the part of him that's very much awake and happy to be nestled in the valley between my butt cheeks.

"Umm, Ari?"

"Hmm?"

"I think... I really need to get out of bed."

"I can control myself, if you can."

"What?"

"I know that you sense this," he angles his hips just right, and his thickness slides up against me, "but it's just morning wood."

"Then why do you have your arms wrapped around me like it is going out of fashion."

"Keeping you warm, babe."

I shiver at the endearment. Bet the a-hole is half asleep. That's the only reason he sounds so warm and cuddly... Correction, he is very warm.... And most definitely, massively cuddly, emphasis on the 'massive.' I squeeze my eyes shut. Can't stop myself from heading down that path of thinking, huh?

"Surely you can think of a better excuse," I grumble.

"Is that what you think?"

"Isn't it?" I toss my head, or try to, because I can't move... I literally can't budge with how the alphahole is wrapped around me.

"Okay then." He releases me, pulls away, and the cold instantly seeps in. What the—? How is that possible? Did I get used to the proximity of his body heat so very quickly? I mean, we've barely spent the night together, and already, I miss being held by him.

"On the other hand," I mutter, "maybe there's no hurry for me to leave here."

"What's that?" he drawls.

"I mean, you can go back to doing uh—whatever it was—"

"Can't hear you, babe."

I hear the laughter in his voice, and I pout.

"I know you do, you ass. Just get back here and assume the position of, uh... You know—"

"Spooning," he rumbles from above me. "That's the technical term you're looking for, I believe?"

My toes curl. Just the thought of him fitting his body to mine again... OMG. My throat closes. I slide my arms down between my legs, both to keep warm, but also so I can push up against my empty core.

"Say the word, darlin'.

I sigh.

"Go on. How difficult can it be, hmm?"

His tone dips to a hush—the honey to my chai tea, the cream to my coffee, the ice to my vodka... You get the picture?

I blow out a breath, then mumble, "Please."

"Couldn't hear you."

What the hell? Why is he drawing this out in such an agonizing manner? "Fine." I turn to face him. "Spoon me."

My gaze clashes with his, holds.

His chest rises and falls.

His arm is folded under his head, and his biceps bulge... And damn it, why does that look so bloody hot? It's not like I haven't seen naked men before... But somehow, the beauty of his angular face, the puffy lips, the square jaw, the skin of his cheeks, still flushed from his nights' sleep, the tousled hair... Jesus, it's too much.

I lower my gaze, take in the planes of his chest, the sheet that dips low down on his hips, the hair that arrows down to his happy place... Okay, my happy place. No, no, no. What am I thinking?

"What are you thinking?" His voice is low and oh, so sexy, with that just-woken-up rasp, combined with that authoritative edge that's inherent in everything he says and does.

My toes curl and my core trembles, I open my mouth and close it again.

Do I dare tell him? Do I? And hand the power over to him?

"What do you want?" His tone is steady as he stares into my eyes, and oh my, that's hot.

"I... I," I stutter, "I..."

"Say it," he snaps.

"I want you to shag me."

21

Arpad

"Shag you or spoon you?" My lips twist. I don't stop the satisfied smile that curls my mouth.

"Can you...uh, do both?"

"I aim to oblige."

I swoop down and gather her close. Her pupils dilate. I press my lips to her forehead, to her upturned nose, to those rosebud lips. She opens her mouth and I deepen the kiss. I sweep my tongue over hers, suck on it. She moans deep inside, thrusts her breasts into my chest. I draw her hips flush against mine. My cock nestles in the warmth between her legs and she gasps. I kiss her again, once, twice, then lean back. I lower the zipper of the jeans she's wearing, tug it off, then pull the sweatshirt up and over her head.

"Turn over," I rasp.

She blinks once, then rolls over onto her side.

I shove down my boxers, kick them aside then grasp my dick and pump it once. I tug her close, until my shaft is once more nestled along the dent between her butt cheeks, then bring my hand up to cup her breast. I squeeze her nipple and she shudders. I slide my other hand under her, then palm her other breast. She wriggles her hips against me, pushes back. "Ari," she whines.

"Shh." I bring my palm up to her mouth, slide my thumb in between her lips. She sucks on it and I feel the pull all the way down to the tip of my cock.

I trail my fingers down to her core, strum her pussy lips, and she arches back, and into me, chasing that release that only I can give her. I slide my fingers inside her sopping wet channel, and she moans deep in her throat. I add a third finger, then a fourth, then curl them inside her. Her entire body jerks. She turns her head toward me, reaches up to kiss my mouth. I pull back.

I hold her heavy-lidded gaze as I begin to fuck her with my fingers. Her shoulders shudder, as her breasts heave, the pulse at the base of her throat beating in a rapid tempo. I lower my mouth to her throat and suck on her skin. She shivers, digs her fingers in my hair and coaxes me lower.

"What do you need?" I ask, "Tell me, Sparks."

"My tits," she gasps, "squeeze my nipples plea—"

I bring my hand up and twist her nipple between my thumb and forefinger. She gasps, then wriggles her hips and pushes her entire body back and into mine. "Shh," I bring my face up to hers, "I know what you want."

"You...you do?"

I nod. "And I'm going to give it to you."

I pull my fingers out of her, then slide my cum-soaked digit inside her arsehole.

She freezes. "Ari." Her gaze widens. "Wha...what are you doing?"

"Making sure you are ready for me."

"Not there."

"There." I nod.

"I... I'm not..." she swallows, "I mean, I can't. I don't want to."

"You will."

"But—"

I lower my head to hers, close my mouth around hers and kiss her. She hesitates, then opens her lips, allows me to sweep my tongue inside as I slide another cum-coated finger inside her.

She stiffens again and I continue to kiss her. "Open for me, babe." I share my breath with her, suck on her tongue as I bring down my other hand to play with her core. I grind my heel into her clit and a groan tumbles up her throat. I swallow it down, tilt my head to kiss her deeper, then slide a third finger inside her ass.

She shudders, her body tautens, and I cup her pussy, then guide two fingers inside her wet channel. "Oh," she sighs as I begin to work my fingers in and out of her. In and out. She lowers her hand to curl her fingers around my wrist. I pull my fingers out of her backhole, then grab my dick and position it at her back channel.

"Look at me," I command, and she raises her gaze to mine.

I nudge my dick into her back entrance and she stiffens.

I work my fingers in and out of her pussy, add a third finger then curl my digits. Her eyes roll back in her head and that's when I ease inside her puckered hole.

She moans. Digs her fingers into my wrist, brings her other arm up and curls it around my shoulder. "Ohmygod, it's...it's too much, too full. It's—"

"Not enough."

I bend and close my mouth around the curve of where her shoulder meets her neck. She gasps, then clenches around my dick. A growl rips from me. I lick the reddened flesh, then bring my hand up to cup her breast again. I weave my fingers in and out of her pussy, in and out. I thrust my fingers deep inside her and she throws her head back. "Oh, my god." Her body bucks, a trembling starts up her legs, her stomach, flows up her breasts and her shoulders. She gasps, "I'm going to—"

"Come." I command, and she shatters all over my fingers. Her body slumps, and I ease my dick in further.

She draws in a breath. "Oh, Ari—" she moans under her breath.

"Tell me how it feels," I order.

"It feels...full...like weirdly full, and yet...it's not..." she swallows, "not as unpleasant as I thought."

I cup my fingers around her swollen pussy, bring my other hand up to toy with her nipple. "Your tits, Sparks, they're beautiful, and your sweet little cunt, it's the prettiest little hole I have ever seen." She moans, relaxes further and I slip inside her fully.

She groans; so do I.

"Bloody hell, you're so damn tight, darlin'." I grit my teeth, and stay... stay where I am, allow her to adjust to my presence. "I never did think I was an arse kind of guy, but with you, it seems I can't let any hole of yours go unoccupied."

A whine tumbles from her lips, she clenches down on my cock, and goosebumps rise on my skin. I bring my hand up and wrap my fingers around her neck. "Look at me, babe."

Her eyelids flutter, then she focusses her dilated gaze on mine. "Ari," she whispers, "please..."

"I know." I begin to move in and out of her, as sweat slides down my back. I pull out, then ease inside her again and again. She curves her back, thrusts her hips up and takes all of me inside.

"Babe," I swallow, "you're killing me. This...this.. It's fuckin' hot." I ease my digits inside her pussy and she parts her legs, holding herself open at an angle that allows me to sink inside her. She arches up and into me, "Oh, Ari, that's too much, that's...soo good."

You're telling me? "Don't take your gaze off of me," I snap.

She flutters her eyelids as I keep the tempo—in and out, in and out. I thrust into her with enough force that my balls slap against the back of her arse.

I guide my fingers inside her melting pussy, then propel my hips forward and thrust into her once more. Her shoulders shudder, her entire body jolts. "Please, I need to, I have to—"

"Come for me, Sparks," I growl, and she cries out as she shatters.

22

Karina

Yes, that's me. I had come not once, but twice, in quick succession, and one of those times had been with him in my ass. OMFG! What the hell is that about? How had I allowed him there...where no one else had gone before? Stop with that. Now I am quoting Star Trek? Clearly, I am delirious. Or close to it. Yeah, a couple of well-timed orgasms can do that to a girl.

I float down to earth and become aware that he's still inside me, and he hasn't come. He's hard, like really thick and throbbing inside of me. "Ari?" I whisper, and he pulls out of me, slides his fingers from me at the same time. I'm suddenly empty. My pussy clenches down, on where his digits had been and I feel empty, strangely bereft, as he sits up, throws the cover off and slips out of bed.

He turns and stalks over to the ensuite. I take in the powerful thigh muscles that contract with each step. The tight glutes, the scars of what had to be some kind of burns...or chafing that crisscross his back.

"Arpad," I gasp, then sit up as he prowls into the bathroom and shuts the door behind him. What the hell? I walk over, hear him moving around, then the sound of grunting, the wet slap of flesh against flesh. What the hell? Is he jerking off in there? And after he fucked me in the ass? What the hell is that all about?

I shove open the door and walk in to find him in the shower cubicle, dick in one hand, the other slapped against the wall. I watch his face in profile as he grunts, as he screws up his features, the tendons of his throat stretching as he swipes his hand from the base of his dick to the crown again and again. His movements are hard, brisk, unlike how I would have grasped him. No way would I have the strength, the almost cruel grip he has on his shaft as he continues to pump, up and down, and again.

I should look away, give the man his privacy... But what the hell? He'd been inside of me, and for some reason, he hadn't wanted to come... Which still doesn't make any sense to me. His shoulders heave and his chest planes flex as he drags his fist up his cock.

And somehow, I find myself moving toward him.

I step into the space between him and the shower wall, slip my hand around his, tip my chin up to meet his gaze, and stroke him with my fingers about his. His breathing grows ragged, color smears his cheeks, then with a low groan he comes, all over my breasts, my chest.

He continues to stroke himself, emptying out the rest of his cum on me. Then, still holding his dick in one hand, he rubs his cum into my skin, around my nipples, down my belly, in between my legs. And somehow, it's as if he's marking his territory. His actions are both crude and a turn-on, at the same time. Why is it that every filthy thing he does is so...primal, so sexy? It's as if the mask he's worn to face the world has been stripped off here, in a cabin in the middle of the sea. And we are only a man and a woman, trapped in a fight to survive... Not just the elements, but also each other.

He lowers his hands to his sides, then reaches behind me to turn on the shower. He turns me around, so the water pours over me. He scoops up some soap and washes me. His movements are quick and thorough. He washes my hair as well, then himself, before rinsing off the soap.

When he's done, he flicks off the shower. Then steps out to wrap a towel around himself. He hands one over to me, then turns and leaves the bathroom. Huh. What happened? Why did he go all silent?

And after he'd taken my ass... And honestly, while it'd hurt... It had been intense. I could have sworn it had brought the two of us closer together... At least, so I'd thought. But apparently, it'd had a completely different effect on him.

I dry myself off, wrap the towel and walk out to find he's gone. Instead, he's laid out another sweatshirt and a fresh pair of his jeans. I slip into the clothes, then glance around. I need something to cinch around my waist so the jeans won't fall down, but what? I open the closet and aha! I find what I'm looking for.

I grab the rope from the shelf, tie it around my middle and over my sweatshirt. It nips in at my waist and holds up the boxers.

Awesome. There's no mirror to see how I look, but doesn't matter. At least, I don't feel naked. I pull on the socks he's laid out. So, not the most glamorous of get-ups, but at least I am warm. Besides, the sweatshirt smells of detergent and is laced with that dark, edgy scent which is unmistakably his. It feels like I am wearing him... Not. Well, not quite, considering how quickly he'd pulled out of me and left.

I walk out and into the living room to find the space warm. A fire crackles in the hearth. Outside, it's still raining, but in here, it's warm and cozy. Only, I am not fooled. Whatever had taken place between us...is far from comfortable. And I don't mean the sex...which was mind-blowing, despite the surprise of what he'd pulled on me. But hey, I'm no prude. I'd been curious to try anal... I wince as my butt spasms in response to the thought. Okay, so maybe not that soon again... But the experience had been mind-blowing, to say the least. And if the opportunity arises to do it again with this alphahole... I confess that I am game.

I head to the kitchen, and find him, once again, by the cooking range. He's pulled on a sweatshirt, and pair of jeans; his feet are bare. Apparently, he doesn't feel the cold. How could he, when the man radiates warmth like he has an built-in furnace or something? Besides, bare feet on this hot-as-F asshole... Uh, not complaining. They are strangely sexy, I'll readily admit.

He stirs the contents of a pan as I close the distance toward him.

When he doesn't acknowledge me, I sit down at the table. He pours out the mixture into two bowls, adds a dash of cinnamon, then places the oatmeal in front of me. He brings his bowl to the table, along with a container of sugar, which he places between us.

He spoons up his oatmeal, slides it into his mouth. He curls his tongue around the spoon and my core spasms. Moisture pools between my legs. What the hell? Why does the act of watching him eat, turn me on? Every muscle in my body is tense. All of my senses are honed in on him, all of my pores open and ready and willing to be touched by him.

"So that's your game?" I burst out.

"Game?" He raises his gaze and the heat in his blue-grey eyes blazes.

"There's no game, here, Sparks."

"Then what was that?"

"What?"

I gape at him. Does he want me to spell it out? Seriously? Is that the kind of man he is? I frown. Not possible. My impression of him can't be that far off. Not when my instincts say otherwise. And well... I make a living with my instincts. They're the one thing I can depend on when nothing else makes sense. "Why are you so angry?" I cup my chin in my hand. "Why did you leave me like that on the bed?"

"Why not?" He spoons up more of the oatmeal, swallows. "You should eat yours before it grows cold."

I glance down at my bowl, then wince, "I don't like oatmeal, I'm afraid."

He jerks his chin, "Taste it, at least."

I blow out a breath, then dip my spoon into the creamy mixture, and bring it to my mouth. The scent of cinnamon fills my nostrils. I taste it and the nutty taste of oats pop on my palate.

I must have made a noise of appreciation for his lips kick up. "Good huh?"

"How the hell do you turn an ordinary meal into such an..."

"Foodgasm?"

I frown, "I was going to say experience."

His grin broadens. "I'll let this one go."

"Wasn't aware we were keeping score?"

"There's no score, sugar, because you are no match for me."

"What?" I snap my lips together. "Say that again?"

He dips his spoon back into the mixture, then brings it up to his mouth, chews, swallows. Then trains his gaze on me, "You are not in my league, babe. Why don't you just drop it."

I stare at him. "If by that you mean, I couldn't possibly be as much of an ass as you, you're right.""

He shrugs.

"I don't understand why you have to be this uncouth, so rude... so..."

"Impolite?" he helpfully supplies.

"That too. I was going more for plebeian."

He winces, "Not that word; anything but that." He places his spoon back in his bowl. "But the rest? It comes naturally to me."

"I think it's all an act."

"Oh?"

I nod, then drop my spoon back in my bowl with a clatter, "I think you felt something when you were, uh..."

"Fucking your arse?" he offers.

"Exactly," I stab my finger at him, "and you said that just for effect, knowing it would sound filthy enough to make me blush."

"Whatever." He stretches, then yawns. "Your theories don't interest me, babe."

"Stop that." I slap my palm on the table and the bowls jump. The sugar spills over the side of the container. I stare at the mess, then up at him, "Don't hide what you're feeling, Arpad."

He scratches his jaw, schools his features into that expression of lazy disinterest which is so much a part of him, and which I hate, and which I want to tear off to expose the man I'd sensed earlier, when he'd made love to me. And it had been that, no matter how much he wants to call it something else. There had been a depth of connection between us that I hadn't expected. "Why are you hellbent on reducing everything between us to something without emotion? Something contractual?"

"Because it is." He rises to his feet, then leans across the table until he looms over me. "That's all this is, babe, an arrangement. Don't you forget it. Don't go looking for meaning in what was simply a fuck... An above-average fuck, I'll give you that, but when this is over, we'll both walk away, having gotten what we want."

"You sure?"

He jerks his chin.

"That's all you want this to be, an exchange of what the other needs?"

That's all it is," he affirms.

"Fine." I jump up to my feet.

"Fine." He straightens to his full height, so I have to tilt my head back, then further back, to meet that blazing blue gaze. In their depths, something flickers, then fades away.

"Make yourself comfortable, I'm going to get more wood for the fire." Turning, he stalks off.

23

Arpad

That's me, walking away from a woman when I could have been inside of her, taking her, fucking her, loving her... Not loving her... What the hell am I thinking?

This is Karina, the woman I have been attracted to from the moment I saw her... It's the reason I am here with her, after all. Hell, I'd give her anything she wants.

Including a child? Shit. I drag my fingers through my hair... Now, that is something I had not factored in. A kid? A family? The kind of life I know I am not meant for. And yet, when she'd asked me to impregnate her... No way, could I have refused her. If she is going to carry anyone's child, it will be mine. As for walking away from her... Well, if...when she gets pregnant... We'll cross that bridge when we get to it.

I pull on my socks and boots. I grab additional ropes and head out of the chalet. The wind buffets me and I lean into the breeze as I walk down toward the jetty. I check on the yacht, making sure the dock lines are secure.

Once I am satisfied, I walk uphill, turning away from the chalet toward the building at the edge of the slope.

I shut the door and the wind instantly cuts out. Wiping my boots on the mat inside the door, I pull the satellite phone from my pocket and dial.

"Mr. Beauchamp?" Edward comes on the line, "Where are you?"

"In a chalet, on an island, somewhere between the UK and France."

"Ah, your favorite place to go when you want to run away from the world."

"What makes you say that?" I frown.

"Because that's where you went the last time the memories got too much for you."

"Fucking memories." I roll my shoulders. "You'd think as time passes, it would get easier, but it doesn't."

"Not all hurt fades with time," Edward replies. "Some of them burrow under your skin and make themselves at home, and then they become a part of you, something you don't want to let go anymore, because you're dependent on them. In a way, your identity is linked with the story and if you let go of it, you don't know who you are anymore."

"Is that your personal experience?"

"It's my...observation."

"Is that how it is for you?" I push the point.

Edward blows out a breath. "It hasn't been easy to move on from what happened. In some ways, I never will. After all, it's an experience that's shaped what I've become. But," he pauses, considering, "but I've come to realize that freedom is what you do with what's been done to you. Know what I mean?"

"Is that what you're doing, Ed? Finding yourself in what you have now become?"

Silence, a beat, then he says, "Maybe I didn't have a choice."

"What do you mean?" I frown. "All of us had choices... Maybe not in what happened to us, but whatever we did afterwards. We each took our lives in our own hands, remember? The one thing we swore to each other was that we'd never hesitate in going after what we wanted."

"Maybe this is what I wanted." He lowers his tone, "And what about you, Arpad. Is this what you want?"

"What are you talking about?"

"There's a reason you planned it this way."

"Planned it?" I frown.

"Having Karina on the boat when the storm hit so you could have time alone with her, away from the world. In fact, the way I see it," Edward continues, "you created your own liminal space."

"Sorry, you'll have to explain that to me, Father."

"You know what it is, Beauchamp." Edward's voice is impatient. "I'm talking about a space that is on a threshold of many possibilities. You ensured that the two of you are in a position to let go of the past for a period of time. You freed up all notions of space and time, allowing yourself the eventuality of a future together."

"You drunk, Father?"

"Now, now." He clicks his tongue, "Clearly, I touched a nerve, which is why you are resorting to personal insults."

"You're right." I begin to pace. "I honestly had no idea what I was getting into when I asked her to get on the boat and fix the security cameras. Maybe my subconscious had hoped she'd stay on for the duration of my trip... But hell, if I planned all of this... Well, not fully..."

"Aha," Edward snorts, "so you do admit that you wanted time with her."

"It may have crossed my mind, yes." I rub my jaw. "And okay, I did prepare for the eventuality that she'd one day be on the boat with me, but the storm and being holed up here... Nope, not that."

"Your mind is a powerful tool. When you truly want something, it can manifest it for you."

"And how's that working for you? What have you manifested lately, Father?"

"A reality that I'll have to live with for the rest of my life."

"You could change it," I point out.

"Could I?" he mutters. "The only way to avoid regret is to say yes to opportunity, after all, so yeah, you may be right."

"You talk in riddles, Ed." I bark out a laugh. "And yet, you often make more sense than anyone else I know."

"That's me," Edward's voice is bitter, "I can help others see the way, but my own way is not that simple to spot."

"Isn't that the truth?" I roll my neck. "And by the way, that entire regret versus opportunity thing... I hope you meant it for yourself."

"Maybe..." I sense him shrug over the waves, "maybe not. But this conversation is about you. So, what are you going to do next?"

"I...—" I hear a noise behind me, see her standing inside the door, "I have to go." I disconnect, and turn as she makes her way over.

"What are you wearing?" I take in the sweatshirt, the rope tied around her waist that outlines her hourglass figure, a reminder of how good she'd looked when I'd bound her, how beautiful she'd look if I were to tear her clothes off, then tie her up and suspend her, with her legs wide open before I take her.

"These are the clothes you left out for me."

"No, I didn't." I gesture to the rope about her waist.

"You mean this?" She dances her fingers over the rope. "I found it in the closet. I needed to find a way to hold up your jeans."

She blinks rapidly at me, "You don't mind, do you?"

My fingers tingle to reach out and yank the rope off of her, then tear off the rest of her clothes, before I bind her again and... Stop with that. You bind her one more time, and you won't be able to walk away from her. Weird, where are these thoughts coming from? I've never had such an emotional reaction to any woman before. Hell.

"Who were you talking to?"

"Edward."

She glances at my phone, "Think I can use it to call my team?"

"Do you want to call your team?"

She rolls a strand of her hair around her fingers. "No, strangely not." She shakes her hair back from her shoulders. "I don't miss the daily routine as much as I thought I would."

"Perhaps you were ready for a break?"

She glances around the small shed, "What's this place?"

I watch as she takes in the hard point in the ceiling, the mat below it, the ropes folded into figure eights that line up one wall, the other paraphernalia I use in my art on the table that stands against the opposite wall.

"Oh," she gulps, "so this is where you bring your women?"

I fold my arms over my chest and widen my stance. "There's only ever been one woman here, and that's you."

24

Karina

My heart begins to race, my pulse pounds, and my throat closes. I stare at him, trying to understand what he's saying. "So, no one else has been here before me?"

"Only me."

"And you've never brought anyone else to this island?"

"Told you I haven't." He tilts his head. "This is my personal space, where I go when I need a place to retreat and think."

"And you practice your rope tricks while you are...contemplating, the meaning of life and the universe?" I walk toward the wall, drag my fingers across the edge of a rope—which is strangely soft to the touch. "What is this made of?"

"Hemp." His voice is so close that I stiffen. How had I not heard him approach? "It holds knots well and is pliant against the skin."

"Oh." My stomach clenches. He hadn't said a word of anything that was faintly erotic and yet my mind had interpreted it as such.

"And this one." He reaches toward another folded pile, and strokes his fingers over it. "This one is stronger. I use it for the uplines."

"Uplines?"

"The ropes that I run through the harness on the person I am tying and then use it to suspend her from the hard point." He jerks his chin toward the ceiling.

"Her?" I turn to him. "Do you have someone you, uh—work with when you practice?"

"A few." He turns to me. "Why?" He scans my features. "You jealous?"

Yes.

Yes.

"Of course, not." I rub my hands down my forearms. "So, if you don't bring anyone here, how do you practice?"

"I have a space in my apartment in London that I use specifically for this."

"So why do you have this set-up here?" I jerk my chin toward the ropes.

"Why do you think?"

I scowl, "Because..."

He tilts his head.

"Because, uh, you believe in being prepared?"

His lips curl.

"Of course, you do." I draw myself up to my full height. "Fascinating as this conversation has been, I guess I'd better return to the chalet." I walk toward the door and open it, only for a gust of wind to blow me back. Rain whips over me and my fingers slip on the door handle, which is wrenched out of my grasp. The door slams shut. I stumble back, certain to fall, except warm hands grip my shoulders and righten me.

"You okay?"

I nod, a little too shaken for my own liking. I am not someone who leans on others. I've never allowed myself to slow down, not even after I decided to go it alone to have a child. The one constant in my life has been my career, the company I've worked so hard at building. Somewhere along the way, my identity had gotten fused with that of my work.

But just a day with this guy, and it's as if my feminine side has awakened in full force. Something about his strength makes me want to rely on him. He makes me secure in a way no one else ever has, and isn't that a laugh? This grumpy billionaire, with a penchant for tying up his women, is the one man I can't stop thinking of.

"I'm fine." I twist my shoulders and he releases me. "Guess the storm finally hit." I walk toward the window and stare outside. Rain whips across the pane and I can barely see through to the sea that I know is not far away.

"Is the yacht safe?"

"It's shielded from the worst of the winds by the hills that surround us and I went down to check on it earlier."

"Right." I shuffle my feet. Heat sears my back and I know he's come up to stand behind me now. "Sure is coming down outside." My voice shakes and I fold my fingers together in front of me. Get it together, what's wrong with you? He's just a man. So what, if he has a kinky streak a mile wide and I am standing in what is clearly his dungeon of pain... Or pleasure... Or both. "Maybe... Maybe, we should try and make a run for it to the main house?"

"Why? Do I make you nervous?" His voice rumbles from somewhere above me and I shiver.

"N...no. It's just... I'm cold." A shiver runs down my spine, to back up my words.

"I can keep you warm."

"Not why I came here," I protest.

"Why did you come, then?"

I stiffen.

"Why are you here, Karina?"

No more Sparks, then? Why the hell do I already miss his nickname for me? And, I still don't understand what happened earlier. Why did he walk away from me? His retreat is written in bold print, reflected in every nuance of his.

"I... I'm not sure," I answer honestly. "I guess I didn't want to be alone."

"Is that all it is?" His voice sounds almost disappointed.

I turn and glance at him from the corner of my eyes, "Yes... That's all."

"Guess we'd better get back then."

Oh, okay, so that's how it's going to be? I mean, what had I expected? That he'd jump me again? Because I'd stumbled upon his den of sin? When he'd made it abundantly clear that there could be no real connection between us.

"Guess we should." I fold my arms around my waist.

He turns, heads for the door.

"Wait," I call out, and he pauses. "There was something else, actually."

"Oh?"

"You didn't come inside me this morning. I think you need to rectify it."

He freezes. "Excuse me?"

"Part of the deal is for you to get me pregnant." I glance away, then back at him, "Afraid you're not doing a great job of it, considering I am still in my fertile phase and you didn't fuck me last night."

His muscles tense and his jaw tics. He curls his fingers into fists and glares at me. "You want me to fuck you?"

I nod.

"Here?"

I look around, pretend I don't understand. "What's wrong with this space?"

He peruses my features, then turns around to face me completely. "Why don't you come out and say what's on your mind?"

"I already did."

"But you haven't told me everything, have you?" He takes a step forward and I draw myself up to my full height.

"I... I'm not sure what you mean."

"You followed me here because you were curious about what I was up to. You want to find out more about my penchant for tying up my women." He closes the distance between us and my belly ties itself up in knots—okay not knots... Bad comparison... My palms begin to sweat, despite the fact that it's freezing in here. "In fact, you wondered how it would be if you were to find yourself at my mercy again... My fingers on your skin, my breath on your cheek... As I truss you up, then string you up... Ready and open and willing for me," he bends his knees and thrusts his face into mine, "as I give you the chance to become one with the rope, to retreat from the world and all of its responsibilities. A safe space, where you can let go of all of your inhibitions, and connect with your feminine self."

Moisture pools in my core, and I chafe my thighs together. "I didn't think anything of the sort," I insist.

"You sure?"

No.

No.

"Yes," I nod.

"So, you want me to simply turn you around and push you up against the window and take you with no preparation, then?"

My throat closes and my pussy clenches. Jesus, what's wrong with me? Why does his uncompromising stance, his complete dominance, his lack of finesse when it comes to talking about us... Why does it sound so bloody appealing?"

"If I said yes...?" I swallow.

"Then I am sorry to say, the answer is no."

"What?"

"I have another idea on how to pass the time."

25

Arpad

"This is your big idea?"

She stares down at the board between us on the table in the living room.

I've lit the fire, thanks to the wood I'd hauled in from the pile in the small shed on the other side of the house. Not that I am lacking in space or anything. After all, the entire island is mine. Which is why it always feels bizarre to talk about geographical boundaries in relation to this structure, know what I mean?

But I digress... I'd built the fire, then decided the best course of action would be to keep my hands to myself and away from her. Not that I don't want her. On the contrary, clearly, I am fast becoming obsessed with her, and if I allow myself to take her one more time... It will be very difficult to walk away from her. Which is a bloody inconvenience, considering I promised her I would impregnate her. I needed a little time to think this through, hence... I reach for the letters on the rack, then lay them out on the board.

FOOL

Yep, that's me, all right. I'd thought I would trap her into an arrangement and use it to, somehow, get to the truth of who was behind the incident... But, somehow, all that has become secondary to this connection that has sprung up between us. Something I need time to process—Ha! Me—the man who doesn't think twice about navigating headlong into a storm... I need to evaluate my options here.

Falling for her is out of the question. So how am I going to fuck her, fulfill my end of the contract, and still, walk away without being trapped further? See what's happening here? I am the one being lured into an ambush, thanks to this green-eyed sprite who chews on her fingernail while she contemplates the letters in front of her.

"Your turn," I prompt.

She huffs, "Fine, fine. Give me a moment here."

"Do you want me to help?" I reach over and she holds her rack of letters away.

"Hey, stop that."

"Hey, just trying to help." I hold my hands up in front of me.

She scowls, then places the rack carefully in front of her on the table, "How old is this board anyway? I mean, who plays scrabble anymore?"

"I did, with my parents."

"Hmm."

She contemplates her letters, some more. "Tell me about them."

I stare at her.

"What?" she says without raising her gaze. "We're going to meet your family. Surely, I should know something about my fake future in-laws?"

"Right." I drag my fingers across my chin. My whiskers are getting itchy. Damn, if I don't need a shave. But for some reason I couldn't find my razor. Apparently the place wasn't as well stocked as I'd thought.

"You mentioned that your father moved back to Lille?" She raises her gaze to mine. "But you and your family lived in London?"

"Yeah, that's where my brother and I grew up. My father worked in the city."

"And you followed in his footsteps?"

"Not directly." I scowl down at the board. What the hell is taking her so long? Is she one of those people who analyzes every move before they make it?

I drum my fingers on the table, "Why don't you play as we speak?"

"Why don't you speak as we play?"

"I'll tell you more after you play."

"I'll play if you tell me more."

I lean back in my chair. "This is not a negotiation, sugar."

"Isn't it? Sure seems that way, considering you're not coming through on your side of the bargain."

"We still have time, don't we?" I glance toward the window where the rain is coming down in sheets outside. "After all, how long does your fertility window last?"

"Forty-eight hours," she snaps. "That's the most I am probably fertile post ovulation."

"That gives us...until, the end of tonight?"

"Exactly. So, if I were you, I'd get with the program." She lays out her words on the board between us.

C

H

I

F O O L

D

"You're kidding me," I growl.

"More like, you're the one who's been kidding me."

"Is that right?" I glare at her and she pales. She flips her hair over her shoulder, then begins to play with one of her locks.

"I mean, how hard can it be to, as you said earlier, turn me over and take me without—"

I hold up my hand, "Think very carefully about what you're going to say next."

"Without..." she hesitates, "Uh, without..."

"Hold on a second, doll. Let me play my word." I place my letters on the board.

C

H

I

F O O L

D I R T Y

Her gaze widens, "How the hell did you manage that?"

"Now, your turn."

I replenish my letters as she contemplates her move.

"So, you were saying...?" I prompt.

"What?"

"Complete your statement, Sparks."

"I was going to say, how hard can it be to turn me over and take me without—" she raises her gaze to mine, "preparation?"

I rise to my feet so quickly that she blinks. I prowl around to stand behind her chair.

"What...what are you doing?" She shudders.

"Go on, mull over your move, sweetheart."

She turns her head to glance at me, and I jerk my chin, "Get up."

"What?"

"Stand up, babe," I urge her.

She rises to her feet, gaze still on me, and I click my tongue. "Eyes forward."

"You like to hear your own voice, don't you? I should get you a T-shirt with those words printed on it: eyes—" I spank her butt and she squeaks, "forward."

"Exactly."

I palm the curve of her arse and she shudders.

"Does everything have to be a kinky maneuver with you?" She huffs.

"Why? Are you complaining? It's not like you prefer vanilla, yourself."

"How do you know?" She half turns to frown at me.

"Don't," I warn her and she frowns.

I squeeze her butt cheek and she swallows. I jerk my chin toward the front and she faces forward again.

Unable to help herself, she asks, "Did you have me watched? Is that how you know so much about my preferences?"

Actually, no, but it's not a bad idea. It's something I should have done, something I am going to rectify right away, given how, despite my best efforts, I can't keep my hands off of her.

"Just a lucky guess." I plant both of my palms on either side of her butt then pull her back so she connects with my crotch.

"Oh," she lowers her head, "how can you be so hard, so quickly?"

"How could I not be hard?" I counter. "I've been sporting a boner since you walked in on me in the shed, wrapped up in my rope."

She wriggles her butt, moves back further, and my cock stabs in between her arsecheeks. Why the hell is she still wearing so many clothes?

I glance around for something—anything—to help me in my quest. There. "Don't move." I tap her shoulder, then prowl around and over to the kitchen counter. I grab a knife and turn.

She pales. "What are you going to do with that?"

I tilt my head, then stalk back to her. She turns her head and I curve my fingers around her neck, "Told you to stay with your gaze forward, didn't I?"

"But—"

I slide the knife under the coils of rope, then flick my wrist. The blade slices through the strands, and the cord falls away.

I raise her sweatshirt, tug down the jeans, then stare at the curve of her creamy butt. "Bloody hell," I growl, "how could I have missed looking at this sight in such a short period of time?"

"Ar...Arpad?" Her voice wavers. "What are you going to do?"

"I am going to fuck you now."

26

Karina

That's what I want, isn't it? For him to lose control and take me, despite the fact that I know he wants to bind me first. Isn't that why I had used the rope to bind myself? Yes, so it had also been functional, but subconsciously it was about taunting him, teasing him, trying to get a rise out of him, and damn, if I haven't succeeded.

He nudges my hair over one shoulder and cool air hits my nape. I shiver, grip the edge of the table and wait... Wait for his next move.

"It's your turn."

"What?"

"You're up next to play, Sparks."

"Fuck that," I swear aloud.

"Now, now," he chuckles, "don't be rude."

"Fuck you," I swear under my breath, and he laughs. The asshole actually laughs. I turn, and once more, he wraps his fingers around my nape, coercing me to stay facing forward.

"Focus, babe," he drawls. "Play your word, or do I need to help you with that?"

"Oh, bugger off."

He spans my butt and my body jolts. The table shakes and a letter falls off the rack in front of me.

"Pick that up," he growls. I hesitate, and he snaps, "Don't disobey me."

"Fine, fine." I straighten the letter, stare at the board. "What's this, disciplining through Scrabble? Are words your kink or something?"

He chuckles, "Or something."

He slides his hand around to cup my pussy and my entire body goes on alert. My stomach clenches and my thighs spasm. I force myself to stay calm... Don't move... Don't say or do anything that's going to make him draw out this crazy touchy-feely approach he has going.

He kicks my legs apart and I shiver, dig my heels into the ground, with my feet wide apart and wait... wait...

He slips a finger inside my channel. I shiver.

He adds a second, then a third, and does that thing he does so well. He curves his fingers, grazing the walls of my sensitive core, and a groan bleeds out of me.

I hear the rasp of a zipper being lowered, then he pulls his fingers out of me, only to grab my hips and pull me back, positioning me, ready to impale me. Moisture beads my center. Ugh, I'm so empty, so ready... What the hell is wrong with me? I've never been this...needy for someone... No, not someone... For him. It's Arpad... The alphahole who is going to turn my world upside down.

He is going to impregnate me and then I'll have a miniature image of him to look at every day and I'll never forget him. I'll spend the rest of my life wondering how the hell it would have been if there had been something real between us, if I had acknowledged my attraction for him, if I had thrown caution to the wind for the first time and grabbed at the chance of a future with him.

The crown of his dick nudges against the opening of my slit and I gasp.

"Your play, sugar."

I stare at the board, the letters that fade in and out in front of my eyes.

Then place the letters on the table.

C M

H A

I R

F O O L R

D I R T Y

M

E

The muscles of his thighs go rock hard, as he tilts his hips forward and breaches me. My body jolts and the table shudders. The letters, though, stay where they are.

"What's that?" he growls. "What do you mean?"

"I mean..." I shudder as he pulls out of me, and stays poised at my entrance again, "let's do it for re—"

He plunges inside me with enough force that his balls slap against the backs of my thighs.

"—al," I scream.

The letters move on the board, displaced, disoriented, words blown to their components, like I've been, since I met him.

I groan as he bottoms out inside me. "Arpad," I gasp, "please...please... don't stop."

He presses his palm into the small of my back and applies just enough pressure. I lower my cheek down to the board, grip the edge of the table with my fingers.

"Fucking gorgeous."

He grabs my hips and begins to fuck me in earnest. In and out, with long, smooth strokes that have his length embedded in me, hitting that spot deep inside that he always seems to find with unerring precision.

I've got to say, getting pregnant this way beats the cold sterile procedure I had planned. I mean, this is, by far, the best sex I've had in my life... I'm not going to get this from anyone else... Not the expert way he maneuvers my body to just the right angle so he can, once more, sink inside of me, fill me, stretch me, cram me with his length that is so delicious, so beautiful, a work of art...

And I am, clearly, having an out-of-body experience. I've never had such an inherently spiritual episode before, not even with all of the yoga I've practiced. Hell, I'd happily hold any position he places me in... Just as long as he continues to fuck me, shag me, wring that next orgasm from me, which is approaching with the kind of rush that resembles when I do a headstand and the blood flows to my head...

"Ah!" He slams into me once more and my climax sweeps over me. It explodes behind my eyes, and I shudder, grip the table so tightly that my fingers hurt, my thighs tremble, my toes curl, every muscle in my body tenses... Then the orgasm ebbs away and I collapse.

Above me, he continues to pound into me again and again. Then finally, he growls out, his body tenses, and with a jerk of his cock, he comes inside me. He stays that way, entrenched in me. Aftershocks grip me, my pussy clenches around his dick, which I swear is still semi-erect. How the hell is that possible? He lowers his head and I feel the whisper of something against the top of my head.

He presses little kisses down my eyebrow, my cheek, the edge of my lips. I shiver. This... This habit of his, this half-kiss, is surely my undoing?

He licks my lips, then whispers, "Yes."

I peer up at him, "What...? What do you mean?"

"Yes," his lips curve up, "yes, I'll marry you, for real."

27

Arpad

"Et tu, Brutus?" Edward drawls across the phone line.

Yep. After I'd agreed to marry her... Fucking hell, I'd agreed to marry her... Yeah, take a breath, ol' chap. Get it together. So, after I'd agreed to marry her for real, I'd pulled out of her, then dressed, and made a quick exit. Not caring that it was raining outside, I'd pulled on my jacket and beat a hasty retreat to the shed.

Me... The man known for his cut-throat maneuvers when it comes to snapping up the best bets in Silicon Valley, I had raced out of that chalet like my tail was on fire... Not literally, but metaphorically. Jesus, I am in so much trouble. I need to talk to someone... Yep, like a fucking pussy, I call Edward tell him what happened. Not all of the details, of course. Just that I had agreed to her proposal.

"Now, that's not very charitable of you, Father," I grumble. "I swear, I didn't mean for it to end up this way."

"You mean with you ready to take a trip down to the altar?" He snickers.

"Hey, aren't you supposed to be happy for me, in your professional capacity?" I frown.

"In my professional capacity, I will not dissuade you from what you think is right for you... Just as long as it is right for you."

"You're speaking in riddles again, Father."

"Come now, that's my forte." A new voice cuts in.

"Saint?" I grimace. "What the hell are you doing there?"

"Not just him," Damian's voice sounds across the line.

"You too?" I glower.

"Oh, did I forget to tell you, that I patched in the others while you were sharing your saga with us?" Edward chimes in.

"Saga?" I snap. "What the hell, Father? Sorry, didn't mean to swear there. No wait..." I shake my head, "actually, I did mean to swear. Considering I trusted you enough to call you for your advice—"

"A bit for that isn't it, considering you decided to get married to her?"

"Hey," I protest, "Saint did the same, didn't he—?"

"Bloody hell," Saint swears aloud, "will you guys stop holding me up as a shining example of everything done right? Not that things didn't work out for me, but there's a crucial difference between my situation and yours."

"What's that?"

"I fell in love with Victoria as soon as I saw her."

"And as soon as I saw Julia, I knew she was the one," Damian declares.

"You mean I'm not in love with Karina?"

"You're fixated on her," Weston drawls, "but you sure you're in love with her?"

"Anyone else want to venture their opinion?" I growl. "Or have you jokers had your say?"

The barking of a dog sounds, then Sinclair comes on the line, "Sorry, chaps, Max insisted he add his thoughts on the matter."

"Brilliant, that's all I need—Sterling's mutt's point of view." I crack my neck. "I suppose you'll want to give your two bits worth on my love life, or lack thereof?"

"I don't know man," Sinclair muses, "from where I am, it's all clear."

"It is?"

I sense him nod at the other end of the line. "Sure," he replies. "You decided to lay this elaborate plan so you could keep her close. Then, you decided to get her onto your boat, which is more home to you than anything on land. Then you pushed it further by shoving your boat into the path of a storm, decided to take shelter, and then the inevitable happens and you realize you are losing control, so when she throws you a lifeline, you take it. You say yes to marrying her, and all because you've been a pussy all along. You tie it up all in bloody knots, because underneath it all, you feel something for her. But you don't want to admit it to yourself, let alone to her."

I squeeze the bridge of my nose. "That's some crazy shit theory you've come up with," I mutter. "In fact, I am not sure about what you say half the time."

"That's such a lame excuse, Beauchamp." Saint barks out a laugh.

"And what makes you such an expert on the topic?"

"Oh, let's see. It's because I married the woman of my dreams, and I have a kid on the way, and let's face it, I still haven't lost my edge when it comes to making tough decisions."

"Which is what?" I frown.

"That you need to tell her the truth."

"Which is."

"That you love her, which is why you manipulated her to move across the pond, then gave her the business of the Seven so you could keep her close. Now you're carrying out the ultimate in possessive acts by marrying her."

I wince. "And when I tell her... How do you think that's going to go down with her?"

"I don't know," Saint chuckles, "best case, she'll be pissed off at you."

My palms begin to sweat. "And the worst?" I clear my throat. "What would be the worst case?"

There's silence, then Saint says, "She'd leave you?"

I grimace. That's what I am afraid of. And it's not just my ego which would be hurt by that... Which, face it, it would, but that's not the only thing stopping me from telling her everything. If she leaves me, I won't be able to protect her.

My heart begins to race; my pulse rate ratchets up. Of course, what he's saying is true, although he doesn't know the half of it. I should let her know that I know about her background. That I know that she's connected to the Bratva. But a part of me wants her to trust me enough for her to confide in me. But then, I haven't told her all of my secrets either.

"You're right." I clench and unclench my fist. "I need to be upfront with her. Without that, whatever connection is between us, it doesn't stand a chance."

"Bloody hell," Damian barks out a laugh, "is that Mr. Take-risks-and-play-with-his-life Beauchamp actually agreeing to a rational approach?"

Fuck, if it isn't.

"Don't get your panties in a twist," I growl.

"Don't put your horses in front of the cart, Arpad," Edward warns me.

"What's that supposed to mean?"

"I mean, take it easy. Don't force the topic. Lead with your instinct on this one."

"You're telling me, Father." I rise to my feet. "I am the king of instinct. It's thanks to this very instinct that I have been able to sniff out and fund enough startups, thanks to which, I have enough passive income to not have to work for the rest of my life."

"All of which were ultimately decisions you made with your head. When it comes to your heart, though...it's another matter altogether."

"Not that you'll ever have to deal with that," I retort.

Silence for a beat, another, then I swear aloud. "Bloody hell, I didn't mean it that way, Father."

"Sure, you did." Edward's voice is tight.

"That was low," I insist. "Didn't mean to hit you where it would hurt the most."

"You were being honest." Edward's voice is low, "And it's true. Matters of the heart are out of my purview. There's space for love for only one in my heart...and that's the Lord above."

"Right." I drag my fingers through my hair. "Guess there's no other way but for me to face this...head-on, huh?"

"You got this," Weston exclaims. "Just rip it off like a band aid, you know?"

"Face this like a man, you dickwad," Sterling drawls.

"Eyes on the prize, you shitstain," Damian adds.

"Don't all of you get complimentary all at once." Why is it that when we get together, we somehow, lapse right back to being twelve and pre-pubescent wankers again?

"You don't have anything to lose, do you?" Saint, that asswipe, adds his two pennies' worth.

Yeah, I have nothing to lose... Except for my sanity, and my balls... God help me. Not only has she ensured that I'll never want to fuck another woman, but hell, if I don't want to be inside her already again. This entire thing is turning out to be a nightmare. Perhaps I should have turned the yacht around after all, and dropped her off at port, huh?

And then what? I'd have always wondered how it could have been. Hell, it's not like me to overthink my actions... Not when it comes to business, and certainly not when it came to facing down storms.

"What-bloody-ever," I growl. "Thanks for nothing, you guys." I disconnect, then head toward the chalet.

I am used to living life on the edge. Surely, I can manage one tiny woman with attitude, huh?

28

Karina

What the hell? He did it again. He'd accepted my proposal. He'd agreed to marry me. This time, I'm sure he'll cut and run. I mean, why the hell would he agree to something like that? Surely, he is going to back out, right? Except, I don't think so. Shit, why did I propose that? Clearly, when I am with him, I can't think straight.

After the asshole had pulled out and left... I'd straightened my clothes, then the scrabble board. Then put away the stupid board game. I'd hyperventilated on what had just taken place, had been glad that he'd decided to head out and give me a chance to compose myself. And clearly, the only thing that's going to help me when I get so stressed is yoga.

So here I am, flowing into the most basic, yet most challenging pose of all.

On my hands and knees, I position my wrists under my shoulders and my knees under my hips. Stretch my elbows and relax my upper back. Spread my fingers wide and press firmly through my palms, exhale as I tuck my toes and lift my knees off the floor.

Reach my pelvis up toward the ceiling, then draw in my tailbone, and gently begin to straighten my legs, bring my body into the shape of an "A."

Press down and lift through my pelvis. As I lengthen my spine, I lift my tail bone up toward the ceiling. Then press down equally through my heels and the palms of my hands.

Engage my quadriceps.

Align my ears with my upper arms. Relax my head, gaze toward my navel.

Hold... Hold... Hold for one, two, three... My hamstrings elongate, my biceps tremble... Shit. Focus, on how your palms dig into the rug—Yeah, I chose the place before the fire because it's the warmest spot in the room, not to mention, the rug is thick enough to shield my knees when I need to push down on them to rise up... And continue to count, four, five, six. Stop grimacing. That's not the point of yoga. Don't forget to breathe, in-out-in.

I exhale as I gently bend my knees and come back to my hands and knees. A bead of sweat trickles down my spine. The hair on the back of my neck rises. I glance up to find him at the breakfast counter. He leans a hip against the edge, then crosses one leg over the other.

"Why did you stop?" he rumbles.

I scowl, then shift to a kneeling position.

"Why don't you join me?"

"No thanks."

"Worried you can't replicate the position?"

"Baby, the only position I want to replicate is you under me, over me, reverse-cowgirl me, face-off with me—"

"Stop," I plead.

"—as I corkscrew you. Hell, I could even do the Om with you, or we could snow-angel together—"

"Enough," I scowl at him, "so you know your sexual positions."

"We don't need to go that far." He prowls over to me, "Why don't you do the plow, or the cobra or hell, the bridge position?"

"You know about them?"

"I know they are yoga positions that make for very gratifying sex." He smirks.

"Fine, fine," I huff, "you've made your point. And by the way, you're evading the topic."

"What topic?"

"The yoga poses." I tilt up my chin. "Bet you can't keep up with me."

"Is that a dare?"

He walks over to stand in front of me, and since I am still on my knees, it means I am at eye level with his crotch... Which is tented, and the shape of his length is clearly outlined by the fabric of his jeans.

"Don't you ever wear sweats?"

"Sweats?" His lips curl as if it's a dirty word.

I lean my head back to meet his gaze. "Yeah, you know, the loose pants with an elastic drawstring that men wear at home, because they're comfortable?"

He stares back at me.

"Right. Of course, not. It doesn't go with your image, now does it?"

"And what image would that be?"

"That tight-assed, stick-up-your-butt, grumpy-pants, alphahole who hates everything about the world around him."

"That's accurate." He folds his arms over his chest. "And for your information, I prefer jeans to sweats." He tilts his head. "Of course, if you want to see me in them, I'd be happy to oblige, especially since it allows for easy access." His grin widens. "Is that why you asked me about my preference in clothes? You want to make it easy for you to cop a feel, huh?"

"Argh." I make a gagging sound. "Why does our every conversation lead back to sex?"

"Because, you want to get pregnant?" he reminds me.

I sniff, then lower myself to plank position. "Stop trying to distract me and join in."

"I could beat you at yoga, any day."

"Really?" I bite the inside of my cheek. "Let's see you keep up, Romeo."

He drops down into plank position next to me. His movements are fluid; his biceps bulge and his shoulders flex. My throat dries and I almost lose my balance. Shit, get your head back in the game. Focus, focus.

I rise up to side plank. He follows, his breathing not even speeding up. Bloody ballache, need to up the ante now.

I move to all fours in the tabletop position. He follows. Then I place my knees under my hips and my hands under my shoulders.

I draw my shoulder blades together. Raise my right arm and left leg, keeping my shoulders and hips parallel to the floor. I tuck my chin into my chest to gaze down at the floor.

He follows, manages to get into position, only to fall over. He tries again, fails. Growls aloud, glances at me, and copies my position. Manages to hold it for a few seconds, then collapses, sweat gleaming on his forehead. "Bloody hell," he swears, "how the hell could it be that difficult?"

I hold the position for a few seconds more, then lower back down to the starting position. "Not as easy as it looks, huh?" I curve my lips and smile sweetly at him. "Want to try again?" I sit back on my heels.

"Yes," he nods, "but not yoga." He waggles his eyebrows, as he rises to his feet. "How about you continue your practice while I watch?"

"How about you sod off?" I rise to my feet and turn toward the bedroom, then squeak when his fingers tighten around my wrist.

"Not so fast, babe."

I turn to stare at him. "Yes?" I school all expression from my face.

"I told you to continue your practice, didn't I?"

"What if I don't want to?"

"Too bad." He raises a shoulder. "You will do as I say."

"A-n-d, there he is." I sniff. "The man who must have his way in all things."

"Yep," he nods, "you've definitely sussed me out, babe."

"Oh, go to hell." I tug my arm, which he still has a hold of, and his grasp tightens.

"Don't challenge me babe."

"Or what?" I retort. "You've already fucked me, and spanked me. Hell, you've already agreed to marry me, so what else can you do to me?"

He bends his knees, then pushes his face into mine, "Want to find out?"

No.

No.

"Y...yes." Argh, why is my voice so shaky. I clear my throat, "Bring it on."

He releases me, "Run."

"What?"

"Five." He holds up five fingers.

"What are you doing? Is it a countdown?"

His lip curls.

Of course, it's a countdown. Why the hell are you asking dumb questions of this asshole? Why the hell should I run anyway, huh? I purse my lips, stare at him.

"Four." He folds his thumb.

My heart hammers in my throat, my fingers tremble, and I curl them into fists at my sides. "This is not funny," I gripe.

"Three." Only three of his digits remain upright.

I gulp.

"This your kind of kink, then? It's not enough to tie up women, you prefer to chase them first?"

His smile widens, and damn him, but it's not nice. No, it's downright predatory of him to do so. My stomach flip-flops and my core clenches. So why the hell am I turned on?

"Two." He wiggles his two fingers.

Bastard.

"One." Only one finger is now upright, his middle finger.

"Time's up." He lunges forward.

I shriek, then swerve around him and race to the door. My pulse pounds at my wrists, at my temples; adrenaline laces my blood. I twist the handle of the door, tear it open and race out into the rain.

"Stop." I hear his voice a second before the wind swoops over me. I stumble, then brace myself and run in the opposite direction of the shed. Oh, no way, am I going to his torture chamber, where, no doubt, he can't wait to practice his craft on me. Only saving grace?

He hasn't brought another woman to the island and tied her up there. How many others has he tied up before me? It would have to be a significant number for him to reach the level of expertise he's at now. Something hot stabs at my chest... Not jealousy. No way. What the hell do I care who he practices his kink with? And will it stop once we were married? Was he serious when he agreed? And honestly, what had possessed me to ask the question?

I run uphill, not able to see more than a couple of feet in front of me. Shit, it really is bucketing down. Maybe this wasn't a good idea. But what the hell? He'd pissed me off with his stupid challenge, and of course, I had fallen for it and taken off. Not that I could have stayed there and allowed him to jump me either. My thighs spasm... And it's not from the thought of him throwing me down and spreading my legs and burying himself inside of me either. Nope. Get a grip, woman. This is the man who's chasing you through a storm on an island in the middle of nowhere. Do you realize how crazy that sounds?

I hear something above the sound of the wind and the rain. I shake my hair out of my eyes, risk a quick glance over my shoulder. Of course, I can't see anything, considering the rain seems to have just notched up in intensity. My clothes are plastered to my body, a gust of wind slams into me, and I am almost blown back. I dig my heels into the ground for purchase, then lean into the breeze and force myself to take another step. And another.

"Karina!"

I hear his voice call out before the wind drowns it out again.

I increase my pace, cover more ground. More rain lashes against my face. Damn it. I wipe the water from my eyes, put one leg in front of the other. Keep moving. Don't stop. Somehow it seems imperative that I win this round. When did it become a competition, huh? This was supposed to have been easy, him rolling on top and thrusting into me and impregnating me... None of which has gone according to plan. I should have known better than to engage with him... Why the hell did I have to fall asleep in his bed in the first place, huh?

"Karina, stop."

I snort under my breath. There he is again, telling me what to do. Damn him and his dominant ways. I power through the wall of water which seems to have sprung up in front of me.

"Karina! Look out! There's a—"

I place my foot forward, encounter emptiness. I pitch forward.

29

Arpad

Her scream rips through my eardrums. My heart stutters. My pulse begins to race. Adrenaline pours into my blood. I lunge forward through the rain, up the slope and throw myself forward. I hit the edge of the slope, arm flung out, fingers grasping against emptiness. My throat dries. Where the hell is she? "Karina!"

The wind rips my voice into shreds. I swallow and peer through the wall of water. The ground gives under me and I scramble back. "Fuck!" I swear aloud, grip the edge of the crumbling slope, stare through the gathering darkness. "Karina, where are you?"

There's a sound... Is that her? Did I hear something?

"Karina, is that you? Answer me," I command.

"Ari?" Her voice is weak, and so low that I'm sure I must be mistaken.

"Karina?" I yell out, "Where the fuck are you?"

"Can't you stop swearing for one second?" She coughs, and this time I hear her clearly. Fuck, she's close. Why can't I see her?

I crawl forward on my stomach, and the edge of the slope crumbles again. "Fuck." I need to brace myself against something, but what? I glance around, spot a tree a few feet away. "Fuckin' fuck." I am going to have to go back to get something to help me with this.

"Karina?"

"Yeah?" She answers promptly, so that's something.

"You hurt? Are you okay?"

"My ankle's sprained." She coughs again. "I am just cold and wet."

"That's an understatement," I grumble.

"Wow," she gasps, "so you and I agree on something, huh?"

"The only thing we are in agreement on is that I am going to tan your hide when I finally get to you."

"It's all your fault anyway," she calls out. "If you hadn't initiated your stupid sex games—"

"It wasn't a sex game... It was just a way of keeping you on your toes."

"And why would you need to do that?"

"Do you really want to have this conversation now?"

"Is there a better time?"

"You stealing my dialogue?" I frown as I stare down in the direction of her voice and make out a ledge. The breath rushes out of me. Okay, fine, so at least, she's not far away.

"You alphaholes don't have the prerogative for always being in the lead," she yells back.

"Ha, when it comes to you, woman, I doubt I can stay ahead for too long," I reply.

"OMG, I can't believe you are being nice to me." She coughs again and my stomach twists. She can't stay out here for too long.

Thunder crashes in the distance, then lightning flickers and I see her on the ground, not six feet below, not too far... But not very close either.

"I am going to have to go back and get a hold of some rope so I can haul you up." I project my voice in her direction.

"Ha," she scoffs, "any excuse to truss me up, eh?"

"We could have skipped all this if you had asked me to tie you up when you came to the shed."

"You mean your room of pain?"

"Was it painful when I tied you up the first time?" I frown.

She hesitates.

"Tell me, Sparks, did I hurt you then?"

"No," I sense her shake her head, "it was different, that's all."

"Good different or bad different?"

"It wasn't bad. Actually, I think I liked it."

"You did?"

"Yeah." She coughs again and I frown. "Hold that thought, will you? I'll head out and be right back in a few minutes."

She doesn't reply.

"Karina? You okay?"

Silence, for a beat, another. "Yeah," she finally replies and her voice sounds weaker.

"Hang in there, Sparks. I promise, I won't take too long."

"If I'd known it only takes my falling off a cliff for you to go all sensitive and protective..."

"I've always been protective of you, Karina. You know that."

She doesn't reply.

"I'll be back before you know it."

I turn to leave when she calls out, "Ari?"

I pause. "Yeah, babe?"

"Get the rope that you'd have used to tie me anyway."

"You got it, babe." I lower my head, shield my face against the elements, then continue down the slope.

The same rope? She wants me to use the rope that I already picked out for her. How the hell could she know that? Is she that perceptive, that she'd clocked my peculiarities already? Or was it a lucky guess?

What a woman she is. I'd been sure she was going to tell me to hurry back, or that she was too cold, or that she couldn't last out there much longer, but hell, if she hadn't surprised me again. She's so tiny, so delicate, I often forget her looks are misleading. My woman has a spine of steel. She's a survivor. She's had to be, to have gotten this far on her own. But never again, will she need to do everything on her own. At least, for as long as I am with her, I am going to make sure she never has to do anything by herself. She'll have me as her back up and...

Hold on a bloody second. What the hell am I doing, building these plans with her...knowing that...she isn't being honest with me, that she is hiding her true identity? I shake my head. There are too many conflicting threads of thought here. I need to prioritize. Focus on one thing at a time. And for now, that is getting her back to safety.

I reach the chalet, tear open the door, then pound through the living room and into the bedroom. I open the closet, grab the rope that I had set aside for her, then snatch up two more of my strongest ones, just in case.

I am out and racing up the hill in minutes. The wind slams into me, pushing me back, and I have to double over to make progress. By the time I reach the top of the slope, I am panting. I loop the ropes around my arm, then drop down and crawl to the edge on my stomach.

"Karina?" I call out, and the wind once more tears the words out of my mouth. "Babe, you there?"

No reply.

Shit, shit, shit. Am I too late? Where the hell is she? "Sparks, where the fuck are you? If you don't reply in another second, I swear, I am coming down there, and when I do, I am going to spank your arse so hard that—"

"Yeah, yeah." Her voice reaches me. She coughs, then seems to gather herself together. "I know how much you like my ass, but if you don't pull me up first, I'm afraid it's going to have frozen and fallen off."

My shoulders slump. Whew, she's still there. Of course, she is. Where the hell would she have gone?

"Watch out for the rope, okay?"

I pull out the first coil of rope, make a lasso out of it, then throw it in her direction.

"Did you get it?"

"What?"

"The rope."

"Did you throw it?"

Fuck. I retrieve the rope, then aim the lasso in the direction of her voice and spring it at her.

"Did you see that?"

"Nope."

"Bloody fuck."

"Don't you know any other swear words? The F bomb is sooo passé."

"Ah, but nothing else quite encapsulates how I am feeling right now."

She chuckles, "Don't tell me that Arpad Alphahole is short of swear words?"

I pull back the rope, wipe my face on my sleeve. Focus, focus. "Sure, if swear words are what you want to hear right now, then how about... Wanker, twat, bollocks, arsebadger, jizzcock,"

She laughs, "You're taking the piss now."

"That too."

I throw the lasso at her, and feel it tauten. "Did you catch it?"

"Yes," she gasps, "OMG, I have it."

"Hold onto it, walk toward my voice."

There's a pause before I hear her swear loudly.

"Careful," I caution, "don't hurt yourself, babe."

My heart begins to thud and my throat closes. I tie the end of the rope to the other hank of rope I brought. Then I wind it around my middle, fasten it with enough knots. There, that should hold now. I lower myself to the ground and stretch-out with my head hanging over the edge.

I peer through the pouring rain. Where the hell is she?

"Can you see the edge of the cliff?"

"Not yet."

"Stretch out your hand, slowly... Tell me when you can feel the edge."

The rope vibrates as she moves forward. "Oh, I am there now."

"Okay, wind the rope around your middle. Let me know when you have secured it."

There's silence, except for the wind and the pelting rain, as she does so. The rope dances as some of the slack is taken up, then the length tautens again. "I'm ready."

"I'm going to haul you up."

"Okay."

"Are you able to use your good leg to balance against the wall, if needed?"

"Yes," she calls back, "I... I think so. I'll try."

"Good girl."

I begin to haul her up. My biceps feel it, my shoulders protest, I'm pulled forward by the weight of her body, and she screams out, "Ari!"

"It's fine." I blow out a breath. Still stretched out on my front I dig my toes into the ground for purchase. I tighten my muscles, wind the rope around my palms and haul.

My entire body tenses and my shoulders feel like they are being pulled out their sockets. Pain grips my chest and my back. I grit my teeth, continue to pull her up, slowly, slowly. "You... okay?" I huff out.

"Yes..." her voice is closer. She sounds weak, but at least, she is not panicking.

"You're doing so well, darling. I swear, it will all be over before you know it. Just a few more seconds, baby. That's all; hold on..." I continue to haul her up toward me. The rope abrades my skin, the rain drips down my forehead and I blink it out of my eyes.

The wind blows and the rope sways.

"Ari," she screams, and she's so close now.

"I have you, babe." I firm my lips, draw in another breath and yank upward; her head appears above the edge of the precipice. Finally. Fuck. It's as if I am seeing a newborn enter the world for a first time.

Warmth flushes my chest. Adrenaline pumps through my veins and I draw on every single reserve of strength left inside of me. I flex my muscles, then dig my feet into the ground and heave. Her entire body slides up and over the precipice. I wrap my arms about her, haul her close, and collapse with her on top of me.

30

Karina

Heat cocoons me, his arms shelter me, the scent of his maleness—the essence of pheromones and dark edginess that is so Arpad—envelops me. The breath rushes out of me, and only then, do I realize how tense I've been all along. My legs tremble, I raise my arm—or at least try to, for I find I can't move. My fingers tremble, my muscles turn to jelly. A shudder wracks me, and another. Pressure builds behind my eyes, moisture clings to my cheeks, and it's not just from the rain. My shoulders heave and I press my face into his hard chest and allow the tears to flow.

"Shh." He rocks me, runs his fingers down my hair, winds his arm around me, holds me close. "I got you, babe. I got you, and I'm never letting you go again."

I only cry harder, the pent-up pressure from finding myself on his boat, and then trying to resist him and failing, wanting to be tied up by him and not wanting him to know, the sheer intense connection between us, which had made the times we'd come together so much more potent; all of it seems to come to a head, there in his arms, on the top of a peak, on an island in the middle of the English Channel.

"Jesus, Sparks, you're breaking my heart," his voice whispers in my ear.

I lean back, tilt my chin up. "Kiss me," I sob. "Please Ari, kiss m—"

He lowers his head and closes his mouth over mine. And the kiss is anything but gentle. He thrusts his tongue inside my mouth and takes and takes, and shares his breath. I press myself closer to him, push my breasts into his chest. I lean into him and part my lips and allow him to fuck my mouth with his tongue.

The kiss seems to go on and on. I lose myself in the softness of his lips, the hard demand of his tongue as he swipes it across my teeth. He winds his fingers around my knotted hair and tugs. Pain slithers down my scalp. I moan deep in my throat. I am alive. I am here in his arms, with him. I tear my mouth from his, stare into his face, "Tie me up again and fuck me."

He stares into my eyes as if taken aback, then chuckles. "This is why I can't resist you. You always surprise me, Sparks."

"I...do?"

He nods.

The sun filters through the clouds and I blink.

"Well look at that." He glances up at the sky. "The storm blew over."

I stare about me, and sure enough, the rain has faded away as quickly as it had started. The pale orb of the sun lights up the bottom of the clouds with a silvery lining.

He rises to his feet with me in his arms. I glance down to find that the rope which winds around me is also wrapped around his waist. "We're connected," I mutter.

"Eh?" He strides down the slope, his long legs eating up the distance.

"The rope," I swallow, "I am wearing it and so are you."

"Imagine that." He shakes his head. "Never thought I'd see the day when I'd be entangled in my own rope."

"I'm also very muddy."

"I prefer you dirtied up, Sparks." He chuckles.

It's a strange feeling... To be carried. It makes me feel cherished, cared for, like I could lean on him. Something I haven't done since...

I had been a small child and my father had wiped my tears after I had engaged in a particularly bad fight with the school bully...who had been much bigger than me. He had been called to school that day and my principal had had a word with him. My father had been disappointed in my behavior, yet he'd also comforted me.

He'd told me that I need to choose my battles wisely, for I could never hope to win all of them, but I could minimize the risk of failure by deciding which challenges to go after.

And since meeting Arpad... My subconscious has decided that he is the biggest challenge of them all. I haven't known what to make of it... Clearly, the disagreements between us, resulting mainly because of his heavy-handedness, have made me think that I hate him... But all along, it has been a precursor for the attraction between us. And something more... This sense that we, somehow, fit together. Two parts of a puzzle, whose big picture I still can't see... But there is this need to find out what it might turn out to be.

So, I press myself as close to him as I can, allow myself the decadence of luxuriating in his strength, his solidity, the utter masculinity that resides in every angle of his body, the thud-thud-thud of his heart against my cheek as I close my eyes and drift off.

"Sparks?"

"Hmm."

"I need to get you out of these wet clothes." His voice rumbles around me, the heat of his body a siren's call. I turn, lean toward the source of the warmth and he chuckles.

"Just need to ease this shirt off you, okay?"

I crack open my eyes to find he's doing just that. He slides the shirt off one shoulder, then the other. Goosebumps erupt across my skin. The world tilts and I turn my head to find he's carrying me into the shower cubicle. He lowers my feet to the ground, then supports me as he turns the shower on. The hot water is a shock and I sneeze once, twice.

"Shit, hope you're not going to catch a cold, sweetheart."

Sweetheart," I mumble, my eyelids so heavy I can barely keep them open. "You called me darling earlier, then baby..." I murmur under my breath.

"You have a preference?"

"All of them... All the time." I close my eyes and relax against his big body as the hot water soothes me.

I must have dozed off again, for when I come to next, it's dark. I rub my cheek into the soft pillow, glance around the bedroom. The rugs on the floor, the door to the closet in the corner, the table with the two chairs pushed up against the window.... Right, guess I must have fallen asleep during the shower and Arpad had put me to bed again. I glance down and find I'm wearing another of his T-shirts. The material is soft. Not because of being washed too often; it's just the quality of what he wears. I bring my arm to my nose and sniff. The scent of detergent and Arpad fills my senses. My stomach rumbles and I realize I am hungry. Guess I must have recovered if my body wants to be fed so insistently. I swing my legs over the edge of the bed, and stand. My ankle protests. I lean my weight on it and find it holds. Okay. Good. I limp to the door, open it and walk through into the kitchen.

His back is to me. Once again, he's wearing a new pair of jeans with a sweatshirt. Over one shoulder is a kitchen towel. As I watch, he bends over the skillet where he's stirring something, then raises the wooden spoon to his mouth and tastes something. The biceps of his arm bulge, the planes of his back bend and dip in an all too familiar symmetry. My toes curl. I drink in the sight of his narrow waist, the tight arse, the powerful corded thighs that flow down to meet strong hamstrings and his feet... His gorgeous feet are bare again.

"You don't like wearing socks?" My voice comes out rusty and I clear my throat.

He turns and surveys me from head to toe. "What are you doing out of bed?" He scowls.

"I was hungry..."

"Get back under the covers. I'll bring you food."

"But," I frown, "I feel fine."

"You look wrecked."

"Oh," I pat my cheeks, smooth the hair from my face, "thanks for that."

I purse my lips, and he sighs, "You always look beautiful, no matter what time of the day or night... You know that, right?"

Blood rushes to my face. "Right."

He jerks his chin toward the bedroom, "Go on, get back under the covers. I'll bring you something to eat."

I hesitate and he glares at me. "Don't disobey me."

"A-n-d he's back," I blow out a breath, "alphahole of the fucking century."

His gaze intensifies. "Don't fuck with me, Sparks."

"What happened to all the endearments?" I fold my arms around my waist, "You were going all baby this and honey that with me..."

"Honey?" He frowns. "How bourgeois do you think I am? Besides, you're fine now, aren't you?"

"So, you said those things because you thought I was in danger?" I scowl.

"Obviously." He raises a shoulder. "You didn't think I actually meant them, did you?"

My mouth drops open. "Jesus, you're a piece of work, you know that?"

"I don't care what you think about me, as long as you get back to bed."

"And if I don't?" I set my jaw.

He turns off the flame under the skillet, places the wooden spoon aside and covers the dish. Then he flicks the dish cloth from his shoulder and turns to face me, "Do you want me to come there?"

I swallow and my stomach twists. Pinpricks of heat flicker down my spine. Damn it, why does the threat from him turn me on so?

"And if I said yes?"

"Are you saying yes?" He takes a step forward and I shuffle back.

He moves toward me and I hold up my hand, "N...no... I mean, yes. I mean, forget it, I am heading back."

I limp my way to the bedroom. Why do I let him get under my skin so? Why can't I simply stay out of his way? Why do I keep giving him the opportunity to put me in my place? And why the hell does he have to be so rude to me? Especially after showing me his tender side? I am not going to cry now, no way. I sidle into bed, pull up the covers, then glance up when he walks into the room. He has a tray with a bowl of something that smells absolutely delicious. He places the tray on the table by the window, then comes over to me. "Sit up," he growls.

I stare at him, and he tilts his head. "Do it."

"Yeah, yeah. What's got your goat?"

"Who's got your goat?" He corrects me.

"That's what I meant."

"Not the same thing."

"Stupid semantics."

"You need to be precise in what you say and do, else it leaves room for error," he retorts.

"You need to decide whether you like me or hate me because this seesaw mood of yours is giving me whiplash."

He leans around to prop up the pillows at my back, then touches the side of my neck. "You don't have whiplash, do you?"

I shiver, then cringe away from his touch. "I am fine, as long as you don't touch me," I choke out the words, and he stiffens. He pulls away and I instantly miss his proximity. Damn it, this is crazy. This push, pull between us... It is doing my head in.

He walks over to the table, picks up the tray, then returns to place it across my thighs.

He pulls up a chair, sinks into it, then picks up the spoon and dips it in the soup. He holds it up to my mouth and I purse my lips.

He blows out a breath. "Eat," he growls.

I feel about ten. Hell, I want to throw a tantrum like I am ten and refuse to touch my food. I fold my arms across my chest and stare at him.

He meets my gaze, and his own softens. "Please," he murmurs. "Eat; the food will warm you up."

And there he goes again, revealing his caring side which, to be fair, disarms me more than his dominance.

I open my mouth and he slides the spoon in between my lips. The taste of tomatoes and peppers explodes on my tongue. "It's good," I say.

"Of course, it is," He smirks.

"Modesty, thy name is not Arpad f'ing Beauchamp," I grumble under my breath.

He chuckles and scoops up more of the broth and holds it up for me. I eat my way through the rest of the soup and soon the bowl is empty.

He sets the spoon back on the tray, then uses his sleeve to dab at my mouth.

I blink up at him. "You seem to feed me an awful lot."

"Need you strong so I can feed you something other than food."

Heat flushes my face. I glower at him and he laughs. "Couldn't resist that."

"Right." I yawn so hugely that my jaw cracks.

"You should get some more rest." He picks up the tray and rises to his feet. He turns to leave and, somehow, I can't let him go. Not yet.

"Will you be back?"

He turns to glance at me. "Do you want me to return?"

I nod.

"Then I will."

He heads out of the room. I switch off the lamp next to me, snuggle in. I must have passed out again. When I wake up its dawn and the bed next to me is cold.

I push the covers aside, slide out of bed, and stretch. I walk out into the living room and come to a stand-still. "What are you up to?"

31

Arpad

"What does it look like?"

I look up from the doorway where I've slipped on my jacket.

"Looks to me like you are leaving?"

"So are you."

She rubs one bare foot over the other, and of course, my gaze is instantly drawn to the length of her legs. The T-shirt she wears—my T-shirt, reaches the tops of her knees. She folds her fingers together in front of her, then tips up her chin. "We're leaving?" she asks.

I jerk my chin toward the window where sunshine streams in.

"I've been up since dawn making sure the yacht is ready to sail.

"Oh." She swallows, then folds her arms in front of her. "So that's it, then?"

"That's it." I nod.

"You said you'd come back to bed last night." She squeezes her eyes closed. "No, wait. What am I saying? Forget I said it... I mean..." She rakes her fingers through her hair, messing it up some more.

My fingers tingle and I want to move toward her and smooth down the errant strands. Instead, I stay where I am. "I did come to bed. You were asleep by then, and when I woke up this morning, you were still sleeping."

"Right," she swallows, "give me a few minutes to jump into the shower." She turns to leave, then winces, and glances down at her ankle.

I take a step forward. "You okay?"

"Yes, of course." She heads off to the bedroom.

I call after her, "I'm sorry."

She pauses, then turns to face me, "For what?"

"For allowing you to leave the house yesterday. If I hadn't, you wouldn't have run through the rain or fallen over the side and—"

"Hold on... You allowed me to leave the house? You allowed me?"

I narrow my gaze. "I should have stopped you."

"You didn't make me do anything," she snarls. "I ran out because it was the only way I had a chance of outrunning you."

"That's what I mean, I shouldn't have let you out of the house."

I take a step forward and so does she.

"I should have tied you to the bed when I had the chance and fucked you until you couldn't walk again."

Her chest rises and falls; her pupils dilate. "Think again, buster." She hobbles over to me, then stabs a finger in my chest, "You can't make me do anything I don't want to do. You are not the master of me, asshole."

"Don't tempt me to prove otherwise."

"What are you going to do? Use your stupid ego, and over-the-top possessiveness to put me in my place?"

"That might be a start." I don't stop the sneer that curls my lips. "Better still, I might throw you down on the floor right here and bury my cock inside you all over again."

"So why don't you do it?"

She digs her finger into my chest and I snarl, "Don't tempt me."

"I am challenging you to do it, you asshole."

"Alphahole, remember?" I step back and her hands fall away. "And no, thank you. I do believe I've done my duty toward you. I shagged for nearly 48 hours past your ovulation window. Realistically, I do believe the chances of you conceiving are slim now, so..." I raise a shoulder, "I think I'll pass on the offer, babe."

She lets loose with her hand and I catch her wrist. "Watch it," I growl. "I am going to overlook your error this time because you're still recovering from your fall yesterday."

"Oh, sod off," she snarls. "This contract, or whatever it is that we had, is over now."

"No, it isn't." I click my tongue, "I pumped you up with my cum, the results of which are still unknown. In return, you're going to come with me to see my family, and we have another 29 days within which to try again. Besides, we are getting married, aren't we?"

"You're crazy." She tosses her hair over her shoulder, "You only came once where it would be useful. The rest of the time you were just playing around, using all sorts of other ways to get you and me off, but not in a way that would impregnate me."

"Are you denying that I came inside you and that you could be pregnant as we speak?"

She sets her lips.

"That's what I thought." I look her up and down, "Suddenly, everything is clear to me, Sparks."

"Don't call me that."

"Sparks." I smirk and she makes a sound deep in her throat.

My dick instantly twitches. Why is it that the more I annoy her, the more I seem to like her? That spirit inside of her... My God... It seduces me like nothing else ever has.

"As I was saying, after yesterday's escapade, it's clear to me that you need a keeper."

"What I need is to have my head examined that I was ever attracted to you."

"So, you admit it then?"

"What?"

"That you find me attractive."

"I find gorillas attractive." She tosses her head. "Doesn't mean anything."

"It means something that you proposed to me."

"I'll never live that down, will I?" She flicks her hair over her shoulder. "Put it down to temporary insanity."

"Or clarity? Maybe that's the only time you were thinking straight?"

She lowers her hands to her sides, fixes me with her gaze, "What do you want me to say? That yes, I did think we had a connection? In fact, yesterday when I was alone on that ledge and waiting for you to return, I promised myself that if I made it back in one piece, I'd tell you the truth about what I felt. And then, when you rescued me and carried me back in your arms and took care of me, I was sure that the connection between us was more than sex. But then, you have to go and make a complete wreck of everything with your over-the-top dominance."

"That's me, sweetheart. I can't apologize for what I am."

She throws up her hands, "Jesus, you take my breath away, you know that?"

"I'd always suspected it. Thank you for confirming it." I widen my smile and she curls the fingers of her palms into fists at her sides.

I click my tongue, "Don't even think about it."

"Argh." She throws up her hands. "Let's just agree to disagree, shall we?"

"What-bloody-ever." I yawn. "Get dressed, will you? I don't want to be late for lunch."

32

Karina

Half an hour later, we're on his yacht, which honestly, doesn't look much worse for wear. Apparently, it's sturdier than I had assumed.

On the other hand, I had given the asshole steering this vessel too much credit, and for all the wrong things. For some reason, I'd thought that behind that callous exterior of his, beats a heart that is much more sensitive. Surely, those little glimpses of affection he'd shown me, that tenderness and caring that he sometimes revealed... There's more of that where it came from, right?

I bite into the sandwich that he'd handed over to me, along with the bottle of orange juice that he'd carried with him. When I'd refused to take it, he'd simply reminded me to think of the possible life I may carry.

I flatten my palm to my stomach. Bloody hell, I couldn't be pregnant, could I? I don't feel any different, but then, how is one supposed to feel in the days following conception?

And if I am? What then? Would the sham marriage we are pursuing turn out to be real? Why the hell does he still want to go through with it, anyway?

I stare at the man who stands on the deck. He's wearing his jacket and boots, with a cap perched on his unruly hair. He steers the boat with a firm hand... Just as he had pulled me up the cliff-side without hesitation. And those terms of endearment he had used after that? No, I hadn't imagined that. He feels something for me, but he is fighting it. What is it that holds him back from sharing the real reason for his bad mood, anyway?

I walk up the steps from the cabin and onto the deck. As I draw abreast of him, I smooth my hands down my jeans... A pair borrowed from him which, despite having been cinched in at the waist with a piece of rope that he'd loaned me, is perched precariously low on my hips. I also had to roll up the legs to almost half the normal length. And the shirt is so big, it swallows me. I'm not fit for company. When I'd told him, he'd said that his family wouldn't care.

Men. Honestly. No way, am I going anywhere without the proper attire.

When I'd insisted, he'd relented. He'd said that we would stop at a shop on the way to his family's place, where I could pick up some new clothes.

That's something, I suppose. A minor victory, but still, he'd ceded to me. One step at a time.

I stop next to him, peer through the windshield at the stretch of water ahead of us. "How much longer?" I ask.

"We should be docking in half an hour," he replies.

"Does your family know that we are coming?"

"They know that I am coming."

"Of course." I snort. "Thanks for the heads-up."

"Anytime." His lips twist. "You don't have to worry yourself about the visit."

"Yeah, it's only every day that I go to meet the family of my fake husband, soon to be my real husband—which would make them my fake-real to-be in-laws, so yeah, and by the way, I could already be pregnant with his child...or not..."

I draw in a breath, and he chuckles. "That's some twisted shit, right there, you've got yourself into, Sparks."

"You're telling me." I turn to him, when my phone begins to ping with incoming messages. Guess we are back within reach of the non-satellite networks then?

Not that he'd have refused to let me use the satellite phone if I'd asked. Except, that would have meant that he'd listen in on my conversations, which is not what I wanted.

"Umm, I need to make a call," I venture.

"Not stopping you," he replies, his voice preoccupied.

"I'm going to step out."

"Suit yourself." He turns to fiddle with the dials on his dash.

Jerk, could've pretended that he wanted my company for a little longer, right?

I flounce out and back into the bedroom on the far end of the boat, then close the door and lock it behind me for good measure.

I call up Samuel, my right-hand person, who confirms to me that everything is fine. Clients are all happy, there's nothing pending, no fires to put out, or if there were, they've already been resolved. Huh? So, guess I wasn't missed at all? A heavy feeling invades my stomach. Yeah, this is what I've been dedicating my days and nights to; for building my business and my team. Apparently, I've done a thorough job of it, because my company can run itself without my direct involvement for a few days. I draw in a breath. No one is indispensable; I know that. But this is my enterprise; so, you'd think things could have, at least, collapsed a little when I wasn't there to directly steer things along, right?

I bite the inside of my cheek. Now, I am being childish. It's a good thing that my business is on track. When I have kids, if I need to work remotely or go part-time for a while, it means I'll be able to do that without the work suffering. I bid him goodbye and hang up before he can ask me about my holiday—or lack thereof.

Then I dial Isla's number.

"Heyyy youuu!" She comes on the line breathless, "Where have you been? I've been trying to reach you, but I kept getting an out-of-range message."

"That's because I was."

"Oh?" Her voice comes through clearer. "Just took you off the speaker."

I hear voices in the background, which recede.

"Where are you?"

"At a wedding rehearsal, and OMG, this bridezilla is so annoying. She just found out that her friend got engaged as well and is planning to get married this year."

"So, what's the problem?"

"Apparently, it's her special year, and not just a day. The woman's convinced that her friend is getting married to steal her thunder." Isla snorts. "Because no one else can have a life at the same time as her, right?"

I hear the sound of something crashing.

"What was that?"

"She just yanked the table cloth from the table and all the crockery was on it," Isla says, her voice calm.

"At least, there was no food on the table, or as Ari would say, that would be a travesty."

"Ari?"

"I mean Arpad."

"So, it's like that, hmm?"

"That's not why I called you."

"Are you with him now?"

"What if I am?"

"You're definitely with him," she crows. "Give it up, girlfriend. So, you finally did it, didn't you?"

"Did what?"

"Want me to spell it out for you?" She laughs. "Give it up, babe. You know I won't stop asking you about it until you do."

I blow out a breath, "Fine, fine," I grouse, "I'm with the asshole aboard his yacht."

"I knew it," she yells. "Fist bump, fist bump."

"It's nothing to celebrate, though."

"Of course, it is," she sings out. "Ari and Kari making out on a yacht."

"Yachty?" I wince. "Really? What are you? Ten?"

"Just soooo happy that you two finally decided to do it."

"And how," I mutter under my breath, but she catches it.

"That's what I want to know. Details, girlfriend."

"No way," I reply, horrified. "I am not going to share details about my sex life with you."

"Aww, party pooper."

"That's me." I shuffle my feet, then walk over to the large window of the cabin and glance outside.

"At least, tell me if it was everything you expected?"

"It was...." I stare at the shore that I can now see in the distance, "different."

"Different?" she yells. "That's all you're going to give me? Come on, take pity on someone who's been living vicariously through the exploits of all you women who've been hooking up with the Seven."

"Why don't you get one of them for yourself?"

"Nope, no way, nada," she protests. "Those a-holes are way too possessive for me. I like someone who gives me my space, you know?"

"That's why you've been eyeing up the only man who'd possibly beat the Seven at their own game?"

There's silence, then she groans, "Not you as well?"

"So, you know who I am talking about?" I chuckle.

"Erm..." she clears her throat, "who were you talking about?"

"First you," I insist. It's delightful how quickly I've managed to distract her. Whew.

"Yeah, okay, Liam...the fierce-as-fuck, sexy as-a-delicious-groomsman, mean-as-a-bride-to-be-before-her-wedding, Kincaid."

I laugh. "Those are some interesting comparisons you have there."

"That's what comes of organizing weddings for a living." She continues, "I have the caricatures of those I've encountered on my brain. I'm afraid it's turning me into a cynic."

"Cynical, and you?" I shake my head. "Nah, you're the most optimistic woman I have ever met. I mean, come on, you have to be, to put together as many weddings as you have and still keep your sense of humor, not to mention your energy levels."

"Hmm," she grunts, "why are you buttering me up like I am a three-tiered wedding cake?"

"Aww, come on. Can't I compliment a friend?"

"You don't do compliments, Karina." I sense the smile in her words.

"What do you mean?" I twirl a strand of hair around my fingers. "Haven't I been complimentary of you in the past? Or Julia? Or Summer?"

"Umm, no?"

"Hold on," I stiffen, "are you saying that I am unfeeling?"

"No, no," she protests. "On the contrary, it's clear to us that you feel a lot. You tend to have it all bottled inside, which is fine. It's the way you are you. It's why, when you say something, we all end up listening. We know it's significant."

"You make me sound..." I chew on my lower lip, "like a reserved, stuck-up bitch."

"You don't come across as reserved or stuck up. More like cautious, like you take your time getting to know people before you open up to them."

"Hmm." I hunch my shoulders, not sure what to make of it. I do take my time getting to know people before I trust them. Which is why my reaction to Mr. Grumpy pants is a complete mystery. I thought I hated him... And then, at the first opportunity, I'd pretty much agreed to sleep with him...and... and... "I proposed to him."

"Wait...? What?" There's the sound of something crashing.

"Isla?" I frown. "Isla? You there?"

I hear the sound of footsteps then more thumps. "I... I'm here," she finally says.

"You okay?"

"More to the point, are you okay?"

"I'm not sure." I walk over to the bed... The bed where he fucked me. The covers are still a mess, with dents in the middle of each pillow, indicating that, clearly, it had been a couple who had shared this space not too long ago. I sink down onto the mattress. "It's why I called you."

"And here I thought you were calling to say 'hi' to me and check in how my day was going."

"Of course," I swallow, "that too... I mean... I... Ah." Tears knock at the backs of my eyes. Fuck. The hormones I'd been injecting myself with in advance of the IUI are clearly messing me up.

"And...and...before that, I asked him to father my child."

"You did what?" Her voice rises in pitch.

"Yeah..." I nod, "I was scheduled to get artificially inseminated, only instead of making it to my appointment, I ended up being stuck on the yacht with Arpad."

"So, you asked him to step in?"

"Pretty much."

"And... uh... How did your proxy jizz maker perform?" There's a hint of laughter in her voice.

"Can't complain," I mumble. "And now you're having fun at my expense?"

"No, babe. Of course, not. It's just, you have to admit, as stories go...and trust me, I've heard some pretty crazy shit from each of the other women as they got together with one of the Seven... But your story—" She blows out a low whistle.

I press the heel of my palm into my forehead. "That bad, huh?"

"It's...up there with how Harry met Sally or Ennis and Jack in Brokeback Mountain or Blake and Dan in Gossip Girl or..."

"I get the picture," I say hastily. "So," I jump up and begin to pace, "what do you think I should do?"

"What do you want to do?"

"I don't know what I want to do; that's why I'm asking you."

"Bullshit," she snaps, "of course, you do."

"No, I don't." I pull the phone away from my ear then speak into the mouthpiece, "Are you going to give me the benefit of your advice or what?"

I hold the phone to my ear again, and she blows out a breath.

"Do you want to walk away from him?"

"I'm not sure."

"Do you want to stay with him?"

"Not sure either."

"Maybe you should give it some time. Perhaps you're not ready to make the decision yet?"

"May...be." I stop again by the window. "There are times I want to punch his face, other times I want to kiss it... But most of the time I want to—"

"—Be close to him?"

"Not quite..." I bite the inside of my cheek. "I admit, I don't want to give up this chance of getting pregnant, you know? It's the one thing I have always wanted, a kid of my own."

"You're brave, wanting to do this by yourself."

"Or a coward?" I raise a shoulder. "It seems less stressful if I don't have a man to deal with. Besides, this way, I get to do what's right for the kid without always having to fight it out with the father."

"Or maybe, you and the father would discuss it and arrive at a decision that would benefit the child the most?"

"Are you trying to push me in his direction?"

"Hey," she protests, "you asked me for my opinion."

"You're not in favor of my bringing up a child on my own?"

"You're strong enough to do anything, including having a family by yourself without a man." Isla hesitates, "I guess, me personally, though... I can't see myself doing it without a partner. Maybe I am old-fashioned that way. I want security, and the man I marry needs to be able to provide that, above everything else."

"And love?" I chew on my lower lip. "What about finding love? Don't you want that?"

She laughs, "I knew you were a closet romantic."

"I'm not."

"Of course, you are." She snickers. "The tougher career-minded ones are always the ones who fall the hardest."

"Hey," I protest, "I thought you were on my side."

"I am, babe. It's why I am telling you to follow your heart."

"Like that's going to help me?" I huff.

"Why don't you bide your time? Go with the flow, see how things turn out, you'll know when you'll know."

"Right." I hang up, then turn toward the door. Guess I've put this off long enough. It's time to go out there and face the sullen beast.

I square my shoulders and head for the door.

Arpad

"Would you like something to drink, Sir?"

I glance up from where I've been tracking my investments on my phone. We are in the most exclusive boutique in Lille. One that showcases British designers—something unusual when you're on French soil—and which is why my grandmother loves to come here.

"A hot chocolate, maybe, Sir?" she prompts.

I glare at the saleswoman, "Do I look like the type who drinks hot chocolate?"

"Yes, Sir. I mean, no, Sir." She blinks rapidly. "I mean—"

"Whiskey," I snap, "hold the ice."

"Of course, Sir." She turns and scampers out.

"Still frightening the hired help, I see?" Karina drawls. "Why don't you pick on someone your own size?"

"You mean like..." I take in her outfit and stare and stare, "like you?"

"Like the dress?" She juts out a hip, then props her hand on it.

"Like it?" I drag my gaze down the modest neckline that hints at cleavage, though I know that the fabric covers the most luscious tits I have ever laid eyes on. The belt that's cinched in at the waist, except I know that underneath it is the smoothest belly, with the delicate nip of her belly button. The flare of her hips, that no dress in the world can hide. Stocking clad legs, and on her feet, she wears delicate ankle-length boots.

I frown and she straightens. "What's wrong with it?" She looks down at herself.

"You're showing too much flesh."

"What?" She gapes. "This is a long-sleeved dress."

"It's too short."

"It goes to my knees."

"Ankle length," I nod, "Get an ankle length one."

She stares, "Are you serious?"

"No, actually," I snap my fingers, "something that comes to your toes." Yes, that's better. That way, no one can catch a glimpse of her gorgeous ankles either

"You've lost it." She turns and walks into the changing room. I jump up and follow her, close the door to the space and lock it.

She freezes, turns around. "What are you doing here?"

"What do you think?" I take a step forward, "I think we should continue with our original plan of getting you pregnant."

She glances around the space, "Here?"

I nod, "Right, here."

She stiffens, "We don't have time."

"Ordinarily, I'd say I need more time, but in this instance, considering how luscious you look in that dress—" I close the distance between us and she puts up her palms.

"This is just a simple, everyday wear outfit, you know?"

"But on you," I stare down at her chest, "it looks fucking incredible."

"Why don't you say that to my face," she grumbles.

I tip my chin up, "Sorry, babe. Your tits are just the most gorgeous things I've seen, since the money from my first £1 million pound deal hit my bottom line."

"Are you comparing me to a transaction?"

"I know right?" I shake my head. "What could be more flattering?"

She scowls up at me. "Maybe just appreciating me for what I am?"

"But I do." I stare. "Come on, babe. You're a business woman. You understand the value of money and how important it is, and especially your first big win... There's nothing sweeter than the taste of it, so the very fact that I compared you to that shows how much respect I have for you."

"Respect?" She purses her lips. "Sounds more like you think money can buy anything."

"Can't it?"

"Not me." She tips up her chin. "I have enough of my own; I don't need your cash."

"Only my sperm." I tilt my head. "That's still something I have which you want, and I am ready to give it to you now."

Her cheeks smear. Interesting. The hardnosed business woman I'd first met in LA wouldn't have flinched or blushed at anything. Somehow, the last few days have softened her... There is a glow about her which, surely, has to have come from all the ways I've fucked her, and yet, I want more of her.

I whisper my knuckles down her cheek. "What do you say, Sparks? One for the road?"

She glances past me at the door. "What if someone knocks?"

"They won't."

"How can you be sure?"

I stare at her and she grimaces. "Right, of course, you know the owners."

"That too." I smirk. "Trust me, they'll know when I am in here, I am busy."

"Have you brought other women here?"

I frown. "Only my grandmother, and I've never been inside this changing room before."

She frowns. "How do I know you're not lying?"

"One thing you can be sure of, I'll never lie to you. I'll always tell you what I want from you upfront." Only I haven't been able to confess the part I'd played in changing the course of her life thus far.

She tips up her chin. "Promise you won't be with another woman for as long as we are together."

"I haven't been with another woman since I saw you in LA."

"But that was...was...a year ago?"

I nod. "Why do you think I couldn't wait to get inside your pants? Speaking of—" I reach forward and tug on the belt of her wraparound dress. It unravels—thank you God for fashion trends. The ends part to reveal the creamy skin of her breasts, the curve of her stomach, the sleek thighs and between them black panties that hint at the flesh within.

"Jesus," I growl, "you're too fucking beautiful."

She raises her hands to my shirt and I shake my head. "Hold them behind your back."

"What?"

"Do it," I snap.

She swallows, then complies. The movement makes her breasts thrust out further. I lower my head to kiss the top of one of her creamy mounds and she shivers. I curl a finger under the waistband of her panties and tug. The fabric snaps and she draws in a breath. I tear off the material, then pocket it, before reaching down to lower the zipper of my jeans.

She glances down, then swallows. "No briefs?"

"I came prepared."

"You mean you planned this when you brought me here—?" She squeaks, for I've hoisted her up so she has no choice but to wrap her legs around my waist. I walk forward until her back is flush with the wall.

Then, cupping her butt, I balance her, before reaching down to position my dick at her entrance.

She tips up her chin, her pupils dilated, her breath coming in short pants.

"Shit, this excites you, doesn't it? The thought of doing it in a place which is only semi-private, where it will be clear to anyone outside that we are here, fucking?"

"Of course, not." She huffs, but her chin trembles. She licks her lower lip and the blood engorges my shaft.

"I need to be inside you, Sparks," I growl. "Now."

She tilts her hips forward and the crown of my cock breaches her. So fucking soft, so hot. A groan tears out of me. Her chest rises and falls, her tits spilling out from her bra.

"Touch your breasts," I urge her.

One arm still about my shoulders, she reaches up with the other to cup her breast, then pinches her nipple. That's when I plunge inside her. She gasps, her hips flattening against the wall as I thrust into her again and again.

"Ari," she moans and my cock lengthens further.

Every time I pound her, her tits jiggle, and fuck me, if it isn't the most erotic sight I've seen.

"Pinch your other nipple," I command.

She obliges instantly. Perhaps because she's caught up in this combined lust that we share? The one time that we don't need to negotiate or jostle for power. When I can give her pleasure and she can take. When the only thing separating us is the skin between us. Nothing else.

She tweaks the other pebbled nub, and a groan tumbles from her lips.

"Harder," I snap. "Pretend it's my hands doing the job."

Her knuckles whiten and she increases the pressure on the hardened nipple just as I tilt my hips and impale her. Her body bucks and she digs her heels into the curve of my butt. I squeeze the backs of her thighs, yank her forward as I tilt my hips and thrust into her again and again.

She shudders, color smears her cheeks, and a bead of sweat trickles down her throat. I lean down and lick it up. "Oh, Arpad," she moans. "Please... please..."

"What is it?" I raise my head, and peer into her eyes, "What do you want?"

"I want to—"

I plunge into her with enough force that the ridge of my pelvis grinds down on her clit.

"Oh..." she gasps, "oh, I'm going to—"

"Come with me," I hold her gaze, "only me."

I thrust into her as her back curves, her eyes roll back in her head and she opens her mouth to scream. I close my mouth over hers, absorb the sound as I come inside her.

I hold up her weight, thrust into her a few more times as aftershocks grip her.

Her body slumps and I widen my stance to support her. My shoulders burn and my thigh muscles tense under our combined weight. It reminds me of how I'd pulled her up from the ledge at the side of the hill. How I'd almost lost her. Never again. I bend down and press my lips to her forehead. "It's time to go, Sparks."

She mumbles under her breath, and I kiss her upturned nose. "Yeah, nothing I'd rather do than curl up with you in bed, but I'm afraid we've got to see this through."

I lower her legs to the ground, then pull out of her and step back. Our joined cum slides down her inner thigh. I glance around, then grab a scarf from a peg on the wall and press it to her pussy. I clean her up and she stirs. She looks down, then gasps, "That...that's a Hermes scarf."

"So?"

"It's expensive."

"I can afford it."

I drop the scarf on the ground then hold out my hand to her, "Come on, let's get you dressed."

34

Karina

I run my fingers down the soft fabric of my dress—my shoulder-to-toe, knit, wool dress, which he'd picked out for me. I'd refused; he'd insisted. I'd begun to protest and he'd asked me to try it on first. I had, and you know what? When I looked at myself in the mirror, I liked it. The long length highlights my figure, brings out the curve of my hips, and that, combined with the long sleeves and high neck, showcases my breasts in a way which is demure yet alluring.

I'd also managed to refresh my make up—making sure to cover all remaining evidence of the headwound—just as he'd appeared behind me in the mirror, a tumbler of whiskey in one hand. The other, he'd placed on my hip possessively.

"Well?" He'd smirked at my reflection in the mirror.

"It's not bad," I'd finally offered, and he'd laughed.

"You look magnificent, Sparks."

"And I'm covered from head to toe," I'd grumbled.

"Good," he'd met my gaze in the mirror, "your body is only for my delectation."

A thrill of lust had swept down my spine, and something else... A sensation of warmth had suffused me.

It feels good to be the object of his possessiveness, this single-minded focus of his, a tractor beam that bathes me in its spotlight and highlights me to myself in a way nothing ever has before. How strange. Did I actually need to be measured by someone else's gaze? Isn't my opinion of myself enough anymore? That I'd once dressed to feel good, had groomed for my comfort, and carved a path through the world for my self-confidence... Why does all of that seem unimportant compared to being at the cynosure of his attention?

I'd pulled away, then brushed past him and headed for the door. "We're getting late." I'd pointed out, and he hadn't protested.

I'd pulled out my wallet and handed over my credit card, but the sales woman had simply said that it had all been taken care of.

Of course, it had.

I'd snorted and his grin had widened as the sales woman had walked away. "You didn't think I was going to let you pay for it, did you?"

"I can afford it," I'd huffed.

"So can I, and I much prefer if I bought it for you."

"Why, so you can make me a kept woman?"

"Can't I buy you something because I want to?"

"A generous thought from you?" I widen my gaze. "Why don't I believe it?"

"Better believe it, babe. Where you're concerned, my thoughts run the entire spectrum from lust to anticipation to dominance to—" he'd leaned in close enough for our eyelashes to touch, "your submission."

"Which you'll never have. That, I promise."

"We'll see." He'd straightened, taken my arm, and I'd allowed him to lead me out and into the waiting car—a Porsche, which he'd had waiting for him at the marina... Apparently, he'd called ahead and had it readied for him.

Oh, and did I mention that he'd bought out half the shop? Or so it seems, given the number of bags they'd loaded into the back of the car. I had protested, but he'd simply countered that since I'm playing the role of his wife, I need the clothes to look the part. I have no argument for that.

Also, yeah, I have a weakness for designer wear. Although I do prefer to buy them for myself... Besides, this is an entire freakin' wardrobe. WTF? The mind boggles. So, this is what unlimited money can get you? Not that I am lacking for anything; but in comparison to Mr. A'hole here, I may as well as be as poor as...a crow; and I am not talking about the yoga pose by the same name, either.

I shoot him a sideways glance, take in that stern profile, the hooked nose, that square jaw that should have warned me of his imperious nature. "Were you always like this?"

"Like what?"

"Always confident that you'd get your own way.

His lips kick up. "Especially when I'm with you, Sparks."

"No, seriously," I huff, "have you always commanded people, confident that they'd do your bidding?"

"After the incident," he stares through the windshield, "the Seven of us fought a lot. Damian and me, in particular. We'd been locked up together by our captors, who liked to pit us against each other. We had to fight until one or both of us lost consciousness. It became a game for the two of us, how to keep hitting each other, without hurting the other too much, but making it believable enough for our kidnappers to buy it. When they caught on, Damian took the blame for it, only they didn't spare me."

My heart begins to race. Finally, finally he's beginning to share more about what happened to him.

"What did they do to you?"

"They whipped me."

I draw in a breath.

"Wh...whipped you?"

"They took turns, went at it day and night. They tied me up, strung me up from the ceiling, and whipped me until I'd lose consciousness. Then, when I had recovered, another man would start the process all over again."

"H...how long did that go on for?"

"Days..." he swallows, "weeks maybe... Or so I thought. I found out later it had been closer to ten days."

"Ten days?" I burst out. "Oh my god, Arpad."

He stares straight ahead, "My injuries were only physical, compared to what was done to some of the others."

"What...did they do?"

"That's for them to share."

"Of course," I swallow, "from where I am, though, I wouldn't say that you got off lightly."

He glares at me, "I don't want your pity."

"Oh, I am not pitying you." I swipe my hair over my shoulder. "All I'm saying is that a physical beating like that when you are a child—"

"I was almost a teenager."

"A child," I say firmly. "Something like that scars you for life, and not just physically." I twist my fingers together. "No wonder you need to tie up a woman to get off."

"See, that's where you are mistaken." He turns off the highway. "I was born this way, Sparks. This cruel streak is a part of me. It's what made me resilient enough to withstand what those bastards put me through."

"So, you're saying the very trait that makes you an asshole is the one that's helped you survive thus far?"

He tilts his head.

"So, you don't think your need to tie women up before you fuck them is...unusual?"

"Oh, it's different, all right. And it doesn't take a psychologist to tell me that, clearly, my losing control because of being tied up, is the reason I like to tie up my partners."

"It helps you feel in control?"

"It's the only way I can let go." He slows down at a crossing, then turns right. "I have no doubt that my experience drew me to Kinbaku. It's very tactile, very sensual, more so than other forms of foreplay."

"And here I thought you'd do anything to avoid intimacy." I mutter.

"Who said anything about intimacy?" He smirks, "It's how I prefer to experience pleasure." His eyelids grow hooded, "when I have a woman tied up and splayed open for my delectation, when I know that I am in charge and all it takes is a look," his lips part, "a flick of my fingers on her nipple," his lowers his gaze to my breasts, "the swipe of my tongue up her cunt, to have her writhing and groaning and falling apart under me and asking for more."

"Right." I squeeze my thighs together. Why am I wet again? Because he's revealed the rationale behind his choice of kink...because he's finally shared some of his secrets with me? Or is it because I want him to tie me up again? Heat suffuses my cheeks and I glance out of the window.

We turn into a driveway and I take in the well-maintained lawn, the profusion of flowers that line the flower-beds. My heart begins to thud again. I wipe my damp palms on my thighs. I can do this. I don't need to be nervous. It's only fulfilling my part of the bargain, meeting up with the family of my currently-fake-but-soon-to-be-real husband. I swallow as he eases the car to a stop.

My pulse rate ratchets up. I clutch at my handbag, then glance straight ahead through the windshield.

He reaches over and takes my left palm in between his large hands. "Hey, it's going to be okay."

"You're so clueless, you know that?" I snarl under my breath. "Of course, it will be okay. After I've been given the third degree, no doubt."

"It's not going to be that bad."

"Right," I draw in a breath, "speaking of, what story are we going to give them about us?"

"How about the truth?" He quirks an eyebrow.

"You're joking, right?"

"Why not?" He raises his shoulders, "We met a year ago, in LA, before you came to London and we reconnected. Why would that not be okay?"

I frown, "You know that's not what I am referring to."

"If it's our agreement you're worried about, then relax, we don't have to bring it up at all."

"Fine, easy for you to say." I mutter, "It's not your in-laws that you are going to visit."

He rubs his thumb across my wrist and goosebumps pop on my skin. "I'm sure you'll do great."

I swallow; my throat dries. Christ, pull it together. You are about to meet his family. It won't do to entertain carnal thoughts about the man while you do so, right?

He peers into my face, "I promise, it will be fine."

"Fine." I blink at him.

"Fine?" He tilts his head.

"Fine." I nod.

He pulls back his hand and I reach over to open the door. That's when I notice the band on my ring finger.

35

Arpad

Her gaze widens, "Wh...what's this?"

"What does it look like?"

"A ring?" She holds up her fingers. "You placed a ring on my finger?"

"It's been known to happen."

"But why?" She frowns at me. "Not everyone who's married wears a ring."

"It's more convincing this way."

She glances at my hand, "And what about your ring?"

"I don't need one."

She firms her lips. "So as your wife, I am supposed to wear a ring, but as my husband, you don't need to wear one?"

I scratch my jaw and pretend to think, "Sounds about right."

She stares at me. "Only you could take a gesture that could have meant so much, and turn it into something so...so..."

"Real?"

"So dominating," she snaps.

"That's me, babe, and don't forget it."

"Stop it," she snarls. "Why do you insist on being so offensive?"

I tilt my head. "This is me, being myself."

"You don't say." She fingers the ring on her finger, "Don't you think you're taking this charade too far?"

"Not far enough." I get out of the car, walk around to open her door, but she's already out and standing.

I hold out my hand, "Shall we?"

She brushes past me and I let her lead the way... This once. We head for the door as it swings open.

"Arpad." My father stands in the doorway. His full head of hair, is more flecked with grey than when I last saw it. His frame seems to be leaner than before, like he's lost weight, or is that my imagination? He glances from me to Karina and his forehead furrows. "And you are...?"

"I am his..." she hesitates.

"This is Karina, my wife." I pull abreast with her, and wrap my arm around her shoulders.

"Ah." His gaze widens. "Wife?" He glances to me. "A little bit of advance notice would have been welcome."

I tilt my head.

He nods toward Karina, "I'm Philippe, Arpad's father. I'm happy to welcome you into my family." He turns to me, "And you? Why are you here?"

"It's nice to see you," I snap.

Karina draws in a sharp breath. I ignore her. So perhaps I should have warned her a little about our family dynamics, but if I had, she'd have never agreed to this arrangement. Besides, nothing like full immersion, all at once, right? Get thrown off the deep end and you have no choice but to swim.

Footsteps approach, then my younger brother appears at my father's shoulder, "You made it," he drawls, then he glances at Karina, "and this is..."

"Karina," my father replies, "his wife."

"Wife?" He blinks, then turns to her. "You actually agreed to marry him?" His lips curl. "Will wonders never cease? My brother, the asshole, confirmed bachelor, finally meets his match, then?"

"The obnoxiousness is a family trait, then?" Karina scowls at him.

My brother seems surprised, then he chuckles. His features split into a grin.

"You're Declan Beauchamp, the film actor," she states.

He tilts his head, "Guilty as charged."

He holds out his hand and Karina takes it. He turns her palm over then presses his lips to her knuckles, "Welcome to our dysfunctional family. I promise you'll never find things boring here."

I stiffen at that little gesture, then place my arm around Karina. Declan straightens. He stares between us and his grin grows wider. I glare down at where he still holds Karina's hand in his, then at his face. He laughs, but releases her hand.

"I assume you just got married?" He straightens. "Shouldn't you be on your honeymoon, or," he turns to me, "did you decide it was best to get the family drama out of the way upfront before you head off?"

"Family drama?" She squints at him.

My father shoots him a sideways glance. "That's enough, Declan." He steps aside. "I suppose you had better come in."

I purse my lips. "Never let it be said that you were lacking in manners, Father."

Karina hesitates, and I guide her forward with a hand on the small of the back. She glances over her shoulder, "The luggage—"

"The staff will get it," I reply.

She nods, follows my brother as he leads the way into the spacious living room. The sliding doors at the far end open onto the garden. In front of it, in an armchair, is the woman who's the primary reason for this charade.

Karina's steps slow, and I walk past her to reach the other woman. I sink down to my knee in front of her, take her slim hand in mine, "Grandmama," I say, "how are you?"

Her face splits in a huge smile. "Arpad, my boy." She frames my face with her palms, then leans forward and kisses my forehead. "It's wonderful to see you." She leans back and peers into my features, "You look good." Her forehead wrinkles. "Something's different about you."

"It is?"

She nods, "I can't put my finger on it, but you seem... Happier? More content?"

"Maybe it's because he's gotten married since we last saw him?" Declan's voice sounds from behind me.

"Married?" Grandmama gasps at the same time that I shoot him a dirty look over my shoulder.

"Thanks for nothing," I growl.

Declan chuckles, "I aim to please, bro."

Karina walks up to stand next to me. "I'm Karina," she says, "I'm his—"

"Wife." Grandmama holds out her hand and Karina takes it. "Help me up," Grandmama commands.

I straighten to help her and she waves me away. "Karina will help me," she declares.

Right.

I step back and Karina helps Grandmama to her feet. The older woman hooks her arm in the nook of Karina's. "Come, my girl, walk with me to the dining room."

The two women move forward.

Karina shoots me a sideways glance and I nod at her.

"I won't bite," Grandmama chuckles, "and your husband will be right behind us."

"Not my—"

I stiffen, and Karina flinches. "I mean, of course, I would only be too happy to accompany you."

Grandmama's forehead furrows and she glances between us. "Not used to calling him your husband yet?" She laughs lightly. "It took me a little while after I married Francis to get used to my new status, too." She pats Karina's hand, "Come dear, why don't you tell me about yourself?"

The women walk ahead and I blow out a breath. I am sure Karina can handle herself. She is smart and can think on her feet, one of the qualities that had attracted me to her right away. So why am I so concerned about her right now? I take a step forward and Declan snickers, "Can't let the woman out of your sight, eh?"

"Nothing of the sort," I mutter.

"You could have fooled me." He chuckles. "When did you get married anyway?"

"None of your business."

"Didn't realize you were serious about anyone," he persists.

"Lots of things you don't know about me," I snap back.

"Likewise, bro, likewise." He brushes past me and follows in the wake of the women.

I take a step forward when. "Arpad?" My father calls.

Oh, fuck. I know that tone of his voice. It normally means I am in trouble, only this time, he doesn't know just how deep I am.

I slow my steps and he catches up with me. "Hold on a second, my boy, what's the rush?"

I glance in the direction the women have gone.

"Can't stay away from the wife, huh?"

"Something like that," I mutter.

"I don't recall you being involved with anyone."

"It was sudden."

"Like all of your decisions in life, huh?"

"What's that supposed to mean?" I turn to him. "If you want to tell me something, why don't you come out and say it?"

He stares up at me, and his gaze intensifies. He draws in a breath then grips my shoulder, "All I'm saying, is that some advance notice, a phone call that you'd decided to get married, would not have been amiss."

"I'm here now, aren't I?" I declare, my tone belligerent. Jesus, a few seconds back under the roof of my family; and I am already relapsing to my younger self. "Look," I drag my fingers through my hair, "everything happened quickly. It was one of those things where my instinct seemed to get away from me, and I followed. But I came as soon as I could."

"And I'm glad you did." He grips my shoulder. "I'm glad you've finally decided to settle down. If your mother were here... She'd have been thrilled to welcome your bride." He steps back, slides his hand into his pocket. "Not a day goes by when I don't miss her." He glances somewhere beyond my shoulder. "Every day, I regret the opportunities I lost to tell her that I loved her. If I could only turn back the clock, I'd have never spent the time away from her that I did to grow my business."

I hunch my shoulders. It's another reason I'll never forgive those behind the incident. The shock of those few days when I'd been kidnapped and she'd feared I was dead, had brought on a heart attack. By the time I'd been rescued and returned home, it had been too late. I never got to see my mother again. The fucking bastards who were behind my kidnapping also took her from me. When I finally track them down, I am going to make sure they pay.

"You were a good husband," I mutter. "You have your faults, and while I wouldn't say you were the best father, when it came to her, you did your best by her."

My father winces. "Thanks for the backhanded compliment... I guess."

"You're welcome." I raise my shoulders. "Why are you telling me all this now?"

"Because," he widens his stance, "I don't want you to make the same mistakes I did. I want you to understand what's most important in life and when you find out, I want you to hold onto it. I want to make sure you use every moment you have to its utmost."

"You mean her?" I jerk my head in the direction of the dining room

"Your wife." He nods. "If you do love her, and I believe you do," he peers into my eyes, "then you'll try to make her happy the way I tried with your mother. It takes the love of a good woman to ground a man, and not everyone is lucky enough to have that."

I shuffle my feet. "Right."

"If you've found the love of your life, then I hope you'll grab this opportunity with both hands and not let go of it. It's your one chance to become a decent human being."

"You mean, it's a chance to undo all the years of harm your neglect caused us?"

He pales, then raises his hand. "You hate me. I understand where you are coming from."

"Do you?" I peer into his eyes. "Do you understand how it is for a boy of twelve to return from an ordeal that turned his life upside down, only to find that his mother is dead? Then, his father decides to withdraw from the world instead of trying to be there for his children?"

"I was there," he grinds out, "I provided for the both of you, ensured you had the best education, that you didn't want for anything."

"A-n-d that's the problem. You assumed money would compensate for the lack of family."

"Is that what you're doing now? Using your money to buy yourself the family you never had."

Anger pumps through my veins. I raise my hand, take a step forward, when, "Arpad," my brother's voice calls out from the doorway, "Grandmama's asking for you."

Karina

Arpad walks in, his features stonier than usual. He takes the chair next to me. His father moves to the other side of the table and sits down in a chair the farthest from Arpad. Tension between the two of them stretches. The hair on the back of my neck prickles. I glance between them. What had they been talking about? Is this kind of fighting between the two of them normal? It certainly feels that way. Declan quirks an eyebrow at me from next to Philippe.

As security consultant to the Seven, I know about their families too. So, I'd been aware of Declan's status as the most promising upcoming star in the world. Since his lead role in a series which had launched over Christmas, he is the epitome of many a girl's dream. The internet is abuzz with speculation about his next movie, his personal life, what he had for lunch, his workout routine, you name it. I'd known all this, yet not been prepared to meet him face to face. Guess fame can do that. It turns ordinary men into superstars, so when you meet them in real life, you're convinced there's something different about them.

I take a sideways glance at my not-yet-but-soon-to-be-husband... To be honest, there's no resemblance between Declan and Arpad. If anything, Arpad seems more handsome to me, with that brooding gaze, thick eyebrows, the pouty lips of his that I'd do anything to feel against mine. Arpad glances up, holds my gaze. I flush, look back to Declan.

"So how is it to be famous overnight?" I ask

Declan chokes on the water he'd been drinking. He swallows, "I am getting used to it. You know...struggling for ten years to be recognized, going to countless auditions, then boom..." He chuckles. "All of a sudden, one of your TV series is a hit, and suddenly everyone wants a slice of you."

"Isn't that good? I mean, isn't that what most actors want—fame?"

He grimaces. "It comes with the territory, but that's not why I got into acting."

"No, it was to get women throwing themselves at you, no doubt." Arpad snorts.

Declan grins. "You are just envious because I am better looking than you."

"And you're so full of shit." He glowers at his brother.

"Why don't we let Karina decide?"

"Me?" I pause, "Oh no, I am not being dragged into this."

"Come on," Declan prompts, "look at him." He jerks his chin at the alpha-hole. "Now me," he gestures to his face. "Who do you think is better looking, huh?"

I stare between them. "Hmm." I chew on my lower lip. "If I had to pick one person," I glance from Arpad's face to Declan's then back to Arpad's, "it would have to be—"

Arpad's face grows thunderous.

"I think," I bite down on the inside of my cheek, "I think you're better looking." I nod at Declan.

"Aha!" Declan crows.

Every muscle in Arpad's body stiffens. He glares down at me.

"But," I glance up at him and his gaze intensifies, "but my husband has more presence and more charisma. He'd beat you outright when it comes to personality and magnetism."

Arpad's eyes gleam. The skin around his eyes tightens, then he reaches up to touch my cheek. "Thank you," he whispers.

"You're welcome," I half smile back.

"Aww...come on, Karina," Declan protests, "that's not fair."

"Life's not fair." I turn to face him. "Not that you have anything to complain about, Mr. Flavor-of-the-month-hot-shot-film star."

"Flavor of the month?" He chokes. "You sure do know how to come to the point, don't you?"

"It's the trait I like most about her." Arpad wraps his arm about my chair and pulls me closer.

Heat flushes my cheeks. I stay frozen, trying not to lean back further. If I do, I am sure to brush against his arm, and that's only going to turn me on. Something I definitely don't want happening here in front of his family.

"Do you now?" Declan stares at Arpad. "It's certainly a change from your other girlfriends."

I gape. Did he actually say that?

Arpad's muscles tense and he leans forward in his seat. "That was unnecessary and disrespectful. Apologize to Karina," he growls.

"Declan Beauchamp," Grandmama snaps, "I raised you better than to insult a lady."

The brothers stare at each other, then Declan blows out a breath, "I'm sorry." He clears his throat and turns to me, "I didn't mean to come across as so rude." He drums his fingers on the table. "I am afraid your husband rubs me the wrong way."

Arpad scoffs, "At least, find a better excuse."

"Yeah, no." Declan chuckles. "You know we bring out the worst in each other, brother."

"And the best too," Grandmama interrupts from the head of the table. "When you are family, you are bound to fight and then have each other's backs when the going gets tough. Remember that, boys. When things get hairy, it's your family—made or blood—that will be there for you."

"Like the Seven?" I pipe up.

Grandmama's eyes gleam. "The Seven." She takes a sip of water "A kinship that can only grow more solid with age." She turns to Arpad. "They'll also be there for you, when you most need them," she says. "Along with Declan, of course."

"Like I have a choice," Declan quips.

"You always have a choice," Grandmama raises a small bell next to her and rings it, "but your bark is worse than your bite." She turns to Arpad. "When you need him most, he'll be there to help. That's what family does."

The door to the dining room opens and two members of the staff walk in. They're dressed in uniform—of course they are, how had I forgotten just how rich Arpad's family is?—and place plates in front of Philippe and Grandmama. Once we are all served, I dip my spoon into the soup, a bacon and mint combination I've never had before. "This is delicious." I scoop up some more.

"You should tell our chef that; she'd be very happy. She's the one who taught Arpad to cook," Grandmama replies.

I shoot a sideways glance at Arpad, trying to imagine him learning anything from anyone. I mean, of course, he'd gone to school and had teachers, but somehow, it's easier to think of him as having arrived fully formed and growling at everyone he sets eyes on. I snicker to myself, then turn it into a cough.

Arpad meets my gaze, and frowns. He pours a small amount of wine into a glass for me, then fills his own.

Grandmama raises her glass, "To Arpad and Karina."

Philippe raises his without comment.

"To the woman who turned my brother into an adoring lovesick Romeo," Declan jokes.

Arpad makes a snarling sound low in his throat. I touch his arm, "He's only trying to wind you up."

Arpad turns to me, "You sounded so British when you said that." He smirks.

"Maybe your influence is rubbing off on me."

"Is it?" He holds my gaze and the air between us thickens. My core clenches. I shift about in the seat to make myself more comfortable.

"So, Karina," Grandmama asks, "your name... Is it... Slavic, in origin?"

"Russian." I turn back to my soup. "Both sets of my grandparents immigrated to the US. My parents were born in the US, so I am American." I raise a shoulder.

"But you're in touch with your roots?"

She raises her soup spoon and drinks from it.

"I guess." I stare down into the depths of the liquid in my bowl. "My father holds onto his culture. He instilled a...respect for his homeland in us."

"Sounds like he was a good father."

"The best." I reach for my wine glass. "He was strict, but a fair parent." I glance sideways in time to see Arpad scowl. What's his problem? He seems like he wants to say something, then changes his mind and goes back to eating.

I bring the wine glass to my nose and sniff it—I'm still not drinking, but I don't want to turn down the wine and raise his family's suspicions that I may be pregnant or trying to get pregnant. I'd even taken a sip when Grandmama had made the toast. Now I indulge in another cautious sip.

The rich flavor coats my tongue. "This is excellent." I stare at the glass, then at the bottle. "Where is it from?"

"My vineyard," Arpad replies.

"You own a vineyard?" I stare at Arpad.

"A few," his lips kick up, "in Napa, in the UK, in Australia, in Argentina —"

"Stop," I frown down at the wine, "I could have sworn this tasted French."

"It is; it's from Burgundy."

"Of course, it is." I set down my glass. "So, do you all meet often for a family lunch?"

Philippe and Arpad stiffen. Declan chuckles. Only Grandmama's features don't change expression. She rings the bell again, then turns to me. "We don't get to dine as a family as often as I would like." She glances around the place, "Hopefully, in the time I have left to live, we'll have a few more such occasions."

"Now, Grandmama," Arpad admonishes, "you're not going anywhere soon."

"You'll outlive all of us," Philippe declares.

"You're healthier than most people in their twenties," Declan bumps his fist into his chest, "me included."

She stares around the table. "You know, my doctor doesn't agree with that prognosis."

There's silence for a beat, then another.

"Now, come on boys, I am not dying that soon either." She chuckles. "Not before I've seen my grandchild." She looks at me.

I swallow. "Right. Of course." I stare down at my plate of food. Is this why he'd agreed to my proposal of his impregnating me so quickly? Had he wanted to use this entire set-up to his own benefit? Of course, he had, and who am I to blame him, when I had done the same? Only, he could have told me up front that there is a bigger reason for his ready acquiescence. After all, if he is doing so because he wants his grandmother to be happy... Well, I could hardly fault him for that, right? But, typical Arpad, he couldn't come out and tell me his motives clearly. Or he'd simply assumed that it didn't matter if I knew or not. Likely, that was the reason.

The door to the dining room opens again. The same staff comes in, remove our soup bowls, then bring in plates of food covered with stainless steel domes, the kind I've only ever seen in fancy restaurants. Not that this is any less. The food here is better than at many of the Michelin-starred restaurants where I've dined.

They remove the covers with a flourish.

"Roasted Cod in a cream sauce with parsnip puree, shrimp, brown butter, and capers," one of the servers declares.

"Thank you, Hugo." Grandmama beams at him.

"My pleasure." Hugo half bows and departs.

I tuck into my food with gusto, not stopping until my plate is empty. I glance up to find the rest looking at me. "What?"

Arpad grins, glances down at his own plate, which is still almost full.

"Guess I was hungry... And the food is incredible," I say sincerely. "Besides, it's nice to be eating with family, isn't it?"

"It is," Grandmama nods, "and it's refreshing to see a woman eat well."

I laugh. "My father would never let me leave anything on my plate. His military training wouldn't allow him, and besides, he was very careful of any waste."

"And your mother?" Philippe asks.

"She died when I was eighteen." I fold my arms in my lap.

"I am so sorry for your loss, my dear." Grandmama places her fork on her plate.

"Thank you." I murmur.

"Let's have dessert." Grandmama leans toward me, "Then, why don't you and I take a short walk?"

Ten minutes later, I trail behind the older woman as we walk through the fading sunshine. She waits for me to catch up, then hooks her arm through mine. We proceed in silence along the garden path. The grass is mowed while evergreen shrubs line either side of the path. We reach a circular conservatory; she pushes open the door and I step in after her. The heat instantly warms my ankles. I follow her until she reaches a wooden swing in the center. She sinks down, then pats the space next to her. I reach her, unbutton my coat, then sit down next to her. The swing moves back and forth as we push back with our legs.

"So, you and Arpad," she finally says, and I brace for the inevitable questioning. This is the lady of the house and someone who Arpad regards very highly. She is the matriarch of the family, and surely, she wants to protect her family.

She turns to me, fixes that blue-grey gaze, so like his—on me.

"How long has this charade been in progress?"

CHAPTER 36

Karina

"Excuse me?" I blink.

She tilts her head and stares down her patrician nose. "Arpad is smart and he thinks he can humor me. And bless him, his intentions are all in the right place, I am sure, but I am not that easy to fool."

I blink rapidly, not sure what to say.

"Not that the two of you are not in love—"

"We're—" I bite down on my lip. Shit, what's wrong with me? I am almost blowing our cover here. Why the hell can't I get my story right? It's Arpad, that asshole's, fault. We could have rehearsed before coming here. He could have apprised me about the situation, that his grandmother was unwell. A detail which hadn't come to light in all the information I'd had access to so far.

"You were saying?" Grandmama holds my gaze, and those blue-grey eyes of her seem to read all of my secrets.

I glance away, "N...nothing." I swallow. "You were talking about me and Arpad..." my voice trails off.

"And the elaborate front the two of you have constructed for me."

I bite the inside of my cheek. What the hell am I supposed to do? Why had we never discussed this possibility—that our story could have been found out? I glance about the space, taking in the foliage, the flowers—amaryllis, pansies, snapdragons... And orchids, so many orchids. I drag in the sweet scent of the flowers and it's as if I've been transported into an English garden in the middle of summer.

"You're English?"

"British," she replies. "I married a French man, and brought up my children in this house. I've lived here since I got married fifty years ago.

Fifty years. Wow. I glance toward the house we'd just left, then back at her.

"I know what you're thinking." She curves her fingers around the thick rope that connects the swing to the ceiling. "It's such a long time, a lifetime of living, of memories, decades of the world changing and you changing with it, and yet, some things inside stay the same. All gone by in the blink of an eye, a snap of a finger, a flutter of butterflies' wings somewhere in the Amazon, and everything changes. You're no longer a bride of twenty, stepping across the threshold, but a woman at death's door."

"Grandmama—"

She raises her hand. "You don't need to coddle me like the men in there." She jerks her chin toward the house again. "They know the truth, but they avoid it, thinking if they don't acknowledge it, it ceases to be real. But you and I... We know better, don't we? We know that life is short, and we need to make the most of what we have right now in the moment." She peers into my features. "We do, right?"

I hold her gaze and my throat goes dry. This woman... She's way too sharp, more than anyone I've ever met. There's no pulling the wool over her eyes.

Damn Arpad, he should have known there was no way that we could fool her into buying our story. But of course, he wouldn't give anyone credit for being as smart as him. He'd seen an opportunity and taken it, and so had I. And here I am, faced with a dying woman whom I had deceived, straight to her face. Damn. I fill my lungs with the scent of the flowers, then turn to her. "You're right. Arpad and I... We...have ... This is an arrangement."

"What kind of an arrangement?"

A hot sensation stabs at my chest. Why the hell is it so difficult to tell her the truth? She's guessed most of it already, so why does it feel like I am, somehow, betraying her and Arpad and myself? Gah! I jump up to my feet and begin to pace. "We, uh, decided that I'd pose as his wife for thirty days, including the duration of this trip, after which, we are getting married for real."

"But you're not sure about it?"

I stare at her features. How did she guess? Am I that bad an actress or is she simply that perceptive?

I play with the ring on my finger. "We've gotten to know each other better over the last few days," I hesitate, "but—"

"You're still not sure about your feelings for him?"

"No...it's not that."

"So, you're not sure if he loves you?"

I open and shut my mouth. How do I explain? That he does feel something for me, somewhere deep down, under the alphahole exterior of his, but... That he's not going to say it.

"Or you know he does, but he hasn't told you so yet?"

I stare at her. Jesus, this woman is frightening. The way she reads my mind, it's as if she knows what I am thinking.

She kicks off again, the swing creaks on its hinges, and her silver hair flies back from her face. For a second, I can imagine her as a young woman, her eyes huge in her unlined face with, her dark hair falling in a cloud about her shoulders. I blink and the mirage disappears. She smiles at me. "I need to share a secret with you."

"You do?"

She nods. "Come," she pats the seat next to her, "sit down with me for a few more minutes."

I retrace my steps, sink down onto the swing.

"You see, men... They are simple creatures."

"They are?" I swallow.

She nods, "They like to eat, to get pissed, then indulge in pissing contests, and to fuck."

My jaw drops.

"What?" She chuckles. "I am old, so I can't use the F word, is that it?"

"No," I twist my fingers together, "of course, not."

"You have to lure them in, you know?"

"O-kay." Where the hell is she going with this?

"You have to show them what they are missing out on, appeal to the caveman in them. Know what I mean?"

I bite down on the inside of the cheek, "Is that what you did? With uh, Mr. Grandmama?"

She laughs. "Absolutely. Given a choice, my Francis would have happily continued his single existence without ever committing. It's just, I knew better."

"You did?"

"Of course. It's why I left him."

Huh? "Then what happened?"

"He came after me, of course, wanted me back. I told him only if he committed to me.

"And he did?"

She swipes her hair over her shoulder. "We were married within the week."

"Wow."

She holds up the ring with the single diamond that graces her ring finger, "I've never taken this off, since that day."

I draw in a breath. "So, you're saying I need to, somehow, play hard to get, show him what he could be missing out on?"

"Now, now, don't go putting words in my mouth. You're a smart woman, aren't you? Surely, you'll figure something out?"

Arpad

I slide my razor down my cheek, then shake it off under the tap. It's an odd time to shave but my whiskers had begun to bother me, and I wanted to shave before we headed out again.

The bathroom door opens and she walks in. She meets my gaze in the mirror, then heads over to the commode at the far end. She pushes down her panties, perches on the ceramic bowl and her piss tinkles down the sides.

What the—? I blink. Did she just do that? The audacity of the woman... The complete comfort she has in her own skin, the way she tilts up her chin and watches me watch her as I stand there with the razor poised half-way to my face. Why the hell do I find this everyday act of hers so erotic... Not to mention, the domesticity of this scene... It's mind-blowing, and real, and so natural, so easy. Is this how it would be if I had her in my life always?

I watch as she tears off a piece of tissue paper, slides her hand under the skirt of her dress to wipe herself. Then rises to her feet, pulls up her panties and straightens her dress about her hips. She flushes, then heads to the sink and washes her hands, before drying them. She turns to leave and I call out, "Hold on."

She ignores me, and I scowl. As she brushes past me, I grab her arm and stop her.

"What?" she snaps.

"Don't ignore me."

"And what if I do?"

"Try it and find out."

She peers into my face, then huffs, "Fine, I'm here, aren't I? What do you want from me?"

"What did you and Grandmama talk about?"

"Let go of my arm first."

"Tell me first."

"No."

"Yes."

"You're such a bully."

"And your husband, for as long as we are under this roof."

She throws up her free hand. "Why do you always have all the answers? It's so annoying."

"It is." I nod, "Being perfect can sometimes get to be too much for me as well."

She gapes, "Whoa, have you ever heard yourself?"

"All the time, babe." I place my razor on the counter, then turn and haul her to me. Her gaze widens, her breasts brush up against my chest, and color smears her cheeks. Good. I like her off balance, a little surprised, a little breathless. "Now, tell me what you two spoke about."

"It's a secret."

"A secret?"

She nods. "It's a woman thing, you know?"

"Is that right?" I scowl.

"Yep." Her eyes gleam, "Not something I can share with you."

I take in her flushed features, the satisfied look in her eyes, then release her. "Fine." I turn back, pick up my razor and begin to shave.

"Fine?" She blinks at me rapidly in the mirror. "What do you mean fine?"

"If she told you something in confidence, then I guess you'd better keep it that way, right?"

"So, you don't mind that your grandmother told me something that she may have not mentioned to you?"

Her tone is shocked. I set down my razor, then turn to her. "You're my wife."

"Fake wife."

"Wife," I insist, "for as long as we are under this roof, remember? And if my grandmother took to you so quickly—which I had no doubt she would—if she trusts you enough to share with you, then I am more than pleased about it."

"You...you are?" She frowns.

"Why wouldn't I be?" I cup her cheek. "It's the reason for this entire arrangement, after all. She wanted to see me married and settled, and now she knows I am."

"It's wrong," she says. "You shouldn't try to tell her an outright lie."

I grasp her left hand and hold it up, "It's not an outright lie. You wear my ring and we will be married at the end of the thirty-day period."

"Something I still don't understand." She bites down on her plump lower lip, and damn, if the blood doesn't rush to my cock instantly.

"What don't you understand?"

"Why do you still want to marry me?"

"Maybe you're growing on me... Maybe it's easier to pretend than to want the real thing... Maybe this is the real thing..."

"No, it's not." She tugs her hand and I release it. "This is one big ego trip for you; that's all it is."

"Is that what you think?"

"Isn't it?" She drags her fingers through her hair. "Honestly, right now, I don't know what to think."

I grab the towel and wipe my face, "Why don't you give me a minute to get dressed? I have something to show you."

Half an hour later, we are on the highway.

"Where are we going?"

I don't reply, stare ahead through the windshield.

"You can, at least, tell me," she complains. "Is this another surprise?"

"Something like that."

I hadn't wanted to do this. I'd wanted to make sure I spent the thirty days with her before arriving at a decision, but something about that scene earlier, the comfortable routine we had fallen into, had shaken me. If I stay on in this fake relationship... Well, it won't stay fake for much longer. I'd always wanted her body...but somewhere along the way, I had started hankering for more. A real relationship, a real wife... A real mother to my child. The child she may already be carrying. Shit. I tighten my fingers on the steering wheel. I shouldn't have embarked on this relationship. I should have turned her down upfront. But I hadn't and now here I am.

We drive for another half an hour in silence. Then I turn off onto a sideroad. Another ten minutes, another turn off, this time onto a narrow unpaved road. Five minutes later, she gets restless. Ten minutes later, she's peering out through the window at the foliage that grows wilder, thicker. Another few minutes and she turns to me, "Do you know where you are headed?"

"Do you?" I ask her.

"Obviously, not," she snipes. She turns away from me to look out the window.

I guide the car to the very end of the road as it opens out onto a driveway. One overgrown with weeds and trees whose limbs reach out to each other to form a canopy overhead.

The sunlight seems to dim as I pull up next to a two-story bungalow.

I come to a stop in front of the steps that lead up to the house, then shut off the car engine.

Silence descends.

I push open the door, come around to find she's already stepped out. Good. No use delaying this further.

I begin to climb the steps, then turn to find she hasn't moved.

"Are you coming?"

"Are you going to tell me where we are headed?"

"You're about to find out."

"I don't like being surprised." She folds her arms around her waist.

"Too bad; you don't have a choice in this."

She stands there for a second, then pulls up to her full height. "Fine, have it your way."

You bet I will.

She walks up the steps, brushes past me and bangs on the door.

It swings open and a man's shoulders fill the doorway. He's dressed in a dark suit, dark hair cut close to this scalp. He jerks his chin at me, then his gaze lowers to the woman at my side.

Karina's muscles freeze.

"Victor?" She stutters, "Wh...what are you doing here?"

CHAPTER 37

Karina

"Kaykay," My middle brother addresses me by the name that only my siblings call me.

"Why are you here, V?" I frown.

He exchanges glances with Arpad, "You haven't told her yet?" Victor scowls.

"I didn't have time." Arpad grimaces.

"What is it?" I stare between them, "Tell me what?" I turn to Arpad. "What's happening here?"

"Why don't you go inside, and I'll explain?" Arpad tilts his head.

"I have a better idea," I snap. "Why don't I leave instead?"

I turn to go, but Arpad plants his body in my path. "Not so fast, Sparks. We have unfinished business."

No. I shake my head. I tip my head up to meet his gaze. His eyes narrow and there's a harsh set to his features. He glares at me and I swallow.

"Don't do this," I whisper.

"Too late." His emotionless expression seems carved in stone. "It's happening; you don't have a choice now but to comply."

"You'll regret this." I search his features, trying to catch a glimpse of the man who had kissed me, fucked me, who'd put his ring on my finger. I hold up my hand, turn it around so he can see the ring on my finger.

"I already am," he growls.

I swallow, then pull myself up to my full height.

I pivot and Victor steps aside. I walk into the house. The remnants of sunshine disappear and the cold instantly seems to wrap itself around me.

I shiver, hunch my shoulders, then warmth sears my back. It's Arpad, and for a second, I want to lean back, wallow in his comfort. Instead, I take a step forward.

I glance around.

Victor beckons me, "This way."

I follow, Arpad on my heels.

I cross the hallway, walk inside a room. There's a rectangular table in the center, chairs around it; on the wall behind is an insignia with which I am well familiar. A single white rose, with a drop of blood marring the perfection of its petals... Or adding to it, as I'd often thought.

I walk over to a chair in the middle of the table and drop into it. "Let's just get this over with."

Footsteps sound, then my chair is spun around with such force that a cry bursts out from me, "What the hell?"

"Shouldn't that be my dialogue, Sparks?" Arpad snaps.

"You're the one who brought me here. Why don't you tell me?"

"That's all you have to say for yourself?" He scowls.

"Hey," I protest, "you're the one who brought me here, and now for some reason you seem to be pissed with me? What's your bloody problem, Arpad?"

His scowl deepens. He seems on the verge of saying something, when a familiar voice rings out from behind me, "Karina."

I stiffen, then turn to face the new arrival. He's tall, broad-shouldered, dressed in a slate grey suit that I know costs more than the economy of a third-world country. Nothing but the best for Gregory Solonik, as befits his status as the head of the Bratva.

"Hello, Papa." I blow out a breath.

My father narrows his gaze on me, "I told you to keep out of trouble."

"And I told you I could manage on my own."

"This—" he jerks his chin toward the glowering Arpad, "this is what you mean by managing?"

"This..." I fold my arms about my waist, "this is not what it seems."

"Why don't we all sit down?" Victor glances between us.

Arpad's jaw tics. A nerve throbs at his temple. He releases me so suddenly that I crash back into the chair. He backs away, and instantly, the cold closes in on me. I turn my chair around just as my father walks over to take his seat at the head of the table.

"So?" My father digs his elbows into the table, then places the tips of his fingers together. "You leave the country and sever all family relationships because you want to build your career on your own steam, then you turn up married? When were you going to tell your family about it?" He scowls at me and I shuffle my feet.

Shit, why does it feel like I am five again and sneaking off behind his back to do something I shouldn't?

"There's nothing to tell, because we are not married...yet."

"And the ring?" My father scowls at my hand, "What's that about?"

"That...uh..." I toy with the band but don't take it off, "that was for the benefit of Arpad's family. We were trying to convince his grandmother that we were married, because she's unwell and may not have much longer to live and—"

My father's gaze narrows. "So, you lied to her?"

I flush. "Uh, yeah, that was the general idea," I mumble.

"And the marriage? Whose idea was that?"

"It...uh, it was his idea."

I jerk my chin toward Arpad, at the same time that he says, "It was her idea."

My father glances between us.

"So, both of yours?"

"No," I say.

"Yes," Arpad snaps.

My father's gaze widens.

"So, did both of you come up with the idea?"

"He suggested a pretend marriage first," I nod toward Arpad. Not that I am going to tell my father why. If he finds out that I'd been trying to get pregnant through artificial insemination he'll have a cardiac, and I definitely don't want that to happen. "Then," I swallow, "I proposed to him."

My father turns to Arpad, "And you accepted."

"Yes." Arpad glowers at me.

"Hmm." My father scowls, "Unconventional." He rises to his feet, walks over to where Arpad stands over me. My dad looks him up and down. "So, you want to marry her?"

Arpad holds his gaze, "Yes, Sir."

"And you promise to take care of her, for the rest of her life?"

Arpad opens his mouth to reply and I throw up my hands.

"Hold on, him taking care of me? I can take care of myself."

"I'm not talking to you," my father informs me.

"But both of you are talking about me."

"Don't talk back to me," my father snaps, and I wince.

"Why is it that all of the men in my life think it's their right to tell me what to do?"

"Because I'm your father."

"And I'm your husband," Arpad growls.

I gape. What the hell? Now they are uniting against me? At least, on this issue. Speaking of, I scowl up at my father. "Why is it that you are not more upset about him marrying me?"

My father glances down at me, then back at Arpad. "Of course, I'm upset." He shuffles his feet. "But, you could do much worse than him..." He tugs on his shirt sleeve.

"Bullshit." I stare at him. "You used to lose your temper if I so much as mentioned dating a boy. You'd put them through the wringer with your questions. You'd show them your collection of guns to throw a fright into them. You made sure you scared away any boy who dared look at me, something you didn't stop doing even after I grew older and began dating men. No one was good for me and now... You...you...just accept this guy... This complete stranger... As my possible future husband. You..."

I blink, glance between them again.

Arpad's staring at my father, who's looking back at him. Something passes between them.

"Oh." I gulp. "Oh." I grip the arms of my chair. "Unless," I blink rapidly. "unless you are not strangers?"

Neither of them replies.

"I mean, Arpad interrupts his trip to visit his family... To bring me here and meet mine. The family I've tried to keep my distance from..."

My voice trails off. I swallow. My heart begins to beat faster. "No." I turn to Arpad. "It can't be."

"Stop." Arpad frowns. "Don't let your imagination run away with you."

"Oh, you have no idea what I'm thinking right now." I try to rise to my feet and Arpad presses down on my shoulder.

"Sparks, stay for a while longer."

"Are you threatening me now?" I scowl at him, then turn to my father,

"And you... Why aren't you telling him off for manhandling me?"

My father's jaw hardens, he opens his mouth, then closes it again. What the hell? Since when has my father stayed quiet before anyone? I glance between them, then shake my head again. Shit, shit, shit. This can't be happening. Whatever I'm thinking, it can't be true, can it?

"Sparks," Arpad's voice grows urgent, "don't work yourself into a panic. I'll explain everything, in just a few more minutes."

"Why?" I glower at him, "What are we waiting for?"

That's when the door opens and two guys stride in—tall, broad-shouldered, wearing suits in a different shade of, you guessed it—black. Of course, it had to be them. Somebody really needs to tell my family to tone down this entire over-the-top villain-in-a-Bond-flick thing they have going.

The slimmer of them, my second brother Roman, pulls up a chair at the far end.

My oldest brother, Nikolai, prowls over to Arpad. The two men size each other up. Arpad's shoulders seem to bulge and grow bigger, his entire demeanor taking on that of a man who's had his favorite plaything threatened. Or rather, a dog who's about to have his bone snatched from between his jaws.

Soon, they'll indulge in a pissing contest, which is par for the course amongst my family and others with whom my brothers associate. But Arpad? He's a billionaire investor, for hells' sake. Sure, he's alpha, but he hasn't seen the kind of violence these guys have... Or the bloodshed. Arpad widens his stance. "You have something to say to me?" he growls.

Niko cracks his knuckles and Arpad laughs. Outright. In his face. I wince. Shit, that was a bad move.

Arpad raises his fist, draws it back. So does Niko. I squeeze my eyes shut, waiting... Waiting...for the inevitable clash between them.

"Niko fucking Solonik."

"Arpad motherfucking Beauchamp."

What the—? I snap open my eyes to find my brother and my husband bumping their fists, then doing that half-hug thing that men do, when they like each other, but don't really want to show how much, but still want to acknowledge the bond between them.

I blink, once, twice. My pulse rate ratchets up. Sweat beads my palms. "What the hell is happening here?"

CHAPTER 38

Karina

"Seems you're not the only one with secrets, my darling wife." Arpad releases my brother and turns to me. His features wear that smirk that is hot and sexy and so bloody annoying.

I grip the edge of the table and lean forward. "How do you two know each other?" I snap.

"We went to school together," Niko replies.

"No. You didn't."

Arpad's grin widens, "Oh, it's not the kind of school that you're thinking."

"Oh, yeah?" I firm my lips. What the hell is this man up to now? Just when I think I have things under control, he pulls the rug out from under my feet.

Niko nods. "We met, shall we say, in the kind of academy to which only a certain few have access."

"The Seven included," Arpad drawls.

"And what kinds of things were you taught there?"

"Do you want to know?" Arpad's eyes gleam. He leans forward on the balls of his feet, and his gaze bores into mine. Damn him, he knows how curious I am, that I'll do anything to find out how he knows my family.

"No," I snap my lips closed.

"No?" He blinks.

"What do I care?" I lean back in my chair and pretend to yawn. "Clearly, you're in cahoots with them. Perhaps you've been planning this all along. If you think you've surprised me, forget it, buster. I've known worse."

"Oh?"

"Yeah," I draw in a breath, then turn toward my father, "I am not sure what game is being played here, but you know how I feel about my involvement in matters of the Bratva. Suffice to say, I want no part of it." I rise to my feet.

My father's gaze grows stormy. The tips of his ears grow red. Shit, never a good sign. Now you know where I get my temper. My stomach twists. I think I am going to throw up now. That's all I need to embarrass myself. I swallow down the bile that rises to my throat.

"You okay, Sparks?" Arpad asks.

"Water," I croak.

He reaches over, grabs a bottle of water from the table, twists off the cap, and offers it to me.

I snatch it from him, tilt it to my lips and chug down a few mouthfuls. My stomach seems to settle. Thank god. I place the bottle down on the table, sit back in my seat.

"I'm sorry I surprised you like this." He squats down, takes my hand in his. His palms, wide and warm, make me aware of just how cold and clammy I've gone. Shit, it's okay. No big deal. Just my family pulling a fast one on me... As they've been prone to do in the past. Which is why I'd decided to go my own way. Then, of course, I had to meet Arpad and fall for him and screw it all up. I yank my fingers from him.

"I'm not sorry for anything," I snap.

His jaw tightens. He rises to his feet, then turns to my father, "Gregory, let's get to the business at hand, shall we?"

My father glances between us, then nods. "Why don't you sit down?" he asks Arpad, who slips into the chair next to me. The warmth of his body calls to me, and damn it, but I want to lean toward him. I grip the side of my chair, and turn toward my father.

"I have nothing to do with what's happening in this room."

"On the contrary, Karishcka, you are at the center of the discussion that's about to take place."

"I am?" The blood drains from my face. I lean back in my chair, twist my fingers together. "Don't tell me. Let me guess," my voice breaks and I clear my throat, "you're going to tell me that I need to marry this man for real because it's the only way for you to get power on this side of the pond, something you've been wanting for a long time."

My father gazes at me steadily, "You always were a clever girl. If only you had agreed to join us."

"And you know my answer to that. I don't want anything to do with the family business."

"And yet, you had no qualms taking on the security agency and growing it." Nikolai leans forward in his seat.

"That was...legal."

"That was..." Niko puts his fingertips together, "naïve of you."

"Naïve?" I snap, "I was naïve?"

He regards me with a steady gaze. "If you thought you could just run part of the family business and not be involved..." He raises his shoulders.

"What do you mean?" I scowl. "I made sure to keep my distance from any of your illegal activities. Besides the security agency had always been run independent of the other companies."

"On the contrary, it was the best cover you could provide for our activities," Niko replies.

"What?" I stare. "How is that possible?"

"Technology, and the best hackers money can buy." He tilts his head, "It's amazing how it helps get through the most secure of firewalls."

I pale, "Do you...do you mean to say you have been using my company as a front all along for whatever activities it is you guys get up to?"

He flattens his lips and that's reply enough. Anger thrums at my nerve endings. "So all this time, I thought I was building my career and my company in as honest a way as possible and you were using it as a front? Do you even realize what a breach of confidence that is to my clients?"

"We made sure never to compromise them in any way." Niko raises his hands. "We simply used the information you turned up, on a strictly need-to basis."

"Need-to basis?" I curl my fingers into fists.

"We made sure we didn't undermine your company in any form," Niko adds.

"Is that what you think?" I swallow. Everything I'd built thus far was a lie. Anger thuds at my temples. My fingers tremble and I press them together to stop myself from doing something I'll regret later.

"Besides, Karina," Roman, who's been silent so far, speaks up, "you know the work we do benefits the thousands we employ around the world."

"And they have no idea of the kind of people they are working for. Sure, it's one big deception, but hey, if you don't want to see the truth, what can I do about it?"

"I had no idea you were so against us." Niko frowns. "I knew you didn't particularly care for what we did, but you never told us how much you were vehemently against our family business."

"That's the problem." I square my shoulders. "None of you ever bothered to listen to what I was trying to say."

Silence, then I glance around the table, "I demand that you stop using my business for your interests unless you want me to quit."

The silence stretches, then Nikolai finally replies, "I'm afraid that won't be possible."

"Of course not. Why does it matter that it's my business? One I've poured my life into. One I've nurtured and built up from the ground up." I stare at Niko, then turn to my father, "If mama was alive, she'd understand. She's the only one who was ever there for me." Tears trickle from my eyes and I swipe them away from my cheeks. "And she'd still be if it weren't for the 'family business.'" I make air-quotes with my fingers. "It's the reason she was killed, and yet, all of you refused to walk away." My chest hurts and my head begins to pound. "It's your fault she's not here with us. You are responsible for her death. You murdered her."

"Enough." My father's palm strikes the table again and I flinch. Jesus, why the hell can't I shut my mouth? What's wrong with me?

I clearly have a death wish. Nothing else can explain why I've decided to dump all the dirty family laundry on the table, and in front of the man who... is likely the one person who can actually understand what I am going through now. Shit, why do I have to think that? Because it's true. Because he'd get why I hate this entire business so much. After all, he too, had been a victim of the Mafia. And sure, his methods of hunting them aren't all that orthodox, but he hates the organized crime syndicates with almost as much of a passion as I do.

"Is that what you believe?" my father asks. "All these years, is that what you thought of me?"

I draw in a breath, then shake my head. "I'm sorry," I mumble. "That was uncalled for."

"But you hold me responsible for her death?"

I wring my hands together. "No," I bite the inside of my cheek, "Yes. I don't know." I hunch my shoulders. "Nothing changes the fact that she was shot because of the enemies you made, and yet, you refused to leave this life."

"Because... I can't," my father thunders. "You can't leave the Bratva once you're in. And your brothers... They made their choices when they came of age."

"And I made mine." I set my jaw.

"And I don't want what happened to her to happen to you."

My father glares at me with the kind of look that has quelled many in his organization. The kind he's only used a few times with me—notably, when I had broken into his study and stolen his cigars and his favorite whiskey and managed to get really drunk and sick. My stomach churns again. I grab the bottle of water and swig some more of it.

"I know how much you miss her." My father's voice lowers, "We all do."

"I know." I hang my head. I had lost a mother, but he had lost his wife, his other half. He'd sworn he'd never marry again. He'd devoted his life to being a good father to all of us. He'd tried his best... In the only way he knew how, and here I am, throwing it back in his face.

"I am sorry, Papa." I hang my head. "I shouldn't have said that. I am really upset that, despite trying to leave my past behind, here I am, slap bang in the middle of it again."

"The more you try to run, the more your issues are going to follow you. The only way out is to turn around and face them."

"And here I am." I blow out a breath, "So, are you going to finally tell me what this is all about?"

"May I?" Arpad asks from next to me.

My father frowns at him. The two lock gazes, something passes between them, then my father leans back. Huh? The Pakhan of the Bratva never allows anyone else to take over his meeting. Certainly, not an outsider.

But then, Arpad is no longer an outsider, is he? How long has he been in touch with my family?

Arpad leans forward. "Karina, there's something you should know."

Now what? My heart begins to thud, my throat closes, sweat beads my palms and I squeeze them together. I sit upright, tilt my head in his direction. "What is it?" I ask.

"You see, this is not the first time I've been in touch with your family."

"No shit," I snort.

"No," he shakes his head, "you don't understand."

"You're the hotshot financial wiz, so why don't you explain it to me?"

"That's the thing." He reaches for my hand and I pull it away.

"Say it." I scowl. "Just do it already."

He draws in a breath, glances up at my father, then back at me. "I am not who you think I am."

"I could have told you that for free." I chuckle, then wriggle around in my seat. "Well, go on then, what is it?"

He reaches down, and closes his hand around mine. I try to pull away and his grasp tightens.

"I am one of you."

"What?"

"I am one of the Bratva."

CHAPTER 39

Karina

I throw back my head and peals of laughter spill from my lips. If I sound hysterical, it's because that's not far from the truth.

"Sparks, you okay?" Arpad scowls.

I wipe the tears from my cheeks, then sit back in my chair. "Why shouldn't I be? I mean, just because you can say any damn thing that comes into your mind, doesn't mean I am going to believe it, right?"

Arpad glances between my father and brothers, then turns to me. "Sparks, I—"

I hold up my hand, "You...you can't be part of the Bratva. You don't have the tattoos—"

"If I may?" Niko asks Arpad, who nods.

Niko taps his fingers on the table, "If you'd bothered to keep in touch with us, you'd have known that, along with the times, we too, have changed. From a business standpoint, we understand how important it is for the brotherhood to blend in with the mainstream. So, the tattoos are not compulsory anymore."

I frown.

"Besides, tattoos don't buy loyalty," he adds. "It's actions that do."

"And clearly his actions," I nod toward Arpad, "have confirmed his loyalty to you?"

Niko tilts his head.

"Even if I buy that, which somehow, I am finding it difficult to believe," I turn to Arpad. "I am a security consultant, remember? I checked out all seven of you before I took you on as clients."

"You looked into our background?" He draws himself up to his full height. "You had us investigated?"

"Of course, I did. I wouldn't have accepted the lot of you as clients without doing it."

His jaw tics; a nerve throbs at his temple. Then, he nods. "Smart." He rubs his jaw. "I'm glad you did."

"I am not looking for your approval." I grimace. "All I'm trying to do is make a point that what you told me can't be possibly true."

He firms his lips. "I'm afraid it is."

"So, your job... All the investments in startups that you make—"

"I have staff to oversee them." Arpad scowls.

"And your past... You lived in LA. You used to be a full-time angel investor, you were known for finding and launching new ventures."

Niko turns to me, "You need to get over the outdated concept you have of the Bratva. Someone like Arpad is part of the new generation of the Brotherhood. We look, sound, walk like anyone else in the real world. But when tested, our loyalties and interests lie with 'the family.' It doesn't mean he's out killing—"

I wince.

"—or committing illegal acts. His financial and tech expertise are what makes him an invaluable asset to us," Niko adds.

"So, financial and cyber frauds?" I venture. "That's what you are talking about?"

Niko's features stay impassive. I know that look. It means he won't say anything more. He won't confirm or deny the statement, which means it's more true than not. Normally. Which doesn't mean it is fact. It's what I am used to from my family. As the youngest and the only girl, they'd done their best to protect me from the details of what the Bratva were associated with. And then, they wonder why I am so against the family business.

I turn to Arpad, "Tell me it's not true," I plead. "Tell me you are saying all this just to get a rise out of me."

"Sparks," he squats down so he's eyelevel with me, "all I can say is that I am not involved in anything illegal."

"How can you say that?" I laugh. "You are part of the Bratva."

"Haven't you listened to anything I have been saying?" Niko explodes.

Arpad holds up a hand. "Let me handle this from here," he snaps at Niko, whose face grows thunderous. But he tightens his lips, then nods at Arpad.

Whoa. My oldest brother, who in some ways, I've feared more than my father, who is known for his ruthlessness, just backed down?

I turn back to Arpad, who scrutinizes my features. "Niko and I have a bond that is almost as strong as what I share with the Seven. When he asked me to help him out, I couldn't say no."

"So, you became one of them?"

"I only deal with Niko, and only when it's absolutely essential. I help him by steering things along in the business world. A carefully placed word here, a play on the stock market there, snapping up a startup that could send more business his way."

"You're his Ace," I conclude. "He plays you when he needs that extra edge."

Arpad nods.

I stare into his features, take in his clear gaze, the set of his shoulders. That half-pleading, half-defiant look on his face. It's true. Everything he's said so far is true. My throat closes. The band around my chest tightens.

"Karina," He moves closer.

I lean back, trying to put as much distance as possible between us as my seated position will allow.

"Stay away from me."

The skin around his eyes tightens. "Let me explain."

"Too late." I swallow. "All this time we spent together, and you couldn't have mentioned this to me?"

"You didn't mention your connection with the Bratva either," he points out.

"Oh, don't put this on me. I'm not the one who has an entire other life that I just failed to bring up."

"But you do, babe." He firms his lips. "You, too, have another, undisclosed life, even if it's in your past."

"It's different for me."

"Oh?" He growls, "How's that?"

"I was born into the Bratva and decided to cut ties with them. You weren't part of them, but decided to join them."

His jaw tics.

"So your deception is greater because you made the choice."

A nerve pops at his temple.

"My silence was a necessary part of changing who I was." I insist.

"Was it?" His lips twist.

"How can you even ask me that?" I snap back. "You know what? Sod this." I push back my chair, and rise to my feet, or try to, because he's still holding my hand and I find I can't shake him off. So, I half hunch and try to free my hand, but of course, the asshole doesn't let me go.

"Please, Sparks, listen to me."

"No."

"This once."

"No fucking way."

"Karina," my father admonishes me.

Arpad peers into my features. His gaze intensifies; he seems to be pleading with me, and at the same time, trying to coerce me and dominate me. The skin around his eyes tightens. "Please," he reiterates, "give me just a few more minutes of your time to explain."

"A few more minutes?"

"Five minutes." He holds up his hand. "That's all I need, I promise."

"Five minutes."

"Just five."

I gaze into his features—those gorgeous blue-grey eyes, those lips I want to kiss and suck on. Ugh, stop thinking about his sex appeal in front of your father. "Fine," I mumble.

"Fine." He lessens the pressure on my hand, but doesn't let go.

"After the incident, you know how the Seven of us took to the streets? A bunch of posh prats like us, and we felt unhinged. We didn't belong in school, couldn't fit in at home, since our families, when they tried to help, didn't have a clue as to the kind of emotional toll it had taken on us. I was spiraling out of control when, I met... Niko." He jerks his chin at my brother. "I was itching to fight and your brother was already running an underground fighting ring in London."

"So that's what your frequent trips to the UK were for?" I scowl at my brother. "And here I thought, you had a woman."

"That too." Niko's features harden. Of course, my oldest brother is every bit as much of an a-hole as my previously soon-to-be but no longer to-be real husband here... No, probably worse, in some ways, given he's been groomed to take over as the scion of the most powerful organized crime syndicate on the West coast... And likely soon, this side of the pond as well.

"So, you two met, found kindred spirits in each other, likely fought each other, I am guessing, and that was the beginning of a beautiful relationship?"

"Relationship?" Arpad and Niko glare at each other with something like distaste.

"I can assure you there's no relationship between us..." Arpad retorts.

"Unless you count the fact that both of you are part of the Bratva?" I snarl

Arpad winces, "There is... That..."

"You're right," Niko adds, "but we wanted something more binding."

"So, you asked him to seduce me?"

Niko draws in a breath.

Roman's face hardens.

Victor shifts in his seat and my father explodes. "Your brother asked his friend to take care of you."

"How?" I jut out my chin. "By marrying me?"

"Yes," my father snaps.

"Do you see how insane this is?" I throw up my hands. "My family goes behind my back, and asks someone who is a complete stranger to wed me?"

"He wasn't a stranger to us," my father points out. "Also, the war between the Bratva and our enemies was escalating in LA. We needed you out of there."

"You could have asked me to leave."

"Would you have left the country if we'd asked you to?"

I bite my lips.

"I thought not." My father nods, "We knew him and trusted him to keep you safe."

"He was one of us, yet part of the mainstream," Niko interjects. "The kind of man who could protect you. The kind we hoped you'd fall for."

"So, you asked him to contrive an excuse to make me move to London and then get me to marry him?"

"It would've worked out for everyone."

"Everyone but me." I twist my lips. "This..." I point my finger at him, "these meddling ways of you guys is exactly why I chose to leave."

"You can't blame your family for trying to protect you," Arpad interjects.

"Was that the only reason you agreed to this...this deal?" I turn on him. "What else did they promise you in return for marrying me? Did they promise to help you track down whoever was responsible for you and the Seven being kidnapped?"

Silence around the table.

Arpad stares at me with something like pride in his gaze.

"Oh, no," I shake my head, "no, no, no." I groan. "This isn't happening." I left my country, tried to forge a path of my own. I'd been so sure I'd be able to shake off the grasp that the Bratva had on me. I'd been so clear that I'd avoid the kind of arranged marriages that are common among the children of the Bratva, and all along, I had been manipulated by my family. I am being coerced into the exact kind of arrangement that I had sworn I'd never fall into, and... By the man for whom I have developed feelings. He's been hiding things from me all along. If that isn't the start of the makings of a disaster, I don't know what is.

My stomach protests again and bile rushes up my throat. "Excuse me," I gasp, "I think I am going to be sick."

"What?"

"I need to puke." I yank my hand from his hold, jump up to my feet and race to the doorway

I wrench open the door, race out and stare about me. Oh, shit, where do I need to go? Where's the bathroom? Arpad reaches me. He scoops me up in his arms, races down the corridor, shoulders open a door and darts in, then deposits me near the commode. I drop to my knees, and hurl. Ugh.

I retch and retch, emptying the contents of my stomach. My hair is pulled back and held. Bloody hell. How romantic. The man I'd fucked... Who I'd fallen for, who had tricked me into the kind of arrangement I'd wanted to avoid my entire life... When I finally stop, he reaches over and tears off a sheet of tissue paper for me. I wipe my face with it, while he reaches over and flushes.

I slump back against the wall, too exhausted to move. He scoops me up in his arms again.

"Don't touch me." I whisper, but he doesn't acknowledge me. He walks over to the counter, lowers me to the ground, then turns on the tap. I reach over, rinse out my mouth, then splash water over my face. He hands me a paper towel. I turn away, snatch up a different tissue and pat my face dry.

"Better?" he asks. "Is it something you ate? Do you want to lie down?"

"It's the bloody company I am keeping right now that's making me want to throw up," I snap.

He stiffens, reaches for me. I evade him, drop the tissue in the wastepaper basket and walk out.

"Sparks?" He draws abreast. I speed up my pace. The last thing I want to do is talk to him.

"Karina." He grips my shoulder.

I angle my body and pull away from him.

"Karina, please listen to me."

"No," I yell, "you lost the right to ask anything of me."

His features tighten and a nerve throbs at his temple. "Don't talk to me like that."

"Oh yeah?" I stab a finger into his chest. "How about, I don't talk to you at all? You dare dictate to me about how to converse with you? When you are the one who's pulled a fast one on me all this time?"

"It's not what it seems."

"Ha!" I blow out a breath and the hair on my forehead rises. "That's what they all say. Pray, tell me, what it is then? You are in cahoots with my family, you know how much I hate their profession, how I've tried to keep away from anything related to them, personally—"

"Even as you helped us investigate the Mafia who are behind our kidnapping?"

"The Mafia are Sicilians; they are different from the Bratva, who are Russian in origin." Why the hell do I feel the need to point that out. Apparently, even though I'd tried to keep myself aloof from my family, their biases and opinions had rubbed off on me.

"Besides, that was professional," I mutter.

"So is this."

I gape at him.

"Bloody hell." He sets his jaw. "I didn't mean it that way."

"You're the one who's always said that he never says anything he doesn't mean."

"No, I said I wouldn't lie to you."

"And isn't this a lie of omission?"

He drags his fingers through his hair and I stare. Jesus, this man... I've only seen him as authoritative and confident, but this... The way he stares at me with an unreadable expression in his gaze... It's not something I would have expected.

"I admit my interest in you started off as a way to get in your pants." He shifts his weight from foot to foot. "Then when your father and brothers approached me with the proposal of marrying you—"

I snort, his gaze narrows, and he shoves his hands into his pocket, "—that's when I decided to offer you the contract to run security for the Seven," he says.

"You offered me the contract?" I explode, "I got it because I am the best in the business."

"You are, and that's why you did," I agree, "but I also had a vested interest in making sure that the contract went to you."

"Wait. Hold on." I raise my hand, "So, you're saying that you influenced the Seven into ensuring that I was the preferred contractor for the job?"

"Because you're the best." he reminds me.

"But you influenced the outcome?"

He raises his shoulders, "I may have hinted that you had my vote and that I trusted you."

"Too bad I can't say the same about you anymore."

He sets his jaw.

"You made sure that I won such a lucrative contract that I had no choice but to move countries." I stab my finger at him. "You made me upturn my entire life, and why? So you could benefit from the deal that you struck with my family?"

"I did it to keep you safe."

"I can take care of myself," I yell.

He sets his jaw. "Do you have any idea of how many people bear a grudge against your family? The kind of enemies one makes in the line of business they are in?"

"You mean the line of business you are in?"

"No. No one knows of my affiliation with your family. That means that I can protect you."

"Oh yeah?" I snort, "And how do you plan on doing that? By manipulating my life? By arranging for me to stowaway on the yacht?"

"I didn't arrange for you to stowaway on the yacht. That was all you, and you know it."

I toss my hair over my head, "But you do admit to controlling my life?"

"If you mean, did I seduce you into falling for me?" He smirks. "Then it's natural that you feel cut up about it. After all, you didn't have a chance."

I fold my hands over my chest. "Excuse me?"

"I mean, it's only natural that you'd want to be with me after I shagged you."

I gape at him. "Is that an apology? Because it's certainly not sounding like one to me."

He cracks his neck. "You're right, I totally suck at this."

"Finally," I raise my eyes skywards, "something you're not good at."

"I'm also not good at this." He gets down on one knee, takes my left hand in this.

"Oh, no, no, no." I try to pull my hand but he holds on.

"Karina Solonik, will you marry me?"

CHAPTER 40

Arpad

"No." She stares down into my face.

"What?" I blink. "What did you say?"

"You heard me." She tugs on her hand and I release it. "I said no. No, I will not marry you. No, I don't want to be with you. In fact, I hate you as much as I hate myself for ever allowing myself to feel anything for you."

She turns to leave.

I spring to my feet and grab her wrist. "You don't mean it."

She turns on me and stares down at where my fingers encircle her wrist.

I release her and she folds her arms in front of her. "I've never been more serious about anything in my life."

She heads toward the doorway, then stops. "I'll leave it to you to make excuses to my family."

"Stop, Karina, don't leave like this." I walk toward her.

"I don't want to stay a minute longer with you." Her back is stiff, her shoulders straight. Her dark hair swishes about her shoulders as she yanks open the front door.

"At least, wait a minute. I'll drive you back to my place."

"If you think I am coming back with you to see your family again, you have another think coming."

"Fine, so don't come back to my place. At least, let me take you to...to wherever you are going." I reach the front door as she heads outside.

"No, thanks." She walks down the steps.

"Karina, come on. Let me make sure you reach your destination safely."

"Ha," she snorts, "I'll be safe as long as I am away from you. Besides, you lost the right to care about my wellbeing. No," she holds up a finger, "let me rephrase that. You never earned the right to worry about my happiness, and now," she peruses my features, "now you never will."

She reaches the bottom of the steps. Hell, I need to stop her. I need to figure out how the hell I am going to get her back. "What if you're pregnant?"

She pauses.

I take the steps two at a time and reach her. "You were sick all of a sudden, weren't you?"

Her shoulders shake.

What the—? "Karina, you okay?" I touch her shoulder. She shakes it off and turns to me.

Her mouth is open, tears run down her cheeks.

"Why are you laughing?" I growl.

"OMG." She wipes the moisture from her face. "I puke and you think I am pregnant? It's less than a week since we had sex, and you think I am already carrying your child?"

"It's possible, isn't it?"

"It is," she admits, "but no way, would I be feeling the effects of pregnancy so quickly that I'd be vomiting as a result."

My neck heats. Of course, she is right. And I knew that, I swear, I did; I just wasn't thinking straight. When I am near her, my thoughts seem to get all twisted up inside until I am a mess. Why the hell does she screw me up so?

"So, what is it then? Was it something you ate? Should you be traveling in this condition?"

She snorts. "It was your proximity that resulted in my being physically sick. Now that I am leaving you—" She takes a step away from me, "See, I already feel better."

She holds out her hand.

I stare at it, then back at her face.

"The keys," she says impatiently, "the car keys."

"If you think I'm going to give you—"

She stares at me.

I glare back.

She purses her lips, and fuck me, but she has me where it hurts the most.

If I stop her, then clearly, I don't have a chance of winning her over. If I let her go—? Not happening, but I have to, at least, comply with her wishes—or be seen to. It's the only way I stand a chance of showing that I am serious about winning her back. Winning her back? This woman has me by the balls. Does she even realize it?

She tilts her head.

I dig the keys out of my pocket and place them in her palm. Before she can pull her hand away, I've gripped her wrist and hauled her to me. I lower my head and press my lips to hers.

She stays unmoving in my embrace and I deepen the pressure of my mouth on hers. I tilt my head, nibble on her lower lip. She sighs, then melts against me. She opens her mouth and I sweep my tongue in between her lips. I bend her over, kiss her, suck on her tongue and—

Pain explodes between my legs.

"What the—" I release her, stagger back. "Did you knee me?" I growl.

She squares her shoulders. "Bye, Mr. Beauchamp. Don't bother coming to grovel; I am not going to give in to you anytime soon."

I straighten, track her as she marches over to my car. The lights flash as she unlocks the car. She pulls open the car door, then turns to face me, "By the way, I'll be billing you for the time we spent together."

She slams the door shut.

Wait, what? I stalk toward the vehicle, when she turns the car around and drives off.

I stare after her. I can't believe she just did that. Left me, literally, eating her dust and driven off. More to the point, I can't believe I allowed her to do that.

"Arpad," Niko calls out, "you'd better come inside. Gregory needs a word with you."

Of course, he does. I pivot and march up the steps. I brush past my one-time friend and now collaborator, then march inside the house.

I stalk into the room, drop into the chair vacated by her. The warmth of her body clings to the chair; the soft feminine scent of her clings to my nostrils. Jesus, fuck, why the hell can't I get her out of my mind?

"Karina."

I raise my head, stare at her father, "What about her?"

"You're going to marry her."

"I am."

Niko bursts out laughing and I stare at him. "What's so funny?"

"You are."

"Explain your motherfucking self."

"My sister just walked out on you, left you in a cloud of dust, and you think you're going to convince her to marry you?"

"Consider it done," I snap with more confidence than I feel.

Ivan snorts from his position near the door. Niko and Roman chuckle at me.

"Still don't see what's funny."

"You are." Gregory's eyes twinkle for a second. "My daughter is stubborn."

"Tell me something I don't know."

"She is very stubborn," he reiterates. "When she makes up her mind about something, it's very hard to sway her."

"And you're telling me this...because?"

"Clearly, she's angry with you."

I raise one eyebrow, challenging him to continue.

"You're going to have to woo her."

"Woo her?" I stare at Gregory.

"You know, the thing that men who've lost their balls do, when they've set their sights on a woman?" Niko interjects.

I firm my lips, "I didn't lose my heart—"

Now it's Gregory's turn to stare at me.

"—my balls," I say. "I'll keep them, thank you very much."

"You do love her, don't you?" He frowns.

I hesitate.

"You finally agreed to marry her," Niko points out.

Shit, what do you tell your future father-in-law and brother-in-law, both of whom are staring at you, like they would have the aforementioned balls for breakfast if you say something to displease them? Not that I'd hesitate to take them on. Those years of fighting, first on the streets, then in Niko's cage fights, have left me with a trick or two up my sleeve. But they are going to be family... And picking a fight with them is not the way to get back in Sparks' good graces.

"I will marry her." I look between them. "This, I promise you."

"I am counting on you to take care of her." Gregory fixes me with those piercing brown eyes, so like hers.

"I give you my word." I knock my knuckles on the wood. "I'll marry her, give you access to all of my contacts, and introduce you to the Seven so you can expand your reach in the UK. In return, you'll help us track down the perpetrators of our kidnapping."

"It's a deal," Gregory leans forward, "assuming you are able to woo her back."

CHAPTER 41

Karina

"You did what?" Isla stares back at me from the phone screen.

"I left him." I hunch my shoulders.

More precisely, I had driven away from him and all the way back to London. Then I had headed back home and crept under the covers. I had since taken to ordering my groceries online, binge watching my favorite series, and except for one call to my team to make sure that things were on track—they were—I had holed up in my apartment for the last week.

"And you didn't pick up my calls all these days?" She frowns at me.

"Uh, yeah." I see myself on screen and wince. My hair is unbrushed, my complexion pale, and the black circles under my eyes are so pronounced, I swear, I look like a sleepwalking raccoon. "Sorry, I didn't feel up for company."

"Company?" She stares at me. "You're calling me company? Me, the woman who held your hand while you dithered over Arpad."

"You mean Arpad the douchehole, don't you?" I retort. "Arpad A-hole Dickasaurus."

"Very creative."

"I've had time to think up a few names," I admit.

"So, you've been hiding away in your apartment all this time?"

"Call it a vacation." Yeah, so I am using his words. Big deal, doesn't mean that his voice is stuck in my head or anything.

"You mean staycation."

"Yeah, yeah." I purse my lips. I love Isla, honestly, but right now, I just want to be left alone with my thoughts, preferably with a big carton of Cherry Garcia, my fave ice-cream, and a romantic comedy to watch and cry over. Yeah, I cry over rom-coms, because they remind me of what I can't have. What I set out to find and got hoodwinked by that scoundrel. That rake. Gah! I wind a strand of hair around my finger, and tug on it. "Same thing."

"No, it isn't. If you were on vacation, you'd be on a yacht, sunbathing, sipping margaritas and making out with a hot stud."

"Remember, I did the first and the last?" I point out.

"And how was it?"

"Underwhelming," I lie.

"At least, did he fuck well?"

I make a motion of zipping my lips.

"Aww, come on, give me something," she whines.

"Nope, not going to kiss and tell, babe."

"So, it was good then?" She waggles her eyebrows.

"It wasn't not good."

"Whoa." Her eyes widen. "That good?"

"You're not listening to me."

"Oh, I totally am." She nods. "Bet it was scorching hot."

"No, it wasn't."

"And lascivious."

"Of course, not."

"Blistering, intimate, brazen, amorous?" She snickers.

"Are you consulting a thesaurus?"

"Close," she chuckles, "I made a list of excitable words from the last few romance novels I read."

"Why in the world would you do that?"

"It helps me when I'm pitching for my next wedding, to drop in the right word at the right time."

"Really?" I frown. "Do your customers actually fall for that?"

"You'd be surprised." She changes position on the sofa where she's stretched out, "So what happened, that you came rushing back home and decided to shut him out."

"It's not going to work out."

"What are you not telling me?"

"Nothing."

"And the baby?"

"What about it?"

"What if you are pregnant?"

"I'm not," I snap.

"Are you sure?"

I shake my head. "Even if I am, I plan to bring him or her up alone."

"Do you want to do that?" She scowls.

"Yeah."

"Are you really sure?"

"No, but it has to be enough." The small of my back hurts. Shit, this is what comes from being cooped up in one position for too long. I spring up to my feet, begin to pace the living room of my cozy two-bedroom apartment off Regent's Park. It's not a small space, by London standards. Also, not as luxurious as the kind of real estate that the Seven tend to frequent. "To be honest, I don't know what I want," I muse.

"You want him," she retorts.

"Well, too bad. I am not going to have him. That lying, conniving, bastard," I burst out.

"Whoa, whoa, whoa," she holds up a hand, "what's going on there? What are you not telling me?"

I lower my phone and hang my head. Nothing; everything. Shit, where do I even begin without giving away the truth about who I am? Something I've been hiding from everyone, including the Seven. If they found out about it... Clearly, I'd lose their account and much more. I think. I'd probably lose my friends too... Or not. Arpad knows about it, of course, but considering he is in on this with me, I don't think he would tell the rest of the Seven.

Strange, somehow, he's the only one who knows everything about me... Apparently, he and I have more in common than I thought. Is that what had attracted me to him? The fact that, under that sophisticated, billionaire exterior, he is so similar to my father and brothers... Cut from the same cloth.

Hell, even his experiences are similar to theirs. And he knows them. What are the chances? So, not only had he manipulated my life over the last year, but he'd also been luring me toward this possible marriage. Wow. I shake my head. The one man I'd been attracted to... Turns out, he is exactly the person I should have avoided at all costs. And, of course, he has to be the person with whom I'd chosen to have a child.

"Karina? Kaaareeeena? You there?" Isla's voice reaches me. Shit, I'd forgotten I was still on a call with her.

I raise the phone and peer into her angry features on the screen. "I'm here."

I rub the small of my back again.

"You okay?"

"Of course, I am." A twang tugs on my lower belly. I pale.

"Karina?" She frowns. "What's wrong?"

"N...nothing."

Another jolt of pain hits me. I press my palm to my stomach.

"Karina, you're worrying me. Do you want me to come over?"

"No...no, I'll be okay."

"Karina, don't—"

I disconnect, toss the phone on the bed, then head to the bathroom. Tears prick the backs of my eyes. Shit, don't cry. It's okay. Why the hell am I so upset?

Something hot stabs at my chest and waves of pain coil low in my belly. "Ah!" I stagger over to the bathroom cabinet and open it. Of course, I can't find what I need. Damn it, I should have been better prepared. I'd known it was possible that I might not conceive the first time I tried, but somehow, I had refused to consider that option. I had been so sure that it would work, that I would get pregnant. Is that why I had neglected all the signs of my impending period over the last few days? Tender breasts, the discomfort at the small of my back, my feet, which ache more than usual? No choice. I have to head over to the shop and get what I need now.

As I turn, another wave of pain slices through my middle. Damn it, it bloody hurts; it hurts. I double over, draw in a breath, then another.

Shit, this can't be happening; it can't be.

The doorbell rings just then and I jump. I should go get it, but fuck that. I am not in any mood for company.

The doorbell sounds again, and again. "Go away," I yell. Then head inside the bedroom to reach for my bag, when the sound of the door opening reaches me. What the ever lovin' hell?

I turn to the door as footsteps near. Arpad bursts into the room.

CHAPTER 42

Arpad

"Sparks, what's wrong." I spring forward, covering the distance between us.

She straightens, then moves to the side. "Don't touch me," she warns.

"Fuck that," I growl. "Are you okay? Are you in pain?"

"No, I'm dancing around, getting ready to go on a date."

I frown. "Are you?" I look her up and down. "Is that what you're doing?"

"No, of course, not." She clutches her middle, then hobbles toward the door.

"Where are you going?"

"To the shops, you ass."

"Wait, what? You're going like this?"

She turns, "Of course, like this. What's wrong with you?"

"What do you need? I can get it for you."

"Oh, no. No way. I don't want to be beholden to you." She stiffens, then groans again and grabs at her stomach.

My heart begins to race. Sweat beads my palms. Shit, it can't be... Is it? She can't be pregnant this soon, let alone having a miscarriage. "Sparks." I reach for her and she slaps away my hand.

"I said... Don't touch me," she snarls.

"Fine," I hold up my hands, "at least, let me help you."

"You've done enough so far, haven't you?"

I wince. "Look, I'm sorry about what I did, but honestly, now is not the time to talk about it."

"Oh yeah?" She staggers back, until she reaches the wall, then leans against it. "Now is exactly the time to talk about it."

"Not when you are in pain, and bleeding out."

"Exactly now, because I am in pain and bleeding out." She wraps her arms around her middle, bites down on her lower lip. "Shit, this is all a mess." Tears stream down her cheeks. "Why did it have to happen like this?" Her face crumbles and she sinks down to the floor. "Why the hell couldn't it work out? I'd thought it wouldn't matter either way, but clearly, I had allowed myself to believe it was possible. I mean, damn it. I'd really thought I was pregnant, and now I'm not."

"You're not?" I frown.

"Of course, not. I just got my period, you ass."

"Ah," my shoulders sag, "it's only your period."

She shoots me a look from under her eyelashes. "Spoken like a man," she snaps. "Like you'd know how it is to be struck with tender breasts, mood swings, upset stomach, headaches, cramps, aching hamstrings, swollen feet —"

I pale.

"—not to mention that you have to walk around with a wad of cotton stuck up your cunt."

I grimace.

"And take painkillers that make you woozy, so all you want to do is curl up under the covers and sleep. But instead, you are curled up on the floor of the bloody bedroom, watching as the man you thought you loved, the bastard who did a number on you by going behind your back to gang up on you with your family, is watching as you slowly bleed from between your legs like a pig stuck in a hole."

The blood drains from my face. Shit I really hurt her. I'd told myself to stay away after she'd left, to give her time, but hell, if I haven't reached the end of my patience as well. I have to find a way to make her believe in me again. But how? Gregory had said woo her, but hell, if I am going down the tried and tested flowers and candles and dates route... Not that there is anything wrong in that, but seriously, this is Karina, a princess for whom nothing less than the very best will suffice.

I swallow, force myself to meet her gaze. "You're not a pig." I scan her face. "Nope, definitely no resemblance."

She half snorts, then clears her throat. "Is that all you caught from everything I just said?" She sighs.

"The list of symptoms was impressive." I swallow, "Clearly, I'll never know what it is to be on my period, but I can empathize."

"Oh yeah?"

"Sure, I mean, it's like breaking your arm?"

"Arm and a leg," she mutters.

"Arm and a leg," I agree, then take a step forward.

"And stubbing the big toe of the foot of your uninjured leg."

"That too," I nod, and move closer to her.

"And...then banging your elbow into the edge of a doorjamb."

"Totally." I reach her.

"And.. And..." her features scrunch up, "and like...losing the chance at having a child." She bursts into tears.

I swoop down and pull her onto my lap. "Shh! Baby, shh!"

She buries her face in my throat and weeps. Her shoulders shudder, her entire body shakes with the outpouring of her disappointment. A lump sticks in my throat. "Oh, sweetheart, I am so sorry."

She only cries harder.

I drag my fingers down her thick soft hair.

"Why did it have to turn out like this? Why?" She curls her fingers into fists and beats against my chest. "I wanted one thing...one thing. To have a child, someone of my own, to bring up without the shadow of my family and my past sullyng it. I wanted this child, I really...really wanted it. I... I.."

Her breath hitches and more tears flow down her cheeks.

"I am so sorry, Sparks. I understand how you feel right now."

"You don't." She hiccups. "You have no idea how it feels to be convinced that you're pregnant and then have your bloody period arrive."

"Periods are meant to be bloody aren't they?"

She pauses, stares up at me, then bursts out crying again.

"Shh, baby, please don't cry." I hold her close and rock her. "I'm so sorry, Sparks, truly I am."

"Are you?" she blubbers. "Are you really sorry? Surely, you must be happy that you don't have to contend with a child, considering we broke up."

My heart stutters. My blood pounds at my temples. We may not be together now, but hell if I am not going to do my best to rectify it. "I didn't realize how much I wanted you to have a child until I walked in and found you doubled over in pain and thought you were having a miscarriage."

"Miscarriage?" She stills. "It's too soon for that."

I wipe the moisture from her cheek, "I know... Stupid of me, but I was concerned and besides, it's all your fault."

"What?" She scowls. "Why?"

"Because of you, I have babies on my brain, and when I saw you in pain, and clutching your middle... Well, come on. It was a logical conclusion. And then, when I thought you'd lost the child... I..." I set my jaw, "I only, then, realized how much I wanted to give you the baby you long for."

"Something which is never going to happen now. She pushes away from me, and jumps to her feet. "What are you doing here anyway?" She flicks her hair over her shoulder, "How dare you barge in here and put your hands on me as if you are...?"

"Mine," I say simply. "You are, Sparks, and I am not letting you forget it that quickly."

"You did a damn good job of it this past week."

"I was trying to give you space. I didn't want to crowd you."

"Well, you're crowding me now."

I rise to my feet, drag my fingers through my hair. "Look why don't I go get whatever you need from the shops, and then we can talk?"

"You can get me what I need, and hand it to the porter downstairs to bring it up. Speaking of," she glances at me with suspicion, "how did you get past him and get inside?"

"Uh..." I shove my hands in the pockets of my jeans. "I have my ways."

"Oh." She stares at me, then the wrinkles on her forehead clear. "Ohhh! I see."

"What?" I take a step forward and she throws up a hand, "Don't come any closer, you...you... Conniving ass."

I stiffen. "Now look here a minute—"

"No, you look here." She draws herself up to her full height. "I thoroughly investigated the ownership of this building, and it hadn't revealed any connection to you," she says slowly, "but you do have a connection, don't you? You own this building."

"Through a company that acts as an interface," I admit.

"Which means the porter is your employee, of course," she snarls, then stiffens. "But I checked out the apartment. There were no cameras in the apartment, so how did you know when to rush in?"

"I waited until you'd completed all of your checks and were all moved in."

"So, every time I was in any of the rooms, you spied on me?" She glances around the space wildly. "And the bathroom? Did you also bug the bathroom?"

"No." I scowl. "Of course, not. I don't have cameras in the bathroom. I am not some creepy-ass stalker."

She bursts out laughing. "You're not, huh? I can't think of another way to define your stalkerish behavior."

"Hey," I hold up a hand, "Cut me a break, will you? I wanted to give you your space, but I wanted to be sure you were safe."

"So what? You jerked off to watching me crying into my ice-cream?"

"Uh... Not exactly." I shuffle my feet.

"So, you did jerk off?" she asks carefully.

"I...uh, I may have." It's one thing to do it, another to admit to it, and to the woman I'm trying to make a good impression on. Shit. "I mean, you're so fucking beautiful when you sleep."

"You watched me as I slept?" She opens and shuts her mouth. Then her cheeks redden, "So, you saw me when I... I..."

I nod, "I saw you shove your toys inside yourself and bring yourself to orgasm. That's when I almost came over and—"

"Hold on," she tilts her head, "you almost came over then?" She stiffens, "And this time when you saw me in pain... How did you get to me so quickly?"

I am not going to lie to her, not after everything we've been through. If I have a chance in hell of winning back her trust, I need to be up front with her. She needs to accept me, faults and all, as I want her in my life. Completely unvarnished, without any masks. That's how I want us to be able to see each other. I square my shoulders, "I am in the apartment down the hallway, actually—"

"What the hell?" Her cheeks redden, but it's anger, not embarrassment. "All this time, I have been crying over you and you've been watching me and enjoying yourself at my expense."

"No, no, no. It's not like that." My throat closes. Shit. This isn't going how I'd imagined it would. "I had to make sure you were okay."

"I was fine, until I met you."

"I promised your family that I'd look out for you."

"Oh, yeah?" She tips up her chin. Her gaze narrows, "If this is what you mean by 'looking out'" she makes air quotes with her finger, "then I am sorry, but clearly, you and I have a different definition of what that means."

She clutches her stomach again, and something hot stabs at my chest.

"You're in pain. You shouldn't be exerting yourself emotionally, physically—"

"It's only my period, you blundering neanderthal," she yells. "It's not like I am pregnant." Her face crumples again, but she takes a few deep breaths and composes herself. "Shit, I am not pregnant. Not pregnant." She holds herself and begins to rock.

A ball of emotion lodges in my chest.

I take a step forward, and she snarls, "Don't you dare come near me."

"But—"

"Are you happy now? Clearly, you didn't want me to be pregnant. Your plan worked."

"What do you mean?" I frown. "You know I wanted you to have my child."

"Did you?" Her gaze narrows. "The number of times you could have come inside me and you didn't. You pulled out, you came on me, you fucked me in the ass, but you held off coming inside me until—"

"Until I was sure you were ready to submit to me."

She stares at me, "So you admit it? You admit that you were playing with me, even though we had an agreement?"

"I kept up my part of the deal," I insist.

"You were supposed to get me pregnant. Instead, you were too busy playing your mind games. You were more concerned with holding onto your power. You wanted me to give in to you, you wanted me to beg, before you delivered on your part of the bargain."

Her jaw firms.

"If you hadn't been so hung up on the powerplay, if you hadn't been so obsessed with dominating... If you had been less selfish, you'd have focused on our deal. You wouldn't have held back on me. You'd have tried to get me pregnant every opportunity you had. In fact," her chin wobbles, "if you had, for one second, thought about anyone else but yourself, I'd probably have conceived by now."

My heart begins to race and the band around my chest tightens. I move toward her and she holds up her hand. "Please," her voice wavers then she draws in a sharp breath, "please don't come near me. In fact, it's best you stay away from me from now on."

"Let me help." I close my fingers into fists. What can I do? How can I help her? Is everything she said true? Had I been so engrossed with staying in control, had I been so wrapped up in my own emotions, so preoccupied with what I wanted from her, that I had forgotten about why I had entered into the agreement with her in the first place?

My throat closes; a bead of sweat runs down my spine.

Damnit! I have faced down the Bratva, sat across from the sharpest of investors in Silicon Valley, but none of it has prepared me for the absolute helplessness I feel as I watch her grapple with her pain, her anguish.

"Let me at least hold you," I plead.

"No." She wipes the tears off her face. "You lost that right with how you've treated me."

"I treated you like you are my—"

"Like your possession," she spits out. "Like you...you could manipulate my life to suit your needs. Like you could arrange the trajectory of events to your convenience. Well, I have news for you Arpad f'ing Beauchamp. I am Karina motherfucking Solenik, and I am going to make you sorry for the moment you set eyes on me."

CHAPTER 43

Karina

"He spied on you?" Isla scowls at me from across the table.

We're at the bar above the National Portrait Gallery, my favorite drinking spot. Also, the second favorite place I like to go to when I want to think. Normally, I'd have gone for an Ashtanga yoga class, but my bloody period means that's out. Not that I haven't tried to fit in yoga sessions when I have my period, but given the kind of cramps I have during this time, I find it uncomfortable to take part in any overt physical activity. For all of my best intentions, my body has a will of its own, apparently. Just like my wanting to get pregnant and my body declaring otherwise.

It's been forty-eight hours since I told off that asshole. Forty-eight hours since I found out I hadn't conceived. Which means I can drink all I want, right? Bonus: it will help with the cramps. I raise the shot of vodka, and toss back the remnants.

Isla's eyebrows rise. "You okay?"

"What do you think?"

"Considering how you're tossing back the alcohol, I'd say you're upset."

"Understatement of the year." I gesture to the bartender for a refill. "And just so we are clear—he didn't spy on me; he stalked me."

"Stalked you?" She frowns.

"Asshole had cameras in my house." My fingers tighten around my glass of wine. "The bastard rented the apartment down the hall from me so he could keep an eye on me."

"Whoa." She leans back on the barstool. "That's some crazy shit."

"Exactly."

The bartender tops up my vodka and I nod my thanks.

"How do you think Sinclair, Saint, Weston and Damian found out everything they wanted about their women?"

She frowns, "Are you saying they stalked their now-wives and girlfriends?"

I stare at her. "I can't reveal client confidences."

"So, they did stalk the girls?"

I raise my shoulders. And now I know how it feels to be on the other side. I lower my face, stare down into the depths of my shot glass.

She sighs. "The Seven are complicated men. Alphaholes to the extreme, and yet, when they set their hearts on something—or someone, they don't stop until they possess the object of their obsession."

"Tell me about it." I snort. "I've seen it all unfold in front of me."

"You have to admit, there's something hot about being the focus of all that intensity."

I stare at her in disbelief. "It's more like an invasion of my privacy."

She nods. "Shows how much he wants you—that he'll go to any lengths to get you."

"Well, he can fuck right off if he thinks that's the way to woo me," I snarl. "And I can't believe you're saying this. This is real life, Isla. It's not one of those romance novels you like to read so much."

"Hey," she protests, "don't mock my kink, and I won't mock yours."

"Kink, what kink are you two talking about?" A new voice asks from behind me. I turn to find a young girl...dressed in skinny jeans, chucks, a purple blouse that matches the highlights in her hair.

"Ava," Isla exclaims, "what are you doing here?"

"I came to the gallery to complete a project, then my friends and I decided to come up here for a drink." She laughs.

"Are you of legal age?" I huff.

"You can order your own drinks if you are over eighteen, which I am." She tilts her head and furrows her brow. "After all, this is England."

Of course, it is. And I am here, why? Because the asshole manipulated my life so he could ensure that I was close enough for him to keep tabs on me.

I raise my glass and throw back more of the vodka.

"Have you two met?" Isla looks between us. "This is my friend Ava, and this," she turns to me, "is Karina—"

Ava's face brightens. "You are Arpad's—?"

"Not Arpad's," I growl.

She blinks, then her cheeks redden. "Sorry, didn't mean to imply something where there isn't anything."

"There was, but now there isn't." I toss back the vodka so quickly that my stomach protests. A numb feeling grips my hands and legs. Good. Not that I like getting drunk... In fact, I can't remember the last time I did. But nothing like starting in the present moment, right?

"Oh," her lips tilt down, "I'm sorry."

She turns her body away from me, and I know I'm being mean. Isla glowers at me. I frown back. I am not really ready for company. But I couldn't bear to be inside the apartment, even though he'd promised me that he was disconnecting the cameras. Not that I trust him.

I had dumped my phone, gone through the space to ensure I had found and destroyed each of the cameras—all of it expensive, top notch equipment, that I had taken great pleasure in wrecking under the heels of my favorite pair of designer shoes.

I nod at the bartender and he refills my shot glass again.

Isla grabs my hand. "You're going too fast," she protests.

"Not fast enough," I grumble.

Ava pulls out her phone and taps out a message, then she slides onto the barstool on my other side.

"I'll have what she's having," she beckons to the bartender.

"You will?"

She nods.

"What about your friends?" I scowl.

"I just messaged them to say I'll catch them later. It's more important that I am here to keep you company while you get over your heartbreak."

Heartbreak? Is my heart broken? I thought it was more the disappointment that I hadn't conceived. Hell, this was only my first time trying. The band around my chest tightens and I feel a hot, stabbing sensation. How do the women who try for children for months, years, decades sometimes, manage to keep going? Do they have more self-confidence than me? Are they simply luckier than me? Maybe it isn't meant to be for me? Oh, stop that.

Ava raises her shot glass of vodka to me. "Salut."

"Nostrovia." I clink my shot glass with hers. We down it at the same time.

The alcohol slides down my throat, leaving a trail of heat in its wake. The lack of sensation that follows is totally awesome. My head spins, then everything in my vision seems to pop and sparkle. Jeez, it's like I finally took off the blinkers I've been wearing so far.

"I am sorry for my mean girl attitude earlier," I mutter. "It's just... Well... You know..." I stare at her face, the trusting features, as she watches me, unblinking. Bloody hell, this girl really is so young. "Forget it." I wave a hand. "It's not worth discussing. Just please know, I am not normally this horrible."

"Yeah, normally she wouldn't have spoken to you at all," Isla chimes in.

"What?" I gape at her, "Are you telling me I'm normally a nose-stuck-in-the-air—"

"Haughty, condescending, bitch?" She nods.

I open and shut my mouth, and she chuckles. "I was only joking, silly."

"No, you weren't." I swallow. Shit, is this what the few friends I have think of me? Why the hell do I have so much trouble hanging onto the people who mean something to me? Like him? Why did everything have to go so pear-shaped with him? It could have been different, couldn't it? He could have meant everything he'd said to me. He could have actually wanted me. He could have married me for real and I could have gotten pregnant in my first try and we could've lived happily after, raising little Solonik-Beauchamp babies... In a suburban neighborhood with white picket fences... Not. I can't stop myself from snorting. As if we'd ever be something so...bourgeois? Shit, now I was even thinking like him.

I turn to Ava, then reach for her hand and squeeze it. "I am sorry for being such a bitch," I swallow, "I really didn't mean to come across so... so..."

"Preoccupied?" she helpfully offers.

"You really are too kind to be real." I half laugh.

"Yeah," her forehead creases, "I get told that a lot. My friends think I am too trusting. I prefer to think I am an optimist."

"I'd settle for being a realist," I mutter.

"You do realize realists are secretly much more romantic than the rest of us?"

I scowl and she bursts out laughing. "That was a joke, but honestly, I believe there's a grain of truth in it."

Hmph. "God, I hope not. I am as far from a romantic as you can get."

"That's what they all say." She flashes me a huge smile. "It's only until you meet the one, you know, and when you do, all these preconceived notions will fall by the wayside."

"So, have you met the one?"

"Not yet, but I am confident he's not far off now either." Her grin widens, if that is at all possible. Her eyes sparkle.

Wow, she actually does believe that. If only I had half the hopefulness she has. When had I turned into such a cynical woman that I can't believe in a happily-ever-after for myself?

On impulse, I rise to my feet and hug her. "I hope we'll get to know each other better."

She hugs me back. "I am sure we will."

I step back and she slides off her stool, then turns to Isla. "Sienna mentioned that you have a big wedding coming up, that you might need some help with the planning?"

Isla's jaw hardens. "I do." She doesn't elaborate, which is strange. Isla's the kind who loves her job so much, she only needs an excuse to run her mouth off about it.

"Whose wedding is it?" I peer into her features. "Anyone I know?"

"Yeah," she blows out a breath, "Liam's."

"Liam?" I frown, "Weston's older brother? But I thought..."

She glowers at me. "What? What did you think?"

"That you and he..."

Her glare deepens. "That he and I...?" she prompts, and I cough.

"Nope. Nothing. Forget I said anything."

"Honestly, all of you'll going on about Liam and me... How many times do I have to say, there's nothing there?"

Right. "So why do you look so pissed off?"

"Probably because I'm not pissed enough."

She turns around to the bartender. "I'll have what they're having," she snaps, "and make sure you top up their glasses too."

I exchange glances with Ava, who's watching Isla with a look of concern. "You okay, Iz?"

"Of course, I am." She flashes us a too-bright smile that's patently false.

"Have you spoken to Liam?" I prod. "Maybe if you told him how you felt about him—?"

"Feel?" She scoffs, "I have no feelings for him. Hell, I barely know the man."

I frown. "But I thought—"

"That I had a crush on him or something?" She tosses her hair over her shoulder. "I have spoken to the man... Twice... Maybe."

"One look is all it takes," Ava interjects. "When you know, you know."

Isla shoots her a sideways glance. "What I know is that he's all wrong for me. I've sworn off the Seven..."

"He's not one of the Seven," I remind her.

"And their friends," she snaps.

"But not us, I hope?"

"The girls don't count. If it weren't for their women, the Seven would have burned in hell by now."

"True that." I push the shot glass of vodka over to her. "It's the women who've saved the Seven from themselves."

"Maybe that's why Arpad wants to pursue you," Isla runs her fingers around the rim of the shot glass, "because he knows you are his last hope at redemption."

"Or maybe he simply wants to show how easy it is to control me?" I snarl.

"I don't mind being controlled."

Both Isla and I turn to Ava.

"Woman, do you even know what you are saying?" Isla huffs.

"I may be younger than you all, but trust me when I say that the control goes both ways. The person who thinks he or she is in control isn't really, and the one being controlled? Let's just say, that's the person who has the power."

I blink. "Wow, so not only are you perfect, you're also wise?"

She laughs. "I know, I was born with an old soul. That's what my sister says too."

"I guess I wouldn't mind ceding control to a man," Isla retorts.

"What the—?" I stare at her. "Really? You had to say that now?"

"On one condition..." She raises her finger. "If he wanted to wield power over me, he'd better damn well make it worth my time."

Ava reaches for her shot glass. "Money isn't everything. You realize that, right?"

Both Isla and I stare at her again.

"What?" She scowls. "Did I say something wrong?"

"How many eighteen—?"

"Nineteen-year-olds," she corrects me.

"Nineteen-year-olds today, would say that, you think?"

"Why, don't you feel the same?" She takes in my features. "Go on, you can tell me."

I rub my temple, feeling a headache coming on. Or maybe I just haven't had enough alcohol. I reach for my shot glass, when she says, "Surely, you don't believe money is the be-all and end-all of everything?"

If she only knew my background and my family's view on that.

"Of course, not," I mutter. "Money isn't everything, but it's definitely important."

"Not as important as love," Ava insists.

"Love," I snort, "that stupid thing that doesn't really exist, and even if it did, I don't believe in it."

"Of course, you do." She nods her head. "You only need to adjust your expectations."

"Expectations?" I blink rapidly. "Whatever do you mean by that?"

"That maybe, falling in love means you need to give first, before you get back."

The headache behind my eyes intensifies. "But what if the other person did something that hurt you so much, you can't forgive him?"

"Can't forgive him, or don't want to forgive him?"

I hunch my shoulders. "I'm still trying to figure that out."

Ava's gaze softens. "Maybe you need to give this time before arriving at any conclusions?"

"I'm with young Ava here." Isla nods. "It seems whatever Arpad did was because it was the only way he knew how to express what he was feeling."

I snort, "You mean being a neanderthal is all that any of the Seven know?"

"You've worked with them; you should know," Isla replies. "Either way, just take SOME time to reflect on how you actually feel about him."

"Right." I do know what I feel about him. Problem is, I don't like it very much. But there's no need to reveal that here, is there?

"Meanwhile," Isla adds, "focus on moving forward, you know? Concentrate on your job, your life—"

"Shit, my job." I blow out a breath. "The Seven are my biggest clients at the moment. If they decide to take their business elsewhere—"

"They won't." Isla frowns. "Will they?"

"I hope not." I square my shoulders. "Either way, I'm going to use this opportunity to expand, look for new clients. Something I should have done a long time ago." I've become complacent, happy with the easy business the Seven send my way. No more. I am going to take things into my own hands, forge my own way out of this mess.

I raise my shot glass. Ava and Isla clink their glasses with mine. I toss the drink back and it explodes in my stomach. A fire sizzles down my spine, and I slap my glass upside down on the bar counter.

"Right then," I laugh, "who's ready to party?"

CHAPTER 44

Arpad

I watch from the edge of the dancefloor as she sways her hips to the music. I'd tracked her to the bar earlier. Yeah, yeah, I'd said I'd leave her alone. Doesn't mean I can't look out for her, right? From a safe distance. That is, until the evening had worn on, and she still hadn't come out. So I had taken things into my own hands and walked in to find her dancing.

The vibrations pulse out across the bar, the beat picks up, and she raises her arms in the air. She closes her eyes, throws her head back as she grinds her hips, once, twice, thrice.

She sinks down until she's almost squatting, then bumps her way up to standing again.

Eyes still closed, she places her palms flat across her stomach, rotates her hips again, moves her shoulders in a sinuous shimmy. The blood rushes to my groin. My pulse begins to thud.

A man steps in front of her—tall, broad shouldered, asshole has a mohawk which, no doubt, he thinks is cool. He mirrors her moves, moving to the right, then the left. Drops down with her, then rises to his feet. He leans in, touches her shoulder and I see her jerk visibly.

What the hell?

He moves with her and she smiles up at him. Eyes gleaming, she increases the pace of her rhythm, swivels her hips, thrusts out her breasts, and his gaze lowers to her chest. He plants his hands on her waist and my anger pumps through my veins. How dare he touch her? How dare he dance with her? She's mine. Only mine.

I shoulder my way through the crowd on the floor. A couple gets in the way and I growl at them. The man and woman glance at me. Their gazes widen and they skitter away. Good. I plough forward and a man steps in my path, jumping up and down in tempo with the rhythm of whatever godawful song they are playing over the sound system. I glare at him. He pales and leaps aside. Wanker of the first order. I stomp across the remaining distance, reach the bastard who's dancing with my woman.

I plant myself in front of them, fold my arms across my chest. They keep moving, don't even glance at me. What the bloody hell? I tap his shoulder, and he swivels his head to stare at me. "Move," I jerk my chin.

He frowns, then mouths, "Fuck off."

I bare my teeth, raise my fist and plant it in his grinning countenance. He staggers back, then rights himself and comes at me. I move aside and he charges past me. I kick his legs out from under him and he hits the floor face down. The entire floor seems to shake with the impact. The music pumps up another notch, the laser lights swiveling across our faces. The asshole on the ground stirs, and I move toward him, when a hand grabs at me and tugs. I turn and her green gaze collides with mine. "Don't," she mouths, shaking her head frantically, "he's not worth it."

"He touched you," I yell back at her. The music drowns out my voice but she must lip read me, for her grasp on me tightens.

"Don't." Her chest rises and falls; her eyes widen with apprehension. "Please don't, Ari."

"How dare he get close to you?" I growl. "I am going to kill him." I turn my attention back to the tosser on the floor.

She steps in between us, throws her arms around my waist. She tips up her chin, holds my gaze, "Dance with me."

I stare past her at the bastard on the floor. He stirs, then lurches up to his feet. I strain forward and she begins to move against me, thrusts her pelvis into mine, then rubs her gorgeous tits into my chest. The little tease. I watch her as she rotates her hips, grinding her core against the growing bulge in my jeans. She licks her lips, and fuck, if I don't come right then.

A movement catches my attention. I look up to find the asshole staggering away.

She cups my cheek, forcing me to look away and at her. She goes up to tip-toes, lifts her head, and my gaze drops to the gleaming flesh of her lips.

My throat closes.

She continues her exaggerated hip movements, and I take in the swell of her breasts, the slim waist that flares out to the curve of her arse that she wiggles as she undulates her body against mine.

My cock thickens, my balls harden, and damn, if I don't want her right now.

I lower my head, try to kiss her, but she evades me. She steps away, pivots so her back is to me, then continues her bump and grind routine. She juts out her butt, wiggles it, all the while moving, shaking that gorgeous body of hers in a way that's sure to have every man and woman here salivating after her. I glance around to find that, sure enough, we have an audience. People closest to us have stopped dancing, formed a circle as she gyrates, trails her fingers about her neck, sweeps it over her breasts, down to the flat of her stomach as she circles her hips again. She turns to throw me a coquettish glance, her eyes gleaming.

I quirk my finger at her; she shakes her head.

I frown and she chuckles. She turns to face me again, digs her fingers into her hair and piles it above her head in a move that's meant to seduce. She moves in again, presses herself to my front, from breast to pelvis to thigh, and that's when something inside of me snaps. I am going to have her all to myself. End of story. I bend my knees, grab her around the back of her thighs and throw her over my shoulder.

Instantly, she twists in my grasp, almost pulling free. Sneaky. But nothing less than I expected. After all, she is a security consultant. Surely, she's trained in martial arts. But hell, if I am not a match for her. I tighten my hold around her and she only wriggles harder.

She pushes her breasts into my back, and I am sure she must be hurling insults at me. Good thing I can't hear her above the music, eh? She buries her fists in the small of my back, and I feel it all the way to the tip of my cock. Yep, definitely needs to be taught a lesson. I bring my palm down on her butt and she stills. Then begins to squirm and writhe against me, and that only makes me harder. Damn it. I walk off the dance floor, out of the room, and down the corridor.

Reaching the door at the far end, I twist it open. A snogging couple breaks apart. "Out," I growl. They break apart, careen out. I step in, slam the door shut and the noise cuts out.

"Let me the fuck go, you swine," her scream almost takes my ear off.

"Your wish is my command."

I pull my arms away and she topples to the floor.

CHAPTER 45

Karina

"What in the ever lovin' hell?" My back connects with the floor of the restroom. The godawful bathroom of the bloody bar, where god knows how many people have been today? "Argh!" I shake the hair out of my eyes, then spring up to my feet, rubbing my ass. "Why did you drop me like that?" I yell.

"How dare you dance with another man?" he growls back.

"It's a free country, you ass. Besides, I thought I told you to stay away from me."

His jaw firms. "I tried," he rotates his shoulders, "but it's your fault that I can't keep away."

"My fault?" I gape. "What the hell do you mean?"

"You were all over that man—"

"I wasn't."

"You were shoving your tits at him—"

"It's called dancing, you bastard."

"You gyrated your hips and all but plastered yourself to him—"

"There was space between us the whole time we danced, you prick."

"Language," he growls, "And what the hell are you wearing?" He looks me up and down.

"What does it look like?" I tug on the hem of my dress, which I confess, is shorter than what I would normally wear, but hell, if it doesn't look good. "It's a designer dress, I'll have you know. The latest of the season, and yet, a classic." I pull back my shoulders, thrust out my hip and prop my hand on it. "What the hell are you doing here, anyway?" I scowl.

"What are you doing here?" he demands.

My jaw drops, "I am a single woman, living my life, out on the town—"

His gaze narrows.

"—ready to take the first eligible man I meet home for a shag."

Color smears his cheeks and his nostrils flare. Ooh, this is more fun than I would have anticipated.

"I was doing so well too, until some tosser—" I tip my chin up, "showed up."

His jaw tics. "Don't talk to me like that."

I blink, then burst out laughing. "You're asking me to be polite? After everything you did?"

"What did I do? Except try to give you what you wanted?"

"And yet, you failed."

The color leaches from his face, and for a second, a tiny second, I am almost sorry that I've hurt him. Sure, I'd found I wasn't pregnant but had he...also been disappointed by the outcome?

Nah, not possible. This man? He's too selfish. He only thinks of himself, after all.

He balls his fists at his side, "I can't tell you how sorry I am that you aren't pregnant."

"Not as much as me." I drag the back of my hand across my face. The light from the overhead bulb seems to burn into my brain. Shit, how much have I had to drink? What am I even doing here, with him? "Let me go, Arpad." I wrap my arms about myself. "Just let me out of here."

"No." He widens his stance, seems to draw himself to his full height. "You're not leaving until you listen to me."

"I don't care about what you have to say."

"Just a minute of your time, Sparks."

"What? No commanding me to stay?" I snarl. "No tying me up so I can't leave?"

He drags his fingers through his hair. "Will you just listen to what I have to say?" He lowers his voice to a hush, "Please." And there's that word again. Damn it, alphahole Arpad f'ing Beauchamp, trying to be polite and failing spectacularly. But he's trying, isn't he? Gah. Tell him to go to hell. Do it. I draw in a breath. Instead, I find myself complying. "Fine," I mutter, "you have sixty seconds."

He nods, then pinches the bridge of his nose, "I'm sorry that you didn't get pregnant, but I won't apologize for manipulating your life."

I open and shut my mouth, "You won't?"

He lowers his hands to his sides then thrusts his chest out. "I saw you and I wanted you. I've learned that life is short, and when you see something that resonates with you, you have to go after it, so that's why I did."

I shake my head, try to speak, fail. I simply stare at him.

"Look, Sparks," he steps forward and takes my hand in his, "I know how much you hate me now, and I can only imagine how disappointed you are that you didn't get pregnant. I can't tell you how much I wanted to give you a child."

I glance down at where his large palm engulfs mine.

"If only things had worked out otherwise, but they didn't, and I am sorry. But that was just one time, right?" He rubs his thumb across my wrist and my pulse skitters.

"We can try again." His voice takes on a cajoling tone.

I tip up my chin. "We can, huh?"

He nods, his features taking on an earnest expression. "Let me give you what you want. Let me take you away from the city to a place where there is no stress, where you don't need to worry about anything, but can focus on yourself. After all, if you are less tense, it helps to conceive right?"

"You've been reading up?"

He smiles and his features light up. "I confess that I may have researched it." He lowers his head and kisses the back of my palm. "Let's do it right this time. Let me marry you, make you my wife, and then we can try for a child."

"Is that your command?" I stare at him.

He rakes his gaze across my face. "And if it is?"

"Well then..." I flutter my eyelashes at him, "it's a 'no' from me."

"What?" His gaze widens. "You don't mean it."

"Better believe it." I flick my hair across my shoulders. "I thought you were going to apologize—"

"I already did, didn't I?" He scowls.

"Did you?" I look him up and down. "Clearly, you and I are not talking about the same thing if I have to remind you about what you have to apologize to me for."

I turn to leave and he grabs my wrist, "Don't leave." He growls, "Don't you dare turn away from me, Sparks."

"Oh, I am going to do more than that." I smile grimly. "Let go of me, Arpad."

"No."

"See, this is your problem." I shake my head. "On the one hand, you want to convince me to marry you. On the other, you're still trying to control me into doing what you think is right for me, and that's only going to push me away. You know that, right?"

He glares at me and his grip tightens. His jaw tics and his muscles coil. Then he squares his shoulders, and releases me. "See," he growls, "I am doing what you want, aren't I?"

"It's a start." I tuck my elbows into my sides. "Now, you can stay the hell away from me."

"Don't ask me to do that." He bunches his fingers into fists. "Anything but that."

"That," I tilt my head, "is the price."

"For what?"

"For a chance at convincing me that you're the man for me."

"I am the only one for you. You know that already."

"Do I though?" I scan his features. "All I see is a man who wants to control me into doing what he wants."

"Because it's right for you."

"Let me be the judge of that." I draw myself up to my full height. "Promise me, you won't interfere in my life."

His chest rises and falls. Anger rolls off of him in a dense cloud and his shoulders seem to grow even bigger. He takes a step forward and the strength of his dominance crashes into my chest. I throw up my hand. "Promise me," I force out the words through a throat gone dry. "Do it Arpad, if you want a chance at us being together."

"Will you come back to me if I do?"

"I don't know."

"What?" He blinks. "You expect me to let you go, not knowing if you will return to me?"

"That's the whole point. It's called taking a risk." I twist my lips. "Do you have the guts to take this chance on us? Do you, Arpad?"

"And if I refuse?"

"Then you've lost me anyway."

He squeezes the bridge of his nose, then mutters, "Fine."

"What?" I stare. "What did you say?"

He lowers his hand to his side, stares at me, "I give you your freedom," he snaps, "for now."

"And you promise that you won't come after me."

"I," his jaw tics, the skin around his mouth tightens, then he nods, "I promise."

"No matter what you see, you won't interfere in my life?"

His lips firm and he looks like he's about to refuse, then he nods again. "I won't interfere, no matter what."

"Promise." I hold out my hand, palm face up.

"I promise." He stares down at my palm. "If I touch you, I'll never let you go."

His shoulder muscles bunch, his chest planes ripple, and anger rolls off of him in waves. A drop of sweat slides down his throat, drawing attention to his sculpted torso. Jesus, why does he have to be so hot?

I hesitate, and he jerks his chin to the door. "Leave," he growls.

I blink at him.

"Now," he snaps. "Get out while you can, Sparks."

CHAPTER 46

Arpad

"You agreed to let her go?" Edward frowns at me from across my cabin on the Heartbeat.

"I told her to leave while she still could." I raise the bottle of vodka to my lips and chug it down. The alcohol slides down cold, only to hit my stomach, and heat explodes up my spine. Even the bloomin' alcohol from her country of origin is full of contradictions. Just like her. Hot and cold. Giggling one second, all flashing eyes and heaving breasts the next. And why the hell am I still thinking about her?

Perhaps it's because I'm still on the yacht? I couldn't bring myself to leave here though. After all, I'd first made love to her here. When I am here, I feel closer to her; yet the ghosts of our coupling make me miss her more intensely. The pain is a dull throbbing ache somewhere behind my rib cage. Good, I deserve it. A reminder of how I'd screwed up. Edward had tried calling me, and when I hadn't answered he'd tracked me down here.

"Vodka?" He eyes the drink in my hand, "Since when did you start drinking vodka?"

I glare at him and he chuckles. "Is it because it's her favorite drink?" he asks.

"Who's favorite drink?" I grumble, then drink more of the liquor.

"Are we going to pretend that you're not heartbroken because of how you acted toward her?"

"No," I polish off the remaining alcohol, then slam the bottle down on the bar counter, "we are going to pretend that you never said that." I point a finger at him, then blink when his image splits into two.

Shit, maybe I drank too much. On the other hand, I'm still standing, so perhaps it's not nearly enough.

I pull out the pack of cigarettes from my pocket, toss one between my lips. I light the cigarette. The flames lick my fingertips and I hiss, before dropping the lighter on the counter.

I take a healthy drag, then cough. What the hell? Have I become so pussy-whipped that I've forgotten how to smoke?

My head spins. I pull the cigarette out from between my lips, stare at it.

"Thought you were trying to quit?"

"Trying." I growl. "The operative word is trying."

Like I'm trying to quit her. And succeeding at neither. No, strike that. The withdrawal pangs for nicotine cannot compare to the withdrawal symptoms I am facing at the thought of moving on from her. Shit, and I clearly have lost all my balls. I stub out the cigarette in the ash tray, then reach across the counter, and grab a fresh bottle from the inside shelf.

I straighten and the blood rushes from my head. The world tilts, I grab at the counter, and steady myself. Shit, guess I am more drunk than I thought?

I place the bottle on the bar, slowly, slowly, then try to unscrew the cap. My fingers slip and the bottle tips over. It hits the ground, then rolls toward Edward, who stops it with his foot.

He picks it up, then holds it behind his back.

"Aww, come on," I huff, "don't be such a spoilsport."

He walks over to the couch, then points to the one on the other side of the coffee table, "Take a seat."

I scowl, "Not particularly in the mood to confess anything, Father."

He sighs, "Sit down, will ya?" He stares at me with his patient all-knowing eyes.

"Don't you ever lose your shit?"

He arches an eyebrow. "Typical defensive mechanism," he drawls. "When you don't like what you see, you point the mirror at the other person."

"Is that an euphemism?"

"A metaphor. It's my way of saying you need to face the problem at hand, instead of running from it."

"And haven't you ever run from your issues? Have you always been so perfect that you've faced your fears head on?"

"If you only knew what goes on in the recesses of my mind." He purses his lips.

"Ooh, do tell." I reach over, grab another bottle of vodka, then amble over to drop into the seat he'd pointed to earlier.

I tilt the bottle to my lips, take a healthy swig. The liquid goes down smoothly. It hits my stomach and a low heat creeps up my spine. At least, this shit is good. Worth the odd million I'd paid for it.

Edward raises his own bottle and unscrews the cap.

I stare. "You're joining me, Father?"

He chuckles. "I do drink, you know. I simply try to do so in moderation."

"Booorinnng," I mutter, then drink some more. "So, are you going to tell me why you've made me sit here? For that matter," I lean forward, "why the hell did you come here anyway?"

"I'm not here alone, actually." He tilts his head, as if listening intently.

"No shit, I am here with you," I guffaw.

He holds his palm behind his ear.

"The hell you up to, Father?" I scowl.

"Wait for it; wait for it." His lips turn up in a smirk. And Edward never smirks. Which means this must be bad. Like really b-a-d.

I hear the sound of footsteps hitting the deck of the yacht, which rocks under the combined weight of whatever... Or whoever is headed for us.

"Oh, bollocks," I purse my lips, "don't tell me the rest of the Seven are—"

The door to the cabin is flung open and Saint marches in.

"Oh, for fuck's sake." I raise the bottle, chug down more of the drink.

It doesn't help dispel the nightmarish scenario that's forming in front of my eyes.

Sinner saunters in, followed by Damian, and Weston. "Bugger." I slouch down deeper into the sofa. The guys walk to the bar. Damian circles the counter, then pulls out a bottle of whiskey. "So, this is where you've been hiding the good stuff?" He holds up the MacAllan's 72-year-old whiskey... Which I admit, is something I'd bought on a whim.

Weston turns to me, "You mean you've been storm chasing with this expensive shit on board?"

"It's bolted in when I'm at sea, you twat." I swig back more of the vodka, then wipe the back of my palm across my mouth.

"He means he's not drinking whiskey anymore," Edward pipes up.

"What do you mean?" Saint looks between us. "The bastard's whiskey collection rival's only Sinner's." He glances around at the others, "No offense to the rest of you tossers."

"None taken." Damian chuckles, Weston laughs, and Edward watches the proceedings with his steady gaze. Damn it, doesn't the man ever take a day off from being a serious priest to simply, being...?

"I should be the one offended," Sinner drawls, "considering Beauchamp, here, wouldn't know taste if it bit him in the arse. Except when it comes to his choice of woman, of course."

"Don't talk about her, you bastard," I mutter.

Sinner arches an eyebrow. "This is not looking good."

"Nope, it isn't," Damian agrees.

Weston holds out his hand and Saint slaps a note on his outstretched palm.

"You guys bet on me?" I scowl at them, wondering why I don't feel angrier toward them. I should be livid, should toss them out of the only space where I feel at home, but hell, when you hang out with boys who've turned to men in front of your eyes, and who sometimes you hate almost as much as you love them like brothers... Then it's a little difficult to take offense at their shenanigans.

Edward jerks his chin toward me, "The man's taken to vodka like a mermaid to dry land."

"Uh?" Weston frowns at Edward, "Aren't mermaids supposed to find dry land difficult to navigate?"

He lowers his chin, "Keep up, Doc."

Weston rubs his chin. "So you mean he hasn't really taken to vodka?"

Edward winds his finger in the air.

"So, you mean he actually hates vodka but he's drinking it because..." Saint's voice trails off. "I see." He looks me up and down, then glowers, "Jesus, Arpad, couldn't you have held out just a little longer?" He pulls out his credit card and hands it over to Weston, who pockets it.

"The way Mr. No-strings-attached is going, it's best I keep it, don't you think?" He smirks.

"Whatever." Saint rocks back on his heels. "If the fucker's spirits sink any lower, he'll be drowning without water."

"Har, har." I lift the bottle of vodka and toast them, "Aren't all of you the soul of wit today?"

"Someone has to be, considering you've lost your mojo." Weston grabs his glass, then prowls over and drops into the seat on my right. Damian follows, drink in hand, and sits down on my left.

Saint and Sinner position themselves on either side of the sofa and Edward completes the hexagon from where he's seated opposite me.

I recognize it for what it is—an intervention. Hell, I was there for the ones we'd staged when each of the other men had met their match in their woman. Except Edward, that is, and soon he is going to be left alone... Hold on, what am I thinking? I don't have my woman yet. Far from it. In fact, the way things are headed, I am likely to remain a bachelor for a long time. Which is good. Which is what I had wanted not that long ago. So, what changed in the little time I've known her? How has she managed to turn my world upside down in such a short time?

"I proposed to her," I reply. "She agreed, at first, until she found out about my arrangement with the Bratva."

Silence descends on the room, then Saint explodes.

"The Bratva?"

Damian scowls. "Let me get this right. You decided to align with the Russian mafia. Why the hell would you do that?"

"The Bratva? You're taking the piss, right brother?" Weston drawls.

When I don't reply, the rest stare at me.

"Now, why would you do that?" Saint rubs the back of his neck, "It's not for the money, so I can only assume this has something to do with the bastards who kidnapped us?"

"When were you going to tell us?" Sinner's voice is hard.

I set the bottle on the floor, then rise to my feet. Lose my balance, right myself, then fold my arms across my chest. "It's not how it seems." Shit, why does this have to be so hard? These guys have had my back for so long. Surely, they'll understand why I had to do it, right?

"Hold on, chaps, let's give him a chance to explain." Edward turns to me. "I assume you have an explanation?" Edward's gaze narrows, "You do, don't you?"

I turn to face them, "You know how when we were kidnapped, our captors made me and Damian fight?"

The men nod.

"Well, it didn't stop there."

"It didn't? Edward's face pales. "What..." he swallows, "what else did they have you do?"

I take in his pinched features, his tense body. Shit, what else had they done to him? I frown at him, open my mouth to ask, when he shakes his head. Fine, so he doesn't want to talk about it, then? That's okay. There's a time and place for each of us to confess the extent to which the incident had ripped through our minds and ravaged our emotions. Perhaps if I come out with mine, it will help Edward open up about his experiences too? It's another reason to finally come clean to them.

"They," I square my shoulders, "they... made me fight in underground fighting clubs."

"Wait," Damian scowls, "the kidnappers pitted us against each other. They made us fight until one or both of us lost consciousness. It became a game for the two of us, how to keep hitting each other, without hurting the other too much? Remember? And when the kidnappers caught on, I took the blame for it." Damian curls his fingers into fists. "They blindfolded me, took me to an underground fighting ring, where they pitted me against men stronger than me. I fought them, and survived." He rubs the back of his neck. "Hell, it put me off fighting in any form after that... It's also why I turned to music." He shakes his head. "But I put myself forward so you wouldn't have to do it."

"Only," I draw in a breath, "they didn't spare me either."

"Motherfuckers." Damian's jaw tics.

"I don't understand." Saint scowls. "You were the smallest among us."

"Until I outgrew you lot," I snap.

"But at that time, you were smaller than most boys your age," Sinner reminds me. "Why the hell did they make you fight?"

"Because it made for bloodthirsty sport? Because they were perverted mofos?" I roll my shoulders. "Because they were sure that, unlike Damian, I would fail?"

"Only, you didn't," Edward says slowly.

I curl my fingers into fists.

"I still don't understand." Damian purses his lips. "You were a preteen. Hell, you couldn't hold your own against me, in our mock fights—"

"Until I had to fight for my life."

"So..." Edward clears his throat, "even after Damian offered to fight in your place, they made you face opponents in the underground fighting cages and you never told us?"

I hunch my shoulders. "Have you told us everything they did to you?"

Edward pales.

"That's what I thought." I curl my lips.

"But this isn't about me." He squares his shoulders. "It doesn't change that you took on grown men when you were not even thirteen and managed to defeat them with your bare hands." He leans back in his seat and some of the color filters back into his cheeks.

I straighten my back. "Who said I fought with bare hands?"

"You didn't?" Weston frowns.

"I was given a piece of rope to defend myself, considering I was much younger than my opponents." I glance around the room, "It was their way of giving me a slight advantage... Or so they said."

"The bastards," Sinner growls.

There's silence, then Edward exhales, "So you used the rope to defeat them?" All emotion is schooled from his face. That's the thing with him... Except for the few moments when he lets the mask slip, you can never tell what is going on in that razor sharp mind of his. And the Father has an astute mind... I remember enough of him as a boy to recollect how highly perceptive he'd been. He has a head for numbers and had displayed an early sense of business acumen, which is why all of us had been shocked by his decision to join the seminary. Guess the Lord really does work in mysterious ways... Or he'd simply ordained that the incident turn our lives upside down so we'd each have to reinvent ourselves. Me turning to the Bratva and him becoming a man of God.

"Yes." I take in Edward's stoic features then turn my attention to each of the others in the room. "Turns out, I'm good with my hands." I raise my palms and stare at them. "I didn't have a choice; I had to figure out how to use the single piece of rope to defend myself."

"And you did?"

"Yeah," I crack my neck. "I quickly learned how to tie it around the neck of my opponent and threaten to choke him, until he let me go."

"So, your reputation preceded you?" Damian exhales. "Didn't realize when we nicknamed you Killer, we were only confirming the role you'd already played in the ring."

"Except I didn't kill anyone."

"You didn't?" Edward frowns.

"Nope." I shake my head. "If I spared their lives, they owed me."

"And that's how you built your circle of influence in the underground?"

Saint interjects.

I nod, "It's also how I struck up a friendship with Nikolai, the scion of the Bratva."

"Nikolai?" Sinner scowls. "The asshole who first told us that the Mafia were behind our kidnapping?"

"You kept in touch with him?" Edward's jaw hardens.

I draw in a breath, "If you recall, in exchange for the lead, Niko had wanted Damian to face his guy in an underground fight club." I refer back to how the Seven of us had met Nikolai.

"Only, Baron took Damian's place, and lost the fight," Saint says slowly.

"Then you stepped in and defeated the man the Bratva fielded that day," Sinclair recalls.

Saint tilts his head, "That was what, ten years ago?"

"Almost thirteen." I rub the back of my neck. "That day, Niko and I struck up a friendship. We've kept in touch since."

"And you didn't think to tell any of us?" Sinner growls.

I widen my stance. "It didn't seem like a big deal. We simply hung out, kept in touch. Over a period of time, I grew to trust the man. Enough that when he called me with a proposition, I agreed."

"A proposition?"

"What the hell did you agree to?"

"Niko's sister—" I blow out a breath, "She had taken over the family business, the legitimate arm of it. Tensions were escalating between the Bratva and their rival gang. They wanted me to marry her and get her out of LA to keep her safe."

"Hold on." Sinner straightens, "LA? Niko's sister? You aren't talking about Karina, are you?"

I nod, "I agreed to lure her to London, but I stopped short of committing to marrying her. I told them I'd give it some thought. Getting her out of LA was the priority."

"So you made sure that we offered her the gig to take on the security for us Seven?" Edward interjects.

Of course, the Father is the first to put it all together. The man is so intuitive sometimes it's scary.

"Hang on. Something doesn't make sense. You were keeping an eye on her," Saint drums his fingers on his chest, "while she was the one we charged with gathering intelligence on the men who kidnapped us?"

"With her background with the Bratva, she was the right person to suss out any possible gangsters wherever they were."

"This entire picture is one hell of a mess." Edward places the tips of his fingers together.

"You're telling me?" I glance around at their faces. "So, what do I do now?"

They stare back at me. My five best friends, the most feared businessmen in the country, meet my gaze with varying expressions of disbelief.

"If I didn't see it myself, I'd have thought you guys were in shock." I snicker.

"I'm not shocked," Edward finally says. "You guys shocked?"

"Nope."

"Nah."

"No way."

"It's what we expected of you," Damian draws.

"You did?"

"Sure," Saint scratches his jaw, "fuck up your life royally, more than any of us have done in the past? Of course, it had to be you, Arpad."

I scowl, "Come on, guys, that's not fair."

"You should've thought about that before you manipulated her into your life," Sinner draws.

I stare at him, "Hello, pot; meet kettle?" I glower at him.

"Hey, sure. I may have steered things so they went my way—"

"Steered, my arse." I snort. "You were gunning for revenge, and decided to marry Summer so you could keep an eye on her."

"The ends justify the means." Sinner shrugs, "I may have gone about it unconventionally, but I was already in love with her."

"And I'm not?" I glare at him, "Now, I want to marry that obstinate woman but she won't hear of it. She told me to stay away from her."

"So, of course, you're keeping an eye on her?" Edward narrows that all-seeing gaze on me.

"Umm. Yes?" I offer.

"You're going to continue to stalk her and get all up in her business, aren't you?" he asks.

I frown. "Is that a trick question, because you know I can't keep away."

He leans forward in his chair. "She asked you to give her space, I assume?"

I nod.

"Yet, you are flagrantly contradicting her request?"

I drag my fingers through my hair. "She's upset, not thinking clearly. I understand—"

"Do you?" Edward glares at me. I blink. Shit, today is a first. The usually placid Father has unbent enough to reveal how displeased he is with me? Well, let's just say, that has never happened before. Hell, the last time we'd seen Edward this worked up was when... We'd intervened on Damian's behalf. I frown. Is the fact that the rest of the Seven are finding their partners getting to him? Nah, not possible. Edward had chosen his path, and he's the kind of guy who'll stay committed to the promises he's made, no matter the price he has to pay.

"Look," I hold up my hands, "given the fact that we're no closer to finding who instigated our kidnapping, and considering her ties with the Bratva, no way, can I go without checking in on her."

Edward rises to his feet. "Given you are in love with her and you want her to come around to marrying you, no way, can you afford to piss her off further."

"Fuck," I swear aloud.

He nods. "My sentiments exactly."

"So, you expect me to simply... What? Stay away from her?"

He nods again.

"And what if she gets into some trouble, and needs saving?"

"Has she needed saving so far?"

"We—ll." I scratch my chin. She needed my sperm. No, not really. She'd had a sperm donor all lined up, until I'd messed up her plans, and then when I told her to pretend to be married to me, so I could take her to see Grandmama, she'd traded that for my impregnating her. And then, every step of the way, she'd matched me. Even when I'd pulled the Bratva surprise on her—asshole that I am—she hadn't flinched. She'd simply broken our arrangement and stormed out of there... Something no one else had done before.

"She's bloody capable of taking care of herself," I finally admit.

Edward nods.

"And feisty." I can't stop the smile that curves my lips.

Saint smirks. "Keep going."

"And gorgeous and full of sass, and boy, when we do yoga together—"

"Hold on," Sinclair chokes, "she's got you to do fuckin' yoga with her?"
I redden. "Uh, it was kind of foreplay," I rush to explain, "but I gotta tell you, those positions, they look easy, but they are not."

"No?" Weston chuckles.

"Nope." I shake my head. Shit, if I am not digging myself in deeper. "I have a whole lotta respect for all those yoga bunnies now."

Damian spits out his whiskey, "Did he just say yoga bunny?"

"He said yoga bunnies." Weston holds out his hand and Saint pulls out another credit card from his wallet and hands it over. "That will pay for our second honeymoon, thank you very much."

"Just try not to come back too soon." Saint grimaces.

"What? Did you guys just have another bet going?" I growl.

"The same one." Weston grins. "Anything else you want to tell us?"

"Nothing that you can profit from." I firm my lips.

"Aww don't be like that," Weston laughs, "you'll get used to it soon."

"What?" I frown.

"This sensation of being unmoored and helpless, and basically, feeling like she has you by the balls."

"You forget one thing," I dig my finger into my hair and tug, "she does have me by the balls."

"Good." Edward looks me up and down, "So whatever happens, you won't intrude?"

"Within limits."

"What does that mean?"

"I won't stalk her, or spy on her. Whatever I do, it will be in the open."

"Don't do anything that'll get you into trouble." Edward walks over and slaps me on my shoulder, "You get me, Arpad? Don't fucking screw this up?"

"Why the hell does it feel like you're warning me, Father?"

"We were put on this earth to learn our lessons, and this, I fear, is the biggest test for you yet."

"And you, Father?" I tilt my head, "What's the lesson you are supposed to be learning this life time?"

He flattens his lips, "Wouldn't you like to find out?"

CHAPTER 47

Karina

I walk out of the apartment which I had shifted into a few days ago.

I'd moved out of my earlier place, which maybe had been stupid, considering how much I had liked the place. After all, I'd have been able to clean up the place and spot any cameras or bugs he'd left behind... But somehow, when it comes to that asshole, I don't trust myself. Or rather, I don't put it past him to pull a fast one on me.

So, I had called around to the girls and they'd come to my rescue.

Julia had moved in with Damian, so her place, which was previously Amelie's until she'd married Weston, was free. But considering that apartment block is also owned by one of the Seven, I wouldn't put it past them to find a way to bug that place, as well. So, I had moved into a hotel for a few days, then found this new apartment, which had been a stroke of luck, considering the best apartments seem to be snapped up so quickly.

The place is a two-bedroom apartment on a quiet side street, in a residential area. All of which suits me fine. I had also taken ample precautions, to ensure the space wasn't bugged. Not that I expected it to be, but after what Arpad had done, I couldn't leave anything up to chance.

As is habit, I glance up and down the road as I approach my car. Nothing seems amiss. I scowl. Is that good? That everything looks fine? Has Arpad asshole actually decided to stick to his promise and leave me alone? Would he not even watch me from afar? Or have people follow me and report back to him? I glance about again. A couple walks up the street; a mother, with a stroller and another child, a girl trailing behind her, passes me. I glance down at the baby in the stroller and my stomach flip-flops.

I could have been pregnant with his child. Good thing the alphahole didn't manage to impregnate me then. Who'd have thought he'd turn out to be a lying, manipulative, bastard? Hell, he's a billionaire and a venture capitalist, so I hadn't expected him to be completely sinless... But honestly? Colluding with the Bratva... With my own family. The one thing I had tried to steer clear of, and he'd pulled me right back into the heart of everything I had tried to avoid. Stop it, stop thinking of him. He's gone from my life, and that has to be good, right?

I smile at the baby, who gurgles back and points at me. The kid warbles something and the mother laughs. "It's your beanie." She smiles at me. "She likes the color."

"Me too, mommy," exclaims the older child. "I like red too."

"Oh." I laugh as I touch my hat. It's not a color I'd normally wear, but after alphahole had pointed out how much he liked me in it—No, that is not the reason I am wearing it. Is it?

I turn away, whip off the beanie and stuff it in my pocket, then head for my car. My foot connects with an upside-down hat that skitters to the side. Change falls out of it. "Shit." I reach down, and gather up the coins and dump them back in the upturned hat.

"Got a cigarette?" A gruff voice asks.

I glance up into the bright, shining eyes of a homeless man. His hair flows down to his shoulders while an overgrown beard covers the lower half of his face. He's wearing a shirt that's ragged but clean; his pants are a color that must once have been black, but now edges toward grey.

"I don't smoke." I reply.

"Cigars then?" He asks.

I huff out a laugh, "Do I look like I carry cigars with me?"

"You look like a woman who knows what she wants."

"If only." I let out a sigh. "I thought I did, but I don't anymore, know what I mean?"

"Confusion." He nods. "It's a good sign."

"It is?" I scowl.

"It's the first step to getting clarity."

Hmm. "And you know that how?"

"It's the natural progression of things. First, the experimentation. Then the deconstruction. Followed by rationalization. Finally, the reconstruction."

I laugh. "I have no idea what you're talking about."

"Sure, you do." He chuckles. "You just don't want to admit it to yourself."

"Gee, thanks for the words of wisdom," I mutter, "but no, thanks."

I rummage around in my purse, pull out a few notes, then drop them into his hat. He doesn't even look at it. Weird.

"Now, a cigarette, pretty lady? I wouldn't say 'no' to that."

I glance up and down the street. There's no shop in sight. "Why don't you take the money and buy the cigarettes?"

He stares at me and I resist the urge to roll my eyes. "Fine, fine. I'll get some for you on my way back."

"I may not be here then."

"Oh?" I frown. "Where will you be?"

"Here today, gone tomorrow, unlike the love in your eyes, for him."

"Love?" I gape at him. "I'm sorry, but I don't know what you're talking about."

"That's what he said too." He gestures to the signboard he's holding up.

When we two parted

In silence and tears,

Truly that hour foretold

Sorrow to this.

"Cheerful," I grimace. "Personally, I prefer Pushkin."

"I loved you, and I probably still do..." he recites.

"And for a while the feeling may remain." I smile.

"But let my love no longer trouble you," he tilts his head.

"I do not wish to cause you any pain." I toss my hair over my shoulder. Shit, why does that feel...so evocative...so telling, about my current circumstances? Why the hell does the romance in the words remind me of the douchebag I'd decided to break up with? Now wait, I'd never been with him, so we hadn't broken up. Besides, we're just taking a break from each other. That's all, right? I mean, I'd told him to back off... Okay, I'd made him promise to stay away, and apparently, he is doing so.

Bastard. When has he ever listened to what I've asked of him? Never. That's the correct answer. And this time he had turned and left... Okay, technically, he'd told me to leave... Still, I hadn't thought he'd adhere to his promise, considering he hadn't told me outright that he would. And if he hadn't, I'd be mad at him for not leaving me alone. Classic case of, damned if you do, damned if you don't. And now, I am making excuses on his behalf. I really needed to have my head examined.

"Aren't you getting late?" homeless guy asks.

I glance down at him, then back to my car. "Yeah," I huff out a breath, "I am."

"Best be getting along then."

I glance at my watch and wince. I am running late. I head for the car, then turn to him, "Will you be here when I return?"

"Take your chances; live dangerously."

I blink. Why do his words remind me of how the rest of the Seven converse with each other? All the talk about pregnancy and babies, must be getting to me. It's the only reason I'd stopped long enough to have a stream of consciousness conversation with a complete stranger.

I close the distance to my car, get into it and pull away from the curb. I make it to Soho and manage to find a parking spot. Hallelujah. I can see why Londoners prefer the Tube, but hell, if I am going to commute packed into the underground. And no, I don't like being driven around either. Why should I, when I love driving my car? I park and head for the restaurant for my lunch date.

I walk through the buzzing tables toward the back. Niko glances at me from his seat at the corner table. Of course, he has the best seat in the house. Nothing but the best for my family, and I admit, I get my good taste in food, in clothes... In men...? Not that...but everything else, going for the top-of-the-line expensive shit. Yeah, that's my father and brothers for you.

I stomp over and sink into the chair opposite him.

A waitress immediately materializes. Of course, she does. Niko has that way with the women. Somehow, they sense the mean, grade-A asshole that he is; combined with the scent of money that wraps around him like a lover, not to mention, the dark edge of danger that clings to him like a second skin... Yeah, they pretty much come in their panties when they see him.

Niko nods at her, "Two lunch specials."

I frown. "Niko, what the hell? You know how much I hate it when you order for me."

He frowns, then nods toward the menu in front of me, "See anything you want, Malyshka?"

"Don't call me that." I frown.

He blows out an exaggerated breath. "What will you have your highness?"

"That's better." I turn up my chin to glance at the waitress who, of course, is staring at Niko like he'll disappear from in front of her any moment.

"The lunch special, please."

She doesn't reply.

"Miss?" I touch her arm and she jerks.

"Oh," she turns to me, "of course, and to drink?"

"Vodka. The best you have," Niko replies, and the woman's gaze widens. Her lips part, and I swear, I can see little hearts in her eyes and more circling around her head.

"Still water for me," I reply.

Niko arches his eyebrows. "Since when do you not want to drink alcohol?"

Since I decided I want to have a child, which clearly, isn't happening anytime soon. So why the hell don't I feel like having alcohol? Especially since I had fallen off the wagon so spectacularly that evening at the bar... That evening when he'd stalked over to me and confessed how much he'd wanted to give me a child... When he'd asked me to marry him so we could start afresh... And I had said no... Shit, why the hell am I thinking about that obnoxious prat again?

"Karina?" Niko frowns. "You okay?"

I cough. "Yes," I nod, "of course, I am. Just parched, that's all."

"Hmm." Niko rakes his gaze across my features.

"So," I fold my arms in my lap, "Why did you want to see me?"

"To apologize."

"Oh?" I glance at him with suspicion. My oldest brother does not apologize to anyone... ever.

"Indeed." He nods. "I am sorry that we used your company as a front for the Bratva's activities. It's not fair given the effort you've put into building it up. We'll withdraw our interests from it."

I blink, "You will?"

He nods.

"Why are you doing this?" I scowl at him.

"Because you're my sister." He half smiles, and his features soften, "my only sister."

I purse my lips. "Why is it that I don't trust where this is coming from?"

He chuckles, "I only have your best interests at heart."

"Not that I don't believe it. Only," I stab a finger at him, "You use that as an excuse... for interfering in my life. You and... and... Papa, both of you."

"You still pissed at us for asking Arpad to watch out for you?"

A-n-d, of course, he'd have to bring up the one person I am trying not to think about.

"What do you think?" I grouse.

"I think you need to look at it from our point of view."

"Which is?"

"You are a weak link for us."

I gape at him. "Weak link? Honestly, Niko, if that's why you called me here... To insult me—" I rise to my feet and he reaches forward and grabs my hand, "Come on, Kaykay, you know it's not like that."

Jeez, why does he have to use the name he called me when we were kids. It takes me right back to our childhood, when I had five brothers doting on me and could pretty much get my way on anything. After all, I was the youngest, and the only girl in the family.

I sink back into the chair and blow out a breath, "Then, what is it like? Explain it to me, Niko, because honestly, all I can see is my family ganging up with that...that bastard, to tie me down in a marriage, and—"

He releases my hand but continues to hold my gaze. "Did he hurt you?"

"Who?"

"Beauchamp, did he fucking do anything to you?"

Nothing I didn't want.

"Answer me," Niko snaps, and I blink.

"N...no, of course, not. He didn't. Arpad's not that kind of man." And now I am defending him? To my own brother? What the hell is wrong with me?

"But he did manipulate me. He tried to control my life, without my realizing it. He tricked me onto his boat and—"

"And—?" Niko leans forward, "What did he do?"

"He proposed to me, you ass. Just like you guys wanted. Honestly, I can't believe you and Papa came up with this crazy scheme. It's not like I can't look after myself."

"Oh course, you can. You grew up with us. You know how to take care of yourself, but our enemies are out to get us, and trust me when I say that you don't want to be caught in the cross fire. And if you are, at all, you want someone to have your back."

I stare at him. "Are things that bad between the Bratva and the Sicilians?"

His jaw hardens, he sits up straight and his gaze grows cold. "It's not good," he replies.

Oh, hell. That means shit is about to go down, and I've eavesdropped on enough meetings that my father and brothers have had without me to know that things will get worse before they get better.

"It's why we wanted to make sure you were safe."

"By ensuring that I left LA?"

"For one."

"And by getting me married?" I burst out.

He stares at me, "If you're married to someone in the brotherhood, you will be safe and taken care of. It would put Dad at peace—"

I open my mouth, and he holds up his hand.

"Let me finish, Karina." My brother's tone brooks no argument. In that moment, he sounds so like my father—no, even more scary than my father—that I blink. Good grief. He is already turning into the Pakhan, without officially inheriting the title.

"We know you are an independent, modern woman, and you have your views and opinions, and we respect them."

I snort, "If that were true, you wouldn't be here telling me why you thought it was a good idea to arrange for me to marry a man you guys thought was the right choice for me."

"He is, though—the right choice." Niko's gaze moves past me. "Too bad, he seems to have moved on."

"What?"

I angle my head to glance over my shoulder and see him. What the—? It's him, the jackass who's occupied my every waking moment, and he's with another woman?

Arpad f'ing Beauchamp looks tanned and relaxed. His dark hair is in that unruly mess I want to run my fingers through. He's wearing a white button down, open at the chest. His shoulders seem even bigger than when I last saw them. Has he been working out? Probably been lifting that blonde bimbo who's sitting next to him... Not opposite him, but in the chair next to him. Bet their knees are brushing right now as he raises his shot glass and holds it up to his date. She lowers her head, puts her mouth to the glass—to his glass, the one he'd touched with his lips—and takes a sip.

She coughs, reaches for her water and the bastard grins. He toasts her with the shot glass then downs it. Bet there's vodka in there too. Asshole is sharing the drink I introduced him to? With her?

"Karina?" Niko's voice reaches me, but I can't glance away from the tableau unfolding in front of my eyes. How dare he do this to me? How dare he flaunt that...that floozy in front of me? No wonder I haven't seen him in a while. He's been too busy getting his share of vagina from her, no doubt. Gah! Anger sizzles up my spine. I jump up, turn to go, when Niko grabs my arm again. "Sit down," he growls.

"B...but..." I sputter, "he's with someone else."

"You walked away from him."

"Of course, I did," I spit out. "That mudak had the gall to try to manipulate my life; he tried to get me to comply with his wishes without giving me the full picture."

"And if he had, would you have listened to him?"

I guess not.

A peal of laughter rings out behind me, a feminine one. Don't look back, don't. I glance behind, just as he feeds her some food from his spoon, before scooping up some food and bringing it to his mouth. He wraps his lips around the spoon, licks it clean, and my belly trembles. Moisture laces my core. Bloody hell, how can I be so turned on by him?

He lowers his spoon to his plate, then reaches over and whispers a strand of hair back from her cheek.

That's when something inside of me snaps. I jump to my feet and stalk over to him.

CHAPTER 48

Arpad

"What the hell are you doing?" She slaps her hand on the table with such force that the cutlery jumps, the vodka bottle tilts, and I reach out and grab it.

"Would you like some?" I pour some into a shot glass and offer it to her.

"I'm not drinking."

"Funny," I twist my lips, "that's not how it seemed to me the other day."

"That was a...mistake," she mutters, "I, uh, am not drinking again."

I stiffen, then peer into her features. "Are you uh," I clear my throat. Why the hell is this so hard to say? "I mean, are you... You know, trying to—"

She glares at me, then shakes her head.

I firm my lips. Okay so I can be a class-A dickass... You know what I mean, but even I know not to blurt out the question I have uppermost on my mind... Not in front of a third party.

"Have you met Diana?" I jerk my hand toward the other woman, without taking my gaze off Sparks' sweet face. Shit, the way she narrows her gaze, the sparks in those eyes. Jesus, she's gonna kill me and she's not even aware of it. I part my legs wider to accommodate the arousal that already tents my pants. One glance at her, a whiff of her sweet feminine scent, and damn, if I don't want to simply swing her over my shoulder and carry her out of here. Down, boy. Not yet.

I tear my gaze from her gorgeous features to turn to the other woman. "Diana this is Karina, my...uh..."

"His security consultant," she snaps.

"Ah," Diana glances between us, a frown on her face. "Would you like to join us?"

"Nope." She makes a popping sound at the end of the word. "I wouldn't dream of disturbing your date."

She stares at Diana then back at me.

"However, since I am already here," she juts out her hip and plants her hand on it, "maybe we can talk about the emergency that you called me about earlier?"

"Emergency?" I frown. "I don't think there's an emergency."

She snaps back her shoulders, then schools her features into a pleasant expression. All along, she glares at me. A chuckle rumbles up and I, wisely, swallow it. Not even I am foolish enough to toy with a woman who's working herself up into a temper, the way Sparks is right now.

"You were saying?" I prompt her.

"No, you were." She scowls at me. "I distinctly remember you calling me earlier and telling me you had an emergency." She draws herself up to her full height. "On the other hand, if you don't recall..." She turns away, and damn her, but I can't stop myself from jumping to my feet.

"Oh, that emergency," I drawl.

She pauses.

"I remember now."

She stares at me over her shoulder, "Perhaps you'd care to step this way to discuss it then?"

"Of course." I drop my napkin on my chair, then turn to my employee, whom I had enlisted to go along with me on this charade, "You don't mind, do you, Diana?"

She glances at me, then at the retreating back of my woman.

"Good luck," she half smiles, before rising to her feet, "you are going to need it with that one."

Isn't that the truth?

I follow Sparks as she skirts the tables and walks to the door that leads to a hallway at the back.

I step inside and she turns to me.

"How dare you?" she snarls. "How dare you...you flaunt her in my face like that?"

"I was sitting there, minding my own business, and you come along."

"And you happen to show up in the same restaurant where I am eating lunch?" She fumes.

"Heard about coincidences?"

She scoffs, "It's as much of a coincidence as...being able to touch your feet the very first time you attempt a sun salutation."

I blink. "Uh, is that a yoga reference?"

"Of course, it is, you moron." She tips up her chin, then purses her lips. "I thought I told you to stay away from me?"

"I was at the restaurant before you arrived," I point out.

"So, you did notice when I walked in?"

Clever woman. She's got me there. I draw myself up to my full height. "I'm always aware of my surroundings and everyone in my vicinity," I mutter. "It comes with the territory."

"You mean of being part of the Bratva?"

"I'm not with them, Sparks." I scowl. "I told you. I merely did Niko a favor—"

"Favor?" she bursts out. "So...so you asked me to marry you as a favor to him?"

"You know that's not true!"

"So, it started out that way, though?"

I fold my arms across my chest. I am not going to lie to her. Not now; not ever again. From now on, I need to be upfront with her if...there is any hope of my winning her over.

"Yes." I hold her gaze. "Yes, it did play a factor in my asking you to accompany me to see my family, but not only. From the first time I saw you, I was attracted to you, you know that."

"What I know," she twirls a lock of her hair around her finger, "is that, since you first saw me, you've been manipulating my life."

"And I told you, that's who I am. I need to be in control, Sparks. You understand that, don't you?"

"No," she shakes her head, "no, I don't. And what you did was not just about control... It was—"

"Over the top?"

"Underhanded," she snarls.

"Passionate?"

"Calculating." She firms her lips.

"Intense?"

"Conniving." Her chest rises and falls.

"See? That is where we disagree." I lower my knees, so I am at eye-level with her. "What you think of as being deceitful is what I term as my killer instinct. It's going that extra inch to ensure that I get what I want. And what I want is you, Sparks."

"Well, you don't have me."

"I will have you, make no mistake about that."

"See, that's where we disagree." She narrows her gaze. "Holding too tightly brings nothing but pain. Surrender is freedom."

"That's what I've been telling you, babe." I straighten, "Surrender to me, and enjoy what only I can give you."

"And what is that?" she says in a low voice. "Allowing you to pleasure my body while you don't have any idea what's going on in my head?"

"Ah, now that's where we disagree." I allow my lips to kick up at the sides. "There is no pleasure without pain, no gain without torment, no giving in until your mind and body are in sync. And that's what I specialize in."

"I am not a toy, you...you... Wanker."

"Don't talk to me like that," I snap.

"Oh, but I can, and I will. In fact, I am going to make sure you're going to listen to every word I say."

"Is that right?"

She nods, "Read my lips, Arpad Beauchamp. You've fired the opening round; the next move is mine. I am going to do what I think is right for me, and you will have no choice but to watch."

CHAPTER 49

Karina

"How dare he follow me, and after he promised he'd step back and let me live my life?" I pace back and forth in the living room of my new apartment. What is happening to me? A month ago, my life was where I wanted it to be, business had been going well and I had been all set and ready to have a baby, and now... Now it's falling apart, and all because of that jackass.

"Are you sure he was following you?" Isla chews on her lower lip. "Maybe it really was a coincidence?"

"Right," I toss my hair over my shoulder, "and everyone who tries to meditate is able to calm their mind."

"Whoa, lady." Isla stares at me. "That's some deep shit you're coming up with."

"It is, right?" I twist my fingers together. "I think my brain cells have melted together. I mean, look at me." I gesture to myself. "I used to love wearing designer clothes. I'd walk into a meeting full of men and enjoy the power I held over them, but now—"

"Now you find all that hot girl shit exhausting?" She nods. "Instead, you want to do the old lady shit, like a puzzle, knit a sweater, sit in a chair while you shower...?"

I glower at her and she chuckles.

"Did you get your knickers in a twist because you saw him?"

I blink. "Not exactly. I'm just going crazy trying to come up with a way to get back at him."

"And that's important?" Isla tilts her head. "That you have your revenge for something he supposedly did?"

"Supposedly?" I huff. "He totally maneuvered me to where he wanted me to be."

"Maybe that's what you wanted, too?"

I turn on her, "What do you mean?"

"Look, Karina," she leans back in the sofa, "you're so strong willed... It's one of the things I love about you. If I had half the backbone you have—"

"Oh, but you do, Isla. You run a successful wedding planning business, which is no mean feat."

She smiles, then shakes a finger at me, "Oh, no, we're not talking about me here."

"But—"

She shakes her head. "Let me finish, babe."

I sigh, "Sorry, that was impolite of me, please continue."

She folds her legs under her, makes herself comfortable. "That's what I mean. You are so clear-headed, doll. There really isn't much anyone can force you into doing."

"Except, he did..." I say slowly.

She nods, "So maybe somewhere inside, you wanted it, too?"

"What?" I frown. "You think I subconsciously knew what was happening, but I went along with it anyway?"

She purses her lips. "All I'm saying is, he's not the only guilty party here."

"Hey," I protest, "who's side are you on?"

"Yours, honey, always yours." She smiles. "I've seen each of the other women go through their own journey before they got one of the Seven."

"Which is why you've sworn never to be entangled with one of them?"

She scowls.

"Yeah, yeah, okay, we're not talking about you." I make the motion of zipping my lips with my fingers.

"Good." She props her elbow on the armrest and supports her chin on her palm. "Each of the other women found a way to strip away the masks the Seven wear to the world, so their true natures were exposed."

"You mean, they found a way to see them at their most vulnerable?"

She nods. "What bothers you the most about what happened with Arpad?"

"That he used false pretenses to first lure me to London, then to make me accompany him to see his family."

"So do the same to him."

"What?" I stare. "What do you mean?"

"You pull a fast one on him... Even the playing field."

"Right," I say slowly. "What do you suggest I should do?"

"What would hurt him as much as he hurt you?"

"I don't want to hurt him."

She frowns.

"I mean, I do...but only in a way that ensures that he apologizes to me." I drag my fingers through my hair. "I just want him to say he's sorry for what he did, you know? Is that too much to ask?"

"No, of course not." Isla presses a finger to her cheek. "He colluded with your family; you should do the same."

"What do you mean?"

"Collude with the rest of the women to put a plan in place. Then spring a surprise on him which he doesn't see coming."

"But," I stare, "why would the others help me? I mean, they are married to men who are part of the Seven, and the Seven are friends with Arpad, so wouldn't they technically want to side with him?"

"Unless they see it as helping him. Why don't you ask them?"

I open my mouth, when the doorbell rings.

"Yay, the troops are here." Isla jumps up and races to open the door. A second later, Summer flounces in, followed by Victoria, now sporting a baby bump, Julia, and Amelie.

"Heyyy!" Summer throws her arms around me. "How are you, Karina? I am so excited to help you in operation Alphaprank."

"Alphaprank?" I blink rapidly. "What's that?"

"It's the plan you're going to come up with to bring Arpad to his knees." Victoria beams at me, then rubs her belly, in the way many pregnant women do when they're adjusting to the new life they are carrying in their body.

I walk up to her. "May I?" I ask.

"Of course." She takes my hand and places it on her belly.

"Oh," I gulp, "it's harder than I thought it would be."

"I know, right?" Her smile widens further. "I'm still getting used to it myself."

I keep my palm pressed to her stomach. "Has he or she started moving yet?"

She shakes her head. "Because it's my first, the doctor says it may be twenty weeks before I feel the little thing move, but I am hoping it will be much sooner."

A soft sensation invades my chest. My throat closes and a pressure builds behind my eyes. Shit, what's wrong with me? I haven't even gone back to taking the hormone shots for anything since I found out I wasn't pregnant. So why is this...affecting me so much?

"You okay?" Victoria peers into my face.

I nod. "Yes," I clear my throat, "I'm so happy for you." I blink back the moisture that threatens to leak from my eyes. I will not let myself cry. Really, in the bigger scheme of things, it doesn't mean anything that I couldn't get pregnant on the first try, right?

So many women have been through so much more when they tried to conceive. I have barely started my journey, so why the hell does my chest feel so heavy?

Victoria releases my hand and I lower my arm to my side. "Come on, you should sit down."

She laughs, but allows me to guide her to the sofa. I place a cushion at her back and she smiles her thanks. "It's a nice place." She beams, "You're going to miss it when you move in with Arpad."

"Or maybe he could move in with me?"

She stares at me, then bursts out laughing. "Why not? It's time the alphaholes realize they can't have their way in everything."

"Damn right," I mutter.

Behind me, Isla claps her hands. "Ladies, who wants a glass of wine? Other than Victoria and Karina, that is."

The women stare at me.

"You're not drinking?" Julia asks.

"Umm." I twist my fingers together. "Just doing a detox thing," I mutter.

"Ah," Amelie nods, "that's wise. Just as long as you are not on a food diet of any kind, because," she places the bag she's carrying on the coffee table, then rummages around in it before producing a container and pulling off the lid. "Tada," she crows, "homemade chocolate chip cookies."

"OMG." Julia jumps toward it and grabs one from the tin. "I am starving." She chomps her way through half of it, then rolls her eyes, "Ohh.... It's almost as good as an orgasm."

"Nothing's as good as an orgasm." Summer smirks, reaching for a cookie as well.

"Especially not when you have an alphahole on hand, ready to use his... uh...hand, and other parts of his anatomy, to provide one on demand." Amelie cackles.

"Pleaaaaase, you girls." Isla claps her hands on her ears. "Can you spare me the details? Especially since I know your husbands. Speaking of, can we get back to the topic at hand," she smirks, "i.e. Project Alphaprank?"

All of their faces swivel toward me. I reach for a cookie, then walk back to my seat. "Yeah, tell me more." I bite into the pastry and the chewy chocolate chunks coat my tongue. "Oh." My eyes roll back in my head, "This is incredible." I turn to Amelie, "That's some baking skills you have there."

She giggles, "That's what Weston also says. Although," her forehead creases, "he may have been referring to something more than baking."

The girls laugh and Isla groans. I glance between them and polish off the rest of the cookie.

"So...whatever you have in mind," I address my question to the group in general, "wouldn't the men object to it?"

"Why would they?" Summer raises her shoulders. "Besides, we're not involving the men in this, are we?"

"Nope." Julia touches her earlobe.

"Nah." Amelie shakes her head.

"What we come up with in this room, stays in this room," Victoria says, her tone serious.

"Oh." A warm sensation fills my chest. "You ladies sure about this?" I chuckle. "I don't want your husbands finding out and then being upset with you all."

"Oh, pfft," Summer waves her hand in the air, "our alphaholes are actually tabby cats in disguise."

"Fierce, but all they need is a rub on the tummy, or uh, on other parts of their anatomy, for them to behave." Julia chuckles.

"Ugh!" Isla makes a face. "Stop already."

"I don't want you guys getting into trouble," I mumble, "I mean, isn't it a rule or something that you have to share everything with your husbands?"

Silence for a beat, then another. Then Amelie turns to me, "Umm... excuse me, but where's the mystery in the marriage if you tell them everything? I mean, there are certain things that you're absolutely never going to share with your other half, come what may. Feminine mystique is still a thing, and even more important, once you're married."

"True that," Julia pipes up, as the others nod in assent. "Of course, there's always the chance they'd want to help if we told them."

"Okay, but let's wait on that," I blow out a breath, "if you all are sure about this."

"We are," Summer replies.

"Question is, are you?" Isla fixes her gaze on me.

I twirl a strand of hair around my finger. "I... I don't want to hurt him." I jump up and begin to pace again. "I mean, I want to show him that he can't take me for granted, but really, that's all." I turn to them, "Know what I mean?"

The girls stare at me and my stomach ties itself up in knots. Why the hell do I feel so protective of that ass? After everything he's done to me, I still don't want to do something that would cause him pain... At least, not in a vindictive way... Apparently, I still feel something for him. Okay, face it, I want him, especially the things he can do to my body—the way he seems to make me come alive with just a glare, how he'd said he wanted to give me a child. A child... Hell, I still want to get pregnant, but not by any man. I want his baby. A child who will be the best of both him and me. I squeeze my eyes shut. This is hopeless. Why can't I go even a few minutes without thinking about the a-hole?

She raises her eyebrows, "You worried about him?"

"Of course, not." I snort. "That obnoxious grumpy pants can take care of himself."

"So, you're in?" Isla tilts her head.

I heave out a breath, "I'm in. What do you have in mind?"

CHAPTER 50

Arpad

I drive slowly up High Street Kensington, keeping her sporty Mercedes in sight. Where the hell is that woman headed? It's as if she knows I'm on her trail...

Okay, okay, I know I said I'd leave her alone, and I had. For two full weeks, I'd only had my man—someone whom I pay a lot of money, by the way—follow her, because all the other agencies I'd approached had turned me down. Something about professional etiquette... What jerks. More like, they are afraid my little spitfire would give them hell if she found out that they'd helped me keep tabs on her. Unfortunately, as it turned out, the geezer I'd managed to engage to track her had been completely inept. He'd lost her repeatedly. He'd insisted that it hadn't been his fault because the woman is simply really good at covering her tracks. The wanker—the detective I'd employed, I mean—had insisted she was way too good and taking measures to ensure that she wasn't being followed.

Which, I have to admit, sounds like my woman. And she'd called me canny? Sparks is a woman on a mission, and damn, if I am not going to unearth what she is up to. It is my pride on the line. Know what I mean? She threw down the challenge, and there is nothing I enjoy as much as sparring with someone who is gunning for me. And she is. And I am going to do my best to stop her. Hell, thanks to her, I haven't thought of taking my yacht out to sea, or chasing another storm... Because chasing Sparks around London gives me all the adrenaline rush I need.

What would it be like to live in this perpetual state of high for the rest of my life? To have her go toe-to-toe with me, constantly coming at me with her sass, defying me and questioning me... Until I'd have no choice, but to tie her down and make her submit to me. And submit she will... It is only a matter of time.

I watch as she pulls off onto a side road, then parks and hops out. She's wearing a pant suit that shows off her curvy figure; and those legs, bloody fuck. I can't wait to have them wrapped around me again. I park at enough of a distance so there's no chance of her spotting me. Then jump out and walk toward the boutique she's gone into. I stare at the window display of the understated, elegant shop—What the fuck? It shows wedding dresses. Why the hell is she here? I stare through the display window at the rows of dresses lining the wall on one side. At the far end, Karina speaks to another woman. They laugh, then the woman guides Karina further inside. Why the hell is she here? Is she trying on dresses? Why would she do that? She can't be getting married, can she?

To whom?

Why would she do that?

Maybe because I've been bloody stupid with her...? But I'd asked her to marry me, and she'd refused. Fuck. Bloody. Fuck. I dig my fingers in my hair and tug, then begin to pace the sidewalk. Twenty minutes pass... I know, I counted, as I stared at my watch, then back at the shop window, all the while walking back-forth-back like a douchebag—which admittedly, I am. But seriously, can you believe this? She's thinking of getting married. But to whom? What loser dares move in on my woman, while I... I...pace the pavement outside the shop like a—yeah, a blooming' moron. I fist my fingers at my sides, turn and peer inside the shop. She comes out of the fitting room holding a long white dress in her hand. She beams at the woman behind the counter, then hands over the dress. They speak, then the saleswoman hands over a bag which I assume has the same dress.

Motherfucker! Is that a wedding dress? Did she buy a wedding dress? Who is she marrying?

Karina turns to leave. I glance around, then pivot and race into the adjoining street. I peer around to find her walking to her car. She gets in, then drives off.

I wait a few more minutes to make sure she's turned the corner, then straighten and head for the main road. I am about to turn the corner when a voice asks me, "Have a cigarette, ol' chap?"

I glance sideways to find a homeless man leaning against the wall.

"Sorry," I raise my shoulders, "I quit."

"That's a shame." He looks me up and down, "You look like you need it."

"You're telling me." I blow out a breath.

"Woman trouble, huh?"

"Something like that." I frown. What the hell am I doing talking to him anyway? I shake my head. "Have a good day."

I turn to leave, when he says,

"I loved you so sincerely, so fondly

Likewise may someone love you next."

I pause, then pivot and stalk up to him, "The hell did you say?"

"I loved you so—"

"I heard you," I growl. "Why the hell are you quoting Pushkin?"

"You recognized the poet?" His chuckles. "Funny, could have sworn you were more of a Byron fan."

"I was..." I frown, "I mean, I am." I stare down at his upturned features, the hair matted about his shoulders, the hat pulled down low over his forehead so I can't make out the color of his eyes. The hair on the nape of my neck prickles.

"Do I know you?" I snap.

"Don't think we run in the same circles, ol' sport." He cackles.

Hmm. I frown down at his features. He doesn't seem familiar. So why are all of my senses on high alert?

"Why the hell did you choose that particular line?" I growl.

"Quite evocative, isn't it?" His lips curve. "Do you think he was talking about letting a woman go so she can find a love more suited to her needs?"

My guts twist. I swoop down, grab him by his collar and haul him up. The scent of alcohol and unwashed skin envelops me. I wince. "What the hell do you mean by that? Have you been spying on me? Who are you working for?" I demand.

"No one," he sputters, "just having a conversation, man. If you don't have a cigarette, you only have to tell me. No need to get so worked up."

My grip tightens, and he coughs. He paws at my hand. "Let go, asshole," he chokes out. "The fuck's wrong with you, man?"

I release him and he drops to the ground, then turns and scrambles off.

"Hey," I call out, but he breaks into a run. "What the hell?" I chase after him, but he speeds up. I increase my pace, try to keep up. But the tosser's, clearly, in better shape than he smelled. He turns a corner, and by the time I reach it, he's vanished. Bloody hell. I glance up and down the street, then walk to my car. Once inside, I pour sanitizer onto my palms, disinfect thoroughly, then message the rest of the Seven.

"Meeting. My place. Half hour."

Forty-five minutes later, I glance around at the faces of the rest of the guys. They're sprawled around the living room of the suite I've rented at the Dorchester. It's one of Saint's hotels, so I'd gotten a booking, no problem. Except, the asshole is charging me a premium. Of course, he is. Not that I begrudge him. I'd have done the same in his place. When it comes to money, it's an unspoken rule amongst us to keep the transactions fair for all concerned. Helps preserve the spirit of our friendship. The fact that all of them had dropped what they were doing and rushed here when I'd messaged them is testament to that.

"Whassup?" Sinner drawls from the chair he's sprawled in. "Something got your panties in a twist, Beauchamp?"

"Maybe." I lean forward on the balls of my feet. No way, can I sit down at the moment. First, seeing Karina trying on a wedding gown. Then, the encounter with the bum who quoted poetry? Fuck, what the hell is wrong with this city? Could someone who is clearly educated and well-spoken actually end up on the streets? Or does he simply prefer that lifestyle? If he does, well sure, I'm not going to judge. Still, it's peculiar, to say the least.

"Arpad?" Edward prompts, from where he's seated in the chair across from me. The only straight-backed chair in the room and he'd chosen it. Given a choice, the Father prefers to avoid material comfort of any kind. Sometimes, I think he does it simply to punish himself.

"What's on your mind, Beauchamp?" Damian frowns from where he's perched on the writing desk in the corner. "Your text sounded like you needed to talk things out?"

"Yeah," I roll my shoulders, "I, uh, saw Karina today."

"What the hell—?" Edward frowns. "Thought we'd agreed that you'd give her space."

I glower back at him. "My exact words, as I recall, were that I wouldn't stalk her, or spy on her; whatever I did, it would be in the open."

"So, you didn't stalk her?" he growls.

"I may have followed her from a distance."

"You didn't spy on her?" He purses his lips.

"I, uh, may have peered into a shop that she went into."

"What the hell?" Edward's jaw firms. "You complete moron. You realize you're acting like a complete twat, don't you?"

"Wait, hold on," I raise my hands, "I had a good reason."

"Can't wait to hear it." Saint blows out a breath. He exchanges glances with Weston, who shakes his head.

"And if you two exchange more money and go on about that bet, I swear, I am going to cut you out of the next round of very lucrative investments I have lined up."

"Easy, ol' chap," Saint mutters, "we're simply concerned about you. All that stress? It's not good for the ticker." He taps his chest. "On the other hand, it's a sign that you're invested in this relationship, which I believe is a positive."

"Positive?" I snort, "Fuck that. There's no positive outcome here, considering she's getting married."

"She is. Of course, she is," Weston murmurs in a soothing voice, "to you."

"You're not listening." I dig my fingers in my hair and tug. "She's marrying someone else."

"You sure?" Edward scowls.

"I saw her trying on a wedding dress, so yeah."

"You spoke to her?" he asks.

I glare at him. "I'm not dumb, Father. I sneaked a peek in the window, paced back and forth like a jackass while she was trying it on... " I flash back to the last time she went clothes shopping. With me. Don't go there, asshole. Don't conjure up scenarios in your head. Focus, focus on finding a solution to the problem at hand. I ball my fingers into fists. If only I had some rope right now. I could use it to alleviate this pressure that is building in my head, in my chest, my balls. Except, the only person I want to tie up is her. And she is getting ready to tie the knot with someone else. "Fuck!" I crack my neck. "What the bloody fuck am I going to do?"

There's silence in the room.

I glance at the faces of my friends, who seem to be digesting what I told them.

"Have you thought about approaching her, and asking her about it?" Damian ventures.

"I promised I'd stay away from her," I growl.

"Not that you're doing a good job of it," Weston snorts, "but seriously, the only way to clarify this situation is if you ask her."

"Have you all heard anything from your women?"

Sinner straightens. "You do realize I have other things to discuss with my wife, apart from your love life, or lack thereof?" His gaze narrows.

"Yeah, yeah." I crack my neck. "It was a thought." Fuck, if I'm not grasping at straws. Seriously? I'm asking my friends if they've heard of any gossip from their wives and girlfriends. Not that there isn't merit in gossip. After all, a whisper of a scandal could bring down a politician, but still, this is the absolute arse-end of things.

"Forget it," I snap.

He scowls, "And no, Summer hasn't mentioned anything to me. You're welcome."

I show him the bird.

He smirks. "You're definitely rattled, Beauchamp. You wouldn't resort to childish insults otherwise."

"Bugger off to whatever hole you came from," I mumble.

Sinner's smile grows wider. "Seems it's your turn to discover that tiny little thing inside of you—"

"You mean in his pants?" Damian smirks.

"Piss off," I snarl, and Damian laughs.

"As I was saying," Sinner quirks an eyebrow, "apparently, you don't have a choice but to strip yourself naked to the world."

"What, you mean literally?"

A few of the guys visibly shudder.

"No, you ass," Weston crows, "he means, we've all been there... Except for Father, here—" he nods at Edward, "we've had to face up to our deepest fears and come out the other side, before we could claim our women."

"Yeah, no idea what you're talking about," I growl.

"But you will," Sinner drawls.

I glance around the room as each of my dickwad friends nods sagely.

"Shit, this was a bad idea, calling you all here," I grumble. "Clearly, you have no constructive advice to offer."

"I do." Damian jerks his chin. "You need to talk this through with her."

"Hmm." I lean forward on the balls of my feet. "What do you think, Father?" I turn to Edward, "Should I speak with her?"

He drums his fingers on his thigh. "Loathe as I am to say this, you don't have a choice." He tilts his head. "The question is, will she hear you out long enough to have a conversation with you?"

CHAPTER 51

Arpad

After that little huddle, the guys had taken off and I had drunk myself to sleep and woken up with a hangover which still knocks behind my eyes. Bloody hell. Gone are the days when I could drink an entire bottle of the hard stuff and bounce out of bed with a spring in my step. Time... It always catches up.

And apparently, so do my sins... It has to be the reason I am skulking up the sidewalk, ensuring I'm not too close to Karina.

She'd left her apartment, taken her car to King's Road and parked. Now, she's going in and out of shops, the number of bags she's carrying in her hands multiplying with each outlet she visits. Is she shopping for Christmas already? More likely, a wedding—her wedding. Fuck, what the hell am I thinking? She walks out of yet another shop, turns and the handbag under her arm slips from her grasp.

Only when my feet hit the ground do I realize that I am moving. I reach her, snatch up the bag from the pavement.

I hold it out to her, and she stares at me, oversized sunglasses perched on her nose. Her gorgeous hair flows around her shoulders. And in her knee-length dress, she resembles a celebrity, all grace and poise.

She glances down at my hand, then back up at my face.

I raise the bag, move it closer to her, so she has no choice but to accept it.

"Thank you," she murmurs.

"You're welcome." I tilt my head.

Bloody hell, so this is what we've been reduced to—polite conversation?

She pivots and begins to slide up the street, her gait haughty, back straight, and that beautiful butt of hers wiggling in sultry promise with every step she takes in those fuck-me stilettos. Why do women dress up to go shopping, and in the most uncomfortable shoes ever? Don't most people shop online nowadays? Apparently, not her... Nope, Sparks always has that old world, don't-touch-me air about her, which is what had made me want to mess her up, right from the very start.

She pauses in front of a café, then walks inside. I follow.

The hostess leads her to a table by the window.

I step toward her, when the hostess stops me. "Good evening, Sir. Would you like a table?"

I glance past her at Karina. "I'm with her," I say.

The hostess looks between us, steps aside. I prowl over to Karina, then sink down onto the seat opposite her.

She stares at me through her oversized sunglasses. My fingers tingle to reach over and pluck them off her nose, but I resist. Instead, I reach for the bottle of water on the table and tip it into her glass.

"Drink," I mutter, "you need to stay hydrated."

"And you're supposed to stay away from me." She picks up the glass and raises it to her mouth. Her lips purse around the rim as she takes a sip. My cock instantly twitches. What the hell is wrong with me? I set my jaw, glare down at her. She swallows, then lowers the glass back to the table.

"And you and I both know you don't want that, Sparks."

She stiffens, then folds her hands in her lap. "What I want is moot right now."

"And why is that?"

"Your actions so far have convinced me you are not the one for me."

"And you know that's not true."

"It is," she tips up her chin, "that's why I am getting married."

"You're not serious." My heart begins to thud, my throat closes, and I lean forward in my chair. "You can't marry someone else."

"Is that your command?"

"And if it is?"

Her lips purse. "That's where you always go wrong, Ari. You think you can tell me what to do, and I'll obey?"

"You will," I snap. "You must. You know you want to, Sparks."

Her chin wobbles, then she glances away. "I've spent my life being torn apart by my heritage. I knew my family were part of the Bratva. I wanted no part of it, yet everywhere I turned, they were there. There was no escaping their influence, you know?"

"Is that why you didn't protest when I asked you to move to London?"

"That was part of it," she nods, "but not only."

My pulse rate speeds up. "What else?" I clear my throat, "What else prompted you to accept?"

"You mean, other than the fact that you and the rest of the Seven were clearly my biggest clients?" She pulls off her sunglasses and places them on the table. When she finally meets my gaze, the full impact of those golden eyes hits me in the chest.

Shit, what is wrong with me. Why hadn't I been up front with her about my affiliation with her family? What had I been worried about? My ego? Her judgement? Had I actually thought that I could coerce her into becoming my wife? This sassy, gorgeous, full-of-spirit woman who is my other half.

The breath whooshes out of me. Shit, that's what it is. I'd always known it and yet I hadn't accepted it... Not really. Not until this moment, when she holds my gaze and says, "I was falling for you, Ari. I'd felt the chemistry between us, you know that. Hell, then I got to know you, your past, your fetishes, and all of it cemented what I felt for you. But you spoiled it all."

My heart stutters. I want to open my mouth and talk to her, but I can't. All I can do is stare as she tips up her chin and says, "I can't forgive you or my family, for colluding against me."

"And I won't apologize for what I did." What the hell are you saying? Why can't you simply swallow your bloody ego and tell her how you really feel, you wanker?

She pales, then nods, "And I wouldn't have expected anything else from you."

"Fine," I growl.

"Fine." She grabs her sunglasses and plonks them back on her nose. She rises to her feet, reaches for her handbag, only to knock it off the table. I swoop down, grab it at the same time she does. Our fingertips brush and a shudder runs up my spine.

There's still time. Stop her. Stop her from leaving. Just apologize, you asshole.

She tugs on her bag and I release it.

She rises to her feet, tugs the strap over her shoulder, then grabs her shopping bags and brushes past me.

"Sparks." I call out to her, and she pauses.

She glances over her shoulder and through the lenses of her sunglasses her gaze widens. "What?" She swallows. "What is it."

"You'll make a wonderful bride."

Her lips firm, "Is that all you have to say to me?"

I blink. "Is there something else?"

"Yes," she snaps, "yes there is." She flounces over to me, plops her bags on the chair she vacated, then looks me up and down while shaking her head. In disgust? In disbelief? Before I can figure it out, she leans over, grabs the jug of water and upturns it on my head.

Around me, I hear gasps from the other tables.

"What the—?" I growl. "The hell is wrong with you?"

"The hell is wrong with you?" she hisses back. "You completely blind, neanderthal of a bastard."

"What—?" I gape. "What the hell did I do now?"

"Nothing. Everything." She stomps her foot, then slams the jug on the table, snatches her bags from the chair and stalks out.

CHAPTER 52

Karina

That ass, that absolute wanker. That...that...jerkenstein. "Aargh." I grab the bag of shopping and throw it across the room. It hits the wall, bounces off, and the shoes I'd purchased burst out of their tissue wrapping. Shit, no man is worth damaging an expensive pair of stilettos. Not even if he is the hottest, most desirable, six-foot five-inches, ripped like Adonis, alphahole... Are they?

I'd been so sure that he would apologize. Five syllables. Three, if he'd just say, "I'm sorry." Is that so hard for him? Am I wrong in holding out until he says so? I twist my fingers together. Maybe it's stupid that I'm holding out until he says so. I mean, what's the point of going into a relationship with a man who doesn't realize what he's done wrong? Things could only go downhill from there. If we are to enter into any kind of relationship, it needs to be on an equal footing, with no lies between us. Nothing to obscure how we feel for each other. And he does feel...a lot for me... If only he'd, just once, come clean and admit it to me.

I wrap the strands of my hair around my fingers. Guess there's no choice then. I have to put the rest of the plan into action. Damn him, for forcing my hand. I'd hoped the hint that I was getting married would be enough. That he'd see me through the shop window of the wedding boutique—of course, I knew he was there. I mean, just because I told the man back off... As if he would? As if he could! I would have been disappointed if he had. It's not in Arpad F'ing Beauchamp's nature to give up. And neither is it in mine.

I straighten, then walk over to the pair of shoes and lift them up. I pull them out of the wrapping, kick off the heels I am wearing, and slip into them. Instantly, I feel taller, more confident. Give a girl the right pair of shoes and she can conquer the world. Isn't it Marilyn Monroe who'd said that? And I am going to need every bit of faking it until I make it bravado to get through what I have planned. The girls are behind me. They'll help me out, for sure.

I only have to get through the wedding. That's all. I mean, two can play this game, right? I have to show him that he can't take me for granted. I have tried everything else possible, and now I have no choice but to take the final step.

The only way to tame an alphahole is to show him I'm not for sale. The only way to get him to take action is to show him I'm not available anymore. If he sees me on the arm of another man, surely, he'll drop all pretenses? I have to appeal to the caveman in him to come out and stake his claim. Damn him, but he hasn't left me any choice.

Isla is going to help me organize the wedding at the local city hall. The rest of the women are going to take their husbands into their confidence, and fingers crossed, they will be able to play along enough for Arpad to believe the story.

Now, the only thing left to do is to tell my family.

I pick up the phone and dial my father's number.

CHAPTER 53

Arpad

I've screwed this up. Clearly, I have. I begin to pace back and forth in the hotel room. Damn, why are the rooms so small? Despite this being the top hotel in the city, it feels like there isn't enough room to breathe here. I march to the window and try to pry open the pane. Of course, it's sealed tight, goddam it. I raise my fist, ready to punch my way through it, then stop. Fuck that.

I shrug out of my shirt, head toward the closet. I open the door, pull out the rope I'd folded into in a figure eight. I shake it out, then loop it around my palm, so it's fashioned into a whip. I raise my arm and that's when my phone rings. I glance from the rope to the phone, raise the whip again, and the phone rings once more. Ah, hell. I stalk to the side table, answer it.

"What?" I snap.

"Beauchamp?" Edward's voice echoes over the line, "You sound terrible."

"Wonder what gave you that impression?" I snort.

"Perhaps it's because you sound like someone destroyed your yacht."

"That would have been easier to stomach than—" I clamp my lips shut.

"Than?" He prompts me, "Go on, don't hold out now."

"Than finding out that she's definitely getting married."

He blows out a breath, "That's what I wanted to talk to you about." I hear the sounds of vehicles in the background.

"Where are you?" I frown.

"On the road," he replies. "I'm going to dial in the other guys."

"Wait, don't," I growl.

"Too late." Saint's voice comes over the line. "Why the fuck aren't you on video man?"

"Because I don't want to see your ugly mugs?"

"You don't have a fucking choice." Damian comes on the line.

"Beauchamp, you pussy," Weston snorts across the phone line. "Activate your video, you tosser. Not that I want to see your pussy-whipped profile."

"Look who's talking." I growl, "The one who won't do a thing without consulting his wife."

There's silence, then Weston laughs, "Keep fooling yourself, you mofo. You are in the same boat as us, and by the way, it's called being collaborative, which is what you do in a partnership. As you are about to find out."

I activate my video and five different faces stare back from five different squares.

I groan, "Not again. I don't need an intervention. I don't."

"The man doth protest too much," Sinner drawls. "Gentlemen, one of you going to break the news to him?"

"I will," Edward offers. "She's getting married."

"I know that, Father."

"Tomorrow."

"What?" My jaw drops. A hot sensation stabs my chest. "Are you sure?"

"Yeah, man." Weston's voice sobers. "Amelie confirmed it."

"So did Julia," Damian interjects.

"And Victoria," Saint adds.

"Summer too." Sinner nods.

"Shit." I sit down on the bed with a thump, stare at the rope in my hand. It's true then. Of course, she'd told me, but honestly, I didn't think she would go through with it. How could she? How dare she do this?

"Where?" My voice cracks. I clear my throat. "Where is it taking place?"

"Islington City Hall, tomorrow, 9 am."

Shit. Fuck. What the hell am I going to do now? I stare at the rope in my hand.

"What are you going to do now?" Edward asks.

I disconnect the phone and toss it aside. It rings again, I pick it up and throw it against the wall. It bounces off and crashes to the floor. I jump up, then walk across the room and bring my heel down on it again and again.

Fuck that.

I raise the rope fashioned into a whip and bring it down on my back. The pain slices up my spine, lights up my brain. Focus, focus. Some of the noise in my mind fades. I whip myself again and again. The tongue of the whip curls around me, hits my stomach, rips the flesh. Goosebumps pop on my skin. The blood rushes to my brain. Silence descends between my ears. My gaze narrows. I whip myself a fourth, a fifth time... I lose count of the number of times the rope assails my back. Sweat drips down my forehead, trails down my spine. The grooves etched on my back burn. Only when my shoulder screams in protest, do I stop. That's when I hear the hammering at the door.

"Arpad? Open up." Is that...? I recognize Edward's voice.

"If you don't open up, I'm going to call the concierge and get this door unlocked."

I blow out a breath, then fold the rope into an eight and place it in the closet. I pick up my shirt and shrug it on, then head for the door, just as it swings open.

A bellboy looks between us.

"Leave," I snap.

He pales, then backs away.

Edward frowns. "Still scaring the hired help, I see?"

"Still trying to play the empathy card, I see?"

Color flushes the Father's face. He firms his lips, then marches past me and into the room. He glances about the space. "What the fuck took you so long to get to the door."

I blink. Whoa, hold on. The Father used the F word?

When I don't answer, he turns on me, "What?"

"Um...you swore?"

"It happens," he grumbles, "I'll have to atone for it, of course, but fine."

I shake my head, "You okay, Ed?"

"Question is, are you?"

"I'm in stupendous shape." I snort. "Can't you see?"

"You look like you haven't slept in a few nights."

Welcome to my world.

"So?" I thrust out my jaw. "You here to preach?"

"No," he holds up his hands, "aren't I allowed to drop by to see my friend?"

"Who's that?" I glance around the space. "I don't see anyone here."
He groans, "Really? You going to play that card now?"
I blow out a breath. "You're right," I jerk my chin at the door, "I'd prefer it if you leave."

"I'm not going anywhere." Edward smiles.

"In which case..." I head for the door.

Edward draws in a breath.

I pause, turn to glare at him over my shoulder. "What?" I frown, "What is it."

"You been whipping yourself again?"

"You're not the only one who gets to indulge in his nightmares."

A nerve throbs at Edward's temple, then his expression relaxes. "I'll let that pass, for now."

He walks over and seats himself in a chair.

"The fuck are you doing, Father?" I growl over my shoulder.

"Making sure you don't hurt yourself."

"Too late." I'd already had my legs cut out from under me. My heart had been carved out too, but whatever.

"So, you're giving in to self-pity, I see?" He quirks an eyebrow.

I pause, then swivel around to face him. "The hell are you talking about?"

He looks me up and down. "You, my man. I'm talking about you."

"Don't put me in the same box as you, Father."

Color smears his cheeks. The skin around his lips tightens. Edward curls his fingers into fists, then draws in a breath. He rolls his shoulders, then seems to get control of his emotions. "I'll forgive you, again." He adds in a low voice, "I know how distraught you are."

"And how would you?" I glare at him. "You, who decided to divorce yourself from all emotions, while the rest of us battle our demons on a daily basis?"

"Is that what you think I did?" He tilts his head. "That I turned my back on all worldly matters?"

"Didn't you?"

"Being a priest is the hardest thing I've ever done." His lips twist. "Anything else would have been the easy way out for me, don't you see?"

"No," I frown, "I'm afraid, I don't."

"No matter." He draws in a breath. "Forget I said that."

"But—" I protest. It's rare for the Father to open up. Aside from that fucker Baron, he's the only one of us Seven, who, despite being with us, has rarely shared anything of his personal struggles with us. Which really makes it all worse, in a way. After all, he's been right here with us all these years, and yet, he's been closed off.

He folds his arms together, "Enough about me." He schools all emotion from his face. "What are you going to do now?"

"We were talking about you," I persist. "Why was becoming a priest the toughest decision you've ever made?"

"Now's not the time to discuss it."

"Then when?" I frown.

"When, the time is right."

"Which is?"

"Not now."

I blow out a breath, "You're bloody frustrating. You know that?"

"Says the man who's working himself into a tizzy over his future bride."

"She's not..." Mine, is what I want to say, but I can't. What the fuck is wrong with me? When did everything around me collapse to the point that I can't differentiate right from wrong and truth from fiction anymore?

I rub the back of my neck. "The hell am I going to do now?"

"We...are going to talk—"

I pale. "What? No, I am not in the mood for a sermon."

"Man to man." Edward scowls.

"Nor am I going to confess," I say in alarm.

He huffs, "As friends." He squeezes the bridge of his nose. "Why are the five of you so immature?"

"And Baron?"

He lowers his hand. "What about Baron?"

"I notice you didn't include him?"

"There's nothing to talk about. He escaped; good for him. The end."

"Hmm," I frown, "if you say so."

"I do." He firms his lips.

I open my mouth, and he holds up his finger.

I sigh, then hunch my shoulder. "Fine, fine," I grumble. "Have it your way."

"So..." he pivots and walks through to the living room of the suite. "What are you drinking?"

"We," I snap, "we are drinking."

"I don't indulge." He turns to face me over his shoulder. "You realize that, right?"

"Surely, a glass of whiskey is allowed?"

He nods, then pours amber liquid into two glasses. He turns and offers one to me.

I raise my glass, "Salut." I down it, top myself up again, throw that back as well.

"You trying to get drunk?"

"What do you think?" I chuckle.

"I think it's a bad idea. Not that it's going to stop you, but if you're going to do something tomorrow—"

"I'm not."

"You mean you're going to stand by and watch her get married to someone else?"

"She made her choice." I glance down into the depths of my glass. "I'm fine with it."

"Are you?"

I nod.

"So why are the knuckles of your hand white?"

I glance down, force myself to unclench my hands. I place the glass back on the bar. "There," I growl, "happy?"

"You're not thinking straight."

"And you are?"

He nods, "Most assuredly, I'm seeing clearer than you."

"So, what would you have me do? March in there and throw her over my shoulder and get her out of there?"

Silence.

I glance up to find his gaze boring into me.

"What?" I grumble. "You going to tell me what you are thinking?"

"You know what I'm going to say." A smile ghosts his lips.

"I can't read your mind, Father," I mutter. "You may as well spit out what you're thinking."

"You need to do what's right for you."

I stare at him. "That's all you have to tell me?"

He tilts his head. "That's all you need."

"What the hell?" I rub the back of my neck. "You are no help, at all."

"God helps those who help themselves."

I slow blink. "Right, then," I roll my shoulders, "guess the only thing that's going to help me get through the night is drinking heavily."

CHAPTER 54

Karina

"How do I look?" I glance at my reflection in the mirror. The simply-cut dress has a high lace neck, the pattern continuing down my arms to end just above my wrists. The front dips in a sweetheart neckline, only to cinch in at the waist, before flowing down to my feet. It's understated and elegant. Demure and sexy. While it's clearly a wedding gown, it's tasteful enough that I could wear it to a party. Not that I have any intention of doing so. I am getting married only once. At least, I have to believe that. He will come for me. He has to, right?

"Well?" I meet Isla's gaze in the mirror. "Why are you so quiet?"

"You look," she shakes her head, "you look—"

I twist my fingers in front of me. "Say it, already. It's all wrong, isn't it? Maybe I should have chosen another color?"

"You look incredible."

"Oh." I swallow, then stare at my flushed face in the mirror. Why the hell am I so nervous? "You sure?"

"If he doesn't lose his composure and sweep you off your feet when he sees you, I swear, I'll throttle him myself."

I laugh. "Join the queue. He can be such a stubborn dickhead, you know?" I draw in a breath. "That's assuming he shows up today."

"Of course, he will."

"I wish I could be that confident," I mutter.

"Since when have you, Ms. Self-assurance, herself, turned this doubtful?"

"Since..." Mr. Arpad f'ing Beauchamp came into my life. It's weird to think that, before him, I was ready to live life on my own terms, to have a child by myself, to think I didn't need anything or anyone else to complete me. Until I really got to know him. Does that make me any less independent? No.

Does it mean I am giving up all of my notions of making it on my own? No.

Does it mean I become less because I want him, want to lean on him? No.

For the first time in my life, I want someone to take care of me... I want to be with him, want him to be mine, want to have his child. My cheeks heat. Jesus, I've never felt like this about anyone else.

Is that why I'm here? Wearing a wedding gown, headed to City Hall, to get married, confident—or rather, not at all confident, right now—that he'll turn up. And if he doesn't? Well, then I'll know that he never did want me the way I want a man to want me. The way I want Arpad alphahole to want me. OMFG, I am doing my head in right now.

I squeeze my eyes shut. There's a touch on my shoulder, "You okay, doll?" Isla asks.

Yeah.

I'd called up my father and told him that I was marrying Arpad. Surprisingly, he'd told me I didn't have to do it. That they wouldn't cajole me into getting married again. But knowing my father... It's only a matter of time before he thrusts another man of his choosing at me.

I'd told him this is my decision, that I am going through with it. I'd invited him down to City Hall for the wedding, and though he'd disconnected the phone without confirming, I hope that he'll be there, along with my brother.

Everything is set. Now I just have to go through with this.

I blow out a breath, then turn to her and paste a smile on my face. "Let's do this."

Half an hour later, our car pulls up in front of City Hall. Sinclair and Summer loaned me their car and chauffeur, for which I am grateful. Not to mention, Isla has pulled through, as always, orchestrating this wedding and the reception afterwards for me, in double quick time. Yeah, she is getting really good at it. What the hell is she going to do now that five of the Seven will be married? Hopefully.

I see the short flight of steps leading up to the imposing neo-classical façade of the building.

Isla turns to me, "I need to go ahead and see to the arrangements but Peter," she gestures to our driver, "he'll help you out." She gets out of the car.

I stay there, unable to move. What if he doesn't come? What if he doesn't show up?

Oh, god, this had been a bad idea... A very bad idea.

"Miss, are you okay?" Peter, asks.

"Yes," I clear my throat, "I think so."

"He'll be there, you know."

I blink, then turn to him. "Who are you talking about?"

"The man you are looking out for."

"Of course, he is." I square my shoulders. "He's waiting inside to marry me."

"I'm not talking about him."

"No?"

He shakes his head. "Mr. Sterling was seven when I came to work for him. I've seen him and the rest of the Seven grow up and turn into men who were lost until, one by one, they began to find their women. Each of them deserves a happy ending, as do you."

"Why are you telling me this?" I ask. "My happy ending is waiting in there for me."

"He'll come for you."

I laugh. "I don't know what you're talking about."

"Mr. Beauchamp," His smile grows. "He's the most stubborn of the lot. Comes from the French blood in him. He thinks he doesn't need anyone, that he can do this on his own. But he can't."

And neither can I, but I don't say that aloud.

"Like the others, he doesn't like admitting when he is wrong. Not unless he's about to lose the thing most important to him."

I stare at him. "You know of the plan?"

"Summer took me into her confidence."

I hunch my shoulders. "This was a stupid thing to do. What was I thinking? Or rather, not thinking. I had hoped he'd come to his senses and apologize to me... but he hasn't. And damn it, I guess I am as stubborn as him. God, we are match made in hell, the two of us. We'll never see eye to eye."

"You will. And when you finally do, it will be like no one and nothing else exists, just the two of you."

I blink away the sudden rush of tears. Shit, what is wrong with me? And I'm not even on any hormone injections.

"Thanks Peter," I mutter.

He nods, then gets out and comes around to open my door.

He offers me his hand and I allow him to help me out of the car.

I hear footsteps behind me. "There you are." Niko's voice reaches me.

I glance at him, "You came?"

"Of course, I came. My only sister is getting married, and you thought I wouldn't be here?"

More tears knock at the backs of my eyes. Shit, soon I am going to be blubbering, which is not good. I definitely don't want my mascara to run.

Peter places my hand in Niko's, then steps aside. Isla exits the building and walks toward us. "They're ready for you."

I take a deep breath, compose myself.

Niko turns to me. "You look beautiful," he bends down and kisses my cheek. "and I've never been prouder of you."

I swallow and he straightens to his full height.

"Shall we?" Niko asks.

CHAPTER 55

Arpad

I wake up with a start, glance around, and find the room empty. Guess Edward must have left at some point. I'd been drinking; he hadn't. He'd had a glass of whiskey and nursed it through much of the evening. I must have passed out on the couch at some point. A thumping behind my eyes makes me groan.

I sit up and my stomach lurches. Shit, I can't be hungover. Am I hungover? I am never hungover. I rise to my feet and the world tilts. Sweat beads my palms. Bloody hell. I stumble toward the sink in the bathroom, grab a glass and hold it under the tap. I glug down the water, and my guts clench. I will not be sick, will not. I slap the glass back on the counter, take a breath, another.

I open the cabinet over the sink, grab the aspirin—yeah, it's the kind of hotel which caters to every need of its guests. I swallow two of the pills with water, then lurch back into the bedroom.

Sunlight filters in through the window.

Shit, what time is it? I check the watch on my wrist. It's 8.00 am. My heartbeat ratchets up.

In an hour, she'll be married. She'll belong to someone else. Someone who will love her, who'll take care of her. Who'll never tie her up with ropes and fuck her. Someone who doesn't go chasing storms, putting his life at risk. Someone who'll have a nine-to-five job, come back to her every night, and give her the children she so badly wants. Shit. She's going to be someone else's wife, carry someone else's child.

Hell. I drag my fingers through my hair. How dare she do this? How dare she walk out on me without giving me another chance at...this, at being with her? At being the father of her child. I am the one who offered first, and she turned me down. What the hell is wrong with her?

I march into the bathroom, shower and get dressed. I grab my phone and check the time. 8.10 am. Shit, shit, shit.

I pocket the phone, grab my wallet and car claim ticket, and walk out. I am only going to drive by City Hall. It is enroute to St Katherine Docks where my yacht is moored. I am going to get on my boat, and get the hell out of here, and then not look back. I am going to find the next storm and sail my yacht straight through it. I'll get off on the adrenaline high, then come back to port and get laid. I'll do all that, then I'll get the hell out of this city. I'll return to LA, find the next hottest start-up to invest in. I'll do all that, and I'll be happy.

My stomach bottoms out.

Of course, I'll be bloody ecstatic to go back to my single ways.

No more stalking a sassy, curvy brunette who makes my cock hard, every time I think of her. More importantly, no more driving myself crazy every time she looks at another man. Or having a heart attack when she tries on a wedding dress after turning me down. Shit. I drag my fingers through my hair. I am losing it. Clearly, I'd been on my way to being pussy-whipped. Good thing she'd decided to marry someone else. She'd saved me from being ball-and-chained-up like those of the Seven who had tied the knot. Yeah, she'd done me a solid by deciding not to marry me. She'd saved me from turning into a boring, one-woman man—from turning into someone content with his life, his wife, his family... None of which I want, right? Shit... Shit... Sweat beads my forehead.

Why the hell is it so hot in here? Clearly, I have been on land for too long. I need to get out of here and back onto my yacht. Hell, this time I'll sail to the Caribbean, to the island I'd bought there and never been to... Because I'd been planning on taking her there for our honeymoon. Jesus H, get a grip, man.

Time to put the plan into action, and get the hell out of here. I'd had a lucky escape. Time to get out, while I still can.

I head down the corridor, then take the elevator to the reception of the hotel. I walk out the front door, toss my claim card over to the valet. He scampers off to get my car and I begin to pace up and down the sidewalk.

What the hell is wrong with me? Why can't I relax? Do not look at your watch. Don't do it. I glance at the dial of my wristwatch.

"What time is it?" a voice calls out.

I glance about and spot the homeless guy on the sidewalk. The same guy I'd seen in the alleyway near the boutique where she'd tried on her wedding dress.

I stalk toward him, "What the hell are you doing here?"

"It's a free country, last I checked, man." He smiles and his teeth gleam. Who the hell is this guy, who could afford such dental work?

"You following me, asshole?" I growl.

He chuckles. "Now, now, don't get ahead of yourself. I like to move around, that's all. Besides, I wanted to make sure you saw this."

"What?"

He holds up his phone, the screen face-up.

"Fuck that," I snort, "I don't want to see any of your porn."

"This is much more important." He waves his phone in my face.

I stare at the video playing on the screen and my heart twists. My guts knot. I see a vision in red. Damn it, she's wearing red. Is it because I'd told her that's the color that suits her the best? Of course, it is. She's wearing it to taunt me.

But hadn't she bought a white dress earlier at the boutique? No matter. She has her hair piled on top of her head and I take in the curve of her neck, the arch of her shoulders, the bouquet of white and pink flowers she holds between her fingers. I run my gaze down the curves of her body shown off by the dress, how the hem rises to show a flash of her legs as she steps inside a town car.

Peter, Summer and Sinclair's chauffeur, shuts the door behind her, then walks around to the driver's side.

Shit. My mouth dries. It's her, on the way to her wedding. She's about to get married and I am here holding my cock in my hands. Not literally, but you know what I mean.

"Hey, ol' chap. You okay?"

His voice seems to come from far away.

"You're not gonna faint or something, are you?"

"What?" I blink, then draw myself up to my full height, "You think I'm a pussy?"

"Yes."

I stare, "The fuck do you mean, asshole?"

"You're the one waiting for your valet to get your car while your girl walks away with another man."

"She's not..." Fuck, the word sticks in my throat. I force myself to say it. "Mine," I snarl. "She's fucking mine."

"Damn right," he nods, "you going to get her, or what?"

I squeeze my eyes shut. Fuck, fuck, fuck. How could I have messed this up so badly? How could I have not seen what was in front of me all this time?

I'd wanted her, decided she was for me. She is it for me. And yet, I'd let my ego come between us. I'd thought I was right all along, that I could get my way, no matter what. I'd forgotten how it is that a man treats a woman when he loves her. And fuck, if I don't love her. I love her more than I love myself, and fuck, if that isn't something.

And... holdonabloody second. How the hell did this guy get ahold of that video of my woman?

I snap my eyes open to find the space in front of me is empty. Huh? I glance about me and find the homeless guy hurrying away. The hair on the back of my neck rises.

Why the hell hadn't I thought of asking the question earlier? Had I been so shaken by what I'd seen that I'd forgotten basic common sense?

All of which doesn't answer the question: what the hell had he been doing watching her?

Why had he filmed her? How did he know I had checked into this hotel? Only the Seven know I'm here. How the hell had he found out? No way, would any of the Seven have told anyone else. So, who the hell is he? "Wait," I call out. He breaks into a run.

I spring forward, when the valet calls out, "Sir, your car is here."

I pause so suddenly that I almost stumble. Shit. I glance at my watch, 8.35am. Shit, no way, am I making it in time to stop the wedding, but I have to try. I glance up the sidewalk and spot the guy turning the corner. That will have to wait. For now, I have to go get my girl.

Turning, I race to my car and hop in.

I pull away from the curb, press down on the accelerator with such intensity that my Jag jumps forward. I tear around the corner, hit Oxford Street and the inevitable traffic. I press down on my horn, swerve around the vehicle in front of me. The driver shows me the bird; I don't even bother to respond. I focus on finding breaks in the traffic, hit the next streetlight which, of course, turns red as I pull up. I hit the brakes, wait for the pedestrians to cross. Glance at my watch.

8.45am.

Hell. I am never going to make it in time. Sweat beads my brow and adrenaline laces my blood. As soon as the light changes, I hit the accelerator and the car jumps forward.

For the next ten minutes, I race through the streets of London. If I am too late, I will never forgive myself. If I allow her to become someone else's wife I... I will never be able to live through it. No, I have to get to her in time. I never lose, remember? I am going to reach her in time. I have to.

I navigate the roads, head closer to Islington City Hall. When I am only a few blocks away I hit a traffic jam. Bloody hell. Sweat trickles down my spine. I clutch the steering wheel with such force that my knuckles turn white. Come on, I am so close. I pound my fist on the steering wheel, peer through the windshield. Nothing seems to be moving. Shit, this isn't good. I am not going to make it. I shove the door open, spring out, then dodge around the vehicles.

The car in front rolls forward and a cacophony of horns sounds. Shit, I am going to get into so much trouble. But what-bloody-ever. Nothing is more important than getting to my woman in time. My heart begins to race. My pulse rate ratchets up. I increase my pace, reach the sidewalk and sprint forward. I reach the steps of City Hall, which is when I spot Sterling.

"Come to your senses finally?" He smirks.

I show him the bird, then race up the steps two at a time. What the hell is he doing out here, anyway?

I reach the top of the steps, when Saint shoves open the door for me. "About time," he grunts as I race past him.

Of course, all the Seven—except Baron—would be here to witness me being brought to my knees, but what the hell do I care? All that matters is that I get to her in time.

I race up the winding staircase inside, reach the first landing, where Weston smirks. "That way, ol' chap," he jerks his chin to the left. I race up the next flight of steps, then pause. Which way? Which way should I go?

Damian pushes away from the wall, heads to me, "You seem lost, my man."

"Shut your bloody trap," I pant. My chest heaves. Sweat trickles into my eyes and I wipe it away. "Which way?" I growl.

"Told ya, you'd come to your senses."

"Tell me, you tosser, or else."

He stabs his thumb to his right, and I take off. I race down the corridor, past the line of couples waiting, to the closed door at the end.

Nikolai stands at the doorway, folds his arms over his chest, "You can't go in."

"I have to," I choke out. "My...my...woman... My heart... My... Karina." I can barely get the words out. "She's inside."

His jaw firms. "If you think I am going to let you interrupt my sister's wedding, you are mistaken."

I glance at my watch. "Look," I show him the face of my watch, "it's only 8.57 am. It's not too late. She's not married yet. There's still time for me to stop this."

He shakes his head. "I can't let you in."

Anger thuds at my temples and adrenaline laces my blood,

"Get out of the way," I glare at him, "NOW."

The skin around his lips tightens. "You need to leave," he demands, "NOW."

"I'm not going anywhere." I raise my fist. "But if you don't move, things are about to become very ugly."

CHAPTER 56

Karina

"What time is it?" I ask.

"The same as when you asked me two minutes ago," Isla mutters.

"That's two minutes since our last conversation." I scowl. "So, it's not the same time as when we last spoke, is it?"

"Fine, fine." She throws up her hands, then stares at the watch on her wrist. "It's 8.58 am."

"Shit." I hunch my shoulders. He's not coming. He's not coming. I thought, for sure, he'd come. How am I going to face these people? How am I going to live my life without him? I chew on my nail, and Isla leans forward and slaps my hand.

"Ow," I grimace. "What was that for?"

"You don't want to get married with bitten down nails, do you?"

"I don't want to get married, period," I mumble as I stare down at my hands. We're in a small room next to the registrar's office, and just off the hallway where the other couples are lining up for their turn. Don't ask me how, but Isla has arranged this private space for me. That woman is a genius when it comes to organizing events. Not that this is anywhere close to the weddings she's organized for the rest of the Seven. But then, nothing about this situation is ordinary, is it?

Not the fact that the women are here in the room—Summer, Julia, Amelie, Victoria and her bump, Sienna with her baby, even Ava, had turned up to lend me support. Well, I am going to need all of it, and more, considering the asshole still hasn't showed up.

I glance away from the window; it isn't going to help if I surgically attach myself to the frame and look out. Mr. Grumpy Pants isn't going to show up. I'd been stupid to think of this as a way to get him to recognize what he truly wants. Had I actually thought that I could get through to him? To strip away at his conceit, the barriers he'd thrown up against the world, and reveal himself to me—had I thought that I could accomplish that? I snort, I must have been dreaming.

I walk over to the mirror in the corner of the room, then begin to pull out the pins from my hair.

"What are you doing?" Isla asks in alarm. Behind me, I see the expressions on the faces of the other women, mirroring her concern. Shit, will I have to go through life remembering how he stood me up at the altar—? Well, technically, I had stood myself up, since this entire plan had been my grand idea. Bloody hell. "He's not coming," I growl, "no reason for me to put myself through this torture." I slap the pins down on the table in front of the mirror and my hair flows down to my shoulders. There, that's much better. I dig my fingers into my scalp and massage. A headache throbs at my temples. "This is all that asshole's doing," I mutter. "I should have cut my losses and left him. What is wrong with me, that I decided to come up with this grand idea?"

"Love?" Her lips curve up. "You're a romantic at heart, Karina."

"Tell that to my head, which insists that this is the craziest idea I've had since..." Since practicing my yoga stretches in his cabin and then falling asleep in his bed. I shake my head. I'd done that, all right. Stupid me... Why had I not wanted to leave his bedroom that day? Had something inside me wanted to stow away on his boat? Had my subconscious already chosen him to be the father of my child? Shit. I press my palm into my stomach. Speaking of, I'd gone into this hoping to get pregnant, only somewhere along the way, the dream had changed to being pregnant with his child, to having him in my life. I'd had to try one last time, didn't I? I'd had to give him one last chance to redeem himself.

"Since?" Her eyebrows quirk.

"Since... Nothing." I press my fingers together. "Was I wrong in what I did? Should I have accepted his proposal and fallen into his arms? That would have made everything so much simpler."

"And allowed him to think he could take you for granted?" Summer walks up to stand next to me. "With the Seven, you need to stand your ground. They need to know that you won't hesitate to go toe-to-toe with them, that you are the kind of woman who'll rise to the challenge, every single time."

"You think so?" I bite down on my lower lip.

"I know so." Victoria walks up to stand behind me. "Do you think if I had simply given in to Saint, we'd have survived and made it this far?"

I meet her gaze in the mirror.

"It's only because I found it in me to stand up to him, that he took me seriously. It's only because I gave it back to him every time he decided to pull an alphahole stunt on me, that I got the man of my dreams."

"We make them better men." Julia draws abreast, next to Summer.

"They depend on us to bring out the empathetic side of them." Amelie glides over to join us. "Don't let their bluster fool you. These men have the softest of hearts, only they don't dare show it to the world. It's almost as if they want us in their lives so they have the permission to show their mushy side."

"Mushy side?" I twist my lips. "I don't think Arpad A'hole has anything soft about him."

"Oh, we know he's hard where it counts." Summer raises her eyebrows, as I choke.

"There, there," Isla slaps me on my back.

I cough, accept the glass of water that Julia hands me, then sip from it.

"It's what all that hardness is hiding from you that we want you to recognize," Summer adds.

"I am not sure I understand what you are trying to say?" I place the glass of water back on the counter.

"Don't give up yet," Summer urges.

"Yeah, about that. How long do I have left?"

Isla glances at her watch. "It's nine am."

My throat closes. "Clearly, if he hasn't come by now, then what's the point? He knows I'm getting married at nine... If he had wanted me at all, he'd have been here by now."

That's when I hear a commotion outside the door.

CHAPTER 57

Arpad

I raise my fist, when my shoulder is gripped from behind. "What the hell?" I swing around and come face to face with Edward.

The Father's eyebrows are drawn down. "Calm down," he cautions, "it's not over yet."

"Of course, it is," I growl. "She's in there getting married, and you're asking me to calm down?"

I twist my torso to get away, and the Father tightens his grip. Anger flares at my nerve-endings and my vision narrows. "Let go of me, Edward."

"Will you listen to me?"

"Back the hell away from me."

"I will, if you calm down and listen to me first."

"Why the hell should I?" I snap. "When everything I want is in there and you're preventing me from going in."

"For once in your fucking life, will you stop to think before rushing into yet another storm?" Edward's voice thunders around the place.

Silence descends. A beat. Another. I firm my lips, glare at Edward, who glares right back. And that cuts through the noise in my head. The Father, angry, on the verge of losing his temper. Whoa, okay. I've never seen that happen before. At least, not since Edward returned from his stint to wherever he'd gone, and declared that he was going to become a priest.

Then, Edward jerks his chin, "Breathe, Arpad."

He releases me and I stumble back. "Why the hell should I?" I swallow.

"When my heart, my love..." A ball of emotion blocks my throat. "My life..." Something hot stabs at my chest. Jesus, what the hell is wrong with me? Am I actually going to lose my composure, here in front of everyone?

"She's...everything to me," I whisper, "you understand that, don't you?"

He nods, "I do, but does she? Have you told her what you just told me?"

"It's too late... Too late now."

"It isn't." A ghost of a smile kicks up his lips.

"What the hell do you mean?"

That's when the door to the side flies open. A vision in red stands silhouetted against the light. I blink. She takes a step forward and out of the light. Her dark hair flows about her shoulders, her color is high on her cheeks, and her eyes are bright with emotion—with unshed tears? She stands there, chest heaving.

My beauty, my heart, my love.

"Karina?" I whisper, as Edward steps aside.

She stares at me as if she can't believe what she's seeing. In truth, neither can I. "Aren't you supposed to be—" I stab my thumb over my shoulder, at the closed double doors behind me, "in there."

"And you're supposed to have been here by nine am."

Warmth flushes my face. Shit. What, now I'm embarrassed? The next thing you know, I'll be saying please and thank you in every sentence.

"I'm... I'm sorry?" My neck heats. Did I just say that? I said that.

"About time," she murmurs, then walks forward and links her hand through mine.

I glance down at our joined hands, then at her face.

She tilts her head. "They're waiting for us."

"Who's waiting for us?" My heart begins to hammer; my pulse rate ratchets up.

She jerks her chin toward the double doors. I turn as they open. Inside, I see chairs set up on either side of an aisle, at the end of which, a man in a suit stands beaming at us, with his hands folded in front of him.

"Huh?" I blink. "Is that the registrar who is going to conduct the marriage ceremony? Are we..." I turn to her, "but weren't you...?"

"Going to marry someone else?"

I nod.

"You actually believed I could do that?"

"No," I shake my head, "I didn't want to... But I knew I'd behaved like a complete ass—"

"—a wanker," she interrupts me. "You behaved like a complete tosser."

"That too," I agree. "I deserve all the names you called me."

"Is that an apology?" She frowns. "Because it's a pretty shitty one."

I can't stop the chuckle that bubbles up. This woman... She is going to make my life really bloody interesting as hell. I sink down onto one knee, place her hand between both of mine.

"I'm sorry, Karina. Sorry I took you for granted. Sorry I manipulated your life so you could be near me. Sorry I colluded with your family behind your back. Sorry that I...didn't come right out and tell you that I love you, that I want to be with you, that you are the only woman I want to spend my life with, the only one I want to wake up next to every morning, the only one I want to hold in my arms, and say I do to. You are the only one, Sparks, who means more to me than anything in the world, even myself. If I'd lost you, I wouldn't have been able to live anymore, I—"

She places her finger on my lips. "Don't," she swallows, "don't say that. If anything had happened to you, I wouldn't have been able to live with myself."

"Live with me instead. Be my wife. Marry me, Sparks."

Her face splits apart in a wide smile, "Yes."

Claps break out; there's cheering. I glance around to see Isla and the rest of the women crowding at the doorway. The men, cluster behind them.

A younger girl I don't recognize joins the women. "Oh, your babies are going to be soo beautiful."

Next to me, Edward stiffens. I shoot him a sideways glance to find him staring at her. Interesting.

Summer wraps her arm around the girl and pulls her close. "Never change, Ava," she grins, "your romantic heart is what sets you apart from the rest."

Niko guides me and Karina, to the side as the rest of the group file into the room. Saint wraps his arm around Victoria, Sinner pulls Summer to his side, Weston hugs Amelie, and Damian bends down to kiss Julia's cheek. Ava takes a seat in front. Edward stays by the door, his gaze still on her.

Niko turns to me, "You passed my earlier test, doesn't mean you're off the hook. You'd better take care of her, or I'll blow your brains out." He jerks his chin at me, then retreats to the side.

I take both of Karina's hands in mine as I peruse her features, "What do you say, Sparks? You ready to get started on that baby making plan?"

CHAPTER 58

Karina

"I thought you'd never ask," I whisper.

He rises to his feet and I tilt my head back, all the way back, as he towers over me. Shit, has he always been this big, this tall, this huge? Enough for his shoulders to block out the sight of everything else.

He rakes his gaze over my face and a flash of heat trails down my spine. He leans in close enough for the tips of his shoes to brush my stilettos, then bends his head until his face is right above mine. "There's still a chance for you to leave," he mutters. "Still a chance for you to save yourself from me."

"And if I don't?" I whisper. "What if I don't want that? What if I want everything you can give me?"

"What if you can't take it?" His gaze narrows. "What if I hurt you?"

"Promise me you will?" I allow my lips to curl into a smile and his nostrils flare.

His shoulders flex, and he tucks my hand into his. "I should have known you'll always have an answer." His mouth twists. "What am I going to do with you, Sparks?"

"The same thing that I am going to do with you?" I smile at him. "Love me, hold me, touch me, caress me, fight with me, make up with me, take care of me, never let me go."

"Never." He brings my palm to his lips and kisses my knuckles. "You're stuck with me, Sparks."

"Hey, you guys, shouldn't you get a move on?" Edward jerks his chin toward the room in front of us. "The registrar's waiting."

"I'd rather you marry us." Arpad holds my hand as we approach him. "It's tradition, after all."

"Maybe some traditions are meant to be broken?" Edward's features take on an odd look. "Perhaps, the more things change, the more they remain the same, know what I mean?"

"No," I shake my head, "not really."

"Edward means, why not have the registrar marry us, so he has a chance to enjoy the wedding? Not that he doesn't enjoy it when he's conducting the ceremony," Arpad adds. "Am I right, Father?"

Edward nods, "Also, and not that this would matter, but just so you are aware, it's your name that's on the license."

"It is?" Arpad scowls then turns to me, "So you were sure all along that I'd turn up?"

"I'd hoped." I half smile at him. "I had nothing to lose right?"

"And the white dress at the boutique?" He rubs his jaw, "I could have sworn I saw you purchase a white wedding dress."

"White huh?" I can't stop the smile from curving my lips, "How did you know that?"

He presses his lips together. "You knew I was keeping an eye on you?"

I nod.

"You knew that I couldn't keep away from you?"

I smile wider.

He scowls and I can't stop the giggle that wells up from my throat.

"Bloody hell, Sparks," He rubs the back of his neck, "you really were one step ahead of me all this time."

"I tried." I say trying and failing to sound gleeful.

His gaze intensifies. He peruses my features, "What would you have done if I hadn't turned up?"

"But you did." I peer up at him from under my eyelashes.

"Were you that confident that I'd show?" he murmurs.

"Yes." I glance down, then back at him, "No, I wasn't. But I had nothing to lose, right? I had to put things in motion, then pray everything worked out."

"You have a devious mind, almost wife."

"I learned from the best, almost husband."

I lick my lips and he lowers his head to mine, the intent to kiss me clear.

Edward clears his throat just then, and I frown up at him.

"You'll have plenty of time for that later." He chuckles, "Besides the registrar is waiting."

He moves to the side as Nikolai steps up. "I'm walking my sister down the aisle."

He glares at Niko, "If you think I'm letting go of her for one minute now that I've found her again—"

"Ari," I nudge him, "behave."

He glances down at me. "You want him to walk you down the aisle?"

"He's my brother."

Arpad searches my features, then nods. He places my hand in Niko's outstretched one, then turns to me again. "I'll see you soon, babe."

After Arpad walks into the room, Edward shuts the doors behind them.

Isla hands my bridal bouquet over to me. She walks around to stand between us and the door, then turns, "You ready, Karina?"

I nod, grip my brother's arm. This is it. I am doing it now.

She pushes open the door and walks forward. We wait until she reaches the end of the short aisle. She slips into a chair by the front row, then it's our turn.

Niko places his wide palm over mine. "You look beautiful, Kaykay." He smiles down at me. "You know Dad would have made it, except it's too risky for him to be seen in the open."

I nod. "I am glad you are here."

Then we're walking forward, down the aisle. I glance around at the faces of my friends, my made family, who are as important, if not more so, than my blood family. A tingle runs up my back. I glance up and my gaze connects with his blue-grey ones, and the rest of the room fades. I am aware of putting one foot in front of the other, of covering the distance between us, of stopping in front of him, of Niko placing my hand back where it belongs, in his wide warm one.

He twines his fingers with mine, the warmth in his eyes setting shivers of anticipation, of something else, excitement, contentment, all of it intertwined into a ball of happiness; of being exactly where I want to be in that moment; of seeing my entire future stretched out in front of me; of reaching forward and grabbing it and holding on and allowing it to sweep me away until there is no me, no him... There is only us.

"I do." His lips form the words. His eyes crinkle. He slips his hand into his pocket and pulls out a ring.

He reaches for my left hand when I realize I am still clutching the bouquet. Oh! I glance around, and Ava jumps up. "Here, I'll take it." She closes the distance between us and I hand the bouquet over to her before turning back to my bridegroom.

Arpad takes my left hand and slides the ring onto my finger—a band of plain gold, with a single blue sapphire embedded in it. The metal is worn and instantly warms my skin.

"It's grandmama's," he says, "she wanted you to have it."

Tears prick my eyes as I hold onto his hands. Then I'm raising my gaze to his.

"I do too," I whisper, as a teardrop slides down my cheek.

"You may now kiss the bride." Barely has the registrar spoken, when we both move. I raise my head, he swoops down, and we meet somewhere in the middle.

EPILOGUE

Karina

I glance across the bedroom of Arpad's yacht. After the wedding, we'd spent the rest of the morning at a very boozy brunch with the Seven and their women at the Michelin starred restaurant of the Dorchester Hotel. It is the hottest restaurant in London and Saint had shut it down for our wedding reception. Imagine that.

Nothing should surprise me. Not after the life I've led so far. Not after the excesses that I've known the Bratva to indulge in... But the Seven... They are so matter-of-fact about the position they occupy on the food chain... Sometimes it takes my breath away; and that's saying something. And... Okay, it isn't about the money.

When I'd left my family behind in LA, I'd turned my back on the kind of extremes that money brings with it... I'd wanted to carve out my own life, create my own career, my own family. I'd been ready to go so far as to have a child on my own and bring him or her up by myself so I didn't have to depend on anyone else. Then Arpad happened.

It's not just his good looks, or his more dominant than anyone else personality, or the fact that he'd do anything for the Seven, or how he'd been with his grandmother, caring and protective and so authentic...that had appealed to me.

Okay, maybe it was all of that... And that space inside of him... That hurt, that anger against the world he carries inside and which resonates with the part of me that still blames the universe for taking my mother away from me when I was barely an adult.

Maybe I see him as much of a challenge as he sees me as a provocation.

Maybe, on some level, I see him as someone who is strong enough to dominate me; someone who can claim me and rule over me with a firm hand; someone who will take away the onus to choose, the anxiety of making decisions... Something I'd never known I craved until I met him.

My husband who prowls over to where I stand.

The boozy brunch had gotten progressively boozier and noisier, with the rest of the Seven and their women not able to keep their hands off each other as well.

In the middle of it all, Ari had grabbed my hand, and pulled me to my feet. Good thing I'd had the foresight to change out of my wedding dress at some point during the morning, for he'd literally whisked me off to his car and driven us over to his yacht, where he intended to consummate our marriage. He'd also told me that we were setting sail for Malta and then Greece for our honeymoon. As for clothes and my things? He'd produced our packed suitcases from the boot of the car. Someone had been busy shooting off text messages to get everything organized during the course of the morning. Something I swear I hadn't noticed.

Now he pauses in front of me and peers into my face. "There's one more thing I need to do." He slips his hand into his pocket, brings out a short piece of rope.

He presses the rope into the palm of my hand. "I want you to have it," he says. "I want you to have it when you think you're ready to use it on me."

"On you?" I blink. "You want me to use it on you?"

He nods.

"But..." I swallow, "you hate being tied up."

He glances down at the rope, then back at me, "Apparently, it depends on the person who's doing it."

"Oh." I wrap the length of rope around my palm, allowing the rest of it to trail to the floor.

It's the same rope that he'd used that first time he'd restrained me. The late afternoon sunlight slants through the window of the cabin, and highlights the reddish gold sparks woven through the cord.

He backs away and I follow his progress as he saunters over to the bed. He sits down, kicks his legs out in front of him. His thighs are powerful columns of strength and his stance is wide enough for my attention to stray right to his crotch. The fabric of his pants tented there indicates that he's already aroused. It's something I have yet to get used to, for the man has the stamina of someone who can push himself to the limits and recover quickly enough to start all over again.

I lick my lips and his gaze narrows. I walk over to stand in front of him, weave the piece of rope about my palm. He tips his chin up, trains those flinty grey-blue eyes on me. My stomach trembles and my heart begins to race. Oh, hell, one glance from him and I'm already a goner. How the hell am I going to do this?

I let the rope slither to the ground, then reach forward and push the jacket down his shoulders. He shrugs it off, holds my gaze as I unbutton his shirt. My fingers graze his skin and he hisses. His blue gaze deepens, until his irises seem almost black. Oh, wow, that's never happened before. Is he turned on? His jaw tics and a vein throbs at his temple... Ah, okay, he's more frustrated. "Is it tough to hand over control, for even this small amount of time?"

He bares his teeth, "What do you think, wife?"

I swallow. Wife. Jesus, will I ever get used to him calling me wife?

"I think..." I finish the task of unbuttoning his shirt, then shove it down his shoulders. The material catches around the tense bulge of his biceps, and I tug it down. He flicks the shirt away, places his hands on his thighs.

His shoulder muscles knot, his chest planes ripple, and the tendons of his neck stand out in relief. I rake my gaze down the expanse of his beautiful torso, the concave stomach, the pants that ride low on his hips. My pulse begins to thud and my heartbeat ratchets up. I am this close to throwing myself at him, wrapping myself around him, and straddling him, and riding against the rough fabric of his jeans until I come.

"You were saying?" The alphahole smirks, knowing full-well that I can barely string together a complete sentence right now.

"I think..." I mumble, "that I should bind you up while I still have my faculties about me.

He holds up his hands, his expression innocent, and damn, if that doesn't make me suspicious. Arpad f'ing Beauchamp, offering himself up, all meek and tame... Nah, he's up to something. But what?

"Put your hands behind you," I order.

His smile widens.

"I mean it." I scowl, "Come on, Arpad, you promised you'd comply."

He hesitates, then obliges. He folds his arms behind his back, thrusts out his chest. Corrugated ripples of muscles stretch his torso, and my fingers itch to rake my nails down that gleaming expanse. Sweat beads my brow and my toes curl. Damn it, why am I holding back? I lean down, run my tongue around one erect male nipple.

A groan rumbles up his chest. I drag my nails across the hardened nub of his other nipple and his body jolts.

"Fuck me, what the hell are you trying to do, Sparks?"

"I'm getting to know my husband's body, you mind?"

He stiffens, then a chuckle rolls up his throat. "I don't mind at all, darling. In fact," he leans back, allowing me more space, "I insist you not stop until you get to know every part of me as well as yourself."

My heart thuds against my ribcage and a melting sensation coils in my chest. Suddenly, I want to feel myself naked and plastered to every inch of him.

I reach down, lower the zipper of his pants, and there's only Arpad. Hell. I stare at his engorged length that springs free and stands upright against his stomach.

"Fuck me."

"If you don't get on with it, that's exactly what I'm going to do," he growls.

I swallow, and tug on his pants. He lifts his hips, allows me to pull off his pants. I straighten, unable to take my gaze off his thick cock. Its head almost purple with the intensity of his arousal, beads of precum lace the slit on the crown. My mouth waters and my chest hurts. The flesh between my legs aches with so much need that my legs tremble. I bend, grab the rope, then straddle him, one knee on each side of his waist. He tips up his head, his blue eyes stalking my every move as I reach around and begin to wind the rope around the arms he still has folded behind him. With every move, my still clothed breasts brush his chest. The heat of his body seems to intensify; the strength of his dominance pushes into my chest, pins me down as I manage to loop around his wrists, once, twice, a few more times. I knot the rope, tug to secure it again and again. My twists are nowhere as neat as how he'd bound me—I can't even see what I'm doing—but it will have to do.

I lean back, perch on his lap, then glance up into his face.

"Done?" He lifts an eyebrow.

"I'm just getting started." I push back a little more, then reach between us to grip his pulsing shaft.

His breath catches and a shudder rolls under his skin as I massage him from base to tip, and again. I don't take my gaze off of his face as his features twist, as his breathing grows heavier, and as his chest muscles ripple and flex, like there's an animal somewhere inside waiting to break loose.

I slide one hand lower to cup his heavy balls and he throws his head back and growls. The sound is so primitive, so feral, liquid heat slides from between my legs.

Sweat beads his forehead; his jaw hardens as he lowers his head. "You're fuckin' killing me, Sparks."

A vein throbs at his temples and the skin around his eyes tightens. Color smears his cheeks and my nipples tighten until they are almost painful to bear.

I rise up on my knees, reach under my dress to push my panties aside, then I position myself over his swollen dick and sink down.

Arpad

She impales herself on my cock, and fuck me, but the sensation of her pussy clenching my length as she sinks down on me, until I am completely wrapped in her melting heat, is the single most perfect moment of my life. I am not a spiritual person, but surely, the white light that flashes behind my eyes right now is as close to oneness as I'm going to get, right?

I gaze into her upturned face and the sight of her flushed features, her parted lips, her tits bouncing under her dress as she begins to ride me...is an image that will be etched into my memory forever.

She digs her fingers into my shoulders, clenches her inner muscles around my thickness. She squeezes her thighs around the outside of mine and rotates her hips.

Heat blasts up my spine. My groin hardens, my cock lengthens inside her, and damn it, but I've had enough. I piston my hips upward, and slam into her, even as I begin to work at the rope she's bound around my wrists.

She gasps aloud, lowers her chin and stares at me from under heavy eyelids. "Ohmigod," she moans, "oh, Ari, oh my—"

I chuckle, "Love it when I render you speechless, baby."

She leans in close enough for our eyelashes to tangle. "You said you'd let me take the lead," she pouts.

"I said," I thrust up and into her with enough force for her entire body to jolt, "that I'd let you restrain me, and I have. And now I'm going to fuck you with my hands tied behind my back. I'm going to tear into your pretty little pussy until your clothes tear."

"Oh my." Her pupils dilate, her lips tremble, she clamps her melting core around my length, and goosebumps rise on my skin. My vision narrows, my pores pop, and all of my senses hone in on her.

"Hold on, baby."

She digs her fingernails into my skin with enough pressure to draw blood, and hell, if that doesn't turn me on further.

I pump up and into her, again and again. With every impact she moans, whimpers, then throws her head back and wheezes, "I'm going to—"

"Come all over my dick, Sparks. Come for me."

With a low, keening cry, she arches her spine back and shatters.

She slumps into me, and instantly, I move. I yank free of my restraints, flip her over on her back and peer down at her. I reach for her panties, tear them off of her, and she gasps. She opens her eyelids, holds my gaze as I hook my fingers into the neckline of her dress and tug. The fabric tears down the center and she half screams, "Ari, what the fuck? I love this dress."

"And I love you more than anything else. I'll buy you enough dresses to fill up this yacht, hell, to fill up an entire apartment, if you want."

"I don't need that, you crazy man." She reaches up to wind her arms around my neck. "I only want you in my arms, your dick inside me, your tongue worshipping me, your legs entwined with mine as you bring me to orgasm."

"I knew it," I shake my head, "I've created a sex maniac."

"Only for your body, your lips, your mouth, your beautiful cock which, if you don't put it inside me right this moment, I'll—"

I surge forward and enter her in one long, smooth stroke.

"A...Ah..." she stutters. Her eyes roll back in her head.

"You were saying?" I chuckle.

"Hmm, what?" She clenches her inner muscles around my shaft, and bloody hell, my thighs spasm and my groin hardens. I bring her leg up and around my waist, then plant my elbows on each side of her shoulders. I piston my hips forward and plunge into her with enough force that her body moves up the bed.

I swipe my palm up her other leg and coax her to wind it around me, then grip her hips, to pin her in place.

Bending my face close to hers, I close my mouth over hers. I slide my tongue in between her lips, suck on her mouth, coax her to open herself to me completely. Then I propel my hips forward and slide into her, again and again, until the tension at the base of my spine tightens.

Under me, her body shudders. She wraps her arms and legs around me, plasters those beautiful breasts against me, then rocks up and into me, receiving all of me, finally arching against me.

I tear my mouth from hers, stare into her face, "Look at me, baby."

She cracks open her lids and her golden eyes blaze at me. This woman... She owns me, possesses me. Nothing I do will ever be enough to show her what she means to me.

"Sparks." I swallow, then brush my lips against hers, "Come with me, darling."

I pull back, then slide into her, bottoming out, hitting that spot inside of her which I know drives her wild.

Her entire body seems to hum, then she bends her spine and shatters against me. Her tight core clamps around my length and the tautness in my groin vibrates out, growing bigger, wider. The reverberations engulf me, rock me, my balls draw up, and with a groan, I empty myself inside of her. I slump down onto my elbows, lower my head and nuzzle that spot at the side of her throat where her scent is the most concentrated.

"You okay, baby?" I kiss her soft, dewy skin.

She hums.

"You sure?"

She nods her head.

Her shoulders shudder, she bites down on her lower lip, and a tear runs down from the corner of her eyes.

My heart stutters and a hot sensation stabs at my ribcage. "Sparks?" I roll over, pull her onto my chest, and cradle her. "Shh, what's wrong, sweetheart?"

"You," she hiccups, "you are what's wrong."

I stiffen, caress her spine, rub soothing circles across her back, down the curve of her hips. "Explain that to me, darling."

"You, with all of your endearments and your perfect cock, and your ability to fuck me until I come, every time. Do you know how wrong that is?"

"Huh?" I frown. "You'll have to explain that further, babe."

She pulls back in the circle of my arms and I loosen my grip, enough for her to crawl up until her face is directly over mine.

She gazes into my eyes with such intensity that heat sears the back of my neck. "What is it?" I mutter. "You can tell me anything, you know?"

She nods.

"Anything at all," I prompt, "I'll set the world on fire. Hell, I'll give up sailing if you ask." I wince. "Okay, maybe not that."

She chuckles, then bumps her fist against my shoulder, "A child," she mumbles, "I want you to get me pregnant, Ari. I want your child, our child, a child that has the best of you and me, and maybe some of the not good parts too. Sometimes, I want to hold a baby in my arms so much that it feels real, it feels as if I can see her, hold her, sense her, smell her fresh innocence. I can visualize her, imagine her, see her grow up to be the most amazing person in the world ever. Know what I mean?"

I swallow down the ball of emotion that blocks my throat. I bring her close, curl her into me, "I know, babe, I want that too."

She buries her nose in my chest and inhales. I can't stop the smile that curves my lips. "I'm so sorry for not trying my best to impregnate you the first time around. I didn't stick to my end of the bargain. I may have a small problem with letting go of control."

"You don't say," she snorts. "You're just a dominant, obnoxious asshole, you know that?"

"I can't make excuses for that; it's what I am." I lower my head and press a kiss to the top of her head. "It's also why you can't resist me."

"Oh?"

"Yep," I hook my finger under her chin, raise her head so she meets my gaze, "But I'm going to do everything in my power to make you happy, starting with getting you pregnant."

"Promise?"

"Promise."

*TO FIND OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT TURN THE PAGE TO READ
BILLIONAIRE'S SINS*

BILLIONAIRE'S SINS

1

"The fact that I am going to die one day and everyone around me is going to die, and eventually, no one will remember me makes me feel so weird..."

-From Ava's diary

Ava

"Were you with her when you were married to Mom?"

My father's face pales. Raisa gasps from her seat on the other side of the settee.

"That's not fair, Ava," he admonishes me without raising his voice. "You know I loved your mother."

"And she loved you."

"She'd have wanted me to be happy," he murmurs.

"She wouldn't've wanted you to marry her best friend," I snap. "Not so soon after her death."

"Actually," his lips twist, "this was her idea."

"What?" I blink. "I don't believe it."

"When your mother found out that she was suffering from cancer and had only months to live, she swung into action. She asked Lina to move in with us so we could spend time together, to get comfortable."

"She asked Auntie Lina to move in so she could take care of her," I protest.

"And...so she could ensure that the two of us would give our relationship a chance to work."

"I..." I swallow and my heart begins to drum so hard in my chest that I am sure it's going to burst out of my rib cage. "It's not possible."

My father gives me a sad smile. "Why would I lie to you?"

"Because..." the words choke in my throat, "because you want to paint your relationship in a favorable light with me and Raisa? Because you want us to not hate you for marrying another woman?"

"You're upset about your mother leaving us. You miss her—"

"Don't you?" I frown at him.

"Every single moment of my life. After she died, I wanted to kill myself."

"Dad," I say, shocked.

"It's true." He looks at Raisa, then back at me. "I never wanted to admit it, because what father wants to be seen as weak in front of his children?"

"We aren't kids anymore. We could have handled it if you had shared some of your grief with us. Maybe we could have helped you."

"You were busy trying to get your degree and you—" he turned to Raisa, "you were building your career."

"We'd have made time for you; we'd have found a way," I insist.

"I wouldn't have wanted to take more out of that crucial time in your lives." He shakes his head. "No, your mother was right. She knew I wouldn't be able to go on alone. Even from beyond the grave, that woman made sure I was taken care of. And she chose Lina for it."

"You turned to Lina," I say quietly. "You found comfort in her arms. How long did you wait before Mother was gone before you shagged her?"

"Ava," Raisa snaps, "enough."

"Enough?" I gesture to my father, "Look at him. He doesn't even deny it. Tell me, Dad, how long did you wait after Mum was gone before you turned to her?"

"The truth is, I was in a relationship with Lina before I met your mother."

"What?" Raisa and I exclaim at the same time.

"Then, I met your mother and... I fell headlong in love."

"No." I gape. "This can't be true."

"I loved them both," he holds my gaze, "but I chose your mother."

"And mum knew about your relationship with Lina?"

"They were best friends," he mutters. "They told each other everything. Did everything together, those two." His lips quirk, "I always joked there were three of us in that relationship."

His features brighten, and for a few seconds, he seems younger than his fifty-five years. God, he's so young. My mother was only fifty-three, too young to die. They had deserved so much more time together. But apparently, the universe had other plans for both of them. Now, she is in a grave and my father... He is getting ready to marry again. To a woman I've known my entire life. Who'd been with us on so many family holidays. Who was always a welcome guest in our house. I crinkle my eyebrows. Yeah, she'd always been there for us... She'd baby sat us, spent enough time at home to help us with our homework while my mother was busy painting and my father away traveling on work. She'd been here for all my big milestones.

"Oh, my god," I gasp aloud. "That's it."

"What?" Raisa scowls. "What are you thinking?"

I turn to my father, "Lina's always been in love with you too, hasn't she?"

Raisa stares at me. "What are you talking about?"

"Aunty Lina," I snap. "She never got over you. It's why she never married. Why she hung around us all the time. Hell, I bet she was very happy when Mum finally passed so she could finally move in. Did the two of you have an affair behind her back even before she fell sick? Did you—?"

My father holds up his hand. "Stop," his voice rises, "stop that right now."

"Wow." I shake my head. "Look at you, all defending her now."

"I will not allow you to speak like that of a woman who's wished nothing but the best for us."

"You're not denying it, though. She did carry a torch for you all this time."

My father rubs the back of his neck. "Like I said, we dated. But after I met your mother, it was only her and no one else. I couldn't see myself living my life with anyone but her."

"So, the two of you didn't sleep together while you were married to Mother, before she fell sick?"

Raisa gasps again, "Really, Ava, what's wrong with you?"

"It's fine, Raisa. Best to clear this up right now." My father gazes at me steadily. "I never slept with anyone else except your mother until," he swallows, "until your mother asked me to sleep with Lina."

I gape, "You mean, she asked you two to..."

My father nods, "Your mother wanted us to share a bed while she was alive."

"What?"

My father rises to his feet and walks to the window. He stares out for a few seconds, then turns to me. "She insisted. She did everything in her power to bring us together."

"Oh, and you happily obliged?" My heart begins to race and my pulse pounds at my temples. Adrenaline laces my blood and I jump to my feet. "Mum was on medication, half out of her mind with pain. She likely didn't know what she was asking for—"

"Don't dishonor your mother's memory." He turns on me. "You know she was cogent right until the end. The cancer may have eaten away at her body, but her mind was sharp until the last moment."

I swallow down the tears that threaten. Damn it, my beautiful, proud mother, the glorious woman who had been my role model until the end, the gentle soul who could soothe my fears away with a single word... She had been the most intelligent woman I'd ever known, the most talented artist—who had never had the kind of success she'd deserved. It's why she'd never wanted me to pursue a creative profession, had wanted me to become a doctor. She was the reason that I had tried, until I couldn't keep up the charade. I had left medical school and she had been heartbroken. Sometimes, I wonder if it wasn't the shock of that which had brought on the cancer. Don't go there. Not now. Not when you're trying to hold it together for the sake of protecting her memory, her legacy. Everything that she had built her entire life.

"If you expect me to stay quiet just because Mum signed off on this marriage, then you are mistaken." Shit, what are you saying? You are going to hurt him; you know that. But I can't stop speaking, can't stop the horrible words from pouring out. "If you marry...that...that woman," I swallow, "I'll... I'll never forgive you, Dad."

My father's gaze intensifies. "You're so adamant, so focused on what only you can see. You're so like her."

The tears I've been keeping down well up and spill from the corners of my eyes. I wipe them away, swallowing down the ball of emotion that clogs my throat. "If I were anything like her, I'd be able to stop you from marrying again, so soon after she's gone."

"It's been six months, Ava," my father says in a low voice. "I'm tired and lonely. You girls have your lives, your careers—"

"One which you still don't approve of, by the way," I mutter.

"Your mother and I wanted the best for you. And it's true, when you said that you couldn't pursue the medical profession, we were shattered. But that's only because we wanted you to have a secure career."

"I have a secure career now." As a belly dancer, whose dance studio is struggling for funds. But I don't say that aloud.

"I am proud of you, Ava."

"Are you?"

He nods. "You persisted in your dreams, never backed down. You went after what you wanted and made it happen."

"And me?" Raisa scowls at both of us. "What about me?"

"You're the one I can always rely on to smooth over the cracks in the family."

"Don't do it, Dad." I plead, "Please, just because she asked you to do it, doesn't mean you have to marry Lina. The least you can do is honor her memory by not replacing her in your life."

"I am honoring your mother's memory. By living." He fixes his gaze on me. "Can't you see that?"

"Oh Dad." I bite down on the inside of my cheek, "I know you have a right to be happy, and I want that for you, I do. But replacing Mum..."

"I am not replacing her, Ava." He walks over to me. "No one can. I am simply doing my best to keep going."

"I see." And I do, I really do. It's just, I can't get my head around another woman taking my mother's place in his life. And I don't know if it's better that it's her best friend, or if that makes it worse. "It's just, I need some time to get my head around that. Is that okay?"

He peers into my eyes, then nods. "Okay." His lips quirk. "Okay, Ava."

I turn to leave and Dad calls out, "Wait. You'll come to the wedding, won't you?"

"I... I am not sure," I say without turning around. Then I walk out the door.

2

Two days later

"Each blossom still blooms in its field; each child still clutches your hand; each friend still lingers in your heart. And that...is where time goes."

I glance at the words I've scrawled out in my diary.

My heart stutters. The hair on my forearms rises. Time. Why am I so obsessed with time? I am only nineteen; I have my entire life in front of me. So why do I often ponder how fast time goes by? How it can all be over in a matter of minutes... Blink, and it's gone. A mother playing with her son as an infant one second; the next, he's all grown up and she's shooting a movie with him as her subject. The son, who is the mirror image of her first and only love, the man she fell for, her soulmate...who turned out not to be. And now she has him... The son, who is the image of the father. Stop it... All these thoughts that meld and flow and turn my brain to mush. Even Twilight was more cheerful than this.

I hear a splash from the pool, and glance around from my perch on the chair in the far corner of the pool area. I am at my friend Summer's townhouse in Primrose Hill. It's February and freezing in London. Which is why I had grabbed my book and my blanket, then crawled over to the far end of the pool area. I'd hidden behind the wide trunk of the oak-tree, then settled down to write.

People hate the cold. Me? I thrive on it. Darkness is my friend, my companion. It clothes me, hides me from the sight of the world, like this blanket that I've wrapped around myself. If I look down, I can see the slope of Primrose Hill fall away below, the grass an undulating carpet that stretches down to the canal. This early in the day, it is quiet, except for a few joggers... And the man who'd dived into the pool and is now swimming laps.

From my hiding place, I can see his massive shoulders flex as he cuts through the water. He propels forward, leaving ripples in his wake. He's moving so fast, he's almost a blur as his powerful arms slice through the water. He hits one end of the swimming pool, then pushes away and begins to swim toward the other side. He zips forward, flings out an arm, thrusts the other back so his body shoots ahead. He lunges onward, keeps going until he hits the other edge of the pool, then turns back. I watch as he does five more laps of the pool... Hell, is he training for a triathlon or something? My entire body hurts, thinking of the punishment he's putting himself through. What the hell is he trying to prove anyway?

He hits the edge of the pool, throws his arms over the rim and holds on. Then he presses his hands down on the ground, hauls himself up. He pitches his leg up and over. The corded muscles of his thigh tauten as he raises himself up and over the side. Water streams down from his sculpted chest, the cut planes of his back, and pours down the sides of his thighs. He raises his arms, throws back his head and stretches. For a second, he stands poised. The first rays of the sun hit his skin, and he seems to sparkle. My throat dries. All of my nerve endings pop. Moisture pools in my core. A shiver runs down my spine.

He turns, giving me a full-frontal view and I draw in a breath. I saw him at my friend Karina's wedding, a few weeks ago. Only difference, he had more clothes on...and he wasn't this wet. Nor was I—ha! Nor did he have his thick hair slicked back to outline the contours of his scalp. Nor did the hollows under his cheekbones seem this prominent. I trace my gaze down his hooked nose to his thin upper lip, made all the more pronounced by his full lower lip, which seems soft, pouty enough for me to sink my teeth into and suck. My belly clenches. My core softens. I squeeze my thighs together, watch as he moves toward the deckchair and picks up a towel. He drags it down his massive chest, across that ripped stomach, down the crotch of his black swimsuit, which outline what he's packing. I bite down on the inside of my cheek. Is that man packing or what?

Is he some kind of athlete? He has that strength and confidence that comes with someone who works a physical profession. Or else, he trains a lot. As evidenced by this morning's work out.

He loops the towel around his neck, straightens, then meets my gaze.

I pull back. "Shit, shit, shit." Did he see me? Of course, he spotted me. He seems like the kind of man who wouldn't miss a thing in his surroundings.

Go on, get out there and wave at him or something. Tell him 'Hi.'

"Hi." I wiggle my fingers in the air in his general direction, too embarrassed to look that way again.

"Hello, there." A gruff voice sounds above me and I yelp. My heart pounds in my chest as I glance up, straight at eye-level with his gorgeous crotch—now covered by his pants. He'd managed to pull those on before heading over, apparently. Not that it does anything to hide, but rather, reveals the gargantuan proportions of whatever it is that it encloses.

Jeez, get your mind out of the gutter, bitch.

I raise my gaze, and hell, if the view doesn't get even more serious. Dense muscles, packed one on top of the other, moving, slipping, sliding as he draws in a breath. An intricate design inches over one shoulder, and damn, if I don't want to jump up and peek around to find out how it continues across his back.

He folds his arms across his chest and his biceps bulge.

Heat sears my blood. My thighs clench.

I tilt my head back, and further back. The sun chooses that moment to shine on him again, shadowing his features. This guy is a sun trap; that's for sure. The golden glow folds about him, caresses him, so sparks of amber flare in the air around him. I blink, and his face comes into view. Dark close-cropped hair slicked back from the water. His eyes are golden...amber with a hint of black in their depths. Like he has secrets which he holds close to his chest. Thick eyelashes that sweep down over high cheekbones you could cut yourself on. I curl my fingers into fists and my nails dig into my flesh.

A scar mars the expanse of his left cheek, and somehow that only heightens how perfect the rest of his face is.

"You okay?" He tilts his head.

"Of course." My voice cracks and I clear my throat. "Why wouldn't I be?"

"You seem like you saw something...unexpected?"

"Uh, you're not a vampire, are you?"

He blinks, then chuckles. A full-throated, deep reverberation that sucker-punches me in the gut. My thighs tremble. My toes curl. I watch as those full lips of his quirk.

"I'm Edward." He holds out his hand.

"Wha—" I gape, "you're kidding me, right?"

He frowns. "Excuse me?"

"Your...your name," I choke out. "It can't be Edward."

"I am not following..." His cultured tone carries a note of warning, which I ignore.

"I mean, you can't be called Edward. Who put you up to this? Was it Isla?" Only she knows about my slightly stalkerish obsession with Edward, from Twilight, and surely, she wouldn't tell the others, right?

"Ah." The wrinkles on his forehead dissipate. "You're Isla's friend?"

I hold out my hand, "Ava."

"Ava?" He frowns.

He touches my hand and the rest of the words dry in my throat. Goosebumps flare on my skin. His gaze widens and the planes of his chest twitch. Did he feel that shock of the impact as well? I try to pull back my hand but he holds onto it.

"Why are you hiding, Eve?"

"I'm not," I scowl. "and that's not my name."

"It suits you better," he tilts his head, "and you haven't answered my question yet."

"Which one?"

"What are you doing here?"

"I came here to write," I bite the inside of my cheek, "only... I heard the splashing in the pool and I turned around and spotted you swimming.

"And you watched?" His lips curl in a hint of a smirk.

I glance away. "I, uh, may have peeked a bit."

"Did you like what you saw?"

I jerk my head in his direction, to find him watching me closely. His expression is one of curiosity, like I am some kind of lab specimen whose responses he is clocking in a clinical way. The hair on the back of my neck rises. I want to glance away, break the connection with this man, but I can't. My pulse rate ratchets up. Despite the chill in the morning, my palms begin to sweat. I clear my gaze, force the words out, "Wh...why Eve?"

"You know why." He peruses my features. "And you haven't answered the question."

"Do I?" My heart begins to race. "And what question?"

"You know the answer to both." He folds his arms across his chest and his impressive biceps bulge. Heat blooms between my legs and I resist the urge to rub my thighs together.

"I'm not sure what you're referring to," I say stiffly, "and no, I don't find you attractive."

His grin widens, and the impact of that smile... Oh, my. His teeth sparkle against the tan of his skin, his features brighten, the charisma pours off of him, and honestly, I can't glance away. I take in the gleam in his eyes, the hair on his forehead drying and already curling a little.

I blink. "Aren't you cold?"

The breeze picks up, and a strand of hair whips across my face.

He releases my hand, only to lean down and push the hair aside. Goosebumps pop on my skin. My stomach trembles and my heart begins to race. I watch as his gaze holds mine, as the pupils of his eyes dilate. His nostrils flare, and he straightens. "I'd better be going. Sinclair's expecting me for breakfast."

"Oh, that's right. Me too." I'd promised Summer I'd join them for breakfast. I jump up, and the movement brings me close to him. The heat of his body slams into my chest and my throat dries. I stare up at him, as he glares down his nose. Something like anger steals across his features, before he schools all expression from his face. A strange sensation grips my chest. I draw in a breath and the oxygen rushes to my head. Shit, when had I forgotten to breathe? He steps back, and the cold air rushes in. I shiver.

He pivots, walking toward the pool house. I take in the tattoo of the snake that crawls diagonally across his back. Whoa! That's one mean-ass tattoo. It's as spectacular as it is unexpected against the much paler skin of his back. The forked tongue of the snake is thick in girth, and within it are etched tribal signs that I can't decipher. The edge of it flows over his shoulder, which is what I must have seen earlier. The scales on the snake are patterned in color and the triangular head has slitted eyes which seem to follow me as I jump to my feet, then tug the blanket around me, hold my book close and follow.

"Hold on," I protest, "your legs are too long."

He slows his pace and I catch up.

"So, you are a friend of Sinclair's?"

He nods.

"You're one of the Seven, aren't you?" I peer up into his face, "I saw you at Arpad and Karina's wedding."

His jaw hardens. Now what did I say for him to seem angry?

"Surely, you remember?" I mutter. "Didn't you notice me?"

"I don't notice every girl who crosses my path."

I blink, then pause my steps, "Now, that's not fair. I could have sworn that you saw me there. Besides, I am not a girl."

He pulls forward, and I run to catch up. "Did you hear what I said?" I demand. "I am not a—"

"Girl." He stops so quickly that I bump into him. The scent of chlorine, and under that, the fresh-cut grass scent of him teases my nostrils. I draw in a breath, filling my lungs with his earthy essence. Moisture pools in my center and my nerve-endings seem to fire all at once. Why the hell does he have to smell so utterly delectable?

He pivots to face me and the heat of his body seems to turn up a notch. Does this man have a furnace under his skin, or what?

He looks me up and down. "What are you then?" he asks.

"What—" I blink.

"You said you are not a girl, so what are you?"

I tip up my chin. "A woman." I square my shoulders. "I am a woman."

"And I..." He squares his shoulders, "I am sworn to celibacy."

3

Edward

"Excuse me?" She gapes. "What...what did you say?"

Shit, what the hell had I been thinking? Why had I blurted that out? Because I am attracted to her... There, the simple truth. I've never been so affected by a woman as I have been since I first saw her at City Hall when she'd appeared next to the bride...and my world had reduced, shrunk down to her eyes, her mouth... That aura of her which shines so brightly, so purely. So innocent. How old is she anyway?

How could I have known then, that she would be trouble? That every single thing I'd sworn off, every vow I had taken... All of it would culminate in this test. This...trial that God has selected for me. And I cannot give in. No way. Not by all that I hold dear to me. There is space for only one attraction, one relationship, one complete obsession. To the One Above.

So, I had taken the easy way out. The cowardly way, you say? Maybe, but it is better to be upfront about what I am. I need to be clear that there can never be anything between us...

Hell, why am I even thinking along those lines? Not that she seems unduly affected by me, but that spark of awareness between us... I hadn't imagined that. Or the way her pupils had dilated, or how she had leaned in to me, how she'd sniffed me. She says she's not a girl anymore... but I beg to differ. She's all female, all coltish limbs and a translucent skin that reflects whatever she is feeling.

"I have taken a vow." I step back from her. "I have promised to live a celibate life. I have completely given my life to Christ and the people I have been called to serve."

I turn away from her, head for the clothes that I'd placed on the pool-chair.

The hair on the nape of my neck prickles.

I glance over my shoulder to find her staring at me. Her gaze runs down my back, then back to my face, as I snatch up my shirt and shrug into it.

"I... I don't understand."

"Me neither." I grab my towel, then head for the guesthouse that I occupy whenever I stay over at the Sterlings', which isn't often. But when I'd wanted to leave yesterday, the rest of the Seven wouldn't hear of it. With Arpad getting married, it means all of us are now hitched... Well, except me... And Baron. I stiffen. Why the hell am I thinking of him? The friend who'd turned his back on us and left. Not that he hasn't been in touch. He's communicated through snail mail, writing on occasion, like when Damian was hesitant about getting married to Julia. Or when there is a specific investment that Sinner or Saint aren't sure about, though how he knows this is beyond me. The two of them run 7A Investments, one of the leading financial services firms in the country. Between them, they've managed to invest our money such that we'll be living off the wealth created for this entire lifetime. Not that I am going to touch a penny of it.

My investments go toward FOK Media, aka Full of Kindness Media, the non-profit that the Seven set up to finance upcoming talent in return for a portion of their earnings. I'd also put money toward my own trust that supports the most vulnerable and those in need.

As for myself, I stay in a small two-bedroom home, owned by the parish I am devoted to serving. The place where I need to return before things get further out of hand. It had been wrong to approach her in the first place. I'd seen her watching me, had recognized her— Of course, I had. I couldn't have missed her—and then I had approached her. I should have walked away, but I couldn't resist. I had to see her once more. And now I have to atone for the sinful thoughts I entertained.

I clench my fists at my sides.

"Wait." Her footsteps approach me, and I increase my pace.

I cannot be alone with her, not for one more second.

"What are you trying to tell me, Edward?"

I reach the guesthouse, twist open the door and step in. I turn to find her hesitating at the entrance and beckon her in.

She hesitates and I tilt my head. "Come on, I have something to show you."

"You do?" Her forehead furrows.

"You need to see this."

She blows out a breath and follows me. I head inside, to the bedroom, take my collar from where I'd placed it on the bedstead. I slip it on, then turn to find her poised at the doorway.

Her face pales; her jaw drops.

"You're a...a—"

"Priest." I nod.

"B...but," she opens and shuts her mouth, "you weren't wearing a collar at the wedding yesterday."

"I'm a diocesan priest. I wear the collar when I have anything pastoral to do. I don't usually wear it when out with friends."

"I see." She shrugs off her blanket, folds it over her arm. Her gaze skitters away. "I knew it was too good to be true. Of course, it is." She retreats into the living room, drops the blanket and her book on the couch and begins to pace. "I mean, just once, things couldn't be easy for me, right? Everything has to be complicated. Just this once, couldn't things have worked out the way they do for everyone else? Of course, not." She throws up her hands. "This is not fair, not fair at all."

"Are you..." I follow her as she stomps back-forth-back, across the length of the floor of the living room. "Are you talking to yourself?"

"Shh." She turns to me and frowns. "I'm trying to figure this out."

"By talking aloud?"

"Hey, don't mock it until you try it. Did you know talking to yourself helps you organize your thoughts?" She shoves her purple-tipped hair back from her face.

Who dyes their hair purple? Ava does, that's who.

"According to psychologists, talking out loud to yourself helps you clarify your thoughts," she mumbles. "It helps to figure out what's important, and firm up any decisions you're contemplating."

"Ah," I allow my lips to tip up, "and what decision are you contemplating right now?"

She flushes. "I am not sure you want to know."

"Don't I?"

She shakes her head. "I don't think it's right for me to share what I am thinking with a priest... Not unless I was in confession, but then, wouldn't you have to keep it secret? I mean, aren't you bound by a code of conduct of some kind? And damn, but I admit, I may have eyed you up a little out there earlier. Does that even count as sin? Is it made worse by the fact that you are priest? Is it—"

"Stop." I hold up my hand.

She purses her lips together, then draws in a breath. "Sorry," she mutters, "I tend to babble when I'm nervous."

"I didn't notice." I allow my smile to widen. This girl—she's adorable. She twists her fingers together, hunches her shoulders, then snaps them back. "Uh, guess I should...go then?"

She turns to leave, and something hot stabs at my chest. Okay, so I can't have any kind of relationship with her... What the—? How had I even allowed myself to think that? Since becoming an ordained priest eight years ago, I've focused on my role, the routine, the discipline. The simplicity of my existence means everything to me. It helps me ground my thoughts, allows me to focus on what is important: serving others, helping them, listening to them, and helping to alleviate their worries.

In their comfort, I draw comfort. By easing their pain, I breathe easier. When I help a soul cross over, a part of me opens up to possibilities, and when I baptize a newborn, look into their clear eyes and welcome them to the house of the Lord, I redeem myself.

That... The regiment of how I live my life, gives me the framework upon which to anchor myself. When I am in that space, I don't have to worry about what happened to me, how the incident affected me, how I had fallen apart after the kidnapping, when the Seven and I had been taken and held in captivity for a month; how I had pulled myself together, only to fall apart again.

Boys join the army to learn discipline... For me, it had been the calling from God that had saved me. And surely, it is God who sent this girl, this absolutely stunning, untainted-by-life soul to me.

Or is it the devil trying to lure me away from Him?

No, not possible. I shake my head. This... It doesn't feel wrong. There's nothing unnatural about what I feel for her. Surely, it has to be the Lord wanting me to learn something from her? That's why he sent her.

What is this test that I am facing? And do I have the courage to go through with it?

Can I rise to the occasion; face the fears that her proximity evokes in me?

And if I don't—if I chose not to accept this ultimate trial... Would that not mean that I have learned nothing from all the time I have spent in serving the Lord?

If this is his way of testing me... And surely, it has to be. There could be no other explanation for why, out of everything I've encountered thus far, she stands out like a beacon...

The air around her crackles with a vitality, a strange sensation... Almost one of hope, of life, of joy... Emotions I've seen amongst my parishioners, that I have studied from afar, even joined them in celebrating... But never once, experienced personally. Not until now.

Is this why you sent her my way, my Lord? Is it a sign that I need to open myself further, allow the emotions in, sense their sting, revel in how they torture me with everything that I cannot and will not allow myself to feel? So be it, then. I follow your command.

"Ava," I call out as she opens the door, "wait."

4

Ava

His voice stops me. I pause at the threshold.

"Ava."

I turn, wait for him to speak.

"I ..." He shoves his hands inside his pockets. "I'm sorry," he finally says.

"For what?"

"For giving you the wrong impression earlier." He stares at me. "Perhaps some of the fault is with me too."

"Oh?" I stare. Is he going to apologize to me? Why? Because I was drawn to him? Please, don't... Please, please, don't. My cheeks heat, and I glance away, "I mean, seriously, it was nothing." I hold my blanket in front of me. Can I hide under it, maybe? No, that would only look silly... As if anything could be worse than our earlier encounter? Gosh, how could I have been attracted to him? He's a priest... Someone sworn to not sleep with anyone, and I can't stop staring at his perfect features. Those high cheekbones, his dark hair cut short at the sides, long on top, that hooked nose, the mean upper lip...that gorgeous throat I want to lick, the width of his shoulders that fills the doorway, cutting out the sight of the room behind him. He draws in a breath and the sculpted planes of his chest stretch the fabric of his shirt. Not that I am staring or anything. Of course, not.

I clear my throat, then glance away.

"I should be the one apologizing." I clutch at my blanket with palms that are slippery with sweat. Dear God... What's wrong with me? And by the way, I need to have words with You. It's not fair that You dangle someone as luscious as this man in front of me only to claim him and tell me that I can't have him. OMFG. I am seriously losing it, if I am having conversations with the Power Above in my head. "I shouldn't have sneaked looking at you earlier, and well... It's just, you're so damn gorgeous to look at, and well, I couldn't help it."

"Did you just tell me that I'm gorgeous to look at?"

I glance up to find him staring at me with surprise and bemusement.

"Yes," I shuffle my feet, "I guess I did."

"Do you always say everything that comes into your head?"

"Kind of," I hunch my shoulder, "though honestly, I seem to have even less of a filter when you're around."

"Do I make you nervous?" One corner of his lip curls...just a tad. Holy hell, he smirked. No, he totally did. And damn, if that isn't the hottest thing I have seen. Right after the Edward I'd read about in Twilight and imagined myself as Bella.

And here I am as Ava, and this is my Edward right here. Except, this scenario is all wrong. Shit. I'm tying myself in knots. I stare at him. "Are you sure you're a priest?"

He chuckles, "The last time I checked." He glances down at me, something like amusement and regret lacing his features. "Are you a...?" He tilts his head, "What do you do, Ava?"

"I'm a, uh, dancer."

"A dancer?" He frowns.

"Not ballet," I add quickly because that's what most people assume automatically, "more like, the exotic kind."

"Exotic kind?"

"A belly dancer." I twitch my hips, more out of habit than anything else. Okay, so maybe not completely... Maybe it's to take in how his nostrils flare as he lowers his gaze to my hips and stays there, as if fascinated by what he sees.

"A belly dancer, huh?" He finally raises his gaze to meet mine and those gorgeous golden-brown eyes of his blaze at me. Then he lowers his eye lashes, and when he raises them, all emotion is shorn from his features.

"I, uh, dropped out of university. I'd joined to study medicine, but somehow...half-way through my first year, I lost interest. Turns out, becoming a doctor requires a strong stomach. The first time I saw a cadaver, I fainted and then had nightmares for days. I couldn't enter the laboratory after that. Also, the smell of formaldehyde—the solution they use to preserve specimens? Turns out, I am allergic to it... So..."

I swallow.

"Shit. Uh... Shoot, I am sorry. I'm blabbing." I shuffle my feet. "All that untapped energy, you know, it needs an outlet. It's why I turned to dancing, and then started my own studio teaching belly dancing. It makes me happy, you know—dancing?" Stop it, what the hell are you doing? Pouring out your thoughts in a stream of consciousness? "In fact, my dream is to one day to have a home big enough to have a studio in it so whenever I want to dance, I'll have my own space. A place where I can just be myself... You know?" I bite the inside of my cheek. So much for trying to appear calm and composed. OMG, what's wrong with me? I wipe my clammy palms against the fabric of my dress.

"So, I make you nervous?" He quirks an eyebrow, curls his fists at his sides, and whoa, his knuckles are white. I tilt my head, take in the nerve that throbs at his temple, the way his chest rises and falls. Maybe... I'm not the only one affected. Maybe, he feels it too—the connection, this strange chemistry between us that's crackled since his gaze met mine. Only... It means nothing. It can't... He's a priest...and I? I'm a hot mess.

"You do." I step back. "You make me very unsure of myself, Ed—" I bite down on the inside of my cheek. Should I call him Edward? Father? Damn, this is not cool, not at all. "I really should go."

He lowers his chin, "Guess I'll see you for breakfast at the main house then?"

"Breakfast?"

"You are going to eat breakfast with Sinclair and Summer, I assume?"

"Ah," I swallow, "yes, of course."

He nods, then holds out his hand, "It's nice to meet you, Ava."

Nice? Okay, not the word I would have used, but if he wants to play it that way, well, so can I.

I tilt my head, "And you, Father."

His jaw tics. A mask seems to form from his features as he draws himself up to his full height. He's so tall that I have to tip my head all the way back to see his face. How can someone so big, so vital, someone whose every inch of his body is packed with sex appeal... How the hell could he have dedicated himself to a life where he'll never experience pleasures the likes of which I want to share with him?

And then, there's his personality... The intensity of his gaze, the depth I sense underneath that tightly controlled exterior. The strength of his dominance that he wears about himself, tightly cloaked, held back, as if he doesn't dare give in to the power of his complete self...because it would be too much for everyone around him. For the man he is, and make no mistake, he is one-hundred percent alpha male, would outshine anyone around him. Is that the depth of his sacrifice? The depth of what he'd given up to pursue his calling?

He holds my gaze, then nods. "Goodbye, Ava."

I clutch my blanket and book to my chest, then turn and head toward the main house. The hair on the nape of my neck rises and I know he's watching me as I put distance between us. My stomach clenches; my guts twist. Don't look back. Don't. My heart begins to hammer in my chest. This is just silly. Why the hell do I feel like I'm leaving a part of myself behind? I pause, glancing over my shoulder to find he's still there in the doorway. Our gazes connect; a thrill runs up my spine. My pores pop. Even across that distance I can make out the tension that coils those massive shoulders, those cut abs of his that are outlined by the fabric of the shirt he wears, the trim waist, the powerful thighs clad in pants that cling to his every groove, every ridge, every muscle that cords his legs.

I gulp. My throat closes. All the moisture in my body drains to my core. No, no, no, you can't think of him that way, remember. I avert my gaze, turn and half-run until I reach the main house. I let myself inside, then race up the stairs. I reach the landing of the first floor, and bump into someone.

"Hey, where's the fire?" Isla, one of my closest friends, asks.

It's inside me, all around me, is what I want to stay. I firm my lips, peer up into her face.

"You, okay?" she asks. "You look like you've seen a ghost.

No, just a man I want... Who is the last man on this earth I can have. Shit, why can't my life be more like one of those romance novels I love to read? Where the only thing standing between me and the hero is a string of inconsequential misunderstandings?

"Ava?" Isla touches my shoulders. "Say something."

"Something," I mutter.

She chuckles, "You want some coffee?" She grips my hand. "You seem chilled."

"I am," I admit, "I was out, uh, writing in my journal."

"You went out dressed like that?" She stares at my dress. "You didn't wear a jacket?"

"I had this." I nod to the blanket.

"You still seem frozen."

Maybe that's because of the surprise I just had? A cold sensation invades me. Shit, how could he be a priest? Seriously, a man who looks like that, who's vital, and hot and so sexy. How had he renounced the world? Or maybe, only monks do that. I have no idea what it means to devote oneself to the service of the church. How could I? My parents had been agnostic. I've never been drawn to any religion.

Then my mother had passed away and I'd been convinced that there definitely isn't a God. If there were, why had he taken my mother away from me?

"Ava?" Isla tugs on my arm, "Come on, let's get some coffee and breakfast, and you can tell me all about your adventures this morning."

"What adventures?" I frown, but allow her to lead me back the way I came. We walk into the large kitchen that looks out on the backyard— correction— that looks out on the entire freakin' slope of Primrose Hill. The money has its benefits, no doubt, but surely, too much of it can't be healthy. It blinds you to the real stuff—feelings, emotions, relationships... Hell, the only thing I know about myself is that I want to live as close to my true self as possible. Which means identifying what I want for myself in the first place.

She places two cups on the counter, then scoops coffee into the cafetière, before switching on the kettle to boil the water.

"The adventures that have put that dazed look on your face." She stabs a finger in my direction, "Fess up. Did you crawl out to meet someone?"

"What?" I blink, "No."

"You can tell me." She waggles her eyebrows. "You have a boyfriend hidden away you don't want the rest of us to meet?"

"Nothing like that." The kettle switches off, she turns, pours water over the coffee grounds, then stirs it, before lowering the plunger.

The scent of coffee wafts around me and I blink as if coming out of a mirage. I place my blanket and book on the island as she pours out the coffee, then offers me a mug. I top it up with cream and three spoonfuls of sugar, then take a sip.

"So," she asks, "what happened to send you tearing through the corridor like you were trying to get away from a shark."

"Do you believe in fate?" I query.

She blinks, then blows on the liquid in her mug. She takes a sip, sighs, then leads the way to one of the barstools.

I slip onto the one next to her, place my mug on the counter. "Well?" I ask. "Do you?"

"Of course." She gazes into the depths of the dark liquid in her mug. "And being as how so many of the Seven have found their match... When honestly, it's hard to believe any of them would ever end up together with someone else, based on the journeys that each of them has gone through..." She rubs her cheek. "It has to be fate...or destiny, or whatever you want to call it, guiding them to get together."

"But what if fate gives you mixed signals?" I rub my hand across my face.

"Mixed signals?"

I nod, "You know, like telling you to move forward yet holding you back, for some reason."

"I don't understand." She scowls. "Are you telling me you met someone, and you are sure you were destined to meet him, only now you think he can't be the one for you?"

"Kind of." I twist my fingers together. "It's more like, I shouldn't have been attracted to him in the first place, because he's unavailable."

"He's married?"

"No." I shake my head. "Kind of. He's in a relationship with someone else."

She gives me a hard look. "So, he's involved with someone else, and yet, he encouraged you?"

"Not knowingly." I wriggle around to find a more comfortable stance. "I mean, he didn't do anything to encourage me. It was me, making assumptions about him."

"But he told you he is with someone else?"

"That's the thing. He's not with someone else."

"So, he's available?" She frowns.

"No." I hunch my shoulders.

"So," she purses her lips, "he's not with someone else, but he's not available?"

I jut out my lower lip.

"What, is he a priest or something?" She chuckles.

I stare at her and my cheeks flame.

"Omigod." She opens and shuts her mouth, "No way, don't tell me."

I bury my head in my hands, "Oh...this is soooo embarrassing."

"Don't tell me." She grips my arm. "You're talking about Edward, aren't you?"

I nod, still not meeting her eyes. Jeez, does everyone know that he's a priest? How had I missed that memo? But then, I hadn't spent any time with the Seven. I'd seen Edward at Karina and Arpad's wedding, but he hadn't been wearing his priest's collar, so I could be forgiven for making that mistake, right?

"So, you had no idea he was a priest?" Her voice is filled with sympathy.

"I must be the only one who didn't know." I lower my hands, raise my gaze to hers. "I mean, look at the guy... He's...so hot, has so much presence. He's a walking orgasm, for hell's sake."

"Who's a walking orgasm?" Summer ambles over to us. She plucks the cup of coffee in front of me on the counter and takes a long satisfying sip. "Mmmm." She swallows, then glances between us, "So who were you talking about?"

"Edward," Isla blurts out, before I have a chance to tell her to shut up.

I glare at her and she raises her shoulders.

"The hot priest?" Summer places the cup of java back on the counter top, then walks over to a shelf near the refrigerator. She pulls out two boxes of cereal, pivots and takes a seat at the island. "Can't talk about sexual frustration without sugar."

She slides the box of Froot Loops to me, then dips into the box of Cinnamon Toast Crunch. Crunching down a mouthful, she leans forward, "So give."

I push away the cereal, pick up my cup of coffee. "Nothing to give."

"She's attracted to Edward," Isla adds.

"Argh," I groan, "now I feel like a fool."

"Because he's a priest?" Summer tilts her head.

"Umm, yeah?" I bury my nose in my cup. "Surely, it must be blasphemy or something to entertain thoughts of the sexual kind about a man dedicated to the Church?"

"I don't blame you." Summer's lips kick up at the corners. "That man makes me wanna go back to church."

"I bet there's a line of women lining up to go to mass when he preaches." Isla chuckles.

"I'm first in line for communion." Summer nods.

"You'll have to battle it out with me." Isla snorts.

"I'll simply get in line twice." Summer laughs.

"I'll be an altar server with nothing under my robes," Isla retorts.

"Wait... what?" My cheeks heat. "What the hell are you two going on about. Seriously?" I scowl at Isla. "Don't talk about him that way, okay?"

"Ooh." Isla bats her eyelids. "Woman's already getting possessive."

"I am not getting possessive." I grit my teeth. "I am simply stating that it's wrong to talk about a priest in those terms."

"Oh, dear." Isla blinks. "Oh, dear."

"What?" I frown.

"Oh, dear, oh, dear, oh, dear." Isla shakes her head.

"What, what?" I stare at her. "What the hell is wrong with you? Why do you suddenly sound like someone from a Jane Austen novel?"

"Because you're acting like one of the shy women who often appears in her stories?"

"I am not shy, and Jane Austen's women were feisty heroines who could hold their own." I hunch my shoulders. "Also, it's not all physical with him, okay? There's something else going on here... Something I can't put a finger on."

"You sense a connection with him," Summer scoops up more of her cereal. "And I'd be the first to say that's not something you should dismiss."

"What do you mean?"

"How many men do you think you are going to meet in life with whom you have that kind of instant link?"

"I don't know."

"Not many," she replies. "So, when you sense that kind of bond, you don't let it go. Only—"

"Only he's a priest?"

"There is that. And it's Edward we're talking about here. Everything I've heard about him from Sin, confirms to me that he's focused on the Church and his path. I've heard the rest of the Seven talk about how he'd never turn from it."

"Shit." I squeeze my eyes shut. I knew it. I mean, of course, I did. After all, I am attracted to him. And what I know about him, so far, has confirmed to me that he doesn't do anything by half measures. He is dedicated to the Church. No way, is he going to walk away. In fact, I shouldn't even be thinking about him in this fashion.

Summer grips my shoulder and I snap open my eyes.

"So, what are you going to do about it?" Her forehead is furrowed.

"What can I do?" I slink down further into my seat, "He's a priest, end of..."

"Is it?" Isla frowns. "Do you actually believe that?"

"Yes...No." I slide off the stool and begin to pace. "I don't know. I mean, a part of me wants to walk away. The other part insists that there's a reason that he's called Edward, right?"

There's silence, then the two of them look at each other. "You're talking about Twilight?" Isla leans back in her seat. "Tell me you're not... Not that I don't have a thing for Edward."

I shoot her a dirty look, and she holds up her hands. "I meant the character, not your Edward."

"He's not my Edward." I fold my arms about my waist. "And he probably never will be." I turn on them, "But...the fact that he's named after my favorite character ever; that has to be the only reason I am so strongly attracted to him... Right? And yet... There's this barrier between us, one which can't be overcome."

"Why can't it be overcome?" Isla scowls, "I know he's a priest, but men have given up a lot more for true love."

True love. Is it love? Or just lust? I wrap my arms about my waist, "I only just met the man."

"I wish I could tell you to walk away, but when you feel that connection," Summer thumps her chest, "it's not something you can easily ignore."

"What would you have me do?" I lean a hip against the island. "It's not like the challenge is easy to surmount." Although I'd certainly like to try to mount him, I think with a smirk.

"It never is," Isla retorts.

"I know... I know, but this situation... It's crazy. I mean, am I supposed to seduce him away from his calling?"

"Maybe," Isla concedes, "maybe not."

"What do you mean?"

"I understand your reticence in not doing anything to sway him from his path... It takes a special kind of person to follow his calling," she says slowly.

"That's what I mean. Who am I to stand between him...and...his..." I bite the inside of my cheek, "his loyalty, his devotion to the path he's decided on? I just met him... Hell, I don't even know how he feels about me... except..."

"Except?" Isla prompts me.

"He did apologize to me, in case he'd given me the wrong impression."

"Ah," Summer cups her chin in her hand, "so he's aware of the chemistry between the two of you."

I wince, "Should we even be using adjectives like chemistry? Somehow, it seems so wrong, given the context, you know?"

Isla pushes back from the table. "Woman, you are making my head ache, the way you are over analyzing this. I think you are putting too much emphasis on the fact that he's called Edward. Not that I have anything against the story, but this is real life, and it doesn't always follow a predictable storyline, know what I mean?"

"You're telling me?" I snort. "So what? I should ignore it completely?"

"Or just give it time, let it breathe, see how things develop," Isla offers. "Maybe the attraction will fizzle out—?"

Umm, I don't think so, but okay, I am willing to wait and see.

"Maybe he'll decide you're worth it?" Summer points out. "If his feelings develop further, maybe he'll do something about it?"

"Is that what you told Karma as well?" Karma, Summer's sister has been holed up in Sicily with her new hottie and Summer hasn't heard from her in a few months, except for text messages.

Summer's brow furrows, "I never did get a chance to share that advice with Karma. She just up and left one day, which is out of character for her. And I confess, I am worried about what she's up to, but each time I tell her that I am coming to Sicily to hunt her down, she insists that it won't be long before she returns."

"Has she kept in touch with you?"

"We text every weekend. Every time I message her, she replies instantly." Summer chews on her lower lip.

"But you are still worried about her?"

"I am, and yet," Summer hesitates, "I don't want to stifle her, you know?"

I trust my sister, and while I want to protect her, I also know that we have to make our own mistakes to learn from them too."

"Mistakes," I muse. "Wonder if I am mistaken about the chemistry between me and Edward." I shuffle my feet, "I'd never want him to give up his calling, his profession...for me, you know?"

"And you know the Seven are complicated. If it weren't for the incident, he might never have become a priest."

"What happened to Edward?" I lean forward. "Is that what prompted him to follow this path?"

Summer's forehead creases. "I don't think even the guys know the full story, but what I do know? It's not my story to tell. It's best he tells you himself."

"Of course." My shoulders slump. "So then, what? I wait and watch? That's what you two recommend?"

"Or maybe we could just be friends?" A new voice sounds from behind me. I turn and heat floods my cheek.

"Y-you," I stutter. "What are you doing here?"

5

Edward

I stride into the kitchen and the girls glance at each other. The silence stretches and Ava hops from foot to foot. Her face is fiery and she looks like she's about to throw up.

I glance between them and Summer nods. "Uh, Isla and I need to see someone about something."

"What thing?" Isla frowns and Summer nudges her.

Isla blinks rapidly, then straightens, "Oh, yeah, that thing."

Summer begins to haul Isla out of there. Ava watches them leave with a stricken expression. "Uh, I guess I should go too." She turns to follow them.

"Stop, Eve." I hear the authority in my voice and frown. When had I decided it was appropriate to command her to do my bidding? More to the point, why does she respond to my order?

She pauses, but doesn't turn around. Her shoulders are squared, her spine erect.

"Turn around." I force my voice to assume a more normal tone. This is just a discussion; that's all it is. A conversation. Something I do every day with the people in my parish, so there is nothing different about this. Except there is. None of them resemble this beautiful, innocent creature who was sent my way to tempt me, to show me that I am fallible. To show me that the more I try to resist, the more I will fail. That all this time, while I've taken so much pride in being able to resist any enticement... Apparently, I still have a long way to go. Yeah, that's all this is. A test. Of my morals. My principals.

The way of life I have chosen for myself, and I intend to make sure that I pass this. With flying colors.

She slowly turns to face me and the breath rushes out of me.

Without the shield of the blanket that she'd clutched to herself, I see her in the morning light, her Titian hair flowing about her shoulders. Her pale skin gleams in the sunlight that pours over her and haloes her. Her green gaze widens as she takes me in. Color flushes her cheeks, her lips part, and I can't look away. The pink of her lower lip, so soft, it would be so sweet. If I could only taste it once. My foot hits the ground and I realize I've taken a step toward her.

Her gaze widens, she bites down on her lower lip, and the blood rushes to my groin. This can't be happening. And no, no way, am I going to use swear words to give vent to the frustration that wells in my chest. I thrust out my chest, widen my stance. "I heard you, earlier." I fix my gaze on her, and she blushes.

"How...how much of the conversation?" she mumbles.

I tilt my head and her blush deepens.

"Oh, hell." She squeezes her eyes shut. "This is soooo embarrassing." She hunches her shoulders. "I didn't mean to talk about you. I mean, I did, but I was hoping for some clarity, you know? And I can only figure things out if I discuss them."

"You mean, when you are not talking to yourself?"

"Exactly." She snaps her eyes open. "But I swear, you have nothing to worry about."

"No?"

"No." She moves toward me. "Trust me, I have come to a decision."

"Oh?" I lower my chin, "And what would that be?"

She holds out her hand, "Friends."

"Friends?"

"Yeah, you know like the TV series?"

I stare at her and the line between her eyebrows deepens. "You do watch TV, right? I mean, surely, you do know Friends? You know, Rachel and Joey and—"

"I'm a priest, not an ascetic. I haven't renounced the world." Not completely, that is.

Her breath hitches, "Sorry. I mean, of course, you know what Friends is. Silly me, why would I think you didn't? Not that I watch it or anything. It's a bit too classic for me. I mean, my older sister loved it and I loved watching it with her, but I tried watching it again recently and it seemed like it hadn't aged well. Unlike you."

"Unlike me?"

She slaps a hand to her forehead, "Did I just say that out loud? How the hell did I let that slip?" She gasps. "Oh, no. I can't believe I just said that." She shakes her head, "Forget it." She swipes her hair over her shoulder. "Can you forget I said that?"

"Not a chance." I draw myself up to my full height. "I take it, you think of me as old?"

She winces. "Not old, but old-er."

"How old do you think I am, exactly?"

"Really, I didn't mean anything by that statement."

"How old, Ava?" I infuse enough command in my voice for her to pale. "Tell me."

"Um..." She holds up four fingers, then signals three with her other hand.

"What the—" I explode, "You really think I'm—"

She folds one finger of the first hand, leaving three upright.

"Thirty-three?" I growl, "You think I'm thirty-three?"

"Are you?"

I shake my head, then reach over and fold two fingers of her second hand, leaving only her little finger upright.

Goosebumps pop on her skin, mirroring the ones on mine. I blow out a breath. Don't swear, don't swear. In fact, don't stay here anymore. Don't look at her. Don't go closer to her again. Turn and leave, if you know what's good for you. And for her. Think about her. Why are you leading her on, when you know there can be no future for either of you together?

"Thirty-one?" She swallows, "You're thirty-one?"

I nod.

"I'm nineteen." She tucks a strand of hair behind her ear.

I blow out a breath. Of course, I'd sort of guessed that she was young, but I hadn't...couldn't let myself think about it. The proof's right here in front of my eyes though. She's nineteen. Only nineteen.

"I know you think that I'm too young, but you are wrong," she declares.

"I am?"

She nods. "I was born an old soul, and I promise you, I am tougher than I look. I'm more persistent than people give me credit for."

"Is that right?"

"Don't you believe me?" She draws herself up to her full height, which still means she barely reaches my chest. So young, so delicate, so tiny. A gift from the heavens to coax me along the right path. Which is what? Return to my duties, stay true to my chosen route. Don't let anything distract me from my obligations, my responsibilities to my flock. Yes, that's why she's come into my life. To show me how unsuited I am to a world where temptations lurk around every corner... I'd never be able to resist them. I'd lose myself in them again, I'd lose my clarity of thinking, my soul...and that, I cannot bear. Not again.

"It's not you I doubt; it's me."

She blinks.

"It's not your words I'm unsure of; it's my thoughts."

She swallows.

I take a step forward and the scent of jasmine clouds my senses. The band around my chest tightens. I raise my hand toward her and her breathing grows harsher.

"It's not your persistence that I question; it's my ability to stay true to myself that I have reservations about."

I make the sign of the cross, then walk past her. I head for the exit, when she calls out, "Edward."

The sound of my name from her lips sends my pulse racing. I fist my fingers at my sides, then pause.

Footsteps thud, she draws abreast, then plants herself in my path.

"You believe in a higher power, don't you? So, do I. I believe there's a reason we are drawn to each other. And while I can't claim to understand why, I am willing to be patient to find out. Meanwhile, I really do want us to be friends." She holds out her hand, "Please, Edward."

I glance down at her hand, then at her face.

"We can never be friends."

Brushing past her, I walk out.

6

Ava

I stare at my reflection in the mirror of the dressing room allocated to me. My first gig. My FIRST gig. Whoa. It's for a destination wedding Isla is organizing. The entire theme is a mix of exotica drawing on different influences from the East. They'd wanted a performance to kick off the evening's festivities, which is where I come in. Isla had asked me and I'd jumped at the opportunity. Finally, I am moving forward in the direction of my dreams.

I take in the beaded appliqué work of my blouse, the tiny mirrors sewn into it reflecting the light from the bulbs that frame the mirror. My hips are encased in a pair of shorts, attached to long panels of light, gossamer fabric that falls to my ankles. Intricate overlays of sequins catch the light and shimmer. I stare at my reflection and can't stop the smile that traces my lips.

I'd only been twelve when I'd attended a musical and watched the women shaking their hips. With the colored scarfs that they'd wrapped around their hips, their hair open and rippling down their backs, their laughter and happy faces as they'd flung their heads back, shaken their arms and legs, and moved to a rhythm I'd sensed but not heard—I'd felt a primitive calling to be one of them. To be as free, to not think, to be able to live in the moment as I allow the music to take over, to let my body flow with the beats.

My mother had loved everything to do with the East. Even though she had been dead set against my career as a dancer, it was she who'd influenced my eclectic taste in music. I reach for my purse on the dressing table, pull out the picture I keep in its protective sleeve. It's of the four of us—Mum, Dad, me and Raisa. I touch my finger to Mum's smiling face. She looked so young, so happy there. I love this picture, taken on one of the many summer vacations we'd spent exploring the countryside, wearing my favorite red dress, a gift from Mum. It's the only picture I took with me when I left home. I had been angry and grieving at Mum's death, the loss too much to bear.

Had even wondered if the disappointment in my career choice had brought on the cancer. But my sister had banished the notion. It was Raisa who had encouraged me to follow my dream when my parents had been so against my dropping out of med school. She'd told me that if my heart lay in dancing, then I should follow it. If I didn't try, I'd never know what was right for me.

I'd taken her advice, and never regretted it. If only I could bring some of that courage to bear on the upcoming solo performance. My first solo performance. Gah!

There's a knock on the door and Isla pops her head into the room, "Five minutes, babe."

I nod as she closes the door behind her, then slide the picture back inside my handbag. This is it. I can do this. I have to do this. If I have any hope of competing in the World Belly Dancing Championships that will be held in a few months, then I have to start with conquering my fear of live performances, which begins with this one. Of course, I do have to actually sign up for the competition, which I will do... Just as soon as I get my courage together.

I rise to my feet, walk out toward the stage that's been erected in one corner of the ballroom of the Dorchester Hotel. It's the most exclusive hotel in town, also owned by Saint, one of the Seven.

The sound of guests talking and cutlery clinking against plates reaches me as I step on the stage. I walk to the center of the platform, take my stance. Wait... Wait...as the noise ebbs...flows...begins to die down. A hush creeps through the audience and I still don't move. I keep my sight focused on a distant point at the back of the room. Silence descends, yet I still wait. A beat, then another. The first strains of the music I'd chosen for this piece drift through the air. Where Have You Been by Rihanna.

The notes swirl around me, sink into my blood as I sway my hips, twitch the muscles of my stomach, raise my arms in the air, and allow the notes to guide me. I close my eyes, let myself sink into the rhythm, swirl my hips, move my feet, glide my arms down to my hips, lower still, curve my spine and raise my arms above me, then straighten to twirl around and around. I dance to the beats until I am sweating and limber.

My joints loose, my skin warm from the exertion, sweat beads my forehead and trickles down my back. Finally, I leap through the air, land on my feet, roll, and sink to one knee, head bowed.

The music fades away.

In the silence that follows, my heart beat drums in my ears, blood pumps at my wrists, behind my eyes. My heart thunders in my chest—clap-clap-clap—the sound of the audience's applause echoes the rhythm.

"Bravo."

"Encore."

I allow my lips to curve in a huge smile. I did it. Yes. I pulled it off. Maybe, just maybe, I'll be able to make a career out of this, after all.

The hair on the back of my neck rises. My pulse rate ratchets up. I tip my head up, glance about at the smiling faces of the audience until my gaze clashes with his.

Amber eyes, burning brightly, fringed with those incredibly dark, thick lashes that I want to feel feather across my skin.

I swallow; my throat dries. A bead of sweat trails down my spine as I hold his gaze and I struggle to maintain my composure, despite the tickle. His lips firm and a nerve throbs at his temple. He narrows his gaze and the skin around his lips tightens. No doubt about it, he's angry. But why? What the hell did I do to warrant his ire? What do I even care if I did? I tip up my chin, then rise to my feet. I rake my gaze down that perfect nose, across his gorgeously shaped lips, the tendons of his throat that are constricted by the white collar he wears at his neck.

Oh. My stomach hollows out and my palms dampen. Of course, he's here in an official capacity. Likely, he officiated the wedding ceremony that took place earlier.

I raise my gaze to his, and the coldness in his eyes seems to deepen. He wipes all expression from his face, draws himself up to his full height, which puts him heads and shoulders above everyone else in the vicinity.

His shoulders bunch, the fabric of his long-sleeved black shirt stretches across his massive chest. His biceps bulge and strain the seams. He seems to be in the throes of some emotion that I can't quite identify.

I tilt my chin up, thrust out my hip and place my palm on it.

His jaw tightens. Then he turns on his heel and marches off.

What the hell—?

The crowd swallows him, people clapping and whistling. The sound washes over me. There's a touch on my shoulder and I shudder. I glance up into Isla's concerned gaze. "You, okay? You look like you've seen a ghost."

Or the devil... Which can't be right, because he's the exact opposite. Right? A man who's devoted himself to the service of God. So why the hell can't I get past this attraction I feel toward him? And it's not only because his name is Edward. This is something deeper, more powerful. More forbidden. Is it because I am not supposed to entertain such images about him that I can't stop myself from thinking along those lines?

Oh, my god! I snort. And God can't do anything for me right now, because he's the one who put me in this position.

"I'm okay." Or I will be, as soon as I wash off the sweat from this bout of dancing. And shed the impure thoughts that crowd my mind, and which I have no right to be thinking. To think, I can't even confess them aloud... because hell, there's no one else I'd rather be confessing to than the glowering, growling, grumpy man who'd clearly watched me dance and not been too happy about it. Well, too bad. Bugger him and his judgmental ass. I can do what I want, when I want, as long as it makes me happy. And right now, dancing is the only thing that seems to give me some sense of myself. Which is what I want, right?

A few of the men and women from the crowd step onto the platform and I clutch at Isla's arm. "I know it's not being very polite, considering this is a private gig and I do need more of these, but right now, would you mind very much if I went back to my room? I just need a break."

"From him, you mean?" She jerks her chin in the direction of where the glowering jerkass—argh, is it wrong to think of a priest in those terms? — had stood.

"You saw him?" I whisper.

"Hard to miss, when he glared at you all through your performance." Isla chuckles.

"Shit." I hunch my shoulders. Good thing I hadn't noticed him until the very end of the performance or there's no telling what would have happened. I'd have lost my rhythm, most likely, and that...is saying a lot. Once I start a dance routine, normally, nothing can distract me...but I suspect he could. The crowd of people reach us. I turn around, head the other way, leaving Isla to manage them.

That woman is a keeper, seriously. The way she'd pulled off the reception for Arpad and Karina in a very short period of time—I'm talking days, here—was a miracle. She never loses her cool, always manages to get things organized. If only I could get her to organize my life, as well. I veer down the corridor and back to the hotel room that doubles as my dressing room.

Slipping inside, I place the bouquet on the dresser. Then shake back the hair from my face. Turning, I head for the bathroom, step inside to run the shower. I slide down one side of my blouse when the hair on my nape stands to attention again. I glance up and meet his gaze in the mirror.

Somehow, I am not surprised. After the way Isla had said he'd watched me through that performance, it was inevitable that he would follow me here.

I stare as he watches me from the doorway of the bath. Shit, is he going to come in? Why isn't he coming in?

I raise my shoulder and allow the sleeve of my blouse to slip further down my arm.

His chest rises and falls. He watches me with a searing intensity that sends a frisson of lust chasing down my spine, straight to that part of me between my thighs. My core clenches. Moisture pools between my legs, dots my palms. And it's not because of the steam from the shower.

I reach behind me to undo the ties of my blouse when he puts up a hand. "Stop," he commands and all of my pores seem to pop.

I halt with my hand on the knot that holds the edges of my bodice together, watch him as he curls his fingers at his sides, as his chest muscles ripple, and he drags his fingers through his hair, before whipping off his priest's collar and shoving it in his pocket.

Umm, okay, not what I expected.

He walks over to stand right behind me. The heat from his body sears me. The steam from the shower in front creates a fine mist that seems to dot his forehead, cling to the crisp collar of his shirt, now open to reveal the tendons of his beautiful throat. My belly flutters and my toes curl. What craziness is this that just the sight of his throat seems to send me into raptures of the kind I've never faced before? My fingers itch and my palms ache. I want to step back, close the distance between us and rub the curves of my ass against that thick, heavy length of his that would be tenting his pants about now. And I shouldn't do that. I blow out a breath, then move toward the sink. I hook my fingers over the edge of the sink, tip my chin up to hold his gaze in the mirror.

"Why are you here, Edward?"

7

Edward

That's the question I'm asking myself. I shouldn't be here. What the hell am I doing here? I'd walked away from her the last time, determined to stay away from her. Then I'd stayed on after officiating the wedding, and seen her dance.

She'd moved her hips, her waist, bowed her body so gracefully to the music, allowed the notes to take over, had drawn the rhythm into her body and embodied the essence of the music. Hot, passionate, yet deep and soul-stirring. That's her. When she dances, she transcends the physical. She embodies the melody, becomes one with the tune...the chords...the notes... To see her dance is as much of a spiritual experience as when I pray to Him above. I clench my fists at my sides.

How can I do this? How can I compare what I have with my Savior to how I felt when I watched her? Why did I have to follow her from the performance and into her hotel room?

"How did you get in?" she whispers.

"The door," I jerk my chin toward the entrance to the room. "It hadn't closed completely."

And I had walked in and invaded her privacy. Why had I thought I could simply barge in here unannounced? More to the point, what had I been thinking anyway? Why had I thought it was okay to push the door open and step in? What's wrong with me? Why is it that when I see her, I seem to lose my head completely?

I squeeze my eyes closed, turn to leave, when she grabs my hand. Sensations vibrate out from the point of contact. I glance down at where her fingers are curled around my wrist.

I glance up at her and she releases me. "Sorry," she mutters, "I... I don't want you to leave."

And I don't want to go, and that is the problem. But I don't say that aloud.

Instead, I stare past her at the open door of the shower cubicle, "Why don't you finish your shower? I'll wait out here."

"You sure?" she asks.

I frown at her and she reddens.

"I didn't mean it that way. I mean, I do want you to wait. It's not that I wanted you to join me or anything. I mean—" She slaps her hand to her forehead. "Oh, hell, forget what I said. I mean—"

"I know what you mean." I can't stop the smile that quirks my lips. "Why don't you go on?" I jerk my chin toward the shower. "I'll be right outside."

I pivot, then step out and pull the door closed behind me.

I walk over to the window, pull back the curtains, and glance down at the road below. Just two streets up, the tourists and shoppers crowd Oxford Circus. You'd think there would be lots of traffic near the most exclusive hotel in London, but surprisingly, down here there are no vehicles, and almost no pedestrian traffic. Except for what seems to be a homeless man who sits on the sidewalk, almost right below the window. He seems to be holding up a sign as well...the letters of which are hidden from my line of sight. Hmm, given this is one of the most exclusive hotels in the city, it's strange the hotel allows him to stay there. Not to mention, it can't be a lucrative spot for him without foot traffic.

The sound of the shower running reaches me. I turn toward it, and of course, my imagination goes straight to her under the water, without clothes, the droplets running down her breasts, her stomach, to the place between her thighs. I shake my head, grab the rosary out of my pocket, sink to my knees and cross myself. Then I begin to pray.

I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of Heaven and earth and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord...

I repeat the prayer, until all thoughts exit my head and my mind stills. My heart beat slows down, my muscles relax, and my breathing stabilizes.

I stay there until I hear the sound of her footsteps. Then I open my eyes, and rise to my feet.

She walks toward me, wearing a white dress, her auburn hair freshly washed and flowing down her back. Light pours out of the bathroom, turning the fabric translucent, creating a halo around her. I take in the curves of her body. The highlights in her hair that glisten and sparkle as she moves.

She resembles an otherworldly vision, an angel who's arrived on earth to tease me, to test me...to reveal the error of my ways. She pauses in front of me, tips her chin up.

"Hello," she says softly, "hope I didn't keep you waiting."

You can keep me waiting forever, for that's the way it's going to be between us. I can't touch you, can't hold you, can't allow myself to think of you, but what I can give you is "friendship." I roll the word around my tongue, "You wanted us to be friends. I accept that."

"You do?" She frowns. "I thought you said we could never be friends."

"What I meant was that we could never be just friends."

She scowls, folds her arms about her waist. "Then what—?"

I raise my hand and she purses her lips.

"I thought it would be best if we didn't see each other at all. If I didn't allow myself anywhere near you, there wouldn't be any temptation. But I was wrong."

"You were?"

I nod, "I realize now, you were sent to me precisely so I could continuously test myself. You are the route to my betterment. Before you, I'd become boring... Complacent, even. I'd reached a plateau, where I thought I was doing everything I could to show the Lord that I am his faithful disciple, but it turns out that I was wrong."

She glowers at me. "You were, huh?"

"Yes. Absolutely." I square my shoulders. "You are His way of showing me that I have a long way to go before I master my senses. I thought I'd conquered my weaknesses, but now I can see that's not true."

"So," she straightens, "I am a weakness?"

"Exactly." I nod. "You're a failing, someone sent to hold a mirror up to my shortcomings."

"Shortcomings?" She huffs, "You're calling me a shortcoming?"

"Not you." I frown. "Mine, I am the one found wanting. I saw you and realized just how long a road I have yet to travel before I can claim to be anywhere near the kind of perfection I hope to achieve."

"You are trying to achieve perfection, huh?"

"Aren't we all?" I drawl.

"Not me, buster." She shakes her hair back from her face. "I am human, and I plan to embrace my failings, my imperfections and my quirks, without which I am nothing but a colorless shadow of myself."

"You," I chuckle, "you'll never be a colorless anything. You're fire and radiance and purity—the kind I can only hope to achieve."

She opens and shuts her mouth. "Purity?" She shakes her head. "You're confusing me with someone else."

"I know what I see..." I rake my gaze across her features, "a woman who's passionate about what she believes, who wants to live life to the fullest, who wants to experience every single experience, every emotion there is. Someone who—"

She reaches forward and slaps her palm over my mouth. "Stop," she whispers.

Sensations curl in my chest and blood rushes to my groin. I step back.

She pulls back her hand. "Sorry." She hesitates. "I... I didn't mean to do that, but sometimes when I'm with you, it's difficult for me to hold back."

"That's what I mean." I spear my fingers through my hair. "Clearly, this is why we need to meet. It's the only way I can continuously test myself against the temptation that you embody. You're an impulse I need to steer clear of. An enticement I must...avoid at all costs."

She blinks rapidly. "Okay, now I am completely confused. You want to avoid me... Yet you say we need to meet. But earlier, you said we shouldn't be friends. So, what is it?"

"I'm saying, we should be friends with benefits."

She gapes. "Benefits?" she chokes out. "What...what kind of benefits?"

"The conversational kind."

"Excuse me?"

"You heard me." I quirk my lips. "We meet, keep our distance," I point to the space between us, "but we continue to converse, to exchange opinions on anything under the sun."

"And during the time we meet, you try to resist me?"

"Exactly." I snap my fingers. "What better way to prove myself to the Lord than to show that I can withstand the wickedest of lures that he sends my way?"

"That's it." She throws up her hands, "First, you raise me up on some kind of bullshit pedestal that I definitely don't deserve. Then, you compare me to being some kind of sin. You know what? Forget it!"

She turns, heads toward the table in the corner and begins to stuff her clothes into her bag.

My heart begins to hammer; my pulse pounds at my temples. Hold on, what did I do wrong? I simply shared with her what I was thinking. Had I been wrong in that? Isn't it best to be upfront in these situations? What had I said that could evoke such a reaction from her anyway?

"Ava," I head toward her, "You're not acting in a sane manner. All I'm saying is, let's be friends and talk openly when we meet."

"To hell with that." She huffs, "I don't want anything to do with that, Father. You're a...a...completely self-absorbed prick, as far as I am concerned. How can you be a priest and serve your people if you can't even understand how it is to be in my shoes and be attracted to you...you...?" she heaves her bag over her shoulder and turns on me, "you who are already committed to someone else, and I can't stop thinking of you? Do you realize how horrible that makes me feel? And then you have the nerve to tell me that I am your test? Your trial, your bloody experiment... And all so what? You can prove to yourself that you are perfect? Well, sod that," she turns and heads for the door, "and sod you, Father."

Stop her, go to her, explain to her how difficult this is for you as well. Explain that you realized if you couldn't have any other relationship with her, being a friend could, at least, mean that you'd have her in your life. That you'd have a chance to, at least, see her, talk to her, hear her laugh again. Even though every moment in her presence brings home the fact that you can't have her. Can't be with her. Can't have anything to do with her. And all those explanations earlier... Well, they are just rationalizations for my actions.

She wrenches open the door and I call out to her, "Ava, stop. Please don't leave like this."

"I don't want to stay on when I'm clearly not needed. Why did you come here, Edward? Why couldn't you have left earlier?"

"Because I couldn't." I shuffle my feet, "I had to...see you once more."

"But why?" She firms her lips. "Tell me, why it was so important that you meet me?"

"Because..." I take a step forward, stop, then fold my fingers into fists at my sides, "because I will not act on my impulses, Ava. I will not allow you or anyone or anything else to come in the way of my chosen path, and if that means I have to use you to make a point to myself, then so be it."

Color drains from her face, then she grips the strap over her shoulder even tighter. "Well, you know what? I am not a...a test...or a trial or an experiment... I am a living, breathing woman, and there are many out there who'll take me for what I am, and cherish me and love me."

She hunches her shoulders, and the movement dislodges her scarf which floats to the floor.

"And I may have thought that perhaps there was a connection between us... And maybe I thought you might do something about it, that you'd, at least, be honest with yourself that it means something," she swallows, "something more than turning it into...this... Tool to prove to yourself just how strong you are and how perfect you can be."

A cold sensation stabs at my chest and my guts twist. What have I done? Why couldn't I have listened better to her? Why couldn't I have understood my own emotions more clearly? Why couldn't I have been more receptive to what she had to say? Why did I have to go and mis-interpret everything? Have I, though? Am I really that off-target? Am I really incorrect in seeing this situation for what it is? A chance to find out how committed I am to my chosen path?

I widen my stance, thrust out my chest, "I'm sorry you see it that way."

"Me too."

She turns to leave, when I call out again, "Ava." I walk toward her scarf, pick it up and hold it out. "I think this belongs to you."

"Keep it. Perhaps it'll be a reminder of what you refused to recognize between us." Turning, she walks out.

8

Ava

"He said what...?" Isla opens and closes her mouth. Clearly, she's as shocked as me. Unlike her, I've had a few days to process what Edward had tried to convey to me. The gist of it was... Nothing comes close to the relationship he's already consecrated with the One Above. I am a distraction. What had he called me? An irritant, someone who got in his way, someone he'd use as a means to test out how strong his resistance to temptation is.

"I mean, should I, perhaps, be flattered that he sees me as some kind of trial by fire?" I chew on my lower lip. "Maybe I should give him credit for trying to do what's right?"

"Right for you or for him?" She huffs up the slope of Waterlow Park. We're in my favorite green space in the heart of London...not far from the house I am renting. It's a one-bedroom, tiny place, rundown enough that I could snag a short term let on my shoestring budget.

"Right for both of us?" I hunch into my jacket. A gust of wind blows the hair into my face and I push it away. "I mean, I do understand where he's coming from... Kind of..."

"Do you...?" She turns to me, "You're a better woman than I, Sherlock."

"Umm...isn't that dialogue supposed to refer to Shylock?"

She waves a hand in the air, "Same thing."

"It's not." I laugh.

"Just as it's not cool that he actually mentioned to you that he wanted to be friends with you only so he could use you as a test."

"At least, he was open about it." I rub my hands together, then blow on them. Shit, it's February but the weather shows no sign of improvement. "I mean, if he'd acted on impulse and tried to kiss me or something... Now that...wouldn't have been cool, considering who he is."

"Do you want him to kiss you?"

"What do you think?" I reach the pinnacle of the slope, then turn to take in the sight of all of London stretched out in front of me. Which means it is largely flat... Except for the tall buildings in the distance, which constitute the city.

"I think," Isla pants as she lurches up to the flat stretch of space at the top, then pivots to stand next to me, "that you want to do more than that, regardless of the fact that he's a priest. Not that I blame you; he's freakin' hot." She fans her hand in front of her face. "And right now, the only one of the Seven who's not attached."

"What about Baron?" I frown, "Isn't he also unmarried?"

"Who knows with Baron?" She bounces on the balls of her feet in a bid to warm herself. "From what the rest tell me, they have no idea what he's up to. They only know he's alive because he sent a letter of congratulations to Arpad and Karina at their wedding."

"So, they do know where he is?"

"Nope." She shakes her head. "He only uses snail mail. There's a PO Box where they can reach him, but other than that, they have no idea what he's been up to all these years."

"So, he doesn't want to keep in touch with the others?"

"Well, I'm told he's still one of the co-owners of 7A investments, the company that the Seven own together... So presumably, he's able to access the money that they make for him to live on."

"You know a lot about the Seven, huh?"

"Only because they've been keeping me busy, planning their weddings. Those alphaholes," she shakes her head, "they spend their days fighting their attraction to their women, only to fall harder and then, can't wait to get married, very often overnight." She wraps her hair around her palms and tugs. "Honestly, the kind of stress they've put me through to find the right venues and book them, not to mention arrange everything else at the drop of a hat, it's a wonder I haven't had a cardiac."

She thumps her palm against her chest.

"Good thing there's only Edward left," Isla mutters, "and clearly, he's not getting married."

"There's Baron," I remind her. "Also, how can you be sure?"

"Baron's missing, so I'm not counting him." She scowls at me, "And Edward's a priest, and considering what he just told you, you can safely cross him off the list of potential boyfriends."

"Can I?" I turn away, stare at the now partially-clouded-by-fog view of London in the distance. "I mean, just because he's a priest... And rude, not to mention, obnoxious..."

"There's also a small matter of," she points a finger in the direction of the skies, "you know, the relationship he has with the One Above."

"Tell me about it." I dig the heels of my boot into the ground. "I am sure I'm committing some kind of sin just by thinking of him in the way I am, but darn it, I can't get him out of my mind."

"Not even after how he treated you the other day?"

"Especially after how he treated me the other day." I shoot her a sideways glance. "Does that make me...stupid? Or just someone who loves punishment... Or maybe I simply have irrational expectations from this entire situation."

She closes the distance between us, grips my shoulder. "I know all about what it feels like to be attracted to the wrong man."

"Umm," I scowl at her, "something you wanna tell me?"

She blows out a breath, "Nope, just saying, that I empathize."

"Hmm, well, not much I can do about it, considering what's-his-face has told me there's no future for us. Not that I expected there to be. I mean, he's a priest." My shoulders slump. "Shit, this is sooo wrong on so many levels."

"Easy, babe." She pats my shoulder. "No harm done. It's not like the two of you acted on the itch or anything. You only thought about it, which hell... Nothing anyone can do about it. I mean, it's not like he can peek into your head and punish you for your thoughts, right?"

"Umm," I scowl, "isn't the whole point that God can, in fact, peek into your head and punish you for your thoughts?"

"I guess," she shrugs, "but you know what I mean?"

"No," I shake my head, "explain it to me."

"Well, I mean... So maybe the One Above knows your thoughts, but he's not telling anyone, is he?"

"No, I'm doing a damn good job of that myself." I gesture between us.

"What you need is a distraction from all this. Maybe a night on the town, let your hair down."

"I think I'd prefer to go back to my studio, practice another routine that I'll be teaching soon." I swipe my hair over my shoulder, "I really need to focus on my career at this stage, you know?"

"Is that what you want?" She tilts her head.

"Don't you?"

"I want a successful career, for sure, and I want to make it on my own, but every success I've had only makes it seem even more hollow, makes me want to reach for the next one. I don't think I've ever taken the time to appreciate what I have, you know? And sometimes it makes me wonder if it's all worth it."

"Wow," I blink, "and I thought I was the boring introspective one here."

"That you are." She smirks. "Boring and introspective and way too beautiful for your own good."

"Aww, come on." I poke a finger into her shoulder. "Who are you and what have you done to my fun-loving friend?"

"Fun-loving, sex starved friend, who's not had any action in..." She counts on her fingers, "Whoa, has it been that long?" She pales. "No wonder my vagina is dictating my thoughts."

"Thought that only applied to men." I chuckle. "Besides, I can't weigh in on it. I've never—" Color floods my cheeks. "Shit, forget I said anything. Do you want a drink? I want a drink; shall we go to the pub—"

"Holdonabloodysecond." Isla stares at me, "Are you saying?" She shakes her head. "Nope, it can't be. Tell me it's not true. I mean, I know you're only nineteen, still...you know...I thought..."

"Shut up." I blush harder. "Seriously, Iz, lay off. It's not something I want to talk about."

"Are you holding out for the 'one'?" She punctuates the last word with air-quotes. "Is that why you haven't slept with anyone so far?"

"Not like don't have any experience... I do know how to use my vibrator properly, thank you very much." I laugh.

Isla rolls her eyes. "Not the same as being with a man..." She rakes her gaze over my features, "It's also the intimacy, you know. That's what I miss the most. Not that the men in my life have excelled at that in any way either... Still, it was better than nothing," she purses her lips, "I suppose."

"You don't sound very convinced."

"All I can say is that I haven't yet been with someone who can rock my world, the way I read about it in romance novels—"

"Those kind of alpha males don't exist," I mutter. "Romance novels were dreamed up by women who, clearly, know how to spin a fantasy. It's why I never read them."

"What?" she screeches. "You haven't read any romance novels?"

I stare at her, and she chuckles, "Good one."

"Not." I pout. "I am addicted to them," I mutter. "How someone who started out with Twilight graduated to the kind of smut I read now, I'll never know. I singularly blame them for my addiction to a certain man who's completely unsuited to my needs."

"Now I see why he's so attracted to you."

"You do?"

She nods, "It's the combination of the little virgin façade, combined with the curves of Venus, which hides the heart of a little slut."

"Whoa," I blink, "I'm not sure who you are talking about here?"

"You, babe." She laughs. "You. Bet he looks at you and sees a little sacrificial lamb that he can't wait to sink his teeth into."

I stiffen. "You make me sound like some kind of...of..."

"Sinful dish?" she offers.

"I thought you were suggesting he was a vampire." I pout. "And now you're agreeing with him. Seriously, this is all kinds of screwed up. I need to take my mind off Edward completely." I straighten. "Yeah, that's what I should do. I need to find someone to sleep with. That will take my mind off Edward completely."

She frowns, "Don't do anything rash. Maybe you should think things through first. Sleep on it some more—"

"I'd rather sleep with someone else. I bet that will put things in perspective."

I pivot, brush past the others crowded at the peak of the hill.

"Where are you going?" she calls out as she rushes to catch up with me.

"To the bar, to get a drink and see if I can't find someone to shag tonight." I hurry down the slope, then turn to find her standing in place, her mouth hanging open. I wave my arm and beckon to her, "Aren't you coming with me?"

9

Edward

I step into the chancel of the church via the priest's door. The long sleeves of my cassock fit around my arms; my collar is snug around my neck, a reminder of the One to whom I belong. The One who'd saved me when I'd most needed Him. When I'd been doped out of my head on drugs, and a part of me had wondered what it would be like to end it all. When I'd floated in that strange out of body space, and turned toward the light in the distance; the realization had sunk in then. I wasn't alone. All I had to do was surrender to the fate that had brought me that far. However much I'd abused my system with drugs, I couldn't kill myself. Perhaps there was a reason to everything that had happened... Perhaps there was something more ahead, something I couldn't see yet. A future that was not what I had imagined, but a future nevertheless. One in which I could be of service to others.

That's when I'd surrendered to my His plan, and for the first time in my life, I'd prayed. I'd asked Him to show me the way, to tell me what to do next. How could I crawl out of the web of misery that bound my every move, that trapped me? And the answer had seeped into my soul. Live. Not for you, but for them. The people you can help, the world you can change, the children who need your love and your guidance, the souls you can help guide. Live for them.

And I had.

I sink down to my knees in front of the altar, press my palms together, bow my head. Blessed Lord above, forgive me for I have sinned. Forgive me for I forsook You when I was tempted. Forgive me for straying from the path. Forgive me for doubting myself, and hence, doubting You. Forgive me for the sins I have committed, and for those I am yet to commit. Forgive me, for I blinked and looked away. Forgive me, for I was distracted by her beauty. Her grace. For I allowed myself to be swayed by the thoughts of flesh, by the thoughts of how it would be to not be alone. For I am not, not really, not when You are with me for every breath I take. Forgive me for being disloyal to You. Forgive me for contemplating a life without You. For there is none. This is all there is. Me at Your service to do Your bidding, to follow Your directives. Bid me, Lord, for I am Your humble servant. I surrender to You and I will accept any punishment that You bestow. I swallow down the emotions that block my throat. Speak to me, Lord. Tell me You forgive me; tell me You have not deserted me for my actions. Tell me You pardon the sins I committed by thinking of someone else other than You. Please my Lord, talk to me. Are You still angry with me? Do You not forgive me? I—

"I forgive you."

The voice slides through the thoughts in my head. I jerk my head up, open my eyes, stare up at the marble figure high above. The stillness, the tranquility, the beauty of His pathos sink into my soul. My heart begins to race; my pulse pounds. I gaze up and into the face of the one who has held my thoughts for so many years now.

"Even though you don't deserve it." The voice sounds from behind me. I pivot and watch as Sterling approaches.

I draw in a breath and his lips quirk. "You didn't think it was the Man above speaking to you now, did you?"

I squeeze my eyes shut. Yes, I had. And for a few seconds there, I had been convinced that He had answered. Even though, deep inside, I've always known that I must love Him without expectation, simply knowing that He loves, despite everything.

I turn back to the altar, make the sign of the cross, then rise up to my feet. "Sinclair, what brings the Sinner himself into the house of Christ?"

"You, Father."

"Me?" I turn to him. "Now, that's something I'd never thought I'd hear from you. Is there something I can help you with?"

"The question is, can you help me help you, Father?"

I tilt my head. "And I thought I was the preacher here."

"There's a spark of the divine in all of us, Father."

I chuckle. "You're a canny one. How did Summer manage to hold you down long enough to put a ring on your finger?" I jerk my chin to where the platinum band encircles his left ring finger.

He places the finger so his right hand is over his left, plays with the ring. "This? If you recall, I didn't have one in time for our wedding, but Summer wanted me to wear it and if it makes her happy... Well," he raises his shoulders, "but I am not here to talk about me."

"Too bad," I widen my stance, "when I was sure you were finally here to repent for your sins."

He chuckles, "That would take more time than we have today."

"Oh?" I frown. "I wasn't aware we were on a timetable."

"The only one that counts, Father." He gestures toward the door that leads out into the garden, "Shall we?"

I frown. "I'm not done here yet."

"You'll have enough time to commune with God, once we've had our conversation."

"That sounds...ominous. Should I be worried?" I glower.

"I don't know, Father. Should you?" He holds my gaze.

I don't back down.

Neither does he.

Finally, he steps back, "Look, ten minutes of your time. That's all I ask."

"Hmm," I rub the back of my neck, "not that I don't trust you—"

"My ego would be bruised if you did." He chuckles.

"But you are here, and I never turn away anyone who asks me for help."

"Is that what you think?" His lips kick up.

"Isn't that what this is?"

"Technically, I need you to help me help you, so," he shrugs, "I suppose that would work." He jerks his chin toward the garden, "Come on, Father, let's talk."

I step forward and he follows me through the priest's door and into the room behind. I step into my office, then come to a stop. Sprawled around the space are four other figures. I groan. "Is this what I think it is?"

"What do you think it is?" Saint drawls from his perch on my desk.

Behind me, Sinclair shuts the door and locks it. I glance at him over my shoulder to see him fold his arms over his chest. Guess leaving that way is out—not that I am going to try it. I'm not a coward. This is only about facing my friends and talking to them, something I'm good at. After all, I've done it so many times before, right?

"I think, if you guys wanted to talk to me, you could have called."

"We did." Damian, picks up my phone, from where I'd left it charging on a side table in the far corner. "What's the use of having a phone, if you don't carry it?"

"I had other things on my mind."

"I'll bet." Arpad pushes away from his corner. He walks over to stand in front of me, "It's what we're here to talk to you about."

"That's my dialogue, surely." I laugh. "Every time one of you guys had a crisis, guess who was there to talk some sense into you?"

The others stare at me.

"Exactly." I nod.

"Exactly." Arpad smirks.

"Exactly." Damian chuckles.

I pause, glance around at their faces. "No." I stiffen. "No, no, no, I think it's time you guys left."

"I think it's time we find out what's happening with you." Saint smirks.

"Me?" I hold out my arms, "I'm just fine."

"You don't look fine." Weston scratches his jaw. "You look like you need to get something off your chest."

"What do you think I was doing just then?" I stab my thumb over my shoulder.

"Praying?" Sinclair frowns. He prowls over to stare at the cross high up on the wall. "Not that we can compete with the man up there. But hey, if He is your Father, we are your brothers...almost...so—"

"Hold on a second." I stare. "Is this you, Sinclair Sterling, pulling the bro-card on me?"

"Is it working?" He smirks at me over his shoulder.

"Not sure." I fold my arms over my chest, "When you guys hunt in a pack like this, it can be quite overwhelming."

"Welcome to the other side, bro." Arpad laughs. "You did us all a favor... Well, all except Baron, considering he missed all the good stuff."

I stiffen. "Let's not talk about Baron, shall we?"

"Agreed," Saint drawls. "Why don't we talk, instead, about what's been causing you to go infinite laps in the pool."

"Who told you that?" I frown. There's no change of expression on Sinclair's face, but his eyes gleam.

I blow out a breath. "Summer told you?"

He tilts his head.

"What did she say?" I demand. "It was simply one interaction by the pool —"

"When all you had on was your Speedo—"

"You went swimming in February in an outdoor pool?" Weston stares.

"When do you swim? In December?" I snap.

Weston shakes his head. "Ask a stupid question, get a stupid answer—"

"Don't change the topic, Ed." Sinclair prowls over to me. "You also had a conversation with her in the kitchen of my place."

"Where the girls were listening in..." I raise my eyes skyward. "Of course, they were."

"Before that, she met you at the guesthouse."

"Hey," I scowl, "you keeping tabs on me, or what?"

"And don't forget the wedding encounter." Damian smirks.

"It's Isla." I straighten. "She's the one who's been sneaking information to you."

"So, there is something to sneak, then?" Saint prowls over to me, "It's confession time, Ed. Tell us what's on your mind."

I glare around the room, take in the faces of my friends, the closest I have to family, my brothers, the ones who have had my back since the incident. "Yes." I rotate my shoulders. "Actually, there is something I need to tell you guys."

Saint straightens and steps away from the desk. Damian places my phone back on the table and gives me his full attention. Sinclair, Weston and Arpad glance at me, their expressions ranging from curious to intrigued.

"This is it then?" Saint finally says, "You're ready to tell us about what's crawled up your craw?"

"I am." I widen my stance. "Baron; he's coming back."

10

Edward

Silence descends on the room, then Arpad bursts out, "Did I just hear you say —?"

"Baron?" Damian scowls.

"He's returning?" Weston drums his fingers on his chest.

I nod.

"When?" Saint snaps.

"He didn't give specifics. All he said was that we need to be extra vigilant because we are closing in on the perpetrators behind our kidnapping."

"Ah," Arpad snaps his fingers, "so the information Antonio's been sending us is correct then?"

Arpad's referring to one of the Sicilian Mafia who is also one of our informants.

"How the hell does Baron keep track of everything that's happening from wherever he is?" Saint mutters. "You'd think he has someone keeping an eye on us."

Silence in the room. The men look at each other, then Sinclair widens his stance. "Wouldn't put it past the bastard." He scowls.

"Not that it matters." Damian shrugs. "We don't have anything to hide from him. If he kept in touch with us, we'd simply share everything anyway."

"How did Baron contact you, Ed?" Sinclair finally asks. "The last time we heard from him was when—"

"—he wrote me with advice for Damian, telling him not to marry Julia,"

Arpad takes up from where Sinclair left off.

"Knowing full well that's exactly what I would do as a result," Damian mutters.

"And now he's written to you, saying he's coming back?" Sinclair frowns.

"Because what, he knows Edward is in a similar quandary of the heart?" Damian asks.

"I am not in any quandary." I draw in a breath. Another. Stay calm. You've just asked for the Lord's forgiveness; now, all you have to do is hold it together. Don't think about her. Don't think about her. Don't. Think. About. Her. "About her." I suck in a breath, attempting to retract the words that slipped out, then curl my fingers into fists.

"So," Saint drawls, "you are in a quandary about her."

"I said I'm not in any quandary about her."

"But you actually...are," Damian frowns, "in a quandary about her?"

"Not about her." I scowl.

"Yes, about her." Weston smirks.

"All about her?" Arpad offers.

"No," I square my shoulders, "not at all."

"Yes," Sinner insists, "you are."

Anger thrums at the base of my spine; heat flushes the back of my neck. "It's. Not. About her," I grate out. "It's about me, and the fact that I haven't been able to live up to my vows, my promises, the word I gave to the most important presence in my life when I set upon this path. I haven't been able to adhere to them. Do you understand how that feels? To have your entire world turned upside down in a matter of seconds?" I glance about the room, take in each of their faces in turn. "To look at yourself in the mirror and realize that everything that you've stood for so far was a lie. That the only thing that mattered, the one thing that you thought you could rely on—yourself, your honor, your ability to be truthful to yourself? It's all gone. That you were fooling yourself so far. That you thought you'd come a long way in healing yourself, but really, all you've done is hidden behind a mask—which you thought was your true self, but it isn't, not really. For all there is, is you and the wound that never heals. The one that turned you into your worst nightmare. The one you couldn't live with. Yourself."

By the time I finish ranting, I realize I've said too much. I wish I could retract my words. My chest rises and falls. Goosebumps dot my skin. A bead of sweat slides down my temple as I tuck my elbows into my sides. "What am I doing? Apparently, I can't even control my temper." This is what the thought of her does to me. She's crept into the crevasses of my disguise, torn off the mask I'd donned. She's exposed exactly how weak I am at my core. Is this why the Lord sent her to me. To hold up a mirror to my frailties? To reveal just how fragile my relationship with Him is? To tell me that I haven't changed, not really? For beneath it all, I am still the sad and lonely, tortured boy with a past that will never let go of me.

"What bullshit is this?" Sinclair growls. "Stop being so hard on yourself, Ed." He walks over to me, grips my shoulders. "Of all of us, you and Baron were affected the most by what happened at the incident. And yet, neither one of you has never told us the details."

"And I'm not starting now." I shake off his grasp. "I think it's time you guys go."

"Oh, fuck off," Saint snaps.

I glare at him and he glares back.

"No swearing. Not when you are in the house of the Lord."

"What-fucking-ever," he responds.

"Saint," Sinclair warns, "keep it down. The Father's already hurting. You're not making it any better."

"Of course, the Father's upset." He snorts, "He's realizing that he's not perfect. He's one of us. As flawed, as fallible, as prone to falling in—"

"Stop," I growl. "Don't go there."

"Oh?" Saint tilts his head, "What are you going to do, Ed? You going to punch me in the face? You going to finally give in to the insecurities that crawl inside of you as much as the rest of us? You going to finally get your head out of your arse and do something about your life that's been stalled since the incident?" He takes a step forward and I throw up a hand.

"I'm holding onto my temper with great difficulty here."

"I'm sooo scared." He grins. "What are you going to do about it, Ed? You going to get off your high horse and finally accept that you can't stay separate from reality. That you are like the rest of us. That you're in lust with ___"

Something inside of me snaps. My vision narrows; my pores pop. I swipe out and bury my fist in his face. Saint stumbles back as blood spurts from his face. He straightens, shakes his head, then bares his teeth. "Finally," he growls, "fucking finally, you show what's there under that exterior."

"I haven't even started." I take a step forward, swipe out my fist. He ducks, then jumps forward. He lowers his head, charges, catches me in the chest. I hit the ground, Saint on top of me. He raises his fist and I laugh. "Hit me. Go ahead, I deserve this and more."

Saint blinks. He scowls down at me, "What the hell?"

"Why did you stop?" I growl. "Hit me," I command.

"You lost it, man?" He frowns.

"You've lost it." I strike out with my fist and he evades it. Anger seizes me; frustration thrums at my temples. I rear up, smash my forehead into his chin and he yells.

"What the bloody fuck?" He pulls back his fist and I laugh and laugh.

"Do it," I spit out. "Hit me in the face."

He hesitates.

"Or have you lost your nerve?"

Saint's gaze narrows; his nostrils flare. His fist descends toward me. I close my eyes and wait. Wait. The next second, his weight is pulled off of me.

"What the—?" I snap my eyes open, just as Sinner hauls me to my feet.

Arpad and Damian restrain Saint as he glares at me, chest heaving.

"Stop this." Weston frowns. "You should know better than to rise to the bait, Saint." He turns on me, "And you, Father? What's gotten into you? You taunted him, knowing he was going to lose his temper, and of all the places, in Church."

"The Church?" I blink. "I am in the House of God," I whisper in horror. I squeeze my hands into fists. I've done it. I've sullied the one place that is more holy to me than anywhere else. I've tarnished the most sacred of spaces. I've given in to temptation. Again. What is wrong with me? I hang my head. "Get out of here, all of you," I whisper. "Out."

That's when the ringing of a phone breaks the silence.

Sinclair answers his phone, then glances up at me. "It's for you."

"Me?"

I take the phone from him, "Hello?"

"Edward? It's Isla speaking. I am calling about Ava."

"Ava?" My fingers tighten, "What's wrong with Ava?" My heart begins to race. "Tell me right now."

"She's fine..." Isla hesitates, "but not for much longer."

I hear the sound of music in the background, then something crashes to the floor. A man swears in the background. There's the sound of cheering, then Isla gasps.

"Isla, what's happening?" I frown.

"We are at the National Portrait Gallery bar. You'd better get here fast."

I toss the phone back at Sinner, turn and race for the door, when he calls out, "Better change out of your priestly garb first, Father."

I pause to stare down at myself. Should I take it off? No way, am I going to a bar dressed like this... And yet... Why does it seem like I am making some kind of choice? Does it mean that I am forsaking Him? No. Of course, not. All I'm doing is going to help out a friend. That's allowed, right?

I shrug off the priest's robes, drape them over the nearest chair.

"Here!" Damian calls out behind me.

I turn and snatch my phone that he tosses in my direction. Then I grab my wallet and keys, and I run for the door.

11

"I love my mum to bits, but she annoys me to no end by agreeing with my Father on most things. Gah! I have come to realize it's really important to stand up for yourself and in what you believe in and not allow a man to dictate how you're going to live your life."

-From Ava's diary

Ava

"Ava, are you listening? Ava?" I pull the phone away from my shoulder, and stare at it. Raisa called me when I was at the bar, and I stepped out to take her call, and now I regret it. She's reminding me to come to my father's wedding... My father's wedding. OMG, how can those two words even go together? Can I actually look on while he marries someone else? Someone who'll take the place of my mother at his side?

"Ava?" I hear my sister's voice over the phone, and sigh, then press the device to my ear, "I am here, Raisa."

"Are you out clubbing?" I can practically see the scolding expression on her face.

"You don't have to sound so judgmental." I huff.

"I'm not," she protests, "I was just wondering where you were out. That's all."

"Yes, I am at a club, and no, I don't do this every night. I am only out because I've had a few hard days and needed to unwind."

"Of course," she mutters, "must be fun to dance for a living, then also dance to have fun."

"You didn't just say that." I scowl, "Seriously, Raisa. I may not work a desk job like you, but I do have a career... It's just that it's a creative one."

"Of course," Raisa murmurs. Her tone is contrite, but I am not really sure if I believe her. "I am not faulting your career choice, Ava. It's just... I... It's unorthodox, that's all."

Wait until you hear about my choice in men. Hoo boy, talk about being unorthodox. I snicker, and all but sense Raisa getting prickly on the other end of the line.

"You don't have to make fun of me," she says in a hurt voice, "I really am trying to understand you, Ava."

"I know you are." I hunch my shoulders. "I know I've been a bitch since Dad broke his news. Well, no, even earlier, since Mom's death..."

There's silence on the line, then I sigh, "Okay, okay. In general, I've been a bit of a brat for a while now."

"Thank you," she exclaims. "Now that we have that out of the way, are you coming to the wedding?"

There's silence. A beat, another. "I... I need to think about it," I finally say.

"Think all you want." Her voice hardens, "Just as long as you come."

We'll see. I am still not sure I want to attend, but if I don't go my dad will be hurt and I don't want that to happen either. I'll be there, is what I want to say. Instead, I hold the phone away from my face. "Oh, someone's calling me. I'd better be going. Bye, Raisa."

Coward. I am such a coward. Why is it so difficult to simply tell her that I'll be there? Maybe because it feels like I am being disloyal to Mum if I say that I'll attend the wedding? Despite everything Dad told me, I still don't feel completely right with going to see my Dad marrying another woman. I shake my head. I need to stop obsessing about it and carry on with the reason I am out tonight. Music, dancing. Yes, that's why I came out today, right? To forget all of my worries for a few hours. I pivot, then head for the dance floor.

Twenty minutes later, the music pours over me, ripples down my stomach and in between my legs. I close my eyes, shake my booty, drag my hands up over my head. Let the rhythm infiltrate me, curve around my waist, sizzle down my legs, my toes. Ah. With the right music, the right beats, the right tempo, it's like I am flying. OMG, this is sooo much fun.

I grind my hips, bend my knees, curve my torso to fit to the melody. Swipe my hair up and away from my neck, turn my head to the side, then the other way, grind my hips again, only to brush up against something... Someone. Hands grasp my waist, then I am pulled back and fitted against the unmistakable bulge of male hardness. Warmth grips me. He's here; he came for me. He has to have come. He couldn't stay away. Hot breath grazes my ear, the heat of his body envelops me. The scent of beer and stale sweat assails me. No, not him. Who the hell is this, then? I snap open my eyes as he leans into me.

"Hello baby, wanna go for a test drive?"

Eeeugh. Is that even a pick-up line, or what? I turn around to take in the features of the man who leers down at me. Sweat beads his brow; his cheeks are ruddy. His face boasts a weak chin and his lips are slightly parted as he pants down at me. Just my luck. Of all the creepy crawlies in the world, the grossest of them all had to come onto me. What the hell is wrong with me? Why do I seem to forever attract the wrong kind of man? And the one time I'd been sure my luck was changing, that I'd found someone who was different, and hot and kind and sexy and dominant, and yet, sensitive... Yeah. I know. Turns out, he was too good to be true anyway. "Get away from me."

I try to pull away, but he applies more pressure on my hips and holds me in place. "Now, now," his features brighten, "is that anyway to treat our new-found friendship."

"You're right," I nod, "I'd rather see your head on a spike."

"What?" He blinks.

"No, actually," I press a finger to my cheek, "I think I'd rather dig your heart out and eat it. Better still, bury my fangs in your neck and draw out your blood."

He pales. "Wh...what does that mean?"

"Don't you know?" I lean in close enough for his horrid body odor to overpower me. Ugh, someone get me a bucket. I bare my teeth, "I am a vampire in disguise."

He stares, then bursts out laughing. "You're funny."

"You're not." I pull back my fist, bury it in his throat.

He roars, releases me. I scramble away, lunge forward through the crowd of dancing people. A woman steps in my path; I shove past her. A man dances his way across my progress; I dig my elbow into his side. He yelps, moves away. I dart past, make it to the edge of the dance floor when a heavy hand descends on my shoulder. I yelp, turn and swing. The sweaty barnacle ducks, then tightens his grip with so much force that pain sears my arm.

"Let go of me," I grit through clenched teeth.

"Says you and which army?" He smirks.

"Says me."

I hear the growled-out words, despite the fact that music is booming all around me. Hell, I'd hear him even if he didn't speak. All he'd have to do is think it, and I'll bet I could glean it from his mind... Whoa, hold on. He's not that Edward...and you're not Bella, much as you'd like to be. And this is not a fairytale, or a stalker vampire romance... This...is real life, and he's a priest, and you are a...foolish woman who's developed feelings for him. I twist my shoulder, try to get away again. This time, he hauls me around and against him.

I grimace, "Let me the hell go, you asshole." I dig my elbow back and into his side. He doesn't even lose a breath. He winds his arm around my neck, begins to sway with me. That unwashed body scent of his crowds me and his oily heat crawls around me. Gross. I raise my foot and bring it down on his massive one. He yells, shoves me away from him and straight at Edward, who grabs me, shoves me behind him.

Whoa, okay, not expected. Not that I didn't think he had it in him. I mean, of course, I'd suspected that the priest's facade only partially obscures the over-the-top possessive man hiding somewhere in there. Only, I hadn't been sure. I'd thought he'd saved that part of himself—that crazy devotion that comes from being fixated with something or someone. I'd been sure he was saving all those emotions for the One Above.

So, to have him throw a punch, catch the other guy at the temple and follow that up with a punch to the stomach... All in one move... Whoa... It's hot. Okay, it's crazily hot. I watch, open mouthed, as he follows up with a third hit to the chin. The other guy sways, then crumples to the ground. People move away, give him space, then turn away and continue dancing.

Edward turns on me, his gaze intense. His jaw flexes and a vein throbs at his temple.

"Edward, I—"

He holds up a hand, then jerks his chin toward the exit. I stiffen and he glares at me. Anger thrums from him—vital, real. A dense cloud of heat wafts off of him, slams into my chest. I swallow. Oh, shit. This isn't good.

Not at all. He takes a step forward; I scramble back. He moves in my direction. I turn, elbow my way through the crowd, reach the exit, and walk up through the winding staircase, past couples making out, past another couple dry-humping, their tongues down each other's throats. I swallow; my throat goes dry. I turn to glance over my shoulder to find his gaze locked on me. Goosebumps pop on my skin; my thighs clench. I lose my footing and stumble, only for him to grip my waist and straighten me. The warmth of his palms scalds me through my dress. I shiver, and he looks me up and down. His gaze widens. When he glances back at me, his pupils are dilated, his breathing ragged. Then he sets his jaw, schools all expression from his face. He releases me so quickly that I stumble again. This time I right myself. He tips his chin up again.

"So what? Now you're not talking to me?"

His jaw tics.

"Is this some kind of silent treatment?"

His eyebrows draw down. He folds his arms, stares down at me, down that patrician nose of his. His gaze is so intense, so angry...so helpless. I swallow. "Shit, it's never easy between us, is it?"

He blows out a breath, then pinches the bridge of his nose, nods toward the stairs. "Go on," he growls.

I turn, march up the steps, through the crowd of people around the bar, and out the main door onto the sidewalk. The cold instantly washes over me. My fevered skin seems to sigh in gratitude. I turn my face to the light breeze that blows past, hoping to hide my heated cheeks. Then, just like that, the temperature seems to dip. I shiver, wrap my arms about my waist.

"Where's your coat?" he snaps.

"Inside, with Isla." I turn to brush past him, "Maybe I should get it."

"Leave it," he orders, his voice taut. Tension grips every muscle in his body.

He stalks forward. I watch as he reaches a Harley parked a little up the road. He opens the storage box on the bike, pulls out a helmet, then turns to glower at me. What's his problem anyway? And since when do hot, sexy priests drive hot, sexy bikes? Why is it that he's hellbent on breaking every single stereotype I have in my head about men of the cloth? Not that I've known any of them before, considering I haven't ever been to church. What? My parents were agnostic. When they were not too busy quarreling, they were too busy making up. Which left me to my own devices. Hence—the overactive imagination. None of which has ever dared me to dream of this hot as f guy who crooks his finger.

What the hell? Does he think he calls and I'll go running to him? I fold my arms across my chest.

He glares at me and I shiver. It's the wind; that's all it is.

He tilts his head. I tip up my chin. He arches an eyebrow and moisture beads between my legs. He holds out the helmet to me. I draw in a breath, take a step forward, another. By the time I reach him, I am shaking all over. Why does this man affect me so? What is it about him that makes me feel like I am back in high school and in the presence of my biggest ever crush? Umm, maybe because he is? Only it's more than a crush I feel... It's lust... love...? Nah, not that. Ridiculous. How could I be in 'anything' with this man whom I barely know at all?

But you do... You know enough about him. You know that he's sensitive, that he wants to dedicate himself to a bigger cause, that he wants to help his people, that he wants to remain loyal to his vows, to stay faithful to his one true love. And how could that not impress me? Strangely, it's the very things that make him unobtainable to me which also make him irresistible. And that, folks, neatly sums up the contradiction that my life often ties itself up in.

He places the helmet on my head. I peer up at him as he pushes the hair away from my neck, before snapping the strap under my chin. His fingertips brush my skin and a shiver races down my back.

He frowns, then pulls out a jacket, drapes it over my shoulders.

"What about you."

"I'm good," he mutters. "Besides, considering you're not wearing much, you need this more than I do."

"I'm wearing enough," I huff as I shove my arms through the sleeves.

"Is that what you call...this...this...bandage that you are swaddled in?" He rakes his gaze down the dress that hits somewhere above my knees.

So, it's a little tight, a little figure hugging, and maybe it emphasizes my boobs and the curve of my arse... But really, it's perfectly respectable. Side note—yes, I had sorta hoped he'd end up in the bar. Speaking of... "How did you know where I was?" I frown.

"Isla called Sinclair who handed the phone over to me."

"Oh, wow." I blink. "That's certainly a circuitous route to have taken for you to get to me."

"There are easier ways to get my attention," he grumbles.

"I wasn't trying to get your attention," I retort.

"Weren't you?"

"Of course, not," I lie. "I was merely out on the town, single and footloose, and ready to take someone home tonight—"

"Is that what you were trying to do in there?" He draws himself up to his full height, "Seemed to me, you were trying to get away from that man's unwanted advances."

"I was managing myself well enough, until you came along."

His lips twist, "I am the last person you should be lying to, Eve."

Don't say it. Don't remind him. Don't, Ava. "Because you are a priest?"

His jaw tightens. That familiar polite mask—the one I hate, the one that implies that he's hiding away the man behind the persona—is back on his face. Well, too bad. After all, he's made it clear that there can be no relationship between us. So, he can hardly blame me for throwing that at him. And I didn't throw it, as such. I mean, he is a priest. It's his chosen vocation, so why the hell is he so pissed off with me now?

He turns away, straddles the bike, then starts the engine. The boom-boom-boom of the pipes fills the space.

He glances at me sideways. "Get on," he snaps.

I pull the jacket closer. The scent of him floods me and it feels like I am wearing him on myself. If this is the only way I'm going to get close to him, then so be it. I'll take every opportunity I can to spend time with him. I throw my leg over and mount the steed.

He turns and asks, "You, okay?"

I nod.

"Hold on."

I slide in closer, place my hands on his waist. He zooms forward. I yell, then throw my arms around him as he accelerates. The front of my thighs and my chest are flush against him as he whizzes up the road. The cold air buffets my uncovered legs. I huddle even closer to the warmth that emanates from him. And for all that, he isn't wearing a jacket, but he shows no signs of feeling the chill. He really has extra-hot blood. That must be why he's also such a smokin' hottie. I snicker against his back, and the muscles under his skin seem to ripple. The only thing separating me from him is my jacket and the thin shirt that he's wearing. If I slipped my hand in between the plackets, I'd finally be able to touch, sense, feel what it means to be skin to skin with him.

Liquid heat pools in my core. My mouth waters. I turn my face into his shirt, draw from it deeply. The scent that is pure Edward overpowers my senses, and just like that, I am wet. Maybe I should bottle it. That way, when he's not around, I can still sniff him. Hell, I could come just by touching myself as I smell him. Gah! Stop that...

He turns off the main road and I glance around me. Huh? This is not the way to my place, so where are we going? Is he taking me to his... Where does he live? Near the church? He can't be taking me there...surely?

He turns off again, under a bridge, then around another roundabout, turns to the right, and there, in front of us, is the Tower Bridge, otherwise known as London Bridge, but from an angle I've never seen it.

We seem to be almost under it, but not quite. The entire structure is lit up in a silvery light that turns it into a beautiful artefact that is ageless, timeless... So serene that it's almost tranquil, despite the hustle and bustle of the city. How many others have watched it from exactly this angle? Who were they? What did they do? Did they also come here because they were avoiding something...like the big elephant between us...aka this attraction, this connection...this...completely insane need to be close to him, to feel him, touch him, hear him speak, laugh, to kiss his eyelids, his mouth, his cheeks, that beautiful throat of his that flexes when he's angry and stretches when he's sad. I swallow as he pulls over by a small park. He shuts off the bike and silence descends. My heart begins to thud and my pulse pounds at my temples. Why did he bring me here? To talk? About what?

Why isn't he saying anything yet?

I slide off the bike, pull the jacket even closer. He lowers the kickstand, disembarks, then opens the storage box on the bike. He pulls out a pair of leather pants and hands them to me. "Put them on; you're cold," he commands.

I grimace. "Is this how you speak to your flock? Do you order them around as well?"

A nerve throbs at his temple. "I didn't bring you here to argue with you."

"Then why did you bring me?"

He rolls his shoulders. "Come." He gestures me toward the park.

I step into the pants, fold up the hems so I don't trip on them. The waist band is elastic and I fold it a few times until it perches on my hips. Not very comfortable, but it'll keep me warm.

I cross the sidewalk, and head up the small park to a bench that faces the view of the bridge.

I sink down and he sits... As far away from me as possible on the other side of the space.

My heart deflates a little. Shit, what was I expecting? That we'd hold hands and gaze into each other's eyes. As if. I stare ahead at the piece of marvelous architecture that stands there as if suspended in the darkness.

For a few seconds we don't speak. My muscles unwind and I slide down the bench a little. The cold sinks into my blood and I stamp my feet to stay warm. "If only there was something warm to drink," I mutter aloud, then blink when he slides a flask across the space.

I shoot him a sideways glance. "What's that?"

"Whiskey."

"I didn't know you drank."

"There's a lot you don't know about me."

"Only because you don't share anything with me."

He opens his mouth and I hold up my hand, "I know, I know, it's not like we've had much time to get to know one another; still..." I shuffle my feet, "all I'm saying is that I'd like to find out more about you."

He blows out a breath, then leans forward. "What do you want to know?"

12

Edward

What the hell am I doing? Clearly, I have lost it. That's the explanation for why I brought her here...to my secret spot. The place I've been coming to on my own since I was young. Staring at that incredible piece of manmade wonder is a reminder that there is hope. That if man puts his mind to it, he can overcome insurmountable challenges. That I can, perhaps, despite my past, try to break free and embrace who I have become. If only it were that easy to figure out what to do about this...whatever it is, between us. And, yes there is a connection here... I could turn a blind eye to it, I could try to avoid it, and that's what I've been doing, but my reaction to finding out that she was in trouble...had thrown me. I hadn't been able to stop myself from going to her, putting myself between her and the bastard who had tried to physically touch her... He'd...he'd...put his hands on her and I'd lost it. At that moment, nothing else mattered except teaching him a lesson. That he couldn't touch what was mine. That no one else could come near what belongs to me. That she... Belongs to me. That she... Is mine.

"Fuck." I rub my palm across my face.

Next to me she goes completely still. "Did you just—?"

"Swear?" I laugh bitterly. "That's the least of my sins."

"Have you sinned, Father?"

I stiffen, then turn to her. "I am sitting here with you, aren't I?"

She tilts her head, "Are you saying I make you sin?"

"What do you think?"

"I think," she turns to stare ahead, "that you can do anything you want, you can be anything you choose to be, but you've put barriers around yourself and you hold yourself up to impossibly high standards, the kind most men would find it difficult to live up to and—" She swallows. "That only makes you even more desirable."

"Where did you learn to speak like that?"

"Like what?"

"Like you are laying out all of your emotions to the world and not hiding a thing." I shoot her a sideways glance. "Don't you have any self-preservation?"

"Not where you are concerned."

"You're not making this easy." I curl my fingers into fists. "I should leave you and walk away from here."

"Why don't you?"

"I should turn around and get out of your sight and never come near you again." I set my jaw.

"Do you really want to do that?"

"I should let you lead a life far, far away from me." I roll my shoulders.

"Will you be able to do that?"

"No," I lower my chin, "and that is the problem."

"What are you trying to say, Father?"

"That I have taken my vows, I am bound to the Church, and I will never be available for you as a man is for a woman."

"And yet, you came to the bar, knowing I was there, then proceeded to step in between me and another man, then drive me on your bike—which, by the way, was totally unexpected—and, bring me here..." She nods to the glorious sight of the illuminated bridge in front of us. "A place that is clearly special to you, so pardon me for feeling confused."

"I brought you here so I could get to know you."

"But you just said—"

I raise my hand, "Let me complete the statement. To get to know you as a friend."

"As a friend?"

"That's what we agreed to earlier, right?" I tilt my head.

"Hmm, the way you burst in on me at the bar, Father, I could have sworn you were jealous."

"Edward," I snap. "Call me Edward when it's just the two of us."

"Edward." She rolls the word about her tongue as if testing it, and every one of my senses focuses in on her. The sound of my name from her lips sends my pulse racing. This won't do. I am sitting here, hoping to come to terms with what can't be. Trying to find a way forward, but it seems everything I do only connives to deepen the attraction between us.

"And I wasn't jealous," I insist. "I merely saw that the guy was bothering you at the bar and did what anyone else in my position would have done.

"But no-one else came to help me; only you did," she points out.

"Guess, my reflexes were quicker than theirs, hmm?"

"Is that what you're telling yourself?" she mutters.

"It's true, though." I set my jaw. "And I forbid you from ever going to a bar again dressed like that."

"Dressed like what?" She glances down at herself. "I'm wearing a perfectly decent dress."

"A dress that's so short it barely covers your crotch."

"It comes to mid-thigh."

"Too short."

"It's what I'd wear during the day when I'm not dancing."

"Change your wardrobe."

Her jaw drops. "How dare you?" She springs up to her feet. "First, you tell me there can't be anything between us. Then, you think you can dictate what I should and shouldn't wear. If I didn't know better, I'd think that you were my—"

"What?"

"Father."

Ouch. I set my jaw. "I am merely a concerned friend."

"Oh?" She snorts. "And what are you concerned about?"

"Your safety, of course."

"So, if I decided to date other men, that'd be fine?"

My guts twist and anger laces my blood. I stare ahead, jerk my chin.

"And if I decided to sleep with someone else, you'd be okay with that?"

I dig my fingernails into the palm of my hand and squeeze down with such force that pain lances up my arm. I nod my head.

"Will you?" she asks.

I school all emotion from my face, turn to her. "Yes," I force the word through a throat gone dry. "Yes, I would."

Her features distort, a tear runs down her cheek, and a hot sensation stabs at my chest. I reach for her, but she steps away. She turns her back to me, and the cold seems to intensify.

"I'm glad we cleared this up, Father." She stares ahead.

"Edward—" I correct her, "I told you to call me Edward."

"I'd prefer to stick to the right title, considering there can't be anything more between us." She squares her shoulders, "I'd better be getting home."

She pivots and begins to walk away.

I jump up, follow her, "I'll take you."

"No, thanks." She speeds up. I easily overtake her, plant myself in her path, and she pauses. "Get out of my way." Her voice waivers. She lowers her face so her thick hair obscures her features.

"Ava, please." I reach for her, but she steps aside.

"Don't touch me," she beseeches me. "Please." She starts walking again and I follow her. Is she crying? Did I do that? Did I upset her? My chest tightens. Of course, I upset her. Every time I meet her, I upset her, and yet I can't stay away from her.

She reaches my bike, walks by it. "Ava, stop." I race forward, step in her path once more. She comes to a stop, but keeps her head bowed.

"Look at me."

She shakes her head.

"Don't disobey me," I snap, and she jerks her head up. Tears glisten on her cheeks; her eyes flash green fire at me.

"There, happy?" she snarls. "You wanted to see how your words affect me? You wanted to ensure that I am heartbroken by what you told me, that you broke up with me?" She pushes her finger into her cheek. "Oh, wait! Of course, not. How could we break up, considering we had no relationship to speak of? And we don't, do we? Have a relationship?"

I rake my gaze across her features, the flushed cheeks, the parted lips, her jutted out chin that hints at the stubbornness in her—something I am already well acquainted with.

"Ava," I reach for her, then withdraw my hand. "You're wrong. We have a connection, something that is unique and will always bind us together. But I can't act on it. You understand that, right?"

"I do, but do you?" She swallows. "Perhaps that's why you feel the need to continuously run into me? So, you can tell yourself that there can't be anything between us. And yet, you keep finding excuses to come to me."

I purse my lips. "That won't happen again."

Her lower lip trembles, her eyes fill with fresh tears, her shoulders shudder, and help me, God, but I can't stop myself. I pull her to me, and wrap my arms around her. "I'm sorry, I truly am. I wish I could do something about this situation, but I can't."

"You can." She snuffles. "You can leave the Church."

I stiffen. "That's not going to happen; I take my vows seriously. When everything else around me was collapsing, the Church was there for me. I found solace in The Lord. He's the reason I was able to go on with my life and why I am standing here today. I can't abandon Him at the first instance I face a crisis of faith."

"Is that what you think I am?" She pulls back in the circle of my arms, "A crisis?"

"You are—" I peer into those beautiful green eyes of hers, "the most beautiful, most gorgeous, most loving woman I have ever met. Your passion for what you do, the intensity with which you live every moment, your sheer vivacity is unparalleled, Ava. You deserve someone better than me. Someone who can give you everything you desire."

"I want you."

"I am not yours to have."

She tries to pull away, but I tighten my hold on her. "No, don't leave, please just listen to me."

She huffs, then stills in my arms. "What is it?" she mumbles under her breath. "What do you want to tell me?"

"I'll never forget you, Ava. Never forget how you smile, how you laugh with your entire spirit, how when you're angry about something, your eyes flash. How when you dance, you put your entire mind and body and soul into it. You become one with the rhythm, Ava, and if that isn't true worship, I don't know what is."

She stares up into my face. "I... I don't understand," she whispers. "What are you trying to tell me?"

"I thought I could be friends with you. God knows, I've tried. But I underestimated the intensity of the chemistry between us. Clearly, I am not strong enough to resist it." My throat closes. I swallow down the ball of emotions, then peer into her eyes. "Try to understand, what I am doing is for the best."

She shakes her head, "No, no, please don't."

"I won't try to see you again. I won't approach you. I'll let you go so you may live your life to the fullest, only..." I squeeze my eyes shut, "only I won't be there to see it."

"Don't do this, Edward," she implores me. "You're not even giving us a chance."

"I am giving you the best possible chance at living."

"I'll die without you."

I half smile. "No, you won't. You'll survive, you'll thrive, you'll embrace your dreams, fulfill your destiny. You'll become a well-known dancer, a devoted wife, the kind of mother every child should have." Pain twists my insides and my breath catches. I hunch my shoulders, force myself to step back from her.

She closes the space between us, launches herself at me. "I won't let you go. I won't let you do this to us."

"It's done." I should push her away, keep distance between us, but as she tilts her chin up, I find I don't have the strength. I pull her close, wind my arms about her, hold her as if I'll never get the chance again... Which I won't.

She holds my gaze and her features pale. A teardrop rolls down her cheek, and I bend down, then lick it up.

She stills. "Why did you do that?"

I swallow down the salty taste, then release her again. "So, I'll always have you with me."

"You have my heart, Edward."

"No, I don't." I take a step away from her. "You must keep it safe with you, Ava, so you can give it to a man who deserves it more than me."

13

Ava

That had been two days ago. Forty-eight hours. A lifetime. After that little bombshell he'd dropped on me, Edward had insisted on dropping me back home. I hadn't protested. Maybe I'd been too numb from the finality of his words. He'd meant it. I'd gazed into his eyes and the look in them had indicated that this time he was going to walk away. He wasn't going to return and tell me he wanted to try to be friends. Well, we'd tried that and look how well that had gone? I should respect his wishes, let him get back to what is important to him. His Church, his vows, his God.

Does God not have enough people worshipping Him, that He also has to bind my Edward to Him? Why can't He let Edward go? Would it help if I prayed to Him? The last time I'd prayed was when my mother had been unwell. Not that it had helped much.

But if Edward believes in Him so much, does that mean I could appeal to Him to release him? Would God actually hear me?

It hadn't helped before, but given how hopeless everything feels now, it couldn't hurt to start, right?

Which is why, after finishing my dance class for the day, I've walked into the nearest church. The temperature instantly dips and goosebumps rise on my skin. I slide my hands into my coat and walk up the aisle. It's late afternoon, and the sun's rays slant through the stained-glass windows that line the walls on either side of the aisle. I take a pew a couple of rows from the front, then kneel down and place my elbows on the back of the seat in front of me. Ahead of me is the altar, and beyond that, the statue of Christ on the cross. I fold my fingers together, bend my head and studiously avoid looking at Him. After all, it's His fault I'm here. He's the reason I can't get Edward to consider anything beyond a platonic relationship... And not even that. Any kind of connection, really... It's because He has Edward's loyalty that I have no place in his life. I squeeze my eyes shut. Hell... No... Sorry, no swearing. Let's start again.

Dear God, I am not a regular church goer but I am here because... Well, I really don't have the right to ask You this. I mean, I know it's probably forbidden to even think about him that way. The 'him' here refers to Edward, of course. Funny how it's easy to refer to him as Edward and not Father. Truth be told, I never could get used to calling him Father. I couldn't really regard him as a 'Father,' if you know what I mean? Now you, God... You, I'd call Father. Because, well, you are the Father of all of us. I'm sorry I haven't come in and prayed to You before... I've just been busy with this business of growing up and figuring out how to make something of myself, know what I mean?

But I am here now...and hmm... Come to think of it, is that why You made me meet Edward? One way of bringing me to Your doorstep? I bite down on my lower lip. It couldn't be, could it? This isn't all some crazy convoluted plan for the One Above to remind me to pray, is it?

Though, if it is, then You've succeeded, for I am here on my knees, begging You to help me.

Asking You if there is any chance in hell—okay not hell, forget I said that—just a chance, really, that You'd consider giving me and him an opportunity to be together, because, you know, since I saw him, since I laid eyes on him, my world has changed. I mean, I hadn't even been aware of what I had been waiting for until I saw him... Does that make sense? He came into my life and I knew then... It's him. The one I'd hoped to find some day. My other half. He grounds me, God, he...makes me believe anything is possible. Much like You do. When I am here and praying to You, I can focus on what is possible. On the future, on what is to come, and things I didn't even know I wanted. It's like I am on the verge of something momentous that's about to take place. Or maybe it is the sense of possibilities that has my heart racing?

That sense of calm, yet the prickle of excitement from knowing that You can make anything happen...that adrenaline that laces my blood, that sensation of the infinite, that I am but a speck of sand in time, and really, that my concerns are so minuscule in comparison to the wider plan... And there is a plan in store for me. There is...the one that You're unfolding. I can't see it...but I believe in it. Just as I believe in him. Despite everything I do, I am confident that there will be a chance for us to be together... I just have to trust.

Can I trust?

Can I?

My head spins, I snap my eyes open, glance up at Him on the cross. A strange stillness fills me. The hair on the back of my neck rises. My heart begins to race and my pulse rate speeds up. It's as if I am on the precipice of something...something... That all of this was orchestrated and I am but the pawn in a design that I cannot yet see fully. "Is that true?" I whisper. "Should I believe in You? In him? Is that why You brought me here? Will everything work out?"

I hear the susurrantion of wings, a white pigeon—or is that a dove—? flies down from the ceiling. It alights on the cross, and its guttural cooing echoes through the space. Goosebumps pop on my skin. Oh, my... That's...that's a sign. It has to be, right?

The dove cocks its head to the left, then the right, before flying up toward the ceiling. It heads for the open door and I follow it. I reach the door, step out. I follow the bird down the steps, across the sidewalk. I watch as it flares out its wings to soar up, and further up. I take a step forward, miss the curb and stumble and fall onto the road.

A car horn sounds and I glance up, straight into the path of an oncoming vehicle.

My heart begins to race, the pulse pounds at my temples, and sweat beads my forehead. I throw up my palms to shield myself and squeeze my eyes shut, only to be hauled to my feet and back onto the sidewalk.

The car horn blares as the vehicle speeds by, and I am yanked against a hard, firm, broad chest. The scent of fresh cut grass teases my nostrils. My heart hammers so hard, I am sure it's going to break out of my chest. Bands of steel seem to tighten around me as he tucks me into him, one arm about my shoulders, the other across my back and waist as he pivots away from the curb.

How the hell had he moved that fast? Where had he come from? How did he know that I was in danger? Are we forever doomed to be connected somehow, no matter how we might try to wrench ourselves away from each other?

"What the hell were you thinking?" he growls as he turns me to face him.

"The...the dove..." I stutter.

"Dove?" he frowns.

"I followed it out from the church. The next thing I knew, I was falling forward...and...and—" A sob wells up, and he pulls me closer.

"Shh! It's okay, I've got you. I have you; nothing can harm you now."

The sound of his voice through me, sinks into my blood. My nipples tighten—is it because of his nearness, or the near miss with the car, or both, perhaps? I try to answer but my throat is too dry. My limbs tremble and my knees knock together. I push my nose into the valley that demarcates his pecs, dig my fingers into the front of his shirt, and hold on as he swings me up into his arms, with my handbag crushed between us.

I glance up, past the white of the collar at his neck, to the thrust of his pouty lower lip, that mean upper lip, the bead of sweat that slides down the sinews of his throat. Heat flushes my skin and my stomach flip-flops. Every part of me is alert and alive, and so in awe of where I am. In his arms, being carried by him.

He enters the church, walks up the aisle, all the way up to the altar, before turning and heading toward a door on the left. He walks through what looks like an office—because of the large desk in a center—out through another door in the back, down a garden path, with flower beds on each side, to a small one-story Victorian structure built from red bricks with a slate roof. He walks up the steps, shoulders the door open and steps inside. He carries me to the couch, and lays me down, setting my head on a throw pillow.

I sit up and he points a finger at me. "Stay," he snaps.

"But," I swallow, "Edward, I—"

"Not a word." He glares at me and I shiver. My thighs clench and moisture gathers between my legs. Shit, why the hell do I find his dominant manner so hot?

He walks inside a door which I assume leads to his bedroom. My handbag slides from my arm to the floor. I slump back in the couch, swallow down the thickness that clogs my throat. That was close, like, really, really close... If Edward had been one second too late, if I had lurched forward a second earlier... If the car had been speeding even a little faster... I gulp. My limbs tremble. Shivers ripple up my spine and I wrap my arms around my waist to stay warm.

"Here." His voice interrupts my thoughts, and I snap my eyelids open. He drops a cover over me, tucks it in under my chin. "Scoot over," he mutters.

I scoot in further and he sinks down next to me. He places a first-aid kit on the table, then opens it and pulls out some cotton and antiseptic. He takes my hand in his, turns my arm, pushes up the sleeve of my dress and dabs at the gash I only now notice. Pinpricks of pain spark at my nerve-endings, and another bout of shaking grips me.

"You okay?" He frowns.

"Y...yes." I say through chattering teeth. "D...don't know what's wrong."

"Delayed reaction," he reassures me as he continues to dab at the injured skin. He rips a packet open, pulls out the bandage and places it over the scrape. He takes my palm, turns it face up.

"Wh... what are you doing?" I whisper.

He doesn't respond. Simply pours out more antiseptic onto the cotton ball, then proceeds to dab it on my palm where the skin has abraded. I wince. Again, I hadn't noticed it.

Guess I'd been too caught up in what was happening in the moment to realize I'd banged myself up. Another few seconds, and I might not be here on Edward's sofa in his house.

OMG, I am in his house, on his couch, and he's taking care of me. It's what I wanted, right? So why am I so close to tears? Besides, I didn't die. I am still here. I am alive and near him.

My entire body shudders and he frowns, then rises to his feet. He heads for a wooden cabinet in the corner, pulls out a bottle, and pours some of the liquid into a glass. When he returns, he sits down next to me again. He slides an arm under my neck, raises my head, and holds the glass to my lips. I stare into his handsome features. Those dark eyebrows, thick eyelashes, his dark hair messed up and falling over his forehead. He looks a little shaken, not as put together as all the times I've seen him in the past.

He jerks his chin at me, "Drink."

I take a sip and the alcohol burns its way down my throat. My stomach is suddenly on fire and I gasp. Tears prick my eyes and I blink them away.

"Again," he orders.

I hold his gaze, stare into those bright, beautiful eyes of his which glare at me with so much emotion that I gulp. He frowns, nods again to the glass, and I take another sip. This one goes down smoother. Warmth creeps under my skin; my breathing grows more ragged.

I wrap my fingers over where he holds the glass, and goosebumps rise on my skin.

His throat moves as he swallows and his gaze intensifies further. I take another sip, and another. I swallow down the liquid as heat permeates my cheeks, my chest, snakes down further. I squeeze my thighs together.

His nostrils flare. Those golden irises dilate. He stands abruptly, tosses back the remaining alcohol.

Then he walks back to the cabinet, pours another healthy dose of the whiskey, and tosses it back. Whoa. Are priests allowed to drink? Guess they are. I mean, they do drink wine during Communion, right? And why would he have whiskey in his house if he can't drink?

I take in his tall figure; the broad shoulders clad in his customary black shirt tucked into black pants. The fabric molds to his slim hips, and clings to those powerful thighs. He's not wearing his robe... Guess I caught him off-duty. Of all the churches in all the world, I had to walk into this one. I snicker to myself. What I wouldn't give to meet him in a gin joint instead.

He jerks, as if the sound cut through his thoughts. He places the glass back on one of the shelves of the cabinet, then turns to me, "We need to talk."

14

Edward

She watches me with those big green eyes that seem to have swallowed up her face. Her features are drawn, there are shadows under her eyes, and her cheekbones seem too prominent. Has she lost weight since I last saw her? I frown, take a step toward her, then stop. What are you going to do? Are you going to go back to her? Sit next to her, take her hand in yours, place your palm against her cheek and feel the softness of her skin, draw in the sweet scent of jasmine that clings to her hair? I clasp my hands behind my back, then begin to pace. Back, forth, back.

She clears her throat, "Edward?"

I continue to pace.

"Ed? Please stop, you're making me dizzy."

I pause, then pivot around and stalk over to her. I stand over her, rake my gaze down her face. "What the hell is wrong with you?" I snap. "You walked out onto that road without a modicum of self-preservation. What were you thinking, Ava?"

She pales further. Her lips tremble, and she presses them together.

"Edward, I, I..."

I hold up a hand, "No, don't tell me. You came here to get my attention, didn't you? You decided that since I wasn't interested in you, you'd try a different tactic this time? You walked out there, knowing I would come after you and save you. Well, guess what? I won't be there every time, Ava. The next time you try something so completely stupid, I may not be around to help."

Anger twists my guts; the band around my chest tightens. My knees tremble, and I squat down to disguise just how unable my legs are to support my weight right now.

"What do you have to say for yourself, huh? Do you deny that you purposely placed yourself in the path of that bloody car?"

She blinks. "Wow, that's twice."

"Twice what?"

"Twice that you swore in the last two minutes."

I drag my fingers through my hair. "Is that all you registered from what I told you?"

"Umm, no. You also mentioned that you're not interested in me, and that's incorrect."

I glare at her. "And what else?"

"That I placed myself in the path of that bloody vehicle—"

Anger thuds at my temples. If anything had happened to her... If she'd been hit... If she'd been hurt, or worse... What would I have done? Not all the prayers in the world would have brought her back then.

I glare at her and she swallows. "I didn't, Edward. I didn't step in front of that car on purpose. It was an accident. I told you so already."

Of course, I know that. Ava's artistic and sometimes preoccupied with her thoughts. That doesn't mean she's going to willfully put herself in the path of harm... I'd followed her out of the church, my feet seeming to have a will of their own, but had stopped myself from going to her. Then, I'd seen her pitch forward, that car speeding toward her... I'd lost it. I'd raced for her, had not even been aware how my feet had touched the ground. I'd reached her, pulled her up out of harm's way and then... I couldn't let go of her. I can't let go of her. I must. I have to. But what if I can't? What then?

"Edward?" She places her palm against my cheek, "Look at me, Ed."

"Ava." I swallow down the ball of emotion that clogs my throat. "Ava." I turn my face into her palm and kiss it, the softness of her skin, a caress. She cups my cheek, turns my face toward her.

I stare into those green eyes, the eyes of an angel, the gaze of a temptress, the fire that burns in them, my fate.

I rub my thumb across her lower lip. She flicks out her tongue and licks it. The blood empties to my groin and all of my senses focus on her. I lean in, capture her mouth with mine.

She parts her lips and I sweep my tongue inside, swipe it across her teeth, suck on her tongue, press my lips to hers, tilt my head and deepen the kiss.

She moans low in her throat and the sound sweeps through my mind. My muscles tense; my belly hardens. I tear my mouth from hers, peer into her face.

I can't do this.

You must.

I can't betray my faith.

You have no choice.

Is this Your way of testing me again, my Lord? Is this how You take me to the edge, only to thrust me over and over again into the path of this sin? Do You want me to embrace it? Is that why You'd put her in the path of danger? To show me just how powerless I am in front of Your will?

I'd thought myself infallible...untouchable, unapproachable; getting closer to the perfection that is You...and that was my mistake. So much ego, so much self-confidence, so much conviction in myself... When all along, I had been setting myself up for a fall. I see the error of my ways now, my Lord. I understand the mistake I've made all along. To think I could even attempt to be like You when, really, I am nothing but the dust on Your feet. I've spent all of my life trying to come closer to my ideal of perfection, to come closer to You, when really any attempt at thinking that I could be infallible is wrong.

I am, but human and prone to temptation. I may be Your vessel, but my flesh and blood still belong to that of a man. A man driven by his compulsion, the need to be close to her, to take her, embrace her, be with her in all the ways that a man can with a woman.

Will You forgive me, my Lord, if I sin?

Can I forgive myself if I do?

What am I if I do?

What am I if not my vows, the ability to hold onto my control, to resist every single temptation thrown in my path? The money has never been of consequence to me. No other woman has ever enticed me like this. As for obedience... What is Your will for me, my Lord? Did You put her in my path because You want me to fail?

Do You not want me in Your fold anymore? Am I not a vessel for Your Presence? Do You not want me to serve others in Your name? Is this my time to leave, to find out what lies in store for me outside of Your home?

My heart begins to thud in my chest. My pulse pounds at my temples. Sweat beads my forehead. I hold her gaze, and perhaps some of my inner turmoil shows, for she pales. I rise to my feet, turn to leave, and she grabs my hand.

"Wait, Father, will you not hear my confession before you leave?"

I frown. "You're not Catholic."

"I can still confess, right?"

"So, you're willing to share your secrets with me?"

She nods.

I scowl. "And what if I use it against you?"

"But you won't." She sits up. Her color is better, her gaze clear. "You'll listen and you'll forgive without judgement because that's what you do, Father."

"You have so much faith in me?"

"Not in you, but in your faith," she replies. "I know when it comes to your profession, you'd never compromise."

"So much trust." I roll my shoulders. "What if I don't live up to it?"

"But you will." She rises to her feet and the blanket falls away. Don't look there, don't. I take in the curve of her bust, her nipples pointed and outlined against the fabric of her dress. That familiar ache that has become an ever-present sensation since I first saw her intensifies. My groin hardens. I pivot, walk to the door, when she asks, "Don't you need your outfit?"

I turn and she points to where I've draped the frock over a chair. "Your robe, Father," she prompts me.

I stare at the robe then back at her. "I don't need it to hear your confession. As long as I am ordained—and I am—that is enough."

I head for the door, then pause and glance at her over my shoulder, "Coming?"

15

Ava

He's going to leave me. He's going to leave me. He's going to...leave me and there's nothing I can do about it. He's going to choose Him over me, as he always does. He's going to leave me to return to the Church. I know it just by the tormented look in his eyes. By how he holds my gaze and refuses to look away, how he steels himself as if waiting for the worst that is yet to come...which could be possibly, what? What could be more horrible than him walking away from me a final time, and never looking back?

I can't let him go.

Not after what just happened. He saved me...metaphorically and literally; he had rescued me from myself. If I had been ready to walk away from him earlier, now... I am not. Now, I am going to fight for him, with every bone in my body. Which is why I'd pulled out the only trick I have. I'd asked him to hear my confession.

Bugger, bugger, bugger.

I stare at the confessional booth. I haven't been to a confession before, but I've seen enough movies to know how it's done.

He takes his position behind the screen, and I slip into the adjacent cubicle. I kneel, then lock my fingers together; stare through the screen, at the hint of his chin, the angle of his nose, the curve of his beautiful lips that are visible through the lattice work.

"You wanted to confess?" His voice echoes in the enclosed space.

I open my mouth to speak, but my throat is so dry that nothing emerges.

"Ava?" He prompts me, "You said you have something to confess?"

"Y...yes."

Shit, why is it that when I need the powers of conversation most, words fail me? I shuffle my feet, hunch my shoulders, then straighten them. "Um, maybe this was a bad idea. Maybe I shouldn't have suggested it."

"Perhaps your subconscious wants you to open up? Often, speaking what's on your mind is the best way to gain perspective. At the very least, if you talk, it'll shut me up."

"Not that you say a lot," I mutter. "In all the time I've known you, which I admit isn't that long, you've never mentioned anything about yourself."

"This is your confession, not mine," he reminds me.

"You always have a ready answer."

"Not this time. All I'm going to do is listen, without judgement, remember?"

I hear the smirk in his voice. Asshole... Wait, that's not right. You can't call a priest an asshole... However much he is one. Right? And this is Edward, toned down in his role as a priest. How would he be if he weren't one? Why am I even thinking of that, considering that will never be a possibility? It's why I am here, after all, in a confessional, with him in the one role he is comfortable playing.

I blow out a breath, then lower my head,

"You start with saying, 'forgive me, Father, for I have...'"

"Bugger that."

"Eve!" he admonishes me and I subside.

"Do I have to say that?"

"Do you want to confess?"

"Yes. Yes, I do." I lower my chin, "Forgive me, Father, for I have sinned... This is...ah. This will be my first confession."

There's silence from his side, then, "That's all right. Tell me your sins," he commands, and a shiver runs down my spine.

Here goes. "I lied to you."

"About what?"

"About being attracted to you."

"Is that right?"

I nod.

"I am in love with you, Edward,"

There, I've said it. For better or for worse, it is out there now. Maybe it's a low blow to stop him from leaving, but what else do I have in my arsenal, right?

"Did you hear me?" I prompt.

"You haven't known me long enough to have fallen in love with me."

"Just like you have fallen for me; you just haven't allowed yourself to acknowledge it."

"Why do you think you are in love with me?"

I frown. "That sounds more like a psychologist's question than a priest's."

He chuckles. "A good priest is also a psychologist when it matters."

Right.

"So, why do you think you are in love with me?"

"Because I am."

"Answer the question," he snaps.

I stiffen, then choose my words carefully. "Because...before I met you, I didn't know what to do with myself. I loved dancing, but that was it. Anything outside of that? I was no good at it. I didn't know how to live... didn't know what I wanted to wear, what to eat, what to drink, when not to say the wrong thing. I was adrift, unmoored, like I'd been waiting for a signal in the dark, a beacon to guide me, a force to propel me. Something that would take me by my hand and point me in the right direction. Or maybe someone." I tilt my head. "Someone who'd tell me when to get up, what to wear, when to eat, when to sit, when to vote, when to dance, when to relax. Someone who'd take the choices out of my hand and direct me on how to survive. I want someone to believe in me... I want someone like you to guide me, to steer me, to be my conscience, to hear what my soul wants and interpret it for me. Because that's what you do, Father, right? You're the one who advises and directs people. You lead, they follow. That...that's what I want."

There's silence then, "What?" he asks in a low voice. "What is it that you're asking for?"

"Forgiveness for what I am about to ask for, Father."

"What's that?"

"For you to tell me what to do."

"And you'd obey."

"Always, and only for you, Father." I swallow, clench my thighs together. What the hell am I doing? What am I doing? Don't say it, don't. "I want you to direct me, to command me, to take control of my life and of me, my choices. I want you to tell me what to do, Father."

Silence extends for a beat, another. He's quiet for so long that I lean forward. I peer through the lattice, but I can't make out his expression. Shit.

I stand up, then press my palm into the screen that separates us.

What the hell is he thinking about? Did I upset him? Have I gone too far? This was a terrible idea. It really was. Why don't you ever know when to shut up, Ava? I turn to head out of the booth, "Edward I—"

"Kneel." His tersely spoken word whispers through the space. I blink.

"Excuse me... What...what did you say?"

"I said, on your knees."

I hesitate. What the hell is he talking about? He surely doesn't mean that, does he?"

"Now," he snaps and I slide onto the floor, on my knees.

16

Edward

What the hell am I doing? Why had I agreed to listen to her confession? I should have left right then, though that might have been difficult, considering we were in my house. And no way, would I have asked her to leave, not after that almost accident. Thank God, nothing had happened to her. Thank the Lord, she's on the other side of the screen on her knees. On. Her. Knees. My belly hardens. The knot that had gathered there since the day I'd seen her coils even tighter. It's not too late. You can still leave. And what? Turn to God again? With what courage?

The one thing He'd asked of me, my loyalty, and I have tarnished it already.

No longer is there space for only Him... Where once He had been my sole focus day and night, there is now another.

As long as I've followed Him, I've never faced a challenge like this one.

Oh, I've had ample opportunity to turn away, to find my way back to the fold. But at every turn, I've come up against her—my feelings of her, my feelings for her, my need...my lust... My love... It is all that, and more. She'd been wrong in saying that I am interested in her. What I feel for her goes far beyond that. It is this shining something inside of her that only I can see. From the moment I'd sensed it, I'd known. And I've been fighting against it. And now, it is too late.

I rise to my feet, walk around to the confessional and pull the curtain aside. I find her kneeling, head lowered. Such a faithful lamb. Such a trusting woman. She is the ultimate Eve. Seductress. Temptress. Innocent and appealing. Lusty and guileless. Naive and wise, at the same time.

I step fully inside the booth, allowing the curtain to close behind me, then gaze down at her bent head.

A growl rips from my throat and she shivers. I lower my hand to her face, pinch her chin, and apply enough pressure for her to peek up at me from between her eyelashes. Her lips part; she gazes into my eyes. Her own shine a bright emerald in the murky light. She swallows, holding my gaze. The scent of her seems to intensify further and heat jolts in my belly. My thighs spasm; my stomach hardens. I reach down, push a strand of her hair behind her ear. She shivers.

"Edward—"

I shake my head, and she subsides.

I drag my finger down her cheek, down the slim column of her neck to the shadowed cleft between her breasts. She shudders, moans deep in her throat. The band around my chest tightens.

Is this it then? Do you want me to leave the only thing I have ever loved in my life? The safety, the seclusion, the meaning of what life is... You taught me that, and now you are abandoning me?

"Ed." She reaches out, places a palm on the tent at my crotch and a groan rips out of me.

"You will not move until I give you permission," I hiss.

She pales, retracts her hand, then nods. "As you wish, Father."

A shudder grips me. It shouldn't please me when she calls me that, but it does. How it does. And how damned I am for it. I am going to Hell, no doubt about it. If this is what is intended for me, then so be it.

I press my thumb down on her lower lip. "Open."

She parts her lips.

My groin hardens. I slide my digit inside her mouth, and she swirls her tongue around it. She bites down on my thumb and my dick lengthens. My belly knots. I tug my thumb from her mouth, lower my zipper. The sound echoes around the empty space.

She swallows, then gazes up at me, her green eyes glowing in the gathering darkness. So hot, so illicit. Apparently, the parts of me I thought I'd hidden away, have been right there, under the surface, waiting to reveal themselves. All they had needed was the right trigger. In this case, her.

Everything I had sacrificed and deprived myself of, everything I'd starved myself of and emptied out, to make space for Him... All of it...had been for nothing. I thought I'd come closer to Him, to perfection, and that had been my failing. For in the very act of aiming to aspire to be like Him, I'd allowed my ego to intrude. I'd dared to think I was anywhere close to Him, and that had been my greatest shortcoming. I am very much a man, with all of the imperfections and weaknesses... It's just that it had all been carefully hidden behind the cloak I had donned. I had allowed myself to be taken in by the image I had presented to the world... I had begun to believe in my own story, the one I'd spun for my flock. So much so, I'd thought I could fool God into believing it too... I should have known better. All this time, I'd been setting myself up for a fall and not realized it...

Until she came along. Oh, how I hate her, how I am grateful to her. How I need to find a way to reward her. But first... I pull out my cock, and pump it once, twice.

Her breathing grows heavy. Her chest heaves. She reaches her hand out, and I click my tongue. "So greedy, so impatient... Oh, my darling, Eve."

"Ava," she whispers. "My name's Ava."

"The enchantress who caused my downfall."

She stiffens, lifts her chin, "Edward... I—"

"Shh," I admonish her, "don't talk."

She purses her lips and nods.

I reach down, dig my fingers into the back of her hair and apply pressure. She moves closer, tips up her chin. I drag the crown of my cock across her lips and she licks up the trail of precum. My balls tighten and my groin hardens.

"Open," I growl, and she parts her lips. I feed my cock to her. Piston my hips forward and the head of my cock bumps up against the back of her throat. She chokes; spit drools from the corners of her mouth, but I don't release her. Something about how she stares up at me with tears dripping from her eyes, turns me on even further. My dick thickens and my thighs spasm. I tug on her hair, yank her head back and a groan bleeds from her.

I push her head forward and my dick disappears inside her mouth.

Dear God, why is that the single most erotic thing I have ever seen in my life?

Will you forgive me for using Your name for when I am the most aroused I have ever been? Not even during the times before I'd become a priest, when I'd experimented with my sexuality, when I'd tried to understand what it was that I had been missing all my life... The searching that had finally led me to You, my Lord... Never, at any of those times, had I felt like this. Is it wrong that I am breaking this vow, right here under Your roof? Can a relationship as close as ours break overnight? If I walk away from You after this, will You ever forgive me? How can I continue doing what I do, knowing I have broken my vow to You? Of everything I've done...this...this feels the most wrong. I'd pledged to keep myself empty, to stay a vessel for Your presence... Yet here I am, turning my back on everything I once held dear. Will You ever forgive me, my Lord, for I cannot stop myself? Will You think less of me, now that I have strayed from Your path?

I thrust in and out of her mouth, and she lets me. She holds my gaze, allows me to use her, as I increase the pace. In-out-in, my fingers clenched in her hair, as I slap my hand out and smack my palm into the wall next to me. My heart thuds in my chest, my pulse rate ratchets up, lust...heat...adrenaline laces my blood, as I pump in and out of her mouth.

I pull out until I am poised at the edge of her lips, then plunge back in. Her entire body jolts. Her chest heaves, more spit drools from her mouth to wet her dress. She juts out her chin, and the underside of my cock scrapes across her teeth. My thigh muscles coil and a ripple of heat seizes me. The tension curled at the base of my spine tightens, knots, curls in on itself until I can't breathe, can't think. Can't do anything but pull out of her and grip the base of my cock. "Fuck!" I growl aloud. "Fuck. Fuck. Fuck." I lurch back as I squeeze down to stop myself coming.

I tug her head back and she glances up at me.

"Open your mouth," I growl.

She parts her lips, tips her chin –up, and my balls draw up. I pump myself one last time then pull out as I come.

17

Ava

The tendons of his throat flex, his brow draws down, he closes his eyes, and a groan rumbles up his massive chest as he comes, shooting white streams of cum across my face. He continues to pump himself, the muscles of his forearms flexing, his biceps tensing as he seems to come and come across my mouth, my cheeks, my hair. I'm decorated in Edward, and hell, if it isn't the most erotic situation I've ever found myself in.

His chest heaves, his shoulders bunch, he lowers his head, opens his eyes and fixes those brilliant brown eyes on me.

My breath catches. Jesus... No...no...no, I can't be calling to Jesus, not when I am here in His House. But honestly, there is no better word I can use to encapsulate just how hot this guy is. Edward, I mean. The hot priest who glares down at me like he hates me. His gaze burns into me, like he...feels so much more for me. All the unbidden, unwanted, unseen, unheard carnal desires that I've harbored since I saw Edward on screen... The vampire, I mean, this time. Though Edward, the priest, is far sexier, bigger, taller, more present, more real, more vibrating with pent-up frustration, more ripped, more tatted up, more hurt... There's something hot and hungry and sad inside of him that makes me want to gather his head close to my bosom and cradle him there. A final burst of ropy white cum snakes across my face. I flick out my tongue and lick it up.

He draws in a sharp inhale. Then leans down, scoops up some of the liquid from my cheeks and holds it to my lips. I open my mouth and lock my lips around his digits and lick it clean. He continues to feed me his cum and I eat it from his fingertips like the starving, filthy girl that I am. Then he rubs the remaining fluid into my cheeks. I swallow, squeeze my thighs together. Why is that so hot, so filthy...so incredibly demeaning, but dirty as all hell and so, so sexy?

He drags his thumb across my lower lip, then leans down to nip on it.

I shudder.

He leans back, wraps his fingers around the back of my neck and I shiver. His every action is so intense, so...so dominant, and he's barely done anything to me yet. I'd been right. The moment he'd taken off the persona worn to the world, I'd met a completely different side of him... A part of him that could completely consume me with his intensity.

A pulse tics at his temple, his shoulders bunch, and the planes of his chest seem to ripple with an unseen tension.

How long had it been since he'd last come? Did he allow himself to masturbate? Probably not; not someone as dedicated as Edward. So why had he chosen to break his vow of chastity, and with me?

I open my mouth to ask him, but he shakes his head as he pulls me to my feet. He tips up my chin, leans over me, then presses his lips to mine. He swipes his tongue inside my mouth, tangles his tongue with mine, tilts his head, deepens the kiss, sucks on my tongue until it feels like he's consuming me completely.

Heat flushes my skin, the blood thumps at my temples, my toes curl, and my fingers itch to touch him, but I lock them into fists.

When he finally draws away, both of us are panting. He stares into my eyes, "Forgive me," he mutters, "for what I am going to do to you."

"You can do anything you want."

"That's what I am afraid of."

"I'm not," I retort.

His lips kick up. "How can you be so perfect?" He rakes his gaze across my features. "So gorgeous, so completely flawless?"

"I am not," I protest.

"You are, where it counts, Eve."

"And where is that?"

He places his palm over my left breast. "Your soul, your heart... You have this innate goodness in you, something you were born with, something I have been searching for all my life."

"And you found it..." I glance about the space, "here?"

"And here." He taps the space above my heart. "Your beauty shines through, a mirror to the world, an innocence that declares itself unafraid of anything that comes your way."

"Except you." I swallow. "I am scared, Edward."

"Of what?"

"Of this, what is between us...this which is so new, so wrong, so illicit."

"And it is the most difficult thing I have done in my entire life."

"What?"

"Open myself to you." He lowers his head until his nose bumps mine. "You make me realize that I am not perfect. That I was wrong in thinking I have accomplished so much, when really, I am only getting started."

I take in his gaze, the color on his cheeks, the slight twitch in his left eyebrow. "I... I don't understand."

"You will, in good time." He steps back, tucks himself inside his pants, then bends his knees and sweeps me up in his arms.

I gasp, "Edward... What—?"

"Shh." He strides out of the booth, up the aisle, and retraces his steps from the last journey we'd made just a few hours ago when he'd carried me in from the accident.

"This is getting to be a habit, you carrying me."

"Let me carry your weight, while I can."

I frown. "What do you mean by that?"

"Just that I used you, now let me take care of you."

"How? By doing more of the same, I hope."

He chuckles. "You, Miss Ava—what's your surname?" He frowns. "I can't believe I've never asked you that."

"It's Erikson, and maybe because you were otherwise occupied?"

"There is that, Ms. Erikson." He nods. "When I am with you, nothing else matters. Not your name or mine. We may as well as be two lights headed on a collision course with each other, with nothing able to get between us."

"Ha, you're also a poet?"

"Only when I'm with you."

"And when you're with Him?"

He stiffens, glances down at me. "With whom?" He frowns. "Who are you talking about?"

I blink. "I meant the One Above, the One who is in competition for your affections.”

"Not after this." His jaw tics. "I'm afraid I've fallen from His good graces."

"Isn't the Lord meant to forgive as well?"

He tilts his head. "But can I forgive myself?"

He stares straight ahead as he stalks out the back door of the church, down the path that leads to his cottage. He reaches the structure, shoulders open the door again, then walks past the living room, into the bedroom. He places me down on the bed.

He straightens and I grab at his sleeve. "Don't go."

"I'll be right back."

"No." I swallow. "No." My heart hammers against my ribcage. My scalp itches and my skin feels too tight for the rest of me. "Edward, please." I tighten my grip on him. "I've only just gotten you; I don't want to lose you."

His forehead furrows. "You'll never lose me, Eve, don't you see? Whatever is here between us is too strong for anything mortal to come between us."

"And what if...it's not mortal? What if it's some force we can't control, what then?" What the hell am I saying? Where is this irrational fear coming from? He's only just taken that crucial step toward me. Hell, he broke his vows for me... Something I'm still not sure how I feel about—so why am I clinging to him like a weak, helpless woman? Which I am not... No way.

He places his hand over mine. "I'm only going to get you some water. I promise, I'll be right back."

I nod, release him, watch as he prowls away, long-legged, powerful muscles of his thighs flexing under the fabric of his pants, the muscles of his tight arse coiling and uncoiling with every step he takes. I swallow, sit up in the bed, and pull up my knees so I can rest my chin on them.

He walks out and I turn my attention to the room. Other than the single bed, which I am on, there's a study table and a chair pushed up against the window. A wooden closet in the far corner, it's surface gleaming in the rays of the setting sun that pours through the window. I reach over and click on the lamp next to the bed. Blinking at the illumination, I glance up as he walks back in. He offers me a glass of water, urges me to drink it completely, then places the glass to the side, next to his phone.

He sits down on the bed. "We really do need to talk, now."

18

Edward

"About what?" She stares up at me, her face shining from where I'd rubbed my cum into her cheeks.

My cum.

My woman.

Mine.

And Him... What about the One to whom I'd dedicated my entire life? I lean back, putting distance between us. Her gaze sweeps down, before she raises her gaze back toward me. And I know she notices. And I shouldn't be doing this. I shouldn't be acting in such a shitty manner, not after I've come this far. But old habits die hard.

Apparently, there's a part of me, deep inside, that still holds onto the kernel of the man I'd thought I'd once been—unshakeable, focused, emptied of all personal emotions... So, I could receive His grace. His blessings. All that had mattered once was my devotion, my loyalty, my dedication to do what was right.

And what is right?

Her?

Me?

This unshakeable connection that I feel to her...the likes of which I'd only felt once before...When I'd been called to Him.

When I'd looked at Him and felt the kind of deep, intense rapport that had warned that it wouldn't get easier. That I'd do anything for Him; that I'd turn my world upside down, tear down any barriers that could come between us; that I'd open up my heart and soul to Him. And I had. And look where that had gotten me.

"I want you." I glare at her flushed features. "I need you, but you have to understand that this isn't easy for me."

"I understand, Edward." She folds her fingers together. "I can't even imagine how difficult this must be for you. When was the last time you slept with anyone?"

"Before I was ordained."

"Which was what—?"

"Five," he mutters, "five years ago."

"And you've never slept with anyone since?" She gulps.

"Not even in my dreams. Not until you came along."

"You've slept with me in your dreams?"

"I have stopped myself from doing everything I know I can...and sleeping isn't one of those things." I allow my lips to curl.

"Right." She shivers, folds her arms even tighter around her knees and I am sure if I touched her between her legs, I'd find her wet and aching and empty and hot and waiting for me. Fuck me. I haven't even touched her properly yet, and the length in my pants insists it's time. That I shouldn't wait any longer. And that's a laugh. All these years, I've never been interested, not once, in anything except my need to please Him, the One Above... And now that I've taken the first step out from under His aegis...it seems my past is coming back to embrace me with a vengeance.

I rise to my feet, glance down to where she has her fingers wrapped around each other. The skin across her knuckles stretches white, and for a second, I want to close the distance between us, to hold her close to me and tell her I won't hurt her. Except, I'd be lying if I said that.

"Are you nervous?"

She nods.

"Good," I square my shoulders, "you should be."

"You're scaring me, Ed."

"That was my intention."

"It is?"

I allow my lips to twist.

"How much have you learned about what happened to us Seven when we were taken?"

"The incident?" she asks, her voice cautious.

"The incident." I say the word without changing my tone. Good. At least, the years of trying to control my feelings have turned out to be of some use.

I rise to my feet and begin to pace. "You are aware that the seven of us were kidnapped and held for close to a month before the cops found us?"

"Is that how you got the scar?"

I stiffen, then turn to glare at her, "Is that what you heard?"

"It's what I guessed." She raises a shoulder. "The women have mentioned the incident, but they never go into it in detail."

"Trust me, it's best that way." I set my jaw. "Suffice to say that what the kidnappers did to each of us..." I fold my fingers into fists at my side. "It changed our lives forever. It changed who we were. Changed our futures, changed how we perceived ourselves. It set us apart from the rest of the boys our age then and ensured that no matter how far we ran or how much we grew up, the specter of what happened to us would never be too far off from our minds."

"Why...why are you telling me this?" She twists her fingers together in front of her.

"I am not sure." I stare down into her face. It's the truth. Maybe I started out because I want her to understand the reasons behind what I am about to do? Maybe I am trying to make excuses for myself? Maybe... I am trying to lessen the coming blow. Maybe... I am just a bastard who is selfish enough to set aside the one good thing that has crossed his path in all these years by hurting her. But it's for her own good. It is. No good will come of this, not when there is no future for either of us. Not when she could do much better than me. My nerve endings jangle and I ignore it. There is someone out there who can give her everything I can't. I am doing this for her own good. I am. I lock my elbows at my sides, take a step back from her.

"This, whatever it is between us, ends here, Ava."

"What?" She blinks. "What are you saying?"

"I can't see you again. You understand that, right?"

"But," she gapes... "I thought now that you'd—"

"Come in your mouth, everything would turn out right?"

She pales. "Why are you doing this?"

"What?'

"Trying to make me hate you?"

Because it's the only way I can rectify what I've done to you, by ensuring that you hate me enough to never look at me again.

"Clearly, I am not trying hard enough, if you are still here talking to me."
I roll my shoulders.

"You don't fool me." She rises to her feet. "You're doing this because you think it will drive me away from you. You're wrong about it, though."

"Oh?"

"I understand what it means to have found your calling, only to question your beliefs related to it."

"Do you now?"

She nods. "When I told my parents that I wanted to be a dancer, they flipped out. They thought I was joking, that it was a temporary passion, that I'd come to my senses and move beyond it, that it was just a hobby that I was taking too seriously, that I'd outgrow it. They tried everything to stop me from dropping out of university to pursue it."

"Did they succeed?"

"What do you think?" Her lips quirk.

"I think you are perceptive and strong and persistent. That despite your fragile appearance you have a backbone of steel."

She tilts her head, "You've given it some thought, then?"

I've given you a lot of thought.

"Once you set your mind on something, you don't give up." My heart begins to thud. I hear my words and I know it's a sign, that she can be stubborn and persistent and focused on what she wants. All the more reason it's important that she not waste her talents on me. "Which is why you'll understand what I am going to say next."

"What?" she whispers. "What is it?"

"I cannot give up my faith for you, Ava."

19

Ava

"Nobody's asking you to give up your faith, only your vocation." I tip up my chin. I wish I could be selfless enough to tell him that it doesn't matter, that I don't expect him to turn his back on his life's work, his ideals, his love and devotion for the One Above; but I'm only a woman. A flawed—and now morally corrupt woman, since I'd seduced a priest. OMG, I had, hadn't I? Add that to the list of my sins, as well—along with being selfish enough to want him for myself. Is it right to wish that he'd belong only to me? That he'd turn away from the One who's occupied his life and his thoughts for so long and give all his attention solely to me? Is it right to want to take him away from his flock, his people, the ones he'd, no doubt, helped heal along their life's journeys, as well?

Is it right for me to be this selfish, to want him for myself? Will he allow me to be this self-centered? Does it even matter what I want, when clearly, he's already made up his mind?

"Tell me, Edward," I insist, "why can't you, for once, think only of yourself?"

"Because I can't." He drags his fingers through his hair. "After the incident, I was on a journey of self-destruction. From the age of twelve when I was kidnapped to nearly nineteen, I hung out with the rest of the Seven, and yet in many ways, I wasn't one of them. They liked to get drunk and take part in fights they organized, first on our school grounds, and later, in a deserted parking lot outside London. They were good at it though... Me? I was into a different kind of self-destruction."

He glances at me, then away, and begins to pace.

"What...what kind?" I sit back down on the bed, watch him as he walks to the window, glances out, then grips the edge of the windowsill. "Drugs, sex, getting into fights where none of the Seven were around to back me up," his voice tapers off.

"So, you were trying to hurt yourself?"

He turns to glance at me over his shoulder. "I did a damn good job of it, too. By rights, I should have ended up dead, or worse," he grimaces, "if it weren't for Baron."

"Baron?" I scowl. "The missing one of the Seven?"

"Oh, he isn't missing. He chooses to stay away."

"Why is that?"

"It's the only way he could cope with what had become of him, of us, I suppose." He raises his shoulders. "Who knows what went on in that mind of his? If the rest of us were trying to hurt ourselves, Baron took it a step further."

"What do you mean?"

"While I was dabbling with ways to cause myself pain so I could forget what had happened to me, Baron was... Let's just say, his appetite for self-destruction was more vicious than mine."

"How's that?"

He turns to face me. "He took risks with his life. Not only was he a brilliant hacker, but he was also into extreme sports. He loved adventure sports, training for the kinds of expeditions from which coming back alive is not certain. He kept pushing himself, challenging himself at every turn, and that was only the tip of what he told us."

"And you know this, how?"

"While I was imploding inside, Baron was challenging himself, pushing himself to see how far he could go before he could die, if that makes sense." He widens his stance. "In some ways, it made him the most clear-headed of all of us Seven. Which is why he's the one who found me one night in a drug den, shot out of my skull, OD'd, and perhaps a breath away from dying."

"So, he found you and saved you that day?"

"That's one way of putting it." He chuckles. "He gave me holy hell when I regained consciousness in the hospital. It's Baron who checked me into a retreat. A very expensive sober living place, paid for by my family's money, of course."

"Of course," I say dryly. What little I know about the Seven points to the behavior that they make sure they always get their money's worth out of deals. Still, it was fair, I suppose. Baron came to his friend's' rescue and took the very important step of having him checked into a treatment facility. Then, in a strike of poetic justice, he made sure Edward paid for it out of his own pocket. Well, why not? It's one way of ensuring he felt the consequences of his actions, right?

"Like I said, I owe my life to him."

"And you're telling this to me, why?"

He raises his chin and fixes me with that stern glare that has my panties going damp at once. Hell, why is it that he can turn me on by just looking at me?

One side of his lips twists as if he's aware of exactly what I'm thinking, then he rotates his shoulders and cracks his neck. The sound shudders across the space, sinks into my blood, coils down into the space between my legs, which is already empty and wet and throbbing and—I turn away from him. "What is it you are trying to say, Ed?" I ask again.

"That when I was at my lowest, in the drug-filled haze, and fighting between life and death in the hospital, I had a vision."

"The proverbial light at the end of the long tunnel?" I say, only half-joking.

"Yes," he replies, all amusement wiped from his face. "I know I was dead when he found me. I know I stayed in that dead space for an hour before they revived me at the hospital. When I opened my eyes, I knew what I had to do."

"To become a priest," I say dully.

He nods. "Whatever I felt in that time... And it felt like I had journeyed to the depths of time. I felt like I had been gone much longer, you know... And it wasn't anything I saw or felt or heard... It was just a realization that I woke up with. A sense of peace, of contentment, even; something I'd never felt in the years since the incident, maybe even earlier. It was that complete rightness of it that led me to joining the seminary."

"So, you felt a divine calling and you made your choice?"

"You're not listening," he snaps. "It was not a choice. It was an awareness. I woke up one day and it was simply there, and I never questioned it."

"Not even now?" I take a step toward him. "When this—realization between us too is just there. It's not what you or I asked for. It's simply a connection, a state of being, something I don't even question—" He raises his hand, but I continue, "And neither do you. I know it; don't deny it."

"It is there," He narrows his gaze on me. "I can't deny it. But I also cannot embrace it."

"No, no, no." I shake my head. My heart begins to thud. A hole opens up in my stomach, grows bigger, begins to swallow me. This can't be happening, it can't. "No." I hear myself say the word aloud as if trying to deny what I sense is coming. What I know he's going to do and which I hate with every fiber in my body, and yet, I am powerless to stop, damn him.

"Listen to me." He takes a step forward and I skitter back.

"Don't say it, don't," I beg him. "Don't do it."

"I have to."

"Please, give us a chance."

"You don't know what you are asking."

"Oh, believe me, I do." I dig my heels into the floor, lock my fingers together, "I know exactly what I am asking of you, and if you deny it, I know it's going to make you hate yourself for life."

"Not more than I already do." His lips twist. "I am so sorry, Ava, but this is how it has to be."

"It doesn't. You can change it. You have the power to do it."

"The only one with the power is Him." He jerks his chin upward. "I am but His servant, His to command."

"I am yours to command," I choke out the words. "Doesn't that mean anything to you?"

He winces. "It does. It means far too much, and that's the problem." He peers into my face, "Don't you see that?"

"The only thing I see is a coward who can't face the truth, who can't see what's right there in front of him, who refuses to acknowledge the reality of his situation."

"Which is?"

"That you don't belong to Him anymore. You may deny it all you want, but you're mine now Edward, and nothing can change that."

"Except me." He draws himself up to his full height. "I deny it, I deny you. I don't want you. I choose Him over you."

"No." I shake my head.

"Yes." He says it with a tone of finality. "Yes."

"Don't do it."

"It's done." He folds his arms across his chest.

"This is it then?"

"It would seem that way."

My chin wobbles, my hands and legs shake, and a hot sensation stabs at my chest. My knees tremble and I fold my fingers at my sides. "So, this is goodbye?"

His features shutter and his lips firm. He watches me with that detached expression on his face that I hate so much. The one which indicates that I have already lost him. So why am I still standing here?

Turning, I head for the door.

"Ava"

My heart stutters and hope blooms in my chest.

I turn to find him holding out my handbag, "Don't forget this."

I swallow down the emotion that surges up my throat, march toward him, snatch up my bag. "I hate the day I set eyes on you. I hate that He brought you into my life" I say in a low tone. "One day...one day you are going to realize that the choice you made here was all wrong, but by then, it's going to be too late."

Turning, I walk out.

20

Edward

She's gone. She left me. I had allowed her to walk out of here. I had encouraged her to walk out of here.

I didn't stop her. Didn't ask her to come back. Didn't run after her and grab her and haul her back to me. I'd watched as she'd stepped out of my home, and the door had snicked shut behind her.

Then, I had glanced around the familiar surroundings of the place that had once brought me so much comfort—the serenity, the sparseness, the starkness of it, a reminder that I had made my choice. I had chosen the greater good over my selfish needs. I had chosen my loyalty, my devotion, my faith. I had chosen Him. After one brief slip up when I had come so close to realizing how it could have been between us, I had walked away. I had reached inside myself, drawn on the last reserves of my self-possession, and I had turned away from her. I had held onto my principles, everything that I hold dear...

So why is there a nagging pain under my rib cage? Why is my stomach knotted and twisted? Why are my shoulder muscles bunched up? Why is there a heaving sensation in my guts? The bile bubbles up my throat and my belly churns. I pivot, race to the bathroom, and lean over the commode. I empty out all the contents of my stomach, and dry heave until I can't hold myself upright anymore. Managing to flush away the disgusting mess, I rise to my feet, head for the sink and rinse out my mouth, before sinking to the floor.

Fuck, fuck, fuck.

I'd slipped up and come all over her face and it had felt like I had marked her, branded her, tied her to me irrevocably. Just like He had staked his claim on me.

Then I had found my conscience and turned my back on her—and the anguish in her eyes, the hate and helplessness in her features, combined with her vulnerability, had me reaching for her again. Only I hadn't. I had told her that I denied that she was mine. I had lied.

She is mine.

Nothing changes that.

Just as I belong to Him.

And He comes first.

He always has.

Nothing can change that.

Nothing. Not even her. Right?

Everything that I hold dear...

My stomach churns again, my insides twist, and I turn to the commode just in time to dry heave again and again. By the time I sink back to the floor, I am shattered. It feels like I have puked my very guts out... And my heart... And my soul. Everything of meaning to me has deserted me.

Except Him. I still have Him. I lurch up to my feet, splash cold water on my face at the sink. I dry my face, then turn and walk over to the cross hanging on the wall in my bedroom. I sink to my knees next to the bed...next to where I'd lowered her recently. I turn away from it, tip my chin up toward the skies. I raise my arms, close my eyes.

Forgive me, Lord, for I have sinned.

I couldn't control myself.

I allowed myself to be weak.

How should I punish myself this time, my Lord?

How many times should I atone for what I have done wrong?

I empty my mind of all thoughts and wait. And wait. Sink inside, into the deep, quiet space inside of me where no one else is allowed... Where there's an infinite expanse, waiting to be filled by Him. His voice. His presence. I wait and wait. And the answer seeps into my subconscious mind.

Twenty.

I wince. Almost ask Him if he is sure, but of course, He is. And I am not one to question the Lord. I rise to my feet, walk over to my closet and pull out my discipline. I peel off my shirt, walk over to the center of the room, then whip myself. Pain pulses up my spine, my skin gives, blood seeps down my back. The pent-up pressure inside me lessens and my muscles loosen. I whip myself again and again. By the time I reach ten, my arms ache and my back hurts. Blood runs down to drip onto the floor. I draw in a breath, whip myself again, and the strands of the whip curl around me, to slice open the skin on my belly. I grunt, allow the pain to absolve me, whip myself faster and faster. Sweat pools under my armpits, drenches my back and sinks into my blood. Pain thuds at my nerve-endings, at my temples, behind my eyes. I don't stop until I hit twenty, then lower the discipline to my side. I glance up at the wooden cross on the wall, my limbs trembling, my throat dry.

Do You forgive me now my Lord? Am I still Yours?

I squeeze my eyes and wait, wait.

There's no answer.

21

Edward

"What are you punishing yourself for?"

I drag my attention away from the window of Sinclair's conference room. The very same place where, not long ago, the six of us had stood, discussing the disbursement of funds for the new non-profit that Sinclair had suggested. The same one that I am hoping we can put to good use in initiatives I consider worthy.

"What do you mean, punishing?" I turn to face Sinclair, who's sprawled out in his chair. He seems, for all the world, like a man at peace with his world, which, of course, he is.

He's married and Summer, his wife, only recently discovered she's pregnant. Between him and Saint and Damian—that's already three anticipated arrivals in our circle. Given how madly in love they are, I wouldn't be surprised if the rest of them follow suit shortly. They deserve it, all of them. Every single slice of happiness that comes their way. After everything we've been through, it's only fair that the rest of them have the best years of their lives to look forward to.

And you? What about you?

I am on a different path. Like Baron. Even before the incident, the two of us had always been different from the rest of the Seven. And then the incident, while it had brought us together... In some ways, it had also highlighted how disparate we were from the rest.

"I mean," Sinclair leans forward, "you look like shit, Father."

No kidding. I rub my unshaven jaw. It's been two days since I saw her. Two days since I shaved. Two days since I atoned, or tried to compensate, for my slip up. The Lord hasn't spoken to me since.

Not that I am worried. I've gone for days...months in the past, when He'd retreated to the Light. He'll return to me... He has to... He always does. He's done so on the other occasions when I had erred. None of them had been as serious as this, though.

I'd chosen Him though, hadn't I? I had turned my back on the one good thing that had come across my path. I had torn out my heart and willingly offered it to the Lord. So, what more does He want from me?

I clear my throat, then turn to stare out the window. "Why did you want to talk to me?"

"Baron."

I still, then compose my features into one of nonchalance before I turn to him. "You heard from him?"

"That's what I was going to ask you." He scowls at me. "You were the one who heard from him last, isn't that right?"

I nod. "Nothing since that last letter."

"Hmm." Sinclair leans his elbows on the table, then presses his fingers together.

"Doesn't it strike you as odd that he'd write, out of the blue, to warn us of the Mafia?"

"It's Baron." I raise my shoulders. "Who knows what prompts him to do what he does?"

"I thought you guys were close."

"Close?" I laugh. "That's not how I would put it." I drag my fingers through my hair. "More like, at loggerheads."

"Enough to keep sniping at each other all the time. Enough that when you were at your lowest, he tracked you down and hauled your arse out of that drug-den you'd crawled into."

I set my jaw.

Sinclair folds his arms across his chest, "You thought you and Baron came out of the incident the worst, so it gave the two of you some kind of permission to form your own pity club within the Seven—"

"Pity club?" I scowl.

"You forget we swore to always have each other's backs, no matter what. And that included giving the two of you space when needed."

"The lot of you gave us space?" I laugh. "None of you had an inkling of what we went through—"

"Only because you never shared," Sinclair snaps. "Do you realize how frustrating it is that the rest of us have been open about what happened to us? While you and Baron..." His jaw firms, "The two of you clammed up, as if there was some secret that bound the two of you, something that you didn't dare talk about, in case—"

"In case—?" I tilt my head.

"In case, talking about it would force you to acknowledge what actually happened."

"And is that so bad?"

"It is." He rises to his feet and grips the edge of the table. "If you want to heal, then you need to open up, Father. If not to one of us, then to her."

"Who?"

"Cut the bullshit, Ed. We know."

"Know?"

He nods.

"Know what?"

"That you and that delectable dancer of yours have a thing going on," a new voice answers from the doorway that connects the conference room to Sinclair's office.

I glance toward the man who fills the doorway, then groan, "Oh, no."

"Oh, yes." Weston walks in... Or rather, is dragged in by a very excited Max, who prances around on a leash. Weston unhooks his leash, and Max dashes toward Sinclair, who bends down to pet him.

"Hey, little bugger," he croons, "you missed me, did you?" Max barks, licks Sinclair's face, places his paws on his £7000 suit. Sinclair doesn't flinch. He scratches behind the dog's ears and Max positively whimpers in ecstasy, before dropping his paws back on the floor. The dog races around the table toward me. I hold my hand in front of his nose, then mirror Sinclair's gesture by digging my fingers behind Max's ears. The dog huffs, tongue lolling, before pulling away and racing around back to Sinclair, who once more pets him.

"Good practice for when the little one comes along, eh?" Weston walks over to deposit the leash on Sinclair's table. "My, how you've unbent since the snarling, growling man you used to be, not long ago."

"Speak for yourself." Sinclair straightens, and Max settles at his feet. "I still have my edge."

"Wait until the patter of little feet sounds on your office floor. Then we'll see," Weston retorts.

"Office floor?" He glances around, "Why would I bring the kid in here?"

"You mean Summer hasn't told you?"

"What?"

"That she plans to split parenting duties half in half with you."

"As she should." Sinclair scowls. "Still, doesn't mean I'd bring the kid to office."

"You would if you had a creche in the office." Saint prowls in. "I am all for it, given Victoria is only five months from giving birth and I, for one, wouldn't want to be parted from the kid for that long—"

"So, you are going to bring the kid to work?" I ask.

"Probably not." Saint smirks.

"Then?" I frown.

"Ideally, I'd work from home. Hell, I could work from anywhere, and this way, I can spend time with my family. Best of both worlds."

"Of course." The three of us turn to Sinclair who stares between us. "What?"

"You going to shift to a home office, as well?"

"I haven't considered it," he rubs the back of his neck, "but it's a possibility. I'll need to discuss it with Summer."

The three of us look at each other, then I chuckle, "It's heartwarming; it really is." I glance around at their faces. "You guys gladden my soul."

"What?" Saint scowls.

"Truly," I jerk my chin at Weston, "it's incredible."

"Care to explain yourself, Father?" Saint drawls.

"Whoever said the Lord works in mysterious ways surely knew what they were talking about."

Sinclair arches an eyebrow. "If you think speaking in riddles will pique our attention?" He knocks his knuckles against the table. "Then you're right. Out with it, Father."

"All of you assholes brought to heel by the love of a good woman." I raise my gaze heavenward, "Thank you, Lord."

There's silence in the room, then Sinclair chuckles. "Well played, Father. You'd like us to believe that you are the last man standing, but as we all know, that's not true."

"What's not true?" Damian ambles in, his hair streaming about his shoulders. In jeans and sweatshirt, he's the most casually dressed among us. Of course, if Baron were here, he'd probably give Damian a run for his money.

I push the thought from my head, turn to Damian. "Nothing," I say at the same time as Sinclair declares, "That Edward is the last bachelor of the Seven."

"Technically, he isn't, considering we don't know if Baron is married or not." Arpad strolls into the conference room, then shuts the door behind him.

Baron again. Why is there no getting away from the mention of his name right now? Why is he on my mind so much?

Saint barks out a laugh. "Baron? Married? Not likely."

"Hello pot, meet kettle?" I tilt my head at him. "You, Saint, would have been the last man I'd have pegged to get married, and yet—"

"It's you who claims to be still standing strong, when we all know your heart is taken."

"By the One Above," I declare.

"Not that I am refuting that," Sinclair retorts, "but you are a man, after all. So, what if you decided to turn your back on everyday life and chose to become a priest? Underneath that calm demeanor is a man who, perhaps, feels more than any of us. The day you acknowledge it, the day you forgive yourself for what you've been through and stop punishing yourself for what you couldn't change, is the day you realize that you don't have to hide behind the persona of the calm man of the cloth."

I blink at him. "And here I thought I was the preacher."

"Can't preach to the converted, Father." Sinclair's lips twist. "You know everything I am talking about, but the day you acknowledge it is when things will begin to shift for you."

"You think I'm hiding from the world?" I scowl at him.

He meets my gaze with his unblinking one. I glance around the room, take in the expressions on the faces of all my friends. "Wow." I fold my arms across my chest, "Apparently, all of you think I am using my vocation as a crutch."

"Not a crutch..." Weston drums his fingers on his chest. "More like, you were taking your time to process your grief."

"You were the most stubborn of us, Ed. You needed to get your own way when we were boys." Damian widens his stance. "You were also the angriest."

"Angry? Me?" I laugh, "Are you sure you're talking about me."

"Remember the time we came across the boys bullying one of the smaller kids in school? Who's the one who jumped to his rescue?" Arpad asks.

"We all did," I mumble.

"Yes," Arpad nods, "but who started it?"

I stare at him.

"You did," Weston chimes in. "You always took the side of the underdog."

"You had this sense of fair play inside you, which came to the fore when you saw any kind of injustice being done," Saint interjects.

"You were idealistic, the only one of us who wanted to make the world a better place. Yes, you were the angriest amongst all of us, but your triggers were more nuanced." Sinclair places the tips of his fingers together, "You saved your anger for when it would have the best impact."

"Or the worst outcome. As I recall, we were outnumbered that day."

"Ten to seven." Sinclair grins. "Still, we managed to hold our own."

"The fuckers didn't get off easy."

"No," I chuckle, "we managed to whip their asses, all right."

"Though I couldn't complain when the teachers finally separated us." Weston winces.

"And marched us all to the principal's office." Damian smirks.

"Suspended for a week." Saint picks up the narrative.

"And came back to a hero's welcome from the girls." Sinclair's grin widens.

"Couldn't have asked for a better conclusion to that episode," I agree.

"And what about the latest episode, Father?" Sinclair holds my gaze, "What kind of conclusion are you hoping for it?"

"It's concluded," I assert.

"What do you mean?" Sinclair frowns.

"It means," I fold my arms across my chest, "there is nothing to it. I am a priest, or have you forgotten that?"

"Have you ever let us forget it?" Sinclair asks wryly.

"You going passive-aggressive on me, Sinner?" I narrow my gaze on him. "You have something to say, why don't you come out and say it?"

"All I'm saying is, you have used the priesthood to hide from what's important."

"Or maybe I used it to face my fears."

"Did you?" He leans forward with his palms flat on the table. "Is that what you have been doing the last few years?"

I blow out a breath. "Yes. I have been using the discipline that comes with the life of a priest to manage my anger. To channel my frustrations, my hate, my resentment at what happened into something to benefit the greater good of the world."

"Wow," Saint blinks, "you truly do believe you can make a difference to the world?"

"Something like that," I mutter. "Look, it's no big deal. Apparently, the only way I could get past the incident was by dedicating myself to a bigger cause."

"Not that I doubt your cause for one second," Sinclair narrows his gaze on me, "but have you ever thought that maybe looking outside and helping the world was easier than searching inside for the answers?"

I stare at him. "And here I thought you were a shallow, obnoxious, a-hole of the first order with a superiority complex to end all superiority complexes."

Color smears Sinner's cheeks. "That too," he grumbles. "Don't deflect, Father. We are talking about you, not me."

"Yeah, don't turn the attention away from yourself," Damian chimes in.

"We ain't lettin' you go without answering this time," Weston drawls.

I rub the back of my neck, shuffle my feet. "Can't believe I allowed myself to be caught in this situation."

"Nothing you haven't done for the lot of us before." Saint smirks.

"Bet you enjoyed the counsel you gave all of us when we faced crises of confidence in ourselves."

"None of you faced a crisis of faith though," I say it in a low voice, but of course, all of them catch it.

Sinclair sets his jaw, Saint and Weston stiffen, Damian scrutinizes my features, and Arpad? He draws in a breath. "This one's a tough one for you, eh, Father?" he asks softly. "I can only imagine what you are going through right now."

"Can you?" I say bitterly. "When you all met your women, all you had to figure out was how to stop fighting yourselves. How to conquer your ego long enough to come to grips with your feelings for them. You didn't have to fight against your instincts, the very way of life you had carved for yourself, or how to turn your back on the vows which mean more to you than your life."

"Do they Father?" Sinclair asks quietly. "Do they mean more to you than the very breath you take?"

"Yes." I thrust out my chin. "Yes, they do."

"Well, then," he lowers himself back in his chair, "this should be easy, huh?"

22

Edward

When he'd asked the question, I'd agreed at once, yet I can't get his words out of my head. Do my vows mean more than my very breath? Yes, they do. But so does she. It's why I had turned her away. It's why I am here, kneeling in front of the altar in church late at night after the entire world has gone to sleep. I hadn't even bothered going to bed. Instead, I'd stayed up, working on the paperwork needed to ensure that the funding for the various charities I support through FOK media remains uninterrupted. There are always new requests coming in and it is up to me to scan and decide which ones to support next. Children, the elderly, abused women, the most vulnerable among us, including pets... I want all of them to benefit from the dividends of the investments that the Seven have made. While I don't broker any of the deals, the rest of the Seven involve me in all decisions. It's why I am up-to-date with everything and have enough knowledge, if needed, to run the deals myself. Not that I am tempted...I haven't even thought about how it would be to drive those deals until...now... Until her... Until something inside me had wondered how it would be to come home to her every night, to live a normal life with her, to have children like the rest of the Seven are going to do.

I'd thought through all possibilities before enrolling in the seminary. At least, I thought I had. At nineteen, it had been easy to embrace the idea of never falling in love, of never having children. But with everything that has happened so far, I can't help but thinking, what if we were meant to be?

What if that's why God brought her to me? What if His intention all along was not to test me, but to encourage me to return to the real world? I blow out a breath.

Clearly, I am spending too much time with the Seven. Their thinking is beginning to rub off on me. It's the only reason I am beginning to question myself so much. I love the Seven like my blood brothers, but when it comes down to it, not one of them has any idea what it's like to be in my shoes. And the only one who does... He is gone. Except for sporadic, snail mail letters once every year or so. Mostly, ones addressed to all of the Seven, assuring us he is alive. Which is why the last one was strange. It had been addressed only to me—I hadn't mentioned that to the Seven. How could I when I, myself, couldn't fathom why he'd done that? Did he mean that the Mafia's threat was centered on me? Why would it be? What do I have that they want? Why would they zero in on me?

Why did they single out me and Baron for what they did when they took us? Maybe I could put that down to being in the wrong place at the wrong time... Maybe. So, what did it mean that Baron had addressed the letter to me?

And why did you have her cross paths with me, my Lord?

I close my eyes, raise my head up to the skies, open my arms to His grace. His benevolence. The only reason that I am here today. Believing in You, throwing myself at Your mercy and asking You for Your forgiveness is what I believe in. It's why I exist today, my Lord, for You saved my soul. You took me in, redeemed me, saved me and gave me purpose. Show me the way now, my Lord. Tell me what to do. Take everything I am—my heart my soul, my life. Take anything you want from me, my Lord, but spare her. Let no harm come to her. Grant unto her, her heart's desires, keep her happy, for that is all I need. Tell me, my Lord, that you hear me?

I draw in a breath, and the complex notes of the incense fill my lungs. The notes of Frankincense and tea-tree tease my nostrils. I inhale and let the scent waft over me, sink into me, fill my blood and go to my head. My breath grows deeper and my muscles relax as I allow my mind to focus on His benevolence, His grace, the complete self-assuredness with which He's guided me thus far.

Surely, you'll not let go of me, when I need You the most? When everything in me insists that the right thing to do is to turn to You.

And yet my heart... My heart disagrees. My heart persists in choosing her. And I can't bear it, my Lord. I can't fail you. I need to find a way out. I need to return things to what they were. I need You to show me the way. Tell me what to do, my Lord.

I pray and pray, but the Lord remains silent. I beg Him, plead with Him, cajole Him to, at least, talk to me again. But He stays silent.

I stay there until the chill invades my clothes, my skin, until my knees threaten to give way, and my arms ache from being held aloft. My thigh muscles tremble, my biceps protest and yet, He remains silent.

I will not move until You answer me, not this time. I need You to steer me. Give me a way out. Please. I swallow down the anger, the hurt, the helplessness that fills my chest and clogs my throat.

Talk to me. You can't be silent, not anymore.

"Father," a voice says from behind me, "can I pray with you?"

I open my eyes, turn to find a man walking up the aisle. As he draws closer, the acrid scent of cigarette smoke deepens. I take in his features. He seems familiar. Where have I seen him? Where... He steps into the beam of light from the illumination above and that's when it clicks. He's the homeless man I'd seen near the hotel when I'd gone to see Ava.

"The church is closed, though you are still welcome." I frown, "How did you get in?"

"I used the side entrance." He nods to the heavy door that leads to the rectory. Huh. Had I left the door unlocked? But then, I haven't been thinking clearly since I returned from meeting the rest of the Seven, so I guess I might have forgotten.

The man stops next to me. He glances up at the figure on the cross. "Do you ever wonder if He was happy?"

"You mean Jesus?"

He nods.

"We have no reason to believe otherwise."

"And you, Father?" He turns to me. "Do I have reason to believe otherwise with you?"

I peer down into his features. The uncombed hair falling about his face, his worn-out but clean shirt, the faded jeans that hang off his hips, hinting that he may have been healthier at one point in time, which is, honestly, not too difficult to imagine, and it's not because of his clothes. It's the defeated slump to his shoulders, the faded look in his eyes, as if he's lost all hope. Something I am used to... For it is when they're at their lowest that people most often approach me. Is that why I chose this profession? Because I recognize kindred spirits?

Because I want to cling to that part of me that feeds on my grief, my helplessness, my lack of control I had in that time when I was taken and made to do things which I've never confessed to another. Maybe to her? Only to her. Where did that thought come from? I let go of her, remember? I walked away from her. I chose Him. Which is why I am here, ready and willing to do His bidding. To help others. Like this man.

"I am happy with my lot." I hold his gaze. "How can I help you, my child?"

"I need to confess."

23

Edward

"Forgive me Father for I have sinned. It has been...many years since I last confessed."

He swallows, shuffles his feet. The air in the booth grows denser. I shift around to make myself more comfortable. Not that I begrudge the fact that he came this late... But the fact that he interrupted my time, when I was talking to God? I'm not too happy about that. Still, I'd never turn away someone who walks in and asks for help. I lean forward, press the tips of my fingers together, "Go on, son, what would you like to tell me today?"

He fidgets around some more, then leans in, "I... I did something very bad, Father." He pauses, gulps audibly, then blows out a breath. "It was because of me that many lives were spoiled."

"How is that?"

"I helped some bad men when I was much younger. I didn't realize what I was doing then, but it was because of me that many other boys found their futures changed completely." His voice wavers, and he buries his face in his hands. "If I could only turn back time, I'd never have given information of the movements of my classmates to those men."

"How old were you when this happened?"

"I was twelve." His voice breaks. He clears his throat. "I may have put those boys in jeopardy, but it might as well have been me who was taken, as well."

The hair on the nape of my neck rises. "Taken?" I keep all inflection out of my tone. "Who was taken?"

"The boys I spied on." His tone lowers, "I... I couldn't help it, Father. My parents were well-off, but then they lost all their money in a stock market crash. It was only because they'd been patrons who had made large donations that I'd been able to continue my studies in the same school." He shuffles around some more. "And I needed the money." He glances away, then back at me, "I uh, you...you understand what I am trying to say?"

"What did you need the money for?" I can hazard a guess, but I want him to spell it out for me.

"Alcohol... drugs." I sense him shrug.

"You were an addict?"

"That's putting it lightly." He barks out a self-deprecating laugh. "Vodka for breakfast, coke, and not the drinking kind, for lunch, all combined with downers for supper. I was in terrible shape."

I stare through the pattern in the partition, try to make out the expression on his face, but of course, I can't. Who the hell is this guy? Why did he walk in here, of all the churches, and what is he trying to tell me? "How did your school authorities miss that you were an addict?"

"Oh, I was very well-behaved in class, the epitome of the model student. No one, not even my schoolmates, guessed just how far gone I was. If it hadn't been for the fact that my parents lost their fortune..." I sense him shrug, "I could have maintained the status-quo. But it was not to be... I... I—"

"You needed money?"

"You can say that again. And as with all things, when you are desperate, the vultures find you." He drags in a breath. "I was only twelve, Father. You need to understand, I didn't have a clue about the seriousness of what I was going to do."

I curl my fingers into fists, force myself to breathe, breathe. "What did you do?" I finally ask.

"This stranger approached me when I was trying to track down my favorite dealer, who had refused to take my calls because, of course, they know when you are desperate. When you need them the most, that's when they desert you. Have you found that, Father?"

He's blathering now, trying to stray off track, trying to lead himself and me away from the topic at hand. Typical. I've found this pattern to be true of many who come to confession. It's almost like they are in the therapist's chair here. Though, unlike the reasons that lead them to see a therapist, they come here because their conscience doesn't permit them to stay quiet anymore.

Yet, even this far into the narrative, self-preservation kicks in and they try their best to wriggle out of it, to place the blame elsewhere.

"This stranger," I prompt him. "What did he want from you?"

"When I finally tracked down my dealer, he was waiting for me."

"Who?" I query. "The dealer?"

"The man," he snaps. "Are you following me, Father?"

I twist my lips. "I am right there with you."

"He was well-dressed, in an expensive suit, sunglasses, a hat... Looked like something out of a Mafia film."

My heart begins to thud. Sweat beads my temple. "Is that what he was? The Mafia?"

"So, I found out later." He swallows. "He wanted me to get information on some boys."

My pulse thuds at my temples. "What kind of information?"

"About their daily routines. How they got to school every day, where they went to football practice, what else they did in the afterschool hours."

"So, you did it?"

"Yeah." I sense him nod. "I got him all the information he wanted."

"And he rewarded you?"

"For my sins?" he says quietly. "Asshole, gave me drugs and kept doing so for the next... I don't know, many years. They made me dependent on them. I ended up being reliant on them for my next fix, something they exploited, in every way possible."

"And do you still work for them?" I keep my voice even.

"What do you think?" He laughs bitterly, "Once you've interacted with them, they never let you go."

I rub at the pain that stabs at my chest. What the hell am I doing, encouraging him to speak? I should ask him to shut up. I should get the hell out of here, before I do something I'll regret. I lock my fingers together, tuck my elbows into my sides.

"And the boys on whom you reported. What about them?"

He stays silent.

"You've come this far. Get it all off your chest. Pour out all the worries inside of you to make space for the Holy Spirit." I narrow my gaze on the screen and what I can see of his profile. Go on, you asshole, confirm to me what I already know. Do it already. Give me the chance to get even for everything that happened to me and my friends. Say it. Do it.

"The b-boys," he stutters, "the...they were kidnapped."

My heart stops, then picks up speed and slams into my chest. The blood thuds at my temples. My palms grow clammy and I flex my fingers.

"What school?" I force myself to say the words, "Which school did these boys attend?"

He draws in another breath, seems to hesitate.

"Get out everything, my son," I prompt him. "Every last memory associated with what happened. Lay it all out, so you can make a fresh start.

He swallows, moves around again, then finally lets out a sigh. "St. Lucian's," he mumbles.

I freeze. "St. Lucian's?"

So, he definitely is talking about me and rest of the Seven. Not that there had been any doubt in my mind. Too much of what he'd told me matched what had happened to us. But I had to be completely sure.

"Only the most exclusive private school in the country," he scoffs. "You wouldn't think kids from such an exclusive school would be involved in something like that, would you?"

I stare at his profile through the screen. This is the person responsible for turning the lives of me and my friend's upside down. If he hadn't shared information on us... Someone else would have? Maybe. Maybe not. Right now, as the facts stand, it is this man—this pathetic, wretched excuse of a human being—who shared information on us, who is partially responsible for the emotionally deficient, heartless men that we have become. And maybe he hasn't fared that well either. But it doesn't change the fact that if he hadn't reported on us, if he had turned down the offer of the Mafia, there's a small chance we might have turned out normal. Normal? Hah! What's that? What do I know about it? Except, that it is what most of the Seven now have.

Not me, though.

Never me.

And this guy... This bastard sitting on the opposite side of the screen is responsible for the sodden, tragic-comedy farce that my life has become. My vision tunnels and my senses pop. I rise to my feet, walk around and yank the curtain open.

The man stares up at me. "Father?" He frowns. "Is something wrong?"

"Nothing." I smile at him. "Everything is just how it should be. You couldn't have picked a better church and a more apt priest to confess your sins to."

His shoulders sag in relief. "Thank you, Father. I'm so grateful that you listened and did not judge."

"Me, judge?" I chuckle. "No, I wouldn't do that. Why would I? After all, kids are young and resilient. They bounce back from such traumatic memories, don't they? Assuming they survived to tell the tale, that is?"

"Oh, they did." He bobs his head up and down. "They all survived, thank God for that."

"You sure 'bout that?"

"What?"

"That it was better that they survived?" I lean down and peer into his face, "Are you positive it was better that they survived?"

He blinks rapidly. "Uh... Yes. Of course. I mean, better to live than to die, right?"

"Wrong."

He gapes at me. "F...father, is everything all right? You...you...seem pale."

"Do I?" I reach out and clamp my fingers around his neck. "Wonder why that is?"

His gaze widens. I tighten my grasp and he coughs, then grabs at my hand. I haul him up to his feet.

"Wh... what are you doing?" he chokes out.

"What does it look like?"

I drag him out of the booth and toward the altar.

"Father..." He tries to speak, but I squeeze his neck, apply even more pressure. His body jerks. He opens and shuts his mouth, then digs his fingernails into my wrist. Pain shivers up my arm; all noise in my head fades.

"Do you know who I am?" I stare into his widened gaze. "Answer me."

He opens and shuts his mouth, but no words emerge.

"Nod, if you recognize me," I order.

"I... I..." He gags. "Edward Chase." He finally says, " I know who you are."

I blink. "And yet you came to me to confess?" I say in a low voice. "Why is that?"

His gaze widens, but he doesn't speak.

"Tell me, what game are you trying to play with me? Why did you walk into my church? Why choose to confess to me?" I squeeze harder, and his eyes bulge. He begins to choke, to scratch at my wrists. His shoulders shudder, tears leak out from the corners of his eyes.

"Did you think you'd get Absolution for your sins? After all isn't Absolution an integral part of the Sacrament of Penance, is that why you came to me? To be forgiven? And who better to do so than one of the Seven who was a victim of your wrong doing?"

He shakes his head, and a cold sensation grips my chest. My belly knots, and my pulse rate slows down.

"Or maybe you came, knowing if you confessed to me, it would push me over the edge. Maybe you hoped I'd lose control enough to grant you eternal redemption. After all, it's thanks to what you did that I found my faith. So, it's only right that I use the authority conferred on me to grant you eternal peace."

His gaze widens.

"Normally I take the vow of confidentiality during confession very seriously, but in your case, I'll be making an exception."

He tries to speak, but only a choking sound emerges.

"By the power vested in me my by the Church, I absolve you of your sins, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost." My vision tunnels. Anger thrums at my temples. I release the grip on his throat with one hand while I continue to choke him with other. I raise my right hand. "In the name of the Father." I squeeze his throat, as I lower my hand. "Son." I increase the pressure on his throat as I swipe my free hand to my left, "Holy Spirit." I bear down with every last sliver of strength left in me. "Amen." I complete the benediction by moving my hand to my right.

When I loosen my grip on him, he slumps down to the floor. I lower my arms to my sides, then glance up at the figure on the cross above me. "So, this is what you wanted from me? This is the answer to my prayers then, my Lord?"

I stare up at the face of Christ, rake my gaze across His features frozen in agony.

"Tell me, my Lord, is this the way You repay me for the years I spent in Your service, in making sure I did everything that was my duty to You, in ensuring that I would leave no stone unturned in my loyalty to You? It was all a test, wasn't it? Every single thing I did has led up to this moment, and I am helpless to stop it. For I am not in control... You are...or so You'd have me think?" I tip up my chin glare at He who does not speak to me anymore.

"Well, guess what? Not anymore. From this day on, I am no longer in Your service. No one controls my destiny. Not him—" I stab my finger in the direction of the figure on the ground, "not You, not anyone else. Me, I am the master of my destiny. Me, Edward Chase, from here on, I renounce my association with You."

The wind blows in through the open side door, which slams shut. The sound ricochets around the space, coils into my guts. "Oh, no, you don't." I smile up at the figure on the wall. "You can't stop me, not now. You had Your chance and You lost it. You lost me, my Lord. This is where we part ways."

I snatch the collar from around my neck and drop it on the man on the floor.

Then walk out the side door, through the garden, to my cottage. I pick up my phone, stare at it, then dial the one number I'd sworn never to call.

24

"Earbuds firmly stuck in her ears, my mum dances around the lawn, backlit against the sinking sun. Her weights are in her hands, swinging dangerously near to her head every time she raises her arms. She's supposedly working out, and as she launches into the chorus of Prince's Purple Rain, I can see her face light up."

-From Ava's diary

Ava

Thunder booms outside and I sit up with a gasp. It's dark in the room and I reach for my lamp and flick it on. The light illuminates the room but doesn't dispel the unease that gathers in the pit of my belly. I snatch up my phone, check the time. It's two am, the dead of night. Goosebumps pop on my skin. I rub my hands together, blow on them, then stare at the band-aid Edward had placed on the scraped skin at the base of my palm. I peel off the bandage, find the wound is already half healed. That didn't take long. Some gashes heal quickly. Others—well, others only fester over time.

A shudder runs down my spine.

It's freezing and not even being under three duvets is keeping me warm. Ugh. The temperature must have plummeted outside, as it sometimes does in London. It was sunny yesterday, the warmest day in March for the last fifty years, or so the media headlines had proclaimed. Which is why, no doubt, the mercury dropped the other way today. I roll up the bandage toss it into the wastebasket near the bedside table. Just then, lightning flashes outside. Rain patters against the window at the same time that the doorbell rings.

Huh? Who can it be? I'm not expecting any of the girls to come by, and anyway, they'd never drop by unannounced. In the middle of the night. I pick up the phone and check my messages. Nope, nothing.

The doorbell rings again, then someone bangs against the door.

I stiffen, clutch my phone in my hand like it's a weapon. Shit, I don't have anything to defend myself with. But thieves don't ring doorbells, do they? Not unless they want to take you by surprise when you opened the door. My pulse rate ratchets up. I slip out of the bed and the cold wraps around me. I shiver, walk to the kitchen, glance around, then grab the first thing I find. A wooden spoon. Shit, that's not going to help.

The banging on the door resumes again, and I pivot, walk toward it and peer through the keyhole.

Golden eyes glare back at me. I gulp; my fingers tremble. The phone slips from my hand and hits the floor. Shit, shit, shit. I snatch it up, then juggling the wooden spoon and the phone in one hand, I open the door to find Edward framed in the doorway.

"Wha...what are you doing here?" I gulp.

He rakes his gaze down my features, to where I'm holding the phone and wooden spoon, then back to my face.

His hair is mussed, droplets of water dot his face, trail down his beautiful throat, down the demarcation between those sculpted pecks. Goosebumps pop on my skin for a second time in a few minutes, this time for completely different reasons. I rub one bare foot over the other and he jerks his gaze down my chest, to my hips, to my bare legs. Shit. In my hurry to get a weapon, I'd forgotten to wear something warmer, so I'm still clad in my camisole and the knickers that I'd worn to bed.

His nostrils flare. He glances up, meets my gaze. His irises blaze a gorgeous golden. I see myself reflected in them and shiver. Thunder cracks outside again and I jump. The phone slips from my hand. Again. He swoops down, grabs it before it hits the ground, then straightens. "Invite me in," he commands.

"Wh...what?"

"Ask me in, Eve," he snaps. "Now."

I gulp. "W...won't you come in?" I take a step back, then skitter to the side as he brushes past me. The scent of freshly cut grass mixed with rain envelops me. My nipples harden and my thighs clench. Moisture pools between my legs. Shit, at this rate I am going to dampen my panties and he's going to know the effect he has on me, considering I have no clothes to hide behind.

The wind picks up outside again, and I close the door. I turn to find him standing in the center of the living room. He seems to have absorbed all the oxygen in the room, for I try to breathe, but my lungs burn. I try to swallow but my throat is too dry. Hell. Why does he have this effect on me? I take a trembling step forward, then another. He must hear the slight noise I make, for he tenses. He drops his backpack to the floor, then shrugs off his leather jacket and tosses it aside. His shoulders flex, the defined planes of his back outlined against the shirt that pulls tightly across his torso.

He raises a hand to run his fingers through his hair, and the action outlines his biceps, which bulge and flex. A hot flare of desire pools low in my belly. My thighs spasm, my palms dampen, and I rub them across my thighs. I rake my gaze down that delicious butt of his, those powerful thighs clad in jeans. He's also wearing biker boots. Proper shit-kickers. I've never seen him wear those before. For that matter, I've never seen him in jeans either. I lower my gaze, to the backpack at his feet.

"Are you going somewhere?" I frown.

"I came to see you." He pivots to face me and the force of his intense gaze slams into my chest. A shudder grips me. I tighten my grip around the wooden spoon I'm still holding in my hand. His gaze darts to that, then back to me. "Do you want me to use that?"

"What?" I blink at him. "What do you mean?"

"Do you," he takes a step forward, "want me," another step and another, "to use that," he stops a few inches in front of me, "on you?"

Heat flushes my skin. He's not. He can't be... Is he saying what I think he is?

"You mean..." I gulp, "you want to..."

"Spank you?" He tilts his head. "Do you?"

Yes.

Yes.

"No," I squeak, then clear my throat. "Wh...what are you doing here?"

"That's not important. What is, is that I am here. I came to see you, Ava." He drags his hand through his hair again and I notice his fingers tremble. Huh? Is he nervous? No, he's not nervous... This is something else. I peer into his features, notice the skin pulled tightly across his cheek bones. There are fine lines around his eyes, which I swear I haven't noticed before. He looks on edge, strung tight, like he's about to do something...or has done something that's not in the normal scheme of things. Considering the time and his arrival on my doorstep.

"What happened?" I scowl at him. "What have you done, Edward?"

He stares at me, then chuckles. He peels back his lips and laughs, and the sound is harsh and ugly and so pain-filled that I wince.

I take a step forward. "Ed, what's wrong?"

He firms his lips, looks me up and down, before kicking his bag aside, his movements barely restrained. The backpack hits the wall, the sound a soft thud that reverberates through my blood. My pulse skitters; the blood pounds at my temples.

"Ed?" I tilt my head, "What do you want?"

"You," he bites out the word, "I want you."

25

Ava

The tone of his voice slices through the thoughts in my mind. It coils around my breasts, slithers down to nestle between my legs. I shiver. "B...but...your vows."

"Fuck my vows."

I blink. A part of me rejoices. Yes, yes. This is what I wanted to hear. This is what I've been hoping for since I first met him... so... Why am I not jumping for joy? Why am I not throwing myself at him, winding my arms around his neck, locking my legs around his waist and dry humping myself on the tent in his crotch?

"Edward?" I stiffen, "What's wrong?"

"What's wrong is that you are still dressed."

"And you're not..." I stare at his throat, "you're not wearing your collar."

"I won't be needing it anymore."

"What does that mean?" I scowl.

"You don't get to ask the questions," he growls. "Which reminds me, why are we still standing here?"

"What do you mean?"

He closes the distance between us, so the heat from his body slams into my chest. "Do you or do you not want me to fuck you, Ava?"

My core clenches. My toes curl. All of my nerve-endings seem to light up. Jesus—and it is okay to use his name, since we're not standing in a church, right? This man... The power he has over me... It'll never go away, not until the day I die. Not even then. Bet he'll haunt me in my afterlife and chase me through the catacombs of hell, which is clearly where I am going, considering I tempted one of God's most faithful disciples.

"What have I done to you, Ed?" I tip up my chin, stare into those brilliant brown eyes of his.

"Are you done?" he grates out through clenched teeth. "I am asking you for the last time, Ava, do you want me to shag you or not?"

I draw in a sharp breath, then nod my head.

"I didn't hear you," he growls.

"Y...yes," I whimper.

"Say it like you mean it, Eve."

"Yes," I snap. "Yes, yes, ye—"

He thrust his thumb inside my mouth. "Suck on it," he orders, and I curl my tongue around his digit. The saltiness of his skin, combined with that edgy, darkness that is pure Edward sinks into my blood. My pussy spasms. Moisture trickles down the inside of my legs.

He darts his gaze down to my crotch as if he can see right through my panties. I'm pretty sure he can't. Bet he senses it, though. He's always known what he does to me. How helpless I am in the face of his commands. All he has to do is ask and I'll lay myself down at his feet, legs apart, asking him to wreck me.

A moan bleeds from my lips. He jerks his chin up, his gaze alert, watching me, assessing me, stalking my every single movement. I freeze, not wanting to give myself away... Well, not more than what I have revealed so far, that is. Shit, at this rate, I am not going to last. I am going to orgasm just being in his presence... Yep, totally possible when it's Edward. The man exudes enough testosterone that just being close to him has heightened the senses of every single cell in my body.

He stares at my mouth with such intensity that a shudder ladders down my spine. I squeeze my thighs together and he scowls. "Stop fidgeting."

He drags his thumb down my chin, down my throat to the valley between my breasts. "You're so fucking beautiful, Ava." His words are complimentary but his tone... It's brooding. Almost angry. His eyebrows slash down and he hooks his finger in the neckline and tugs. The thin cloth tears down the middle.

I gasp, look down to find the two halves gape enough to expose the sides of my breasts. The fabric catches on my nipples and stays there.

"Fuck me," he growls. "The things I want to do to you, Eve. If only I had more time."

"What do you mean? We have time. You only just got here, you—"

"Shh," he raises his finger back to my lips, "any last requests, Eve?"

I gulp; my fingers tremble. Shit, that sounds dangerous and surprising and so bloody hot.

"L...last, requests?" I manage to squeak.

He cups my cheek, stares into my eyes, "Once I bury myself inside of you, you won't be doing any talking. Hell, I'm going to make sure I fuck you so hard, and in every hole in your body, in such quick succession that your brain cells are going to be out of commission for a while..." he explains in a matter-of-fact voice.

It's so different from his normal tone that I stare at him. "Is e... everything okay, Ed?"

"Everything is not okay, Eve," he explains patiently. "You are still standing and coherent." He shakes his head. "We need to change that."

"We...we do?"

He nods.

"Turn around and put your hands against up the wall," he orders.

"What?" I blink.

"Don't ask me to repeat myself. You won't like the consequences."

"I... I won't?"

He shakes his head.

"Do it, Eve." His gaze narrows. "Now."

I turn, head for the wall, then stop and stare at him over my shoulder. "My phone?" I manage to force out the words. "What about my phone?"

"This?" He takes it from me, stares at it. "You won't be needing this for a while." He tosses it over his shoulder.

I squeak, then exhale a sigh of relief when it lands on the couch.

He prowls toward me, circles the air with his finger.

I scowl.

He glares at me and I shiver.

He arches an eyebrow and I bite down the inside of my cheek. Shit, this...whatever mood he is in, is hot. Only... Something is different. I haven't known Edward long enough, but one thing I've always believed in, that I could trust him. This...this man standing in my living room... There's a sense of desperation, a ruthlessness that...feels right. Yeah, it feels right, and yet, it's also disconcerting. It's as if he's peeled back a layer, the mask that he wears to the world, to reveal the wolf beneath...the wolf in sheep's clothing. Yeah, he was always alpha, even—perhaps especially—dressed in his priest's garb. But this version of Ed? This snarling, growling, jeans and shit-kickers garbed Ed... It's a whole new level. A person I have no hope of trying to control. Not that I want to... But also, I don't want to give in and do as he says. I mean... I'm not one to just be commanded... Though I like it, I want it, yearn for it. But I also want to be conquered. Know what I mean?

I turn to face the wall, raise my hands, then realize I'm still holding the goddamn wooden spoon in my hand. "Oh." I stare at it, and he reaches over my shoulder, plucks the weapon—I mean, utensil—from my grasp. Shit, now I feel truly naked. I mean, I still have some clothes on, but now I have nothing to defend myself with. Not that I want to defend myself against this guy...but... Yeah, shit, now I really am at his mercy.

"Ed?" I whisper and he shushes me.

"No talking, Eve."

"But—"

Whack. The back of the wooden spoon connects with my butt.

"What the—?" I screech. "Did you just spank me with that—?"

Whack, whack, whack. He hits my arse in quick succession with that freakin' wooden spoon and pinpricks of pain radiate from my backside. My core spasms. Moisture pools between my legs and I press my forehead into the wall. Damn it, this should not arouse me. Should not. Really shouldn't. But I am turned on. No denying. What's wrong with me?

I turn my head, scowl at him over my shoulder.

He slaps the wooden spoon against his palm, and the soft thud sends a shiver racing down my spine again. He tilts his head, holds my gaze, then nods as if satisfied.

"I assume you still want me to fuck you?"

I frown.

"Say no, and I'll leave," he adds.

I blink. Why is he doing this? Is he giving me another way out? Why did he barge in, in the middle of the night? Is he on his way somewhere? He is, that's for sure. So why has he stopped here first? Did he miss me? Maybe. Does he want me? Yes. Does he need me? Definitely. It's why he came by. Whether he knows it or not, he seeks comfort— No, he needs to give in to whatever is tearing him apart inside. Something he is not ready to share, something that's shaken him enough to turn his back on his vows, his life-long pursuit of discipline, of the framework within which he's lived his life, and come to me. And I can't turn him away, I can't. More to the point, I need him as much as he needs me. If this is the only way I am going to have him, then so be it.

I nod my head.

The breath rushes out of him. "Say it aloud."

"Yes."

His eyes gleam. Something like satisfaction laces his features. "I'm going to take your mouth, and tear into your pussy, then I'm going to fuck you in the arse. You'll let me do that, won't you sweet Eve?"

Ava

His filthy words send a surge of heat through my veins. My pulse rate skyrockets. My knees wobble, and if I hadn't had my palms pressed into the wall, I swear I'd have collapsed by now. Who'd have thought the straight-talking Father Edward Chase has a dirty mouth on him? I stare up into his face, and his nostrils flare.

"Say yes, Eve," he growls. "Say you want me to take you in every hole. Tell me you want me to fuck you wherever I choose. Do it," he snaps, his tone half belligerent, half pleading. "Do it, Eve, you have my permission to speak."

I rake my gaze across his tense features, his flexed shoulders, the hard set of his stance as he stands there, watching me, waiting for me to tell him that it is okay for him to fuck me in the arse. Shit. I squeeze my eyes shut. Once I say yes, there is no going back. Once he has his hands and his mouth on me and his fingers inside of me, I'll be branded as his. He'll have spoiled me for everyone else. I'll never be able to look at another man and not feel Edward's touch, his kisses, the force of his presence, the strength of his attraction, the pull of that something inside of him, which is just so carnal yet so pure, so single-minded and intense that there could be no space for anyone else in my heart, my mind, my...soul. Only he can reduce me to this mass of quivering need that propels me to take the leap. That spurs me on to open my eyes, look him in the eyes and say, "Yes."

The breath rushes out of him. He flings the wooden spoon aside, closes the space between us and kicks my legs further apart. Then, he leans in close enough for his body heat to envelop me. His big body looms over me as he presses his nose into my hair and inhales deeply. A ripple runs down his body and I know then just how affected he is by his proximity to me, as well.

"You smell so bloody good, Eve," he rumbles. He nuzzles into the curve between my ear and my neck, then runs his tongue around the shell of my ear and sucks my earlobe. My core clenches and moisture trickles down my thigh.

A groan bleeds out of me and he shudders. He presses his body into mine and the hardness of his arousal digs into the curve of my arse.

"F-u-c-k," he growls against my hair, then air hits my back. I glance over my shoulder to find he's dropped down to his knees, between my legs. My throat closes. He hooks his finger under the waistband of my panties and tugs. The delicate material snaps and he whips it off of me. He stuffs it in his pocket, then shoves his shoulders between my thighs, forcing me to part them further. He grips my hips, then lowers his head and swipes his tongue up my melting pussy.

Heat sweeps up my spine and the blood rushes to my face. Ohmigod. What the hell is he doing? How are his movements so sure, so focused? He's done this before. Of course, he has. No other way, could he know his way around a woman's body so well—oh! — He stabs his tongue inside my channel, in-out-in, and I throw back my head and pant.

He curls his tongue inside my core, slides his hand between my pussy and the wall and circles my clit with his fingers. I snap back my shoulders, simultaneously push against the wall and thrust my hips forward, riding the thrust of that wicked tongue, chasing the drumming of his fingers across my pussy lips. He brings his other hand up to cup my butt, then slides his thumb in between my arsecheeks and inside my puckered hole.

He continues to tongue-fuck me, while grinding his heel into my clit and sliding his thumb deeper inside my backhole.

Heaven help me.

Where did Father learned to eat out a woman like this?

The tremors sweep up my legs, coil in my center, then surge up my spine. I slap my palms into the wall, squeeze my eyes shut and give in to the orgasm that tears through me.

It seems to go on and on, then fades away as suddenly. I slump back, trembling. Sweat beads my shoulders and my back, my knees tremble, and my thighs spasm, unable to hold me up. The next second, the world tilts. I crack my eyelids open to find that I am on my back, on the floor, with Edward looming over me.

"I am going to fuck you now."

His words slice through the noise in my head. I stare up at him as he reaches down and releases the zipper on his jeans. He shoves his hand into his briefs pulling himself out and pumps, once, twice, thrice. I gaze down at his long, thick, hard, length. It's gorgeous. Almost as beautiful as the man himself. Not that I have seen many cocks, not in real life, at least. Hello Pornhub, you've had your uses, but you have nothing on this one-hundred percent virile specimen who sits back on his heels, between my thighs. He slides his hand between us, scoops up the cum from my slit, and slathers it into my backhole.

No. I shake my head and clench my buttocks.

"Shh." He lowers his head to mine, brushes his mouth over mine, once, twice. I part my lips and he slides his tongue inside, tangles with mine. He sucks on me, draws from me. He groans into my mouth and I swear it feels like he's poured himself into his kiss. All of him. I taste myself on his breath, breathe in the lingering scent of frankincense, and under that, the familiar cut grass scent that is him.

It's so familiar, so reassuring that I relax.

My muscles unwind. I loop my arms about his neck, return the kiss. I open my mouth wider, tangle my tongue with his, and his big body shudders. I lean up and into him, strain to get closer. He hooks his arms under my knees, pulls them up, only to wind my ankles about his neck.

"Hold on," he growls as he inches his dick into my backhole.

"Oh," I gasp into his mouth, "oh, my."

He doesn't let up. He slides his tongue in and out of my mouth, while he slips a hand between us and curls his fingers around my clit. Heat slices through me; sweat pools under my armpits. Moisture drips from my cunt, as I shudder and dig my fingertips into his shoulders, wrap my ankles more securely about him...wait as he releases my mouth to gaze into my eyes.

"You're so tight," he rasps. "So hot." He thrusts his hips and slips inside further.

Too much, too full. "Edward," I gasp, "you're too big."

"I'm just right for you." He slips one thick finger inside my pussy and I shudder. He slides in another and begins to work them in and out of me. In and out.

All the while he holds my gaze, his golden eyes now a dark brown, almost as dark as the skies outside. I tip up my chin and he lowers his lips to mine again. He licks my mouth, presses his thumb into my clit, and curls his fingers inside my channel.

I arch under him, push my breasts up and into his chest, even as I shy away from the coming hurt. "Please," I whimper. "Please, Ed."

"Tell me what you need, Eve." He picks up speed, saws his fingers in and out of me, the wet, squelching sound of my flesh giving in to him filling the space. It's filthy, dirty and oh, so erotic.

The pores of my skin pop and a shudder grips me. My nipples tighten until they ache and my belly quivers. I tilt my hips up and he slides in and through the tight ring of my sphincter. "Oh," I gasp. "Ohmigod, Ed."

"Tell me how it feels," he commands.

"Like..." I swallow, "Like you've crammed yourself into me, like you are consuming me, and now I can never let you go."

A strange look enters his eyes. He glances away, then back at me. The tendons of his throat move as he swallows. "I'm going to have to go away, Eve. I'm going to have to leave."

26

Ava

I stare at him, "What, what are you saying, you—?"

He lowers his head and closes his mouth over mine, deepens the kiss, absorbs my words at the same time he begins to move. He pulls out of me, all the way to the edge then propels his hips forward and into me. Pinpricks of pain radiate out and up my spine.

He begins to weave his fingers in and out of me again, as he fills my mouth with his tongue and continues to fuck my arse. He slides out, then in one smooth, long swipe, fills me again. This time he hits a spot somewhere deep inside me that I didn't even know existed. My eyes roll back in my head. My entire body bucks. My shoulders jerk, and I arch under him, try to pull away, even as I want to get closer to him. To crawl under his skin and stay there. To tie myself to him and never let go... He can't go. Why did he say that he has to leave? Why?

I snap my eyes open to find him watching me. He holds my gaze as he plunges forward again and again, each time hitting that same spot, and I can't take it anymore. The tremors sweep up from my toes, up my legs, my thighs, pool in my center, before they slam up my spine and burst behind my eyes. The climax barrels into me and I yell—but he swallows the sound and keeps fucking me. He curls his fingers inside me, slams into me with such force that my entire body bucks. He thrusts once-twice-thrice then tears his mouth from mine, and with a low shout, empties himself inside me.

He slips his fingers out of my pussy, eases my legs down, then slumps forward, and for a second, his entire weight presses me into the floor. I'm surrounded by his intensely male scent, by the heat of his body, which coalesces with mine, by the sensation of his skin slippery with sweat, sliding over mine.

Then he rolls over and deposits me on his chest.

I press my cheek into the V of skin exposed by his shirt. His heart thunders against my ear, his breathing a ragged melody that soothes me and reminds me once more about what he said.

I place my chin in the demarcation between his pecs, stare up into his face, "Don't go." The words rasp out and I swallow. "I don't know what happened earlier, but whatever it is, we can face it together."

He stares down at me. "Why do you think something happened?"

"Didn't it?"

"It doesn't matter." He grips my shoulders and I know he's going to push me off of him. He's going to set me aside, get dressed, pick up his bag and leave and I... I cannot allow that. My heart begins to race; the blood thuds at my temple. I sit up, wince when my backside twinges, both from the spanking and from where he'd taken me, but I don't care. I rise to my feet, hold out my hand.

He frowns. "What are you doing?"

"Come with me," I snap.

He scowls. "You don't tell me what to do."

"Oh?" I glower back. "I just let you take my arse, you asshole. The least you can do is humor me for a little while longer."

The furrow between his eyebrows deepens, he hesitates, and I add, "You owe me this much."

He looks like he's about to protest, then jerks his chin. He ignores my hand, and pushes up to tower over me.

I turn, head inside, through my bedroom, and into the ensuite, where I flick on the light switch. Pulling off my torn camisole I step into the shower cubicle, turn on the shower, then turn to find him watching me from the doorway.

I jerk my head toward the running water, and he frowns.

He opens his mouth to say something, then decides against it. Instead, he stalks over, at the same time reaching behind to tear off his shirt. I take in the expanse of his chest, those perfect pecs, the eight—no, ten-pack—shit, when does Father have the time to work out? He pulls off his boots and socks, then shoves down his pants and his boxers, kicking them aside. He straightens and his cock juts up. It seems even bigger, thicker, if that's possible, considering he was just inside me. The head is swollen, and glistening from his cum, and a vein runs up the underside. Moisture pools in my mouth and I swallow, force myself to lower my gaze past those powerful thighs, to his corded calves and the wide feet that move toward me. He brushes past me, steps into the shower and raises his head to the flow of water. The space instantly seems to shrink, not that it was big to start, but with this six-foot, three-inch behemoth in the cubicle which had been perfectly big enough for me, there's barely enough space for me to slide around and in front of him.

He watches me with a narrowed gaze as I reach out and pour some of the soap into my palm. Then I wash his chest, run my hands down those sculpted pecs, down his hard stomach, circle around the hard shaft which twitches as I sink to my knees and wash his thighs, his feet. I tip my chin up, survey him through the downpour. Water drops cling to his cheeks, spike his eyelashes, flatten his hair so it outlines the shape of his skull. There are hollows under his cheekbones and dark circles ring his eyes. How had I not noticed them before? What happened to make him break his vows? To make him want to leave so suddenly.

Leave. He wants to leave. Not yet. Not if I can help it.

I reach up, curl my fingers around his thick shaft. My fingers barely meet around his girth. Fuck me. How the hell had I taken him, and in my arse, at that? It is going to hurt like hell tomorrow. Only, I am not going to stop there. I wrap my other palm around his dick, then swipe up.

He hisses out a breath. His gaze intensifies. His massive chest rises and falls, as he parts his legs, giving me better access. I rise up on my knees, continue to pump him, up-down-up, and his flesh hardens, lengthens, throbs in my grasp.

His stomach muscles clench, his jaw ticks, and a nerve throbs at his temple. He slams a hand out and into the wall, and his biceps flex as he takes in a deep breath, then another.

I balance myself with one palm on his thigh and he flinches. His muscles coil, his shoulders flex, then a growl rips out of him.

He grits his teeth, holding my gaze as I increase the pace of my movements. His cock jumps in my grasp and he bares his teeth. "What are you waiting for?" he growls. "Suck me off."

Edward

Suck me off? Did you just ask her to suck you off? And after you tore into her arse without prepping her properly? Without giving her enough warning? Why the hell did I come here in the first place? I should have left after making that call, and that had been my plan. I had gathered up the very basic essentials I'd need to survive and then I'd mounted my bike and left. I hadn't looked back. Hadn't mourned the remnants of what the last five years of my life had been reduced to. The rectory had been just a space in which my physical body had spent the nights. My time had been taken up by my connection to the Lord, one which I had severed.

And it had hurt. More than when I had left my life behind to join the Church. More than when I had been taken and abused. More than when I had gone on a drug-induced bender and almost died and been reluctantly brought back to the land of the living. Is this what people face when they lose a loved one? Or when they go through a divorce? A separation, a severing of a limb, a loss of something that had been tangible, but which had since—poof! —disappeared like it had never existed at all. Five years of a presence that had occupied my life, my mind, my soul. All of it, gone in an instant. Leaving behind the dregs of a man I don't recognize anymore.

I had straddled my bike, hit the road, and almost not been surprised when I'd landed at her apartment. I'd known I was coming here, even before I'd left. The one place I had pretended didn't exist. The one woman I'd tried so hard to ignore. The only person I could turn to, to fill the gnawing emptiness that permeates my soul.

How could I even try to go on, when the most important parts of me have been left behind? When the only thing that had anchored me has been cut loose, leaving me adrift?

Is that why I had come here...in a final attempt to try to salvage something for myself? Am I that selfish that I would fuck her, claim her, give her hope...when I have nothing to offer to myself anymore?

I should leave. I should spare her further pain. I should simply get out of here, out of her life, before I do something that will hurt her even more.

I gaze down into those emerald green eyes that stare up at me with defiance. With lust. With the kind of devotion that I had once reserved for my Lord, and I know then, it's already too late. For her. For me. For what I am going to do. Which is going to haunt me for the rest of my days. Get the hell away from her, you bastard. Give her a chance to come out of this unscathed.

I squeeze my eyes shut and pray—pray—to whom? Not to Him. Not when I've lost my faith, when I've rejected Him. I've lost the very foundation upon which I have built my entire life. Fucking hell. How the hell am I going to walk away from her as well?

She cups my balls and squeezes, and I shudder. I open my eyes to find her rising to her knees. She bends her head, opens her mouth around my cock. I watch as my shaft disappears down her throat. The blood rushes to my groin and my dick thickens further, if that's possible. She pulls out, then licks the crown of my shaft, before taking me in again. The heat, the swirling of her tongue up my length, the scrape of her teeth on the underside of my shaft... All of it converges, coalesces into a hard knot that intensifies, tightens, lodges at the base of my spine.

My thigh muscles tighten and my shoulders tense. I lower my hand, dig my fingers into her hair and tug. Her head falls back, saliva drools from the corners of her mouth and the last bit of sanity seems to leave me.

I tighten my grip on her strands, pull her back, so my dick slides out, until I'm poised at the edge of her lips.

Her gaze widens, her grasp on my balls intensifies, and I can't stop the smirk that twists my lips.

"You want me to fuck you again, is that it? Is that why you stopped me from leaving?"

The green of her irises deepens and color smears her cheeks.

"Maybe you want to tell the world that the hot priest shagged you. Is that why you have my cock in your mouth?"

A low snarl bleeds from her lips. She tries to pull back, but I hold her in place.

"Oh, no, you don't." I widen my smile. "You stopped me when I would have walked away. The least you can do is let me fuck your mouth," I pull her head forward and feed my dick to her, "first."

She chokes and more spit drools down her chin. She stares at me, her gaze hot and angry and filled with lust. Oh, yeah, this thing between us... It is carnal and base... And hell, if it isn't the only thing keeping me tethered to this moment. The present. It's all I have. It's all I'll allow myself to have. There can be no future for us. Not after what I have done. I am better off leaving her, giving her the chance at a normal life with someone else. Someone who isn't me. Not me. F-u-c-k!

"Breathe through your nose, Eve." I growl, and she flares her nostrils. Then sucks in her cheeks and the suction, fuck me... The action sets a storm of lust raging through my guts.

I hold onto the wall for support, then begin to pull her head back and forth, back and forth. She releases her grip on my balls, digs her fingertips into my thigh with enough force to send pinpricks of pain racing up my spine. The coiled pressure in my groin grows and grows until it seems to consume all of me, yet I don't stop. I continue to fuck her mouth, pull her forward and back, again and again. The moisture glistens on her cheeks and her breasts heave, the nipples pebbled and pink-tipped and gleaming in the light.

My mouth waters. I tear my gaze from her tits back to her mouth, up to her eyes, now glazed with desire and the need to come. But I am not going to let her. Not yet.

I tug on her hair and a low moan bleeds from her throat.

I increase the speed of my actions, pulling her forward and back, and her entire body jolts. Her breathing speeds up. She squeezes my thigh, widens her gaze, then scrapes her teeth on the underside of my shaft. And that's when the knot of pressure at the base of my spine explodes.

28

Ava

His features contort, he throws back his head, and with a muted roar, shoots his load down my throat. His orgasm seems to go on and on and I watch, entranced, as his big body shudders. His shoulders draw in and his massive chest heaves. His cheeks are flushed, the hollows under his cheeks are more prominent. He seems like a man in the throes of emotional turmoil, a man who is at the end of his tether.

The musky, peaty taste of his cum explodes on my palate, and I swallow and suck on him. Damn him, but the sight of him falling apart is burned into my brain. It's something I'll never forget. This power over him, this sense of control that infuses me, turns me on. I slide my hand around to squeeze his butt, then slip my finger in between his arsecheeks to tease his puckered hole.

His entire body jerks.

He lowers his head, locking his gaze with mine, then tugs on my hair. His dick slips out, and he urges me up to my feet.

"Not had enough, Eve?" He thrusts his face into mine, "What the hell do you want from me?"

"The same thing you want from me."

"Want me to fuck you properly, is that it?"

"Finally." I chuckle, the sound harsh. "Took you long enough to get the memo."

A snarl twists his lips and a rush of fear courses through my veins. Shit, shit, shit. What is wrong with me? Why am I pushing him? Why am I taunting him further, when he already seems to have lost control?

He releases my hair, only to wrap his fingers around the nape of my neck. He pulls me up to my tiptoes, my skull resting on his fingertips. I raise my eyes, meet his burning gaze. The breath rushes out of me. The lust in his eyes, the anguish, the helplessness... It's as if he hates himself, but can't stop himself from what he is going to do, and for a minute, I feel sorry for him.

His fingers meet in the front of my throat and when he increases the pressure on my nape, my breath hitches.

I part my lips and he lowers his head until his nose bumps mine. Our breaths mingle and the thud-thud-thud of my heartbeat fills my ears. I hold his gaze as he opens his mouth over mine. He slips his tongue in between my lips, tangles it with mine. Pinpricks of heat vibrate from the contact. My chest tightens and a ball of emotion clogs my throat. For some reason, this feels very intimate, more than all of the previous times he's kissed me. Maybe it's because he has his eyes open, and I can take in the sparks of silver that flash in them. He tilts his head and deepens the kiss. I raise my hand and he grabs my wrist, bringing it up above my head, and holds it there, then presses his chest against mine. He thrusts his thigh between my legs and I part them. I wind my other hand about his shoulder, hold on as he thrusts his hips forward and his hard shaft digs into my belly.

A groan rolls up my throat and he swallows it. I slide my hand between us, my fingertips graze the crown of his cock, and he hisses against my mouth. I wrap my fingers around it and his chest heaves. He breaks the kiss to stare into my eyes as I begin to pump him up and down, up and down. His nostrils flare. He releases his hold on my neck and hand, then bends and grabs me under my thighs. He lifts me up and I squeak, wind my legs around his waist. He reaches behind me to shut off the shower, then walks out of the cubicle. He lowers me to the ground, reaches around me to grab a towel, then proceeds to wipe me down. His movements are brisk, almost impersonal, but the thick length of his cock points to just how aroused he really is. When I am dry, he drags the towel down his body, flings it aside. Then, closing the distance between us, he scoops me up. He walks over to my bed and lowers me onto it. On my back, I watch as he rakes his gaze down my body.

"Spread your legs," he commands, and hell, if I don't come right then. I part my thighs and he stares at my pussy with unconcealed greed. He licks his lips and I swallow. He lowers to the floor between my legs, circles my ankles with his fingers and tugs until my butt is poised at the edge of the bed. He hooks my knees over his shoulders, then lowers his head to my core. He breathes in deeply and my stomach quivers.

"The scent of your pussy..." He draws in another breath and his shoulders heave, "It's pure aphrodisiac. Why did I ever think that I could resist it?" He stares up at me and his eyes gleam. "I'll never forget this, Eve, not as long as I live."

"Wait." I blink, "What do you mean—?" I throw my head back and gasp as he licks up my slit in one long, slow sweep.

"Oh, my god." I groan as he follows that up with another long swipe of his tongue. I jerk my body up and off the mattress. He licks me a third time and my eyes roll back in my head.

"I am ready to break my fast, little Eve, will you feed me?"

He closes his mouth around my pussy and I cry out. He thrusts his tongue inside my aching core. I dig my fingers into the sheets, squeeze my thighs around his head. "Omigod. Omigod," I wail. "Edward, please—"

He brings his hand up to pinch my nipple and I explode. The orgasm crashes over me with no warning. It sweeps up my body, exploding behind my eyes, and I cry out. I shudder as the climax grips me, then ebbs away. I slump. My muscles slacken. He continues to lick my clit, curls his tongue around the swollen nub and I moan. "Please" I whisper, "please, Ed."

He rises up, forcing me to open my legs further. The bed dips as he lowers his weight onto his elbows and brackets me in. The heat from his body slams into my chest, coils around me, pours into my skin and heats my blood. He peers deep into my eyes. "Do you still want me?"

"Yes," I moan. "Fuck me, Ed."

A fierce look heats his eyes. Those golden eyes blaze, mirrored pools of desire in which I can see myself, see my lust reflected in how his breathing intensifies. His nostrils flare. He reaches down to position his dick at my entrance then pauses. "Condom," he growls. "I need a condom."

"Oh." I blink, try to pull my thoughts together. Of course, we do. I hadn't even considered it, as out of my head with lust as I am. "I... I don't have any."

He frowns. "I'm clean." His lips twist.

Of course, he is, he's been celibate for as long as he's been a priest. And he's going to break his abstinence with me. I gulp, his scowl intensifies. He tilts his head and I realize he's waiting for me to speak. What...what was it I was going to say?

"Eve?" He prompts, "I said I'm clean."

"Uh, I... I am clean too." I blink rapidly. "Also, I am on the pill." I've actually been on the pill for years due to my irregular periods. Of course, it had crossed my mind that this meant if Ed made love to me, there wouldn't need to be any barriers between us. I confess though that I didn't think that it could actually happen. My breath catches, as the enormity of the situation sinks in. OMG, Edward's here and he's going to fuck me... Without a condom.

His shoulders flex and his biceps seem to bulge. "Good," he rumbles as he lowers himself between my knees.

Leaning over, he cups my cheek, then kisses me. He tilts his head, brushes his lips over mine again and again. He kisses me with such tenderness that my heart trembles and my toes curl. I flutter my eyelids down, wind my arms about his neck and open my mouth, my body, my heart to him.

"You ready?" he whispers, and his hot breath sears my mouth.

I nod, and he positions himself against my slit. The crown of his dick nudges my opening, and I draw in a breath. Oh, my god, it's happening. It's really, really happening. Edward is going to make love to me. I swallow, and he must sense my sudden panic because he brushes my mouth with his. "Shh, don't worry. I'll take care of you, Eve."

I gaze up at him. "You...you will?"

He nods. "Do you trust me?"

I pause.

"Do you?" He holds my gaze. "Do you, Eve?"

I swallow again, then nod.

"Say it then," he commands.

"I... I trust you, Edward."

A smile curves his lips. "Then promise me you won't believe what you'll hear about me."

"Hear about you?" I scowl. "What do you—?"

He pushes forward and breaches me.

"Oh!" Pain radiates out from my core and I gasp.

He freezes. "The hell?" His gaze seems to clear and his features twist. "Are you a virgin, Eve?"

29

Edward

She blinks and color smears her cheeks. Fuck me, it's not possible. She is young, but not that young. She is nineteen. Don't most women these days lose their virginity much earlier? Thanks to the confessions I've heard, I know that to be true. Not that I'd ever share it with anyone. Not even now that I am walking away from the priesthood. But still. Ava, a virgin?

"Answer me." I lower my voice to a hush, "Are you, a virgin, Eve?"

She nods. "I should have told you, but I didn't want to scare you away."

I squeeze my eyes shut. My dick lengthens further inside her, the thickness grazing against her soft, melting, warmth. My balls tighten and my thigh muscles spasm. She was a virgin. I was her first. Something fierce grips my chest. I shouldn't have come here... And yet, I wouldn't trade this for anything else in the world.

And I am going to leave her after taking her virginity? Goddamn it, this isn't fair. Not to her. Not to me. Of course, He had to orchestrate it this way, to make sure I would carry the memory of her sweetness, her warm, wet pussy that clamps around my dick, her virgin cunt that no one has had before. I am her first. And damn, if I am going to let anyone else take what is mine after this. I have to find a way to return. I will find a way to come back. No way, am I going to stay away from her after this. I lower my forehead to hers. "You should have," I agree, "and it would have ensured that I stayed far away from you."

"And now?" she whispers.

"Now, nothing will keep us apart, Eve."

"Then why are you not following through with your word?"

I lean back, balance my weight on my arms. "What do you mean?"

"Why are you not fucking me like you mean it?"

I can't stop the chuckle that rips up my throat.

This woman. The things she says.

"I don't want to hurt you." I lower my head and rub her nose with mine.

"It's your first time. I'd rather take it slow."

"I'd rather that you fuck me the way I want you to."

She tilts up her hips and I slide further inside her soaking wet channel. The heat, the warmth, the way her pussy clamps down on my dick, and it's like I am coming home. My heart stutters. My pulse pounds at my temples. The blood drains to my groin and my cock thickens inside of her. She gasps, tips up her chin. Those green eyes widen with surprise, with lust, with a tenderness that sparks off an answering heat in my chest. My belly knots. My dick throbs inside of her. I want to own her, to brand her, to possess her, to make her mine. To ensure she doesn't forget me during the time I am gone.

Does that make me selfish, God? Does that make me the kind of sinner whom You'll never forgive? Oh, wait. I don't need Your approval anymore. I can do whatever the fuck I want.

"Edward."

My name on her lips, the scent of her trapped in my skin, the feel of her legs wrapped around my waist. The heat of her pussy enveloping my dick. Fuck me, but I've died and gone to heaven. Or hell... And what a hell this is... One of my own making. One where I have never felt more, sensed more, heard more. One I can feel with every pore in my body. I touch my forehead to hers. "The things you make me do, Eve. You drive me out of my head, you know that?"

"That makes two of us." She reaches up, runs her fingers through my hair. "Please." She swallows. "Please make love to me."

My throat closes. My limbs tremble and something hot stabs at my chest. "I can do that, my darling Eve. I can give you this to remember me by."

"Remember you by?" She gulps. "Why do you keep saying tha—?"

I push forward, and my dick slips in further.

"Edward," she whines. "It's too much. I am too full, I—"

"Shh." I lower my head, brush my lips over hers. "You're beautiful, Eve, and it's not just your body I'm talking about. It's who you are. It's the goodness in you. That purity of your soul that attracted me to you."

"I... It did?" She glances away.

"I saw you and knew there was something different about you. I knew you were going to be trouble, then."

"You did?"

I nod. "What I didn't count on was how much you'd occupy my thoughts."

"Same." Her lips tremble. "I couldn't get you out of my mind, from the moment I saw you."

Warmth fills my chest. This connection is all I have left. And I am going to have to walk away from it, too. Goddam it. Why did it have to turn out this way?

"What's wrong?" she whispers.

"Nothing." I pull out of her, then push forward, sliding in even further this time.

"Oh," she gasps again, then digs her heels into my back. She pushes up and into me and I grip her hip.

"Easy." I smirk. "I don't want you to be sore."

She snorts. "A bit late for that."

"So sassy." I scan her features. "You come across so much more grown up than your years, that it's easy to forget sometimes that you are only nineteen."

"Old soul." She half smiles. "It's why I am so independent; I've always been self-reliant."

"I wish..." I could be there for you, is what I want to say. Instead, I thrust my hips forward, ease myself inside her.

Her entire body jolts. "Oh." Her eyelids flutter. "Oh, Edward."

"When you say my name like that," I grit out, "it kills me, Eve. You know that?"

She peers up at me from under her eyelashes. "What else do I do to you?"

"You fishing for compliments?" I mock scowl.

She bites down on her lower lip. "You ready to give me compliments?"

"Always." I brace myself on my elbows, allow her to adjust to my size. Slowly, slowly... A bit late for that, though, considering how I had taken her arse earlier. "If I'd known..." I swallow, "If I'd realized that you were a virgin—"

"You wouldn't have come at all," she completes my statement.

I rake my gaze across her features and she blows out a breath.

"It's why I didn't tell you. There were enough barriers between us, as it was. Add to that, I was a virgin, and I knew you'd never give this," she gestures between us, "whatever this is between us, a chance."

"You should have told me, Eve."

"I don't regret it." She sets her jaw.

I purse my lips, not wanting to reveal what is on my mind. How can I? When she has given me something so unexpected. Something that affects me so deeply... But I cannot let that stop me. I need to put distance between myself and what I had done. I need time to work out what I want to do in life. It's not fair on her that I stay, not when I am so confused about who I am, and what I want for myself. If I am not clear about my path, how can I ever do justice to whatever is there between us?

It's why I need her to believe the worst of me... Fuck me, but I need her to forget that she ever met me. It is the only way I can leave, safe in the knowledge that I am not leaving her hanging in limbo.

No one knows that better than me. The days and nights when I had been taken and kept bound, not knowing if I was going to make it out of there alive... Not seeing the light at the end of the tunnel. That was the worst. I'd never want her to go through that.

I shouldn't have come here, but I did, and now I have to make sure that I complete what I started.

"That's good, I suppose." I smother the voice inside calling me a liar.

"It is?" She frowns.

"Virginity is so overrated anyway."

30

Ava

"What?" I stare up at him. "What the hell did you say?"

"You heard me." His lips twist in a smirk that is Edward, and yet, it isn't.

"What do you mean, Ed?"

"I mean..." He pulls out of me, then thrusts forward with just enough force that my entire body jolts. Tendrils of heat shudder out from the impact. My pussy clenches around his dick. Moisture pools in my core and my nipples tighten.

"Oh, god," I groan.

"That too." He stares at me with such burning intensity that my chest tightens. "But what I was going to say is that you had to give up your virginity some time. May as well have been to a man of God, right?"

Something hot stabs at my chest. My vision tunnels. Before I can stop myself, I snake out my palm, which connects with his cheek.

His face snaps back. The thud of the slap echoes around the room.

There's silence. Then thunder rumbles in the distance. Lightning flashes outside. The brightness illuminates his features for a second, highlighting the hollows under his cheekbones, the darkness that rings his eyes. For a second, he looks feral and wild...so unlike the quiet, if dominant, man I've come to know.

But do I? Do I know him at all?

I only met him a week ago and fell for him. I'd known there was more to him than the front he presented to the world, but at that time, I'd put it down to the fact that behind his guise as a priest there was a passionate man, someone who felt so deeply; someone who, when he'd finally admit his feelings for me, would burn me up with his passion.

And right now, watching him, I know I was right all along. Behind that civilized veneer is a beast... someone who I have no clue about, someone I do not know at all.

"Edward—"

"Shut up," he barks.

I gape. "What are you—?"

"I told you to keep quiet, didn't I?" he growls as he pulls out of me, then plunges forward. His dick fills me, stretches me, and his balls slap against my inner thighs. The crown of his cock hits that secret spot deep inside of me and I cry out.

Above me, he tenses, then begins to move. He saws in and out of me, in and out. Each time he pushes in, his shaft hits that spot, again and again. Goosebumps pop on my skin. My nipples tighten into hard nubs of agony, my pussy clenches down on his shaft, and he groans. He tilts his hips, propels forward with enough force that the entire bed frame shakes. The headboard slams into the wall and vibrations of heat and lust shoot up my spine. "Omigod, I am going to—"

"Come for me," he snarls. "Come all over my cock."

His voice shoves me over the edge and I shatter. Moisture gushes out from between my legs and my body bucks. I throw my head back as the climax overwhelms me. When I open my eyes, he's above me, watching me, tracking my every reaction.

I blink at him, watch as the tenderness in his gaze slips away to be replaced by a coldness, a single-minded intent that sends a shiver of apprehension crawling down my spine.

"Edward—"

"Shh." He cups my breast, dragging his thumb across my sensitized nipple. "So, fucking beautiful." His voice is remote, his tone hard. Almost as hard as his shaft that's still inside of me.

"Ed—" I shiver as he hooks his arms behind my knees, shoves them up so they are bent on either side of my chest. I am splayed out, open and vulnerable. A sacrifice on the altar of this priest who seems to have shed the last vestiges of his humanity along with his robe. "Ed, please—"

He shakes his head and I subside. I draw in a shuddering breath, watch as his nostrils flare. His shoulders bunch, then he pulls out of me, stays poised with his cock at the rim of my slit.

"You are going to come again with me."

"No," I beg. "Please, not yet."

"Yes," he insists.

"I can't."

"You will." He pistons forward, and I am so wet, so ready, that he slips inside easily, his thick shaft sheathed inside me, filling me again to the brim. I'll never be this...full again. This crammed with Edward.

"No." I surge forward, wind my arms around his neck, push up and fit my lips to his. I open my mouth over his, and maybe I take him by surprise, for he parts his lips. I thrust my tongue inside his mouth, suck from him, draw from that minty darkness, inhale that cut grass scent that is so very Edward.

His big body shudders, then he kisses me back. Of course, Edward takes control of the kiss. He angles his head, deepens the kiss. Pushes me back into the mattress, swipes his tongue across my teeth, drags it along the inner seam of my lower lip. He plunders my mouth like it's his last kiss, his last time that he's going to be this close and... No, no, no. I can't let him go. No matter that he's trying to make me hate him. As efforts go, it's pathetic. If he thinks he can simply say and do things in the hope that it's going to make me dislike him, he is so wrong. I cling to him as he pushes forward and thrusts into me. As he impales me over and over again. As he pistons his hips forward and rams into me with such force that both our bodies jolt with the action. As he hits that spot again deep inside me and the climax shudders out from the point of contact, races up my back, my neck.

He tears his mouth from mine and whispers, "Come."

And I burst into flames as he roars above me and empties himself inside of me.

He stays poised above me for a few seconds more, sharing my breath, his lips a hair's breadth away from mine, his eyes open and holding mine, as if he can't bear to shut them.

I hold his gaze, tracing the webwork of fine lines that radiate from the edges of his eyes. The thick hair that falls across his brow. The ridiculously long eyelashes that fan out above his cheeks. The patrician nose, the stern upper lip, that pouty lower lip, that I want to kiss. I draw my finger down the scar on his cheek, then tip my chin up. I raise my mouth to his and he moves away.

He releases his hold under my knees, pulls out of me, then rolls over the side of the bed. He turns to walk into the bathroom and I take in the marks on his back. What the—? Did someone whip him? Did he whip himself? And not too long ago, by the looks of it.

He comes back with a wet towel that he uses to wipe between my legs. He tosses the cloth aside, then turns to leave, when I jump up and throw myself at him. "Edward, don't go."

He stays silent.

"Please, just hold me. I need you, Ed. Please."

He draws in a breath and his shoulders shudder. Then he turns. He pushes me back onto the bed. He pulls the covers up over me. I am about to protest when he slips in next to me. He presses down on my shoulder indicating that I should turn over, and when I do, he winds his arm around my waist and pulls me to him. I weave my fingers with his where they rest on my belly. His hand is so big that his palm covers the expanse of my stomach. My back is pressed into his chest; his half-erect dick settles in the valley between my arse-cheeks. His thighs cradle the backs of mine; his knees lock into the grooves behind mine.

His warmth envelops me. His scent is all around me. And I know I should turn around to face him, throw my arms around him and hold him close and tell him not to leave me, because I know he's going to. As soon as I close my eyes, he'll be gone, and I'll never see him again. I half turn, when he slides his arm under my neck, curls that big forearm above my breasts. He tucks my head under his chin and orders, "Get some sleep."

I shouldn't. I should ask him what happened that had him come to me and simultaneously decide to leave me. I want to tell him I didn't tell him I was a virgin because I wanted him to be the first. My first. That there will never be anyone else. Instead, my eyelids flutter down and darkness drags me under, but I resist it.

Instead, I mumble, "Ed?"

"Hmm?"

"I saw the lash streaks on your back."

He stiffens, but doesn't say anything.

"Do you whip yourself, Ed?" I bite down on my lower lip. "Is that how you punish yourself? Is this how you deal with the aftermath of the incident?"

Tension radiates off of him and his big body seems to grow even more tense. Then he blows out a breath, "Sleep Ava, close your eyes."

I can't. I don't want to. If I do, you'll leave and I don't want that. I don't want you to leave.

"Ed," I swallow, "don't go, please."

"I have to, Eve."

"I can't live without you."

"You can."

"No," I whine, "I'll die if you go."

"You'll regret it if I stay."

"It's not true," I insist. "You know it isn't."

"So far, I've done what was best for me, but from now on, everything I do, I do for you."

"That sounds like a bad Bryan Adams song."

He chuckles, the sound without humor. "That's me, one bad pun after the other, baby."

"I love it when you call me baby." I yawn so widely that my jaw cracks.

"Sleep, baby." He presses his lips to the top of my head. This time sleep envelops me.

I come awake with a start, knowing something is wrong. I turn on my back to find I am alone in bed. Pale light filters in through the crack between the curtains. I spring up, throw off the cover, swing my legs over the bed, and race into the living room to find his backpack gone. I run back into the ensuite bathroom and his clothes are gone. Shit, shit shit. I knew I shouldn't have slept. Knew he'd leave. Knew he'd take off, and now I'll never see him again. No, don't even go there. You're going to find him, wherever he is.

I am not going to let him walk away from me like this. I round the bed, stare at the nightstand next to where he'd slept. Nothing. What had I been expecting? A note? What would he say? "Thank you for offering me your arse and your pussy and your mouth, but no thank you. It isn't enough."

What had last night been all about, anyway? He'd walked in, filled with purpose, then seemed to lose himself somewhere in between. He'd shown he could be caring and tender, only to do an about-face and be nasty to me, then seemed to turn passionate again. Shit. Something had been wrong. All those hidden messages in what he'd told me... I'd almost grasped them, then put them aside because I'd been too focused on what he'd been doing to my body. Oh, he'd made sure to distract me alright, and I'd fallen for it. If he had known I was a virgin, he wouldn't even have come to me, right? So, I should be grateful he had...but then he had left me. Bloody hell, what am I going to do now?

The sound of a bike revving reaches me. What the—? Has he been outside all this time? Has he been waiting for me to go out to him? Have I missed my chance to stop him? I race to my closet, pull on my jeans and a T-shirt, then run into the living room. I grab my house keys from the table near the entrance, then shove open the front door, run down the steps, over the short garden path and onto the road, just in time to see him round the corner on the bike.

"Edward," I scream and give chase. My bare feet thud against the sidewalk. The impact of each step ricochets through me as I race forward. I reach the bend, turn, my feet stumble over a crack in the pavement. The ground comes up to meet me. I close my eyes, brace for impact, only to be hauled up and against something hard.

"Watch where you are going," a rough voice rumbles. The vibrations shiver over the planes of the chest against which I am pressed.

My heart leaps in my chest and my belly trembles. "Edward." My lips widen in a smile. "You didn't leave. Oh, Edward! I knew you wouldn't go." I tilt my head up. "I knew you wouldn't—" My gaze clashes with unfamiliar blue eyes. So cold, so chilling. Eyes so dead that, surely, the soul behind them belongs to someone who's seen too much, who has no humanity left in him. Eyes which are the exact opposite of Edward's smoldering golden ones.

"Y... you?" I stutter. "Who're you?"

"Baron." His jaw tics. "I'm Baron, and you're in my way."

TO FIND OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT, TURN THE PAGE TO READ BILLIONAIRE'S PROMISE

THE BILLIONAIRE'S PROMISE

1

Ava

"I'm Baron." He glares down at me. "And you're in my way."

Baron? I blink, why is that name so familiar? "Do I know you?" I scowl, "And what do you mean that I am in your way? I almost fell—"

"Until you didn't," he points out. "I saved you from hurting yourself."

"I thought you were someone else." I take in his harsh features, the dark blonde hair that falls over his forehead, the rich tan of his skin which hints at a life spent outdoors, the dark eyelashes that fringe a pair of brilliant blue eyes. The kind of eyes you could drown in, get lost in. So deep that they hide secrets. Secrets which I have had enough of. I no longer want to be drawn into something I can't fathom. I yank at his grasp and he releases me so suddenly that I stumble back. He grips my shoulder, holds me long enough to ensure that I've found my balance, then releases me.

"You're better off without him." His lips twist.

"How do you know that?" A chill runs up my spine and I wrap my arms around myself.

"Anyone who has you running barefoot on the sidewalk at," he glances at the watch on his thick wrist, "six in the morning, clearly doesn't deserve you."

"And I suppose you do?" I purse my lips together. What the hell is wrong with me? Why am I baiting him? Why does he rub me the wrong way, and after he'd saved me from a bad fall? I could have hurt myself... Not that I could be hurt any worse, after how Edward had turned and left.

Edward. I swing around and stare at the now deserted road. The houses on either side of the quiet London street mock me. The fog that envelops the street clears, and for a second, I think I see him in the distance. I take a step forward, trip over the same crack in the pavement. Damn it! I stumble once more and when thick fingers wrap themselves around my wrist, I try to shake them off. "Let go of me," I huff.

"Why should I when, clearly, you can't put one foot in front of the other without hurting yourself?"

"You're hurting me now." I glance down at where his massive palm is curled around my hand. Warm tanned skin, scarred knuckles that lead up to a veined forearm, peppered with hair. The sheer masculinity of this man is overwhelming. I glance up again into those blue eyes. The scowl that laces his features, the grooves etched into his forehead hinting at his permanent dark mood.

He releases me, and I turn back toward the image I'd seen, but the road is empty. The early morning sun's rays slant down, and the fog seems to disperse in front of my eyes.

"He's gone," I mumble. "I couldn't stop him." A tear squeezes out from the corner of my eye and I slap it away angrily.

"No one's worth crying over."

"Oh?" I swallow down the ball of emotion that clogs my throat, then pivot and brush past him. "And how would you know that?"

"Because I spent a lot of my early years crying over something that could never be righted."

"You?" I pause, then stare at him across my shoulder. I tilt my head up, all the way up, to take in his massive height. He's as tall as Edward... No, taller. And his shoulders are broader. His massive chest hints at hours spent in some kind of physical work. Maybe he trains a lot? Or he's in some kind of profession that demands he stay in top condition? What do I care anyway? Edward is gone. He hadn't left behind even a note. He'd shagged me—okay, so I'd asked him to shag me, fine, not denying that—and then he'd left.

He'd crept away while I was asleep, after promising we'd be together, and now I am never going to see him again. My stomach twists, my guts churn, and the bile rolls up my throat. Goddam it. I spring to the side, fall to my knees, and am violently sick. I retch so hard, tears run from my eyes again, my hair falls over my face, and then he's there. He piles my hair on top of my head, holds my forehead while I empty my guts out. Somebody, kill me. This has to be the worst day of my life. Getting sick, and because that's not bad enough, in front of a stranger.

When I am done, he offers me his handkerchief. I glance up at him, and he jerks his chin, "Take it."

When I don't reach for it, he pats my mouth with the fabric. I snatch it from him, turn my face away and dab at my lips. I rise up, and he's with me. I turn and am about to hand the cloth back to him, then grimace and stuff it in the back pocket of my jeans. "I'll wash it and give it back to you."

I turn away, take a step forward and my legs seem to turn to jelly. Fuck me, what the hell is wrong with me? The ground comes up to meet me again, and this time, I am not surprised when he scoops me up.

"Put me down," I mumble.

He doesn't reply. Instead, he begins to walk back the way I'd come. "Which house?" he asks, his tone brusque.

"That one." I point toward the first house on our right.

He walks toward it, up the garden path, then takes the stairs two at a time, as if he isn't carrying me. Not that I weigh much, but hey, he could, at least, be out of breath or something. But there's not a hitch or any change in his breathing pattern to indicate that he is carrying the weight of another person. He stops at my front door.

I reach into my front pocket, pull out my keys. He shifts my weight, takes the key from me, unlocks the door, then walks through, before crossing the floor to the settee where he deposits me. He straightens then points a finger at me. "Stay there."

"Not that I was going anywhere, but seriously, what the hell is your problem?" I huff. "And I didn't give you permission to come into my house." I frown.

He arches an eyebrow, trains those piercing blue eyes on me, and I subside.

He places the keys on the coffee table then pivots and walks toward my kitchen as if he owns the place. Shit, the way his massive frame takes up space, he does, actually. His physical presence seems to absorb all of the oxygen in the space and my lungs burn.

Or maybe that's because of the growing realization that I've lost him. I've lost Edward. Had I ever had him? And he never told me that he isn't returning, but the sick sensation at the bottom of my stomach insists that he won't be anytime soon. My palms sweat and my chest hurts. I sit up and the world swims around me again.

"I told you to stay put," he chides as he appears from the direction of the kitchen. He squats down in front of me, handing me a glass of water.

I take it and drink from it, upturn the glass, but he grips my wrist. "Not too much or it'll make you sick again."

I lower it, glance through my eyelashes at him. He takes the glass from me, places it on the table.

"How are you feeling now?" He searches my face.

"Better," I mutter. "I need to brush my teeth."

He peruses my features then nods, rises to his feet, and scoops me up with him.

"I can walk," I protest.

He simply stalks into the bedroom, putting me down at the entrance to the bath.

I step inside, turn to shut the door to find him standing, hands folded, a stillness about him that is at odds with just how alert his eyes are.

"You can go," I mumble, "I'll be fine."

He doesn't move. Not so much as blinks an eye.

"Whatever." I sigh, then close the door and lock it. Not that I don't trust him. Okay, I don't trust him. So what if he saved me from hurting myself, then hauled me back in here and made sure I was hydrated? I'd trusted Edward and what did he do...? He broke his vows for me. He fucked me. OMG, he took my virginity and then left me. He's not coming back, and once more, I've screwed up my life.

I had gone after the impossible. He'd been a priest, for hell's sake. Why did I have to fall for him? Why had I been so attracted to him that I couldn't conceivably want anyone else but him? Of course. Not only had I spoiled my career by leaving behind the safety of a degree and a possible nine-to-five job, but then I also had to go after a completely unsuitable man. Typical Eve.

Eve. Now I'm calling myself Eve? My heart seems to shatter. I crumple to the floor, hide my face in my hands and begin to weep. Large sobs that hurt my chest, fill my throat, and overflow until I am sure I am going to shatter into a million pieces, and every one of them would still cry, Edward. Get over the dramarama, bitch. Clearly, I've been reading too many romance novels if I am becoming so over-the-top sentimental. But damn him, he broke my heart.

In such a short period of time, he'd crawled under my skin, and imprinted himself into my soul in a way... A way that only a man of God could have. Someone who was in service of a higher purpose than himself. Shit, what am I thinking? Why am I making excuses for him, when all he's done since I met him is give me second place in his life? He may have broken his vows for me, but then he left, and I simply cannot fathom why. Hell, maybe it wasn't even for me that he broke his vows. I may not know what happened, but clearly, there was something bothering him when he got here.

More tears well up and my pulse thuds at my temples. A banging sound fills my head and I am sure it is my heart pounding in my ears, but then a male voice calls behind me, "Open up, or I swear, I am going to break down this door."

"Shit. Shit. Shit. Shit." I scramble up, grab hold of a hand towel and wipe my face with it.

The banging increases in urgency, then the sound of a shoulder crashing against the bathroom door reaches me.

"Stop," I yelp as I rush toward it. The last thing I need is for the door to be broken down. The bloody landlord would definitely take it out of my deposit. I reach the doorway, yank it open and come face to face with Mr. Grumpy Pants himself.

"What's your problem?" I snap.

"You," he looks me up and down, "you're my problem."

"Jesus." I gape at him. "You insult me in my own home? If you hadn't helped me earlier—which, by the way, wasn't required. I can take care of myself, but you did and I am grateful for it, but now you can leave."

"No."

"What?"

"I'm not going anywhere," he informs me. "Not until you have a shower and get a good breakfast. You need it after your crying jag."

"Crying jag." I flush. Of course, he heard me weeping my stupid heart out. Why the hell does he care how I feel? Why is he so concerned about me? "Who the hell are you anyway?" I scowl. "You're seriously giving me the creeps, the way you've barged into my life."

"And you are getting antsy for no reason." He holds up his arms. "You can pat me down if you want. You'll see I'm not dangerous."

Dangerous? He doesn't need weapons to be dangerous.

I look him up and down. "No, thank you, and by the way, I am taken."

"Taken?"

I nod. "My uh...man... He just left earlier."

"That's who you were chasing after?"

"Only because he forgot his phone," I lie.

"He forgot his phone..." he says slowly.

"Y...yeah." I swallow.

"So, you were chasing after him, barefooted?"

I nod.

"So, where's his phone?"

"None of your business." I scowl. "Will you please step away now so I can shower?"

"Not stopping you."

Anger twists my guts and it feels good. Good to be able to focus on something else, other than that jerk-hole who walked out of my life. How dare he play with me like this? How dare he stalk in here, claim me, imprint himself all over me, then walk out without looking back once? How dare he?

I fist my hands at my sides, then step back and slam the door shut. I lock it again, march over to the shower and turn it on. I shed my clothes, step under the hot water and allow it to flow over me. A few hours ago, he'd stood here as I had sucked him off. Hell. Hell. Hell. No need to figure out if I will be going to hell for having teased the Father into breaking his vows... Clearly, I am already there.

Is this my punishment from the other One in our relationship? The One Above. The Almighty who, no doubt, is displeased with me for having tempted one of His own to sin. Gah, stop that. Why are you questioning things as if the Father's influence has rubbed off on you? Not long ago, he'd been here rubbing off on me. Ugh. Stop that. He's gone, remember?

He left you.

Walked out without a backward glance. So why are you still so...so... hung up on him?

I raise my head toward the spray, let the hot water wash away the tears. I stand under the pelting drops until my head clears somewhat. Then switch it off and dry myself. I wrap the towel around myself, secure it and walk into the bedroom. It's empty. Of course, it would be. Why had I thought otherwise? I walk over to my closet, pull on my underclothes, a pair of leggings and a sweatshirt.

I need to stop holding onto hope that he'll return to me. There's no reason to think he will. His actions had all been intended to hurt. Clearly, he wants me to forget about him. Except, he took my virginity, something I'll never forget. To be fair, I hadn't mentioned to him that I was a virgin. Thank God for that. I got to spend some time with him. Yeah, and he broke your heart too, how about that, hmm?

It's only your heart... It will mend... Unlike whatever he is facing. It has to be something catastrophic that propelled Edward to leave behind the priesthood and take off. Something I intend to get to the bottom of.

I grab a hair tie, pile my hair on top of my head, then walk out of the bedroom, across the living room toward the kitchen.

The scent of toast and coffee reaches me. My stomach growls. I step inside the kitchen, pause. His back is to me and his broad shoulders are framed against the first rays of the sun that pour in. They halo him, highlight him, make him seem larger than life. A behemoth. Someone who came into my life, for what? To save me? From Edward? From myself? A shiver runs down my spine. I shake my head, walk over to the coffee pot to pour myself a cup. He turns to me then. "Sit." He jerks his head toward the table. "I'll pour it for you."

"But—"

"Go on," he says, his voice impatient. "This will go much faster if you cooperate."

I blink. "Excuse me?"

"I mean," he schools his features into an expression of patience, "sit down, please."

I hesitate. That please? It didn't sound like he meant it. In fact, it sounded as if he'd said it with much reluctance. He raises an eyebrow, turns his gaze to the table then back at me.

Fine, be like that. I slap the mug back on the kitchen counter, stomp over to the table and seat myself. I play with the ends of my hair, pull off the band and place it on the table. Then drum my fingers on the table. He turns, surveys my restless fingers, and I cease the movement instantly. Goosebumps flare on my skin. What is it about his glare that makes me want to rush to obey him?

He pours me a cup of coffee, brings it over, along with a stack of pancakes on a plate. On a second plate he's piled hash browns, baked beans and toast, which he places between us.

I blink down at the two plates, then up at him. "Uh, who is all this for?"

"You." He turns to grab his own plate, then sits opposite me. "I substituted flaxseeds for the eggs for the pancakes," he remarks.

I glance at him. "You did?"

He nods.

"How do you know that I am vegetarian?"

"Because you don't keep any meat or fish or eggs at home?"

Right. "I do eat milk and eggs," I mutter. "Just happen to be out of them..." I shuffle my feet, "the eggs, I mean." Gah, shut up, what's wrong with me? Why do I tend to babble in his presence? Why does he make me nervous?

He picks up his fork and knife, then eyes me across the table. "You're not eating," he admonishes.

"Neither are you."

His lips quirk, then he glances down and digs into his food.

I follow his lead, manage to make my way through a quarter of the pancakes, before I give up and lean back. I watch him demolish the food on his plate like he hasn't eaten in years.

When he glances up, I push my half-filled plate toward him.

He scowls at it. "You haven't eaten nearly enough."

"It's enough," I insist.

"It's enough when I say it is."

I blink at him, "Seriously, you didn't just say that."

"What's wrong with what I said?"

"Are you trying to be funny or something?"

"I've never been more serious." He leans forward, "You need your energy; you are wasting away."

I scoff. "I wouldn't call this," I point at myself, "wasting away."

"You're right."

"I am?"

He nods. "You have decent curves. I've seen better, of course, but you'll do."

I gape at him. "You...you're...something, you know that?"

"I often have that effect on women."

I jump to my feet. "Out. Get out."

He meets my gaze with a cool glance. "You're overreacting."

"And you're not welcome here anymore."

"I'm afraid that's not your call to make."

"What?" I frown. "This is my apartment and you are seated at my table

—"

"In front of a breakfast I cooked for you."

"A breakfast you can shove up your—"

He tilts his head, and there's just enough warning in that single glance for me to press my lips together. Why the hell had I allowed him, a complete stranger, into my home? And yet, why does that jut of his jaw, the spark of anger in his eyes, feel so...right?

No, no, no. This can't be happening. I just had one man walk out on me a few hours ago, and already, I am attracted to another? Talk about being a slut. Only I'm not one. Hell, I'd never wanted to sleep with anyone else before Edward. And now, suddenly, here's another man, someone to whom I am attracted just as much? With as much intensity as Ed... It's the same... Yet different, though. With Ed...the pull had been sharp, incisive, almost clinical in the precision with which my heart had gravitated toward him. Probably because once I'd realized that he was a priest, every single interaction with him had felt wrong...but with Baron...there's a freedom. A need... An overwhelming pull to throw myself at him, throw myself at his mercy, and beg him to do anything he wants with me. Maybe the need Edward ignited opened up a hotbed of something... Some nameless emotion, some twisting sensation that I had hidden away for too long. And now it's out there, and I feel like I am exposed and aching and throbbing and crying out for attention.

My chest tightens. My scalp tingles. My skin suddenly feels too tight for my body. I take a breath and my lungs burn. My knees knock together and I sit down in the chair so suddenly that the legs creak.

"You okay?" His gaze intensifies as he peruses my features and I look away.

Heat flushes my skin and my toes curl. My own thoughts have aroused me in a way that I never would have expected. My thighs clench and my center throbs. The soreness in my backside and between my legs pulses and writhes. Shit, what's wrong with me? I place my elbows on the table, bury my face in my hands.

I sense him move then. Hear his chair scrape as he pushes it back. The pad of his footsteps, the sound of a glass being filled with water. His footsteps approach, then I hear the thunk of the glass hitting the table in front of me.

"Drink," he commands.

I stiffen. What the hell is his problem?

"Do it," he insists.

I lower my hands and scowl at him.

He simply folds his arms across his chest and glares at me.

Jerk.

I glower back, and his gaze simply intensifies. Hot, burning, overwhelming. The flesh between my legs throbs. Heat flushes my cheeks. I glance away, take a sip. And does the man move away? Of course, not. He waits until I tilt the glass and drink half its contents.

Satisfied, he sits down, pushes my untouched coffee mug toward me.

I reach for it, take a sip. The bitter taste of the java blooms on my palate. I sigh out my appreciation, take another sip. Dark, rich notes of chocolate, laced with a sweeter taste of honey, and in between, the characteristic bitterness of coffee flickers across my tongue. "It's good." I blink up at him. "Which coffee grinds did you use?"

"The one you had in your coffee canister?"

"Oh." I glance down at the cup, take another sip. "You sure?"

"Yeah."

There's an amused edge to his tone. I glance up to find his lips twitch.

"No need to make a national joke out of my question," I mutter. "It's simply that the coffee tastes so much better than when I make it."

"It happens." He raises his shoulders. "When someone else cooks the same dish you do, they have a different touch, a unique way of assembling the ingredients, which will, therefore, be perceived differently by your taste receptors."

"Oh." I blink. "Are you a chef?"

His features close. "No."

He gets up, takes both our plates and the used cutlery over to the sink and begins to wash up.

"I can do—"

He glares at me over his shoulder, and I shut up. Of course, Mr. Growly Pants will do what he wants, when he wants. He finishes the washing up—returns for my now empty coffee cup—which he takes to the sink along with his, and washes that up too. He finishes drying them, puts them away—in the correct places on the shelves, then wipes the counter clean.

"Make yourself at home," I bite out. "In fact, why don't you move in, while you're at it?"

He pauses, then turns to me. "Not yet."

My jaw drops. "What do you mean, not yet? I don't know you at all. You're a complete stranger and—"

"My point exactly." He folds his arms across his impressive chest and his T-shirt stretches across those beautifully sculpted pecs. His biceps bulge, drawing my attention to his thick veiny forearms.

My throat dries. My tongue seems to be stuck to the roof of my mouth. All the moisture in my body has drained to that single pulsing point between my legs. I gulp. "What..." I clear my throat, "What are you trying to say?"

"That you are too innocent."

I laugh, "Trust me, if you knew what I've been up to, you wouldn't say that."

His gaze narrows and color smears his cheeks. He opens his mouth, then closes it again. "What you have done or not done in the past is none of my business."

"Oh?"

He jerks his chin. "I am more concerned with the now, the present. The fact that you let me, a complete stranger, into your flat."

"You know what?" I scowl at him. "It's time you left."

"Oh, believe me, I am. I have no intention of staying, now that I know you are safe."

"The only threat here is from you."

"As I was saying..." he enunciates each word slowly, "you...allowed...me—someone you don't know— into your flat."

"You helped me earlier," I point out.

"I could have been simply trying to gain your trust."

"Is that what you were trying to do?"

"No." He blows out a breath. "I was trying to stop you from hurting yourself."

"So, you're not a stranger anymore."

"I was when you met me."

"Everyone's a stranger when you first meet them!" I throw up my hands. "You caught me at a weak moment, okay? And this back and forth is making my head spin. What's your point anyway?"

"That you shouldn't let anyone you don't know inside your home."

And sometimes, you shouldn't let even those you think do you know, because actually you don't...you don't know them at all. Damn you, Edward. I squeeze my eyes shut. "You are right. I'll be more careful next time."

"Good."

I open my eyelids to find him walking out of the kitchen. I reach for my hair band, find it's gone. Huh? I could swear I placed it on the table earlier. I shake my head, then rise to my feet and follow him. He snatches up the jacket he'd abandoned at some point on the arm of the couch; shrugs into it, then walks to the front door, opens it.

"Wait," I burst out. He pauses, turns to me. Waits as I try to figure out exactly what it is I want to tell him. What do I want from him? Why do I want anything from him? He's a stranger, right? So why doesn't he feel that way? Why do I feel like I already know him at some level? A wave of tiredness washes over me. I curl my fingers around the frame of the kitchen doorway where I am poised. "My name is Ava, Ava Erikson."

"I know."

"You do?"

He nods, then points to where I've placed my mail on the table near the doorway.

"Right."

He turns away, when I stop him again. "Wait." I call out to him and he stops, "Will I see you again?" I ask.

He hesitates then glances at me over his shoulder. "Do you want to see me again, Ava?"

2

Baron

She hesitates, glances away.

"Do you?" I persist. "Do you want us to meet again?" What the hell am I doing here? I'd been outside to ensure that she was fine. That she got back home safely. That she'd be okay...that I'd watch over her. That's what I had promised Edward when he'd called me earlier this morning.

It just so happened that it had coincided with one of my rare visits to London. I'd hauled ass from across town to ensure I was there before he left. Only I had missed him. By the time I'd arrived, asshole had taken off already. I'd tried calling him and had gotten the message that his phone was disconnected. Not surprising. It's what I'd have done if I wanted to disappear, and clearly, I have a lot of experience in that. What had packed a punch was the woman who had chased after him, only to trip and almost fall.

And I couldn't let that happen. Why had I promised to look out for her, when all these years I had wanted nothing to do with him?

Your guess is as good as mine.

Perhaps it's the fact that he picked up the phone and called me? Something I had simply not expected, not after all these years, not after how we'd fallen out. How we'd sworn never to have anything to do with each other. And yet, in his time of crisis, when he needs someone he can trust, he eschews the rest of the Seven and reaches out to me.

He could have done so at any time, considering he's the only one who's had my phone number all along, but he'd desisted. Of course, for Edward, it wouldn't have mattered if I had been in the same city. He would have never reached out to me.

And now he'd called me... So, it had to have been a life and death situation. I could have refused him, of course. Could have asked him to approach one of the others...but...I hadn't. Perhaps it's time for me to return and face the shit-show of life that I left behind? A life on the fringes of which I had stayed for the past few months. None of them—not even Edward—had known that, of course.

I'd returned to town to watch my best friends getting married, one after the other. From a distance, of course, I'd seen them find the happiness they deserve. I don't begrudge them that. They need every bit of brightness that their women bring to their lives. As Ava had, no doubt, brought to Edward's. Something he, clearly, hadn't been aware of.

And you know that's not true. The Edward I'd once known had been hell-bent on depriving himself of even the smallest pleasure life had afforded him. It's why he'd turned to the seminary. Oh, of course, he'd claimed he'd felt the calling, and while I don't dispute that... I am pretty sure that's not the only reason he'd decided to become a priest. It would have been the discipline, the extreme deprivation that the life demanded that would have attracted him to it.

And then when he'd found something...or someone, who had broken through that self-imposed exile of his, he'd decided to flee. Typical. And I understand why he did it. After all, I did it too.

I tilt my head, train my gaze on the woman who's responsible for bringing me back to my own life again. A woman with auburn hair, so similar to the one who occupies my mind. But Ava is not her. She can't be the girl I glimpsed twice in the past fourteen years. The first time I'd seen her, she'd been but a little girl and the second time, while she had been grown up, I had only glimpsed her from a distance. Yet there had been something about her that had affected me so much both times. No, Ava can't be her. It would be too much of a coincidence for that to happen. Also, she belongs to Edward, remember?

"Well, Ava?" I demand. "You haven't answered my question yet."

She blows out a breath, then draws herself up to her full height. "Yes," she snaps. "Yes, I want to see you again."

The breath I'd not been aware of holding hisses out of me. Christ, had I been that on edge? Why does it matter to me whether or not she sees me again? I'd returned only as a favor to Edward, to make sure that this woman—his woman—would be safe while he's off killing his devils or putting the demons in his head to rest, or whatever it is that ex-priests who are ex-friends do.

Typical Edward. When the going gets rough, he gets going. Much as I had done. When guilt had gotten too much to bear, I had raced out of there. I hadn't been able to put enough space between myself and the scene of my wrongdoing. And now, I am back...to face...my life. The remnants of it, that is. My friends, if they'll have me back.

And what I had been forced to do during the incident? That's gone. Over. In the past. Never to be spoken of again. Just as I'll make sure never to overstep the line with this woman. She is Edward's... All I am going to do is make sure that she stays safe... That I protect her from hurting herself, if necessary. Yep, I can do that. For Edward. For what I owe him. For the wedge I had driven between us, and which I have no intention of fixing, not for as long as I live. In fact, the reason I am back is because... Edward isn't here. It makes it so much simpler. Enough time to make amends, to make up for turning my back on my friends. I'll make the most of the time he is away to help his woman too. It's the least I can do for him.

"Good." I nod at her. "I'll be in touch." I shrug on my coat and walk to the door, then turn to level a glance at her over my shoulder. "Lock the door after me; don't open it for anyone you don't know."

She huffs, "Oh, please, I'll be fine."

"When it comes to your safety, I will not compromise. Do you understand?"

She blinks.

"Do you?"

"Y...yes."

"Good." I step outside, close the door after myself, and wait until the sound of the latch being snapped into place reaches me. Only then, do I turn and march down the steps. I stalk up the sidewalk to where I'd parked my SUV, get inside the car, then toy with the hair tie I had pilfered.

Why the hell did I do that? Why had I felt compelled to pick it up, like some teenaged boy in need of a memento from his beloved? Shit, it had been a moment of weakness, no doubt about it.

I stare at the purple-colored band, then bring it to my nose and sniff it. The scent of jasmine and luscious raspberries fills my senses. I am instantly hard. Hell! This instant response to her... It's disconcerting, to say the least. If I am not careful, I am going to become obsessed with her... Correction, I already am obsessed with her. It's why I am sitting here, outside her home, in my vehicle, thinking about her scent, the softness of her skin, those delectable, perfect curves of her body. How right she'd felt in my arms when I had carried her inside...

What in the bloody hell is wrong with me? I returned to do Edward a favor, remember? Best I not lose sight of that. I slide the hairband into my pocket, then ease onto the quiet street. By the time I reach my destination on the outskirts of the city, the sun is up in the sky.

I park my vehicle, peer through the windshield at the deserted warehouse. It's where I'd last seen the rest of the Seven. At the Kings of the Alley showdown when I'd taken on the guy fielded by the Bratva and not been able to defeat him. I'd had to pull out and Arpad had taken my place. And that's when Edward and I had fought—for the last time. And I had walked out. My fingers tighten around the wheel.

Of course, they would want to meet me here. The tossers aren't going to go easy on me. Not that I blame them. If it were me, I'd do the same. Bet they've spent long hours thinking up their revenge. Bet they'll take their time exacting it, too. It's the only reason I am hesitating to go in. Not because I want to delay the inevitable. Not because I've been dreading this reunion for as long as I've been gone. Only consolation, Edward isn't here. Which makes it both good and bad. If he were here, he'd deflect the attention from me, do his best to soothe out the tensions. Or maybe not. Perhaps he'd be the first to exact his vengeance. After all, I had wronged him... Almost as much as our kidnappers had. Shit! I slam my fist into the wheel, hit the button for the horn instead, which blares. The noise echoes through the empty parking lot, ricochets through my mind, careening me straight into an image from my past.

Noise, so much noise, loud noise that didn't stop. Day and night, and the next day again. On and on until I couldn't hear myself think or breathe or feel parts of my body that had seized up, grown numb. My lungs hurt, my heart pounded in my chest, and I couldn't hold back the saliva that drooled from my lips. They had found me wounded, separated from my battalion and had taken me prisoner. They had patched me up... But that was only so they could keep me alive long enough to question me. Which had been worse? Kidnapped at twelve during the incident and held for a month, or taken as POW at twenty-seven and being interrogated?

They had subjected me to the noise, the clanking, the thrash of heavy metal, the hard sounds that had reverberated through my skull, that stopped me from sleeping, from breathing... From living. Oh, God, I want to die. Kill me, already. Now, right now. I'd raised my eyes heavenward, and pleaded with whichever higher power was there watching over me. Please take me away, take me out of this pain, this misery. Put an end to this helplessness that grips me, this powerlessness that incapacitates me, this vulnerability that shrouds me, that wraps around my chest, my throat, that squeezes down so I can't breathe anymore. Can't breathe. Breathe.

In.

Out.

In.

I force myself to draw in the oxygen. Force my lungs to inflate. Deflate. Again. Focus on the small things. The smoothness of the steering wheel under my fingers. The scent of leather. The fabric of my T-shirt against my skin. The feel of my toes inside my boots. Breathe in again. Another breath. A third. Will my heartbeat to slow. My pulse rate to drop to normal. Then I straighten, open my eyes, wipe the sweat from my face. I turn toward the car door, only to have it wrenched open. I am hauled out of the SUV, and pushed to the ground. The impact of the crash reverberates through my body. I glance up to find my assailant standing over me. The sun slants in my eyes and I can't see his face. Then he bends to grab my collar again and a pair of familiar eyes fill my line of sight.

"You?"

3

Baron

"Get up," Saint growls.

I push myself up to a standing position. "I don't want to fight you."

"But I do." He lunges forward and his fist connects with my nose. Pain slices through my head. Sparks of red and white explode behind my eyes. I stumble back, straighten, sense him move and duck, out of instinct.

His fist whooshes by my face. The breeze from it lifts the hair from my forehead. He follows that up with another hit, this time to my side. Pain blooms up my spine. "Fuck."

He lunges forward, catches me in the stomach. The breath whooshes out of me. I double over, and he brings his fist up to connect with my chin. My head snaps back. Darkness overwhelms me.

Something wet licks my face, my nose, my mouth. I pry my eyes open to find a pair of doggy eyes staring down at me.

"Hey, Max, here boy," a voice calls... One I recognize as Sinclair's. The dog whines, glances from his master then back. He pushes his nose into my shoulder as if to apologize, then turns and darts off.

I groan, throw my arm over my face, and the movement sends a shudder of pain racing up my spine. Fucking hell. I draw in a breath and my throat burns. My ribs ache. My face feels like I've connected with a wall... Or Saint, in this case. Fucking Saint. I draw in a breath, and my ribs protest. My stomach lurches and I pant and stay still, hoping, praying, the sickness in my stomach will subside. I must have dozed off for a few seconds, maybe, when a touch to my shoulder has me jackknifing up to sitting position. Instantly, my head throbs, my chin hurts, and my stomach twists in on itself. I gasp, lower my head. Take in a breath and another.

"Easy now." A man's voice—another one I recognize—reaches me. "You're a little banged up."

"No shit." I tip up my chin and scowl at the familiar features of my friend. I clear my throat. "Hey, Doc. How's it going?"

He shrugs. "I guess we'll find out, once we work out the reasons behind why you left the way you did—"

"Not to mention, finding out why you're back," a low voice growls behind me.

I blow out a breath, turn to Saint, then wince when a throbbing slices through my head. "I know you're angry—"

"Angry?" he snaps. "You think I'm angry—?" His voice rises in tandem to the pain that thud-thud-thuds against my brain.

"From where I am, that's a calculated guess, I'd say." I raise my hand to shield my face from the sunlight that pours down on me through the windows high up in the ceiling. I move to the side, take in the features of my friends.

Saint stands with his hands bunched at his sides. Next to him, Damian's arms are folded across his chest. On his other side, Sinclair stands, his body relaxed. Next to him, Max whines and Sinclair bends to scratch behind his ear. He straightens, fixes me with an unblinking glare.

Weston walks around me to join the rest of the men. I recognize it for what it is. A show of unity. Four against one. Arpad's missing, probably because he's on his honeymoon. Yeah, I've kept tabs on my friends. I may have left London and my friends behind, but they never left me.

I push myself to standing and my side screams in protest. My face feels numb, my ribs twinge, and I bite down the groan that works its way up my throat.

"I take it you are not happy to see me?"

My voice echoes around the empty warehouse.

"Whose choice was it to meet here, anyway?" I glance at Sinner. "Can't be you, Sinner. You never did have a flair for the dramatic. As for you, Saint?" I train my gaze on him, "You're too hotheaded. When you're that angry, you can't think straight."

Saint growls, takes a step forward, but Damian stops him. "Easy there, he's baiting you."

"It could have been you, Damian." I twist my lips. "You were the dreamer amongst us. You aimed high—congratulations on the success of your last single, by the way. It hit me, bro; it broke me. It's the reason I decided to come back."

Damian stiffens, seems like he's about to say something, then stops himself.

"I heard the song and knew something had shifted amongst you guys. To see each of you find the loves of your lives... It made me believe again."

Weston shifts his weight from foot to foot. I turn my attention to him. "You did good, Doc. Not only did you qualify, you became a heart surgeon. Of all of us, you were always the most level-headed. You kept your eyes focused on the goal, the big picture. It's not easy to have achieved what you have... Not after what happened to us."

The silence intensifies. The men stiffen. I glance between them, then rub the back of my neck. "Yeah, took only ten minutes of us meeting for one of us to bring up the incident huh?" I say wryly. "Not that I haven't tried to forget it, but something like that... Well, the more I bury it, the more it's right in front of me, haunting me at every turn, you get me?"

The men meet my gaze. The expression on their features range from empathy to disbelief to anger.

"Look," I take a step forward, "I understand how it must seem from where you are, but trust me when I say that it was for the best. If I had stayed on, it would have only screwed things further. It was best that I took off the way I did."

Anger pulses from the group. Saint's knuckles are white tipped, Damian and Weston stiffen. The only person who seems unaffected is Sinner. Which only means that he is livid. Very livid. The anger pulsing behind that cool expression is probably far more lethal than the obvious rage evident on Saint's face. Shit. I have to find a way to defuse this situation, before one of us does something that we'll regret. And regret, we would. The five of them, including Arpad, may hate me now, but we need each other. Our strange, twisted relationship is the only thing that's real in the post-incident life that we lead.

"Edward," I swallow, "he took off this morning."

All four of them seem to freeze for a second, then Sinner jerks his chin. "We know."

"You do?" I turn to him, "How—"

"You didn't think we'd allow anything to happen to one of us without the rest of us being aware?"

"You had eyes on him?" I nod. "Good, then you were able to track where he went?"

"No."

"No?" I snap. "What do you mean no? We need to find him before he does something he'll regret. We need to make sure he's safe—"

"The only person he needs to be guarded from is you, and considering you are here and he isn't..." Sinner raises his shoulder.

"He wasn't in his right mind when he called me. He..." I rub the back of my neck. "He hurt the last man who walked into confession."

"That's when he called you," Sinner says slowly, "so you could take care of it?"

I nod. "When I reached the church, he was still breathing. I hauled him out of there, and took him to Weston." I nod in his direction.

"You could have mentioned something of what happened then," Weston mutters. "It's a good thing I'd never turn away any of you Seven, no matter how suspicious the circumstances."

"And I thank you for that." I tilt my head.

"Still doesn't answer who this man is, or why Edward lost his temper with him and almost killed him?" Sinner frowns at me. "At least, I am assuming that's what happened."

"Exactly." I rub the back of my neck. "From what Edward told me, the man walked in to confess. Edward decided to help him, even though it was after church hours."

"Typical Edward," Damian mutters, "always going out of his way to help others."

"Which makes it all the more intriguing as to what caused him to lose his shit," Weston murmurs.

"Only one reason he'd resort to violence," Sinclair states. He turns to take in the expressions on the faces of his friends. "You guys thinking what I am?"

"That it had to do with the incident?" Weston offers.

"It did," I confirm.

Sinclair's shoulders stiffen. A jolt of anger runs through the men. Sinclair turns to me, "We need to question the man."

"I will question the man—"

"What the fuck—!?" Saint explodes, and I hold up my hand.

"—when he regains consciousness. He's currently still out."

"Where have you kept him?" Sinclair's voice hardens. "Where are you hiding the motherfucker?" His gaze ping-pongs between Weston and me.

"I'm not hiding him. I simply took him to a safehouse where Weston is treating him."

All eyes turn to Weston who nods, "I am. Asshole's still unconscious but his condition is stable."

Sinclair turns to me, "And when he's awake I get to question him." He narrows his gaze, "I need to be there when the bastard opens his eyes."

"And you will." I widen my stance. "You'll be there watching with the rest of them, while I interrogate."

"Why you motherfucker—" Saint steps forward.

Sinclair places a hand on his shoulder. "Easy, Caldwell."

Saint makes a threatening voice low in his throat. "When I get my hands on you, I am going to—"

"Yeah," I blow out a breath, "still the same Saint. More anger than common sense. How you managed to find a woman crazy enough to put up with your shit, I'll never know. I—"

Saint lunges forward. Both Sinclair and Damian grab him and hold him back.

"Stop it, you two," Sinclair orders. He turns on me, "Apologize to him."

I glower at Saint. "Why should I?"

"Because what you said was unwarranted. We don't insult each other's families, or have you forgotten that in the time you were away?"

I wince. Then squeeze the bridge of my nose. "You're right," I mutter before turning my attention to Saint. "I'm sorry, that was out of line."

"What's out of line, is you deciding to drop back into our lives, and thinking that you can pick up where you left off," he snarls.

"That's not why I returned."

"No, you returned because Edward needed your help, though why he reached out to you, of all people, I don't understand."

"I had the necessary skills to take care of it." I draw myself up to my full height. "And maybe...he trusted me more?"

"Keep telling yourself that." Saint bunches his fingers at his sides, "Clearly, all those years you spent away haven't changed your capacity to delude yourself."

"Is that what you think?"

"Not just me," he retorts.

I glance around at the faces of my once friends, then stiffen. Their expressions are simply variants of the anger I see on Saint's.

"It wasn't just about the man," I finally say. "If it were, he could have just asked Weston."

Sinclair stiffens. "What other help could he have asked from you?"

I meet his gaze, fold my arms across my chest and wait. Wait.

Sinclair's forehead clears. "I see." He nods. "How interesting."

"What?" Saint whips his head around. "What the devil do you mean?"

Sinclair jerks his head toward me, "The Father didn't trust any of us enough for this, apparently."

"What bullshit," Damian bursts out. "Any one of us would have put our life on the line for Edward."

"Evidently, it's something he values more than his life. Who better than his once best friend to take care of that, hmm?"

"Values more than his life?" Saint glowers at me. "What could he have valued more—?"

Sinclair unwinds his body long enough to clap his hand on the back of Saint's head.

"Ow." Saint snaps his head around "What the fuck, Sin— ah!" He blinks. "You mean—"

Sinclair nods. "Yes, dipshit. Exactly."

"Hmm." Saint turns and eyes me with a speculative gaze. "I see."

"What?" Weston glances between us. "The hell am I missing now?"

"Catch up, Doc," Saint drawls. "You're not normally this slow. Being married, plainly, has softened you too much around the edges."

"Speak for yourself," Weston says mildly. "I am guessing this is about a woman?" He tilts his head.

"Which woman?" Damian blinks, looks between us. "What the hell you guys talking about?"

"Ava," Sinclair clarifies. "Isla's friend, who was there at Arpad's wedding."

"She was?" His forehead wrinkles. "Guess I'll have to take your word for it. I might have been a little preoccupied with my new wife."

"You're forgiven, man." Saint smirks. "Pussy-whipped, as you are."

"And you aren't?" Damian chuckles.

I glance between them, realizing just how much I've missed this easy banter. It would be so easy to slip into that old routine with them. To be part of the Seven once more. Shit, I really have missed it, missed them...missed the camaraderie. Missed this sensation that there are people who care for me, who may hate me sometimes, but who care enough about me, to fight with me. People who have my back.

Saint holds up his hands, "Hey, I'll be the first to concede, having Victoria in my life has changed everything. Speaking of," he glances at his watch, "I need to get going, or I'll be late for the appointment with the midwife."

"Midwife." I stare at him. "You're going to see the midwife?"

"With Victoria, yes." He scowls at me. "It's known to happen."

"It is?" I stare at him.

"We're pregnant, you tosser."

"We..." I open and shut my mouth. "Did you say we're pregnant?"

"So?" Color smears his cheeks. He glowers back at me. "You have a point you're trying to make here?" He snaps, then straightens. "Why the fuck am I still talking to this guy, huh?" He glances around at Sinner. "What have we decided to do with him, anyway?"

"Do with me?" I scowl, "You guys aren't going to do anything with me."

"Oh, yes, we are." Sinclair cracks his neck. "You hurt one of us deeply when you left. Now, you're back and he's gone. And for some reason, he's asked you to keep an eye on his girl."

"Has he?" Damian frowns. "We only have this wanker's words to go on." He jerks his chin at me.

"I may be many things, but a liar is not one of them," I snap back.

"Hmm." Sinner strokes his chin. "I shouldn't, but I am inclined to believe you on that."

"You are...?"

He nods. "Sure, you're too smart to lie to us about something so important. Also, I believe that you are here to make amends to us; that you want us...and Edward especially, to forgive you."

I shift my stance. "And do you think you can?" I swallow. "Forgive me."

He looks me up and down. "No."

4

"Dancing lets me escape, it allows me to transfer my thoughts to the rhythm of the melody instead of concentrating on the depressing details of my teenage life..."

-From Ava's Diary

Ava

"Thanks, Ava, that was a great session." The last of my students waves at me as she departs the studio.

I gather up the scarves I'd used during the lesson, which had gone better than I'd expected, actually. Especially, considering that my mind had not been on it. How could it be, when it had been occupied with not one, but two men? How is it even possible that I've gone from being a virgin to being fucked thoroughly by a man who'd broken his vows for me...to being strongly attracted to another—all, in less than a week? Hell, in less than twenty-four hours!

Hell. I deposit the scarves in the basket at the far end of the room, then turn to where I'd plugged in my music. This had been my third class of the day and I still have too much pent-up energy in me. Maybe I should try to compose another routine? Something I could use in yet another Eastern-themed wedding that Isla has been asked to organize.

I switch on the music, and as the beats of Kiss Kiss by Tarkan fill the room, I close my eyes and sway. Shuffle my feet, shimmy, allow the rhythm to grip me, sway my hips, grind them, let the vibrations travel up my thighs, my belly.

"Holy shit, girl, you've got some moves."

I yelp, snap open my eyes. "Isla," I press my palm to my chest, "you scared me."

"Sorry." She holds up her hands. "I did ring, but you didn't hear me over the music, so I decided to come inside anyway. It's okay, isn't it, that I am here?" Her forehead furrows. "I'm not disturbing you or anything, am I? You did give me the passcode to the studio, after all."

"You're good." I turn and switch off the music.

In the silence that descends I feel my heart bumping against my ribcage. "It's all good." I turn to her. "I was just prepping for my performance at the next wedding you are organizing."

"Ah," she nods, "you mean Liam's wedding?"

"Liam's?" I gape. "You mean Weston's brother, Liam?"

Her lips turn down, then she smooths out her forehead. "The very same. He's marrying some society heiress or another. Which is great."

"It is?" I watch her closely.

"Of course, it is. The joining of two big families, the wedding of the year, almost as big as a royal wedding, and I get to organize it. It's going to be great publicity for my little company."

"So why don't you look happy?"

"What do you mean? Of course, I am happy." She pinches both sides of her lips, widens her fake smile until I am sure her cheeks hurt.

"Okay, that's creepy."

She switches off her smile. Lowers her chin. "You're right. I have mixed feelings about it."

"Because you like Liam?"

"Like?" She laughs. "That's not the word I'd use for how much I'd like to slap that annoying smirk off his face, right before I throw myself at him and lick those luscious lips."

"So," I say cautiously, "you do like him?"

"I hate him." She sets her jaw. "But we are not talking about him."

"We're not?"

"Nor am I here to talk about myself."

I peer into her eyes, then raise my hands. "Oh, no, no, no. I am not going to talk about it."

"Aww, come on, Ava. Let me, at least, live vicariously through you."

"What about the rest of the girls? Surely, being married to one of the Seven means they are having enough sex. They'll have much more to share with you."

"That's the problem. It's married sex, which is a bit like eating risotto."

I slow blink. "Let me get this straight. You're saying married sex is a bit like eating risotto?"

"Yep." She nods. "You know, it's rice and cheese and all the stuff that makes you warm and content and seduces you into a food coma, and you know you should stop eating, but you can't because all that serotonin has kicked in and made you happy, but really, it's weighing you down. But you don't realize it until it's too late."

I wince. "Unlike unmarried sex, which is like what? Chili-cake?"

"Precisely." She jerks her chin up and down. "Spicy and unpredictable and you never know when the taste is going to wallop you, and you peel back each layer and reveal a surprise... And then there's still the cream and—" She frowns. "Hold on, is there even a dish called a chili-cake?"

"Sure is." I nod. "It's a chili-laced chocolate sponge cake."

She wrinkles her nose, "Okay, not sure I'd want to eat that, but you know what I mean."

"Yeah." Though where I'm at now, it's more like being a patty in a hamburger, or the cream filing of an Oreo, if you know what I mean? I snort and Isla eyes me with curiosity.

"What's going on with you, Ava?"

"N...nothing." I walk toward the changing room adjoining the studio and she follows.

"It's something, babe, going by your expression."

I blow out a breath. Am I that transparent? But then, Isla has always been too perceptive for her own good. Besides, she's the only friend I am close enough to be able to confide in about what's happened, and I have to talk to someone about it. I can't possibly keep everything that happened bottled up inside. I push open the door to the changing room and walk in with Isla at my heels. I walk toward my locker, and pull out my street clothes. I need a shower, but I can take it when I get home. Instead, I strip off the yoga pants and my top and change into my leggings and a sweatshirt. Pulling on my shoes, then my jacket, I turn to her. "Edward," I murmur.

"What about him."

"He left."

"What do you mean, he left?" She frowns.

"He came to my place sometime early yesterday morning, then he broke his vows."

She stiffens, "He broke his vows. Is that a euphemism for—"

I nod. "Yeah. I chew the inside of my lip. We ah, did it."

"O-k-a-y." She lowers her chin. "Let me get this right. You and the Father had—"

"Sex." I blow out a breath. "Yeah. We did."

"Then he left?"

"He hopped on his bike and got out of there."

"How far could he get on a bicycle?" She laughs.

I roll my eyes. "A motorcycle, doofus."

"Ha-ha. Okay, but he's coming back, isn't he?"

"I..." I glance away, then back at her. "I'm not sure."

"Is there any reason you think he isn't returning? Did he tell you he wasn't coming back?"

"Yeah." I swallow.

"You sure about that."

"Let's see, his exact words were, 'I can give you something to remember me by.' And also, 'promise me you won't believe what you'll hear about me.'" I wipe away my tears. "And then, after he fucked me again the second time, he said that he had to go." I bite the inside of my cheek. "And PS, he also took my virginity."

"Virginity?" Isla stares at me. "Thought you said you weren't a virgin?"

"I lied." I brush away more tears. Shit, why the hell am I crying about him? A man who didn't hesitate to turn and leave, even after I begged him not to. He doesn't deserve me; he doesn't. "It still doesn't excuse what he did. He shagged me and then he left. I told him not to go. I begged him to stay. But he crept away from my bed while I was sleeping. The coward."

"Men," Isla huffs, "bloody wankers, the lot of them."

"They are." I nod "Especially Edward."

"Definitely Edward," she agrees. "He's a douchebag."

"The worst kind of douche there is. He's a motherfucking bastard and it doesn't mean anything that he broke his vows for me. Or that he did stay and hold me while I slept." I take in a shaky breath. "Or that he did come to me before he left. He could well not have. He could have simply crept away and then... I'd have never known that he had feelings for me. And that would have been better, right?"

"Oh, Sweetie." Isla looks at me with compassion, and that's the last straw. My heart shatters. The sobs well up and I bury my face in my hands and allow the tears to overwhelm me.

She reaches me, pulls me into an embrace and I wrap my arms around her. I bury my face in my friend's shoulder and allow myself to give in to the weeping. Just this once, I'll be weak. This once, I'll allow myself to pour out all of my disappointment, my frustration, my helplessness in not being able to see that I was setting myself up for heartbreak.

What the hell had I been thinking, allowing myself to be attracted to a priest? Worse, I'd fallen in love with him. It had happened so quickly that I hadn't been able to stop myself. Correction, I hadn't wanted to hold back. I'd seen Edward and something had shifted inside of me. That base part of me had honed in on him. That primitive, feminine instinct in me had been attracted to him, hadn't cared that he had dedicated himself to God. Oh, how innocent I'd been. I'd seen him as a challenge, had wanted to woo him away from his chosen path.

I had succeeded. And now I have to pay the consequences for it. He'd come to me, with the intention of leaving. Hell, I never had a chance. He'd come to tell me goodbye, I realize that now. But as soon as he'd seen me, something had changed in him. He'd asked me if I wanted him to shag me and I... I had said yes. How could I have said otherwise? Why had he even asked the question? Why couldn't he have simply turned and left?

Would I have allowed him to do that?

Could I have let him walk out without...being with him? Why had I fallen asleep? Why had I not insisted that he fuck me again, and again, and again? So I'd have enough memories from one night to last me a lifetime. Shit, is that romantic? Or unrealistic? Or had I simply made the most of the opportunity I had been handed? If I had let him leave without sleeping with him, I'd have never forgiven myself. Truth.

And yet, he'd walked out on me. Had I slept with him hoping that it would change his mind? That once he'd been inside of me, he'd have never wanted to leave? A part of me had hoped... Okay, so I had staked my future on it. I had thrown myself into trying to please him, into being everything he wanted, and it had been incredible. The best experience of my life... One that I am not going to forget in a hurry—one I'm never going to get over. Let's face it, after Edward, after realizing what he'd given up to be with me, how he'd turned to me for comfort, how he'd fucked me everywhere, in every hole... How could I possibly find anyone else who'll compare?

Baron could. He's as intense, as gorgeous... There is something about him that resonates with me...in a different way. A darker way.

Where Edward was light... Baron is the other side. Like opposite sides of the same coin. Or the edge. That thing just out of reach that makes me want to grasp it. That hints at something hot and passionate just under the surface. I suppose they are similar in that way. Edward had been restricted by the bars he'd imposed on himself due to his calling. Baron...he seems to have simply locked himself away. He is unreachable, in a different way.

I step back, and Isla releases me.

She scans my features. "You okay, hun?"

"Yeah." I swallow, "What was the name of the seventh guy you mentioned, the one who disappeared after the incident?"

She searches my features, "You mean, Baron?"

I open and shut my mouth, "His name was Baron?"

She nods, "Yes... Why?"

Shit, no wonder his name had seemed familiar but I hadn't placed it earlier. Guess I had been a little preoccupied when I'd met him. Only with the man I'd thought meant something to me walking out on me. No biggie. Of course, I hadn't made the connection between my Baron—no, not my Baron—between the stranger whose name is Baron and the Baron who is one of the Seven. The Baron who is a mystery and a challenge... One... I have no intention of pursuing. No way, am I going to be interested in him. Not so soon after Edward. The last thing I need is a rebound affair...and especially, not this quickly after Edward, and not with someone who knows Edward. Not to mention, someone who didn't mention to me that he knows Edward. The blood drains from my face.

"Everything okay?" Isla asks

"No, but it will be." I rub my palm across my face, glance down at the splotches of moisture on her jacket. "Sorry, I spoiled your clothes."

"Oh, forget about that." She waves a hand in the air. "It will dry. Now why don't we get you home, and I can pour us both drinks and—"

A sound at the doorway, has us both turning toward it.

I take in the man whose shoulders fill the space, who's so tall that the top of his head seems to brush the doorframe.

"You?" I swallow. "How did you get in here?"

5

Baron

"I walked in." I growl.

"You need to be buzzed in at the studio door." She frowns. "You can't just walk in like that."

"And yet, I just did," I point out.

"What is that supposed to mean?" She blinks. "Did you just break in?"

"It took me exactly three and a half minutes to crack the code to your studio door," I growl. "And the front door to the building doesn't even have a lock."

She reddens.

"Your security here sucks, you know that?"

"You're exasperating, you know that?" she snipes back.

"You ain't seen nothin' yet."

"Oh, piss off," she mutters.

"I will, after I take you home."

"I can take the tube," she insists.

"It's not safe. I'll drive you instead."

"Says who?"

"Says me."

"And who are you to tell me what I can and can't do?"

"I told you, when it comes to your safety I will not compromise, Ava."

"I am safe." She scowls.

"Says the woman whose studio is in a building whose door doesn't even have a lock. Seriously Ava, you need to move your studio from this walking disaster zone of a place."

"Disaster zone?" She snarls, "You dare call the place I built with hard work and commitment, the first space I have created dedicated to my art, a disaster?" Her chest heaves and her cheeks redden.

Why do her eyes seem swollen? Was she crying again?

The woman next to her shifts restlessly. Shit, I had been so focused on Ava, I hadn't even noticed that there was someone else in the studio. So much for my security 'expertise.' And I had insulted her about something that clearly means so much to her, and that too, in front of someone else? Way to go, asshole.

I draw in a breath, then rub the back of my neck, "I apologize." I roll my shoulders, "I may have been out of line."

"May have been?" She arches a brow and I stiffen.

"I am sorry I insulted you about your studio." I glance around the space, "It's a beautiful space."

She narrows her gaze.

"Really," I turn to her, "I understand what it is to build something from pure passion."

"You do?"

I nod, "Of course. you'd have to be blind not to see how much this space means to you, Ava."

"Hmmp." She folds her arms about her waist. "Okay."

"So, you accept my apology?"

She seems like she's going to decline, then jerks her chin.

Thank fuck. "Doesn't mean the place is secure," I mutter and her gaze widens.

"We'll agree to disagree." She purses her lips. "What are you doing here anyway?"

"Came to see if you wanted a ride home."

When I'd left her after breakfast, she'd seemed like she was coming back to normal, but as I take in her features now, I notice the hollows under her cheekbones. Now that the flush on her cheeks from our earlier disagreement is fading away, she seems too pale. Her shoulders are hunched, and there's an overall defeated air about her.

Of course, it isn't that easy to bounce back from the kind of break-up she had. I should know. It took me years... No, I am still getting over it. So, how had I expected her to simply pick up the pieces and move on after Edward left, with no explanation?

Fucking Edward. I should have known he wouldn't be able to do justice to the one good thing that had happened to him. If she were mine, I'd...take care of her, protect her, make sure she never wants for anything. Make sure I do everything in my power to keep her happy. I can still do that. I can ensure that I distract her enough so she doesn't spend her time thinking about him.

I fold my arms across my chest, glance from her to the woman who steps in front of her.

"I'm Isla." She comes forward. "And you are—?" She holds out her hand and I take it.

"Baron."

"Baron," She nods, then her eyebrows shoot up. She glances up, peruses my features. "Not the Baron, Baron?"

I arch an eyebrow and she scowls. "I mean, are you Baron, one of the Seven? The Baron, who left all those years ago and only kept in touch on occasion, Baron?"

"And if I am?"

"Are you?" Her scowl deepens. "You are, right?"

I draw in a breath. "Yeah, I am, though if you ask any of the Seven, they'll say that I am not one of them anymore."

"Omigosh." Isla opens and closes her mouth. "You are back? Do the Seven know? Did you—?"

"Hold on." Ava steps up to stand next to her. "So now you are owning up to being one of the Seven?"

"Of course, I am." I glare at her, "Your point being—"

"You didn't mention it to me when you met me."

"You didn't ask." I raise my shoulders.

"You could have told me that you knew—"

"Edward?" I tilt my head, "I'm telling you now."

"So, you two have met?" Isla glances between us, "When did that happen?"

Ava flushes. "This morning, after Edward took off, I ran out of the house to follow him and fell. Baron, here, helped me. He, uh, took me inside."

"He took you inside?" She blinks.

"Yeah," Ava drags her fingers through her hair, "and made me breakfast."

"You?" She turns on me, "You stayed to cook for her?"

I hold up my hands. "I was simply making sure that she was okay, before I left."

"Hmph." She purses her lips together. "That's all you did?"

"Honest." I turn my gaze back to Ava. "I was simply worried about her. And if you don't mind, I want to speak with her."

Isla folds her arms across her chest.

"Alone."

Ava tips up her chin and holds my gaze.

"Please?" I add. "Can I speak to you, Ava?"

Ava swallows, then nods, "Okay."

"You don't have to do anything you don't want to, Ava," Isla warns her. "If this guy is bothering you—"

"He's not," she replies.

"You sure?" Isla turns and grips her shoulder. "I can ask him to leave, if he is."

Ava meets her gaze, the two seem to have a silent conversation, then Isla blows out a breath. "Fine, I'll go then."

She turns back to me. "I have my eyes on you." She glowers. "If you hurt her in any way, you'll have me to contend with, and I warn you, it won't be good for you."

I lower my chin. "I promise, I won't harm her or cause her any kind of pain." Not unless she asks.

"Hmm." She purses her lips, "We'll see." She turns to Ava, kissing her on her cheek. "You take care, doll, and call me if you need anything."

Then, she brushes past me and leaves.

Ava glances at me, before moving to the side of the room. She grabs her handbag and hooks it over her shoulder. "I was just leaving."

She tries to brush past me, and I plant my body in her path.

She sighs, "Really? You are going to do this now?"

"Why were you crying?"

"I wasn't crying." Her lower lip trembles.

"Yes, you were."

"No, I wasn't." Her chin wobbles; her features contort.

"Shit, shit, shit." I haul her to me and she buries her head in the stretch of shirt between the lapels of my jacket.

I wrap my arms around her, hold her close as she sobs. My chest hurts, the blood pounds at my temples, and anger slices through my head.

Damn you, Edward, for breaking her heart.

And then, you had to hand her over to me, knowing I'd be attracted to her. Knowing that I'd want to protect her. You knew what it would do to me to find her so helpless, didn't you? You knew I'd give anything to be there for her in any way that she needs. You knew I'd be loyal to you. That I wouldn't betray you. That I'd be attracted to her and yet hold back, because she belongs to you. How dare you put me in this situation, you asshole? How could you ask me to look out for her, knowing every second of every minute that I spend with her, I'll want to make her mine? Fuck you, Edward! I hope you find no peace, wherever you are. I hope you spend each second missing her, knowing that I am here for her when you should be here taking care of her.

I tuck her head under my chin, rub soothing circles across her back. When she only cries harder, I scoop her up, walk over to the chair in the corner and lower my bulk into it. The chair creaks, but holds. I rock her in my arms, hum the first tune that comes into my head.

I'm not sure how long this goes on, but slowly, her sobs subside. She hiccups, draws in a breath. Her shoulders tremble, and I pull her even closer. She pushes her nose into my shirt, and inhales. And again. I pause, glance down at her, "Did you just sniff me?"

She pauses, then nods.

"Does it help?"

She nods again.

"Okay then."

I continue to hold her, until she pulls away. I loosen my arms about her, and she leans back, tips up her chin and glances at me from under her eyelashes. "Didn't mean to fall apart like that," she mutters.

"You are entitled."

"No, I am not. I've had enough of being the victim here. I hate crying, you know. Always have. It took me a full two weeks to break down after my mother died."

"I'm sorry." I peer down into her features. "Truly."

"Thank you." She nods. "She was unwell. Cancer." She swallows, looking down again. "She was ailing for nearly a year before she died...and it was a relief when she was gone, because she didn't have to suffer anymore. Does that make me a terrible daughter? That I was happy that she was finally out of pain?"

"No," I grip her hand between mine, "no, it doesn't."

"I didn't want to lose her, but I couldn't stand to see her suffering. And then...after she died, I found out that she had asked my father to marry her best friend after she was gone." She swallows. "That's the kind of woman she was. Always looking out for everyone else. Everyone except herself. She was too focused on her daughters, her husband. She didn't take enough care of herself. It's why she fell sick, I'm sure of it."

I run my fingers through her hair, tuck a strand behind her ear.

She tips up her chin, holding my gaze. "You knew Edward?"

I stiffen, then force my shoulders to relax. I knew this conversation was coming. Only, I'd hoped to have a little while longer before having to reveal how I'd happened to be there at the very moment that she'd run after Edward, but no matter. There is never going to be a good time for it, I know that. Still, it doesn't help when I glance into those big green eyes of hers and see the hurt in them. I wince, glance away, then back at her.

"I did," I clear my throat, "I do know him."

"So, you know that..." She swallows. "You know that he and I—, that we —"

"Fucked?"

She hunches her shoulders, pushes away from me. I release her and she slides off my lap. Her bag slides to the floor, as she begins to pace in front of me.

"We slept together... once... no, a few times that night, before he—"

"Stop." I bunch my fingers at my side, "I don't need to know the details."

"Why not?" She turns and stares at me. "Don't you want to know what he did to me the first time we were together? How he..." She swallows, "how he, took my arse."

I bunch my shoulders.

"How he came in my mouth."

My thigh muscles spasm, my stomach ties itself in knots.

"How he took my virginity when he—"

I spring up, walk over to her, slap my hand across her mouth. "Enough, woman," I roar.

My voice echoes around the space.

She blinks up at me, big green eyes that carry the remnants of grief from her mother's death, from Edward's desertion, from how she misses him. Shit, despite what he did to her, she still misses him.

I lower my hand to my side. "I made a mistake. I shouldn't have come here."

"No, you did the right thing," she says in a hard voice. "If you hadn't, I wouldn't have realized that Edward's friend is as unfeeling as he was."

"I have no idea why you're jumping to that conclusion."

"Oh?" She chuckles. "You just show up out of nowhere and don't tell me you know Edward?"

"I know it seems odd that I was there at the very moment that Edward left —"

"Odd?" she snarls. "Of course, not. Why should it be odd that as Edward leaves my life, his friend enters it? Then pretends he is concerned about me."

"I was—am concerned about you."

"Then appears to take care of me—"

"I did take care of you." I set my jaw, "I want to take care of you."

"Why?" she says in a low voice. "Why the hell would you want to do that?"

"Because Edward asked me to."

6

Ava

"Excuse me?" I shake my head. "What the hell did you say?"

"I said," he draws himself up to his full height, "that Edward asked me to watch over you."

"Hold on." I hold up a hand, and take a breath. "He asked you to look out for me?"

He nods.

"Edward knew he was leaving, so he called you and asked you to be there when I fell apart? He knew I'd fall apart. Of course, he did." I drag my fingers through my hair, then begin to pace again. "He knew I was weak. Knew I was in love with him, that I was falling for him and—"

"You were in love with him?"

"Yes, of course, I was." I pause, stare at him over my shoulder. "Why else would I collapse in such theatrical fashion when he decided to take off?"

"You didn't know him that long..."

"How do you know that?" I frown.

"When Edward called me, he gave me the highlights of, uh, how you guys met."

"He did, did he?" I fold my arms around my waist. "Geez, like this isn't weird at all. The man I fall for, not only is he a priest, but before he breaks his vows and takes off, he calls up his best friend—"

"Not his best friend"

"—to come by and take care of the woman he fucked—"

"You're more than that to him."

"—before he decides to take off without a word of explanation."

"He had a good reason."

"Oh, so now you're defending him?" I slap my palms on my hips. "Of course, you are. You men stick together, regardless of the fact that he and you —" I stab my finger at him, "are in the wrong."

"I am not defending him, and he is in the wrong."

"As are you."

"What did I do?" He stares at me. "I was trying to help you."

"You were trying to help me?"

"You know I was."

"How? By forgetting to mention to me that you knew Edward? By acting all solicitous when you were probably laughing at how broken down I am?"

"I didn't laugh at you, and you know that."

"Why would you agree to what Edward asked of you anyway? Why would any man agree to keep an eye on the woman his friend shagged? Unless—" I lower my hands to my sides, "Oh, I see."

"What?" He scowls. "What does that mean?"

"I understand now why you are doing this."

"Do you?" His expression grows wary.

"Of course, I do." I allow a smile to curve my lips. "You probably figured; you'd get me to trust you. You'd worm your way into my affections, so I'd spread my legs for you."

"Stop that," he growls.

"Why? Isn't that the truth?" I grip my breasts and squeeze. "Don't tell me you didn't think of it."

"I..." He wets his lips. His gaze drops down to where I am massaging my breasts. His chest rises and falls.

"Don't tell me that you didn't see me and think that you wanted some of it. That it didn't cross your mind to fuck me as well."

"I... I." His throat moves as he swallows. Then he firms his lips.

"What? Not so cocky now, huh? Why are you silent? Why can't you tell me what you were thinking of all along?" I shrug out of my jacket, let it drop to the floor. Then slide my hand down my stomach to the apex of my thighs. "Bet you saw me and wanted to get inside my pants. Bet you saw me and thought I would be an easy conquest, that you could shag me anytime you wanted and I wouldn't deny you."

He closes the distance between us, places a finger across my lips. "Shh," he murmurs, "don't do this."

"Why not?" I lean away and he drops his hand to his side. "It's true, isn't it?" I ask. "Tell me you didn't think of screwing me when you saw me."

"I did."

I blink. Heat courses through my veins. My core trembles. Even as something hot stabs at my ribcage. I fist my fingers at my sides, tip my chin up. "Well then, there's nothing more to say, is there?"

I bend to pick up my jacket, but he's already there. He straightens, holding it out for me. "That still doesn't negate the fact that I was there to take care of you. To ensure that you didn't do something you would regret later."

"What, like kill myself?" I mutter.

When he doesn't reply, I stare up into his features. "Shit," I swear. "That's what he was afraid of? He was worried that I'd be so heartbroken that I'd put an end to my life? Why, the ego of that man." I draw myself up to my full height. "As you can see, I am fine and coping well enough without him. Or you, for that matter. You've done your job, so you can leave now."

He simply jerks his chin toward the jacket.

I glance at it, then back up at him. "What are you still doing here? I told you, you can go."

He doesn't react. His stance indicates he'd be happy to simply stay there until I do as he asks.

I blow out a breath, turn and slide my arms through the sleeves of the jacket. He smooths it over my shoulders, and the heat of his big palms radiates through the material and into my skin. A shiver slides up my spine. He steps back, picks up my bag and hands it to me. Then he walks to the door and holds it open for me. I walk over to him, reach for the light switch, but once more, he beats me to it.

He switches off the light in the dressing room and I step through and into the studio. I walk through to the main exit. He follows me, flicking off the lights before he reaches me. I scowl at him. He simply arches an eyebrow. He holds the door open again and I step through into the corridor. I walk out, lock the door behind me, when the light in the corridor flickers and goes out.

"Damn it," I grumble, "I should have gotten that fixed."

I take a step forward and connect with something hard and solid. The scent of crisp mountain air and pine trees envelops me. Then he wraps his hand around my shoulder. "Stay here," he rumbles.

"Not going anywhere, considering I can't see—"

A light flickers through the darkness. I blink, glance up to find him towering over me. I know he's big, I've seen him in broad daylight, but in the darkness, he seems larger than life. Big. Vital. Strong enough to weather any storm. Solid enough to lean on. I could pour all of my worries, my troubles, onto his shoulders and he would take it.

The air between us shifts, thickens into something hot and lusty and... My thighs clench. I lower my gaze and look away. He clears his throat, turns to shine the beam ahead, lighting a path through the darkness. "Come on." He grips my hand and his warm, thick fingers encircle my wrist, making me feel small and fragile in comparison. My nerve endings pop. Heat twists my lower belly. I bite down on my lower lip, allowing him to lead me across the corridor, down the flight of stairs, and out through the front door and onto the sidewalk.

Once there, he releases my hand, and of course, I miss his warmth. Shit, this is not right. How can I be so attracted to him, so quickly, when just a few days ago I'd been obsessed with Edward and couldn't stop thinking about him? Clearly, I am on my way to becoming a slut. Someone with no loyalty, someone who lusts after every good-looking man who happens to cross my path.

And that isn't true either.

I don't lust after everyone. Only Edward...and now him. Baron. One of the Seven. Edward's friend. Someone who hadn't revealed to me the real reason he'd been there to help me when he first met me. Do all the men in my life have to turn out to be such douches?

I pause. Baron takes a few steps forward before he turns to search for me. He frowns, angles his body toward me. I shake my head. "We're done," I mutter. "I don't want to see you again."

"Now, hold on—" He takes a step forward and I throw up my hand.

"I don't know what game you and Edward are playing, but I want no part of it."

"No games, Ava, honest—"

"You think I am going to believe you after what you revealed earlier?"

He scowls. "I expect you to think this through rationally."

"Oh, but I am. After what Edward did to me, the last thing I am going to do is have my emotions involved in any decision. It's why I am saying with complete confidence that I don't want anything to do with you."

"You don't mean it."

"I've never meant anything more in my entire life."

He takes a step forward and I hold up my hand. "One more step, and I swear, I'll scream."

His shoulders bunch. He glances around the deserted road then back at me. "At least, let me see you back home."

"No, thank you."

"It's not safe for you to head back on your own this late," he insists.

"It's nine p.m."

"It's late."

"I can take care of myself." I draw myself up to my full height, which still means I only come up to the level of his chest. "I've been doing so all these years."

"That was before."

"Before what?"

He hesitates, "Before I came on the scene."

"Nothing's changed, then, for it makes no difference to me. You're still not in my life, in any form. This association, whatever it is between us, ends here."

"No," he grinds out.

"Yes." I tip up my chin. "You don't get a say in it. I don't want anything to do with you, Baron."

Turning, I walk toward the tube station. The hair on the back of my neck prickles and I'm sure he's following me. I will not look back. Will not give him the satisfaction of finding out that he makes me nervous. By the time I reach the tube station I am out of breath. I duck inside, walk through the ticket barriers, and onto the platform. Only then, do I allow myself to glance down the platform. I don't see anyone who looks like him. Whew. Okay. That's good, right? Doesn't mean that I am disappointed that he took me at my word and gave up the pursuit so quickly.

I get into the tube, find a seat and collapse. In twenty minutes, I am walking up the street, heading to my place. The itch at the back of my neck appears again. This time, I glance over my shoulder, but don't see anything. Strange. Is he here? Did he find a way to conceal himself so I don't spot him? I increase my pace, reach home and lock the door behind me. Only then, do I heave out a sigh of relief.

I head for the bathroom, have a quick shower, then dress in my pajamas. I pour myself a glass of wine. Slouching back against the sofa with a bowl of noodles—yeah, instant, I know, not good, but damn, if all that MSG doesn't taste delicious just now. There is something about cheap cup-o-noodles that takes me right back to my uni days when things were simpler. Also, because I'd preferred to do then exactly as I am doing now—slurp down noodles, swig down wine, and watch my favorite show on TV.... Which, by the way, hasn't changed either, for I flip on the TV and tune into Twilight.

On screen, Edward watches Bella as she's sleeping. Yeah, so it's stalkerish, but for some reason, that scene always gets me.

Maybe because the thought of being the focus of someone's attention in that singular fashion is mind-boggling. And erotic, and such a turn on. Gah! Oh, Edward. Why the hell does he have to share the name with my favorite fictional character?

I turn off the TV, walk to the kitchen and wash my bowl in the sink. After rinsing my wine glass, I turn off the light and head for my bedroom. Yawning, I walk to the window and peer out. That's when I notice the SUV parked outside on the road. I can just about make out the shape of the person behind the wheel. It can't be. Surely not. I peer through the glass, try to discern the features of the man... And it is a man, that much I can tell from the shape of the shoulders, the way his head is turned...in my direction. And in my imagination, the intensity of his perusal heats my blood.

Shit, it can't be him. Is it? It must be. My instinct tells me it has to be him, that there is no danger from whoever is in the car. What the hell is he doing here? Is he watching over me?

The way Edward watched over Bella? But this is not Ed. This is Baron, remember? Shit, I am tying myself in knots. I step back and the drape falls into place. Moving over to the bed, I slide in between the covers and switch off my lamp. I turn over, snuggle into my pillow and my eyelids flutter down.

When I wake up, the light slants in through the open window. Whoa, guess I managed to sleep through the night. I jump out of bed, pad over to the window, lift the drape to find the SUV still in the same position as last night. I peer through the window, make out the shape of the man behind the wheel. His figure is slumped back. Is he asleep?

I turn away, walk out to the kitchen, make some coffee, then set about making breakfast. I sit down to avocado on toast, lift the mug of coffee to my mouth, then grimace. Shit, I am going to do this, aren't I?

I get up, pour some of the coffee in a travel mug, then fashion the extra toast and avocado I made into a sandwich, adding cheese and tomatoes to it. Yeah, it's vegetarian, but too bad; that's all he's getting in this house.

Piling the food into a takeaway container, I place it in a brown paper bag, and carry it with me, along with the mug. At the door, I step into my boots, grab my keys and step out of the house. I head down the path, cross the road, and walk around to the driver's side of the car. Before I can tap on the window, he rolls it down. Of course, he is awake and alert. He had to be to keep watch. Somehow, I just know that he hasn't slept a wink during the night. Adamant man.

I hand over the paper bag and the takeaway mug. He nods his thanks, takes a sip of the coffee from the mug, then sighs his gratitude. He places the mug in the cup holder, opens the container and digs in. I watch with some satisfaction as he finishes every last bite, then proceeds to drink the coffee. When he's done, he places the container inside the paper bag and hands everything over to me.

"Thanks," he nods, "but you didn't have to."

"I'd have done it for anyone," I mutter, "so don't go getting any ideas."

He tilts his head, surveys me closely. "What ideas would that be?"

"You know. That I've forgiven you for what you did."

"That's not why I'm doing this." He jerks his chin toward the dash.

"Yeah," I blow out a breath, "I need to get back."

I step away, aware that he's watching me as I head back inside the house. Shit, me and my soft heart. I should have simply let him be, not bothered to give him food. But seriously, how could I go about my breakfast, knowing he had spent the night outside in his car and not do something for him? Argh!

I get dressed, leave the house and walk past the SUV to the tube station. When I emerge on the other side, I don't look around for his car. Even if I had I wouldn't have spotted him. He's too good at this...whatever he does. What is his profession, anyway? Had he been a cop at some point, that he hadn't thought twice about shifting into surveillance mode with me? Well, whatever.

I walk up the steps and into my studio. For the next two hours, I devote myself to perfecting my new routine before my afternoon class. The day goes by quickly and after my third and final class, I go about shutting down for the night. I emerge into the crisp night air, spot the SUV parked across the road again.

Of course, he's been there all this time, keeping watch over me. It feels weird...strange... Good? Yeah, it feels weirdly reassuring to know that he has my back. Not that I need protection, despite what he said. I am an average girl living in London. There is no reason to think I am in any kind of danger.

Still... It is comforting to know I have my own guardian angel watching over me. Shit, I have to stop thinking of him in those terms. His presence is getting to me, that's all it is. I pause, wondering if I should go over and tell him not to tail me anymore... As if that would stop him. If anything, I'd be playing into his hands if I did that. No, I am going to have to simply ignore him. That is the only way out.

I head back to the tube station and then home.

This routine continues for the next four days. How the hell he manages to keep up the surveillance on his own, I don't know. The only time he seems to sleep is in the car at night. Yet when I take him coffee and breakfast in the mornings, he doesn't seem to be run down. Most times, we don't speak either, except for the occasional and very civil good morning to each other.

Ha, he doesn't fool me, though. That civility is just a front for the barely civilized intensity he's hiding inside. And every time I see him, it's like he's a blow to the chest. How can I feel so connected to someone I've just met? How can it be happening all over again? Each day, I manage to tear myself away from him. Then, I get dressed, go to work, return, all with the SUV trailing me to and from the tube station on either side.

The nights... Despite the fact that my dreams are filled with Edward, it's Baron's face that I wake up with first thing in the morning. Shit, this isn't good. Not at all. Things are getting so muddled up in my head right now.

On the fifth day, I wrap up my last class, and step outside, then glance across the street to find the SUV missing. Huh? I glance up and down the street, find no car, no man. Well, that didn't take long, did it? Guess I wore him down.

I trudge to the tube station. Why had I thought that he'd hang in for longer, that he'd continue to follow me day in and day out...for how long? To be honest, I'd hoped for a few weeks, at least, if not a month. And he'd lasted, what, four days? And he said Edward had asked him to take care of me. Whatever. I snort, pull out my phone and call Isla.

"Hey babe, where have you been?"

"Just work, been busy you know?"

"Anything to do with Baron?"

"Baron?" I frown. "Why do you ask?"

"Only because he showed up here, and now, he and Sinclair are locked in some kind of argument."

Here? "Argument?"

"I hear the sound of something crashing in the background."

"Strike that." Isla's voice rises in excitement. "Sinclair just socked Baron in the jaw."

"What?" I tighten my grasp on the phone. "What do you mean, he hit Baron? Where are you?"

"At Summer and Sinclair's townhouse." More noises, the sound of something hitting the ground, something big and heavy and— "Shit, are they fighting?" I scowl.

"More like walloping each other," she mutters. "Whoa, this is something. Nothing like two alpha males going at each other to get the blood flowing."

More sounds of yelling reach me over the phone. My heart begins to race and my blood thuds at my temples. "What the hell is happening there?"

"Ooh." I hear Isla pulling in air between her teeth. "That was a bad hit. Baron's down."

"Wait, what?" I stiffen. "I'm coming over."

7

Baron

"Fuck you, asshole!" Sterling glowers down at me.

Bitch had gotten in a good hit; he'd managed to get through my defenses...because I'd let him. Don't tell him that. I'd been parked outside Ava's studio, waiting for her to finish, and following up on my various business interests via phone and email when Weston had called. Of the remaining Seven, he's the only one who's reached out since the last fight. He'd said he couldn't break rank with the rest, that they were all livid with me for what they'd seen as my desertion, but that if I wanted a chance to talk to them, now was my chance. The five of them and their wives had gathered at Sinclair's home, and if I wanted an opportunity to plead my case with them, I'd best get my arse over there. I had hesitated, hadn't wanted to drive off and leave her unescorted, especially not now that night had fallen. But I couldn't miss this opportunity. I had to get back into the circle of trust... This is the only family I know... Also, I need them on board for what's next.

So, I had reached out to someone I know I can trust. I'd asked Archer—my friend and business partner with whom I had started the security business after leaving the army—to step in for me. Archer had served with me in the army. Hell, it was because of him that I had joined the army in the first place. I trust him to watch over Ava.

As soon as he had arrived, I'd taken off to Sinclair's town house.

Weston had been on hand to let me in. He'd led me into the living room where the rest of the four, including Arpad, who had returned from his honeymoon, had been gathered around the bar.

Sinclair had taken one look at me, and after scowling at Weston, he'd asked me to step out.

We'd each taken off our jackets and shirts, then circled each other, as the rest had come out to watch.

Each of us had waited for the other to make a move. I'd waited, waited... until he'd launched himself at me. Then we had gone a few rounds. I'd given as good as I'd gotten, then realized this was one fight I had to lose...for the greater win. If this is the only way to get Sterling to speak to me, so be it. So, I had allowed him to get the punch in.

Now I glower up at him, not needing to fake the pain that slices through my head. Bastard had managed to bury his fist in my forehead. Good thing I have a hard head. Still, the cut across my eyebrow is bleeding down my face. I use my arm to wipe away the blood, then hold out my hand to him.

He hesitates, reaches for me, then seems to change his mind at the last minute. He straightens, turns and walks off toward the house.

I stare after him. Anger pulses through me. "Don't turn your back on me, you motherfucker."

He pauses, turns to glare at me over his shoulder. "You may have fucked yours, but I never did."

Rage fills my head. My vision tunnels. I stagger to my feet, then rush him.

He turns back, lowers his head and charges. We meet in the middle. Or rather, his head connects with my middle. The breath rushes out of me. Pain coils out from where he head-butted me. I stagger back as he punches me in the side, and the other, follows with an upper cut. He raises his fist again and I catch the hit on my arm. Throw up my other arm to deflect the next, then rear back and manage to land one in his solar plexus.

I am going to lose; doesn't mean I have to roll over and play dead. If I did that, asshole would suspect me anyway. No, I am going to push back now. I swing again, plant one on his shoulder, then his side, then the other. He punches up, catches me under the chin. I stumble back, and he raises his fist. This time, there is no pretending. I know he's going to knock me down and I am ready. I glare at him, head on, wait for his fist to land, then he straightens.

He stands there panting, his chest rising and falling in tandem with mine. Sweat drips down his torso and mine. My chin thrums, my shoulder protests. Blood drips from my cut, onto my chest.

He straightens, his glare intensifies, then without a word, he pivots and walks off.

Saint glares at me, before he turns and follows.

Damian jerks his chin at me.

Arpad walks up to me, holds up his fist. "Good fight."

I frown.

"Go on, man," he urges, and I fist bump him. "Like old times, huh?" he mutters. "Good to have you back, Baron."

A hot sensation stabs at my chest. He turns, stalks off as Weston approaches me. "Let's get you cleaned up."

Ten minutes later, I wince as Weston stitches me up in one of the spare bedrooms that he's taken over as his temporary surgery.

"Shit, I need a drink."

"You do know it's all a myth...right?"

"What?" I scowl, then grimace when a pulse of pain radiates out from the cut. "If you're talking about me, then I am legend, of course, when it comes to fights."

"I don't know, man. The last time I saw you fighting the Bratva, you lost."

In more ways than he'll ever know. I fold my fingers into fists. "I definitely need a drink."

"Having alcohol doesn't really help numb the pain," Weston mutters. "It's a myth propagated by Hollywood that the whole world has bought into."

"What-bloody-ever," I mutter, "I could do with some whiskey right now."

"Here." Arpad ambles in with a bottle and three glasses. He tops up the glasses, hands one over to me, then sets one aside for Doc, before turning a chair to straddle it.

"So, you came back, eh?" He raises his glass at me.

I glower at him, then throw back my liquor. The alcohol burns its way down. It hits my stomach and heat radiates out from the impact.

"And you got married." I hold out my glass; he tops me up again. This time I hold up my glass, "Congratulations, man."

"Yeah." He grins and his entire face lights up.

"Whoa." I stare at him. "I take it, you're happy?"

"Delirious." He laughs. Asshole fucking laughs.

"Shit," I mutter. "You really do love her."

"I do." He chuckles. "It shows, eh?"

"Like a neon light," Weston says from next to me.

"Is that a subtle barb, Doc?" Arpad smirks. "Because I recall a time, not too long ago, when you walked around wearing a grin that stretched from ear to ear, right after you wedded a certain pastry chef."

"No, I didn't," he mutters.

"You did." Arpad laughs.

"I was merely on top of the world after snatching up the feistiest, sassiest, sexiest woman alive."

"Hey," Arpad scowls, "that was supposed to be my dialogue."

Weston leans back. "There. All done."

I touch my forehead and pin-pricks of pain radiate out from the touch. Nothing I can't handle.

"Once the endorphins wear off, the pain's gonna kick in some more."

I nod.

He writes out a prescription, hands it over. "Take the antibiotics to prevent infection. Keep the wound dry."

I stare at him.

"You know the drill, of course." His gaze narrows.

I tilt my head. "I don't know what you mean."

"Hmph." He scowls. "Wherever you've been, whatever you've been up to is not my concern...Actually, strike that." He shrugs. "It is my concern, as a friend. But as a doctor, it's clear to me that this isn't the first time you've been hurt, so, you don't get to hide from me, pal."

I merely arch an eyebrow, wince when my hurt forehead protests.

He blows out a breath. "Have it your way, but your scars don't lie." He points to the evidence on my shoulders and my back. "They tell me everything that you won't," he adds.

I bark out a laugh. "I leave six boys who don't know their heads from their arses and come back to six men who have their heads up their arses."

"Poetic." Arpad nods. "What have you been up to these last few years, anyway?"

"Hold on," Damian stalks in, "I want to listen to this as well."

"It's not fucking story time," I growl.

"Oh, I don't know, I could do with a bedtime story." Weston tops me off, then Arpad, before handing the bottle to Damian.

He fills up his glass. "Should we toast?"

"No," I snap.

"Yes," Arpad counters.

"Definitely." Damian raises his glass. "To old friends."

"To new memories," Weston drawls.

"You mean new mammaries, don't you?" I mutter.

He stares at me. "Only one set of mammaries for me, ol' sport." He winks. "And don't talk about my wife that way."

I blink. Shit, things really have changed and I've missed it all. Missed my friends growing into men, missed how they'd met their women, missed how they'd become more grounded, more serious, more stable. There is a contentedness to them that... I don't miss at all. No, of course, not.

"Right." I raise my glass in his direction. "I apologize."

"Accepted." He swigs back his drink. "Speaking of, I need to—"

The door is pushed open and Ava tumbles in. Hair flowing to her waist, flushed cheeks, bright eyes, her gaze finds mine, unerringly, connects and holds.

The breath rushes out of me. I stare back, rake my gaze from the purple tips of her hair, to the bag she has clutched to her side, to the pointed, purple tips of her boots, then back to her face. "What are you doing here?"

8

Ava

He glares at me. I take in his broad shoulders, the acres of cut muscle, the corrugated abs, the concave stomach, the jeans that cling to his powerful thighs. He shifts his position and I jerk my chin up, and spot the new stitches on his forehead. I draw in a breath. "You're hurt?" I take a step toward him and he freezes.

"Are you okay?"

"Don't I look okay?" he growls.

"Uh, you look a bit beat up, to be honest."

"A bit?" Weston snorts and Baron sets his jaw.

"Why did you come?" He scowls.

"Hello to you too," I quip as I walk inside the room. Four sets of eyes follow me. "Isla told me you were hurt, so..." I toss my hair over my shoulder. What the hell am I doing here, anyway? I'd heard her say that Baron was down and something inside of me had pushed me to his side. I'd grabbed a cab—a freaking expensive ride which had cost me nearly forty pounds—gah! And made it here in record time, and the arse that he is, he's glowering at me like he's displeased about seeing me.

"Well, as you can see, I am fine," Baron snaps.

"And in your usual growly-pants mood," I mutter.

"Growly-pants?" He growls—no surprise there—then frowns. "What does that mean?"

"She means you're being a bitch." Weston rises to his feet. "And in all honesty, I agree."

"You stay out of this," I say at the same time as Baron.

Weston looks between us. A speculative look comes into his eyes. My cheeks heat. I know what he's thinking. He's seen me with Ed, and now, here I am checking up on Baron. Hell, the questions I see on his face. I have the same ones for myself. Only, I don't have the answers either.

Weston opens his mouth as if to say something, then shuts it.

"What?" Baron snaps. "Why don't you spit it out already?"

Weston scowls at Baron. "I hope you guys know what you are doing," he mutters.

"Why don't you stay out of this?" Baron glowers.

Weston bares his teeth. "Surely, you know that being part of the Seven means we are always up in each other's business?"

"Don't remind me." Baron rubs the back of the neck. "And you guys blame me for staying away for all these years?"

"You're back though, Baron," Weston's frown deepens, "which means, you need to play by the rules."

"As if any of you guys did?" Baron mutters. Weston opens his mouth and Baron raises his hand. "Stuff it," he barks. "Honestly, Wes, back the fuck up already."

"See?" I stab my finger at Baron, "See what I mean? Growly-pants. Definitely growly-pants."

He whips his head around and his gaze narrows. A vein throbs at his temple. "I don't need you here, either," he snaps.

"Too bad, I am here already." I move further into the room and the other men rise to their feet as one.

"Uh, I think Amelie's calling me." Weston places his glass down on the table with a thump.

"Yeah, me too. I mean, not Amelie, but Julia." Damian turns to me. "Hey, Ava. How's it going?"

"I'm good." I smile brightly at him and another growl rumbles from the asshole still sitting.

"I didn't see Julia on the way in," I say.

"Oh, she's not here." Damian smiles. "She's, uh, been a little under the weather."

"Is she okay?" I purse my lips. "Maybe it's the flu; everyone's been getting it."

Damian flushes. I blink. Uh, strange... Didn't think these men could look uncomfortable if they tried. Apparently, I was wrong.

"Yeah, she's good." Damian coughs. "All good."

"You won't be if you stare at her for much longer," Baron mutters.

"Whoa." I turn my head to scowl at him. "That wasn't very nice. You should apologize."

"Yeah," Damian smirks, "apologize, asshole."

Baron's jaw hardens. I frown at him, and he blows out a breath. "I apologize," he finally says.

"See, that wasn't so bad." I blink my eyelids at him. He lowers his chin, and his lips twist. My stomach jumps in response. Shit, that's hot. That mean look he has going there... It's potent and sexy and dangerous. My panties dampen. I twist my fingers into the material of my bag, hold his gaze.

Weston swoops up the soiled cotton, and the bandages. He thrusts them into a plastic bag. Then pulls off his gloves and deposits those too. He rises to his feet, grabs that bag in one hand, his doctor's bag with the other. "Right-o. I'll see you folks later." He walks toward the door, closing one eye as he passes me.

Damian nods at Baron, smiles at me. Baron frowns and Damian gives him the bird before sauntering out.

"Guess I'd better get going too." Arpad glances between us, then places his glass down on the table. He comes toward me, grabs my shoulders and kisses me on both cheeks.

Baron makes that growling noise again, deep in his throat. Arpad chuckles. "You take care, Ava."

He steps back, touches a finger to his forehead. "See you, Lieutenant."

I whip my head around in his direction. "Lieutenant?" I frown. "Did you serve in the army?"

Baron stares at Arpad. "How did you know?" he finally asks.

"You didn't think we'd have let you go without finding a way of keeping tabs on you." Arpad half smiles. "We lost your trail after you were discharged."

"Discharged?" I glance between them. "When were you discharged?"

"Two years ago," Baron mutters. "I was wounded in battle, then captured by the enemy."

"Wounded? Captured?" I feel the blood drain from my face. "How long were you—?"

"Six months." He murmurs.

The blood drains from my face, "You were a POW for six months?"

His features harden.

Behind me, Arpad walks to the exit. "I'll let you two catch up." I hear him leave, and the door closes behind him.

In the silence that descends, I am suddenly aware that we are alone. I glance around the room, at the view outside the window, then down at my feet. Anywhere, but at the man glowering at me from the chair.

I shuffle over to the chair Arpad just vacated... It happens to be the chair farthest from Baron. I sink into it, place my bag on the floor, then link my fingers together. Why had I come? Why did I feel compelled to get here? I should have gone home... Nah, I'd have never been able to do that. Not after how he's become a constant in my life. In just one week, he's become a stabilizing influence. Like Edward had been? Same, but different. Ed had been a strike to the heart...but Baron... He is chipping away at the barriers I've built around myself since I was a child.

I'd been overweight and way too conscious about it. I'd always felt like I stood out. It's why I'd retreated into myself, found solace in music and books. It's why dancing is so important to me—a way to embrace myself, my imperfections, to be free of judgment. When I dance, there is no me... There is only the rhythm and the ability to get lost in it. To forget about the world and all of my worries, to transcend to a space and time where there is only the now.

The hair on the back of my neck prickles. I glance up to find his gaze trained on me. Those cold blue eyes seem to have lightened in color until they resemble chips of ice. A frost that could creep into my blood, cut through the bone and change me forever.

I shiver.

"Are you cold?" He frowns.

"N...no."

I peer at him from under my eyelashes, take in the hard planes of his face, the square jaw, that thick upper lip, the puffy lower lip that I want to dig my teeth into.... What the hell? Why is it that every time I set eyes on him, my intentions always go there?

I glance away. "I shouldn't have come."

"No, you shouldn't have."

I stiffen.

"But I am glad you did."

I jerk my head toward him again. "You are?"

He surveys me a little longer, then nods. "Sure, this makes my job easier."

I snap my shoulders back, rise to my feet, "If you are going to insult me —"

He blows out a breath, raises a hand. "Sorry, that was out of line."

I stay where I am, watch him as he seems to struggle with some emotion. Then, he points to a corner of the room. "Hand me that shirt, will you?"

I walk toward the bed, where someone has flung down his shirt. Pick it up, and the scent of him is suddenly there. Dark, edgy, masculine, laced with that scent of crisp mountain breeze and pine trees that I've come to associate with him. I walk over, holding it out. He reaches for it and our fingers touch. Goosebumps sizzle up my skin. I retract my hand, and glance up to find that he's watching me carefully. Did he feel it too? He must have. A pulse tics at the corner of his jaw. He shoves one arm into his shirt, reaches for the other and winces. Sweat beads his forehead. "Fuck," he growls under his breath.

"Let me," I offer before I can think otherwise. Stepping into the space between his legs, I lower the shirt on his shoulder to give it enough slack, then reach for the other sleeve. I hold it down so he can wrestle his arm into it, then slide it over his shoulder.

The tips of my breasts graze his chest, and his body goes solid. His shoulder muscles tense. A cloud of heat seems to spool off of him and slam into my chest. I swallow. My nipples harden until they throb. My toes curl. Moisture pools between my thighs.

"Ava," he whispers.

"Y...yeah."

"You're stepping on my foot."

"Oh." I gulp. "OH."

I glance down to find that, sure enough, my one booted foot is squarely on his much bigger, broader, wider, also-booted-but-in-Doc Martens foot.

I step off of him, backing away.

The oxygen rushes into my lungs and I gulp it down. My head spins. It's only because I'd forgotten to breathe there for a few seconds. That man... Holy hell... Standing close to him was like being faced with a furnace... Or being at the edge of a tornado. Or both. Throw in some thunderstorms, and hail... Well, add in all the fury of nature and you'll understand what I mean. It was like being on the edge of an incline, glancing down at the slope that led to a crazy jump, and knowing that once you set down the course there was no turning back. I stumble back, hit my chair and sit down again.

"I... I guess... I should leave." I clear my throat.

"You should."

I sneak a peek at him, take in the shirt that he's not yet buttoned. The column of his throat, the smooth expanse of ripped abs, the smattering of hair between his pecs. My stomach trembles and my thighs clench. I grip the arms of my chair.

"But you won't," he rumbles.

"What?" I frown at him. "What do you mean?"

"You know what I mean."

"N...no." I fix my gaze on him. "No, I don't."

"You do." His lips curl. Oh, Hell, why does his smirk have to be that hot? That sexy. That mean...with a dollop of cruelty.

Argh. Stop it. Stop eating him up with your eyes, bitch. And just over a week ago, you'd been salivating over a hot priest. The one who ran out and left you on your knees...literally. Ugh. I've had enough of the Seven. I should get out of here. I should. I push my heels into the floor, rising up to my feet.

He follows my every move; the skin around his eyes creases. He watches as I take a step forward, angle my body. I should turn. I should go. I swallow, put one foot in front of the other. I reach him, pause in front of him. His gaze heats. He tips his chin up, leans back in his chair, then he widens the space between his thighs.

Don't look down, don't. I lower my gaze, take in the thick bulge outlined at his crotch. Instantly, my core clenches. Moisture pools between my legs.

I swallow, rake my gaze up his chest, to his face, to where his blue eyes peruse me with frank curiosity. He's waiting to see what I'll do next. Hell, I'm waiting to see what I'll do next.

I shift my weight from foot to foot, twist my fingers together in front of me. What do you want? What do you want to do? Do you want to stay? Do you want to go? Fuck it. I should leave. I turn away. That's when he grabs my wrist.

9

Baron

What the hell are you doing? Let her go. Unhand her, you bastard. She's not yours. She's his. She belongs to a man you've have avoided for more than half your life. So why the hell had he called me and asked me to take care of her while he's away? Knowing Edward, it's because he's testing me. But why is he doing that? Why go to this extent to put me in temptation's way?

Why test me in the first place, when he knows the first chance I get, I'll betray him?

I tug, and she stumbles back. Her hair flows about my face and I inhale. The scent of jasmine and raspberries, warm, sweet, and lush. Like her curves. Like the flesh between her legs, which would be wet and throbbing and willing. If I reached around and cupped her pussy, would she arch back and into me? Would she part her legs and allow me full access to her slit—to the cradle of civilization that exists between her full thighs?

A trembling seizes her. Her hips twitch and her waist shimmies. The dancer in her emerges, takes over, as if she senses that she is in danger.

I tug again and she turns toward me, her tiny waist at the level of my eyes. I release her hand, only to plant my palms on her hips. She shudders. Her breathing speeds up. I lower my chin, bury my nose in her crotch. A moan bleeds from her lips.

I draw in a deep breath and the scent of her ripens, the sweet scent of her arousal filling my lungs. The blood rushes to my groin and my dick throbs against the constraints of my jeans. I nuzzle into the apex of her leggings. She groans. I tighten my hold on her, tilt my chin up and flatten my face against her pussy. A whine trembles up her throat.

"Baron," she whispers, "please."

The sound of my name from her lips, her pleading tone... All of it rushes to my head. I close my mouth around her core and she hisses. I fasten my teeth around the fabric of her leggings, and through it, on the swollen nub of her clit. She cries out, digs her fingers into my hair as I begin to fuck her pussy with my mouth, through the barrier of her leggings. She parts her legs, gives me more access, and I slide my hands down to cup her generous hips. "F-u-c-k." I squeeze her flesh and she shivers.

I tilt her hips, opening her up further as I continue to suck on her, eat her out through the bloody cloth that covers the singularly most delicious, most erotic part of her. Her entire body jolts. She tugs on my hair and my scalp tingles. Tendrils of pleasure flash down my spine. My cock thickens even more and I thrust my tongue into her fabric outlined slit. She cries out again, digs her fingers deeper into my hair, thrusts her hips forward and into my face. I bite down on her pussy once more and her body trembles. Through the fabric of her leggings, I scent her arousal deepen. I glance up at her and command, "Come." And she shatters. Her eyes roll back in her head, she cries out, then slumps against me. I cup one palm against her butt, bring the other down between her thighs. I grind my heel into her clit, massage her pussy as she trembles and shudders in the aftermath of the orgasm.

"Oh, my god," she mumbles. "Oh, god."

"God has nothing to do with it." I lean back as she opens her heavy eyelids and stares down at me.

She opens and shuts her mouth, then shakes her head as if to clear it. "Did I...did I come?"

I set my lips, "It would seem that way." I set her away from me, then rise to my feet.

"I'll bring you home."

"Wait, what?" She blinks, sways a little and I grip her shoulder until she seems steadier on her feet. Then I step back. I smooth down her sweatshirt, so it covers her luscious hips, and hides the apex of her thighs.

"What are you doing?" She scowls down at herself.

"Making sure you are covered."

"Covered?" She stares a second longer, then color flushes her cheeks. She glances up at my face. "Oh."

I button up my shirt, then move around and past her. "Coming?"

"I already did."

A chuckle barks out from me. I turn and level a gaze at her. "Sassy, huh?"

She tips up her chin. "You have no idea." She marches up to me, then plants her hands on her hips. "What was that about?"

"What was what about?"

"That," she stabs her thumb over her shoulder, "whatever that was."

"I was simply proving a point."

"And what would that be?"

"That I can make you come"

"So can I," she tosses her hair back from her face, "make you come, I mean."

"Not interested."

"Is that right?" She closes the distance between us, then plants her palm on my swollen crotch. "That's not what this feels like."

"It's a normal reaction to what happened; doesn't mean I am going to follow through with it."

"Why not?" She squeezes down and my pulse rate speeds up.

"Don't do it," I growl.

"Worried you won't be able to hold out?"

"The only thing you need to be worried about is saving yourself," I warn.

"What the hell does that mean?" She massages my cock and the blood empties to my groin.

"It means," I grip her hand and push it into my crotch, "you don't want to do this."

"I do."

"No, you don't."

"Why not?" She scowls, then slides her hand down to cup my balls. "You want this, so why won't you let it happen?"

"Because I made a promise."

She swallows. "To Edward?"

"And to myself."

"And what promise is that?"

"That I'll never hurt you; that I will take care of you while he is gone."

"What if I want you to hurt me?" She steps closer and my throat dries. My balls tighten; the band around my chest constricts until I can't breathe.

"What if this is how I want you to take care of me?" she whispers.

Her green eyes dilate until there's only a circle of green around the pupils. I drag in a breath, and fuck me, but I can smell the sweet scent of her arousal. Ripe and luscious and ready for the picking. My throat dries. I squeeze her hand, then pull it away and to the side.

"You'll have to find someone else to scratch that itch." I make sure to curl my lips. "I am not going to settle for Edward's seconds." I say this despite my indisputable hunger to dive in for a second helping.

Her gaze narrows. Color flushes her cheeks. She pulls her hand from my hold and brings it up, but I am already moving. I grab her wrist, wrench her hand behind her. The action bows her spine, thrusts out her breasts until they are flattened against my chest. The shape of her curves, those hard nipples that dig into my front. Fuck me. My thighs go hard and my dick thickens. I tighten my hold, pull her closer...closer...dip my chin until my mouth is poised over hers. Until we are sharing breath.

Until I can see the freckles that dot her cheeks, and fuck me, if I don't want to lick her right there.

She flicks out her tongue to wet her lips and my gaze darts to her mouth. Fuck me, but I want to kiss her. I need to taste her. Just once. I want to swipe my tongue across that honeyed mouth and swallow her up completely. The blood pounds at my temple and my heart hammers in my chest. I lower my mouth to hers.

10

Ava

His gaze narrows and his chest rises up and then down.

I swallow, bring down my eyelids, then part my lips, waiting...waiting. He releases me so fast that I stumble back. He brushes past me, heads for the door and stalks out. Shit, shit, shit. What the hell was that? Why the hell had I come onto him so strongly? It's like when I am with him, I lose track of who I am.

How had I acted so wanton? How could I have thrown myself at him, so quickly after Edward? This... Whatever it is between us, is doing my head in.

I march down the steps, head to where I'd deposited my coat and bag in the living room of the town house.

As soon as I walk in, Isla rushes up to me. "Are you okay?" she whispers. "Yeah... No." I shake my head. "I don't know."

I shrug into my coat and grab my bag, then glance past her to where Summer is watching me with sympathetic eyes.

"Want to talk about it?" she asks.

"Maybe later?" I half smile.

"Hang in there." She jerks her chin toward the hallway. "So, you and Baron?" She wrinkles her forehead. "Everything okay there?"

Ha, if she only knew.

"It's fine." I flash her a smile. "I'd better go; he's going to give me a ride home." I turn past her and head for the hallway when she calls out.

"Hang in there, Ava, it'll get better."

I laugh, "Nothing can make this better."

"Don't give up too quickly."

I pause and stare at her over my shoulder.

"What are you trying to say?"

She comes toward me, "That things are never what they seem with the Seven."

"That's putting it mildly." I bite the inside of my cheeks. "It's just... I feel..."

"Confused? Conflicted?" Isla pipes up.

"All of it, and more." I squeeze my eyes shut. "Everything is happening so fast, and I can't keep up."

"Maybe you are resisting too much?" she replies.

I open my eyes, scowl at her, then turn to Summer, "Do you feel that way, too? Do you think that I am fighting the inevitable?"

"If it feels this difficult, maybe."

"But...but..." I grip my bag at my side. "Surely, it can't be right that..."

"That you are attracted to Baron?"

I flush.

"I thought I was attracted to Edward."

"Who's not here anymore." Isla taps her chin "But Baron is."

"Doesn't mean I have to give in to the chemistry between us."

"So, there is chemistry between you two?" Isla asks.

"You don't know the half of it. It's like when we are in the same room... It's—"

"Madam." A plummy voice interrupts. "Mr. Baron's asked me to convey to Miss Ava that he doesn't like to be kept waiting."

"Of course, he doesn't." I turn and huff at the butler who stands by the doorway to the hall. "You can tell him to—"

"Yes Ma'am?" he says politely. Bet if I told him to tell Baron to go sod himself, he'd convey the message in that polite, affable tone too. I blow out a breath, "Doesn't matter."

I turn to the girls. "I gotta go."

"This conversation is not over," Isla warns.

"Yeah, yeah." I turn to leave and Summer calls after me, "Join us here on Friday night? Just us girls."

I raise my hand as I follow the butler out of the house. He walks me down the steps, holds the door open for me.

"Thank you." I smile at him as I clamber inside the SUV.

He shuts the door, and I stare ahead as Baron pulls out onto the road. We don't speak for the duration of the ride. When we reach my place, I push open the door and am out of there as soon as he parks. Gah, that was the most uncomfortable twenty minutes of my life, ever. I flounce across the sidewalk, up the garden path, reach the front door and am about to open it, then stop. I glance over my shoulder to find the SUV still parked there. Is he going to spend the night in the car again? Of course, he is. Damn him, and after everything that happened earlier... The best thing to do would be to let him spend the night in the car. Again.

I bow my head. Don't do it. Don't do it. Damn it. I turn and march back to the car, then around to the driver's side. He lowers his window as I reach it, then arches an eyebrow at me.

"You may as well come inside the house."

He glares back.

"I mean, come on. It's stupid that you spend your nights here in the car, when there's a perfectly good couch in my living room."

His forehead wrinkles. "I don't think that's a good idea."

"Sod that." I scoff. "I can keep my hands off you, if you can do the same."

He scowls.

"And after your earlier demonstration, clearly you can restrain yourself."

His jaw tics. His nostrils flare and he seems to be on the verge of saying something, then seems to change his mind. He rolls up his window, pushes open the door. I step back, walk over to the house, and unlocking the door, step inside. Placing my bag on the table in the hallway, I shrug off my coat. Then, grabbing my bag, I head to my bedroom. I deposit my bag on the side table, grab a pillow and a cover from the closet, then walk into the living room. Ignoring his bulk looming by the window, I deposit the bedclothes on the couch.

"There's only one bathroom," I nod toward the bedroom, "if you want to use it, while I get some water to drink?"

Without waiting for his reply, I walk toward the kitchen, drink some water, then grab a couple more bottles of water. By the time I reach the living room, he's seated on the couch. He's removed his shoes and socks, and as I place the bottle of water on the coffee table, I notice his bare feet. Large feet. Blunt cut toenails. I swallow. Suddenly my chest feels too tight. Heat flushes my skin. Moisture laces my core. I straighten, "Goodnight," I mutter, as I head for my room.

"Goodnight, Ava." His low rumble courses down my spine, igniting pin-pricks of lust in its wake. Oh, Hell. This is bad. A very, very bad idea. I shut the door, then hesitate. Should I lock it? If I did, he'd hear me lock it. Not that I don't trust him to not come in here. Question is, do I trust myself not to go to him at night? Gah! Get a grip. Think of Edward. Ed. The man you've been masturbating to until a week ago. The asshole priest who broke his vows for you. Then left you. I draw in a breath, shrug out of my clothes, and toss them over a chair. Then, pulling on a camisole, I slide into bed. I can't stop the yawn that cracks my jaws. I shut off the lamp and am asleep as soon as my head hits the pillow.

His scent reaches me first. Cut grass and mint. I watch as his powerful shoulders cut through the water. He swims across the length of the swimming pool, reaches the side and hauls himself up. The water sluices from his shoulders...as he swings his legs over the side. His thigh muscles ripple, his concave stomach tenses, and he straightens. He walks toward me, his huge shoulders blocking out the light of the sun, the rest of the scene behind him. His chest planes flex and the tendons of his beautiful throat move as he reaches his hand out to me. I rise to my feet, move to him, arm outstretched. Our fingers connect. Heat vibrates up my arm and my stomach muscles clench. He pulls me to him and my chest connects with his wet torso. A giggle bursts from my throat and an answering smile curves from his lips. His amber eyes gleam, then he dips his head, closes his beautiful lips over mine. Moisture pools in my core. My heart begins to race. He thrusts his tongue inside my mouth, swipes his tongue across my teeth. My belly trembles. He scoops me up in his arms, walks over to a deck chair and lowers me onto it. He follows, covers my body with his, and the weight of him presses me down. My nipples tighten and my thighs spasm. He peers into my eyes, that golden gaze of his lit from within. He cups my cheek, touches his forehead to mine. "I need you," he whispers. "I want you. I can't live without you. You're what grounds me to this life. Without you, I am no one."

I frown up at him, reach to smooth out the wrinkles on his forehead. "Edward I—"

"Shh." He lowers his head, brushes his lips over mine. "Don't speak," he whispers. "Just feel." He pushes his hips into mine and that hard length of his stabs into my core. "See what you do to me, Eve?"

"Ed," I swallow, "why did you leave?"

"It's the hardest thing I have ever done. I couldn't be with you, Eve. I wasn't good for you, in the state I was. But I didn't want you to be alone."

"You didn't?"

"No." He kisses my eyelids, the tip of my nose, my mouth. "I couldn't be there for you, so I did the next best thing. I asked Baron to take care of you."

"Baron?" I frown. "What do you mean, Ed."

"You'll know when you feel it."

"I hate riddles," I pout.

"And I love you."

My eyelids snap open. I stare into the darkness. What was that? What a weird dream. Why had I dreamed that? I turn over on my side, throw my leg over my pillow. My core clenches. The remnants of the dream cling to my skin; the scent of him still envelops me. The strength of him, as if imprinted into my muscle memory. The way he'd covered my body with his, how that thick length of his had pushed into my core. I slide my fingers down to cup my pussy through my panties. Shit! The fabric is soaked. I dig the heel of my hand into the fabric and massage my clit. Pinpricks of pleasure shoot out from the contact. My breasts seem to swell, and a groan wells from my lips. What am I doing? What is wrong with me? I thrust my hips against my hand, wanting so much to shove my fingers inside my own pussy. But it wouldn't be enough. I need something bigger, thicker...wider...ugh! No choice. I reach for the drawer on my bedstand, when a groan reaches me.

I freeze. Wait, arm outstretched. Am I dreaming? No, I am awake... What was that? I focus on the darkness. Wait... Only silence reaches me. I lower my hand and my fingertips brush the handle of the drawer when another groan filters through from the direction of the doorway. No, I definitely hadn't imagined it. I swing my legs over the side of the bed and straighten. Another groan, this one more strident, more urgent. I rush to the door, open it and step out into the living room.

Moonlight filters in through the crack between the drapes. I can make out the figure on the couch as he moves, thrashes around. I head toward Baron, stand over him as his features contort. Sweat gleams on his forehead, across his shoulders—his bare shoulders. Shit, of course he'd taken off his shirt before falling asleep. The cover gleams against the burnished brown of his torso. The fabric dips around his waist as he flings his arm over his forehead and groans. Moisture glistens on his cheek. Wait. Is he crying? Are those tears? Can't be. But why not? Can't grown men cry in their sleep?

His shoulders bunch and the tendons of his throat move as he swallows. Then his fingers bunch on the sheet, his knuckles white as he grips the fabric. Another low groan rumbles from him and my heart stutters. I lean forward and touch his shoulder. His eyes fly open. The next second, the world tilts. I am on my back on the floor and Baron's fingers are around my neck.

11

Baron

"I am going to kill you," I growl. "I am going to tear you from limb to limb for what you did to me. Get your hands off of me, you filthy bastard." I squeeze down with my fingers, intent only on cutting off his air supply. If I could only snuff out his life, everything would be so much better. If I could only—

"Baron," her voice chokes. "Please...please..."

All thought empties from my head. I glance down at her delicate features, the auburn hair about her shoulders, her gaze wide, the green pupils dilated with—fear. Her pink rosebud-mouth open, as she chokes, and tries to draw breath.

"No." I release her and she coughs, draws in a breath, then another. She brings her fingers to her neck, presses her palms to the skin there. Her chest heaves as she coughs again.

"Fuck," I growl. "Fucking fuck." I scramble away from her, hit the side of the settee. "Fuck, I am so sorry, Ava. Fuck, fuck, fuck." I bury my fingers in my hair and tug. "I am so fucking sorry. What the hell is wrong with me?" I lower my hands and stare at my palms. "I almost killed you. You are not safe around me. This is why I should have slept in the car. I shouldn't be allowed anywhere near you. What the hell had I been thinking, allowing myself near you—?"

"Baron!" Her voice reaches me.

I ignore it. "I should have shot myself a long time ago. I am not fit to survive. I shouldn't have accepted Edward's call, shouldn't have come here in the first place."

"Baron, stop." She sits up, and crawls over to me. "It wasn't your fault. You were sleeping. You didn't know."

"That's not an excuse." I stare at my palms, the lines that run across the width. "I could have killed you, Ava."

"You wouldn't have."

"You don't know that."

"Of course, I do. Protecting is in your DNA; it's woven into every cell of your body. Someone like you, who would give your life for another, would never kill."

"That's where you are wrong." I glance up at her. "I have killed more people than you can imagine."

"That was war, you didn't have a choice."

"You always have a choice." I fold my fingers together. "I just chose to ignore it."

"You did what was right," she insists. "You did what you were told."

"You know what the worst part of it is?"

She shakes her head.

"I enjoyed it. I enjoyed killing."

She pales.

"I was so good at it, they pulled me off the frontlines."

"They did?"

I nod. "Turns out, there's one thing I am better at than killing, and that's torturing the enemy for their secrets."

"Torturing?" She swallows. "You tortured people?"

I peer into her features. "That was my specialty, you know?"

"What do you mean?" She frowns.

"That was my job, in the army. To torture enemy soldiers for information. I was so good at it that they gave me a fucking medal for it." I laugh. "They didn't know that the only time the voices in my head fell silent was when I was sussing out their weaknesses and using them against them."

She sits back on her haunches. "You were still doing your job."

I laugh. "You don't understand." I lower my hands to my side, "I fucking stood over grown men, used their fears and their life stories against them. I knew exactly how to take their worst terrors and deploy them to find weaknesses in their psyches. I knew how to break them down and rebuild them again."

"You...you brainwashed them?"

My lips twist. "I made them into weapons who could be redeployed undercover. I made them believe in their new identities enough for them to be sent back to their own countries. I sent them to their inevitable deaths."

"And in doing so, you helped many more lives back home."

I frown. "You think you know everything, don't you? You think you can view me with the same fucking rose-colored lenses as you viewed Edward?"

Her lips thin. "I didn't have to view him through anything. He was... good, inside and out."

"Oh?" I look her up and down. "And what about you, Ava? Was it good for you with him?"

"I am not answering that." She folds her arms across her chest. "You're hurting, I understand that. Doesn't mean you need to insult Edward or what...we had."

"And what did you have?" I sneer. "A few fucks before he left? The man was so afraid of what he felt for you, he couldn't even stay to face the consequences of his actions."

"He...he needed time to sort things out."

"He's so weak, he couldn't even stick to his chosen path. He walked away from the very profession that he claimed meant everything to him."

"He did it for me," she snarls. "Everything he did, he did it for me."

"He did it for himself." I allow my grin to widen. "You were just an excuse. Just easy pussy that he couldn't resist, he—"

She swoops out her hand and I grab her wrist.

"Don't even think about it," I warn.

"And what will you do, huh?" She holds my gaze. "You going to torture me like you did those prisoners? You going to pull your gun on me? Or better still," she reaches for my other hand and brings it to her neck, "you going to finish what you started? You going to choke me, Baron?"

I place my fingers in the exact same marks where my fingers had rested a few minutes ago. "Do you want me to...?" I wind my fingers around her neck. "Do you want me to choke you, Ava? Is that what this is about?"

"No." She swallows and the action sends vibrations shuddering across my palm. My dick twitches. Fuck, what the hell is wrong with me? Why does her fear, her wide-eyed gaze, the way her breathing speeds up—why does all of it only arouse me more?

"You're lying." I lower my voice to a hush, "You want me to hurt you, don't you? You want me to show you how it could be to walk that thin path between pleasure and pain."

"No." She shakes her head.

"You want me to tip you over the edge so you can forget him, so you can discover parts of you which you don't even know exist."

Her chest rises and falls. "You're wrong." She licks her lips; her gaze darts to the side then back at me.

I rise up on my knees, and loom over her. "You want me to fuck you."

"No," she tips up her chin, "that's not true."

"You're right."

She frowns. "I am?"

I lower my head until our eyelashes tangle. "You want me to not just fuck you, you want me to demolish you and build you back again as I did those prisoners."

Her lips part. The breath whooshes out of her, "No, I don't."

"You do."

I rake my gaze across her features. "Even now, you're imagining how it would be if I were to push you down on your front and mount you from behind. How it would feel to have my cock deep inside your most forbidden places. How you want me to remove every single imprint he left on your body and replace it with mine. How you want to be commanded, to be subjugated, to be told what to do every moment we are together. You want me to take your choices and give you a space where you don't need to think. Where you don't need to worry about the world outside. Where it's just you and me and our shared filthy passion. Where you could ask me to do every single depraved thing you ever dreamed of and things you didn't even know were possible. Where you'd spend the hours in a state of constant arousal, until you are so out of your mind with wanting that you'd take my cock every which way I wanted to give it to you. Where you'd want me to tear into your pussy, fuck your arse, take me down that gorgeous throat of yours. Where you'd want me to use you any way I desire. Where you'd be nothing but my little fuck toy, to wrench every last pleasure from your body until you are delirious and ready to climax over and over again...only..."

"Only?" She whispers.

"Only I wouldn't let you come."

I release her and she shudders.

I rise to my feet, then jerk my chin toward her bedroom door. "Go."

12

Ava

"What do you mean, go?" I stare at him.

"It's English. You do understand English, don't you?"

He sits down on the couch, then lies back and closes his eyes.

The bastard closes his eyes, as if this is the end of the discussion. Finish. Over. Kaput. What in the ever-lovin' hell is wrong with him? I jump up to my feet. "What do you think you're doing?"

Asshole simply folds his hands behind his neck. His biceps bulge and the planes of his chest undulate. Why the hell does he have to be so hot? Why does he have to be so damn obnoxious? And all those filthy things he said... I don't want him to do that to me... I don't.... Do I? And that dream... What the hell was that about? My subconscious playing tricks on me? Trying to justify why I should let Baron fuck me...when my heart still belongs to Edward. Does it belong to Edward?

I'd known him for such a short period of time. Had barely gotten to know him as a person. You don't need that to know though. When you know, you know...right? That's how Bella had known about Edward from the first moment she'd seen him. And then there was Jacob. Shit, I'd always been obsessed with Edward but a part of me had always wanted Jacob. I'd veered toward Edward because he'd been larger-than-life, all consuming. And...I'd always thought I had to choose. In which case, it was Edward. No brainer. But what if I didn't have to choose. What if... I could have both. First Edward... Then Jacob?

Jesus, I am a slut. That much is clear. And that...is all fiction. This is real life. Where the man I'd fallen for had walked out on me and now there is another man—a hot, sexy, beautifully-sculpted alphahole who is sprawled out on my couch, wearing only a pair of briefs, which ride low on his waist. I drag my gaze down the tented center of his crotch—is that an ongoing phenomenon or just something he sports when around me? And he is attracted to me... Clearly. Which is why he had lashed out at me.

"I know what you are doing," I mutter.

"Oh?" His voice is bored.

"You think you can scare me away by putting all of your thoughts into words? You think you can paint the filthiest picture possible in the hope that it would make me think twice about wanting to be with you? Well, you thought wrong."

"Is that what you think I was doing?" He brings up his other hand to scratch his chest and I shiver. My nerve endings pop. I can't take my gaze off of how he drags his fingertips down his sculpted pecs. Goosebumps rise on my skin. I squeeze my thighs together.

"I know that's what you were doing."

"Go to bed, Ava," he drawls. "You don't want to play with things you have no idea about."

"Then teach me."

He freezes. "Excuse me?"

"You heard me." I walk over to the sofa on my knees. "It's why Edward asked you to take care of me."

He lowers his arm to the side. "You think Edward wanted me to fuck you?"

"Didn't he?"

He glares at me. "You're not thinking straight."

"No, you're not thinking straight." I rise to my feet. "Why would he ask you to watch over me in his absence if it weren't for the fact that he knew you'd be attracted to me?"

"Precisely," he mutters. "He knew I'd be attracted to you, but that I'd never go back on my promise to him."

"What promise?" I frown. "What did he make you promise?"

Baron looks at me then glances away.

Ed wouldn't, would he? "Tell me, Baron," I insist, "what did Edward ask you to promise?"

Baron rubs the back of his neck and a dull headache pounds at my temples, "He asked you not to fuck me, am I right?" I say in a low voice. "He asked you to look after me but not fuck me."

Baron blows out a breath, then straightens his shoulders. "Yeah," he mutters, "he explicitly asked me not to approach you. I was supposed to watch over you, but not reveal my presence."

"But you did."

"And here I am." Baron's lips twist.

"And that's not the first promise you have broken."

His brows draw down. "What was that?"

"I said," I squeeze my fingers together, "that it's not like you've kept all of your promises to him."

"What are you talking about?"

"Uh... You and Edward," I mumble. "Surely, you must have broken your promise to him and the rest of the Seven when you left for the army, so it's not like he'd have expected you to keep this promise. In fact, I'd wager that he fully expected you to break it. Which is why he trusted you to watch over me."

"That's the word though, isn't it? Trust." He sets his jaw. "I am not about to break my word."

"No, but you'll do everything in your power to ensure that I break mine." Not that I had promised anything to Edward, but surely, it is in a rule book somewhere the you can't sleep with a man and then with his best friend/enemy... Or whatever they are to each other...right?

"You're not making any sense." He frowns.

"You're the one not making sense." I throw up my hands. "First, you make me come..."

"I didn't touch you."

"A technicality." I huff. "You made me orgasm through my clothes. It's the same thing."

He drags his gaze down to my core, and his nostrils flare. "Trust me, it's not."

My knees tremble. "Then you throw that filthy dialogue at me, arouse me to fever pitch, then you expect me to walk inside and go to sleep."

"Sounds about right," he grumbles.

"Do you know how...how...frustrated I am right now?"

"That makes two of us," he groans.

"So why can't you just...just...put us both out of this misery?"

"Because," his voice takes on a long-suffering tone, "it's not right."

"Since when do you care about what's right and wrong, huh?"

"Since," his throat moves as he swallows, "since I made the decision to come home."

Home. This city is his home. The Seven are his family and Edward is his friend... And me? What am I in all this? Who am I to Edward? To him? Why do I feel so torn between them when, really, neither of them has done anything to stake his claim on me, or said anything to make me feel that I am special? Well, Edward had. Both when he'd fucked me and in my dreams. And Baron... He's shown through his actions that he feels something for me. But none of that is enough, is it? I need more. I deserve to be shown that I matter... That I am special and important enough for them to change things for me. That they want me more than anything in the world. And until then... I belong to neither. I belong to myself, first and foremost. I can do anything I want, and fuck what either of them thinks about it.

"So, you are here to take care of me, right?"

"Right."

"And watch over me?"

"Mmm...hmmm." He yawns.

"And ensure nothing happens to me?"

He nods slowly.

"And you are not going to touch me because you feel like you owe Edward something?"

A line appears between his eyebrows. "Your point being?"

"Just setting the parameters, that's all." I pivot on my heel and walk toward my bedroom, aware that he's watching my every step.

I give an extra twitch of my butt and hear his sharp inhale. Good. Two can play this game... Or three... Doesn't matter. What's clear is that I am not going to let either of them fuck around with me. I am my own woman. I am strong and independent and worked my ass off to get where I am. It's time I behave like one.

I reach the doorway to my bedroom, then turn. "Goodnight, Baron."

He glares back.

Jerk! Seriously, someone needs to remove that stick, or whatever it is, stuck up his arse.

I step through the door, close it gently, then show him the finger.

"I saw that."

His voice reaches me and I glower at him. Ass. I stick out my tongue, then pivot and head for my bed. I fling myself on it. I must have been more tired than I thought because the next thing I know, it's morning.

I roll out of bed, shrug on my pajamas, then stumble out into the living room. The couch is empty, the cover folded neatly and placed across the pillow. Apparently, that military training is good for something. I walk into the kitchen and the scent of coffee greets me. I go to the coffee maker, pour myself a cup and take a sip. Yum! The man knows how to make coffee.

I walk toward it, place my cup of coffee on the counter and pick up the folded note next to it. The words leap off the paper.

Don't skip your breakfast.

Gah! What the hell? That's it? He didn't even sign it. I mean, there isn't anyone else here who could have left it. But still. I crumple up the paper and am about to throw it away. Instead, I sink down into the chair, smooth it out and stare at the words as I eat.

He'd cooked me an omelet... Still warm. Which means he hadn't left too long ago. How had I not heard him leave? Though, to be fair, once I fall asleep, it's always difficult to wake me up. Had he peeked in on me before he left? Shit, I have to stop that particular fantasy of mine. It's creepy if someone watches you as you sleep. Even more so if it's a man... A hot, sexy, deliciously yummy man with a lot of issues. Boy, does he have issues. Is that why I am attracted to him?

First Edward, now Baron. Between the number of issues, the two of them have, they could keep all the psychologists in London busy. At least, one of them could cook. I finish off the omelet, then drain my cup of coffee. And it isn't because he commanded me to eat. Nope... Nah... I stare at the paper again. Will he return again to use the couch this evening? I hope so. It's the only way I can put the plan I have into action.

Rising, I wash my dishes at the sink, then head for my bedroom. Picking up my phone, I dial Isla's number.

13

Baron

I'd followed Ava as she'd headed from the tube station to her dance studio. Across from me, a couple of boys walked by, smoking. As I watched, one of them kicked the door that led to the dance studio. I pushed open the car door, but by the time I'd rounded the car, they'd already taken off. I'd glanced up and down the road and found no other cars or people. Which isn't unusual in this part of London. Not that London isn't a safe place, in general, but this is one of the shabby chic parts of the East End. It is up and coming, but still rough in parts. Many of the buildings have been converted to either offices or the kind of loft apartments that sell for millions. The remaining apartments are low-cost council housing. There's nothing in between. The extremes are what makes it dangerous.

It's why I'd asked Ava, once again, to move her studio somewhere safer, but she'd declined. Serves me right. I had insulted her pride when I'd criticized her studio, and in front of her friend. Of course, she's not going to back down about it now. Woman is stubborn. It leaves me no choice but to ensure I watch over her as closely as possible to secure her safety. But she is inside the building now. Which means she won't emerge until late evening, once her classes are completed. Luckily, Ava is a creature of habit. I could set my clock by her.

Is she as habitual when it comes to men? Is she as loyal? Does she still have feelings for Edward? Shit. I drag my fingers through my hair. Standing in the middle of the road, contemplating their relationship isn't helping me at all. Nor had the filthy words that I'd spoken to her last night—which, as she'd guessed, I'd done for effect...in the hope of scaring her off. Not that it had worked. It had only served to get her back up. She'd marched into her bedroom, leaving me with a raging boner... One which I'd been sporting since I'd made her come. Fuck. When she'd come apart on my tongue... I swear, I could taste her cum through the fabric of her leggings...and her panties. Assuming she'd been wearing panties... Were they the same ones she'd been wearing when I'd sprung up from my sleep and taken her down?

I could have seriously hurt her... Fuck... See? That's the reason I've imposed this restraint on myself. No, I am doing the right thing keeping away from her. So, why am I still standing here watching the window of her studio like a schmuck? She'll be safe there for a few more hours. I can use that time to pound the frustration out of my system.

I turn back to the SUV, climb inside and ease onto the road. In half an hour, I've reached my destination.

Grabbing my gym bag from the back of the car, I head inside the building. Situated right next to the Dorchester Hotel, in the center of the city, it's prime real estate. If it were converted to flats, it likely would fetch an annual income equivalent to the GDP of a small third-world country. But Jace, the owner and a friend of the Seven, prefers to keep the gym inside intact.

When he'd learned that I'm back in town, he'd reached out to me and offered me the use of the gym, which I had gladly accepted.

I walk up the steps and into the large room with the boxing ring in the center. Walking into the dressing room, I emerge a few minutes later clad in shorts and a T-shirt. Binding my hands, I pull on my boxing gloves and head for the punching bag. I swing at the bag, punch it again and again. Ten minutes in, I am panting. Sweat beads my upper body, my forehead, and my T-shirt sticks to my skin. I take a break, wipe the sweat from my face. Raise my fists again, when footsteps sound.

"Want to go a round?"

I stiffen, turn around to find Sinner standing behind me.

"With you?" I scoff.

"Scared I'll whip your arse?" he taunts.

I shake my head. "You arrogant twat." I nod toward his office wear. "You going to change out of your pretty boy clothes?"

"No need." He walks to where a chair is positioned next to the ring.

Shrugging off his jacket, he hangs it across the back of the chair, then unbuttons his cuffs and pulls off his shirt. I walk over to the ring and climb in, wait for Sinclair to join me.

The squeak of shoes on the flooring warns me about the arrival of the others.

Weston ambles in, followed by Damian, Arpad, and a guy I don't recognize.

Sinclair binds his hands, then steps into the ring as he pulls on his gloves. He rolls his shoulders, bounces around on the balls of his feet as he takes position.

"Who's the new guy?" I ask.

He glances over his shoulder, then turns back to me. "Liam Kincaid."

"Any relation to Weston?"

"His brother. He's also the second richest man in the UK," he mutters.

"Who's the first?"

He scowls back at me and I raise my hands. "That would be you, I take it?"

He smirks. "So, what are you wagering?"

"Wasn't aware this was that type of a fight."

"I only fight for high stakes, and you know that."

"Hmm." I smack my gloved hands together. "If I win, you let go of whatever grudge it is you hold against me."

"And if you lose?"

"I won't try to get back in with the Seven again."

He tilts his head, then nods. "Deal."

I take my stance, when he straightens again. "Hang on, we need a referee." He turns and calls out, "Liam, care to referee our fight here?"

Liam prowls forward. "You're aware I won't do you any favors?"

"Wouldn't expect anything less." Sinclair bares his teeth. Liam nods. He struts over, springs onto the platform in a lithe move that belies his size, then ducks inside the ring.

"And you are?" He turns to me.

"Baron." I jerk my chin at him, and he turns to Sinclair.

"You sure you want to take him on? He seems in much better shape than you."

Sinclair scowls. "Just stick to your allocated role."

He twists his lips, then steps back.

Sinclair and I face each other.

"I let you off too lightly the last time," he mutters.

"Bullshit." I roll my shoulders. "We had polite company watching, so I spared you. This time, it's no holds barred, asshole." I spring forward and bury my fist in his stomach. The breath rushes out of him. He stumbles back, only to recover as I swipe my fist forward. He ducks, swiping at me. I lean aside and his fist slides past my face. I aim for his solar plexus, but he swings first and catches me in the shoulder. The same shoulder he hit yesterday. Motherfucker. Pain sizzles up my spine; I shove it aside, aim for his forehead, connect. His head snaps back. I follow up with an uppercut. He evades me, lands his fist in my side. My ribs protest as sparks flash behind my eyes. Fuck me. I move back, circle, and he does the same. We move at the same time. Clash in the center, chest to chest, arms wrapped around each other. Forehead to forehead.

"Give up," he growls.

"Never." One arm locked around his shoulder, I aim for his ribs, but can't get a hit in, as he continuously keeps moving...and me with him. We stay locked in the dance, trying to hit each other, failing, holding each other's gaze. No way, am I going to blink first. Neither will he. Shit. He grabs the backs of my shoulders, thrusting his face into mine. "Give in."

"No fucking way," I snarl, pulling free, land a hit in his side, then I kick his legs out from under him. He falls on his back, and I follow him down on one knee, pressing my gloved hand against his windpipe.

The referee whistles.

I ignore it, bare my teeth at Sinner.

"You cheated," he snaps out.

"All's fair in war. You were the one who taught me that, remember?"

"Is this war?" He raises an eyebrow.

I scowl down at him, then release him and rise to my feet.

"You two were only trying to kill each other, I take it?" Liam drawls.

"How did you guess?" I smirk, then turn and hold out my hand.

Sinner stares at it for a second, before reaching out and grasping it. I haul him up to his feet. We scowl at each other for a second, then he nods. "Good fight."

"Yeah," I glance down at his Italian loafers, "next time you should wear the right footwear. It makes a difference."

"You always did prefer to follow the rules," he muses.

"Yeah." I blow out a breath. "It's why I joined the army."

"And how did that turn out for you?"

"I've seen better."

"Me too." Sinclair's lips twitch.

"Your fighting skills have improved," I mutter.

"Yours haven't." He smirks.

"I've been busy recovering from the aftermath of—"

He nods. "When we found out you had been taken again..." he shakes his head, "it fucking cut us to the bone."

I squeeze my eyes shut. "Me too, bro. Me too."

"I assume this little demonstration was to show me just how loyal you are to your partners?" Liam interjects. "If so, consider the message received."

Sinclair nods. "You're Weston's brother, which means, there's a connection of trust which I won't breach."

"You guys done fighting?" Weston calls out from below.

I duck under the ropes, then jump down, "We're done talking," I retort. "And I need to get out of here, else I'll be late."

"You still on babysitting duties?" He quirks an eyebrow.

"What's it to you?" I scowl.

He pulls out a phone, swipes the screen and hands it over to me.

I stare at the phone, then stiffen. The video shows a woman dressed in a sleeveless red dress that contrasts with her pale skin and matches the red of her lips. She throws back her head and laughs at something that her companion...a man in a suit who's seated opposite her says.

The hair on the back of my neck rises. For a second there... in profile, she'd resembled my mystery girl. The one I'd spotted on the train platform a few years ago as she had thrown her head back and laughed at something that her sister had said. Goosebumps pop on my skin. Shit, this obsession with that red-haired woman of my dreams is definitely going to make me do something I am going to regret.

She tilts her head and her hair catches the light and burnished copper glints back at me. Her cheeks are rosy and her green eyes sparkle. She's, clearly, enjoying herself.

"Motherfucker," I growl. "Who sent this to you?"

"Amelie." He tilts his head. "She spotted Ava at the restaurant...which, luckily, happens to be next door."

"Next door?" I frown. "At the Dorchester?"

He nods and I brush past him, heading for the exit.

"You may want to change," he calls out.

I pause, glance down at my gym shorts and T-shirt. I'm sweaty, but who cares? Maybe she would? And if I stay to shower, no telling what the douche in a suit might get up to in that time.

Damian ambles over to us. "I know you're thinking it doesn't matter, but you don't want to be turning up there dressed like this."

"Like what?"

"Like a desperate asshole who interrupted his gym session to break up her date."

"I'm going to smash his head in," I interrupt him, "but that's beside the point."

"Aren't you getting a little too...possessive, here."

"So?"

"She's not yours. You know that, right?"

"Of course, I do," I say through gritted teeth. "I'm merely doing what Edward would have done in my place."

"That's all it is?" Sinner draws closer.

"Yes."

"You sure?" Weston asks.

"The fuck you guys care?"

"We care about you, bro," Damian says softly. "You've forgotten that when you are part of the Seven, you get all of us in your corner."

"That include Saint?" I mutter.

"Saint." Sinclair blows out a breath. "He's still pissed at you."

"What's his issue?" I rub the back of my neck. "You'd think I did something to personally anger him."

"Of the lot of us, he's the most sentimental," Weston offers.

"Saint." I stare at him. "You're joking, right?"

Weston holds my gaze, then smirks.

"You are joking." I roll my shoulders. "You had me there, for a second, Wes. I'd forgotten just how good an actor you are."

"We haven't forgotten what you've been through," Damian retorts. "You could have reached out to us when you were released. You could have come home."

"I came now."

"After that asshole, Edward, found a way to get you back," Sinclair declares.

I scowl. "Wait. Hold on. Edward didn't do anything. I came back of my own volition."

"After he told you he needed your help," Weston reminds me.

"Wait, so you all think it was an elaborate plan on his part to get me here?"

"Maybe he killed two birds with one stone." Damian lifts his shoulders.

"He always was the most strategic of the lot of us." Sinclair rubs his jaw.

Liam draws abreast. "It was fun while it lasted but...I have to get going."

"Oh?" Sinclair asks, "Important date?"

"A wedding rehearsal."

"You mean your wedding rehearsal, don't you?" Weston pipes up, and Liam shoots him a dirty glare.

"See you later, little brother."

He stalks out.

"Why do I get the feeling he's not happy about his upcoming nuptials?" Damian stares after him.

"Because he isn't?" Weston suggests.

"So why go through with it?"

"Inheritance." Weston shrugs. "What can I say? We one-percenters find all the possible ways to make it complicated for our offspring to live their lives. In this case, if older brother, here, doesn't get married and produce an heir soon, he doesn't get access to the family business nor to his trust fund."

I wince. "Complicated."

"You're telling me?"

"Good thing I don't have such issues."

"You don't have an empire to inherit, either," Damian reminds me.

"I make enough from 7A investments—thanks to you jokers—to not worry about money for a long time," I retort. "Besides, some of us want more than just money."

"Not that old chestnut." Sinclair smirks.

"Speak for yourself, married motherfucker." I scowl.

"Married and soon to be a father," Sinclair declares.

There's silence, then Damian slaps him on the back.

Weston grips his shoulder. "Congratulations, bro!"

A hot sensation stabs in my chest. What the hell? Why am I jealous of what he has? I made a choice, remember? Besides, I'd never be safe with any woman. Remember what happened just last night?

I reach forward, hold out my hand and Sinclair shakes it. "Congratulations," I mutter. "I am happy for you."

Sinclair grins, and that throws me. Jesus, in all the time I've known him since the incident, he's never seemed this happy. Is that what being married to the right woman does to you? Makes you more human?

Can I afford to be more human? Can I allow myself to feel the gamut of emotions that comes with being with the right woman? Hell, I know the answer to that. I may have found her, but I am not right for her. I can't jeopardize her safety any more than I already have. I need to stick to my promise, ensure that she is okay, keep her safe until Edward returns.

I turn, head for the shower. "Give me five minutes."

"It's not that I'm a social recluse and never had any friends. And it's true that sometimes I prefer staying home on a Friday night with a good book and a hot chocolate; that doesn't mean that the only reason that I had imaginary friends was because I felt lonely..."

-From Ava's Diary

Ava

"So, you're a dancer?"

The man on the other side of the table leans forward. His gaze takes me in and his eyes light up appreciatively.

"Uh, yeah. I am a dance instructor and I also have set pieces I perform at events, and on stage."

"Unusual profession."

"Nothing wrong with being a dancer," I say stiffly.

"Of course, not." He holds up his hands. "It was just a comment. I am sorry if I offended you."

I blow out a breath. Come on, you can try to be civil. It's not his fault that he's not Baron...or Edward. I shake my head, tip up my chin.

"And you?" I frown into his muddy brown eyes. "What do you do again, Calvin?"

"It's Kevin." He frowns.

"Kevin," I correct myself, "sorry. You said you work in an office, right?"

Not that I remember, but what are the chances he doesn't.

"Actually, I am a fireman."

"A fireman?" I glance at him closely. His dark hair is pushed back from his face, his eyes are intelligent, his chin shaved, and he's wearing a shirt, that outlines the breadth of his shoulders which, although not as impressive as Baron's (or Edward's), are decent enough to indicate that he does not, in fact, spend all of his time behind a desk.

"So, you fight fires?" I murmur.

"That's what firemen are known to do, yes." He grins and his eyes twinkle. Actually, they are not a muddy brown as much as a gray brown. Nowhere near the amber of another man. A man whom I had met and lost in such a short period of time that I am beginning to wonder if he'd been a figment of my imagination. Then I look at Baron and I know he isn't. Baron's a reminder of the Seven, and that includes Edward...

So yeah, he'd definitely been real. I only have to tune into my body to remember how he'd possessed me. How he'd taken me and imprinted himself into every cell of my body in such a short period of time. I squeeze my finger around the stem of my wine glass so hard that the ruby red liquid spills out. The stain blots the white table cloth and I swallow. Tears prick the backs of my eyes. Damn it, what is wrong with me, that such a small incident is pushing me over the edge? Bloody Baron. It's all his fault that I am strung so tight. It's because of him that I am here, faking interest in a man—who, to be honest, isn't all that bad looking, or boring, coming to think of it. He isn't Edward or Baron, though.

"You okay?" His voice cuts through my thoughts.

I glance up at him and shake my head. "Yeah, sorry, been a long few days."

"Want to talk about it?" The lines around his eyes deepen. He really is good-looking. Too bad he isn't either of the men who are currently on my mind. Men? Did I just think men? Why the hell am I thinking of them in the plural? Edward is gone; Baron is here. If anything, it's only Baron I should be thinking of right now. Or should I? Is it healthy to switch from one man to the other so quickly? I drag my fingers through my hair. This entire situation is getting out of hand. I rise to my feet, and he rises with me. "Everything all right?"

"Y...yeah." I swallow, "Just going to the restroom."

"You sure you're fine?"

"Yes," I force my lips to curve, "I'll be right back."

I head past the other diners—couples, families—all eating, enjoying themselves on a night out before they go home to their lives, their safety nets, their little corners of the world filled with love and happiness.

And me? What about me? What have I done, except screw up every single thing in my life? I'd had the chance to become a doctor and had dropped out. Then, I'd met Edward, and instead of turning away, I'd headed for the one thing I'd known I could never have. And then Baron. What the hell am I even doing, planning this entire charade...for his benefit? Why couldn't I simply not act on my impulses this time? Why can't I have a normal, safe, boring life? Because I am an idiot. Because I'll never be content with a life where I don't truly feel. Because I have to be fully engaged in everything I do. Because I can't live half a life. Because I have to be true to myself, and to what I want, no matter that it's unconventional. No matter if it is not how things are done in the rest of the world. Because...

I want him. As much as I want Edward. There, I've said it. Well, I've thought it. I walk into the restroom, reach the sink and grip the edge. I stare at myself in the mirror. The pale cheeks, the lipstick almost bitten off, my hair about my shoulders. "Why...why do you always have to go after what you can't have? Why do you have to be different? Why can't you be...normal?"

"Because you could try to hide in a crowd, and yet, you'd always stand out."

I whip my head around to find Baron stepping into the restroom.

"Because you are a shining star in the night sky." He meets my gaze, and his jaw tics. "Because you're the one unbroken seashell on the shore." He folds his arms across his chest. "And I am not going to let you walk out of here until you admit that you set up this scene to get my attention."

I straighten, fold my arms and mirror his stance. "G...get out." Shit, why am I stuttering? I am not nervous. I am not. I square my shoulders, scowl at his reflection in the mirror. "This is the ladies' room," I insist. "You shouldn't be here."

He bares his teeth. "This is exactly where I need to be."

I huff, "I am with someone else." I hold his gaze. "He's out there waiting for me."

"So, what are you doing here?"

I reach for the paper towels, pretend to dry my hands. "I was just leaving, actually." I turn and march up to the door, but of course, he doesn't move.

"Get out of the way," I hiss.

"Not until you tell me what you want."

"What I want," I flip my hair over my shoulder, "is for you to leave me alone."

"Funny, from where I am," he looks me up and down, "it seems like quite the opposite."

"Your ego is showing," I snap.

"And you," he widens his stance, "are lying."

"No."

"Yes."

"Let me go."

"No."

"Why are you doing this?"

"Me?" He glares at me. "I'm not the one pretending to be on a date in order to draw attention to myself."

I gape at him. "You have some nerve...you...you asshole."

"Alphahole." His grin widens. "I prefer alphahole."

"What-bloody-ever." I huff, "If you don't get out of my way, I'll..."

"What, what will you do?"

"I'll scream."

"No, you won't."

I gape at him, open my mouth...then shut it. "Damn you," I hiss. "Why did you have to come back and spoil everything?"

His jaw tightens, then he flexes his shoulders. "Your insults do nothing to me."

"So, what are you doing here then?"

"Making sure you don't do anything that you'll regret later."

"What do you mean?" I scowl.

"Your date. Ditch him."

My jaw drops. "What the hell? If you think you can rule my life—"

"Think?" He looks me up and down. "I have news for you, I already do."

"No, you don't."

"Yes, I do."

"You...you have no claim on me."

"Edward does."

"He lost any rights when he left."

"He had his reasons."

I clench my fists at my sides, "Oh, so now you're defending him?"

"Only because he's not here to do it himself." He shuffles his feet. "Look...just...do as I say and we can pretend this never happened."

"You mean, I should pretend that you didn't just come marching in here like a rhinoceros—"

"Rhinoceros?"

"Okay, alphaceros."

"First time I've been called that... Whatever that is."

I draw in a breath, try to clear my head. "Just... Let me walk out of here, and we can forget this ever happened."

"Nope." He smirks.

My jaw drops, "Seriously, you're a piece of work."

"I aim to impress."

"Far from," I scoff.

"You don't know it yet, but you are," his grin widens, "impressed."

"No, I'm not." I scowl at him. "And you're fooling yourself if you think otherwise."

The smile fades from his face. He peers into my eyes, and his gaze intensifies, "It's too late," he mutters, almost to himself. "I did meet you, and now I can't get you out of my head."

"Wh...what do you mean?" I swallow. "What are you trying to say?"

"You heard me." His eyes gleam. "You set up this entire charade, knowing it would get to me, didn't you?"

"N...no."

"Yes, you did. Admit it."

"I'll do no such thing." I firm my lips. "What I do with my life is of no consequence to you."

"You're right."

"I am?"

He nods. "Everything you do is not just of consequence, but it affects me. Since I saw you, I can't stop thinking of you. Everywhere I look, I see you. Every time I get a whiff of jasmine, images of you, your curves, your sweet tits, the way your cunt responds to my ministrations—all of it overcomes me."

"Oh," I breathe, "wh...what are you trying to say?"

"That I should give into this overwhelming need to throw you down and take you, but—"

"But you won't." I complete the statement for him.

He nods.

"Then let me out."

"Doesn't mean I can't make you come again."

14

Ava

"Wh...what?" He moves forward and I skitter back. "What do you mean?"

"What I said earlier."

"You...can't be serious."

"Don't pretend you didn't enjoy it the last time."

"So, what if I did?" I jut out my chin. "Doesn't mean I want it again."

"Don't you?" His eyes gleam as if he's enjoying a private joke.

"Asshole."

"Told you, I prefer alphahole."

"And I prefer...that you step aside and let me pass."

"Not happening." He takes another step in my direction. I slide back until my hip touches the washbasin.

"Turn around, grip the edge of the sink," he says.

"No." I set my jaw.

"Oh?" He reaches out, circles my throat, his grip gentle... Too gentle. I need him to curl those thick fingers around my nape, to hold me down as he shoves aside my panties and plants his swollen dick inside me... Like Edward did. Jesus, I need to stop thinking of both of them in the same breath, same vision, same time. No, no, no.

His grasp intensifies, and goosebumps pop on my skin.

"Don't," I swallow, "don't do it."

"Say 'no' one more time, and I'll step back. I'll leave here and walk out and you'll never see me again."

Say it. Do it. It's what you want, right? I'd staged this entire charade for his benefit and now, when he is here and finally intent on giving me physical pleasure—again, I am losing my nerve. Damn it, what's happening to me? Do I want him to leave? And then...what? He returns to keeping vigil in his car? And I see him when I bring him coffee? And he follows me home every night, interrupts my dates like this, threatens to give me an orgasm, without ever committing to me? Do I want him to commit to me...when my heart still belongs to Edward? Is this the way forward? To allow myself some level of physical comfort with him? Allow him to pleasure me, to use my body, to fill my thoughts and my mind with his touch, his scent, his nearness, so that, temporarily at least, I can forget about how it could have been with Edward?

"Fine," I whisper.

"Fine?"

I nod. I bring my hands up to grip his wrist, the circumference so thick that my fingers barely meet around it. "I...I'll do as you ask."

His gaze intensifies, then he jerks his chin. He releases me, only to grasp my waist and turn me like we were in some kind of dance. I face his reflection in the mirror.

"Bend over."

Before I can comply, he kicks my legs apart.

I squeak. He presses his wide palm into the center of my back and pushes down. I comply and a breath whooshes out of him. "My god, Eve, you should look at yourself."

"Wh...what did you call me?"

"Hmm?" He drags his fingers down to cup my arse and all thoughts leak from my head. Moisture pools in my center and my toes curl.

"This dress?" He swipes his hand down my thigh, until it grazes the hem. "I fucking hate it."

"It's a perfectly nice dress," I protest.

"And you wore it for another man."

"You have no claim on me."

"I am the one protecting you."

"From what?" I mutter, "Likely, imaginary enemies who are a figment of your imagination—"

His hand connects with my backside and I gasp. "What the hell?"

"Shh!" He slaps my right arse cheek, then the left, and the right, so rapidly that I forget to scream. Forget to protest, forget to do anything else but focus on the heat that pools between my legs. Jesus. I am soaked, and all he's done is spank me. What the hell is wrong with me, that I crave how he hurts me? How he anchors me with his hold on my pussy as he slides his hand around and grips me between my legs. I moan and behind me he goes rigid. "You like this." His voice lowers to a hush. He yanks my dress up around my waist, then pushes aside my panties and shoves his fingers inside my cunt.

"Baron," I groan, "Omigod, Baron."

"Yeah, that's it, baby. Just like that," he croons as he begins to work his fingers in and out of me. In and out. In and out.

My belly clenches; my thighs tremble. A bead of sweat works its way down my temple. "Oh!" I whine. "Please, please."

"What do you want, baby?" He grabs my hair and tugs it back with enough force that my scalp protests. Pain slithers down my spine, arrowing straight to that groaning, growling, emptiness deep inside of me that stutters and coils in on itself.

"Please." I gulp, "Please make it stop."

"Like this?" He pulls his fingers out of me, only to reach back and tear my panties off.

"O-Oh." I stutter.

"How many more ways can you say, 'Oh'... Shall we find out?"

He releases his grip on my hair, and before I can turn around, he's dropped down to his knees between my legs. He shoves his face between my thighs, licks my slit, all the way up to between my arse cheeks.

"Ohh," I moan, "Ohhh, Baron."

I sense his lips curve against my sensitive skin, a second before he grabs my arse cheeks and squeezes them apart. Pain vibrates out from the point of contact and my core seems to melt. I grip the edge of the sink, push out my butt and lower my forehead to the cool ceramic surface.

He swipes his tongue up my pussy, thrusts his tongue inside my melting core. At the same time, he slides his thumb inside my puckered hole and I squeal. "Oh, no, no, no, no."

He pauses, "Is that a yes, Eve?"

I hesitate, then nod.

"Say it."

"Yes."

"Like you mean it, Eve," he orders.

"Yes, you bastard," I huff, "you alphahole, you—"

He bites down on my pussy and I cry out. He curves his thumb inside my back channel, as he brings his fingers up to pinch on my clit. The climax screams up my legs, and that's when someone knocks on the door.

He pulls his fingers and his tongue out of me, and the orgasm recedes.

"No!" I yell.

"Is that a no, darlin'?"

"No," I growl, "you sadist, it's not."

"Then what is it?"

"If you don't make me come in the next five seconds—"

Someone bangs on the door, then a woman's voice yells, "Customers need to use the restroom, can you—?"

"NO," I yell, "go away!"

"But—" the woman protests.

"I'll be out in—" I stare at the jerkass from the corner of my eyes, "three —" He raises his eyebrows. "Five minutes."

"I'll have to call security ma'am."

"You do what you have to do," I retort. "Just go away, now."

The steps recede, and I level my gaze on him, "If you don't put your mouth on me—"

He shoves his tongue inside my channel, grinds his heel into my clit and the breath whooshes out of me.

"Omigod. Omigod."

He works his tongue in and out of me, then slides his fingers up to strum my pussy lips; at the same time, he slides his finger, no, two fingers, inside my backchannel and I explode. The orgasm crashes through me and I cry out. Tendrils of heat flare out from where he continues to eat me out. Continues to worry my clit, to squeeze the swollen nub, which sends another shudder racing through me. Aftershocks of pleasure-pain grip me, and I slump. He rises to his feet and catches me, turns me around, rights my clothes. He leans forward until our eyelashes tangle and I am sure that he is going to kiss me. Instead, he pats my cheek. "Next time I'll make you come in 60 seconds."

He turns to leave and I blink. Wait, what? What was that about? He reaches the door, twists the handle to open it.

"What the hell do you mean by that?"

"Exactly what you heard, babe." He half turns his head to fix me with his gaze. "Assuming there's a next time, of course."

Turning, he leaves.

15

Ava

I run out of the door, watch as he disappears up the corridor, toward what I assume is the back door of the restaurant. I step toward him, when someone grips my arm.

"Are you okay?"

I jerk my head around to find Calvin—I mean, Kevin—holding my elbow. I glance down at where his fingers press into my skin, then up at him. Instantly, he releases me and steps back. "I came to give you this." He holds out my handbag and jacket.

"Oh," I take the jacket, shrug into it, then grab my bag, "thank you, I was coming back—"

"No, you weren't."

No, I wasn't. And maybe I should be embarrassed about it, but to hell with that. I am not going to regret my actions. I tip up my chin, meet his gaze.

"It's okay," he holds up his hands, "I know you're with someone else."

"No, I'm not."

"Hmm." He raises his shoulders. "If you say so."

"Look," I blow out a breath, "it's just that you aren't—"

"Him." Kevin jerks his chin toward the backdoor.

"Y...yeah," I mumble. "You're a good man, Kevin. It's just..." I shake my head. "Sorry, I should have never agreed to this date."

"Hey," he half smiles. "at least, now I know what it means to be in love."

"I'm not in love—"

He shakes his head, then stabs his thumb at the door. "You'd better catch him before he leaves."

"Yeah." I walk forward, then turn back toward him for a moment. "I truly am sorry." I break into a run, reach the door, shove it open and step out into the chilly, late evening air. Of course, the door leads into an alley. I sprint past the dumpster, past a stool with a cup overflowing with cigarettes. I reach the street, glance in either direction, don't find any trace of him. Shit, did I lose him? Why did he have to give me such an incredible orgasm then spoil it all with that...that comment about making me come in sixty seconds? My core clenches. Shit, why is it that just thinking about his hands on me, his tongue inside me, his mouth eating me out, turns me on so...so much?

I turn and walk up the street, toward the tube station. A gust of wind blows and I huddle into my coat. I reach the entrance to the subway that leads to the tube station, then hesitate. I glance around me, but there's no one. I pull out my phone and glance at the time. It's only 10pm, not that late. It should be okay, right? I take a step forward, hesitate, then snort. Watching too many movies, that's my problem. It's only a short distance to the tube. I'm sure it's going to be fine. I head down the steps, walk into the subway tunnel.

Footsteps sound behind me. I turn, find no one there. Strange. The hair on the nape of my neck rises. Shit, shit, shit, why had I not obeyed my instincts? Movies are based on real life, after all, and often, fact is stranger than fiction. I break into a run, heading for the steps that lead onto the platform of the tube station. If I can make it there, I'll be fine. There are bound to be tube staff around, not to mention, other passengers.

I just need to get down the next set of stairs and— A man bounds up the steps, wearing a black suit with black loafers. What the hell, is he a commuter?

Then, he plants himself in my path and I know he's not. I stop so suddenly that I stumble. Footsteps approach me from behind. I swing around to find there are two men closing in on me from the other side. Both are dressed in suits in varying shades of black. Shit, what is this? Who are these guys? I turn, back up, take a step back, another. The first man I'd seen moves toward me and I stumble back. My hip grazes the wall and a scream tumbles from my lips. "Who...who are you?" I reach for my bag, hold it out in front of me like a weapon. As if that's going to help.

The man chuckles and the sound echoes around the space. The hair on my forearms rises. My stomach twists in knots. Shit, now I know why villains on screen have an evil laugh. Because they do so in real life, as well.

Shit, this is not good, not good. Someone will be along to help me soon, right?

He takes another step forward and I flatten myself against the wall. "G... get away from me." Shit, why is my voice trembling? If I come across as scared, that will only goad him. I stiffen my shoulders, tip up my chin. "Don't come closer."

I glance around the space, searching for CCTV cameras. There's one in the corner, but it hangs crookedly from the ceiling. Clearly, it's been disconnected. No, no, no, this can't be happening.

The man walks toward me and I cry out, "Come near me and I'll scream."

His grin widens. He reaches me, grabs my shoulder, and I howl. I raise my hand bag and back-hand him across his face. His neck snaps back. He stumbles back, then straightens. Blood drips from his nose. His features twist and he leaps forward, grabs me by my arm, then swings me around with such force that my cheek connects with the hard wall. Lights flash behind my eyes and pain lashes down my spine. My guts twist; the acrid taste of bile fills my mouth. Fuck. Fuck. Fuck. Why had I stepped into the subway? Why are these guys attacking me? Where the hell is the jerkass alphahole when I need him? If you're out there, Baron, now would be a good time to show yourself.

My attacker moves closer, presses his body into mine. The scent of something metallic, coated with the greasy smell of burned meat, assails my nose. I gag, try to shake myself free, and something cold pushes into my neck.

"Stop struggling or I'll slit your throat."

I freeze. Try to draw in a breath, but my lungs burn. Shit, shit, shit, what the hell is happening? Am I caught up in a nightmare? He presses the metallic surface—a knife?—into my neck. Pain spirals out from the contact. Drops of something slither down my neck and I know it's blood. OMG, he is going to kill me, he is going to... The man grabs my hip and my heart slams into my chest. No, he is going to do something worse. He is going to— Cool air grazes my back and the scent of pine trees laces my nostrils.

I hear the sound of something smashing into the ground, then the entire tunnel seems to reverberate. I turn, already knowing what I am going to find, and yet, I can't stop the gasp of surprise when I see Baron bring his leg down—hard—into the stomach of the fallen man.

The bastard groans, tries to rise. Baron steps on him, kicks out his other leg to take out another guy, then lunges forward to throw himself at the third. The two go down, roll, hit the opposite wall. The second man he'd hit rises to his feet, attacks him. He grapples while one guy clings to his back, the other in front, who swipes out his fist. Baron swerves and the fist connects with the man behind him. The sound of breaking bones, the thwap of knuckles connecting with flesh, then the man yells, lumbering back. The man on the ground stirs and I don't think twice. I stomp my foot squarely on his groin. The guy yells, reaching forward. I step back, kicking him in the shin. The second guy, meanwhile, turns around and lurches for me. I grab my hand bag and swing it up. It connects with his chin and he cries out. He stumbles back, just as Baron throws the third against the wall.

His head connects with the hard surface and he slumps to the ground.

Baron turns, rushes toward the second guy, wraps his hand around his neck, and flings him to the side.

I stumble the other way and Baron brushes past me. He grabs the guy on the ground, hauls him up to his feet and throws him into the wall. "You dare to touch her? You put your hands on her, you motherfucker." He closes his fingers around his face and shoves the back of his head into the wall again and again. The man's body jerks. His eyelids close and his body slumps. Still, Baron doesn't stop. "Bastard. How dare you threaten her? Scum, fucking shitstain of a human, I'm going to kill you, I—"

I jump forward grab his arm. "Stop," I yell, "you are going to kill him!"

Baron shakes me off, his gaze focused on the other guy, "Motherfucker, you dare come near her? I am going to make sure you're never able to touch another woman again."

"Baron!" I scream at him. I throw myself at him, grab his arm and plead with him, "Please, we need to go before someone finds us."

He pauses. His shoulders heave and his breath comes in pants.

"Baron, please, I am tired and—"

He releases the man and turns on me so fast that I blink. He looks me up and down, "Are you wounded?" He closes the distance between us, searches my features. "Did he hurt you?"

"Y...yes," I whisper, "but you hurt me more."

16

Baron

Her lips tremble and her chin wobbles. She squeezes her fingers together, and her knuckles are white. Damn it, I am responsible for this. I allowed my emotions to get the better of me. I walked out of there, left her unprotected for ten minutes, and what happened? They got to her. When I'd seen him put his hands on her, something inside me had detonated. My vision had tunneled; all thoughts had emptied from my head. All I'd known was that he'd touched her. He'd dared to threaten what's mine. She isn't mine. She is...his...but he'd charged me with taking care of her. One simple thing and I had failed. And now...she says I hurt her more than those bastards did? What the fuck?

"How?" I growl, "How did I hurt you?"

"Now you ask?" She tries to shove the hair back from her face but her hand shakes. "You...you walked out on me, you ass. After you made me come. You treated me like I was some kind of...of fuck toy."

"No, I didn't." I wrap my fingers about her throat. "If I had, you wouldn't be standing here mouthing off to me. And after putting yourself at risk."

Her jaw drops and color creeps into her cheeks. Good. At least, she is getting over the shock.

"I put myself at risk?" she hisses at me. "You think I am at fault?"

I nod. "Ever since I saw you, you've crawled under my skin. You've occupied my thoughts, broken through my ability to concentrate. You pushed me to the edge until I had no choice but to walk out on you for your own protection."

"And see how that turned out?" She waves a hand in the air. "Are you happy now?"

I shake my head, apply enough pressure on her throat that her eyes widen. "You are so fucking fragile. I can off you so easily, you'd never even see it coming."

She swallows. "And is that what you want?"

I shake my head again. "I don't know what I want."

"That makes two of us." She shivers and I release my hold on her. I step back, look her up and down, then grip her hand, "Come on, let's get out of here."

I stalk forward, pulling her along. She stumbles, then protests, "Walk slower."

"You need to keep up."

"My legs are shorter than yours, asshole."

"You don't say?" I pause so suddenly she crashes into me. Then, turning, I scoop her up,

"Hey, what the hell? I can walk."

"And see how that turned out?"

She huffs, wriggles around in my arms. I pull her close, her handbag jammed in between us. "Stop it," I growl.

"Or what?"

"Or I'll have to take my hand to your arse when we get to the car."

Her breath hitches. "I'd like to see you do that."

"I'm sure you would." I allow a smirk to curve my lips. "Just as it turns you on to be brought to orgasm with the threat of being discovered in a public place."

"You know nothing," she snaps.

"I know that I am never again letting you go anywhere unguarded."

She freezes, then glances up at me. "Who were those men?"

I set my jaw. If she thinks I am going to tell her anything that could upset her further, she's crazy.

"Don't do that," she snaps, and I stare down at her, before glancing forward again.

"Don't do what?"

"Don't treat me like I am some stupid woman who doesn't know what's happening around her half the time."

"Trust me, if you were, that would make my job so much easier."

"Job?" She raises her voice, "So I am just a job for you, is it?"

Of course, not. Damn her. What the hell does she want me to admit? That from the moment I'd laid eyes on her, this entire plan had been shot to hell? That I should have tasked one of the Seven with protecting her? That I should have turned away and ensured I had nothing to do with her? As if I would have been able to do that. I'll never allow any other man close to her again. And Edward? What about your once best friend? After all, it's thanks to him that you met her. It's because of him that you returned to your life, that you found your life. I tighten my arms and stare ahead of me. "No," I say stiffly, "you're not just a job. You've never been just a job, and you know that."

"Do I?" I sense her stare up at me, but refuse to return her gaze. "Do I know anything about you, Baron?"

"You know enough."

"Spoken like a man," she gripes.

"That's me, all right." I reach the SUV, beeping the doors unlocked as I approach. I lower her to her feet, opening the door for her. She steps in, throws her bag down on the dashboard, then folds her arms across her chest. "You're a jerk."

I bend over her and she freezes. I tug on her seatbelt, snap it into place, then straighten. Her breath catches in her throat; her chest rises and falls. I smirk down at her, "You didn't think I was going to kiss you there, did you?"

"You—" She raises her fist, as I slam the door shut. Good, she's angry. I can work with that. It'll take her mind off what just happened, while I track down whoever was responsible for that attack, though I have my suspicions. I open my door on the driver's side, then slide in and slam it shut behind me. The entire vehicle rocks.

"What crawled up your pants?" she mutters. "I'm the one who was attacked. If anyone should be angry, it's me."

I turn on her and she meets my gaze head on.

I reach for her, then curl my fingers. "Shut up," I growl. "Not another word out of you."

She sets her jaw, but not before I spot the trembling of her lips. Shit, she is upset. Of course, she's upset and emotional. She was just attacked. I'd let her out of my sight and they'd moved in. If I had been a few seconds later, they'd have hurt her. Anger thrums at my temples and my blood thuds in my veins. I turn, stare forward through the windshield, draw in a breath, another.

I can't drive like this. I need to calm down. I rotate my shoulders, glare through the darkness.

"I still don't get why you're so upset."

I move toward her so fast that she squeaks. I thrust my face right into hers. She blinks, skitters back against the window. I follow her until I'm looming over her. She tips up her chin, her green eyes glowing in the darkness. Feline eyes. Eyes of a witch. Of a siren who's entranced me. Who's dug her pretty little claws into me and is hooking me to her in such a way that there is no bloody escape. "You want to know why I'm upset?" I growl. "Want to know why I am so fucking pissed?"

"Y...yes." She nods.

"I'll tell you why I'm so angry that I can't think straight."

I grip her chin and she shudders.

I press down on her lower lip until her mouth opens. Her eyes widen. Color sweeps up her skin. Her chest rises and falls, the nipples puckered and hard and pointing up at me, beckoning to me, beseeching me to squeeze them, tug on them, tweak them so hard that she feels it all the way to the sweet spot between her legs. The soft flesh there contracting, swelling, and filled with heat and wetness, so when I finally take her, I'll slam right into her, up to the hilt. When I finally cram my dick inside her tight little pussy, she'll be ready and willing and open. She'll take all of me, she'll clamp her cunt around my shaft and—

A moan bleeds from her lips and I lower my gaze to her mouth. "Why did you have to be so delectable, so gorgeous, so fucking beautiful, inside and out?"

She swallows. I lower my head and breathe in the exotic perfume of jasmine, and below that, the lush scent of raspberries.

My cock instantly hardens. The blood drains to my groin and my pulse throbs behind my eyelids, at my temples, in my fucking balls. I raise my head and stare into her eyes, "Fuck you, for what you do to me, and fuck me, for what I am going to do to the both of us."

She parts her lips, "What do you—?"

I close my mouth over hers.

17

Ava

Omigod, his lips are hard and soft at the same time and his tongue... He thrusts it inside my mouth as if he owns it, possesses it, owns me, and in a way, he does. Since he'd hauled me up from my freefall on the sidewalk as I'd watched Edward pull away, and he'd taken care of me and carried me inside the house, I'd known then that I need him. Is that why Edward had asked him to take care of me? Had he known that I'd need him? Since when had I become so dependent on another? I'd had enough courage of conviction to drop out of med school and pursue a career of my own; the kind that most people don't take seriously. And that hadn't bothered me. I had been so sure of myself, knew I had to do it to satisfy that need inside of me that only I felt. The ability to create a dance, to flow with the music, to feel the rhythm in my bones...that...was certainty.

This hot stabbing sensation in my chest, as this man pushes his lips into mine. As he releases my seat belt and pulls me to him, hauls me across the center console of the SUV and onto his lap; as he grips my hips, fits me over his crotch so his hard throbbing shaft settles between my legs? This... I have no idea what to make of it. It had been similar...yet different, with Edward. With him, every encounter had been fraught with tension, and the knowledge that it was forbidden. All of which had only made it even more erotic, more exciting, more real... More everything. With Edward...it had been this sensation that I couldn't resist as he'd drawn me closer, closer within his reach, his pull, his magnetic presence that had floored me, as I'd felt guilty and known that there couldn't possibly be a future between us.

With Baron...the sensations are as strong, and yet, it feels freer, bigger, wider. Like he is larger than life and consuming me, owning me, imprinting his touch into my skin as he wraps his fingers around my throat in a gesture I am coming to recognize as uniquely his.

He presses his thumb down on my chin, forcing me to open my mouth wider, and he angles his head and shoves his tongue across mine. His lips flatten mine, his teeth clash against mine, and suddenly, I am straining against him. I throw my arm around his shoulders, or as much as I can reach, that is. I thrust my breasts into the hard planes of his chest and a groan rumbles from him. He digs his fingers into my hair and tugs. My scalp tingles and heat burns down my spine. My thighs clench and his hard length seems to grow even bigger, thicker, throbbing between us, digging into my soft center as he tilts his head and seems to eat me alive.

"Fuck," he whispers into my mouth and the strength of his intention seems to thicken, deepen until it presses down on the both of us. He tears his mouth from mine, stares up into my eyes. "Jesus, what you do to me, Eve."

"Eve," I clear my throat, "you called me Eve."

"Did I?" He frowns.

I nod. "It's what Edward called me too."

His face hardens and his jaw tics.

"It's just... It's too much of a coincidence that both of you call me by the same nickname, you know?"

A vein pops at his temple, and damn it, so maybe I shouldn't have said it, and definitely I shouldn't have mentioned Edward's name, but the thing is... It really is weird as hell that Baron calls me by the same nickname.

"You have to admit, it's a bit strange?" I prod.

"When Edward called me and asked me to return to watch out for you, he referred to you as Eve. I guess the name must have stuck in my head," he finally says. "Also," his gaze intensifies, "you look like an Eve."

"Oh?" I swallow. "What does an Eve look like?"

"Tempting, luscious, a siren who entrapped me the moment I set eyes on her."

My thighs clench and my toes curl. "O-o-k-a-y," I stutter.

"Is that all you have to say, Eve?" He lowers his face, to the junction of where my neck meets my shoulder. He sniffs, drawing in my scent, and something hot unfurls in my belly.

"Sexy Eve. Curvy Eve. Luscious Eve, who I can't wait to get my hands on. I should regret feeling the way I do about you, but you know what?"

"What?" I squeak.

"I don't."

He grabs me about my waist, lifts me back into my seat and I squeak. Whoa, when he handles me like that, like I weigh nothing... It's too sexy, way too much of a turn on. I am way out of my freakin' depth here. He leans over me then snaps my seatbelt into place.

The scent of him fills my senses and my heart begins a slow thump.

I glance away as he starts the car and eases onto the road, all in one smooth move.

We don't talk on the drive home. The silence stretches but neither of us break it.

When we reach my place, he shuts off the engine. We stay that way, wrapped in silence, unable to move, not saying anything to each other. Finally, I turn and push open my door. "Are you coming inside?"

He shoves his door open, walks around and behind me as I reach my front door. I open it, step inside then turn to him. "Those men—" I swallow.

"They won't hurt you again."

"What if they find me—?"

"They won't."

"How do you know that?"

He glares at me. "I just do."

"Do you know who they are?"

"You don't need to concern yourself with it."

"So, you know who they are?" I glower back at him. "Do they belong to the Mafia or something?"

He sets his jaw, "What makes you think that?"

"Just the way they were dressed."

"You're watching way too many movies." His scowl deepens. "Look, you really don't have to worry about it. From now on, I'll make sure that I never lose sight of you."

He steps back. "Lock the door behind you." He turns to leave.

"Wait," I call out and he pauses, then stares at me over his shoulder.

"Are you going to sleep in your car?"

He arches an eyebrow at me.

"I mean, come on, you already slept on the couch last night—"

"And look where that got us."

I squeeze my fingers together. "I... I'll make sure not to disturb you at night."

He shakes his head, "It's not a good idea, especially after—"

"What happened out there?"

He holds my gaze. "Yes, that's precisely why."

"Would that be so bad?" I whisper.

His gaze intensifies. He searches my features. "Yes," he snaps. "Yes, it would be."

"For you or for me?"

"For both of us." A nerve throbs at his temple.

"I...I don't care anymore."

"But I do." He pivots and begins to walk down the steps, and damn it, I can't let him go. Not yet. I surge forward, grip his arm, and he freezes. He glances down at where my fingers are wrapped around his arm, then he raises his gaze to mine. "Let me go."

"No," I shake my head, "I can't, Baron."

"This is not right." A muscle twitches above his cheekbone.

"Why not?" I swallow. "Edward left me. Likely, he isn't coming back."

"You don't know that."

"Even if he did... I... I don't know if I want to be with him anymore."

"Don't you?" He bends his knees, peers into my eyes. I stare into his bright blue gaze and the intensity of it sweeps through my core. My heart begins to pound and my pulse rate ratchets up. I glance away from him.

"That's what I thought."

He pulls away, stalks back to the car and this time, I let him go.

He walks around, to the driver's side, slides in, and slams the door. The echo reverberates around the empty street, wraps around me, settles inside my empty soul. I turn and walk inside, tears streaming down my cheeks.

I shut the door behind me and my bag slips from my hands. I stumble inside, to the bedroom, switch on the light, then manage to take off my clothes before stepping into the bathroom. I step inside the shower cubicle, start the shower, and the steam from the water envelops me. I sink down in a corner of the cubicle. I wrap my arms around my knees, bend my head and let the tears flow in earnest. Shit, shit, shit. I hug my knees more tightly to my chest, lower my forehead to mash it against my knees, trying to obliterate the pounding in my head. What the hell? Those men. I'm afraid to think of what they could have done to me if Baron hadn't saved me. He rescued me. He's been taking care of me.

But I'm not over Edward. I'm not sure I ever will be. He's my first, and everything is so recent.

But Baron...I need him. I feel safe with him. When his arms are wrapped about me, when he is near me, when his scent enfolds me, it feels like anything is possible. It's as if I've found another part of me. How could something so wrong, feel so right? How can I feel so much for him in such little time? Why does everything with him feel so inevitable?

This is wrong... All wrong... I am, clearly, messed up in my head. I have been from the beginning. It's why I'd never been able to accept that my father could possibly want to be with someone else so soon after my mother's death. And here I am, attracted to two men... At the same time. What am I going to do?

I curl into myself and weep harder. Why did my Mom have to die so early? Would she have understood what I am going through? If I spoke to Raisa about it, I know what she'd say. That I don't need either of them. That's how she is—one-hundred percent devoted to her career. But that isn't me. Dance fills the creative core of me...but since I'd embraced that part of me, it's like the feminism in me had come to the fore. I want more. I want all of it. To be independent, to run my own business, to have a man, to have a family... I want it all. At least, that's what I'd thought. This curve ball that life has leveled at me... I have no idea what to do with it.

If only I could decide, one way or the other... If only I could forget about Edward... But I can't. That much is clear. He'll always be important to me... I'll always love him... And this thing with Baron? What is it, then? Shit, I have no idea. I swallow down the tears that still threaten, then rise to my feet, stumble. The ground rises up to meet me, stops, as I am hauled upright and against a hard chest.

"You came," I whisper.

"I couldn't stay away."

18

Baron

I'd pushed back my seat in the car, tried to settle in for the night, turned this way and that, tried to make myself comfortable. And failed. Those green eyes—tortured, helpless, filled with conflicting emotions that mirrored mine. The way she had met my gaze, and I had seen then what she feels for me... And then, she had looked away. And I had known she still has feelings for Edward.

Damn the man. Why does he always have to be there to turn my life upside down? Why did he have to put me in this situation while he's off doing what he does best—finding himself somewhere? If only the rest of us had that luxury... Some of us...don't even know who we are anymore. My past has been buried and no amount of searching will unearth the boy I had once been. The one before the incident, the one who'd believed he had a future. The one who'd had dreams of becoming a Cricketer, of representing his country on the pitch... I'd gone on to do that alright, just on a different kind of playing field.

One which had helped bring some discipline into my life. Which had grounded me, given me something to focus on so I could move past the tattered remains of my life. In a way, it had helped me to find a part of myself. Except, I never felt fulfilled. Never felt whole...

Not until I met her... She resonates with the deepest parts of me, the parts I've tried to hide deep inside. The parts which now insist there is more to life. Fuck. I can't afford to think that way. Can't afford this crazy attraction that makes me want to take care of her in a completely different manner from what Edward had intended. Or had he?

Is this why he'd pushed us together?

Had he known that we'd be attracted to each other?

Had he wanted me to...fuck his woman? Keep her warm while he's away, and then what? Relinquish her when he comes back? Fuck. I'd sat up then, gotten out of the car. I'd turned toward the house, found it still in darkness, except for a faint glow from the bedroom window...and somehow...somehow... It hadn't felt right. To leave her alone after what had happened. She'd been attacked and I had hauled her back and deposited her without asking her how she was, or if she'd been hurt. If she needed anything. Yeah, I could do that. Just go in and make sure she was okay? I'd walked in—found the door unlocked and sworn aloud. Damn her, couldn't she do this one small thing that I'd asked her to do?

I'd stomped through the living room, the bedroom, and headed toward the sound of the shower of the bathroom. I shouldn't have peeked in, but in my defense, the door was open and I had wanted to make sure she was okay. Honestly, that's all it was. I'd spotted her on the floor of the shower cubicle and my heart had cracked. My legs had moved against my volition and I'd realized I was walking toward her. I'd opened the shower door and caught her as she had stumbled. Had pulled her to me, enfolding her in my embrace.

"I'm sorry...so sorry." I'm not sure what I'm apologizing for, except it feels like I should. "I'm sorry they attacked you." I tuck her head under my chin. "So sorry I didn't reach you earlier."

She clings to me, buries her head against my shirt and cries harder. I sink down and pull her into my lap. She curls into me, hooks her fingers into the lapels of my shirt and continues to sob. My heart stutters. A hot sensation stabs at my chest. I rock her against me, drag my fingers down her hair and hold her close to me.

"Shh," I croon, "it's okay, baby, let it out. I am so sorry I didn't take better care of you. I promise I won't let anyone hurt you."

She turns her face into the 'V' of skin exposed by my shirt. Her shoulders heave as the water pours down on us. I continue to rock her, rub my hand over her back. I wrap my arms around her and hold her until the sobs subside in intensity. She rubs her cheek against my chest, snuggles in further.

"Better?"

She nods.

I reach up to shut off the shower and she stiffens. "Don't leave me."

"I'm not going anywhere." I rise with her in my arms then step out onto the bathmat. "I'm going to make a mess of your space," I mutter.

She only curls up into my chest. I walk over to the counter next to the sink, try to place her on it, but she refuses to let me go.

"I need to dry you."

She shakes her head.

"I need to get out of my wet clothes," I insist.

She peeks up at me from under her eyelashes. "Can I watch?" Her green eyes flare with desire, with hurt.... With something else that I don't dare label yet.

"That...would not be advisable."

"Fuck that," she mumbles.

I bark out a laugh. "You always surprise me, you know that, Eve?"

I try to pull away and she wraps her legs around my waist, that's when I remember she is completely naked. I mean, of course, I'd known that she was naked. It just hadn't completely sunk in... Not until she presses her core into the hard column that tents my pants. "Ava." I wrap my fingers around the back of her neck and apply just enough pressure.

She tilts her chin up, gazes into my eyes. "Fuck me, Baron, please."

"If I do, we'll both regret it."

"If you don't, we'll regret it more."

Fuck. Fuck. Fuck. I wrap her dripping locks around my hand and tug. She gasps and her breathing quickens.

"If I fuck you, there's no going back."

She swallows.

"If I shag you, I won't be able to give you up. Ever."

Her lips kick up. "And I thought men loved to fuck and walk away."

"You knew it was never going to be like that between us."

She scowls. "So, you have fucked and walked away from other women?"

I smirk. "What do you want me to say to that?"

"Nothing." Her gaze narrows. "I'd prefer you to make good on your words, instead."

"If we cross this line," I rake my gaze across her futures, "things will get very complicated."

"They already are." She licks her lips, and the blood drains to my groin.

"If I fuck you, I won't stop at half measures. I won't hold back. I'll take everything you are willing to give me and demand anything you can't. I'll want you to give yourself to me not just physically, but emotionally, mentally. I'll possess you, body and soul. I'll imprint myself in every cell of your body. I'll own you so completely that you won't be able to separate where you begin and where I end. I'll dominate you so completely that you'll not be able to uncouple from me. I'll ask for control of your every emotion, your every thought, your every need. All of it will begin and end with me. Are you willing to take that? Ava? Are you?" I bend down and thrust my face in hers. "Tell me, will you be able to withstand this?"

19

Ava

A shudder runs down my spine. My belly trembles. If I touched myself now, I'd feel the wetness between my legs and it wouldn't be from the shower. The blood thuds at my pulse points. My head spins. The intensity of this man... And his words...? They're filthy and hot and such a freakin' turn on. Lust coils deep in my belly. My thighs clench. I try to close them, but he's standing between my legs so I only end up pushing my melting core into the hard rod that tents his pants.

"Tell me, Ava," he demands, "are you willing to submit to me?"

"I..." I swallow. "Why would I do that?"

"Because you want to?"

"That's not true." I try to pull away, but he doesn't let me.

I tip up my chin, holding his gaze, "I... I am a strong independent woman who—"

"Wants to silence her mind and inspire her body. When you are with me, nothing else will matter because you are all that matters to me. When you are with me, you don't have to think. You don't have to make choices. Well, except for deciding you want to be in this relationship with me."

His lips twist.

"When you are with me, you are exposed but free, because you know that you are safe with me. Even when participating in the most depraved and disgusting acts, and there will be many of those," his grin widens, "yet to me, you will be more beautiful than ever because I can see straight into your soul, your vulnerability, so positively endearing yet so wildly sexy at the same time."

My thighs clench.

"When you are with me, I'll take care of all of your needs. I'll make sure that you never feel alone."

My throat dries. He lowers his head, peers into my face, "When you're with me, I'll treat you with respect and you will obey me, not only because you want to, but because you need to."

His blue eyes lighten to those burning chips of ice that cut through to my very soul.

"When you're with me, I'll fuck you like you are unbreakable, but care for you like you are the most fragile thing I have ever possessed."

The pulse between my legs flares to life. Oh, my god. Those words... I've never heard anything so filthy, so possessive, so hot... Yet so...tender. Can one man mean all those emotions in one sentence?

"You'll submit to me because I need you to. Because I need you more than you can ever need me." The skin around his eyes stretches tight. "You'll submit to me precisely because you are a powerful, independent woman who wants to unearth the deepest, darkest, most sensual parts of her personality. Because you want to know all of yourself. Because you have the courage to admit that under that sweet, strong exterior, you are as depraved as me. And because," he leans in close enough for our eyelashes to tangle, "in this relationship, the power rests with you."

"H... how's that?" I gulp.

"Without your willingness to submit, there is no relationship here. I may be a Dominant, but I'm not dominating you unless you are a willing Submissive. I can tell you to get on your knees, but only you can decide if you will or not." He gaze narrows, "You feel me, Eve?"

I nod.

"Say it then." His gaze lowers to my mouth, "Tell me what I want to hear from you. Say it aloud."

"Yes." I tip up my chin, "Yes. I want to be your Submissive."

His eyes gleam. "Good," he growls, "that's a good girl."

The flesh between my legs swells, throbs, pulsates to a beat that mirrors the nerve that throbs at his temple. My nipples bead, moisture pools in my core. Why did his approval just turn my world upside down? Like I have spent my entire life searching for it?

"Baron?" I whisper, "What will I have to do?"

He peels back his lips and his teeth sparkle. "Everything I ask of you."

"And what would that be?"

"To submit to my every wish, to trust me to do what is best for you. To allow me to play with you, fuck you, bend you over and bury myself inside you." He leans in closer and I have to tilt my head back to meet his gaze. "Your job will be to be on your back, thighs spread wide, to ride my cock and come all over my dick when I tell you to. To suck on my shaft if, and when, I decide you are allowed to. To turn over and loan me your arse if I decide that's where I want to take you."

My cheeks flush, the drumming between my legs seems to grow big, bigger, huge enough to take over my body. Liquid heat seeps through my veins. Sweat beads my palms. Oh, god, I want him to do all of that, and more. I want him to use me as his personal fuck toy, to make me hurt for his pleasure, to take me like I am his. To empty himself inside of me like he belongs to me.

"What would you have me do first?"

His gaze intensifies. "You don't get to ask the questions." His voice lowers to a hush, and I shiver. "Do you understand?"

I nod.

"Good." He pulls away and I lower my legs. He shrugs off his jacket, tosses it aside, then in one smooth move, reaches behind him, and with one arm, pulls off his shirt. OMG, that smooth move, that perfect, gloriously masculine, confident move... I gulp. My throat dries. All the moisture seems to have emptied to the space between my legs. His biceps flex and his chest planes undulate. I take in the expanse of his gorgeous chest, the sculpted eight-pack—yeah, definitely eight-pack—the concave stomach, the trail of hair disappearing down into his waist band. He pulls off his boots and socks, then unzips his pants and peels them off, along with his boxers. His cock springs free. Thick, long, it points up, the head dark and swollen, a vein running up from the bottom to meet the wetness that shimmers at the crown. It's a beautiful cock. As beautiful as Edward's. I swallow. This is wrong. I shouldn't be comparing them, I shouldn't. Why the hell can't I stop thinking of one without the other? Especially when he is standing in front of me, gloriously naked?

Baron rotates his shoulders. He cracks his neck and the sound seems too loud in the space. My nerve endings pop. I take in a breath and my lungs burn. All of the oxygen in the room seems to have been sucked in by this larger-than-life asshole who looks me up and down.

"Part your legs."

I blink.

"Now."

I instantly widen my thighs. His gaze drops down to my core and his breathing intensifies. His nostrils flare. "Look at you," he murmurs. "Already wet and glistening. You're throbbing for me, aren't you, little girl? Can't wait to have my cock in your pussy. Can't wait for me to impale you, to thrust inside you, and work my shaft in and out of you. To bury myself in you to the hilt and nail you until you can't move for days."

"Oh." A moan bleeds from my lips. My pussy throbs. My stomach clenches. Moisture drools from my core. "Baron, please," I moan. "Please, please, please."

"Hmm." He winds his fingers around his fat dick and pumps himself, once, twice. His shaft increases in length, thickens, swells, and the crown throbs; precum drips from the slit on the head and my mouth waters. My fingertips tingle and I curl my fingers at my side.

"Do you want to touch me?"

I nod.

"Can't wait to take me down your throat, and wrap your tongue around my length and suck me until I come?"

My pussy squeezes in on itself. The emptiness in my core grows bigger, wider, clawing at me, tugging on me, wanting, needing to feel that beautiful dick of his in between my legs.

"Yes." I gasp. "Yes, Baron."

"Not yet."

I blink.

"On your knees, little girl."

"What?"

"Don't ask me to repeat myself."

I slide down from the counter, then sink to my knees.

"Good girl."

I flush. Shit, this is crazy. Why do I like his compliments? Why is it so important that he praise me? My nipples pebble. My breasts seem to swell. My pussy lips are so engorged...too engorged. I need relief. I need to find a way to fill that gaping space in between them. I need... I squeeze my thighs together and he clicks his tongue.

"What?" I scowl.

"No cheating."

"What do you mean?"

"You can't give yourself relief."

"I wasn't."

"No lying, Eve."

I huff. "I wasn't..."

"Yes, you were."

"No."

"Yes."

"Finally, something you're saying yes to."

He chuckles. "Smart and sassy. Gorgeous and full of spirit. Your mouth is as beautiful as your cunt, you know that?"

I swallow. Heat flushes my skin...which feels too tight for my body. My scalp tingles. My toes curl. Every part of me seems to be awakening. Parts of me that I never knew existed seem to be coming alive. My core trembles. My chest hurts. Liquid heat pools in my belly.

"Baron," I whine, "please."

His lips kick up. And that smirk. OMG. So hot, so mean. He reaches for a towel then squats down in front of me. His thigh muscles bunch, his chest planes flex, and his biceps make that little twitch that nearly drives me insane. I swallow, watch as he drags the towel about my shoulders, down my chest, across my breasts, my stomach, my thighs, in between my legs. I shudder. And for all that, his touch is impersonal, almost clinical, as he dries me. He tosses the towel aside, then grabs another and drops it over my shoulders. "Stay." He rises to his feet, and damn him, but that means I am at eye level with his glorious, fat peen. Argh. My mouth waters. My lips part. I reach forward and he steps back. What the—? I tip up my chin, and he waggles a finger at me. "Not yet, Eve."

"But I wanna..." Did I just whine? I whined. What the hell is he doing to me? I am a strong independent woman, ready to forge ahead to make a mark on the world on my terms. This...mewling, writhing creature, who'd do anything for her master... Her lover? This isn't me. And hold on, why am I thinking of him as my master? Or my lover, for that matter? Considering we haven't even slept together. Okay, so he'd made me come. Hard. More than once. And now he's standing in all his naked glory in front of me, smirking down at me, with a twist of those gorgeous, kissable, pouty lips that I want to bite down on.

His grin widens. His eyes twinkle. Of course, he knows exactly how turned on I am just now. Jerk.

"You wanna come, little Eve?" He places his palm against my cheek. "Do you?"

"You know I do."

He nods, "Pass your first test, and we'll see."

Wait... What?

Turning, he stalks out.

The bastard heads out of the bathroom, leaving me there on my knees. Naked. At least, I am not cold because he'd wrapped the towel around me. Still... Asshole. I stay where he's left me. My knees begin to hurt. My thighs spasm. A bead of sweat slides down my back and I shake off my towel. Thanks to the earlier hot shower, I am warm and the remnants of the heat seems to cling to the very air that I breathe in. My left shoulder blade itches. I reach back to scratch myself, lose my balance and fall over. Gah. This is stupid. Like really stupid. How dare he simply leave me when I am horny? Shit, I've been horny since... Meeting Edward. And his fucking me had only whetted my appetite.

Then, Baron comes along and my needs seem to have escalated to a whole new height. I feel hungry and torn apart inside, and so damn lonely. The physical need to be with him crawls across my skin, lodges in my belly. I rise to my feet, march out, through the bedroom, and the living room. I head for the kitchen, enter, then stop. Baron stands with his back to me. His very naked back. His tight glutes are a work of art. Honed and taut, with the hollows at the sides that you'd expect to find on a ballet dancer. They only serve to highlight just how in a shape he is. Does he, like, spend his every, single, free moment working out? And those thick thighs. Jesus, his thighs deserve a sculpture all their own. Right after his dick, that is. I could spend all of my days and nights worshipping at the altar of his cock. Argh. I did not just think that. I head into the room. He swings around, rakes his gaze up and down my body.

"I was expecting you."

20

Baron

"You...you were?" Her chin wobbles.

I'd wondered how long she'd last there. It had been a test for her as much as for myself. Though why I am stringing her along so...when all it does is heighten my need for her...is anyone's guess. Maybe because I am a masochist?

I smirk and she frowns.

I take a step forward. She freezes. I fold my arms across my chest, jerk my chin to the ground in front of me.

"No way," she grouses. "I am not kneeling, again."

"I'm not asking."

She presses her lips together, then stomps across to me. Her tits jiggle and her thighs shake. My shaft lengthens further, if that were possible. She lowers herself to her knees, folds her arms in front of her.

"Good."

I grab a chair, plant it in front of her. Then pick up the bowl of soup. I sit down on the chair, scoop up the soup and hold it out. "Eat."

She frowns.

"You cooked?"

"If you call opening a can of soup that, then yes."

She darts me a quick glance from under her eyelashes. "Do I detect a tinge of judgement?" She huffs.

"You need to eat better."

"I eat plenty, thank you very much."

"It's not the quantity but the quality that I'm questioning."

"I hate cooking," she mumbles.

"And I like cooking for you."

"Oh." She opens her mouth, and I slide the spoon between her lips. "Eat first. You are going to need your energy."

She swallows, stares at me. "For what?"

"What do you think?"

Her cheeks tinge. She parts her lips and the sight of her wet plump lips? Bloody hell. This was a bad idea. I should have taken her earlier. But that...would not have been right. Not when she still hadn't recovered from her earlier run-in with those men. I tighten my fingers around the spoon, which jerks. I dip it back in the bowl, continue to feed her.

She takes a few more mouthfuls, then jerks her chin in my direction. "You're not eating."

"I will...soon."

"The soup's almost finished."

"That's not my dinner."

"Eh?" She frowns, opens her mouth to receive the next spoonful. My cock thickens and my balls tighten. I dip the spoon into the bowl, offer the last of the soup to her. She swallows it, then asks, "Then what will you be eating?"

"What do you think?" I place the bowl on the floor, then straighten.

"You don't mean..." Her face grows redder. "You mean—"

I nod.

"On your back, little Eve."

She sits back on her haunches, then lowers herself onto the floor, her knees bent.

"Part your legs."

She spreads wide and I take in the flush that envelops her chest, the pointed nipples, the curves of her breasts, the delectable plumpness of her belly, below that her tender flesh. Her pussy lips are slightly parted and the shy bud of her clit peers out from under the hood. I slide my foot between her thighs, nudge her slit with my big toe. She shivers, tries to close her legs around the intrusion and I click my tongue. "Remember, you don't get to get yourself off."

"Why not?" she whines. "It's not fair."

"Life's not fair, baby." I rub my big toe up her pussy. "Deal with it."

Her entire body jerks. She lifts her pelvis up, tries to ride my toe. I pull back and her breath hitches. "Bastard," she grumbles.

"Technically, not true. My parents may not be happy with my choices in life so far, but they were married when I was born."

"They didn't like you joining the army?"

"To say the least." I press my entire foot against the warmth of her core and she freezes. I push into her center and she moans.

"S-so," she stutters, "did they know that you were imprisoned?"

"I assume the army informed them."

"And that you were freed?"

"I am sure they know of it."

"Do they know that you're back?"

"You really want to do this now?" I snap. "You want to talk about my family right when I am about to get you off?"

"Y...yes." She swallows.

I withdraw my foot, and she thrusts her pelvis forward, chasing the sensations with her pelvis. Good.

I rake my gaze across her features. "What I do or don't do with respect to my family is not your concern."

"But you are." She scowls. "I mean," she looks to the side, then back at me, "it's just human courtesy, you know. They are your family, surely they must worry about you."

"Trust me, they don't. My mother's too busy with her fundraisers and keeping up appearances. And by the time my father is done taking care of his business, and his various mistresses in different parts of the world, he has no time left for me."

I drag my big toe up her wet melting cunt and she shudders. I swipe it down to her opening, and she writhes under me.

Her tits rise and fall, her breath comes in little gasps, color smears her chest, her cheeks, and her lips are parted as she peers up at me from under heavy eyelids. She's magnificent, and fuck I'll never forget this sight of her ready and open and needy on the floor in front of me.

"What always confused me," I continue in a normal tone, "was that I was an only child and his heir, so you'd think he'd be more worried about me, at least, from the point of view of me inheriting his business, and being the bearer of his legacy. But apparently, that makes no difference to him." I raise a shoulder. "As soon as I turned twenty-one, I accessed the trust fund that my grandfather left me. Then, I left home, never looked back. So, you see, Eve, nope, they don't really care about me. "

I had spent the best part of my teens trying to cope with the aftermath of the incident. And then, there had been Edward. Yeah...another mistake of epic proportions that had been...just like the one I am about to make now. And just like the last time, I am helpless. Unable to stop myself. A starving man who's spotted the first glimmer of an oasis in the desert. And what if that turns out to be a mirage? I stare into the face of the woman who's elicited these feelings inside of me. The woman I had sworn to protect. But who is going to protect her from me?

I pull back my foot, then jerk my chin, "Get up."

"What?" She blinks up at me.

"Up." I straighten. "On your feet."

She scowls back, then rises up.

"Come closer."

She huffs. "Lie down, spread your legs. On your feet... Make up your mind assho—"

I grab her hips, yank her close. She squeaks. I lift her up so she's straddled across my lap. "You want me to fuck you?"

She swallows.

"Do you?"

"Y...yes."

"Good." I reach for the condom I'd placed on the table behind me.

"Ah, Baron?"

I turn to her.

"I am on birth control."

"You are?"

"The only person I was with was Edward and he, uh, he'd been celibate for a long time before he was with me."

I stare at her flushed cheeks. Her thick auburn hair in a halo about her shoulders. I am not jealous that Edward took her virginity. I am not upset that he was with her before me. Who the hell am I kidding? A growl rips out of me. "I am clean too," I hold her gaze, "and I am going to wipe every trace of him from your body."

"Baron," she scolds, "it's not a competition."

"Isn't it?" I grab my dick, and fit it to her opening, thrust up, and in one smooth move, I impale her. She screams, griping my shoulders.

"Omigod, omigod," she chants. "You're too big for me."

"You're so small, Eve," I growl.

She wriggles her hips and I squeeze down to hold her in place. "Wait." I grit my teeth. The heat of her, the warmth, the wetness, the way her pussy welcomes me, clamps down on my shaft, clings to my swollen flesh, as she digs her fingernails into my shoulders and groans.

"Baron, it's too much."

"Not enough," I snap. "Nothing is going to be enough after this."

I bring my hand to her breast and squeeze. A moan bleeds from her lips. The sound coils in my chest, slides down to settle in my belly. My cock throbs, aches with the need to possess her completely. "Goddam you," I snarl. "I wanted to go slow, to make you wait, to hold on until I was sure you were ready, but when I am near you, I lose all sense of control."

"You...you do?" She gasps.

"You're inside me, Eve. You drive me crazy, you know that?"

She brings her hands up to frame my face. Her touch is so soft, so soothing. So very different from anything I've faced in the last few years. So sweet. So everything. A ball of emotion clogs my throat. I swallow it down. Focus on the curvy, little woman who's wrapped around my dick. She brings her thumb to my mouth, and I close my lips around the digit. I suck on it and her chest heaves. Her pussy clenches around my dick. I can't stop the growl that rumbles from me. "I need to be deeper in you."

I pump my hips upward, thrust my shaft into her. Her head falls back and her lips part. She snaps her shoulders back and grips her knees on either side of my thighs.

"Like that," I groan. "Just like that."

I begin to nail her, up and down, up and into her. Inside her. Trying to mark every millimeter of her hot, melting channel. She moans, digs her fingernails deeper into my shoulders, thrusts out her breasts in my face. I bend, close my mouth around a nipple and bite. She cries out. "Oh, Baron, please, please, please, I want to come, I need to come. Please."

"Not yet." I lick her swollen flesh, transfer my attention to her other breast. When I suck on her nipple this time, she groans, then pushes her breast further into my mouth. I curl my lips round the distended flesh, sucking on it, digging my teeth into the curve of her tit and she cries out. She tilts her hips, pushing down on me, trying to ride me, and find a rhythm that will get me closer, deeper, much deeper inside her. "Fuck this."

I rise, and with my dick still in her, walk over to the dining room table. I shove the plates and the cutlery aside—yeah, I had actually set the table... Imagine that. What had I been thinking? That I could get us to eat a civilized dinner? I should have known better. Known that as soon as I touched her, things would get out of control. F-u-c-k. I lower her to the table, then hook my arms under her knees and wrap her legs over my shoulders.

She reaches for me and I shake my head. I twist her wrists together, shove them over her head, and wrap her fingers around the edge of the table.

She gazes up at me, pupils blown, the darkness of her irises bleeding out until only a circle of green remains around the circumference.

"Hold on," I order.

"Wh...what?"

"I am going to fuck you now."

21

Ava

Fuck me, now? What the hell? What has he been doing so far? He pulls back then thrusts forward. I am so wet that he slides in to the hilt in one smooth move.

The breath whooshes out of me. His length throbs inside of me, filling me, stretching me to the brim. He seems impossibly big, too thick to have forced his way into my tiny channel. A moan bleeds from my lips. His gaze darts to my mouth. He leans down, rubs his thumb across my lips. "Open," he rasps.

I part my lips and he slides his finger inside. I lick his digit, absorb the salty, testosterone-filled taste of his skin. He slides his other hand under me, inserts his digit inside my pucker and goosebumps pop on my skin. Shit, shit, shit. What's he doing to me? With every hole in my body occupied by him, he begins to fuck me in earnest.

He pulls back, until his cock is poised at the entrance to my channel, then he thrusts forward with such force that the entire table creaks. He propels his hips, rams into me again. My body jerks; the table groans. Heat radiates from the point of contact as he locks his gaze on mine. I can't look away from his hard features—the blue eyes glowing as if lit from within; those massive shoulders of his that roll and flex with each push forward; the bead of sweat that trickles down his cheek. A vein throbs at his temple, the very air around him saturated with the fierceness of his desire. I can't take my eyes off of him. He pulls out, then pistons his hips forward and sinks into me until he bottoms out against my pelvic floor. His balls slap against my arse; the angle pushes the hardness of his dick into the sensitive lower skin of my slit and tendrils of heat flare out from the contact.

He curves his finger inside my back hole, as he pulls his thumb from my mouth, only to replace it with his tongue. He kisses me, sucks on my tongue like he's trying to absorb my very essence into his blood, and that's when the climax sweeps out from my lower belly. It screams up as he releases my mouth, only to command, "Come for me, come all over my dick, sweet Eve."

I shatter. The orgasm crashes over me. Sparks of brightness overwhelm my vision. When it clears, I blink, watch him watching me with an expression I cannot fathom.

He reaches down, brushes his lips over mine, as he begins to pump into me, once-twice-thrice before his features contort. He holds my gaze as he empties himself inside of me with a groan, and oh, my god, that is the hottest sight I have ever seen.

He pulls his thumb out from my back hole, leans over me as he rests his weight on his elbows on either side of me. That's when the table creaks, sways, then collapses. I scream as the world tilts. The next moment, I am on his chest. "What the—?" I blink. "How did you move that quickly?"

"Training," he mutters.

I glance at him, then at the remnants of my poor dining table, then back at his face. A chuckle bubbles up. His lips curve.

"OMG," I snort, "I can't believe we broke the dining table."

"Guess my weight was too much for it?" he suggests.

"It's never seen so much action as in the last fifteen minutes."

"At least, now you don't have to disinfect it," he offers, and that only makes me laugh harder.

"This...this gives an entire new meaning to nailing the table," I sputter.

"You know what you should do after you have sex on a dining table right?"

"What...?" I wipe my tears. "What?"

"Table spoon," he declares.

I stare, then burst out laughing. I laugh until tears roll down my cheeks. Glance up to find him staring at me.

"What?" I blink, "What is it?"

"Nothing." He swallows.

"Are you sure? You seem pale."

"It's," he shakes his head, "it's just when you laughed..." He peers into my face. "It reminded me of..."

"What?"

His gaze intensifies. He glances to the side then back at me, "Seriously, babe, it's nothing."

"Hmm," I pout, "you're hiding something from me."

"And here I was sure you'd tell me off for my poor joke."

"That it was." I nod, "And by the way, you're trying to change the topic."

"Am I that obvious?" He winces, "Clearly, I am losing my touch. That's what happens when I try to have a conversation on an empty stomach."

I stare at him with suspicion.

"What do you mean?"

"I mean," he pulls out of me, then sits up and rises to his feet, taking me with him. He sets my feet on the floor, then continues, "I still haven't eaten. You ready to serve me my dinner?" He waggles his eyebrows.

I glance around the kitchen then back at him. "There's, uh, some leftover pizza in the fridge."

"That's not what I am talking about."

He takes a step forward. I circle the mess of the collapsed dining table, not to mention the dishes he'd shoved to the floor earlier. I am going to have to do without them, considering I don't have the money to replace them. I glance up to find he's moved closer. I skitter back, and he points a finger at me, "Don't move."

"Oh, no, you're not going to command me to stay, just so you can catch me."

"It's not that." He glances around at the floor around my feet.

"Then what is it."

"Just hold it." He puts up a hand. I raise my leg to take a step to the side. He leaps forward, across the broken table, drops to his knees and grabs my ankle before I can place it on the floor. "Hey!" I lose my balance, grab at his head, dig my fingers into his hair to right myself. "What's wrong with you?"

"You were going to step on a piece of crockery." He holds up a shard that must have broken off from one of the plates.

"Oh, no."

"Oh, yes." He smirks, tosses the shard onto the pile of broken furniture that had once been my dining table. Then he stands, scoops me up and tosses me over his shoulder.

"What the—?" I squeak. He turns, steps over the fragments of broken dishes and wooden splinters, and stopping only to switch off the light, heads out of the kitchen.

"Where are you taking me?" I ask, and darn it, my voice sounds breathless... And it's not because I'm turned on. Yea, right, because let's face it, being hauled over his shoulder like I weigh nothing... Okay, it's fucking sexy, and hot. My stomach flip-flops; I squeeze my thighs together to stop the itch that's gnawing at my core. Bloody hell, he just fucked me and now I want him to go again. Gah!! Shut up, slut, what the hell is wrong with you?

He veers into the bedroom, stalks over to the bed and throws me down. I bounce once on my back, my hair flowing around my face. I shake back the strands, stare up to find him looming over me; a wicked smirk curls his lips.

"No, no, no," I mutter as I crawl back on the bed. The light from the half-open door of the bathroom streams in. His silhouette is massive, a dark, solid figure that eats up all the light. He reaches the edge of the bed, plants his hands on his hips. "We have a problem," he rumbles.

"Do we?"

He nods. "I still haven't had dessert."

"D...dessert?" I squeak.

His grin widens. "The best kind, babe, where I get to eat all of it."

My core clenches, liquid heat crawls between my legs, and I squeeze my thighs together. "Th...that sounds nice."

He chuckles, "Oh, you have no idea, baby."

He places a knee on the bed. I push away from him. He swoops down, grabs my ankle, and I yell. Turn on my hands and knees, try to crawl away. He simply hauls me back, until my feet touch the edge of the bed. My heart beat ratchets up; my pulse pounds at my temples. He grabs my other ankle and I yell. Flail out with my legs, or try to, because he has a grip on me, and he's stronger than me. So he's, pretty much, restraining me, and I don't want to escape, not really. But damn, if I'm going to allow him to conquer me so quickly. Adrenaline laces my blood. I kick out with my leg, and must take him by surprise, because his grip loosens. I scream, lunge forward, throwing all of my weight into it. Only, he grabs my free ankle and hauls me back again. A giggle breaks free, then another. Damn it, I am getting hysterical. My pulse rate speeds up. My heart hammers so fast, I am sure it's going to break out of my chest. And my eyes start to burn. "Let me go, you oaf!" I howl.

He releases his hold on my legs instantly, and I pause. What the—? Did he unhand me? He did set me free. He did— I move forward, but he's already on me. He lowers his body over mine, pins me down with his hips. The warmth of him enfolds me; his strength cocoons me; his big body is all around me. "Shh!" He curls his fingers about my nape, "Shh, baby, no need to panic. I'll take care of you."

The hold on my neck is erotic and comforting at the same time. My breasts swell and my nipples harden. I stay frozen until he begins to massage my neck.

"Ah..." A sigh escapes me as he digs his thumb into a knot right at the point of where my neck meets my shoulder.

"Easy, darlin'," he croons, like I am a skittish horse or a rabbit about to dart away. He applies enough pressure that I lower my cheek into the mattress. "Relax," he drawls, as he continues to dig his magic fingers down the length of my neck, into my shoulder. I sense him move, and glance sideways to find he's straddling me. His thick thighs bunch as he leans forward, and wraps his warm palms about my shoulders. He digs his fingers into my muscles, into the knots, and with circular movements soothes them away.

"That's sooo good." My shoulders relax and my muscles unwind. A delicious warmth grips me. I close my eyes as he continues to tend to me. He pushes my hair off my neck, I feel a slight touch and crack open one eye. "Did you just kiss me on my neck?" I ask

"What do you think?" I hear the laughter in his voice and can't stop my lips from curving in response.

"I think you're too macho for just tender gestures."

"You'd be right." He slides his fingers against my scalp, and my entire body hums. Who knew I had an erogenous zone there?

"Mmmm," I glance up at him from under heavy eyelashes, "this is wayyy too relaxing."

"Good." He continues to massage my neck, my shoulders, down my shoulder blades, my hips. By the time he reaches my butt, I am so far gone, I don't even react as he squeezes each butt cheek. My pussy hums, my thigh muscles respond, the rest of me is way too at ease. I sense him move again, as he slides down, feel the heat of his body, as he crouches over me. Then a wetness invades my most forbidden place. I squeak, angle my head and see him lick me from my slit up the valley between my arse cheeks.

"Omigod." Heat flushes my cheeks. "What...what are you doing?"

"Shh, don't tense up now." He reaches up to slide his hand under my breast. He cups it, then pinches my nipple. My pussy instantly clenches, as does my arsehole. He makes a guttural sound deep in his throat as I moan.

"Baron, please," I gasp, "I am not ready yet."

He simply releases his hold on my breast, only to shove three fingers into my melting core. He begins to work me there and moisture pools between my legs. "Good girl," he croons, his breath hot against my hip. He drags my cum up my seam and smears it across my pucker.

I tense and he massages my hip. "Relax," he orders.

"Are you... are you...?"

"Going to take your arse?"

He pulls out of my pussy only to squeeze my arsecheeks and pry them apart. I whip around in time to see him spit on my arsehole.

22

Baron

"Did you just do what I think you did?" Her voice wavers.

I glance up at her, "What do you think I did?" I hold her gaze as I rub my spit into her back opening.

"Did you just...spit...there?" Her face reddens further. So fucking cute. This girl is so naive. How the hell did I get involved with her? More to the point, how had she gotten entangled with first Edward and then me? Even more worrying, why the hell am I developing feelings for her? I am, no question. It's why I've tried to walk away from her so many times, and failed. It's why I lean over and press a kiss to her pouting mouth.

I swipe my tongue across her mouth, then deepen the kiss. I bite down on her lips and she gasps. I ease my tongue inside, while I slide one finger inside her back hole. Her body shudders. I cup her pussy, press down on her clit. She moans and I work my finger past the circle of her sphincter.

I lean back, watch her features closely as I saw my finger in and out of her. I add a second finger and she swallows. Her eyelids shutter down.

"Look at me, babe."

She cracks open her eyes, and I hold her gaze as I scissor my fingers inside of her.

"Baron." Her shoulders shudder. I slide three fingers of my other hand inside her pussy, then proceed to fuck her with my digits. In and out, in and out. Her pussy clamps down on my fingers; her mouth opens in surprise. I sense the orgasm sweep up her body, her features tense in that way which indicates she's close, so close.

"Baron, I need to... I have to..."

"Come," I command. And her eyes roll back in her head. A cry tumbles from her lips and she arches back, then collapses. Moisture gushes out from her core and I scoop up her juices. I pull my fingers out of her backhole, before I smear her juices at the entrance. Then I position my dick against her puckered opening.

She moans and her eyelids flutter open. "Did I come again?" She blinks.

"And you will many more times before the night is out." I ease the crown of my shaft into her tight opening. She tenses and I bend and kiss her cheek, the shell of her ear. I bite down on her earlobe and she shudders. I slip inside her a little more. The heat, the tightness... If her pussy is heaven, surely this is...as close to hell as it gets. A hell where pain and pleasure weave around each other like the coils of Satan's snake in darkness.

"Baron?" She frowns at me. "Are you okay?"

I shake my head. "I should be asking you that."

"It's just for a second there, you seemed to—"

"Black out?"

She nods.

"It's just..." I glance down at where my dick disappears inside her arse and my balls tighten. "You, Eve. It's you. Your body, your voice, your scent, your seductive holes that I can't keep out of."

She folds her arms under her cheek, watches me with those large green eyes. And something inside me, knotted for so long, seems to dissolve. Break. Disappear like it never existed. But that's a lie. I am marked, tainted by my past. She still has her future ahead of her. And here I am...taking everything she's offering, snatching up what she doesn't, demanding that she give herself to me. For what? So I can stain her with the same brush that painted me? So my mistakes will taint her?

I grip her arse cheeks, pry them apart. "Let me in, Eve."

She swallows and her breathing speeds up.

"I won't stop until I have taken you, marked you everywhere he has."

She bites down on her lower lip and my cock twitches. I tilt my hips, push forward, sink in another millimeter. She thrusts her hips back, and I push past the tight ring of her sphincter. A groan bleeds from her lips. My belly clenches. Heat grips me and sweat slides down my back. I release her butt, only to grab her hips and pull. "Up, on your hands and knees," I snap.

She pushes up as I pump forward, and sink inside her channel. A growl rips from me. I lean over her, press a kiss to her shoulder. "You okay, babe?"

She shudders.

"Tell me you're okay, Eve, that you want me to continue."

She hunches her shoulders.

"Eve?"

She nods.

"Say that you want me to continue."

"I..." she gulps, "I want you to fuck my arse."

Thank fuck.

I lean over, kiss the side of her neck. Bring my arm around her waist as I press my mouth to her shoulder, the damp skin between her shoulder blades. "You're fucking gorgeous, you know that? You're the kind of woman I never thought I'd meet."

"You don't have to be nice to me." She chuckles. "You're already in my arse."

I laugh. "That mouth of yours." I reach up and nuzzle her hair. "I fucking love it."

"And I love..." She gasps. "Uh, I think I am falling for you."

"Wait, what did you say?" I pause. "Repeat yourself."

"It was nothing." She turns her head in my direction. "Honestly, just a slip of the tongue."

I frown. "It didn't seem that way, from where I am."

"No, Baron, really, it's just... You know..." She raises a shoulder. "Just ignore me."

I glare at her. "Don't you dare develop feelings for me, Eve."

She half smiles. "What would you do if I did?"

"I'll..." I begin to withdraw and she reaches down between us and grabs my balls. She squeezes and my thigh muscles spasm. "Fuck."

"Exactly." She massages me, tugs on my balls. She handles them like they belong to her... Like I belong to her... Fuck... No, no, no. What the hell am I thinking? This can't happen. She can't fall for me...and I... Fuck me... I am already half-way in love with her. I knew I was developing feelings for her, but love? Fucking love. What is that about?

She tugs on my balls, drags her hands up to where my dick is still embedded inside her. She circles her hips, begins to move, and heat races out from the point of contact. I wrap my fingers about her hips, pull out, then thrust in. She releases me, plants her hands on the bed, and thrusts out her butt. This woman... She's going to kill me with her openness, her willingness, her surrender to me... How she accepts me into her body, her heart... How she can bare her soul and share her deepest feelings. If only I could be half as open as that... Perhaps, we could have a future. And when she had laughed earlier... I could have sworn she was the same woman I'd seen on the railway platform not too long ago.

And yet, I can't share my past with her. Can't give her everything she deserves. Not when my secrets hold me back. Not when everything inside me tells me I need to find a way out before things get more complicated. Just for one night though, I can hold her, cherish her, fuck her like she is mine, love her like she is the only one for me.

And then when you leave her? What's she going to do then? Are you going to break her heart like that asshole Edward did?

But she loves Ed. She doesn't feel anything close enough for me. She did say that she thinks she's falling for me. After almost saying she loves me... which is precisely why I need to leave in the morning, before things become more complicated.

I pull out, then slide inside her, slowly, slowly, every millimeter of my shaft dragging against her channel. Her body trembles. Her hips twitch. I retreat, until I am poised at the edge of her opening, then thrust forward. Her body bucks. The bed creaks. I impale her, bury myself in her tightness and she cries out. Heat flushes my skin, tendrils of sensations pour out from where we are joined. "Fuck, Eve, F-u-c-k." I begin to move in earnest.

She throws her head back, pushes back, meets my every thrust. "Omigod, Baron, I'm coming, I'm going to—"

"Come with me, Eve," I growl. "Come right now."

She cries out again and her body shudders. Her shoulders snap back before she curves her body, screaming as she collapses.

I wrap one arm about her waist, holding her up as I pump into her, again and again. The tension at the base of my spine coils tightly, twists in on itself as I cram myself inside her one last time. My balls draw up, the vibrations flare out from my groin, up my back, to my extremities, and I empty myself inside of her.

23

Ava

I come awake to the sensation of something hot and wet lapping at my cunt. I part my legs, tilt my hips to allow better access. He eases his tongue inside my aching pussy, saws it in and out of me. A warmth trembles out from the point of contact. Heat suffuses my skin. I moan and arch my back, pushing out my breasts. My nipples pebble, becoming throbbing points of pain. I bring my hands up and squeeze them. A shudder runs down my spine. My belly flutters as he increases the pace of his ministrations. He drags his hands up my inner thighs, urging me to spread my legs wider, then uses his fingers to pull my pussy lips apart as he swipes his tongue around my swollen clit. A groan bleeds from my lips. My toes curl. He continues to swirl his tongue across my melting core, then thrusts it back inside my channel. He plunges that sinful tongue in and out of me, in and out, until shudders grip me. He releases my pussy lips, only to grind the heel of his hand into my clit, even as he slides a hand around and eases a finger inside my back hole. I moan again, release my breasts and bury my fingers in his thick hair. I tug on the strands and a growl rumbles up his massive chest. The vibrations shudder across my core, and that only turns me on even more. The climax ripples up from my toes, up my thighs, eddies in my core, before it slides up my spine. I arch my back, throw my head back and moan as the orgasm grips me. My core clenches and moisture slides down from between my legs. He continues to eat me out, slurping at me like I am the most delicious fruit ever. He licks me clean, then moves up to fit his lips to mine. He kisses me and I taste myself and him—that edgy danger that is so very Baron. He moves onto his back, pulls me onto him, then kisses the top of my head. "Sleep, little Eve."

His voice soothes me and I burrow into him, and let the darkness overwhelm me.

When I wake next, I am tucked into his side.

He's sprawled out, taking up most of the bed, his arm flung out, with my head pillowed on it. I rake my gaze across his chest, down to where the sheets are pooled around his waist...and tented...at his crotch. Oh! O-k-a-y, doesn't this guy ever sleep? Is it morning wood? Must be, right? I glance up and my gaze clashes with his brilliant blue eyes. I swallow, watch him watch me. His hair is ruffled, thanks to how I'd pulled on it, no doubt. His jaw is shadowed and he looks ruffled, more relaxed than I've ever seen him, and yet, also alert. He's always alert, my Baron.

What? Why did I call him my Baron? He's not my...anything. My lover? Maybe... Nothing else. Except... Shit. I'd almost blurted out that I love him, then tried to cover it by saying I think I'm falling for him. How lame is that? And he...hadn't responded in kind. Of course, not. Why would he? I am simply a job for him... Albeit, one from whom he can also draw out orgasms... Not that I am complaining about that... But why the hell did I have to fall for him? More to the point, why tell him? Clearly, the sex is addling my brain. That's the only reason I hadn't been able to shut up. And he... Well?

Clearly, he has no such issues. He looks w-a-y too awake, like he had a good sleep and is ready to face the world. Like a night of mind-blowing sex is normal for him. Like he hadn't just brought me to orgasm so many times that I could still feel the imprint of his dick and his tongue in between my legs. Hmm. Wonder if I can't return the favor? I mean, fair's fair. Right? Without taking my gaze off of him, I slide my hand under the sheet. When I close my fingers about his already erect cock, his nostrils flare.

Oh, good. He's not as impervious as he'd like me to think. I grip his shaft, and my fingers barely meet around the circumference. Shit, is this guy huge or what? I massage him from base to crown and I swear his cock swells further. His gaze narrows. His shoulders tense. He doesn't move though. Simply holds my gaze with those intense blue eyes of his as I squeeze his shaft and knead his length over and over again. His jaw hardens. A pulse leaps to life at his temple. And a shiver runs down my spine. I slide down until I'm settled between his legs, still under the cover. I lower my head toward his cock and his chest planes flex. I bring my fingers to his base, hold him upright, then tip my chin down and run my tongue across the head. A growl rumbles up his chest, and my core clenches at his response. With this man...

Everything he says and does seems to be calculated to arouse me, and damn him, he's not even trying. He just has to be in the same space for his pheromones to saturate the air, and I'd be turned on. Moisture pools between my legs as I dip my head and close my mouth around the swollen crown. His eyelids flutter down. He glares at me from under those thick eyelashes... which only emphasize how masculine the rest of him is. I swirl my tongue around the circumference of the head and his belly muscles jump. I bring my other hand down, cup his balls and squeeze, and a groan rips from him. His biceps tense, his shoulders stiffen. His features grow harder, and damn, if this isn't the most erotic sight I have ever seen. I may be sucking his dick, but I have him by his balls. Adrenaline laces my blood. A feeling of power grips me. I massage his balls, tilt my head and take him down my throat.

Instantly, my gag reflex kicks in. I cough. Tears well up, spit drools from my mouth and I pull back, only he clamps his hand on the back of my head and holds me in place.

"You'd better finish what you started, Eve."

Oh. His hard voice chafes across my skin. My nerve endings pop. Every part of me seems to flare to life. To challenge him. To please him. I stare at him, forcing my neck muscles to relax, to breathe through my nose, as I stay poised with his dick on the edge of my mouth. I lick him again, drag my tongue across the sensitive skin of the crown and his lips twist.

"That the best you can do?" he rumbles, and my belly flip-flops. I'll show you what I can do, you jerk. I dip my chin, and slide him inside my mouth. I close my lips around him, drag my teeth across the silky skin and his smirk vanishes. I breathe through my nose as I take him down my throat, and a growl rips from him. His fingers dig into my hair and he tugs. Goosebumps flare across my skin. I begin to suck him in earnest, pull back, then slide him inside my mouth...and again. I swallow and his chest rises and falls. "Fuck, Eve. Fuck." He tugs on my hair, so I pull back, then pushes me down. His gaze transfixed on my lips.

"The sight of my dick disappearing in your mouth, woman," he growls, "I'll never forget it as long as I live."

He begins to fuck my mouth in earnest, maneuvering me into just the right position that gives him the most satisfaction. Throughout, I continue to massage his balls, squeezing, tugging, watching as his body responds. As his thigh muscles clench, as his belly tightens, as color smears his cheeks.

His shaft thickens, broadens, fills my mouth, stretches my jaws. Pain slides down my neck; tears flow from my eyes. Still, I don't protest. Still, his gaze holds mine. The skin around his eyes stretches. He increases the pace, pulls me back, then forward, until all I can see is him, taste the salty-dark essence of him, smell his edgy, masculine, mountain breeze scent, now tinged with something more lush... Tinged with me. His balls draw up and my core clenches; my toes curl. Spit drips from my mouth and he shudders. "Fuck, I'm coming, Eve. I'm going to come in your mouth and you'd better swallow every last drop, you feel me?"

His hips jerk and he flings out his other arm, grabs the sheet, as his hold on my hair tightens. He growls as he shoots his cum down my throat. The hot liquid fills my mouth, spills over, and he reaches down and scoops up the overflow. He pulls out of me, uses his dick to smear his cum across my lips, then yanks me up and fixes his mouth to mine.

24

Baron

The taste of me on her lips... It's potent and erotic and so bloody right. I turn until she's once more on her back, under me, where she belongs. My woman. Mine. I soften the kiss, lick her lips, swipe my tongue across the seam of her mouth. She moans at the back of her throat, and the sound goes straight to my head. My heart stutters and something hot fills my chest. I tear my mouth from hers, peer into her face. "What the fuck are you doing to me?" I mutter.

"The same thing you're doing to me." Her features are serious, her gaze slightly clouded. Her pupils still dilated from the blow job she gave me.

I cup her cheek, drag my thumb across her lips. "That..." I swallow, "that was incredible."

Her mouth curves, her eyes sparkle up at me, and something shifts again in my chest. Shit, this isn't good. This can't happen. I can't let myself get close—okay, closer—to her. Considering I already have feelings for her.

I pull back, then swing my legs over the side of the bed and stand up. "Don't you have a class to teach?"

"I do," she replies, "but uh... I thought I could cancel?"

"Don't." Shit, that...didn't come out right. I turn around to find her staring at me, a hurt look in her eyes, and my heart, my stupid heart breaks. Bloody hell, since when have I become so tuned into her? I sit down on the edge of the bed and pull her close. "Hey, hey, come on." I rub her back. "I only meant, don't change your plans for me."

"Don't do that," she snarls. "Seriously, Baron, don't pull away from me."

"I..." I rake my gaze across her features, "I'm not."

"You are."

"It's your imagination."

"Oh, please." She tosses her hair over her shoulder, "You jump out of bed like you can't bear to be with me a minute more, when—"

"The truth is exactly the opposite."

She frowns. "What do you mean?"

I release her, then stand up again... Only to put distance between us, because if I continue to hold her in my arms, there's no way I'll be able to focus long enough to get my thoughts together. And right now, that's important. I need to get my shit together long enough to establish boundaries. It's the only way I can get through this—whatever this is between us—intact.

"I am way too attracted to you. I am developing feelings for you, Eve, and that's a problem."

"You don't say?" she mutters.

"You don't understand."

"Then explain it to me." She slides out of bed and stands in front of me, fully, gloriously naked. Fuck. "Explain why it is that we can't be together."

"You are Edward's—"

"He left me."

"He'll be back."

"You don't know that," she protests.

"You don't know Edward."

"And you do?"

"Better than you do."

"Somehow, I doubt that." She plants her hands on her hips, "You may've known the boy he once was, but I know the man he is now. The man who walked away from his calling because he—" Her voice fades. Her lips turn down.

"Exactly," I fold my arms across my chest, "he walked away from the Church for you. Do you really think he's not going to come back to you?"

"If he felt that much, why did he leave me in the first place?" She tips up her chin. "If he was that...into me, as you say, if he really felt something for me, why didn't he tell me so? Why didn't he stay and give me a chance to support him? To be with him? To help him work through things?" She throws up her hands. "Hell, why didn't he just come out and tell me how he felt about me?"

"Because love isn't that simple."

She firms her lips. "You're telling me?"

I stare at her flushed features, the stubborn set to her jaw, the resolve in her eyes, and blow out a sigh. "This was a mistake."

"What?" Her jaw drops.

"This." I point at the bed. "This should have never happened."

"Are you fucking kidding me?" she yells and I stiffen.

"I am very serious."

"So am I." She closes the distance between us and stabs a finger into my chest. "Are you seriously saying you regret what happened last night?"

"I regret," I swallow, "I regret letting things get this far between us. I should have stayed away. Shouldn't have allowed you to seduce me, I—"

"I seduced you? I...?" She shoves at my chest. "You're a jerk, you know that?"

Tell me about it. If this is the only way I can get her to stop thinking about me, if I can make her think I am enough of a douche—guaranteed, since I am... But if I allow her to see me that way, maybe she'll walk away. If she's angry enough with me, perhaps she'll never look at me again. Because, God forbid, one look from her, one touch... If she's anywhere in my vicinity, I won't be able to resist her.

So, I am a coward, that way. And what I am going to say is going to hurt her, but if it means it will put distance between us, then it's worth it. It's the only way to ensure that I, and that bastard Edward, can get through this with some semblance of a friendship alive between us.

If that means I am going to rip my heart out and pretend it never beat for her in the first place, then so be it.

"Now you know." I smirk, then draw myself up to my full height. "It was intense, babe. I'll give you that."

"Intense?" She scowls.

"Yeah, and your body...and your mouth...and man, that tight arse of yours... I'm glad I got to tap it when I could. In fact, I don't know of any other woman who enjoys anal as much as you do. It's what makes you special."

"I...it does?" She pales.

"Totally. One-hundred percent." I nod. "As for your pussy... So hot, so sweet, hell, I could write odes to it... But you know, you're not the only fish in the sea."

She opens and shuts her mouth. "What are you talking about? This is not like you Baron." Her lips tremble. "Why are you saying such hurtful things to me?"

"It's the truth."

"It's not."

"Unfortunately, yes." I bend my knees and peer into her eyes, "You see, I said and did what was needed so I could—"

"Get in my bed?"

I smile. "Knew you were smart. Knew there had to be a reason Edward was so hung up on you."

"Don't talk about him," she bursts out. "He was honorable. He wanted me enough to walk away from what was most important to him. Even when he left, he made sure I was taken care... If he'd only known what kind of a man you've turned into."

"And what kind is that?"

"A two-timing liar, who couldn't wait to bed the very woman you'd been tasked with protecting." Her features grow stricken. "That's why you did it. You wanted to get back at him. You wanted to get revenge on him...for whatever went wrong between the two of you... Which is why you left in the first place."

"If that's what you think..." I raise my shoulders.

"It's not what I think. It's the truth." Her chest heaves. "Admit it. All of this was part of your plan so you could hurt Edward. So you could throw it in his face when he returns."

"Sure." My heart begins to thud. Sweat beads my palms. Turn away from her. Get out of here while she's still upset. So, she'll believe the worst of me. So, she'll never be tempted to come near me again. If I can't stick around long enough to be here for Edward, the least I can do is make sure that when he returns—and he will return—he has his woman to turn to.

"Good chat, babe," I pat her head, "but it's getting late and I know you must be anxious to get to work." I pivot, walk out of the bedroom and to the kitchen where I'd run a wash last night. Yeah, I'd managed to wake up long enough to do that, and a few other things, last night, before I'd crawled back into bed and arranged myself around her. I'd pulled her close, spooned her, thrown my leg about her, so every part of me was plastered to her, before I'd fallen asleep. The feel of her soft skin, her curves, the tiny noises of contentment she'd made as she'd cuddled close and slipped deeper into sleep

— Yeah, good thing I have those memories to keep me going. It's all I am going to have... for I'm never going to meet another woman who'll affect me as much as she does.

I shake out my dry clothes, pull them on, then slip into the shoes I'd rescued from the shower last night. They're still damp, but what-fucking-ever. I can live with that... My heart though... How am I going to live without that?

I walk to the door, wrench it open and am about to step through, when footsteps sound behind me.

"Baron," she calls out and I pause. I want to look over my shoulder, want to see her face one last time. The delicate arch of her brow, the lushness of her lips, the curve of her shoulder. I shake my head. No, no, no. If you see her, you'll lose the courage to leave her. It's best you walk away without a second glance. I square my shoulders, stay where I am.

"I'll never forgive you for this."

The hurt in her voice sinks into my veins. Fuck. Fuck. Fuck. I stare straight ahead, "You'll get over it, babe," I say without turning around, "just like I am already over you."

25

"The only person I feel comfortable around completely is my mother. I let my emotions out with her, and for that I am thankful."

-From Ava's Diary

Ava

"Jerk." I stare through the window of my bedroom at the SUV parked across the street. Through the tinted glass, I can make out the outline of the man inside, but not his rough-hewn features, not the breadth of his shoulders, or how he seems to soak all of the oxygen in the space.

Of course, the asshole is still there. God forbid that he break his promise to his friend. Men. I snort. They'd stand by each other... Make sure that no woman can come in between them... And me? What about me? Where do I stand in all this? Nowhere. That's where I am. He'd made that abundantly clear. So why am I still standing here, trying to catch a glimpse of him?

"What's wrong with me?" I turn away and begin to pace the living room. He'd flung that last comment at me, and I had been so shocked, I had allowed him to shut the door in my face. I'd rushed toward him, wanting to get the last word in, hoping that I could stop him, maybe. Maybe I'd held onto a sliver of hope that insisted that he was putting on an act...but...

No, he'd meant it. He'd meant every last, single, hurtful word that he'd carelessly tossed my way. Shit, shit, shit. How could I have allowed myself to become so entangled with this man? I'd allowed him into my life, into my heart. Shit. Tears well up and I wipe them away angrily. I will not cry over him. Will not. My face crumples. I turn around and walk into the bedroom, through to the bathroom and turn on the shower. I stand under the hot water, allowing it to pour over me. Soaking in the warmth, the comfort, the memory of the heat of his body that had curled around me, protecting me, cocooning me when he had last been in here with me. He'd held me, soothed me, rocked me, then carried me out of the cubicle and dried me.

He'd taken care of me...like he'd said he would... Only he hadn't. It had all been an act. Or had it? Damn the man, he had been so convincing. I had been sure that he felt something for me. But then again, what would I know about that? I have so little experience with men. No wonder, I thought I was in love with Edward. Maybe it's the speed with which things took place with him that made me mistake what I felt for him? Maybe I am not really sure what I feel for him... Or for Baron, for that matter. It's just, each time he'd fucked me...it had felt like more than just a shag... It had felt...as good as being with Edward. Shit. Why am I comparing the two of them? They are nothing alike... Except that they know each other. What are the odds, huh? The only two men I've slept with...know each other, hate each other, yet seem to care for each other.

But do either of them care about me?

I sleep with Edward and he leaves me. Then I fall into bed with Baron and he promptly decides to run away from me. Why is it that I seem to be attracted to the same kind of man, and within such a short period of time? The kind who'll shag me, then fuck off at the first sign of feeling something for me? Is it me? Is there something wrong with me that these guys don't stick around?

I switch off the shower, dry myself, then put on my clothes. My phone pings. I walk over to my bedstand, pick up my phone and glance at the text message.

Raisa: Have you made up your mind yet about coming to Dad's wedding?

I stare at the message for another second. Have I made up my mind? No, no, I haven't. It still feels weird to refer to the upcoming event as Dad's wedding. He is my father. He was married to my mother. How can he be getting married again?

That's when the doorbell rings. Baron. It has to be him, right? I replace the phone on the bedstand, rush to the door, and open it. A stranger stands there. He's tall, and broad, his hair shaved close to his scalp. His features are hard, his gaze intense. A sense of danger clings to his shoulders. He should seem threatening, but strangely, he's not.

"Ava Erikson?"

I nod.

"I'm Archer, a friend and associate of Baron's." He tilts his head.

"Associate?" I blink. "What kind of associate?"

"We run a security business together."

Ah! That would explain why Baron seemed so nonchalant with the surveillance duties he had taken on. There's so much I don't about him, though. Not that I've had a chance to ask him about himself either. Every time we've been together, it seems like we've spent time arguing... Not to mention that crazy chemistry between us, which complicated everything. Hell, if I won't take every new piece of information I can get about him. Maybe it will help me understand him better?

"I am here to oversee a delivery." Archer prompts me.

"A delivery?" I frown, "I didn't order anything."

"It's definitely for you." The man's lips kick up in a smile that's not warm but not threatening either.

He moves aside to reveal two men hauling in a table between them.

"It's a table?" I blink.

"A dining table." He nods, "I was told it needed to be put in the kitchen."

"Kitchen?" I know I am gaping, but honestly, this is not what I expected first thing in the morning, and before I've even had my coffee.

"May I?" He gestures to the space behind me.

I move aside, watching as he directs the men to carry the dining table into the living room. They place it there, disappearing inside. I hear the sounds of them moving around, cleaning up the broken pieces of table and dishes. A few minutes later they re-appear, carrying the remnants of my stuff out to their truck, then the new table into the kitchen. They return to the truck for chairs and a large box—on the side of which is printed: Wedgewood. What the—? That's the name of an extremely upscale dinnerware brand, and trust me when I say that it's expensive. So, he's replacing all the crockery, my cheap-ass supermarket-bought crockery that he'd broken when he swept it off the table...because he was in a hurry to make love to me. My cheeks heat. I fold my arms around my waist, look on as a few minutes later, they wish me a good day and leave.

Meanwhile, Archer walks out of the house, reappears at the doorway, with a couple of bags of groceries.

"You bought me groceries?"

"Not me," He stabs his thumb in the direction of the SUV. "The big guy did."

"Oh."

Archer disappears inside the house. I pop my head around the doorway once again, take in the SUV with the tinted windows. Damn it, what are you up to, Baron? Why are you doing this?

I turn around, head to the kitchen, and find it spotless, a newer, better table and newer, better crockery, which Archer puts away for me. He also unloads the bags of groceries, putting perishable items in the fridge. It's surreal.

When he is finished, Archer turns to me. "Thank you for letting us into your home," he murmurs. "Sorry that we intruded."

"Oh, no." I shake my head in disbelief. "Thank you for, uh, cleaning up the mess."

"You're welcome." He shifts his weight between his feet. "There's one more thing," he mutters.

"Oh?"

"Baron asked me to take over as your security detail."

"Security detail?" I frown. "I don't need security."

"The last attack on you would suggest otherwise, Miss Erikson."

I stiffen. "You know about that?"

"Of course, I got a complete debriefing from him."

"Right." I bite the inside of my cheek. "So, if you're taking over, then does that mean that Baron—?"

I rush away from him to the window and peer out to find the SUV is gone. In its place is a car I don't recognize. A hot sensation stabs at my chest. He's gone. He left me. He actually did it. So, he did mean everything he said? He really doesn't want me anymore?

"Miss Erikson?"

I turn to find Archer hovering in the doorway. "Please call me Ava, I insist."

"Ava," he smiles, "will you be leaving for work at the usual time?"

"Work?" I should go in. I need to keep the classes going. Now, more than ever, it is important to keep my routine going. I am not going to disrupt my life again for another man. Besides, I can't let my students down. And today is Friday, which means that I have four classes today. I nod. "I do have to head in, but not for a few hours yet."

He turns to leave and I stop him. "Archer," I call out, "how do you know Baron?"

He hesitates then turns to me. "We served in the army together. When I got out, I decided to work with him." He glances at the door, then back at me.

"I must be going now," he murmurs. "I'll wait for you outside."

He heads out and I lock the door behind him, head to the kitchen, and put on the kettle. While I am waiting for it to boil, I walk toward the fridge and check out what he brought—fresh vegetables, cheese, milk. On the counter, I find apples, bananas, bread. Everything is marked as being ethically-sourced and organic. There's even a box of cereal—the one I like—and a few bars of chocolate, my favorite brand.

Wow, he'd certainly put a lot of thought into this. How does he know what brand of cereal I like to eat, or what my favorite brand of chocolate is? Had he simply guessed it or had he seen evidence of it in my kitchen already, and known what to buy?

When the kettle boils, I pour the hot water onto a tea bag in a mug, then carry it over to the dining table. My brand-new dining table. I grab the carton of milk from the fridge, pour a little into my tea.

Why is he being this attentive? And after he'd insulted me, then walked out on me. He may claim he doesn't want me, but he does care for me. Of course, he does. So why had he behaved so horribly toward me? It's almost like he wants me to hate him. Is that what this is? Does he want me to think that he doesn't want anything to do with me, so I'll stay away from him?

I head inside my bedroom, grab the phone from where it's been plugged into the socket... Something I don't remember doing. So, it must have been Baron who did it. Hmmm. I sink down on the bed. Why would he anticipate my needs one minute, and the next, turn around and tell me he's already forgotten about me? Gah! It makes no sense.

Later that evening, I sink into a comfortable chair in Summer and Sinclair's townhouse.

Archer had driven me to work, then brought me here. I'd told him he could leave, that I could take the tube home, but of course, he wasn't having any of it. He'd told me that Mr. Masters had ordered him to stay with me at all times. Ugh! Of course, Baron had to have a strong dominant surname. And of course, I had allowed him to fuck me in the arse, without even finding out what his full name was. I hunch my shoulders.

What does that say about me? Am I doomed to forever fall for the wrong man? Am I such a slut that one whiff of the right peen and I can't think of anything but how to get it between my legs? My core clenches and my toes curl. And boy, oh, boy, both peens had been works of art. Big and thick and broad enough to stretch me in the most delicious way possible... Gah, stop that.

"Ava?" Victoria has a concerned look on her face. "You okay?"

"Yes, of course." I shake my head to clear it, as if that's going to help. I can still smell Baron's dark scent, feel the hardness of his chest pressed against my back as he'd bent over me and—

"Ava!" Isla snaps her fingers in front of me.

"What?" I jerk. "What happened?"

"Apparently, Baron happened," she drawls.

"Stop that," I scold her. "Uh, can I get something to drink?"

"Of course." Summer pours frozen margarita into a soup bowl—erm, I mean, a glass—and hands it to me. No, seriously, these are so huge I have to wrap both of my hands around the circumference of the glass to hold it up... Just like I had wrapped my fingers around his dick and—

"Hello, earth to Ava," Isla sing-songs.

I frown at her. "Yes, yes, I am listening."

"Are you, though?" She scowls. "Your head seems to be somewhere else... Maybe the rest of your body too?" She smirks.

"Oh, shut up." I bring the glass to my mouth, sip it. The fruity taste of melon and strawberries, laced with the pungent kick of the tequila, fills my palate. "Yum," I smack my lips, "these are deadly."

"Enjoy." Victoria raises her mocktail glass.

"Have another on my behalf." Karina nods.

"You're not drinking." I frown.

"No, and no I am not pregnant...yet," she continues, "but yeah, I am trying and," she raises her shoulders, "it's no secret that I want a baby so badly that I tried to get artificially inseminated—"

"Instead, thanks to Arpad, you found that doing it the real way is more fun." Julia laughs.

"Oh, you have no idea." Karina's eyes twinkle.

"I do, actually," Summer mutters. "It was a lot of fun...but wait until the morning sickness kicks in." She shakes her head. "It can be a bummer."

"I know, right?" Victoria turns to me. "Thankfully, I haven't suffered too much, but apparently, for some women it lasts the entire pregnancy, and—" She squeaks, "Wait, what? You're pregnant too?"

Summer beams, her features lighting up.

"OMG!" Julia jumps to her feet and rushes over to Summer, "You're having a baby? Oh, wow!" She hugs Summer, who laughs.

"Yeah, I only just found out," she says. "I couldn't wait to tell you guys."

"Congratulations," Karina walks over to her, "I am so excited for you, Summer, I really am."

"Thank you." Summer turns to Karina. She takes Karina's hand between both of hers. "Your turn will come, I promise."

"I am sure it will, if Arpad has anything to do with it," she mutters.

Summer laughs. "Enjoy it, babe. Once you're pregnant, he'll change."

"What do you mean?" Karina frowns.

"I mean, he'll want to wrap you up in cotton wool—"

"Unlike the ropes he prefers to use right now?"

There's silence in the room, then the women burst out laughing.

"Okay, enough." My cheeks heat. "TMI, you guys, TMI."

"Says the woman who's managed to bang not one, but two, of the Seven." Isla turns to me. "It has to be a record of sorts, right?"

"Wait." Amelie turns to me. "What did I miss? I thought you and Edward..." Her voice trails off. "It is you and Edward, right?"

She hesitates and my cheeks heat.

"Yeah, it was me and Edward," I mumble.

"But it isn't anymore," Isla pipes up.

I shoot her a dirty look.

Summer shushes Isla, "Seriously, Iz, sometimes you don't know when to zip it."

"Correction," Isla's shoulders hunch, "I never know when to zip it." She looks at me with a pleading expression on her face, "Sorry, Ava, didn't mean to dump your stuff out there."

I blow out a breath. "It's fine. I mean, what the hell? The rest of you know about it already, so..." I turn to Amelie, "I slept with Baron."

"Baron?" She frowns. "One of the Seven? The one who just returned...?" She blinks at me rapidly. "Oh." She nods, then her gaze widens. "OH," she coughs, "you slept with Baron."

"Yeah." I drain the margarita, reach over and top up my glass. "Now you guys know all my dirty secrets. Not that there was much to begin with. At least, there hadn't been till a few weeks ago. You know, all I had was a crazy crush on Edward."

"You mean, the Father?" Karina prompts.

"No," I frown at her, "I mean, he's called Edward and also sparkles in the sunlight, but I'm talking about Edward the vampire—"

"Vampire?" Julia's gaze widens. "A real-life vampire?"

Isla frowns at her, "No silly, she means Edward from Twilight."

"Twilight?" Amelie repeats. "What do you mean, like dusk, dawn, twilight?"

"Not quite," Victoria pipes up. "I think she means, like Breaking Dawn Twilight."

"How can it be twilight when it's dawn?" Amelie's forehead furrows, "Unless it's a figure of speech I am not aware of, in which case—"

"I'm talking about Twilight, the book," I clarify.

"Unless you are talking about twilight-themed cupcakes which, I assure you, I am good at baking," she goes on as if she didn't hear me. "In fact, I think I should create an entire new range of sparkly cupcakes to celebrate baby showers." Amelie snaps her fingers, "It's a great idea." She reaches over, wraps her arm around me and kisses my cheek. "You are a genius, Ava."

"I am?"

"It's exactly what I was looking for as a means to differentiate my pastry business in the marketplace."

Like that clarified anything?

"Right." I manage. "You really haven't heard of Twilight?"

She stares at me, as if I am crazy. "Of course, I know about Twilight." She waves a hand in the air. "It's just, I need to call my team right now and get a plan in place. Twilight-themed cupcakes, ha!" She rubs her hands together. "It's a brilliant idea." She kisses me again on both cheeks, then brushes past me to grab her bag. "I gotta get going. You guys don't mind, right?"

I stare, bemused, as she hitches her massive tote over her shoulder. She heads for the door, then pauses and turns to me, "Oh, and if I were you, I'd enjoy the one who is still with you. Unless, of course, you'd prefer to keep both," she smirks, "in which case, I wouldn't blame you." She blows me a kiss and heads for the door, which slams behind her.

O-k-a-y. I turn back to my margarita, my cheeks burning. Shit, of all the girls here, I know Isla the best. I'd met the others through her, and they had pretty much adopted me into their circle. But they've known the Seven much longer than me. What the hell must they think of me now? I clear my throat, "Uh, guess I'd better head off now."

"Oh, no you don't, woman." Summer grabs hold of me and steers me over into a chair. "You sit." She jabs a finger at me. "You're not going anywhere until you share all the juicy details."

"You mean all the details of the train wreck that my life is turning out to be, right?" I mutter under my breath.

"Stop that." Isla frowns at me. "No one here is judging you, Ava."

Except me. I'm judging myself. But that's my issue, right?

Summer walks over with another full glass of margarita, "Here you go."

She turns away to sink onto the couch near me. "So... Baron, hmm?" She waggles her eyebrows at me.

"Yeah, well, it's not how it looks." Gah, what a clichè I am turning out to be. I take another gulp of the margarita, which goes down smoothly. Lick my lips, then stare around at the faces of the girls. "What?" I frown.

"Deets, babe, the spicy, juicy deets." Isla leans forward in her chair, "How was it?"

"I am not telling you," I say, horrified. "Besides, who are you talking about?" I glance at her from under lowered eyelashes, "Edward or Baron?"

"Omigod!" Isla fans herself. "Bitch here gets all the dick and she's still complaining. Better two cocks than zero shafts, babe."

"Iz," I laugh, "your mouth will get you into so much trouble someday."

"Here's hoping." She drains her glass, reaches for the pitcher on the table in the center, "So...which one?" She tilts her head in my direction, "Or are you going to keep both?"

"What?" I choke on my margarita. "What are you talking about?"

Summer reaches over to smack me on the back. "Why, what's wrong with having two at the same time?"

"I couldn't," I gape at her. My cheeks heat. "I mean, I shouldn't, I mean... It's not how it's done."

"But you want to?" Karina drawls from her perch on the chair opposite me. "Do you want to keep them both?"

"No. Yes. I don't know." I shake my hair back from my face. "I mean, come on, this is real life, people. You don't go around bedding and staying in a relationship with two men. And to be fair, I only hooked up with Baron after Edward left." Okay, so it was immediately after Edward left, like he departed stage right and Baron walked in from the other side, but whatever.

"So, do you still have feelings for Edward?" Summer asks softly.

I chew the inside of my cheek. "Do I still want him? Yes, I do. At least, I think I do. I mean, I saw him and it was like love at first sight. I couldn't get him out of my head. And Baron? Well, there's something about him that's so compelling, almost hypnotic. There's an edginess to him, and an anger that's alluring. Edward broke his vows for me...and Baron... Well, he doesn't want my vows, so right now, I have neither, it would seem."

"Oh, babe." Isla places her glass down on the side table, then walks over and bends to hug me. "I am so sorry. Men can be cunts, you know that?"

"Yeah, only he was good to my cunt. Well, they both were, to be fair."

Isla chuckles. "At least, you got good sex out of it."

"There is that."

"You are two up on me, not that I was ever going to hook up with any of the Seven."

"No, you went for the bigger, meaner, older brother to one of the Seven instead," Karina mutters.

Isla straightens and flicks her hair over her shoulder, "Oh, please. I hated the man on sight, and now I am going to have to see him almost every day, when the wedding rehearsals begin."

"Rehearsals?" I frown.

"The bridezilla—and this one is the mother of them all—insists on at least three before the actual wedding."

"As long as you are getting paid..." Karina interjects.

"You bet, I am," Isla bares her teeth, "and it's all Liam's money so there is that, but enough about me." She turns to survey me down the length of her nose. "What are you going to do now, Missy?"

"Me?" I take another huge sip of the margarita and hiccough. Oops. I scowl up at her. "For now, I am not doing anything. Except staying clear of men."

"What if Baron changes his mind and wants you back?"

"He can go fuck himself," I mutter. "After the way he walked out on me, it's going to take more than just apologies for me to be with him." But damn, if I don't still want to fuck him... Only, my emotions are already involved here... If I slept with him again, it would become something I couldn't walk away from.

"And Edward?" Karina asks. "What about him?"

"What about him?" I glance at her. "He left me; end of story."

"He'll be back."

"So, everyone keeps saying."

"As their security consultant, I am privy to the affairs of all the Seven" she murmurs, "and based on what I know, I can tell you the Seven don't like loose ends. Not that you are a loose end..." She hastens to add, "But you know what I mean?"

"No," I place the glass on the table, "I don't, actually. What are you trying to say?"

"Just that, chances are, Edward will return, and sooner, rather than later. What are you going to do then?"

I contemplate the depths of my glass. "I have no idea." I stare around the faces of my friends, before settling on Karina, "What would you do?"

She shakes her head. "Oh, no, no. You are putting me on the spot."

"No, I really want to know." I lean forward, "I am so confused; it will help me to get another perspective."

"I am probably the wrong person to ask," she mutters. "I am not the conventional, roll over and submit to a guy kind of gal... Well, none of us are, actually." She looks around the room. "And one thing I have learned is that, fuck society. No one knows your situation and what you are facing, so no one needs to understand your decisions. It's you who needs to follow your instincts."

"And what if my instincts are muddled? What if I can't figure out what to do?"

"Then it means you are not ready to decide. It means," she smiles gently, "that you wait."

"For how long, though?" Not that I am in any hurry, but hell, if it wouldn't help to figure out where I stand in this sorry mess.

"Until you're ready."

"When will I be ready?"

She chuckles. "You'll know when you know."

Julia's phone buzzes, she glances at it, and a smile tugs her lips. "On that note... And not that I want to break this up, guys, and don't think I am leaving because hubby texted me...but—"

"Oh, please." Isla scoffs, "Just go, already. I mean, all you guys are so in love that it's making me sick." She makes a gagging noise.

I laugh. "Don't worry, I am right there with you, Iz."

"But... I do have to go, too." Isla looks over at me with regret. "I have a ton of things to prep for my upcoming weddings. Best I get home, so I can get an early start tomorrow."

"Okay," I rise to my feet, "I'd better get going too."

26

Baron

I pause in front of Saint's townhouse at Primrose Hill.

After I'd briefed Archer on Ava's schedule, I'd made it to my loft—which I hadn't been to since I'd met Ava—showered and shaved. Then made a few more calls, this time to my contacts to find out who could have been behind the men who'd attacked Ava. The information hadn't looked good.

It had confirmed to me what I'd already suspected. I need the help of the rest of the Seven. The situation is more serious than I'd imagined and I need my friends to back me up on my plan. I hate to ask them for help, but if this is the only way to keep Ava safe, I'll do it. I'd gladly sacrifice my life for her if it came to it... Only, this is harder. Meeting my friends face-to-face, asking them to back me up. Sweat beads my palm. I shift the folder I am carrying to my other hand, rub my palm on my pants, then raise it to knock on the door, when it swings open.

Weston, stands in the doorway, his face wreathed in a big smile. "Baron!" He grabs my arm and hauls me in for a hug. I stand stiffly, while he thumps my back, "I still can't believe you are back among us."

"Me neither," I mutter.

He releases me, then steps back and peers into my face. "You don't look like you got much sleep, though."

"You don't say." I scowl.

Motherfucker looks freshly scrubbed, his skin glowing with health. He's wearing a beard, which he hadn't had when we were younger. Of course, that was years ago. I am still getting used to seeing the physical changes in my friends. Emotionally and mentally, though, they are still the same. Which means, all of them have the intelligence of a twelve-year-old—collectively.

Weston's smile widens. Shit, doesn't the man have anything better to do than look happy at the world? And content? Yeah, it comes off of him in waves. He reeks of happiness and fulfillment and all those emo words that I'd never have associated with any of the Seven. But then, I'd have never thought that I'd fall for a woman who was taken either... So yeah, shit happens.

I brush past him and walk inside. "So," I clear my throat, "I take it Saint doesn't know that I am coming to this little reunion?"

"He'll come around." Weston claps my back. "You know Saint. His bark is more dangerous than his bite."

"No, actually. I don't." I scowl. "The last few times I've met him, he's made it clear he doesn't want anything to do with me."

"Yeah." Weston's smile diminishes in wattage. Thank fuck. He was beginning to creep me out with all that happiness pouring off of him. There should be a law against any of the Seven being in such good spirits. I mean, it's practically written—somewhere—that the Seven needed to be growly, grumpy alphaholes, like me. So, to see them jovial and chilled out, like the proverbial cat that swallowed the canary, or in this case, like men who've found the loves of their lives, is disconcerting, to say the least.

"Saint's a bit of a complex character," Weston offers.

"Aren't we all?"

"Good thing Edward's not here. This way, you only have to deal with one pissed off wanker at a time—"

I shoot him a glance and he winces. "Oops, sorry, slip of the tongue. I didn't mean to—"

"It's fine," I drawl, "I am not going to collapse bawling if you speak about E."

"You're the only guy who was close enough to Ed to call him that."

"I'm also the only one who dared challenge him when he said he was going to join the seminary," I mutter.

"You knew him better than we did."

"None of you guys dissuaded him, either."

"He was hell bent on it." Weston frowns. "Considering what we went through, if that was what brought him some measure of peace then..." he shrugs, "who were we to step in between him and his calling?"

"Calling." I snort. "He was running away from facing his demons."

"Like you did." A new voice cuts in.

I turn to find Saint prowling toward us.

"You were saying?" I scowl.

"That you were the one who abandoned us."

"I joined the army," I snap.

"Without telling any of us."

"Didn't think it mattered, either way."

Saint closes the distance between us so quickly that I blink. He grabs my collar, hauls me up, "If you had only cared enough to open your eyes and see how your leaving was going to impact the rest of us. If you had only thought of anyone else except yourself."

"I did," I say through gritted teeth, "It's why I left, you tosser."

"Is that your excuse?" he growls. "That you were too shaken by everything that happened? That you couldn't cope with it? That you didn't have the balls to share your decision with everyone? No, you upped and got out... You decided not to stay in touch, except for your stupid snail mail letters—which was a bad decision, by the way. It's what helped us track you down, you bastard."

"I wasn't trying to hide." I raise my shoulders. "I simply wanted my space."

"No, you thought you needed space, when in reality, you were too afraid."

"Afraid?" I scowl. "What the hell are you talking about?"

"You were afraid of your feelings. Afraid to feel any kind of connection with any of us. Afraid that if you, for one moment, stopped and allowed yourself to feel, that you would—"

"What?" I snap. "What would happen if I allowed myself to feel?"

"You'd have felt compelled to stay back and actually develop some kind of a relationship with the rest of us. Not to mention, you'd have been forced to sort out your shit with Edward and—"

"Enough," I break away from him, "this was a bad idea." I pivot and head for the doorway. "I shouldn't have come here."

"That's right, run away." Saint's voice follows me. "When the going gets tough, you always did do a Baron."

"Do a Baron?" I pause. "What the hell does that mean?"

"You know, losing your balls. Not having the courage to stand up and fight for what you believe in."

"You want to fight?" I reel around and confront him, "Want to get your arse handed to you, is that it?"

He laughs, "I'm faster than you, stronger than you, leaner than you, you arse."

"But you're pussy-whipped."

"And you aren't?" He smirks.

"I don't have a wife and a kid on the way to worry about."

"No, you're too much of a coward to commit to anyone."

"Is that what you think?"

"What other explanation is there?" He shrugs. "Not that it matters, to be honest. I am sick of this shit, anyway. You come home and everyone celebrates, as if you're a vanquishing hero. Little do they know how much of a weakling you really are."

"Weakling, huh?" I glance around, then place the folder on a coffee table nearby. I straighten, curl my fingers into fists, "Let's take this outdoors, shall we?"

Baron

"Actually, let's not." Saint rushes toward me. Asshole swings with his fist, catches me under the chin. My head snaps back; pain squeezes the backs of my eyes. My vision wavers. I shake my head to clear it, straighten but he's already in my face again. He lands a punch in my side, then the other, in my shoulder, back to my stomach. My body protests, my shoulder screams, and the breath screeches out of me. I lurch forward, throw my arm around him, and we hug each other in the semblance of an embrace that isn't really one. He punches me in the side, and again, as I lean the bulk of my weight on him. He staggers back, and I shove at him, my shoes squeaking on the floor as I propel the both of us toward the back of the room. I lean back, swing, catch him under his chin. Blood spurts out as he tumbles back into the wet bar. The force of his momentum carries him over. At the last moment, he grabs my collar and the impetus carries me along. I crash to the floor, his body knocks into me, and the bottles from the shelves above rain down on us. A bottle from the top-most shelf teeters over, then plunges down toward us, and I throw my arms around his head to shield him. The bottle hits the back of my hand, bounces off. I grunt as pain whips up my arm.

We stay that way for a few seconds. Another glass rolls over the counter, falls over to the other side. The crash echoes through the space, then there's silence. The scent of alcohol deepens. Puddles of liquor surround us, dotted with broken glass shards.

Saint pushes me off of him and staggers to his feet, pieces of broken glass sliding off of him. He holds out his hand. I stare at it, then up at him.

"Thanks," he grumbles. "You protected me from getting hurt."

I firm my lips, then nod. I grab his hand and he hauls me to my feet.

"You guys okay?" Weston asks from the other side of the bar. "Figured it was best to let you chaps fight it out."

"What happened here?" Arpad walks in, followed by Damian and Sinclair.

"Thought we heard the sound of breaking glass." Damian glances around the space.

"Guess you guys were getting reacquainted?" Sinclair drawls.

"How did you guess?" I say wryly.

"So, what's the verdict?" Weston interjects. "You guys kissed and made up yet?"

We glare at each other.

Damian side-steps a broken bottle, then leans his elbow on a clear patch of the bar counter. "Or, if you want to go another round—"

"That won't be necessary," Saint snaps.

I tilt my head.

He blows out a breath. "Much as I hate to be beholden to you for anything, seems you did protect me from getting badly hurt."

"I'll pay for the damages," I offer stiffly.

"That won't be necessary," he retorts.

"So, you guys gonna shake or what?" Arpad glances at his watch, "I gotta get out of here in half an hour."

"Newlyweds." Sinner tsks.

"Better enjoy it before the kids come along." Damian chuckles.

Arpad scowls at them. "Relax, you guys. Let me enjoy my time with my new bride without all of you getting on my balls."

I snicker. "Oh, she has you by the balls all right, brother."

"Look who's talking." Arpad smirks. "You're in as much trouble as the rest of us, ol' chap."

"Hey, hey," I hold up my hands, "I came here on a work thing, so can we get to that?"

"Once you shake," Damian insists. "Go on," he urges me, "get it over with so we can get to what you want to discuss."

"Yeah, fine." I roll my shoulders, grab Saint's hand. We shake.

Saint jerks his chin. "I'll be watching you."

"Just as long as you can help me keep an eye on her."

"Thought you were doing that?" He frowns.

"Yeah, about that..." I shuffle my feet.

He releases my hand, fixes me with an impenetrable gaze. "What's up?" He scowls. "It must be something very important that made you walk in here and make peace."

"I wasn't the one who harbored hard feelings," I remind him.

He looks like he is about to protest, then nods. "I still haven't forgiven you for what you did, but if your woman is in danger..."

"Not my woman," I snap.

Saint stares at me, then his face cracks in a smile.

I stare, "That wasn't a joke, you wanker."

Saint bends, then pulls out a bottle of Macallan's from under the bar. He pushes the broken glass pieces to the side, slams the bottle on the table. Damian grabs a few glasses from the far end of the bar, lines them on the counter. Saint tops up the glasses, then hands me one.

"What are we drinking to?" I ask suspiciously.

He jerks the glass in my direction, and I accept it as the others reach for their drinks.

"Well?" I scowl, "Are you going to tell me or keep smiling like a maniac?"

Saint chuckles, "You heard that, guys?" He turns to the other men, "Seems another one of us is getting ready to bite the dust."

"The only one who's going to have a mouthful of dust is you, if you don't knock off your cryptic comments."

"It bothers you, huh?" Saint snatches up his own glass. "Being vulnerable and open, knowing your heart could be shattered any moment?"

"You're wrong, my heart can't be hurt anymore."

"Oh?" He scowls. "Why's that?"

Because it doesn't belong to me anymore, is what I want to say. Instead, I sip from the glass. The liquid burns its way down, and heat infuses my veins. "Because," I tip up my chin and stare at him, "I am not going back on my word to Edward."

Damian tosses back his drink, places the glass on the counter, "Ever occur to you that Edward called you and asked you for this favor as a way of bringing you two together?"

"What do you mean?" I frown. "That he purposely put us together, as a test?"

"More as a way of getting the two of you to get to know each other?"

"Why would he do that?" I frown. "It makes no sense."

"Maybe he did it subconsciously?" Weston offers. "After all, the two of you were close."

"More like, after what we went through, we couldn't stand the sight of each other," I say wryly.

"What did you go through?" Arpad leans forward on the balls of his feet. "Neither of you has ever spoken about what happened to you during the incident."

I stiffen, then draw myself up to my full height. "It's best kept that way."

"If you don't talk about it, it's not going to help you heal," Weston warns.

"If I do talk about it, it's only going to dredge up a whole lot of shit that I am better off without."

Sinner shakes his head. "That's what I thought. Then, I met Summer and realized, turning your back on your feelings is a one-way trip to hell."

"A place I am well acquainted with," I mutter.

"It doesn't have to be that way." Sinner leans forward. "Let us help you."

"You can," I glance around at the faces of my friends, "by helping me track down who attacked Ava."

"Hanganobloodysecond," Saint bursts out. "Someone attacked her?"

"Why do you think I am here?" I reach for the bottle of whiskey and top myself up. "It happened last night, after she left the restaurant."

"Thought you were keeping watch over her?"

"Yeah," I rub the back of my neck, "she was on a date and I—"

"You lost your cool." Saint scowls. "It happens."

"Edward met her first," I mumble. "I shouldn't feel this way about her."

"You can't control who you develop feelings for," Weston interjects. "Trust me, all of us here have tried to resist and failed."

Damian nods. "We each had to go through some crazy shit before we could face our emotions, but once we did? Boy, was it all clear."

"Easy for you to say." I glower at him. "When you met your woman, was she already in a relationship with someone else?"

"Victoria was," Saint says slowly. "She'd just buried her husband, but he hadn't been her husband, in the real sense of the word."

"Well, whatever it was between Edward and Ava, it was very real." I squeeze my fingers around my glass. "It's why he asked me to watch out for her."

"He's not here," Saint points out. "You are."

"What are you trying to say, man?" I frown. "I can't betray Edward."

Except, I already have, and fuck, if I am going to let it happen again.

"All's fair..." Saint bares his teeth. "Edward took off. You did the honorable thing; you came back to help someone in need. You were there for her when she needed you. If the two of you develop feelings for each other, well, that's just the way it is."

"If only everything was that simple."

"It's as simple or as complicated as you make it out to be." His lips twist.

"A word of advice from me, ol' chap?"

"Not that I care about what you're going to say, but don't let that stop you."

"I won't." Saint's smile widens. "After everything you've been through, you have a chance at being happy. It doesn't often happen that you meet someone who brings out the best part of you—which in your case is especially a rarity, given those parts are particularly hard to find—" he smirks. "So, if I were you, I wouldn't let the fact that she and Edward had a thing stop you."

"He left the Church for her," I snap.

"You faced your fears for her." He grips my shoulder. "You came back to a life that you hadn't been able to face, made up with your friends, put her needs before yours. Even now, you're thinking of her first. I'd say you have as much right as him to pursue her."

"What are you saying?"

"He means," Sinner drawls, "go after the fair maiden. Let her decide who she wants."

"Agreed." Damian nods.

Arpad jerks his chin.

Weston scowls. "You have to do what is right for you, man."

"And you?" I raise my tumbler in his direction, "What would you do if you were in my shoes?"

"Me?" He scratches his chin. "I'd go after what was mine." He looks me up and down, "Is she yours, Baron?"

I glare at him and he chuckles. "Thought so," He raises a shoulder, "The way I see it, you don't have a choice, man. You're going to have to follow your heart, and well, the rest is not in your hands anyway."

I stare into the dregs of the amber liquid in my glass. Are they right? Is it that simple? Am I over-complicating everything by my sense of right and wrong? My instincts are the only thing that kept me from getting killed in the army. It's what had led me to staying away from my friends. The same instincts which had known when it was time to return when Edward called... Which now tells me, the only thing worth living for is her. That if I'm not with her, if I don't use this opportunity that had been handed to me, I am a fool.

She wants me, she's made it clear. She still has feelings for Edward... But hell, it's true that I am here and he isn't. I hadn't meant to fall for her... I am not at fault here. He turned his back on her; he passed off his responsibility to me—and I intend to do what is in her best interests. Which is...allow her to see how it could be with me. The guys are right. Ultimately, it isn't in my hands who she chooses. All I can do is allow her to make the decision. It isn't mine to make. I can't force her to choose by default. If I respect her, I should allow her to decide for herself. And I do. I trust her to make this choice for herself.

I turn to Saint, hold out my hand. "I hate saying it, but you're right."

He smirks, bypasses my hand, to pull me into a hug. "I always am."

"What-bloody-ever." I thump his back, then step back, and glance around the room.

"There's one other thing I could do with some help on."

"What's that?" Arpad asks.

"The man Edward hurt," I brush past Saint, walk around the bar and step over the broken glass pieces to face the other men, "he hasn't woken up yet, so there are no clues forthcoming as to his identity; though I swear I have seen him somewhere before." I shake my head, "I just can't place him, though."

"You think he's connected with the attack on Ava?" Sinclair flicks dust off his £7000 suit jacket. No matter the occasion, he is always dressed like he has a bloody board meeting to attend. Me? I can't stand ties, or collars, for that matter. No wonder Edward fits right in with these guys. He constrains himself with his duty to the Lord—or at least, he used to do so. And the rest of the Seven, with the exception of our resident rock star Damian? They don't think twice about knotting a tie around their neck... If the occasion demands it. I'd rather face a bullet than do that. Oh, Wait, I had faced a bullet...many bullets, rather than risk being stuck in a nine-to-five existence, or any kind of relationship, for that matter. And now I am willingly looking to embrace conventions... Only for her. If this is the only way to keep her safe? Then I'll gladly do so.

"Seems too much of a coincidence, don't you think?" I tilt my head.

"Now that you mention it." Sinclair widens his stance. "You think he's connected with the Mafia?"

"I know he is." I fold my arms across my chest. "It's why the normally controlled Father lost his composure. The man told him that he is linked to our kidnapping."

"How?" Damian scowls, "Did Edward mention any details?"

"He mentioned that the bastard was at St. Lucian's with us."

"What?" Saint exclaims. "Asshole was a fellow student? You think he shared information about us with the kidnappers?"

"Apparently." I nod.

"What else?" Arpad growls. "What else did Edward tell you?"

"He also said that he hadn't been in control of himself, which is why he'd lost his temper." I rub the back of my neck. "When he realized the man had helped perpetuate the incident and that he was still involved with the Mafia, he hadn't been able to stop himself. In fact, Edward had been sure that he'd killed the man. It was only when I went to the church and found his body, I realized he was still breathing."

"Did Edward mention where he was headed?" Saint interjects.

"Would you?" I narrow my gaze on him and Saint scowls.

"That's a no, then."

"And there's no way to contact him," Damian murmurs, "which means, there's no way for Ed to know that the man survived the attack."

"Do you think that's why he left," Sinclair turns to me, "because he thought he'd killed the man?"

"Among other things." I walk over to the coffee table, retrieve the folder with the pictures of the mystery man, then hand it over to Sinclair. "Thought I'd share his pictures, in case any of you recognize him."

Sinclair opens the folder, takes in the pictures. His gaze narrows, he flicks through the pictures, then stares up at me.

"What?" I frown. "You recognize him?"

"I swear I've seen him before, but I can't place where."

Arpad walks over to Sinclair, takes the pictures from him. "Shit, I know him, he's the homeless guy I got into a fight with. Bastard had video on his phone of Karina walking up the steps of the Town Hall to get married."

"He did?" I frown.

"That's right." Sinclair snaps his fingers. "He used to sit in front of my office building. I am sure I put money into his hat a few times."

"Homeless guy?" Saint walks around the bar, snatches up one of the pictures from Arpad. "What the hell?" he swears. "I saw him in front of the Dorchester when I was with Victoria."

"So, let me get this straight," I glance around the group, "He's had encounters with each of you?"

"I didn't meet him," Damian says slowly, "but he must be the person whom Julia had a conversation with." Damian glances up from the picture he'd taken from Arpad. "She mentioned that a homeless guy had shown her his phone with the video of the song I'd recorded as an apology to her. It's what made her change her mind about me, you know. In a way, I owe my being reunited with Julia to him."

"And if he hadn't shown me the video of Karina heading up the steps of the town hall, I'd have never made it in time to stop her wedding." Arpad adds.

"He also had a signboard, on which he'd scrawled some poem from Byron."

"I noticed that too." Saint growls, "Asshole asked me for a cigarette, which I didn't have. Bet he ate at the soup kitchen at my hotel every night, too."

I turn to Saint, "So did he help you in anyway?"

"Not unless you count the fact that Victoria felt sorry for him, and I told her the same thing, that he probably ate at the pop-up soup kitchen my hotel hosts every night with the leftovers.

"Which made her look at you in a different light?" I surmise.

"If you mean that he humanized me?" He raises a shoulder, "I guess so, probably."

"And you Sinclair?" I tilt my head in his direction, "He help you with your love life?"

"I should bloody well hope not," Sinclair drawls, "though after I got together with Summer, I never saw him again."

"And what about you Weston?" I turn my gaze on him, "He help you too?"

"I noticed he was barefoot and gave him my shoes. Then when Amelie asked me about them, I told her what I'd done." He scowls. "Guess he showed me in a favorable light, as well."

"He helped bring out the man behind the alphahole, again," I muse.

"What are you thinking, Baron?" Arpad turns to me, "You think he played some kind of cupid for all of us, helping us get together with our women?"

"That may be stretching things a bit, but yeah... I am thinking something along those lines. You have to admit that it's somewhat dodgy that the guy shows up at a pivotal moment for each of you, then seems to disappear from your sight when you guys get hitched."

"So what?" Weston rubs the back of his neck. "He's a well-wisher?"

And hell, if I couldn't do with some additional help in getting my woman. I shake my head. Now, that is fanciful thinking. I don't need anybody else's advice. I've got this. I'll find a way to make up for the way I'd acted with Ava. I have to.

"And you?" Sinner frowns at me, "where have you seen him before?"

"I don't know." I drag my fingers through my hair. "I am sure I have seen him before, although I feel like he was younger at the time." I raise my shoulders. "Either way, when he regains consciousness, I plan to be there to question him. Meanwhile," I turn to the guys, "I need to get to my woman."

28

"My mum always told me that I'm perfect, that I'm beautiful and that no guy deserves me. But how much of what she says is lies? Is it a lie if she believes it's true? Is it possible to tell the truth and lie simultaneously?"

-From Ava's Diary

Ava

Half an hour after leaving Summer and Sinclair's townhouse, the car pulls up outside a fast-food outlet. I'd left their place and realized I didn't want to go home yet. Especially not, since the place reminds me of Baron.

Everywhere I look, I see him—on the couch, in the shower, in the kitchen, in my bed. Shit, it's like his presence is woven into every room there. Also, it had been so long since I'd danced...just for the pleasure of dancing.... Just being able to move to the music without worrying about anything else. Yeah, it's exactly what I need. I want to get to my studio, and I want to do it unaccompanied by Baron's watchdog. The man has no claim on me. I don't need his bloody protection. I am a free, independent woman who can do what I want, when I want, and no man is going to take that from me. I am going to get to the studio, and on my own steam. Which means I have to ditch Archer. So, I ask him to stop at the fast-food outlet.

I get out of the car, and so does Archer.

"I don't need you to accompany me in there," I point out.

He shakes his head, "Baron said—"

"Yeah, yeah, I know what he said, but surely, I am safe in there." I point to the outlet. "You can see everyone who comes in and out of it."

He hesitates and I throw up my hands, "Come on. Surely, I deserve a bit of privacy, a few minutes of being able to eat my food in peace?"

He firms his lips, then nods. "Five minutes, then I'll come in there."

"Fifteen minutes."

"Ten," he folds his arms across his chest, "and that's about all I can agree to."

"Deal." I sniff, then turn and stomp inside the outlet. I place my order, glance through the shop window to find him standing to attention, his gaze fixed on me. Shit, this isn't working, I need to find a way to give him a slip. Just then, a gang of students walks into the shop. They mill around, chattering, pointing to the menu board on the wall. They press in closer to the counter, cutting me off from his sight.

Instantly, I spin around, walk to the door at the back. I pass the kitchen, travel down a short corridor, reach the door at the back and twist it open. I walk down the alley. Reaching the main road, I turn left, head for the tube station. Good thing I am wearing sneakers and jeans. It means I can run. I hit the tube station, make it to the tills and the platform. I glance back, half convinced that I'll see Archer, but I don't spot him. The tube train enters the platform—awesome! At least, luck is with me.

I jump on in it, travel another fifteen minutes east, then jump out at the station that is closest to my studio. I head out of the tube, up the quiet street. It's not that late, just past nine p.m. I've been to the studio this late many times before. The wind picks up and the hair on the back of my neck rises. Shit, since that encounter in the subway, I haven't been myself. I need to get over it. Need to live my life. Baron isn't going to be around anymore. I have to accept that. He opted to leave me; I have to learn to live without him.

I hurry my pace, reach the door to the studio, key in my passcode and push open the door. I step in, push the door firmly closed behind me, climb the stairs and reach my studio. Once inside, I lock the door, then head inside the dressing room. I place my handbag on the dressing room table and change into my yoga pants and a sports-bra—good thing I always keep a change of clothes here.

Back in the studio, I choose the track and turn up the volume.

The rhythm from the Maga remix of Eminem's Ass Like That, fills the space. I know, I know, not conventional belly dancing music, but I've always eschewed the more classical belly-dancing numbers in favor of an eclectic mix of tunes to which I can really shake my booty.

I shake my hips, bump, grind, stretch again, then launch into the dance. Raise my hands, shimmy, grind-grind-grind, sink to my knees, head down, throw my hair back, spring up. Twirl on my toes, round and round, spread my legs, shake my booty. So, it's not just belly dancing, but a mix of moves I've picked up along the way. A lot of it from watching music videos, classical dancing, taking classes in other different dance forms—salsa, merengue, tango, and other eastern dance forms, like Kathak. Also, ballet—which I'd never been able to master, but which had helped me discipline my moves... Which, combined with the sensuous grace of belly-dancing, helps capture the eye of the person watching and keeps them riveted—at least, so I hope. My heart begins to pump harder, sweat beads my brow, flows down my back. The rhythm picks up and the beats thunder in my veins. I push myself to go faster, slam my feet into the wooden floor, twirl, whirl, pirouette, shimmy—the song ends in a clash of cymbals and I throw myself down, head down, hair in a cloud about my shoulders, my breath coming in gasps. That's when I hear the sound of scuffling. What the—? I jump up as the sound of a thud reaches me.

There's a banging on the door and I freeze.

Who could it be? I reach for my phone and switch off the music. Silence descends. I head for the door, glance through the peephole and freeze.

The man standing there wears a suit. He's staring straight at me. He has a bandage on his forehead. What the—? It's one of the guys who attacked me at the bypass the other day. He stares at the peephole, then raises his fist to bang on the door again.

A small cry bubbles up. I push my knuckles inside my mouth.

I stumble back, grab the phone, go to dial Baron's number, then remember. Shit, I deleted it.

That's when something slams into the door. Shit, he's going to break it down. Shit, shit, shit. I dial Isla's number; it goes straight to voice mail. He crashes into the door again and I hear it crack. Fuck, this isn't good. This is not good. I should have heeded Baron's advice and moved my studio somewhere safer, especially after that subway attack. But the rent on this place is so cheap. It's a steal. Now I know why. Clearly, I had left myself wide open and vulnerable. Oh, hell.

I pull up Summer's number; that's when the door crashes open.

The man stomps into the studio, and the phone slips from my hand.

I glance around the space for a weapon, anything that I can use against him. He shakes his head, "Don't even think about it." He stops in front of me and I swallow. No, no, no, this can't be happening. Why the hell had I given Archer the slip? Why had I not thought this through better? Why had I been so upset with Baron that I had compromised my own safety?

The guy looks me up and down. "What have we here?" He reaches for me, and I scream. I bring my knee up, kick him in the groin. He doubles over and I rush past him. I am almost at the door, when I feel the weight of his hand on my shoulder. I scream as he kicks my legs out from under me. I fall over, turning my face so my cheek connects with the hard floor, instead of my nose. The breath rushes out of me. Sparks flare behind my eyes. I lay there, stunned, when he grabs my arm and begins to drag me inside toward the dressing room.

I try to yank free, but my shoulder screams in protest. A groan rips out of me. He pulls me toward the dressing room, shoves the door open and throws me inside. I slam into the wall, hit my other shoulder against the hard surface. The pain reverberates down my spine. My head spins. I lose my balance and fall onto the dressing table, which shudders. I slide to the floor and my handbag falls next to me. I snatch it up, hurl it at the intruder. He laughs, even as he catches it, and tosses it over his shoulder.

I lay on the floor as he prowls closer to stand over me.

29

Baron

I am on my way to her house, when my phone rings. I hit the handsfree. "Archer?" I ask.

"Baron, I'm sorry, but she gave me the slip."

"What?" I frown. "What do you mean? Where is she?"

"I'm at her house right now, and she's not here."

I swerve to the side and a car honks angrily as the vehicle passes me by. I hit the brakes and the car screeches to a halt. "What do you mean she's not there? Where could she be?"

"Not sure. Maybe...the studio?"

I release the brakes, peel onto the road, and take a U-turn.

"I'm on my way there now."

"I'm sorry about this. I literally lost sight of her for a few seconds, and she took off."

"We'll talk about that later," I snap. "Just get to the studio."

"On my way."

I disconnect, step on the accelerator and head for her studio. My heart begins to pound; adrenaline laces my blood. "Fuck." I slap my palm on the steering wheel. I knew it; knew I shouldn't have trusted anyone else with the job of watching her. But Archer is good. He is better than me when it comes to surveillance shit. It's why I'd asked him to keep an eye on her. But no one can protect her better than me. No one. And I had been too up my own arse to think clearly. I should have known she wouldn't accept anyone else to watch over her. Shit, if something were to happen to her. No, it's fine. She's fine. She has to be.

Good thing, I am not too far from her studio. In ten minutes, I screech to a halt in front of the building with her studio.

I reach the door that leads to the building, and am about to press the buzzer when a gust of wind blows. The door swings open, then slaps against the frame again. What the—? The hair on the nape of my neck rises. I freeze, pat my side, then swear again. Of course, I don't have a weapon. I am not at war. At least, I thought I wasn't. How wrong I've been. I am in the middle of the biggest fight of my life, the one to protect my woman.

I head for the studio, find the door to the building hanging askew. My pulse thuds at my temples and anger squeezes my guts. I try to take in a breath and my lungs burn. If anyone has dared to hurt her, I'll kill them. The blood pounds in my veins and my heartbeat accelerates. I race up the flight of steps, find the studio door similarly busted. I slip inside. The space is empty except for the purse on the floor.

I jump toward it, look at the contents spread across the floor. Among them is a photograph. I pick it up, glance at the family in the picture. The mother, the father, the older daughter, the younger one with red hair, wearing a red dress. The same red dress I'd seen on the girl in that pub.

My heart begins to race and sweat beads my palms. It's her. I had been right all along. The girl I hadn't been able to get out of mind all these years? It's her. Ava. My Eve. I pocket the photograph when a sound reaches me. I freeze, glance in the direction of the closed door of the dressing room, when a scream rends the air.

My heart slams against my rib cage,

I race across the floor, burst into the dressing room, to find her on the floor.

A man in a suit has her hands pinned back. Another restrains her legs. I take in their features, freeze. They are the same men who attacked her in the subway. What the hell are they doing here? Why are they coming after her?

A third guy, also in a suit, stands over her. He turns to face me and I growl. My vision narrows. Motherfucker, I am going to kill all of them. I lunge forward, grab his shoulders and haul him back. I fling him to the side. He hits the wall at a roll, only to spring up again. I rush toward him, raise my fist, and bury it in his face. His eyes roll back and he slumps.

Before he can hit the ground, I turn back toward the dressing room and freeze. She's on her knees and the man who previously had her hands pinned back now has his arm around her neck. The other guy stands between us.

Both men have their guns pointed on her.

Ava's chin wobbles, her face leached of all color. There's a cut on her forehead, her hair is askew, but otherwise, she looks unhurt. Good.

The man who's standing turns and walks toward me. I throw up my fists and he shakes his head. "Resist and Carlos, here, will not hesitate to shoot your girlfriend."

"Why," I growl, "why would you hurt her?"

"To get back at you, of course." He rocks back on his feet. "You guys need to stop sticking your nose in where you are not needed."

"Let her go," I growl, "she's innocent."

"You should have thought of that before you got involved with her."

A cold sensation stabs at my chest. I'd put her in danger, damn it. I'd thought I was protecting her, but I'd turned the Mafia's attention solely on her.

"She had nothing to do with it," I grate out.

"Oh, but she's such a hot piece of ass. Bet she has a really tight pussy, huh?"

Anger fills my head and my vision bleeds red. I jump toward him, and he raises his gun and fires. I duck and the shot echoes through the space. Ava screams as bits of plaster from the ceiling rain down between us.

"Baron," her voice hitches, "help me."

My heart stutters and the band around my chest tightens.

"Yes, Baron." The man in front of me bares his teeth, "Keep it up and we'll shoot her right in front of you... After we've taken turns fucking her, of course."

"Bastard," I growl, "you'll pay for this."

"Not if we kill you first." He aims his gun at me and I lunge forward again. I grab his arm, twist it. He screams and I watch the gun slip from his grasp to the floor.

He takes advantage of my momentary distraction and buries his other fist in my side.

Pain explodes up my spine and the breath rushes out of me. Bent over at the waist, I don't take my gaze off of her. I hold her eyes. Stay strong, my love. Don't let them get to you.

She swallows and tears roll down her cheeks. My guts twist. In that second, I know I'll never allow anything to happen to her. My life was already hers... Now...my heart is too. My soul. Every part of me belongs to her. I won't let these men get to her.

I straighten, turn my gaze on the guy who'd hit me. "That all you got?" I smirk. "Surely you can do better than that?"

His features twist. "I am going to kill you, asshole." The man throws himself at me.

I take the full brunt of his weight, allow my body to go limp as we crash to the floor. We roll away from the dressing room, toward the body of the third guy, who remains unconscious.

The man jumps up, just as I stagger to my feet. He buries his fist in my face. My neck snaps back and Ava screams; blood drips from my mouth. He hits me in the side, and I lurch back. Hits me a third time, and I stumble to the side toward where the gun had slipped from his grasp earlier. I sink down to my haunches and grab the weapon. I train it on him and he instantly throws up his hands. He shifts his gaze from me to his friend who holds Ava captive. The guy turns his gun on me, but Ava screams, "No," and renews her struggles.

Taking advantage of the commotion, the first guy bolts.

I train my gun on the man holding Ava. By now, they are standing, his arm pinning her to his body.

He stares at his friend on the floor, then at me. His hand shakes, as he presses his gun to her temple, "Come closer and I'll shoot her." He swallows. "I mean it."

"Of course, you do." I turn the gun in my hand, hook my forefinger through its ring. "See, I am going to put it down now."

Sweat beads the guy's forehead. I hold up my other hand, palm face up, then bend slowly.

"No tricks," he growls.

I place my gun on the floor, then straighten. "See, that was easy."

"Kick it aside."

I take in his flushed features, the way his hand trembles. Shit, this man is a loose cannon.

"Do it." His voice shakes.

I kick the gun and it skitters to the side.

He bares his teeth, then turns his gun on me. I angle my body to the side but he's already firing. I duck and the shot misses me.

There's a thunk as the bullet embeds in the wall somewhere behind me. He presses down on the trigger again, and there's a clicking sound, and again. Thank fuck, either he's out of bullets or his gun is jammed. I don't care which.

I rush toward him, just as he shoves Ava at me.

I close my arms about her as he brushes past us. He races across the studio floor, out the main doorway.

I pull Ava into my arms. "You're safe." I murmur, "you're safe."

She glances past me and her gaze widens. I turn to find the guy on the ground staggering to his feet.

Shit, I didn't check him for guns. I was too focused on Ava. Fucking fuck.

"Don't do it," I warn as he pulls out his gun. He aims it at us.

Ava freezes in my arms. I release her and she clings to me, "No, Baron, no."

"Let go of me," I snap.

"No, I won't."

"You must."

"I can't."

"You have to."

"Baron, please don't do this. I can't live without you."

"You can." I glance down at her, "Do it for him." For Edward.

"No," she shakes her head, "no."

I lower my head toward her, when the sound of a gun being cocked reaches me. I hold her gaze, stare into her beautiful green eyes, swimming with fear, with love.

I love you.

I push her away, then raise my arms.

"Don't come closer," he warns.

I pause, take in the sheen of sweat on his face, the intent gaze, the steadiness of his aim. This guy won't miss. I only hope I can divert him, keep him talking until Archer gets here.

"You don't want to do this," I say in a calm voice.

The intruder's lips twist, "I don't have a choice."

"What do you want, money? I can arrange that for you."

He hesitates.

"How much? A million? 10 million?"

His forehead furrows. I take a step forward, and this time, he doesn't stop me. I make sure to plant my body between him and Ava. Focus, focus. Keep him talking; keep her covered.

"You can take everything I have."

His grin broadens. "Oh, but I will." He levels his gun at me, and I draw in a breath. This is it. If I can save her life, it will be worth it.

"No," Ava cries out, "don't do this."

"Shut up," he growls.

I sense Ava stiffen behind me.

"Do as he says," I mutter.

"You stay quiet." He points his gun at me, as I sink to my knees. He aims it at my temple, when the sound of footsteps from the staircase reaches us. The man starts and glances over his shoulder. I lunge for the gun on the floor and fire just as he collapses face down.

Blood oozes out from a wound in his back.

I glance up, take in the man framed by the doorway, holding a gun.

He's dressed in a black T-shirt, a leather jacket and denim jeans. His amber gaze holds mine, his dark hair brushing the collar of his jacket. His features—his very familiar features—are pale. He lowers his gun, glances down at his chest.

I follow his gaze to where blood blooms from the left side of his chest.

"No," I choke out, "no."

I run toward him, reach him as he sinks to his knees. I lower my gun to the floor, then grabbing him, I ease him to the floor.

Footsteps sound, then Ava reaches us. She throws her arms around him, "Edward, oh, my god, Ed!"

TO FIND OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT, TURN THE PAGE TO READ THE BILLIONAIRE'S BRIDE

THE BILLIONAIRE'S BRIDE

1

CLAIM YOUR PREQUEL TO THE BIG BAD BILLIONAIRES HERE

Edward

The darkness pulls at me. I am falling, twisting, writhing. The sound of harsh breathing, groans reach me. I turn toward it, reach out my hand. It's Baron; it has to be. "Don't hurt him." I cough. "Please don't. I'll do as you say. I'll let you do anything to me; just don't touch him."

"Is that so?" My captor's footsteps approach, and I flinch. I want to turn my face away. Want to squeeze my eyes shut and pretend whatever he is going to do is not happening to me. I am not here, not in this room with no windows.

How long have I been here? Days...weeks maybe? I've lost count of time, my entire existence narrowed to what I can feel, touch, sense...since I'd been blindfolded after I'd been taken.

My kidnapers had shoved me in a room. I had resisted and they had hit me on the head. When I'd come to, I'd heard the shuffle of other bodies, heard the breathing of the others, enough to realize that I wasn't alone. They had kept us bound, gagged, blindfolded in the same room. Then Baron had managed to reach me and free my restraints. We'd attempted to free the other boys, but didn't get far before the kidnapers had returned. One look and they could read our intentions. They'd dragged me and Baron out, separating us from the rest. They'd locked us up together, blindfolded but not gagged.

I'm scared, so scared. So is Baron, though he tries not to show it. We've made a pact, that if we get out of here alive... We'll never allow anyone else to control us ever again.

Every time the kidnappers come back, they beat us. They'll leave, but never for long. They keep coming back for more. They feed us just enough to keep us alive. My entire world has narrowed to the next thud of boots on my back, my shoulders, on my chest. Beaten and left nearly unconscious.

The next time one of them returns, he tears off our blindfolds. Asshole is wearing a mask so we can't make out his features. I have the impression of a tall man, broad shouldered and with gray eyes. He tells me what I have to do. I refuse and he beats me again, this time until I black out. When I awaken, my kidnapper is ready. He tells me if I don't give him what he wants...he'll beat Baron.

I hesitate and he plows his fist into Baron's head, into his side. I hear the sound of ribs cracking and feel the anger thrum at my temples. "Don't," I beg him. "Don't do it."

"Are you ready to give me what I want?"

I hesitate again. This time he rams his fist into Baron's stomach. I hear Baron gasp in pain and somehow, that is so much worse than being beaten up myself. Somehow, hearing him hurting is much more horrible than anything this man could do to me.

"I'll do it," I force myself to form the words. "I'll do whatever you want."

He grabs my collar and tugs me up to my feet. My knees knock together, my shoulder throbs, my stomach knots, and I hate the weakness that boils up my throat. I swallow it down, will myself to stand straight. To push my chin up, thrust my chest out. I am not afraid, I am not. He turns me around, shoves me against the door, reaches for my pants and tugs them down.

It hurts, it hurts. I glance sideways take in the signet ring he wears on his pinky finger; the design on its surface is a bow and arrow. I glance up meet Baron's frozen eyes. His gaze widens, but he holds my gaze as the bastard buggers me.

"I won't make it."

"You don't have a choice." Baron bares his teeth. "The only way is forward."

Then pain slices through my head.

"No." My eyelids snap open. "No." My voice echoes in my ears. I take in the white ceiling, the walls, the smell of antiseptic and that sense of suspended reality that clings to a place which can never be a voluntary destination for anyone. Clearly, I am in a hospital. I try to rise up, but my body protests. My chest hurts. Pain slices through my side and I groan.

"Edward." A face appears in my line of sight. "You're awake?"

I stare up into her green eyes, emerald light, welling with emotions. A tear slides down her cheek. I reach for her and my shoulder protests. I grimace.

"You were shot." She glances down at my chest.

I follow her gaze and spot my left arm in a sling. I am wearing a hospital gown that gapes in the front to reveal a bandage around my chest.

"I'm alive," I mutter. That has to count for something, right?

"You were very lucky. The bullet grazed your side; a few inches more and—" Her bottom lip quivers and tears fill her eyes.

"Hey," I grip her arm and tug. She sits down on the side of the bed. "I didn't make it this far to die."

"Where did you go, Edward?" She swallows. "Why did you leave me?"

I blow out a breath. "I had to, Eve. I just had to find a way to get my head screwed on right. I needed time to sort through all of my feelings."

"And did you?" She tugs on her hand and I release it. "Did you manage to clear your head?"

"No." I twist my lips, "No, I couldn't stop thinking of you. Every moment I spent away from you was a mistake."

"Oh." She wrings her fingers together. "I... I don't know what to say."

"There's nothing to say; I am back now and—"

She rises to her feet, puts distance between us. "You left me, Ed. You shagged me, then walked out on me with no explanation."

"I was confused, Eve." I struggle to sit up. My side twangs, pain slices up my spine and I push it away. "I had just given up the one thing that had grounded my life until then. I walked away from my faith. I was ready to leave everything behind... I wanted to get away from it all. Instead, I found myself on your doorstep."

"You broke your vows." She adds quietly, "You shagged me."

"I needed you, Eve."

"And I needed..." she raises a shoulder, "a man who would stay with me after taking my virginity."

I swallow. "I was your first; I'll never forget that."

"I...tried to forget you. I didn't want anything to do with you, not after how you treated me."

My heart begins to race. The pulse pounds at my temples. "And now?" I clear my throat. "How do you feel about me now?"

She trains her gaze on me. "I don't know." She glances away, beginning to straighten my bedclothes, "When that bullet hit you and you collapsed and I thought I'd lost you..." Her chin wobbles, "I knew then, that I still had feelings for you."

My shoulders relax, some of the tension draining out of me.

"As do I, for you."

"But it's not enough." She squares her shoulders. "I can't forget how you abandoned me. You didn't even have the decency to tell it to my face. You simply walked out."

"I'd told you I would have to leave."

"You didn't even wait until I woke up."

"You'd have stopped me," I point out. "I had too much shit to sort out. I knew if I stayed, I'd be too taken up by you. As soon as I slept with you, I knew it was a mistake."

She stiffens, and I firm my lips. "I didn't mean it that way."

"Sure, you did." She scowls. "You regret sleeping with me."

"No." I sit up. Every part of me protests, and I wince.

Ava protests, "What are you doing?"

"I am fine." I push my legs over the side of the bed and stand up. My knees protest, my thighs spasm. Sweat breaks out on my forehead and I feel lightheaded, but at least I am upright. "See?" I say through clenched teeth. "I'm standing, aren't I?"

"Edward," she admonishes me, "get back into bed."

"Why don't you make me?" I take a step toward her and my entire body protests. I grit my teeth, forcing myself to stay upright. "Come on, Eve, tuck me in."

She scowls. "I only stayed to make sure you were okay."

"I'm not okay."

"You're standing, aren't you?" She blows out a breath. "I... I need to get going, anyway."

"Not yet." I straighten my spine, "I need you, Eve."

She shudders, closes her eyes. "I... I am not sure what I need."

"You still want me," I insist.

She takes a deep breath, pushes her shoulders back. "I survived without you all these days."

"Is that enough for you? Surviving?"

"I did a good job of it, thanks to Baron."

"Baron?" I draw in a breath, trying to figure out how she knows about him. I asked him not to contact her. "Did he look after you while I was gone?"

She tips up her chin. "I don't need a man to take care of me."

"Too bad," I set my jaw, "I did what I thought was best in the circumstances."

"Best for you or for me?"

"Best for all three of us."

She laughs, "You have no idea what you are talking about."

"Don't I?" My legs tremble; the dull thud of pain in my side ratchets up. Damn it, I can't afford to be weak. Not when I have to get back on my feet as soon as possible. It's the only way I can show her that I am worth forgiving. Sweat beads my forehead. Stay on your feet, don't you dare collapse on the bed.

"I knew I couldn't leave you unprotected, and I didn't trust anyone else to take care of you."

"Except Baron?"

"Except Baron."

"He got there in time that day. If it weren't for him reaching me, I... I'd have—" Her chin trembles. Tears gleam in her eyes.

A hot sensation stabs at my chest. I close the distance between us, wrap my free arm around her "Don't cry, Eve." I tuck her head under my chin. The scent of jasmine laced with that lush womanly scent of hers, fills my lungs. I am instantly hard. Shit. I am trying to comfort her, yet being this close to her is sheer torture.

"Why did you do it, Ed? Why did you send him to me?"

I stiffen. "Did he hurt you, Eve? Did he do something to upset you?"

She rubs her cheek against the rough hospital gown. "The only person who's hurt me here is you."

I squeeze my eyes shut. "Don't say that, Ava."

"It's true, though." She pushes against me, but I hold her close for just a second more before releasing her. She steps away, putting distance between us, and my gut twists.

"Eve," I frown at her, "what's wrong?"

"Nothing." She twists her mouth. "Everything."

"What do you mean?"

"Just that," she folds her arms around her waist, "I am not the same woman you left behind."

"It's only been two weeks."

"A lifetime."

I purse my lips. Who'd know that better than me? My life had changed in an instant when those bastards had abducted me. Seven lives...changed in the blink of an eye. We'd never been the same again. So yeah, I know what she's talking about, but still... It hasn't been that long. I drag my fingers through my hair, wince when every nerve in my body seems to protest. Shit, I must be more beat up than I'd realized. "So...what are you saying?"

"That, it's best if we spend some time apart."

"No fucking way that's happening." I take a step toward her and she skitters back. That stops me. "You afraid of me?"

"No." She shakes her head. "Of course, not."

I scowl, "Then why—"

The door opens then, and Baron walks in. He glances between us. His gaze takes in my features, sweeps over my bandaged arm, before coming to rest on Ava.

His brow furrows. "Are you okay?" He walks toward her, and she holds up her hand.

"I... I'm fine, just need some space."

"Not happening," he snaps. "You were attacked, and from what that man said before I took him down—"

"You mean before I took him down?" I interject.

He turns to survey me, "You look like shit."

"No thanks to you," I growl.

"I shot you by mistake. You know that, right?"

"Is that right?" I take in his jeans and shirt, the ruddy glow of his features. Bastard looks in the peak of health, while I feel like I could keel over at any moment.

"You know it is." He frowns. "I was aiming for the guy who broke into the studio."

"Only I got him first."

"About that," Baron scowls, "how did you have a gun on you?"

I arch an eyebrow, "Because, I am one of the Seven?"

"But..." Ava swallows, "you were a priest."

"Precisely." I dig my heels into the floor to stay steady, "Because I was a priest, I know people from all walks of life, enough to be able to procure a gun. Besides, no way was I returning unarmed. Not when I knew I'd need to keep you safe, Ava." I glance between them. "Turns out, I was right to do so. If I hadn't arrived in time, I'd never have shot that asshole."

"He's alive, by the way," Baron offers.

"Too bad." I glower. My legs begin to tremble. I sway. Both Baron and Ava step toward me. Their shoulders brush and she stiffens. So does he. They spring apart as if an electric current shocked them. More likely, an electric connection did pass between them. I sit down on the bed, look between them, before turning to him.

"Did you fuck her?"

2

Ava

Shit, shit, shit, I knew it was a mistake being in the same room as Baron and Edward. But how could I stay away? Edward had been hurt. He'd been in and out of consciousness for the last two days. I'd stayed by his side, only to make sure that he was okay. That's it. It has nothing to do with the relief that had swept through me when I'd seen him framed in the doorway of the studio. Right before he'd been shot—by mistake—by Baron.

Now, Edward glares at Baron, a suspicious look in his eyes. Of course, he'd spotted the body language between me and Baron. Too bad. Not that there's anything between me and Baron anymore, not after he'd left me too. But he'd rescued me again, when he'd walked into the studio. If it hadn't been for him arriving when he did... I swallow. Still, I hadn't been prepared for Edward to figure out what had transpired between me and Baron so quickly. And no, I will not feel guilty about that. After all, it's Edward who left me in the first place, didn't he?

Now he fists the fingers of his free arm at his side. "Did you?" he growls. "Did you shag her?"

Baron raises his shoulders and drops them. He opens his mouth, shuts it, shuffles his feet. Shit, if that isn't a dead giveaway for guilt, I don't know what is.

And damn, if we have done anything wrong. Yeah, you only slept with his friend while he was away.

But it's not like I had been in any kind of committed relationship with the Father... I mean, Edward. It is going to take some time getting used to not seeing him as a priest anymore. And the man in front of me with his bloodshot eyes, hair standing up every which way, anger bouncing off of him...is as far away from the calm, collected, Father as I can imagine. It's as if he left as one person, and returned as someone else. The change had already been underway the last time he'd seen me—when he'd fucked me, made love to me in a passionate blaze that had burned into my skin and imprinted itself in my cells. I swallow, glancing away.

"It's... just..." Baron starts to speak then purses his lips.

"Oh, for fuck's sake," I burst out. "Yes, he shagged me. I shagged him. Does that answer your question?"

Both men turn to glare at me. Edward with those golden eyes that seem to be ablaze in a way I've never seen them before. And Baron with those twin beams of laser blue that seem to cut me to the bone.

"What?" I demand. "What did you think would happen, Ed? You abandoned me—"

"—Left you while I took some time to figure things out," Edward snarls.

"Then called your best friend to come back to the life he'd left behind—"

"—to watch over you." He squares his shoulders.

"Knowing full-well that I was in a vulnerable position." I purse my lips.

"—I wanted to make sure you weren't alone."

"And that Baron, here, was trying to cope with life after everything that he'd been through," I insist.

"—I was giving him the chance to mend fences with the rest of the Seven."

"You pushed us together, knowing there was a good chance that we'd develop feelings for each other," Baron interjects.

"I trusted you," Edward roars, and I jump. Whoa, hello! What the hell happened to the Father who was always tightly in control? Who wore his serenity like it was the most important part of his personality?

To be fair, I'd always sensed that burning intensity just below the surface, only I'd never seen him lose his cool before. Not like this, and sensing how full-on Edward is now, compared to how he never showed his emotions earlier? It's something else altogether.

Silence descends in the space, broken only by the muted sound of footsteps outside the door.

"You were supposed to watch her... From a distance," Edward growls.

"You weren't supposed to make contact."

"What can I say?" Baron drawls. "I screwed up. Oops."

"Why you—" Edward's jaw tics. A vein pops in his temple. Anger pours off of him as he glares at Baron, who meets his gaze with a stoic countenance.

OMG, this can't be happening. I cannot believe this is actually unfolding in front of me. I mean, I can't possibly be witnessing this kind of a showdown, and with two men...at the same time, right? Both of whom I fucked; no excuses. And who were—are? —close friends...had clearly been through a lot together.

Now, because of me, they are eyeing each other like they hate each other... Maybe they already did, to some extent, if I've correctly read between the lines of how they had spoken about one another. Still, I can't live with myself if I destroyed whatever little bit of trust remained between the two. Going by how the two of them are engaged in a game of who-blinks-first... Well, I'm afraid things are going to get a whole lot worse.

I drag in a breath, then step between them. "Stop it, you guys."

"Get out of the way, Ava," Baron snaps.

"Don't talk to her like that," Edward snarls back.

I throw up my hands, "No seriously, you guys, this is not the time or the place to engage in a game of who has the biggest dick."

Both sets of gazes train on me. I glance sideways at Edward's glowering face, then at Baron's stony one. Shit, I had to go and say that, right? Of all the things.

Baron opens his mouth and I hold up a finger, "Don't even think about it."

"You don't know what I was going to say."

"Oh, please." I toss my hair over my shoulder. "The way the two of you pounced on that comment—which is a figure of speech, by the way, I'll have you know—you think I don't know what's going through your minds right now?"

"Actually, I don't," Edward drawls.

"Neither do I," Baron widens his stance, "but I'd sure like to know."

I stare between them, "Seriously, now the two of you are going to unite against me?"

"Of course, not," Edward bites out.

"No way," Baron retorts at the same time.

The two glare at each other again. The tension in the room ratchets up. Now we are back to square one. Lovely.

"Enough. Really, you two, cut it out." I fold my arms across my chest.

Edward scowls.

Baron's jaw hardens.

The animosity in the room seems to hit a fever pitch. The hair on the back of my nape stands on end.

"Step aside, Ava," Baron's voice lowers to a hush.

"No, no, no." I wring my fingers. "Don't do this."

"Do it," Edward says in a hard tone. Then he turns his gaze on me, and his features soften, "Please. Baron and I we need to sort this out."

"But... You're hurt," I burst out.

Edward rises to his feet. He pulls his arm out of his sling. Sweat beads his brow, but his features don't change. "You mean this?" He smirks. "It's fine, just a scratch."

I blink down at his arm, then at his face. "You are crazy," I mutter.

"I have been since I met you," he agrees.

Baron growls deep in his throat and the hackles on my arms rise.

"Now, Ava," he snaps, and I skitter back.

I feel the breeze a second before he throws up his fist.

3

Baron

What the hell am I doing? Edward's hurt, for fuck's sake. And yet, he'd challenged me. Knowing full-well I wouldn't be able to resist it. I throw a punch, aiming for the unhurt part of his face. He rises to his feet, ducks at the same time. I stumble forward. Edward wraps his good arm about my neck, tugging. Motherfucker's hurt but his grip is powerful. Apparently, the ex-Father has been keeping in shape.

"Stop! Stop it, you two!" Ava yells, just as Edward yanks his arm tightly against my neck, cutting off my air supply. I try to take in a breath and my lungs burn.

"I am going to get help." From the corner of my vision, I sense Ava run for the door.

I cough, grip Edward's forearm, tugging. He grunts, then with a sharp twist, digs his elbow into my windpipe. Darkness flickers at the edge of my conscious mind. Fuck this. Hurt or not, I am going to have to bring him down. I bring my elbow up, shove back. Connecting with his chest.

A growl rips from him. His grip loosens. I break free, turning on him, to find him reeling back. Blood stains his hospital gown. His breathing is harsh, his face pale.

"Shit, shit, shit."

He sways on his feet, and I grab his shoulders, turn and ease him onto the bed.

"Why do you have to be such a stubborn motherfucker?"

"Why do you have to...be?" He glowers up at me, pulls away, then huffs again. Sweat beads his forehead, as he collapses back.

"I am sorry, Ed. Truly, I didn't mean to shoot you."

"Yeah," he says through clenched teeth. "I know, even though a part of me wishes that you had done it on purpose, just so I could find a reason to hate you."

"Like you don't have enough basis to do so now?"

"You and Ava." He curls his fingers into fists, "How could you, Baron?"

"It wasn't something in my control," I snap.

"I sent you to her because you were the only one who could keep her safe."

"You sent me, knowing you were putting me in temptation's way." I drag my fingers through my hair. "Admit it, Edward. You knew we'd be attracted to each other. You were testing her... Testing me."

"You think that's what this is?" he snarls. "Some trial by fire bullshit?"

"Isn't it?" I glare back at him.

He clenches his fingers into fists. "Is this some bullshit explanation that you've come up with to assuage your conscience?"

"It's the truth, something you are not able to admit to yourself."

"Your conscience is playing tricks on you."

"Your sub-conscious is double-crossing you."

"Like, you did?" He bares his teeth.

Anger suffuses my blood. "Why you—"

"What have we here?" A new voice sounds behind us. I turn to find Weston walking in. He's wearing scrubs, a white coat over top. "Ava told me you two were fighting but I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't seen it with my own eyes."

"Aren't you a cardiologist or some such shit?" I mutter.

"Yeah," Edward doesn't take his gaze off me, "shouldn't you be sending someone more common in to check in on me?"

"I would have, except apparently, I care enough about the two of you to make sure that you don't kill yourselves. A feeling which neither of you seem to share, it seems." Weston walks around the bed, taking in Edward's pallor, then glares at me. "Out."

"But..."

"Get out, Baron," he says in a calm voice, "now."

Something in his tone cuts through the chaos in my head. I pivot, walking out of the door, up the corridor to the windows at the far end. Reaching it, I ball my fists at my side, then bang my forehead against the pane. "Fuck," I growl. "F-u-c-k."

I scent jasmine, and below that, the whiff of ripe raspberries. A second later there's a touch on my shoulder. I stiffen, but don't turn around.

"Baron?" Her soft voice wraps around my heart. Her scent intensifies as she comes around to stand abreast with me.

We stare outside the window at the large semi-circular driveway that leads to the road. A car stops, drops off a man and a woman, before driving off. To my right, a patient in a wheelchair with an IV attached to his arm sucks on a cigarette as if his life depends on it. What foolish creatures we humans are. We cling to life with every last breath we have, even as we inhale poisons that hasten us to the end.

Am I poison to her? Why did I taint her life? I should have stayed away. Instead, I had complicated things for her, for me, and for that asshole, Edward. Somewhere along the way, I had become addicted to her. I can't live without her. I'm not going to give her up that easily, not without a fight.

"You okay?" She glances at me from the corner of her eye. "I'm worried about you."

"Don't be." I draw myself up to my full height. "I'll be fine."

"You sure?"

I glance at her in time to see her chew on her lower lip. My blood instantly drains to my groin. Shit, my friend—okay, ex-friend—is lying there hurt. After I'd shot him. And here I am, lusting after his girlfriend. Well, technically she's mine now, and I'm not letting her go.

I close the distance between us, fit my knuckles under her chin and tip up her head. "Yeah," I murmur, "I've never been more sure in my entire life."

Her breathing grows shallow. Her pupils dilate. "Baron," she whispers.

"Hmm?" I rub my thumb across her lower lip. So fucking soft, she is such a bloody temptation, I can't keep my hands off of her. I lower my head to hers and she parts her lips. I share her breath, and that sweet scent of her arousal goes straight to my head. I brush my mouth over hers once, twice. She shudders. She digs her fingers into the front of my shirt. I slide my hand down her back, to the curve of her hip. That dip of where her waist meets her butt... Fuck me, but I could lose myself in that sweet roundness. Come to think of it, I have.

I deepen the kiss and she parts her lips. I lick into her mouth and a moan bleeds from her. I gaze into her eyes as I slide my tongue across hers. She shudders, pushes herself closer, but I clasp my other palm around the nape of her neck, hold her immobile as I devour her mouth. She wriggles her hips, tightening her grasp on me. I palm her butt and she gasps. Her head falls back and her eyelids flutter as she submits to me... My cock thickens, and fuck me, if I don't have her right now, I am going to—Footsteps approach and the sound of someone clearing their throat reaches me. Her eyes snap open and she tries to pull away, but I don't let her. I continue to devour her mouth, watch as her eyes glaze over with lust again. Good, no-one, no-one can stop me from wanting her. Except him... He can. I tear my mouth from hers, release her so quickly that she stumbles. I grip her shoulder, make sure she finds her balance before turning to face the intruder.

"Yes, Doc?" I tilt my face toward a wary Weston. His gaze narrows on me.

"I patched him up. You can see him, now."

"Oh, thank God." Ava brushes past him and walks to the room. I watch as she disappears inside. Fuck, I can't stop her from seeing him. But I can do my best to ensure that she doesn't think of anyone but me. Doesn't want to be with anyone but me. Can't stop loving me. Only me.

I grip my fingers at my sides with such force that pain tears up my arm.

"Easy, ol' chap," Weston drawls, "you don't want to burst an artery."

"That would be the least of my worries." I stare at the hospital room door through which she'd disappeared. What's she doing inside there? Is she touching him? Kissing him? Does he have his hands on her? Are they plotting how to be together? A growl rips up my throat. I take a step forward and Weston grabs my arm. "Don't be stupid, Masters."

"What-bloody-ever." I try to shake off his arm but his grip tightens. "Rein in your impulses," he cautions. "Don't do anything that will spoil your chances with her."

I pause, "Why are you so concerned about that?" I shoot him a sideways glance. "Thought you were on Edward's side."

"I am on the side of whatever—whoever Ava chooses." He tilts his head, "After all, it is her choice."

I press my lips together.

"It is, isn't it?" he says in a warning tone.

"Of course." I tug on my arm and he releases me this time. "And no one is going to stop me from influencing that." I turn to leave, then look back at him and ask, "The man Edward tried to kill... "

"He's still unconscious."

I stare at him over my shoulder. "And the man who broke into Ava's studio... he's not conscious yet either?"

He shakes his head. "The bullet punctured one of his lungs but he'll survive."

"Too bad he's not dead."

Weston arches an eyebrow. "Look at it this way, between the two of them, we should have, hopefully, enough information to help us track down the kidnappers."

"Bloody incident," I spit out. "When I finally get my hands on those behind the kidnapping, I am going to wring their necks with my bare hands."

"Get in line," Weston says mildly. "So, what are you going to do now?" He looks me up and down.

"What do you mean?" I drawl.

He glances from me to the closed hospital door, then back, "You know what I mean."

"That's easy," I bare my teeth, "I am going to fight for what's mine."

4

Ava

"Are you comfortable?" I plump up the pillow behind Edward's neck.

Following his altercation with Baron, Weston had patched him up again, then given him more pain killers. By the time I'd emerged from Edward's room, Baron had left. I'd been disappointed, but also realized it was for the best. Standing up to one of them takes everything in me. Going toe-to-toe with two of them? That is nearly impossible. Not something I can do. So, when I hadn't seen or heard from Baron since, I'd taken it as a sign that I should focus on helping Edward recover. Not that it is something I have to do... But I feel compelled to do so... Maybe a part of Baron feels responsible for Edward getting hurt. After all, he had walked into my studio and saved me. I do owe him...somewhat.

Edward had still been asleep when I'd gone home last night, and when I'd returned today, he had seemed much better. So, I'd headed off to the studio, managed to get in the post-lunch dance class, then returned to check in on him. My plan was to head off for my late evening class, if everything went well. I'd cancelled my dance classes the last two days, but if I could get the ones in today, it would definitely help to keep some money coming in.

This time, he is awake.

I tilt my head in his direction. "There's one thing I want to ask."

"Anything." He smirks.

I frown, "It's a serious question."

He wipes the smile off of his face. "Is this serious enough an expression for you?"

"Hmm." I huff. "When did you learn to shoot?"

"I didn't?" He raises a shoulder. "I saw the gun lying next to the man on the floor. I picked it up and when I saw him aiming the gun at the both of you, I followed my instinct and shot at the guy. I got lucky."

"Wasn't that difficult for you?" I swallow. "After all, you were...are a priest."

"Not anymore," he mutters. "Certainly not, after I've broken my vows in every form imaginable."

"Don't you have to tell the Church or something, that you are leaving them?" I frown.

"It's the first thing I did in the morning, before I left the city. I met the Bishop and spoke to him."

"And they agreed to let you go?"

"Canonical law states that once you are ordained as a priest, the sacrament can never be erased." His lips twist. "But before I left, I asked to be laicized."

"What does that mean?"

"I can no longer function outwardly as a priest."

"Oh, Edward." I twist my fingers together. "Why did you do that? It was so important to you, being in service of the Church and your flock."

"It was," he agrees, "until I found something more important."

He peruses my features and my cheeks heat.

"I can't accept it," I whisper. "It's too much of a responsibility."

"It was inevitable." His sighs. "I thought I could use the strictures of the priesthood to find some semblance of normalcy. Turns out, I was wrong. I thought I had overcome the aftermath of the incident, but... I had only been biding my time."

"I am not sure I understand what you mean."

He peers up into my face, "You will...in time."

"Why don't you tell me now?"

He raises his hand and cups my cheek. "So impatient," he murmurs, "so feisty." He runs his hand down my cheek, and twists a strand of my hair around his fingers. "So soft." He leans forward and sniffs, "I missed this." He peers into my face. "I missed you, Ava. Your touch, your scent, your little moans when you come apart in my arms, the way you kiss, how you get that little line between your eyebrows when you concentrate on something."

"Ed—"

"Let me say what's on my mind, Eve." He places a finger on my lips. "The weeks I was away, I swore if...when I came back, I wouldn't wait anymore. The distance I put between us showed me how important you are to me."

Heat spools off of his body, embraces me, cocoons me in a familiar bubble of contentment. This is Ed, remember, the man you fell head over heels in love with? The man who turned his back on everything he held dear, for you. "You still left," I whisper.

"Can you ever forgive me for that?" He winds the strands of hair around his palm and tugs. I lean in closer, until my mouth is poised just above his, until I am sharing his breath.

"I wish I could say that, given a choice, I wouldn't do it again," he whispers, "but it's what helped me sort through the thoughts in my head. It's what made me realize what you mean to me."

"It's what made me realize that maybe what we had was not completely right for me."

His brow furrows. "What do you mean?"

"Never mind." I shake my head. "That didn't come out right."

I rise to my feet and he grabs my arm. "Tell me what you're thinking, Eve."

"Please don't call me that," I whisper.

"Why?" he growls, and I glance away.

"Tell me why I can't call you by the nickname I gave you?" he demands.

I bite the inside of my cheek, refuse to meet his gaze.

"Is it because you don't like the name anymore?"

"No," I protest, "it's not that."

"Then?" He scowls. "What is it?"

"It's just that Baron... He..."

Edward's gaze intensifies. "Motherfucker," he snarls. "It's because he calls you by the same name, isn't it?"

When I don't reply, his jaw hardens. "Yet another thing he took away from me."

"I am not anyone's to take," I insist. "I am my own woman."

"And you are mine."

"I... I am not sure about that."

"Stop that." He pulls me onto his lap. "You belong to me. That's it. End of story."

"If only things were that simple."

"It is that simple." He brings his big palm up to cup my face again, in a gesture that is so Edward, so dominant, yet so sweet that I feel like bursting into tears right then.

I glance away. "It's not, Ed. Things are much more complicated,"

His shoulders tense. "Because of him."

"You can say his name, you know," I chide him. "After all, he is your friend."

"Not anymore."

"You trusted him enough to ask him to look after me."

"Big mistake," he growls. "I wish there had been another way out."

"You could have stayed," I remind him.

"I'd have only destroyed whatever it was you felt for me, if I had."

"You changed what I felt for you."

"Did I, Eve?" He rakes his gaze across my features, "Or are you simply confused because he fucked you?"

"Edward!" Only when his head snaps back, do I realize that I've slapped him.

"Shit." I pull away from him, "Shit, shit, shit." What's happening to me? First Baron, then Edward. I've slapped both of them. Before I'd met them, I'd never slapped a single person in my life... If you didn't count my sister, growing up. But really, I've never lost my temper and now... I can't go a day without striking one or the other.

"I'm sorry," I mutter, "it's just what you said—"

"No, I'm sorry." Edward sits up against the pillow. "That was wrong. I shouldn't have said that. It's just, coming back to being shot, then seeing the two of you together..." he shakes his head, "I am making excuses. Nothing pardons how I insulted you." He drags his fingers through his already mussed-up hair. The usually composed Father—no longer Father—the usually unflappable Edward, all riled up and wearing a hospital gown... Not to mention that he's unshaven. The beard on his chin only adds to his rumpled appeal. And then, he had apologized. Not to say that when he'd been Father Edward, he'd been impolite, but his dominant traits had been tightly leashed. Hidden under a control that had been both thrilling and scary to observe. Now, it's as if his personality is tumbling out and he isn't quite sure how to handle it.

He stares at me, then holds out his hand, "Come 'ere."

I glance at it, then back at him, "I don't think that's a good idea."

"Come here, Ava." His voice lowers to a hush, and damn him, but I can't stop myself from obeying him. I walk over to him and he, once more, pulls me down into his lap.

"I missed you, Eve."

Something warm pools in my chest. I push the thick silky hair away from his forehead. "I did too," I say honestly.

"I want you to know that I don't blame you for what happened."

"You don't?"

He shakes his head. "Baron can be a little overbearing. And you are the most beautiful woman in the world. Of course, he made a play for you."

"It wasn't exactly like that," I mutter.

"He and I, we have a lot in common. If anyone knows how he operates, it's me. I know he must have come onto you hard, and before you'd realized what was happening, he'd have moved in."

"Edward, no, it wasn't all him," I insist.

"It's okay, Eve." He rubs his thumb across my cheek. "Whatever happened, it's only a temporary setback. Nothing we can't recover from."

"Hold on a second." I push at his chest. "Whatever happened was consensual, Edward."

He frowns. "You were distraught, not in the right frame of mind. Baron took advantage of you."

"No, he didn't," I maintain.

"Of course, he did." He peers into my face. "He must have." His jaw tics. "It's why you slept with him."

"I fucked him, Ed." I hold his gaze. "I wanted to be with him, and it wasn't only because I was missing you."

His amber gaze catches fire. A vein beats at his temple. "What are you trying to say?"

"That..." I swallow. No other way out, best to come out and say it. "I was...am attracted to him." I shake my head. "No, actually, it's more than that, Ed. I have feelings for him."

5

Edward

Something hot stabs at my chest. I fist my fingers at my sides. She has feelings for him. Of course, she does. Baron had swept onto scene when I had left. I had sent him, precisely for that. Of course, to keep an eye on her, without moving in on her. I had been so sure that he'd do that. It had never crossed my mind that he'd make contact with her... Okay, it had crossed my mind, but I had been so sure that Ava was mine, that she wouldn't be attracted to anyone else.

I should have known Baron is too similar to me. Oh, physically we are different, but our approach to life, it's similar. Perhaps that's due to our formative years being poisoned by the same toxin that tainted the lives of the rest of the Seven. They had moved on, found the loves of their lives, while Baron and I? We are still struggling.

And now we are both involved with the same girl.

Shit, shit, shit. What a mess this is turning out to be.

"Edward?" Ava asks, her voice subdued. "Are you okay?"

I'll never be okay. I'll never forgive myself for leaving her when I should have stayed. I hadn't been thinking straight, and you know what? I am not going to regret what I did. What is done, is done. It's time to move on.

"I'm not," I confess, "but I will be, once I figure out what I need to do to win you back."

"Edward, please." She rises to her feet, and when she tugs on her hand, I release it. I watch her as she drags the heavy cloud of hair off her neck and over one shoulder. "This is not a competition."

"Isn't it?"

The door opens and Baron enters. He glances between us, then walks over to Ava. "You okay, Eve?"

"Don't call her that," I snap.

"Oh, and why is that?" He leans forward to slide his hand about her neck and Ava freezes. "Baron, please, don't."

He frowns, looks like he is about to protest, then nods. He lowers his hand to his side. "Why can't I call her Eve?" He frowns at me and I glower back. Anger pounds at my temples and I clench my fists at my sides.

"You know why," I growl. "I call her Eve. I referred to her as Eve on the phone when I called you."

"So?" Baron raises a shoulder.

"So, I called her that first; I get dibs on it."

"Dibs?" Ava barks out a laugh. "Did you just say 'dibs'?"

My neck heats. Yeah, I did. What can I say? She does that to me—totally wrecks my self-restraint. Makes me recede into the most primitive corner of my brain, which I'd hoped I had gained control of a long time ago.

"Yeah, did you?" Baron drawls. "How very mature of you, Chase."

"Fuck off, Masters," I snap.

"I see your time at whichever-beach-you-decided-to-spend-the-last-few-weeks did a whole lotta good for your temper." Baron smirks.

"It was a monastery, you bastard."

"Oh, is that what they are calling it nowadays?" Baron's grin widens. "Tell me, how much of the time did you spend high? How often did you have to say your prayers? Oh, wait," Baron pretends to think, "that was when you were a Father. Now that you are not, you don't have to pretend to have conversations with God, and all that other bullshit."

"I am going to shove your balls up your asshole." I throw off the bloody sheets, swing my legs onto the floor.

Baron's chest seems to expand. He bares his teeth, throws up his fist, just as Ava steps in between us.

His knuckles brush the side of her cheek and anger explodes behind my eyes. She stumbles back. I snatch her toward me, pushing her behind my back, then plant my fist in Baron's face.

He stumbles, straightens. A drop of blood drips from his face. A stricken look twists his features. "Shit, Ava, did I hurt you?"

"Yes, you did," I snap.

"No, it's fine. Really. It was just a tap," she protests.

I turn, survey her features. "Does it hurt?"

"No." She shakes her head. "He barely brushed my cheek."

"Let me see." Baron, the asshole, tries to brush past me and I turn on him.

"You've hurt her enough."

"I'm not the one who left her and went off gallivanting to wherever it is that you went." He glowers.

"I'm not the one who turned his back on the man you swore to stand by."

"I saved your life, you asshole." Baron growls, "I did everything possible to help you through the aftermath of the incident."

"Saved your life?" Ava pushes at my shoulder, trying to glance around me, "What the hell does that mean?"

"Nothing," I snap.

"Nothing," Baron mumbles.

"Shit, this is crazy." Ava shakes back her hair. "The two of you can't be in a room without coming to blows, yet there are so many things you two agree on. And the secrets you two seem to have?" She glances between us. "Seriously, it's unnerving, it's like you have a secret code or something."

Or something. I rub the back of my neck. Baron stares at me, then turns his gaze on Ava. "It's not intentional," he mutters. "Asshole, here, gets on my nerves."

"Makes two of us," I gripe.

"Glad we agree on something."

"Oops, do we?" I scoff. "I must be more wounded than I thought."

"Too bad the bullet didn't hit home."

Silence descends, then Baron's features twist.

"Fuck," he growls, "I didn't mean that."

"I know," I say quietly. "When you get upset, you tend to speak without thinking."

"So do you."

"Yeah." I shuffle my feet. "Guess we got off to a bad start."

"It happens." Baron lowers his chin. "It's not every day that you meet a ghost from your past you haven't seen in twelve years."

"Twelve fucking years." I nod. "Wouldn't have thought I'd make it this far."

"Me neither, man," Baron says wryly. "What say we bury our differences long enough to figure out what we are going to do about us?"

"Us?" I scowl. "There's no us... There's only—"

"Edward, seriously?" Ava slips past me, stands facing the both of us. "Baron's calling a temporary truce. Why don't you take it?"

Because I don't fucking want to. Because a part of me is already mourning that I have lost you. Because I know I'll never measure up to the kind of man you need me to be. Because I am tainted but I can't let go of you.

"Edward?" Ava prompts. "Please, can you two stop fighting?" She swallows. "Just until we figure out what to do next?"

I scowl. Baron meets my gaze. "You know we need to figure this out," he mutters. "Trust me, I don't want this truce either, but it's the only way to move forward."

F-u-c-k. He's right. Doesn't mean I am going to make this easier for him. I fold my arms over my chest. "Fine," I snap, "let's talk this out then."

6

Baron

"You propose, what?" I stare at Ava. "No. No way, am I going to agree to that."

Edward folds his arms behind his neck. Asshole leans back in the hospital bed, like he's king of a fucking kingdom. And based on what Ava just said, I almost understand why he's smirking.

"No way, am I allowing him to move in with you," I growl.

"It's only until he is fully recovered," Ava pleads. "Look, the doctor told him he won't be up and running for a few more days. He'll need help, and I don't want him to be alone during this time."

I glower at Ed, who grins back at me. I ball my fists at my sides.

"Why can't he get a place of his own?"

"I will." Edward nods, "Just waiting for the paperwork on the apartment I am going to rent to come through."

"Why can't Saint put you up in one of his many hotels?"

"It still means he won't have anyone to take care of him," she replies.

"I'll hire him a nurse. Hell, I'll make sure he has round-the-clock attention," I snap.

"It's not the same as someone you know looking after you." Her forehead furrows. "You understand that, right?"

No, I don't. I set my jaw. "If you're alone with him, he'll take advantage of you."

Edward's expression sours. "I'm not the one who moved in on my friend's woman while her boyfriend's back was turned."

"Boyfriend?" I growl, "You were nothing to her; you barely knew her."

"Like you've spent all that long with her?" He sits up. "You tosser, and after everything I did for you, this is how you repay me?"

"Finally," I bare my teeth, "now you show your true colors. Keeping track of everything I owe you, eh? You did what you had to do, out of some twisted guilty conscience, you—"

A piercing whistle blows through the space. I whip my head around, and so does Edward.

Ava lowers her fingers from her lips, her cheeks flushed, her eyes blazing. "The two of you are incorrigible. Here I am, trying my best to figure out how to move things forward, and all you two can do, is fight like you are ten.

She stares between us. "You know what?" She plants her hands on both of her hips, "You guys can figure this out. I have had it with both of you." She marches to the door.

"Where are you going?" I scowl.

"Some of us need to work for a living," she snaps back, "and I am already running late for my first class."

"I'll take you." I take a step forward and she turns on me.

"Don't you dare come near me." She points a finger in my direction. "In fact, don't leave this room, until you two sort out whatever it is that has the two of you at such loggerheads."

"So, am I moving in with you?" Edward ventures.

"No," I snap.

"Why not?" He frowns. "I thought we'd just settled it?"

"No, we haven't."

"I am sooo out of here." Ava turns to the door, then looks back and adds, "When you two have a plan figured out, call me, or... You know what?" She pauses. "Don't. If I don't hear from either of you, I'll be happy." She marches out of the door.

Silence descends. I glare at Edward, who glowers back at me.

"Well, that went well," I drawl.

He seems like he is about to respond, then slouches back against the pillows. "Shit, we really pissed her off, didn't we?"

"What did you expect?" I walk over and slump into a chair. "The two of us can barely look each other in the eye when we speak, let alone try to work out what is clearly a sticky situation for all of us."

"Not my fault," he mutters.

"Edward, seriously, man." I rub the back of my neck "What the hell happened to you out there? You seem to be coming apart at the seams."

He draws in a breath, then shoves off his covers. "What did you expect? I've been cooped up in here for the last three days. Of course, I am going out of my head."

"Is that what it is?"

"What else can it be?" He frowns.

"When are they going to discharge you?"

"How about right now?" Weston walks in, this time dressed in jeans and button-down shirt, with his white coat on top. "Your test results are all fine. You're free to leave."

"Hallelujah." Edward swings his legs over and stands. "About fucking time."

Weston stares at him, "I can't remember the last time I heard you swear so much."

"Maybe before he joined the seminary?" I volunteer.

"So, it's definitely over, then?" Weston makes some notes on his clipboard, his voice absentminded in the way of most doctors when they are processing a few different streams of thought in their mind.

"What is?"

"Your priesthood?"

Edward stills. "Seems that way," he says, in a voice devoid of all emotion.

"How do you feel about that?"

"About what?"

Weston pins him with a stare. "Don't bullshit me, Ed," he snaps. "Being a priest was a big part of your life. How are you adjusting to life in the aftermath?"

"I..." He rolls his shoulders. "I am not sure yet, and that's the honest truth."

"Hmm." Weston looks him up and down. "You have a place to go, now that the rectory is out for you?"

"I'm trying to figure that out." He glances around, heads for the chair in the corner where his clothes have been folded. He pulls off the sling, winces, then struggles into his jeans and shirt. Then he sits in the chair to put on his shoes and looks up at us. "What?" he growls.

"You know you can stay with any of us, right?" Weston adds.

Not with me, though. I fold my arms across my chest and Weston slaps the back of my head. "What the fuck?" I sputter. "Seriously, Doc."

"Aren't you forgetting something, asshole?" Weston growls.

"What, what?" I glare at him. Weston glowers back and I blow out a breath. "Yeah, yeah, you can stay with me." I mumble, "It's a studio, but hey, I am sure we can work something out."

"Oh, fuck off, Masters," Edward mutters. "I am sure you'd be glad if I took you up on your offer, but it's not happening. I am staying with Ava."

Anger thrums at my temples and I shove it back. Don't lose it. Don't lose it. For Ava's sake. You need to win her over and that's not going to happen unless you get back in her good books.

Which means, having to pretend to get along with your once friend. It's the only way she'll realize that you are serious about her. Fuck! I don't have a choice. I am going to have to grit my teeth and get through this.

"You ready to go?" I say through clenched teeth.

"You offering me a ride?" Edward arches an eyebrow.

"For my sins." I rise to my feet, heading for the door. "Don't blame me if you can't keep up."

Forty-five minutes later, we draw up in front of Ava's home. The drive had been tense. Neither of us had spoken and I had turned on the radio—because, yeah... That's how much of a coward I am. I figured it was best to fill the silence so neither of us had to speak. Fucking hell, the last I checked I still had my balls about me, so why the hell can't I have a direct conversation with this man I've known more than half my life? Maybe some things are best left unsaid? Like, why the fuck didn't you called in all those years you had my phone number... And when you finally did, it was only because you needed my help with something? Typical Edward.

To the rest of the Seven, he's always been the voice of reason. The calm and collected teen who'd become a voice of conscience for them. Me? I know better.

I know that hidden under that exterior is a man who is angry with the world, with himself, with everything that happened to us when we were kidnapped. I know, because I was there. I know, because I bore the brunt of what happened during the incident, along with Edward.

I know, because neither of us have ever discussed what happened during that time. Not with each other... And definitely not, with the rest of the Seven. There are some things you take with you to the grave, for if you mention them aloud, they became real. Too real. To the point that it would consume your every waking moment. Some things... You are never prepared to face, no matter how much time passes. Some things are best forgotten, because to acknowledge them would mean you have to face the consequences of the aftermath, something which I refuse to deal with.

I park the car, shove open the door, and head up the garden path. When I unlock her front door, he stiffens. "You have a key?"

Clearly, I do. I push the door, walk through, and drop the keys on the table in the hallway. I leaf through her mail, just to irritate him, then gesture to the couch. "Make yourself at home."

He frowns at me. "Like you?"

I smirk. "Yeah, I misspoke. Make yourself comfortable," I pause for effect, "but not too comfortable." I walk to the kitchen, top off the coffee maker with water and coffee grounds, then switch it on. I turn to find Edward leaning a shoulder against the doorway.

I tilt my head, "I've been staying here."

He stiffens. "You stayed here?"

"Yep." The coffee maker begins to bubble and I move away to grab two mugs, place them on the counter.

"You moved in with her?" he growls.

I allow my lips to curve and his expression darkens. "Don't fuck with me, Masters." His jaw tics.

I snatch up the coffee pot, top off both cups, then grab both off the counter. I walk over, hand one to him, then brush past him to sit in the chair in the living room.

Edward follows me. He sinks into the couch, then glares at me. "Well?" he growls. "You sleeping in this house with her?"

"I am sleeping in this house."

A nerve pops at his temple and my grin widens.

"Chillax," I drawl. "I slept there," I point to the couch where he is sitting, "until I didn't."

He curls his fingers into fists. "You just had to rub that in, didn't you?"

"Sorry, ol' chap." I raise my shoulders. "You'd prefer I lie? Truth is, your loss was my gain."

"So, this is how it's going to be?" he says in a hard voice. "The two of us always baiting each other, always at loggerheads, and never able to see eye to eye?"

"Guess nothing much has changed, huh?"

"Damn right." He scowls down at his cup of coffee, then stares at me, "You need to fuck off, Masters. You're not needed anymore."

"Didn't hear you say that when you called and asked me to step in."

"I changed my mind."

"I cleared up the mess you left behind at the church, by the way," I lower my chin, "and you are welcome."

"Considering how you fucked up everything else, you'll have to excuse me if I can't muster a thank-you."

"The man you thought you strangled," I tip up my chin, "he's alive, by the way."

Edward stiffens. "Too bad," he mutters, "he deserved to die."

I take in his features. "You didn't used to be this bloodthirsty."

"And you used to be my friend."

I wince, then drag my fingers through my hair. "Guess I deserve that."

"And much more." He takes a sip of his coffee, places his cup back on the table, "If you think you can come between me and Ava, you are mistaken."

"Correction." I set my jaw. "I didn't come between anyone. You left, remember?"

"And now I am back."

"I guess you're entitled to your opinion." I scowl.

He glowers back. The tension in the room escalates. Shit, this isn't how I'd wanted it to be. I'd known Edward would return, eventually... I'd hoped I'd have more time. I didn't expect for him to come back so quickly. Not before I'd consolidated my position with Ava. Before I'd won her over completely. If it means I am being greedy and duplicitous, then the fuck I care? I am not letting go of the one thing that brings me joy. I am not letting him take Ava from me, and if that means I need to play along with him for a while, even win his confidence, then so be it.

I hold his gaze, then blow out a breath, "Can we call a truce temporarily?"

His forehead furrows. "Why is that?"

"I don't know about you, but I can't fight on an empty stomach, man." I lean back in the couch, "Can we order some pizza first?"

7

"If we haven't been visited by people from the future yet, does that mean time travel will never be invented? However, these people that may have come back may have kept themselves hidden so we don't know they've come back, so the future is unchanged.... Um, does that make sense? Guess the past should stay in the past—we shouldn't change it but only learn from it. Besides there is no future yet, so how can someone come back from something that hasn't yet existed?"

-From Ava's Diary

Ava

I walk inside the house and the smell of cigarettes laced with coffee and a deeper, edgier smell I can only identify as testosterone hits me. What the—? I glance at the two men sprawled across from each other. Between them are used coffee cups. There's also an ashtray—a previously unused one which I'd shoved to the back of one of my shelves... Who'd found it? I narrow my gaze on the cigarette butts that have been stubbed out.

"Have you been smoking?" I scowl at Baron.

"Don't look at me." He jerks his chin in Edward's direction.

"You?" I turn on him, "You, Father? I mean, Edward. Really?" I scowl.
"Since when did you start smoking?"

"Since I left you and realized how much I miss you?"

My cheeks heat.

Baron makes a sound deep in his throat. I ignore it. I drop my bag on the edge of the couch farthest away from Edward, then stoop to grab the ashtray. "Well, next time, take your butts outside."

"As long as you park your butt next to mine."

Before I can turn he's patted me on my arse.

"Hey," I straighten, "that was uncalled for."

"Sorry," he raises his hands, "I couldn't resist."

I glance over to find Baron curling his fingers into fists. "Keep your hands off her, you prick."

"I apologized, didn't I?" Edward drags his fingers through his hair. "It was a moment of weakness, okay."

"As long as it doesn't happen again," Baron snaps.

Edward jerks his chin. Baron, glowers, but doesn't say anything else.

"Hmm." I stare between them, "I assume you've come to some kind of understanding."

Neither speaks.

"Well, have you?" I frown. "Go on, you can tell me."

"We...may have." Baron concedes, "but first," he holds up his finger, tilts his head as if listening. "Wait for it, wait for it." The doorbell rings. "Pizza." He springs up, heads for the door.

"Pizza?" I blink

"Yeah, we have to eat sometime, don't we?"

I take in Ed's pale features, his rumpled clothes. He seems tired but not in pain. "How's the wound?" I ask.

"I'll live." He smiles lazily, and my breath catches.

Shit, this, being surrounded by all these acres of hot manliness isn't helping me at all. I turn away, "I think I am going to take a shower."

Baron returns just then with two massive pizzas.

"Everything okay with Archer?" he calls out after me.

"Of course." I glance at him over my shoulder. "He's a good man." I lower my chin. "He mentioned the two of you served together in the army?"

"We did." Baron places the pizza boxes on the coffee table. "There are only two other men I'd trust to watch over you. He's one of them."

"One of two, huh?" I say slowly. "So, there's you, obviously. And Archer..."

He nods.

"And the third man?" I tilt my head, "Who's the third person you'd trust to protect me?"

When he doesn't reply, I narrow my gaze on him. "It's Edward, right? You'd trust Edward to protect me, wouldn't you?"

Baron pauses, then resumes opening the pizza boxes.

"Well?" I prod, "You would, right?"

"Sure," he finally says, "why not?"

"Ha!" I stab a finger in his direction. "Clearly, you don't hate him as much as you say you do."

"You're right."

"I am?"

"Yep." He straightens, training that bright blue gaze on me, "It goes beyond hate. Let's just say, while I trust him with your life, I don't trust his intentions toward you."

Edward bares his teeth. "Same to you, asshole, with knobs on."

I stare between the two of them. "I get it now."

"What?" Edward scowls.

"This is why the two of you are pretending to get along?"

Baron tips up his chin at me. "We get along just fine." He coughs with his palm over his mouth, "Not!"

"Ha," I stab a finger at him, "knew it. The two of you are sitting across from each other, pretending to have a civil conversation, only so you can keep an eye on each other. So you can make sure the other one doesn't make a move on me."

Edward raises his hands, "Impressive piece of deduction there, Eve."

"It only took you what, fifteen minutes, to come to that conclusion?" Baron snickers.

I throw up my hands. "The two of you in this mood are impossible. Seriously, you guys need to chill out." I turn and head for my bedroom, when Baron calls out.

"The pizza will get cold."

"It will stay," I mumble.

"No, it won't," he retorts.

I turn, and scowl, "I need a shower."

"You can have one later." Edward nods.

I glance between them. "I am not winning this argument, am I?"

"Nope." Baron raises a shoulder, "When it comes to your well-being, I won't compromise."

Edward scowls at him, then turns to me. "Eat first, Eve." His voice softens, "You must be hungry." His gaze holds mine. "Besides, I am starving and," he lowers his voice, "I'd love to eat with you."

Heat ripples across my skin and my toes curl. He may as well as have said, "I'd love to eat you." My cheeks heat. Edward drags his thumb across his lips, and my belly flip-flops. Moisture pools between my legs. I take a step forward, only for Baron to plant himself in front of me.

I blink, glance up at him, "What?"

"Here, why don't you sit down?" He guides me to the chair he's just vacated. Sensations tingle out from where he touches me. I glance up, to find his lips curving in a knowing smile. I scowl.

"Not fair," I mumble. "The two of you are playing me."

He straightens, glaring down his patrician nose at me. "All's fair in love and war, baby," he drawls.

"I'm not some kind of...prey that the two of you can take turns toying with," I burst out. "I'm just a woman..." caught between two alphaholes. Oh, my god, how could I have gotten myself into this situation?

I stare between them. Baron folds his arms across his chest. Edward scowls from his place on the couch. The silence stretches, dense and heavy. My throat dries. I take in the pizza on the table, "May as well eat first."

No one moves for a second, then Baron nods. He walks around to sit in the chair opposite me. He reaches forward, takes a paper napkin, passes it over to Edward, who shares it with me. We each reach for a piece of pizza, then begin to eat.

"The chili flakes," I mumble, "can you pass them please?"

Both Baron and Edward reach for the packet. For a second, I am sure they are going to fight over who's going to give it to me. Then Baron retreats. Edward hands the packet over to me.

"Thanks." I rip it open, pour the flakes over my slice of pizza, bite into it. Heat suffuses my mouth. Sweat breaks out on my brow. I chew, swallow, and promptly hiccup. Yeah, that's me, always biting off more than I can chew. I never did know when things could get too spicy for me. Never did know when to stop before I burned myself, or in this case, my tongue. I hiccup again. Both Baron and Edward reach for one of the bottles of iced tea that had been delivered with the pizza. Baron snatches it up, unscrews it, and reaches across the table to hand it over to me. I thank him, tilt the bottle and wash down the pizza. The fire in my mouth subsides. I glance over to find Edward glowering at Baron—who continues to eat his pizza, his lips curled in a slight smirk.

"Oh, for hell's sake." I place down my pizza and stare between them.
"This is not working."

"I don't know. From where I am, everything is peachy keen," Baron rumbles.

"Only because you won the last round," I accuse him, "and that's what this is turning out to be, right? Each of you trying to get one up on the other —"

"Sounds good to me." Baron's smirk widens.

"With me as the prize."

"Does that bother you?" Edward turns to me.

"What do you think?" I snap.

His forehead crinkles. "I think," he glances at Baron, "it's time we figure out a plan."

"You do?"

"Of course." He leans back, throws his arm across the back of a couch.
"That's why we are here, aren't we?"

"Hmm." I frown at him. Why is he being so placatory? Somehow, I can't believe that he actually wants to talk about the elephant in the room, the one we have avoided talking about openly so far.

"He's right." Baron crumples up the napkin in his hand and drops it in the empty pizza box. "Let's figure this out."

They both glance at me.

"What?" I frown. "Why are you both staring at me?"

"The two of us spoke about our situation," Edward gestures between him and Baron, "before you arrived."

"You did?"

"We couldn't arrive at any decision."

I snort, "Why am I not surprised?"

"So, we agreed to disagree," Baron chimes in.

"That's a start, I suppose."

"We also agreed on one other thing." Edward's eyes gleam.

I frown, "What?" I swallow. "What did you agree on?"

"That we'd let you choose."

8

Ava

"Choose?" I swallow. "You'll let me choose?" My heartbeat ratchets up. I stare between them. They can't mean what I think they do. "Really?"

Edward smirks. "We mean, we'll let you choose how to set up a schedule to spend time with us."

"Oh." My muscles relax. What the hell? Guess I am not ready to let either of them go...yet. What does that say about me?

"A schedule?"

Baron nods. "You pick a time to meet each of us, separately."

"This way, you get to know both of us...individually," Edward adds.

"It will give you more information to base your final decision on." Baron's features close and his gaze intensifies. No doubt, he thinks the final decision will be in his favor. He wants it to be in his favor.

And if it isn't? What will he do then? How hurt will he be? And it's inevitable that someone will be, right? At some point, I'll have to choose one of them. And the other one, whoever it is, will be upset and angry, and likely, never forgive me. Likely, this would end their friendship too. One forged in such difficult circumstances that it should be able to weather anything.

But this...this is so personal, so emotional. Will the two of them be able to get through it? Would they be able to see past whoever is the inevitable winner and understand it's for the best? And if they can't? If they stop being friends, if they hate themselves...more than what they do now, will I be able to forgive myself?

"This..." I jump up to my feet, "I can't do this."

"What do you mean?" Baron snaps.

"It's because of me that the two of you are pitted against each other. I don't want to come between the two of you."

"Trust me...the disagreement between us existed prior to your coming into the picture." Edward smirks.

"That's not how it seems to me." I fold my arms around my waist. "The seven of you are supposed to be friends, right? At least, from what I've heard from the girls, you guys stick together. You have each other's backs."

They both nod.

"So, imagine how it seems to me when I see the two of you hating each other... Thanks to me."

"We don't hate each other," Baron murmurs.

I chuckle. "Sure could have fooled me."

"We just have too much stuff from the past between us." Edward leans forward. "It means our friendship will always be fraught with...tension."

"But it doesn't feel right that, ultimately, one of you is going to lose."

They both freeze.

"Or didn't you realize that?" I roll my eyes. "How did you think this was going to end? The three of us becoming one big happy family? I mean, I am going to have to choose, right?"

They stare at each other, anger evident on both of their features.

"This is what I mean," I snarl. "One of you is going to lose. And both of you hate to lose. One of you is going to end up hating the other. Your friendship will be over, thanks to me. You won't be the Seven any longer." I rake my fingers through my hair. "How do you think that's going to make me feel?"

"Slow down, Eve," Edward cautions, "you're getting ahead of yourself."

Baron glances from him to me, "He's right...on this." He rubs the back of his neck. "Let's take it one day at a time. You don't know how or where this is going to end up. We are both mature enough to realize that one of us is going to get the girl." He winces, "And of course, I want it to be me."

Edward glares at him and raises his hand. "I mean, we are both sensible enough to realize that one of us is going to emerge the victor. Besides," he kicks out his legs, "fact is, we'd rather you choose one of us than someone else."

Baron stiffens, then nods. "For once, he's talking sense," he mutters.

"If... When you are ready to choose, it will, hopefully, be one of us."

"You are okay with that?" I scowl.

"Not exactly," Baron's lips twist, "but if this means I am, at least, in the running to be with you, then well... It gives me hope, and I'd rather have that...than lose you."

"Agreed." Edward strokes his chin. "As long as I know that there is a possibility that I get to be with you...it gives me a fighting chance. And fight for you, I will."

"I am not giving up easily, Eve," Baron rumbles. His features soften. "You know, I'll do anything for you... If it means I need to put up with—" he stabs his thumb in Edward's direction, "so be it."

I scowl at him, "You sure about this?"

"No, I am not." His scowl deepens.

When I stare at him, he raises his hands. "I mean, of course, I don't want to share you, but if it means, at the end of this, I have a chance of having you to myself, then," he raises his shoulders, "fair enough. It's worth a shot."

I blink between them. "You guys okay to shake on that?"

Baron's jaw hardens. "No," he snaps.

"Nope." Edward sets his lips.

I blow out a breath, "And you guys think this is going to work?"

"We'll make it work." Baron's features firm. "We have to."

"You bet; we'll make sure it does." Edward squares his shoulders. "Though I must warn you," he glances between me and Baron, "I am going to pull out all the stops." He narrows his gaze on Baron. "I haven't come this far to lose."

"Save the speech, Chase." Baron yawns, "By the time I'm done, you'll wish you had cut your losses and run."

9

Ava

"You agreed to what?" Isla stares at me.

We are in our favorite bar, at the top of the British Portrait Museum near Trafalgar Square. I've always liked it because you can look out of the window and spot Nelson's Column just a block away. I lean forward, take a sip of my wine.

"I agreed to allocate separate times for each of them."

"So, you mean, you'll be spending Monday with Baron," she counts off on her fingers, "then Tuesday with Edward, then Wednesday with Baron—"

"Uh, I don't think it's going to be that regimented."

"So, what do you mean?" Her brow furrows.

"Just that I'll be taking turns dating each of them."

"Dating?" She makes air quotes with her fingers. "Is that what you kids are calling it nowadays?"

"It really is strictly dating." My face heats, but I don't allow myself to acknowledge the blush. "This is supposed to be a fact-finding mission."

"Fact-finding?"

I nod. "Yeah, that's what they wanted and that's what I agreed to."

"And what is this fact-finding going to be about?" She presses a finger into her cheek.

"Finding out more about them, their backgrounds, their preferences; giving them a chance to get to know me better."

"And why would you do that?" She frowns.

"Why wouldn't I?" I scowl at her. "It's the simplest way of figuring out who I am most compatible with."

"Thought you already knew that?" She waggles her eyebrows. "After all, you did sleep with both of them."

"It just happened, okay?" I mutter. "If I had known it would land me in this situation—"

"You wouldn't have shagged either of them?"

I purse my lips. "No, that's not true. The way things happened—" The way I'd lost my virginity to Edward...when he'd walked in and stared at me and I had known then I wanted him, that I wasn't letting him leave without losing my virginity to him... Then, being so fiercely attracted to Baron. "I couldn't have stopped any of it," I say firmly.

"So, now you are going to try both of them out...for size?"

Heat sears my cheeks. "Not like that," I object.

"Then how?"

"There's not going to be any sex."

She chokes on her drink, places her wine glass on the counter, then snatches up a paper napkin to wipe her mouth. "No sex?"

"Absolutely not." I shake my hair back from my shoulders. "I already know both of them that way."

My flush deepens, and I square my shoulders. What the hell? Why am I embarrassed? Face it, I did shag them both. And I enjoyed it. And they were both hot and amazing and I felt wonderful at the end of it. Don't men sleep around all the time? Though this is not the same. When I was with Edward, I'd been convinced he was the only one. Then Baron had crashed into my life, and after how Edward had left me... Okay, so maybe I had been emotionally fragile...but I'd known what I was doing when I'd slept with Baron.

Edward had left me, and a part of me had been sure that he'd be back, I can't refute that. Yet, I had been so strongly attracted to Baron... And he'd been there while Edward wasn't. And it hadn't felt wrong... I had followed my instincts. Which is how I had ended up in this situation, right?

Maybe my instincts aren't so reliable, after all. All the more reason to stick to the plan; approach this in a more practical manner, as Baron has suggested. Try things out and see what works... If something feels wrong, I can ditch it, try something else. All along the way, I'll be gathering feedback on what works. It's the only way forward, right? It has to be.

The alternative is to be stuck with both guys angry and snarling at each other, and gosh, how I hate that. If there is even a chance for the three of us moving on from this, to live somewhat normal lives, then I have to give this a shot. "Besides, this is about figuring out whom I am most compatible with on an emotional level... And sex only muddies the waters... So yeah, no sex."

"Hmm." She purses her lips, "Which brings me to another question, do the guys know about it?"

"About what?"

"That sex isn't part of the bargain?"

"I may have, uh, forgotten to mention it."

Her jaw drops. "Wow," she blinks, "so you are just walking into this hoping to withhold from them?"

"Don't be crude," I mutter, "but yeah, that's exactly what I am going to do. I mean, not overtly, but I am going to make sure we don't get there."

"You're going to make sure that two hot blooded alpha males spend time with you and you don't end up in bed with either of them?"

"Umm, yeah?"

She shakes her head, then turns to the bartender, "Can you top us off, please? My friend, here, is going to need it."

"What?" I snap.

She motions zipping her lips.

"Tell me," I grumble.

"Not my place."

"Oh, please." I mutter. "Seriously, Isla, you've come this far, may as well spit it out."

"Is that what you told him?"

"What?" I frown, "Oh! For your information, I swallowed."

She opens and shuts her mouth. "Whoa, woman. Seriously, you have changed."

"It's called growing up?"

"It's called, having your cake and eating it too."

"Huh?"

"You know, dating two sexy-as-hell guys... With their permission... At the same time." She stares at me. "Honestly, despite the fact that I know you are not going to be able to stick to the 'no sex' thing—"

I make a warning noise.

"Not that you are not going to try or anything, but whether you are able to stick to it is another thing altogether. Despite that—"

"Isla!"

"No, seriously. Despite all that, I am envious of you. I truly am."

I snort, "Why don't I believe you?"

"Come on, woman, you're trying to juggle two men. Me? The only action I'm getting right now is silicone."

"You mean, by imagining yourself with Liam?"

"Ugh, that man?" She makes a face. "That full-of-himself, prick-tard, who needs to get a life? The last time I met him at his wedding rehearsal, he looked at me like he hates me."

"Maybe it's because he actually likes you?"

"No, no, no, not falling for that, babe. There is no enemies-to-lovers thing happening here. The man positively loathes me. He can barely bring himself to talk to me when needed. Not that I mind." She snorts, "The less interaction I have with him, the better."

"So, you'll be happy when he gets married."

Her features freeze, then she recovers and raises her glass at me, "Nice segue, but I am not falling for it."

"Not falling for what?" I ask innocently.

"You tried to change the topic and succeeded, but I am steering us back to the issue at hand."

"What's that?"

"You and your men, Ava." She leans forward, "Surely, you do prefer one of them over the other?"

I scowl at her. "If I did, don't you think I'd have decided by now?"

"Come on," she drums her fingers on her table, "isn't there anything about one of them that outweighs the other?"

Let me see. Edward was my first love... He has that unshakeable strength inside of him that had attracted me from the beginning. Then, he'd left his faith behind for me, after which... he'd left me... But he'd returned back to me. He'd changed his life, for me.

Then there's Baron. Unshakeable Baron. Who'd broken his promise to his friend because he'd seen me and hadn't been able to stay away, although he certainly did try. The lust with him is combustible; it's like striking a match to gasoline. The attraction with him is palpable. When we are in the same room, it's like my gaze is drawn to him.

Well, to both of them, to be honest. They complete different parts of me.

Edward is my first love. And Baron... He'd swept me off my feet.

My head spins. Shit, what a mess.

I lower my chin, hunch my shoulders. "No," I mutter, "I can't find anything that tips the balance in favor of either of them. They are equally matched," I raise my gaze to hers, "and not only in that way."

"I didn't say anything," Isla protests.

"You didn't need to." I grab my drink, chugging down more of it. The alcohol hits my stomach and a pleasant warmth infuses my skin. I glance up to find her watching me carefully.

"What?"

"Nothing."

"Say it, Iz."

"Hmm." She circles the rim of the glass with her finger. "You're going to think I'm crazy for even suggesting it..."

"Oh please," I snort, "as if I'll ever be surprised with what comes out of your mouth?"

She chuckles, "True that, but I don't think I've ever said anything this outrageous before."

"Which is?"

"That I agree with Summer."

"You do?" I blink.

She nods, "Why don't you enjoy both of them—?"

"But—"

"—for now," she adds. "Don't force a decision, babe. Just be with what you have, savor them, let your subconscious decide who you want."

"And if I can't decide?"

"You will." She firms her lips.

"But when?"

"You'll know when you know."

I blow out a breath, grab my glass and drain it. When, though? When will I know who is right for me? When will I find out who is my soulmate? And why did I have to fall for both of them?

"Speaking of..." She clears her throat, and I glance at her.

"Now what?" I mutter.

She jerks her chin toward the doorway of the bar.

I turn around and the breath whooshes out of me. "What are you doing here?"

10

Baron

I walk into the bar, and she watches me approach. "You shouldn't be here," she scolds.

"Says who?"

"The deal was that I'd set up a schedule to date you guys."

"Doesn't mean I can't stumble across you in a bar, does it?"

"And is that what this is?" She frowns. "Did you walk into this bar by accident?"

I hesitate, look away. "No," I mumble, "I walked in knowing you'd be here."

"Baron," she scowls, "this is not right."

"What's not right is that you are going home to him, and you'll be spending the night in the same bed as him." I belatedly notice Isla and smile at her to disguise my discomfort. "Hi, Isla. How are you doing?"

"Umm—" Isla rises to her feet, "I need to get going."

She bends, kissing Ava's cheek. "Call me if you need anything, okay?"

She nods in my direction, an acknowledgement. Meanwhile, Ava kisses her back and waves as she walks away, leaving us alone.

"She's a good friend." I slip onto the bar stool she vacated. "How did you two meet?"

"She was a good friend of my older sister's, actually. Then we met and got along really well."

"You have a sister?" I frown. "You never told me that."

"Guess I didn't have a chance."

"What does she do?"

"She's a marketing director. Has a well-paying job with a media company. She travels a lot for work, is very ambitious, and... She's my exact opposite." She laughs.

The bartender approaches me, but I shake my head at him.

"You're not drinking?" She frowns.

"I'm driving."

"Right."

I turn to her. "What makes you think that you are so different from your sister?"

She takes a sip from her drink, hunches her shoulders. "Because she's so focused, you know? She knows what she wants, and goes after it."

"And you don't?"

"I'm a med school drop-out."

"And now you run your own studio."

"Which barely breaks even—"

"Where you create art, and do what you enjoy."

"And I still struggle to get students."

"It's what you love," I insist.

"If only passion were enough to put food on the table."

"You're only getting started." I lean forward, "If you persevere... As long as you are doing what fires you up, you are bound to be successful."

She blinks. "Wow, that's some speech, Baron."

My neck heats. "It's true, though," I insist. "You're such an incredible dancer, Ava. Don't give up."

She smiles and her green eyes light up. "Thank you," she murmurs, "I needed to hear that. Maybe one of these days, I'll even have the courage to sign up for the World Belly Dancing championships."

"Oh, you definitely should. Bet you'd win the first prize too."

"I'd settle for simply not falling flat on my face." She laughs.

"You could never do that. You have too much talent to do anything but excel at anything that you put your mind too."

"Wow," she blinks, "you have no idea how much it means to me, to hear you say that."

Don't lose faith in yourself." I gaze at her earnestly. "Promise me that."

She licks her lips and my eyes drop to her mouth. "Say you promise," I coax her.

"I promise," she whispers.

Her words are soft, her lips slightly parted. I move in closer, close enough to smell that jasmine and raspberry scent of hers. The blood instantly drains to my groin. My dick thickens. My thighs harden. I lower my head to hers, and she swallows. I push the hair away from her forehead and she trembles. I place my mouth in front of hers, close enough to share breath and a moan bleeds from her lips.

"Ava," I whisper, "fuck, you're beautiful."

She stares into my eyes, her pupils dilated. Her chest rises and falls and color smears her cheeks. I brush my lips across hers—once, twice—and she sways. I slide my hand behind her neck, hold her in place as I deepen the kiss. I lick across her mouth and she gasps. I slide my tongue in between her lips and she moans. I press down on her chin and she opens her mouth. I suck on her tongue, sweep my tongue across her teeth, pull her close enough for her hair to brush my face. The scent of her sinks into my skin; the taste of her goes straight to my head. I slide off my stool, push her legs apart and step between them.

A groan rips out of me and she shudders. She slides her arms under my jacket, digs her fingers into my back, and my dick lengthens. I pull her to the edge of her stool, thrust my hardness into her center. She gasps, straining against me, thrusting her breasts into my chest. Something crashes to the floor and I tear my mouth from hers, stare at her flushed features, those dilated eyes that indicate just how aroused she already is.

"Ava," I whisper and she shakes her head.

"We shouldn't."

"Why not?" I growl. "You want me, I want you."

"It's not right, to Edward."

"Don't talk about him," I snap.

She frowns up at me. "I thought we were all going to get along."

I snort, "I agreed to tolerate him."

"You agreed to give this arrangement a chance."

"Doesn't mean I can't kiss you."

"You can." She tilts her head, "Just know that I won't sleep with you."

"Wait, what?" I scowl. "What the hell do you mean?"

"I'm not sleeping with either of you, until I figure out where this is going."

"You mean until you figure out who you're going to choose?"

She scowls up at me. "I'm trying to do what's right."

"I'm right for you, Ava." I massage her neck and her chest heaves. "See how you respond to me? How you yearn for my touch, how your body reacts to my nearness?" I lower my head to hers again and her lips part. "You want me, Ava. Admit it. You need me. You can't live without me in your life. Without my telling you what to do. You want the strength of my dominance to subsume you, you want me to throw you down and rip into your pussy. You want me to bend you over this table and fuck you in the arse in front of everyone."

"Baron," she breathes, "what are you saying?"

"You want me to take you in front of this bar, so you can cry out and show them just what a good little slut you are. You love being an exhibitionist, Ava. It turns you on, thinking of all the forbidden things I can do to you. You want me to claim you, to tell the world that you belong to me."

"No," she whispers, "that's not true."

"It is."

"No, it isn't." I sense her move. The next second pain explodes behind my eyes; my groin screams in protest.

"What the fuck—?" She kneed me in the balls. Why that little— I turn around, find her running out of the bar. Shit. "Ava, hold on." I spring forward and my body protests. I grit my teeth through the pain, force myself to move forward. I race toward the door, up the sidewalk in her wake. "Ava, stop."

She turns around, scowls. "Why should I, after you pulled that underhanded stunt on me?"

I increase my pace, closing the distance between us. She yelps, faces forward, trying to run faster. I catch up to her, grab her arm and she screams, "Let go of me."

"Ava, stop." I haul her to me and she struggles in my grasp.

"Release me, you asshole."

"No."

"Why did you kiss me like that?"

"Because you like it?"

"How dare you say those filthy things to me?"

I yank her up to her tiptoes, clamp my hand around the nape of her neck. "Because it turns you on, Eve."

"Stop calling me that!"

"Why should I?" I haul her against me and her breasts flatten against my chest. "You make me crazy, Ava. You know that?"

"Good," she huffs, "because you do the same to me."

"So, choose me."

"I," she blinks, "I can't, Baron."

I stare into her face, and my heart begins to race. "Fuck," I swear. "F-u-c-k." I release her so suddenly that she stumbles. I grasp her shoulder to make sure that she finds her balance, then step away from her. "I'll drop you home."

Half an hour later, we pull up at her house. I grasp the wheel of the car, stare straight ahead.

"Baron, I..."

"Get out of the car, Ava."

She turns to me. "You're angry with me and it's not fair. You knew Edward would return, that this entire situation would turn out to be messy."

"No shit," I growl.

"Baron, be reasonable. I—"

"Reasonable?" I turn on her, "Why should I be reasonable, when you go home every night to sleep in the same bed as him?"

"I'll be on the couch."

"What?" I frown. "Don't do that. You won't be able to sleep well there."

"I'll be fine," she assures me.

"Why can't he move to another place?"

She blows out a breath, "We've had this conversation. As soon as he's able to fend for himself, he'll move out."

"Bet he can right now. Bet he's only playing the sympathy card so he can stay with you."

"Baron," she snaps, "that's beneath even you."

I snort, "Seriously? You have no idea what Edward is capable of. Just because he was a priest, doesn't mean he still tells the truth."

She flips her hair over her shoulder. "Do I detect the green-headed monster making an appearance?"

"You think I'm jealous?" I growl.

"Aren't you?"

"If I were jealous, would I be driving you back to deliver you into his arms?" I squeeze my fingers around the wheel of the car so tightly that pain screeches up my arms.

"Yes, you would," she mutters, "because despite how much you don't agree with the situation, you'd honor your word."

"What-fucking-ever."

"Oh, I know you, Baron Masters, better than you realize. Which is why you'll never pull the stunt that you pulled today again."

I arch an eyebrow. "Don't get your hopes too high, Sugar. I'll kiss you where I want, when I want."

"No, you won't."

"The fuck, Ava?" I slam my fist into the wheel and the horn blares. "The fuck are you putting these restrictions on me? It's fucking unnatural. I want to be able to kiss you when I want, to lick your cunt when I am hungry, to slam into your pussy when I feel like it, to fuck you like you belong to me, to own you like you are mine."

Her breath hitches.

"And I know you want it too."

"Maybe," she finally concedes, "maybe I do."

"Bull-fucking-shit," I snap. "You know you do."

"Doesn't mean I am going to let myself have it."

"Why the fuck not?"

"Because I am determined to give both of you a fair chance."

"Fuck fairness."

"Oh?" She tilts her head, "How would you feel if I walked in there and asked Edward to shag me—"

"Don't you fucking dare do that," I roar.

"My point exactly."

"Fuck, fuck, fuck." I rake my fingers through my hair. "This entire arrangement is bullshit, and you know it."

"No, it isn't." She straightens her shoulders. "I need to give both of you an equal chance, and right now, this is the only way."

"What-bloody-ever."

I shove open my door, stalk around the car to her door, but she's already stepping out. She walks up the garden path and I follow her to the door. She steps onto the patio, and I follow her onto it.

She reaches for the door and I don't move. She huffs out a breath, "I am not going to ask you to come in."

"I didn't expect you to."

"Sure, you did," she mutters, "but it wouldn't be fair to Edward if I did."

"You going to tell him about how you kissed me back?" I allow my lips to twist. "You going to tell him how my filthy words turn you on, how you like it rough? How you want to be dominated and not given a choice, how you like your every hole filled at the same time, how you like to be spanked and treated like a fuck toy, how—"

She turns on me, "Shut up," she hisses. "Just shut up."

"Yeah," I widen my legs, "thought not. He can't give you what you want; only I can."

"How do you know he didn't give it to me rough?" She tilts her head, "How do you know that's not how he fucked me already?"

Blood thuds at my temples. My pulse rate ratchets up. I step into her space, then bend my knees and peer into her features, "Is that right, Eve? Is that how he gave it to you? Is that how he shagged you, Eve?"

She pales, opens her mouth, when the door to the house flies open.

"What's happening here?"

11

Edward

Baron straightens, as the two of them continue to stare at each other.

"What the hell are you doing?" I step outside, shoving at Baron. "Get out of her face, man," I growl.

He glowers from her to me, then back at her. "This isn't over, Ava." He shoves my hand away, then turns and stalks off.

Ava watches him walk down the path; her features wear a haunted expression.

"What did he say to you, Eve?" I demand. "Did he insult you, because if he did I—"

"No," she swallows, "it's nothing." She brushes past me and walks inside the house.

I watch as Baron gets into his car, then turn and stalk back inside. "It didn't seem like nothing to me," I mutter.

She places her bag on the couch and sinks down next to it. Her hair flows about her shoulders. It's obvious her shoulders are tense.

Walking over, I stand behind the couch, push her hair to the side, then dig my fingers into her shoulder. Finding a knot in her muscle, I work at it until it loosens.

"That feels good." She leans into my touch. "Don't stop, Ed."

I use my good arm and continue to massage her shoulders, alternating between the two, until the tension fades away and she's pliant.

"Mmm." She closes her eyes and leans her head back on the couch.

"Thank you, that was wonderful."

"The pleasure is all mine." I smile down at her relaxed features.

She opens her eyelids, gazes up at me from under her lashes. The curve of her lips, the relaxed set of her features, the sleepy look about her eyes... All of it pulls me in. I bend down until my face is poised over hers. She traces her gaze down my face, until it rests on my lips. She swallows and I close the distance between us until my lips are poised above hers.

"Ed," she mumbles, "we can't."

"Why not?"

"Because we shouldn't."

"Why not?"

"Because I told Baron that I wasn't sleeping with him, or with you, until I arrive at a decision."

"Wait, what?" I scowl. "What did you say?"

She leans forward. "I am not having sex with either of you." She folds her arms about her waist. "Not until I've figured out what to do about all of this."

Walking around the couch to see her face, I argue, "That's bullshit, Eve."

"Yeah, that's what he said also."

"Stop talking about him when you're with me."

She throws up her hands, "Is this what is going to happen when I am with either of you and I mention the other one? Seriously, you guys need to grow up." She stands up and begins to pace. "I am trying my best here, and neither of you is helping me out."

I fold my fingers into fists at my side. "Can't say I blame him, though."

She pauses, then turns to face me. "What are you talking about?"

"You come home smelling like another man, and you think I am going to stand by silently and accept it?"

She pales, "It...it's not like that, Ed."

"Oh?" I round the couch, and walk toward her, "Then how is it, Ava, explain it to me?" I take a step forward and she skitters back.

"It's really not how it seems."

"Oh?" I allow my lips to curl. "Are you denying that you kissed him?"

Her gaze lowers.

"Thought so."

I move toward her and she stumbles back another step.

"Did he touch you, Eve?" I growl. "Did you let him press his lips to yours, thrust his tongue in between your lips, as he felt your shoulders, your breasts, the curve of your hips? Did he wind your hair around his fist and yank on it as he closed his mouth over yours?"

Her breath hitches, then her face pales. "Stop it," she snarls. "Stop it, Ed."

"Why should I?" I close the distance between us, and she slides back until her body touches the wall. She stiffens, looking around her, "Don't even think about it," I warn. "Tell me what he did to you, Eve."

"Nothing," she snaps.

"You're a liar." I lunge forward and she screams.

"Don't come closer, Ed!"

"Why?" I allow my lips to curl. "Scared I'll kiss you and then you'll forget him?"

"This is not a competition," she snarls

"So, you keep saying, and you know what? I am fucking tired of it." I plant my hand on the wall next to her head and she freezes. Her breathing quickens. She darts her gaze from left to right and that's when I push my hips into hers.

Her gaze widens; she tips up her chin and stares into my face. Her pupils dilate. I pin her to the wall and I know she can feel every last swollen inch of my hardness. Color smears her cheeks, she buries her teeth into her lower lip and blood rushes to my groin.

"See what you do to me, Eve?" I growl. "When I am in the same space as you, I can't fucking keep away from you."

"Don't, Ed," she whispers, "please don't."

"Of course, you'd put the onus on me. You want me to take the choice out of your hands. Want me to show you what you're missing, Eve?"

"Edward." She searches my face. For mercy? Fat chance of that. "I know this is not you speaking. This is your ego, your fear, that's making you say these things to me."

"Ha," I scoff, "of course, you don't want to believe the worst of me. You think, just because I was once a priest, that I'll play by the rules. You think I'll stand by and watch as he uses every opportunity to seduce you, to convince you to choose him. You think I'll let it slide when he puts his hands all over you, then drops you home, knowing it will tear me apart to see him with you?"

"Ed, stop, please." She scrunches up her forehead. "You don't know what you're saying."

"You're right."

"I am?"

I nod. "It's time to stop speaking and show you how I feel, Eve."

Her gaze widens. She shakes her head, "Don't, Ed. Don't you dare."

I lower my head, place my lips close to hers, "Tell me you don't want me to kiss you."

She swallows.

"Tell me you don't want me, Eve."

"I..." She licks her lips, "I can't."

"Ask me to kiss you."

She shakes her head.

"Do it, Eve," I growl.

She raises her gaze to mine, peers into my eyes, and in hers I see a pleading, a request, a need, confusion and lust. Arousal and uncertainty.

"Fuck." I lean my forehead against hers. "I want you, Ava. I need you. You know that, right?"

She nods.

"Then let me kiss you, let me feel your lips against mine. All the time I spent away from you, the only thing that kept me going was knowing that I was going to come back to you. Don't deny me, Eve," I hold her gaze, "please."

She draws in a breath, squeezes her eyes shut, before opening them. "Okay." She nods.

"Okay." I rub my nose against hers. "Okay." I lower my lips to hers, brush my mouth over hers once. I lean back and she makes a sound of protest. My lips kick up. I lean my face into hers, press my mouth to hers again. I lick across her lips and she parts them. I slide my tongue over hers, and a moan tumbles from her mouth. I tilt my head, suck on her tongue, and she shivers. I deepen the kiss, licking into her mouth, dragging my tongue across her teeth, as I press my hips into her.

Her entire body shudders. I pour all the longing, all the frustration, the loneliness I felt when I was away from her... The helplessness at not being able sift through my emotions, knowing how much I missed her, despite knowing I needed time to figure things out... Still having to figure things out... The lust, the complete awe that I found her... I pour all of it into the kiss.

I press my body into hers so we touch at chest, hips, and thighs, until every part of me is imprinted on hers. I draw in her breath, share my own, then lick into her mouth again, and she pushes her hips into mine. I plant a thigh between hers, pressing down into the soft, luscious center of her, and a groan bleeds from her. She wraps her arms about my shoulders and holds on as she begins to ride my leg. I deepen the kiss even more, until it seems like we are sharing the same breath, until her breasts are flattened against my chest. I tilt my hips and press into her soft core, giving her the friction she so craves. She pushes up against the column of my thigh, digs her fingers into my shoulders and rubs her core against my leg, over and over again. Her body tenses, her shoulders jerk, her entire body goes rigid. That's when I tear my mouth from hers, and stare into her eyes. "Come for me, Eve."

12

Ava

"Get yourself off on me. Come now, Eve," he commands, and I shatter. The climax rips up my spine. Sparks flare behind my eyes. My shoulders snap back as I cry out, then slump against him. The aftershocks ripple through me as I rest my forehead against his chest. He holds me there with his arm around my shoulders. I bury my nose in the strip of skin bared between the lapels of his shirt. Draw in the scent of cut grass, and below that, the faint trace of Frankincense which still clings to him.

"Do you miss it?" I whisper. "The priesthood, I mean?"

He stills, then drags his fingers down my hair. His fingertips catch on a knot at the ends and he carefully untangles it.

"Do you have a brush?"

"What?"

"A hairbrush."

I tip up my chin, "If you don't want to answer the question—"

He places his finger on my lips. "A hair brush," he repeats. "Do you have one?"

I scowl, but damn, I am so relaxed right now, I don't want to fight with him. "On my dressing table," I murmur.

He steps back, only to wind his fingers around my wrist. He tugs and I follow him to the bedroom. He leads me to the dressing table, urging me onto the stool in front of the mirror, then reaches for the brush. He starts near the tips of my hair and patiently unravels the knots. Brushing a few centimeters more every time, he gradually works his way up to finally have the full sweep from scalp to tip.

I lower my chin, close my eyes and enjoy his soothing strokes. For a few seconds, there's only the steady rustle of the teeth of the brush through my strands. The sound of my breathing, the heat of his body, the slide of the fabric of his pants against the edge of my seat.

Then, "I don't miss wearing the robes." His voice rumbles and he draws the brush down another portion of my hair. "I don't miss the discipline and the routine, something I thought I would." His voice is pensive. I try to turn my head but he clicks his tongue. "Stay still," he scolds and I turn to face forward, watching his face in the mirror.

"But you do miss some parts of it, surely?"

"I miss..." His voice lowers to a hush, "Helping people, I suppose."

Of course, he would. He may be an alphahole, but that is just a part of him... Just as much as that something inside of him, that wants to do something for the greater good. Perhaps it's that core of him I had sensed, which had been as attractive to me as the strength of his presence?

"You could still do that, you know?" I survey his reflection in the mirror. "You could still help others."

"I am not sure if that's what I want to do...now."

"What do you want to do then?"

"I want to do...you?" He raises his gaze to meet mine. The look in his eyes... OMG, it's hot and smoldering and so bloody intense. That's the thing with Edward. Nothing about him is ever half-way. It's like he always gives one-hundred percent—no one-thousand percent—of himself to everything he does. His amber eyes flare with that inner fire I recognize and I have missed. I may not have known him for very long, but the time I have is imprinted inside of me. How could someone have had such an impact on my life in so little time?

"Ed..." I whisper and his lips twist. That smirk? Jesus, it's so hot. And so mean. Why is it that I am always attracted to the bad boy? Not once, but twice over? Clearly, I have a type. And clearly, this type of thinking is not getting me anywhere.

"Ed, please don't," I plead.

"I'm not doing anything." He turns back to the task of grooming my hair. The rasp of the brush against my scalp makes goosebumps erupt on my skin.

"Ed, please." I pull away, rise to my feet, then pivot to face him. "It's not fair," I protest, "what you're doing to me."

"What am I doing to you?"

"You know exactly what." I scowl. "You're trying to seduce me."

"No, I am not."

"Yes, you are." I fold my arms round my waist. "You know, I am not going to sleep with either of you."

"But you're okay to kiss him, you're okay to rub yourself up against my thigh and come, you're okay to—"

"That's not fair," I burst out. "You begged me to kiss you."

"And you fell for it?" He raises an eyebrow and anger sparks at my nerve endings.

"You...you bastard."

"If you couldn't pass this test, I wonder what else you've been up to with him."

"You were testing me?"

"Of course," he smirks, "did you think I'd actually beg you for anything?"

I swallow. "How dare you?"

"Just trying to establish that your game of not sleeping with either one of us isn't working."

"You're right," I swallow, "it isn't. In fact, I was wrong to have thought that I could actually stick to this ridiculous notion...of trying to give each of you a fair chance. Especially when both of you seem to turn everything into a competition. When neither of you wants to play by the rules, what chance do I have?"

The blood thrums at my temples. What the hell had I been thinking? Trying to make some sense of this crazy, twisted relationship... Or whatever it is that exists between the three of us. I am the only one who seems to want to find the solution. Both of these...idiots, clearly, don't want to find a way out. I am the only one trying to play fair, when neither of them wants to respect the boundaries I have tried to create. Obviously, I am going about this all wrong. There is only one way out.

"Leave," I say in a low voice.

"What?" He frowns. "What do you mean?"

"Last I checked, this was still my house," I firm my lips, "and I want you out."

"What the hell?" He glowers. "I am not going to leave you alone."

"Ha," I snarl, "should have thought about that before your little...act, earlier."

"I am not leaving, Ava." He draws himself up to his full height. "Not until we figure out who the hell is behind the attack on you at your studio."

"I don't care," I snap. "I want you out of my space, Ed. Now."

"You're angry. I understand." He rakes his gaze across my features. "You've been through a lot."

"You have no idea."

"First Baron, then me, turning up out of the blue... And the attack—"

"Was nothing compared to how you and Baron seem to play so easily with my emotions."

"That wasn't what I intended—"

"Oh, yeah?" I take a step forward. "Didn't seem like that to me. In fact, from where I am, you and Baron seem so consumed with trying to take the other one down you don't care how it's hurting me here."

"Shit, Ava." His features twist. "That wasn't my intention...and while I can't speak for Baron, I am sure he didn't mean to cause you any pain either."

"Well, too late, buster." I take a step back from him. "I suggest you be on your way."

"I am not going to leave you here on your own."

"You don't have a say anymore."

"What do you mean?"

"It means..." I swallow, glance around the room. Am I going to do this? Guess I am going to do it. I don't have a choice. It's not working this way and I can't allow myself to be torn apart like this between the two of them. For my own sanity, maybe this is the only way out. "I need a little time away from both of you."

"No." His features darken. "You don't mean it."

"See," I stab a finger in his direction. "There you go again, telling me what I do or don't think, and honestly, I am tired of it. I just need some time alone to think about where this is all going, about what I want to do with my life, without either of the two of you meddling in my affairs or ordering me around."

"Don't you dare do this, Eve."

"Oh, fuck off." I throw up my hands, "Both of you call me by the same nickname. Do you have any idea what kind of a mind fuck that is? I mean, what are the chances? Two men, best friends... Or at least, once-upon-a-time best friends, call me by the same bloody nickname, and of course, I have fallen for both of them."

"Wait," he shakes his head, "you have fallen for both of us?"

I gape at him. "Hello? What do you think this entire," I shake my hand in the air, "situation is about."

"I thought..." He scowls. "I know you said you have feelings for him, but you have fallen for him as well?"

"Oh, my god." I slap my palm to my head, "I can't even... I mean... Seriously?" I march to the door of the bedroom, "Get out of my house."

"No."

"Edward," I slam my hands on my waist, "I want you out of my sight, right now. I mean it."

He places the hairbrush on the dressing table, then turns to me. "I'll leave —"

I release a breath.

"This bedroom. I'll spend the night on the couch."

"What the—?"

"Before I leave, I need to make sure there'll be someone watching the house at night—"

I make a rude noise.

"And that Baron..." his features harden, "has arranged for round the clock surveillance."

"Whatever."

He prowls toward me, and I watch him draw closer, closer still. He pauses in front of me, his big body blocking out the rest of the room from my line of sight. I gulp. A ripple of desire pulses down my spine. I jerk my chin toward the doorway. "Leave, please," I mutter.

"This isn't over, Eve." His jaw tics. "Not by a long shot."

I hold his gaze. I will not look away. Nope, I need to hold my own if I have any chance of getting through this in one piece. Hah! Famous last words. I am already broken inside. And confused. And at my wit's end about what to do. Time away from both... Yes, that is exactly what I need. A little time apart, without either alphahole breathing down my neck or getting jealous about the other. Yes, totally what I crave at the moment. Some peace and quiet please?

He lowers his knees, peering into my eyes. "Is this what you want, Eve?"

I nod.

He holds my gaze a second longer, then nods, straightens, and walks out of the room. I close the door behind him, lock it. Bet he heard that. Too bad. Right now, it's self-preservation. That's my focus. I head for the bathroom, take a quick shower, then change into my sleep shorts and cotton-camisole. I slide into bed, switch off the light and pull up the covers. Shit, I didn't get any pillows or a duvet for him. I roll on my side. Too bad. He'll just have to do without it. Alphahole has a thick hide; that should keep him warm. And the bathroom... There isn't another in the house, and I locked the door. Forget it. If he wants to use it, he can knock. For once, it will be him asking me for something... Instead of the other way around. I close my eyes and must have fallen asleep, for the next thing I know, it's morning.

I throw off the covers, head to the bathroom, brush my teeth.

I walk back into the bedroom, just as my phone pings with an incoming message. I pick it up, swipe the screen to read the message.

Raisa: I've emailed you all the details of the wedding. Dad will be gutted if you don't come. Please Ava, don't be selfish.

Am I selfish? Is that why I'd fallen so quickly for Baron, right after falling for Edward? Is that why I am holding onto both of them, because I can't let either of them go? Is that why I am so confused, because I want everything? Is that so wrong, though? To not settle for what doesn't feel right?

It's why I had dropped out of med school. And not that embarking on a creative career is any easier, but at least, it feels right somewhere inside of me. Just like... It doesn't feel right to make a decision about the two of them...yet. And going to Dad's wedding? I sit down on the bed. I had read Raisa's email, and know that the wedding is in the backyard of our family home. It's only a few days to the event now and... Shit, I don't want to break his heart. Truly, I don't.

I reach for the phone to answer her message, keep my fingers poised over the keyboard, but the words don't come. I place the phone aside. Head to the closet, drag on a sweatshirt and leggings then walk out of the bedroom.

When I reach the front room, I find it's empty.

13

Baron

I open the door to my apartment and Edward stares back at me.

"What the hell do you want?" I growl.

"We need to talk." He scowls back at me.

"Like hell, we do."

I am about to shut the door on his face, when he says, "It's about Ava."

I glower at him, "We've already spoken with her about how she's going to spend time with each of us—"

"She doesn't want to see either of us."

"What?" I frown.

"She threw me out of the house."

I can't stop the smile that curves my lips. "She did, huh?"

"She wants time apart from both of us." He shoves past me and I watch as he prowls over to the window in the far corner of my loft-apartment.

I shut the door, walk over to stand in the center of the room.

"What do you mean? What the fuck did you do?"

"I mean exactly what I said." He drops his backpack on the floor. "We've both been pushing her... Too much, too quickly... Of course, it was bound to happen."

"Don't go putting the blame of your desertion on me."

"It wasn't desertion." He bites out the words as he stares out of the window. What does he see? The view of London spread out before him? His past...our pasts...as intertwined as it is because of the incident and what happened to us? His future...my future? Which, for some reason, seems to be just as closely twisted together... Thanks to one auburn-haired, green-eyed beauty who has ensnared both of us.

"What do you call it, then?"

He pivots to face me. "It's called putting distance to get perspective, which I guess is what she's trying to do right now."

"Is that what you think?" I scowl.

"What I think is not important." He leans forward on the balls of his feet. "Nor is what you think of consequence."

"Is that right?" I growl.

He nods. "The only thing that matters is that we respect her wishes—"

I open my mouth to speak and he raises his hand "—for now."

I set my jaw. "I'm not sure that's wise."

"Why not?"

"If she has time alone to sort through things, what if she decides that she wants neither of us?"

"You mean, what if she decides that she doesn't want you."

"Ava belongs to me," I grit out. "She was mine from the moment I saw her."

"She saw me first."

I ball my fists at my sides, and his lips twist. "Hurts to hear the truth, doesn't it? I am her first love."

"She doesn't love you."

His smile widens. "She does."

"Has she told you that?"

"You think I'd reveal that to you?" He looks me up and down.

"You'd say anything to get a rise out of me," I growl.

"You know, I am not lying." He raises a shoulder. "Besides, she understands and appreciates the sacrifice I made for her."

"If you mean leaving the priesthood, that was a long time coming, precipitated by your inability to keep your temper in check."

The smile vanishes from his face. Good.

"And we all know you joined the Church, purely as a means of escape." I scratch my jaw.

"Escape?"

I nod. "Fact is, you couldn't deal with reality, you didn't have the balls to face what had happened, so you turned your back on the world."

His features harden. "You should talk. You shipped out and joined the army. If there's a deserter here, it's you."

"Ah, see, that's where we differ." I rock back on my heels. "At least, I was out fighting a battle. I was facing my fears while doing my best to protect innocent people, while you?" I shove my hand in the pocket of my slacks. "You were merely hiding from the inevitable."

He balls his fists at his sides, "Inevitable, huh? What's that?"

"Revealing to the world that you are a coward, Edward." I bare my teeth. "You were a coward then, as you are now."

He takes a step forward and I hold up a hand, "Think carefully before you do anything else. We both know I am in far better shape than you. It won't take me long to take you down."

"We'll see, shall we?" He throws up his fists at the same time that there's a hammering on the door.

We glare at each other.

"Were you expecting someone?"

I shake my head, glance around the space for a weapon, when a voice calls out, "Open the fucking door, wanker."

My shoulder muscles relax as Edward blows out a breath.

"Fucking Saint," he mutters.

"What the fuck does he want now?"

I pivot, head for the door, and fling it open. Saint stalks forward. He shoves my shoulder with his as he brushes past me and heads for Edward.

"Hello, asshole." Saint tilts his head.

Edward scowls back. "What the hell are you doing here?"

"You could be happier to see us now, considering we are childhood buddies and such?" Sinner saunters in through the door, followed by Damian, Arpad and Weston. Damian flings himself on the couch. Arpad wanders over to the bar in the far corner.

Weston walks toward Edward, "How's the wound coming along?"

"I'll survive," Edward snaps.

"Make yourselves comfortable," I call out sarcastically.

"No formalities, bro." Saint raises a hand, "You know us, we treat each other's places as our own."

"Don't I just?" I slam the door with enough force that the painting above the fireplace crashes to the floor. Good thing it came with the place, which I purchased a few years ago but never bothered to furnish. Considering I only crash here on the rare occasion I am in town. Not that any of them notice my little burst of temper. Short of dying...

"Whiskey." Arpad pulls a bottle of Macallan's from the bar. "Don't you have any fucking vodka?"

"Since when do you drink fucking vodka?" I scowl.

"Since he met Karina?" Damian chuckles.

I glare at Arpad. "You don't even like fucking vodka."

"Guess I do, now." He places the bottle of whisky on the bar counter. "You missed out on a lot, ol' chap." He tilts his head at me, "It's good to have you back though."

"Yeah," I rub the back of my neck, "it's still no excuse to drink at," I scowl at the watch on my wrist, "ten a.m.?"

"Oh, that's where you're wrong." Arpad smirks. "This drink isn't for me."

"Who is it for, then?"

Five pairs of eyes turn on me.

"What?" I glare.

All of them shift their gazes to Edward.

"What?" He glowers at them. "This isn't a fucking tennis match."

"Sure, could have fooled us." Saint cracks his neck. "That's why we're here anyway—to referee."

"We don't need a referee," I growl.

"Oh?" Saint folds his arms across his chest, glances between us. "You two have some shit to sort out."

"That's putting it mildly." I snort

"And we're here to ensure you two don't kill each other," Damian adds from his position on the settee.

I shoot him a glare, and his smile widens. Asshole's enjoying himself.

Hell, all of them are. Tossers who have their lives all set up, wives, and kids on the way. They've managed to put their pasts behind them, managed to set to rest the ghosts from the incident. They've found their homes, have a future with their loved ones.

Me? I have none of that. Nothing, except a past as a soldier, the security company that I set up with Archer, and a future career as an investor; one which is going to take some adjustment. Not to mention a former best friend who is now my most hated enemy and a woman...who doesn't belong to me yet. And am I going to let go of her that easily? Of course, not. She is all I have left in this world. The hope of being with her is the only solace I have left to look forward to. I cannot let go of this opportunity, to find out how it would be to be with someone who satisfies that craving deep inside of me.

"We are not going to kill each other." I blow out a breath, "We were merely discussing strategy."

"Strategy, huh?" Sinclair smirks. "Is that why the two of you were yelling at each other?"

"We weren't..." I glance at Sinclair, who tilts his head.

"We could hear you all the way down to the street," Damian pipes up.

I glower at him and he chuckles.

"Okay," I rake my fingers through my hair. "Yeah, so we had a bit of a disagreement."

"Nothing the two of us can't sort out," Edward mutters. "We certainly don't need the rest of you here staging an intervention."

"Too fucking late." Saint grabs a chair, turns it around and straddles it. "You should have thought of that before you guys couldn't keep it in your pants."

"What the fuck are you talking about?" I growl at him.

"You know what he means," Weston drawls. "The two of you are involved with the same woman."

"None of your bloody business," Edward snaps.

"Much as it pains me to do so," I scratch my jaw, "I am forced to agree with Edward on this."

Saint shakes his head, "Afraid that's not how it works, ol' chap."

"What the fuck do you mean?"

"He means, since the two of you haven't been able to sort things out, we are going to have to step in."

"What the fuck?" Edward glares around at the five of them, "It's best you wankers stay out of this."

There's silence, then all of them burst out laughing.

"Fuckin' hell." Saint pretends to wipe a tear from his eye. "You guys hear what dear Edward, here, just said?"

"Yeah," Damian leans forward in the couch, "anyone want to remind him how he was part of each and every intervention on behalf of the five of us?" He turns to me, "Not you, of course, considering you missed all the fun.... Not," he mutters. "Anyway," he turns his gaze on Edward, "sorry, buddy, you're going to have to man up and take your share of advice on your love life... Which, considering the mess the two of you have gotten into... I'd say, should be welcome."

Edward glowers back.

"Or not." He raises his shoulders. "Doesn't matter, either way." He jerks his chin at Weston, who leans forward on the balls of his feet.

"Fact is," Weston looks between us, "you guys have two choices."

"We do?"

"Yep." He nods and begins counting off on his fingers. "Shut up and listen to us or... Shut up and listen to us."

"Har, har." I deadpan, then walk over to lean against the bar. "Go on, get it out of your system."

Saint drums his fingers on the back of his chair. "So," he turns to Edward, "you love her?"

"What the fuck?" I growl at the same time as Ed.

"I'm talking to Edward," Saint says in a mild voice. "Go on, Ed, I asked you a question."

"What the hell kind of a question is that?" he objects.

"Answer the question, you piece of shit," Sinner growls.

Edward shoots him a dirty look, then turns to Saint, "Of course, I do, you dickwad. Not that it's any of your business."

"Hmm." He rubs his chin, then turns in my direction, "And you?"

"Me?"

He nods. "Do you love her?"

"Fuck off, you fucktard."

"Very original." Saint chuckles. "Still doesn't answer my question."

I bunch my fingers at my sides, taking a breath, then another, "I am not going to tell you what I feel."

"Why not?" Damian frowns. "It's not anything to be ashamed of, soldier."

"We've all been through it." Arpad nods.

"Consider it another coming-of-age rite," Weston adds.

"What-bloody-ever." I rub the back of my neck, begin to pace. Of course, I do, so why is it so difficult to admit it aloud? Why hadn't I told her so earlier when I had a chance? So, it has only been two and a-half weeks since I met her. So what? When you know, you know, right?

Something inside me insists that she's the one for me. So why the hell can't I say what I am feeling aloud? Argh! I dig my fingers in my hair and tug. Jesus H Christ, what the fuck is wrong with me?

"Well?" Saint prompts, "Do you?"

I turn around and face them. "And if I do?"

"So, you do?"

I fold my arms across my chest. "What's it to you, assholes?"

"I understand how difficult this seems," Sinner says in a low voice. "Trust me, when I met Summer I was confused as fuck. I had no idea why whenever I saw her, I wanted to run away yet simultaneously, shove her behind me and hide her away from the world."

"Whoa." I blink, "Did you just wax almost-poetic...about a woman?"

"My wife and soon-to-be mother of my child." He half-quirks a smile, "Who'd have thought, eh?"

"Not me," I mutter. "Mr. Ruthless Billionaire Bastard with hearts in his eyes... Fuck me dead."

"Right?" Sinclair smirks. "And you know what the starting point was?"

"No," I frown, "what was it?"

"It began with accepting that I was a piece of shit who didn't deserve her."

"Hear, hear," Damian agrees.

"It began with being very honest with myself about who I am."

"A fucktard?" I offer.

"That too." His smile grows lopsided. "But also, that I was a selfish bugger in everything, and even more so when it came to her. Only, when it came to doing things for her, I discovered I could be the most selfless person."

"You're not making any sense."

"My point, exactly." He widens his stance. "What I am trying to say, you piss-tard, is that it began with me facing myself. It began with me accepting what I felt for her."

"Which was—?"

Weston ambles over to me, "You just obtuse, or did your stint in the army addle your brains and other parts of you completely?"

"My parts are all in fine working condition," I mutter, "which is more than I can say for many of you."

"Afraid most of us here have proven our manhood, ol' chap," Weston drawls.

I open my mouth, and he shakes his head. "And I don't mean fucking or getting our women pregnant."

I tilt my head and he pauses next to me, "Every one of us had to bare our soul, lay our heart on our sleeve, and swallow some very hard lessons."

"Not to mention, coming clean and admitting our feelings for them," Damian interjects.

"You mean groveling, don't you?" Arpad mutters.

"Lots of groveling," Weston concurs.

"A whole lotta groveling." Saint winces.

"That doesn't seem like the recipe for a happy relationship." I frown.

Weston smacks me on the back of my head, and I wince, "The fuck, asshole?"

"Is that all you took away from this rather protracted and painful conversation?" He glares at me.

"If you want to tell me something, why can't you guys simply come to the point?"

"The point," Sinclair arches an eyebrow, "is you need to come clean about your feelings."

"So, you may as well start practicing now," Saint adds.

"Now?" I grumble.

Damian and Arpad nod.

Weston raises his hand and I glare at him, "Don't you fucking dare, you bastard."

"Oh, I fucking will, you douchebag, unless—"

"Unless?"

"Unless you spit it out."

"What?"

He claps me on the back of my head and I wince, "Fine, fine, I'll say, it, I love her. I fucking love her."

I stare at Edward, who frowns back at me. Like that helped with anything.

"What a fucking mess," I mutter.

He narrows his gaze.

"Now that we have that out there." Sinner turns to Edward, "What are you two gonna do about it?"

14

Edward

"Why are you asking me?" I growl. "I am not the one who got us into this mess."

"Oh yeah?" Baron snorts, "If you hadn't called me, I wouldn't have come."

"If you hadn't gone back on your word of not making contact with her, this would not have happened."

Baron thrusts his chin forward, "If you hadn't—"

The sound of a whistle blows through the space and we freeze, turning toward Sinner, who glares between us. "Woulda, coulda, shoulda. You assholes know better than to spend time talking about what already happened. Question is," his gaze narrows, "what are you gonna do about it now?"

I glance at the faces of each of my friends. They regard me with expressions varying from curiosity to empathy to hope.... Fucking hope. It's the one thing I don't have. If she doesn't choose me, I have nothing. I left the one thing that mattered to me, for her, and if she turns away from me... I pivot and face the window. "F-u-c-k." I bunch the fingers of my free hand into a fist. Don't go there. Don't even contemplate that. What you left behind... What you gave up... That's not on her. It's what you wanted to do. It's not that I had been unhappy with my choice to join the seminary. It's not that I had not been fulfilled. It's not that I hadn't found joy in helping others... Something which I hope I can still do.

It was more... The gnawing, aching, emptiness deep inside of me, the one that hadn't gone away, even after weeks of retreat. When I had turned to Him for help, had spent days in meditation and prayer, searching for an elusive answer. And all I had found was temporary peace. One that went away as soon as I returned to my duties. When worshipping him and dedicating my life to others...still did not fill the nothingness that infused me when I went to bed... Greeted me when I woke up the next morning, knowing that something was missing. And that restlessness had grown, until I'd met Ava and had been able to put a name to it.

Apparently, I am more human than I thought. More fallible, more vulnerable. I am not invincible. Hell, I'm not even cut out to be a man of the cloth. I know I need her to feel alive. Need her to help me get in touch with that part of me that I have hidden so carefully over the years. Need her to help me embrace the ugliness inside of me... For when I am with her, everything seems so possible. Yeah, she gives me hope...and it's why I can't lose her. I square my shoulders, then turn back to the silent room.

"We," I clear my throat, "we're gonna come up with a plan."

"Thought that's what you already did?" Sinclair arches an eyebrow.

"A real plan." I glance at Baron, who scowls back at me. "One that is fair for Ava. One in which neither of us is going to outdo the other. One which gives us both an equal...probability of being with her."

He opens his mouth as if to say something, then shuts it. He cracks his neck, regards me thoughtfully, "You have something in mind."

I nod.

"You going to share what you're thinking?"

I glance around the faces of my friends, "I think your job here is done." I tip up my chin. "You feel me, guys?"

Sinner holds my gaze a second longer, then jerks his chin. "Better get this sorted, you two." He turns to leave, then pauses. "There is one more thing."

He glances between Baron and Weston, "The guy who Edward put out of commission? I assume he's still unconscious?"

Baron nods, then turns to Weston, "And the fucker Edward shot? I want to know why they came after Ava."

"He's not yet in a position to speak," Weston replies.

"Hmm." Sinner rubs his jaw. "That's too bad. I was hoping they'd have some information on what we need to know to get to the bottom of these attacks on us."

"Attacks?" Baron frowns, "What attacks?"

I exchange a glance with Sinner, who jerks his chin. "It's a series of incidents, which have affected most of us, in some form."

I take in the faces of the rest of the Seven. "If the rest of you are okay with it, I can recap for Baron?"

Damian, Weston, Saint and Arpad nod in my direction.

"It begins with Damian's girlfriend and child being in a fatal car accident." I rub the back of my neck. "One we now speculate that the Mafia was behind."

"The same Mafia who were behind our kidnapping?" Baron frowns.

I nod.

"Shit," Baron mutters. "That's..." He sets his jaw, "that's just..." He turns to Damian, "I'm sorry man, truly."

"Yeah." Damian swallows. "Life, huh? What can I say?"

Baron walks toward Damian, grabs him by the shoulder and draws him close, "I'm sorry I wasn't there for you when it happened."

Damian half smiles. Baron pulls him in for an embrace. They hug, clap each other on the back, before he pulls away.

"What else?" Baron scowls. "What else did those bastards do?"

"They kidnapped Victoria," Saint snarls, "Assholes took her from under my nose. Good thing we tracked down the bastard behind it."

"You did?" Baron frowns. "What did you do with him?"

"He's working for us, behind enemy lines," Sinner says with some satisfaction.

"Then Weston's mother was poisoned," I murmur, "They got her to the hospital in time, but we now speculate that the Mafia was behind that too."

"Assholes," Weston growls. "When we finally get the perpetrators who were behind it, I am going to wring their necks."

"They also attacked Weston's wife in her apartment," I point out.

"Good thing I reached her in time." Weston grunts. "If I hadn't..."

"But you did," I remind him, "and Amelie's safe."

"And there were, uh, certain benefits, shall we say, in the aftermath of that particular incident, all of which, I was the beneficiary of, so there's that..." He smirks.

The rest of the men chuckle.

"Now, the homeless man," I glance between the men, "Guess Baron told you that he was a student at St. Lucian's?"

Damian nods, "We also know that he used to be a junkie, hard up on his next fix, who was used by the Mafia to supply the whereabouts of our locations to them."

"And yet," I tilt my head, "he helped all of you at various points."

"He did?" Baron scowls.

"He's played a role in smoothing the way for the five of them to get their women."

"Not me," Sinner points out, "though I admit, it was intriguing to read his Byron quotes... Shit," He straightens. "Byron. He quoted Byron."

"So?" I turn to him. "You remember something, Sinner?"

"Summer's father, before he died, he mentioned something about Byron. Fucking hell." He drags his fingers through his hair. "I never could understand the significance of it...but it's too much of a coincidence, don't you think, that the homeless man was quoting Byron?" He glances at me. "Surely, he must know more than he revealed to you."

"Only way to find out is when he wakes up." I turn to Weston, "Which could be when, Doc?"

"Anyone's guess." He narrows his gaze on me, "You sure lost your shit there, Ed. It's not like you to cause bodily harm to anyone."

"Yeah, well," I chuckle dryly, "apparently, there's a lot about me that I am discovering for the first time."

The guys stare at me with something like understanding...empathy... Even pity, on their faces. Jesus...and now I am using the Lord's name as a swearword. Which, I shouldn't, but I can, now that, technically, I've walked away from the priesthood, but bloody hell... I am, clearly, losing my head right now.

"I think it's time you guys left," I mutter. "Baron and I have shit to sort out."

No one moves. They stare at me, then at Baron.

"What?" I bark. "I may have almost strangled one man. Doesn't mean I'm going to do anything to Baron, who, by the way, can defend himself really well, considering he is the ex-soldier here."

"You're not too bad at holding your own in a fight, Fath—I mean Ed," Saint finally says. "Shit, it's going to take some getting used to, to not call you Father anymore."

"Tell me about it," I say bitterly.

Sinner stares between Baron and me, then nods. He turns to Weston, "So, you'll tell us when either of the men awakens?"

"You guys will be the first to know," he affirms.

"Well, then," Damian straightens, "time to get the hell out of here and let these two jokers sort their shit out."

The guys, one by one, hug Baron, then me. They say their goodbyes and walk out of the door. I rub the back of my neck, then turn back to the booze. I pour whiskey into my glass, top up another and push it toward Baron.

We raise our glasses, toss back the drinks. I place my tumbler back on the counter with a thump, then turn to him.

"About Ava," he begins at the same time as I say, "We need to talk—"

We both chuckle, then he gestures to me, "You first."

I top up my glass, then his, pick up mine and stare into the depths of the amber liquid. I take a sip, turn to him, "I have a plan."

15

"You know what I really hate? Boys. Okay, maybe I don't hate them but I hate how my mind reacts to them. I get so freaked and panicky about them. If I message them and they don't reply straight away, my mind's like, 'he's moved on to talk to another girl,' or 'you've pissed him off now; well done.' I also feel like I reply too fast to their messages... But maybe that's just irrational thinking. The thing is... I'm kind of scared of them. As in, I'm scared of what a relationship is (not friendship—I can be friends, easily). It's like foreign ground. I've never done the whole relationship thing. I've always thought you should start out friends to stop the awkwardness, but if someone doesn't want that, what are you supposed to do? Anyway, I'm going to go sleep or do something else that is totally unproductive whilst I try not care about boys..."

-From Ava's Diary

Ava

"I still can't believe you threw him out," Isla stares up at me from the corner of the dressing room in my studio. I glance at the door of the studio for, like, the hundredth time in the last hour. Will I ever feel safe in here? I mean, it's silly. Since those guys had broken in, Baron had insisted that Karina, Arpad's wife who runs a security agency, beef up the security on the place, and I had agreed. The door is reinforced, and all of my students have to be buzzed in, which does make me feel safer.

Still, this is where Edward was shot, and that...is something I don't think

I am going to forget anytime soon. At least, I still have the space. If it were up to Baron, he'd have moved me to a completely new studio...at his expense. Not that I'd have allowed him to do that. I don't want to feel beholden to him... Or to Edward. In any form, right now.

Shit, stop thinking about him and Baron. This is supposed to be a complete break, remember?

When Isla had dropped by, carrying two cups of coffee, it had been a welcome break between classes. She'd tried reaching me by phone, then when I hadn't answered the phone, she'd decided to drop by. For the past half an hour, I have been trying to explain the situation to her, or rather, trying to justify the reason behind what I had done, both to her, and I suppose, to myself. And it had been the right thing. It has to be, right? If I can't stop getting intimate with either of them when I see them, then clearly, this arrangement isn't working.

"I kissed Baron," I repeat, "then I walked into the house and made out with Edward."

"So?"

"So?" I scowl at her. "Seriously, Isla, that doesn't sound right to me."

"You are too influenced by what society thinks."

"What is that supposed to mean?"

"I mean, just because conventional wisdom dictates that you can be only with one man at a time—"

"For a reason," I look her up and down, "I mean, how would you feel if Liam carried on with you and another woman—"

She scowls, holds up a finger, "Firstly, don't talk about that bastard. And secondly," she holds up another finger, "he is with another woman. He's getting married, remember?"

"How are the arrangements going?"

"He showed up for the first rehearsal, but I haven't seen him since. I feel sorry for his fiancée."

"Thought you didn't like his fiancée."

"I don't."

"Then why are you defending her?"

"Dunno, maybe I just think that she deserves better."

"Really?" I peer into her features.

She nods. "I mean, it can't be easy being engaged to the jerkass. He's, apparently, told her that she can do what she wants. He doesn't care." She flips her hair over her shoulder, "I mean, he's paying for all of it. The least he can do is make sure he's getting his money's worth."

"Maybe he trusts you?"

"Not likely, considering I barely know the man." She snorts, "In fact, I am beginning to empathize with his fiancée."

"You are?"

She nods, "She's a lovely girl, actually. A bit naïve; he'll probably chew her up and spit her out."

"But not you?"

"Huh?" She frowns.

"He'd have met his match in you?"

"Stop." She glowers at me. "Don't go turning the spotlight on me, bitch."

"Yeah, okay." I raise my shoulders. "I tried. I mean, your love life is far more interesting right now."

"Ha, ha," Isla deadpans. "That's a joke, right?"

I give her a dirty look.

"I'm not the one getting boned by two hot alphaholes."

"I am not getting boned by them," I protest.

"Surely you've thought about it?" She waggles her eyebrows, "Imagine two dicks at the same time. Not to mention, you'll have two pair of hands, two sets of lips, two tongues and—"

"I can count," I say dryly.

"Can you, though?"

"What?" I groan, "Come out and say it, Isla." I place my now empty coffee cup down on the floor and lean forward in the tiny dressing room, "What's on your mind?"

"That pushing both of them away is not the way to go about this."

"Why not?"

"It's the proverbial hiding your head in the sand and hoping that it will all go away."

"If only it were that simple," I mumble. "Not that I am not trying, believe me. I've tried to regulate the time spent with each of them and, clearly, that's not going to work."

"You barely gave it a chance to work," she points out.

I snort, "I only have to spend a few moments alone with either of them and things just get out of hand, so yeah, not going down that path."

"So, you decide you're not going to see either of them?"

"Well, yeah." I raise my shoulders. "What would you have done?"

"The opposite?"

"Huh?"

"Spend time with both of them?" She stares at me as if I am a complete idiot.

"Wait, what?"

"I mean, spend time with both of them."

"At the same time?"

"YES."

"So, what? Like, double date, except it would be a threesome of sorts?" I frown

"Yes."

"No." I shake my head.

"Yes." She nods.

I jump up, brush past her into the studio and begin to pace. "This doesn't make sense at all."

She stands up from her chair and leans against the doorway of the dressing room. "Why not?"

I turn on her, "Hello, can you hear yourself?" I throw my hands in the air. "You're basically saying I should be with both of them, and risk them hurting each other?"

"Why would they do that?"

"You haven't seen how pissed off each of them gets, when they know I am with the other. They have come to blows at least twice now, already."

"So let them fight it out." She raises a hand, "They need to get it out of their systems; let them."

"They'll hurt each other."

"They'll heal." She shrugs.

I stare at her, and she scowls back, "What? Don't tell me you don't find the thought of two men fighting over you, hot?"

"Honestly?" I bite down my lower lip, "It is a little hot, I suppose." She grins and I hold up a hand, "But mostly, it gives me a headache." I rub at my temples, "How the hell am I going to figure this out?"

"Don't sweat it, babe." She walks toward me and grips my shoulder, "Let things happen organically."

"I tried that, remember?" I sigh. "I think I took the meaning of 'organically' to be too literal."

"Maybe you just need to sleep with both of them, so you can compare how you feel, you know?"

"I've done that already."

"But do it more consciously?" She raises her eyebrows, "So you can weigh how you feel, and not just physically."

"It doesn't seem right... You know?" I slide my hands into the pockets of the leather jacket that I had thrown over my dress before leaving earlier. "It feels too cold, too calculated... And it goes against everything I thought a relationship should be about."

"Well, these are extenuating circumstances, so..."

"But does it justify that I am actually, in effect, with two men at the same time?" I glance at her, stricken, "Shit, it does come down to that, right? I am a two-timing little slut." Tears form in my eyes.

She frowns at me, "Stop being so judgmental of yourself."

"Why shouldn't I be?" I sniff.

She glances around, spots the box of tissues I keep in the far corner of the studio and goes over to grab them for me. She returns, hands it to me, and I mumble my thanks. "I mean, it's not natural, having such a deep connection with two men and not being able to decide." I dab at my eyes.

"It happens." She eyes me closely, "And it's not completely your fault. After all, those two set you up."

"Yeah," I bite the inside of my cheek. "Still doesn't help me, though. After all, I am the one caught in between them."

"That," she smirks, "is the key point here."

"What?"

"In between them." She titters.

"You have a one-track mind." I roll my eyes. "Nothing like that is ever going to happen."

"You don't even know what I am thinking of."

"Don't I?"

She arches an eyebrow, "Again, don't tell me that you haven't thought about it."

"No." My cheeks heat. "Okay, maybe."

"Ha!" she crows. "What better way of comparing them, then having them side by side?"

"Stop." I slap my hands over my ears. "Seriously, Iz, I think you're sexually deprived; you need to get laid."

"Tell me about it." She blows out a breath, then glances at her watch. "OMG, look at the time. I need to get going."

"Another, rehearsal?"

"With Liam's fiancée and the dildo I now keep in his seat, since he doesn't turn up."

I gape. "No, you don't."

"Sure, I do."

"Seriously?" I giggle.

"It started out as a joke," she admits. "Now, Lila and I do it whenever he doesn't turn up. It makes it all kind of fun."

"It is funny." I chortle.

"Yeah, I know." She rises to her feet, grabs her things then glances at me, "So, what are you going to do, then?"

"Good question." I move toward my music console, flip a switch. The strain of my favorite dance number Girl like Me by the Black-Eyed Peas and Shakira, fills the space. I raise my arms above my head, do a little shimmy, "I suppose I could always dance. It's one way of solving my problems." I move my hips, bump and grind. "I could pretend I am between the two of them, seducing them—"

"Umm, Ava?" I hear her call above the strains of the music.

"What?" I mumble, focusing on my steps—shake my hips, move my feet, bend, raise my arms. "Or I could rub myself up against one, then the other." I widen my legs, thrust my pelvis forward.

"Ava!" Isla says more urgently. "They are—"

"What?" I grumble. "Can I, at least, dance in my own studio, or what?" I shake my chest, undulate my body, "Maybe I could dirty dance with one, then the other, then with both, like—" I swirl around, come face to face with two heated gazes.

16

Ava

"Ah." I lose my footing, and would have fallen, but Baron and Edward both step up. Baron grips my left arm, Edward my right, and I find my balance. I glance between the two of them. From Baron's blue gaze that burns with that inner fire I am coming to recognize as uniquely his to Edward's golden one that sweeps down my curves and eats me up before coming to rest on my face.

The tension between us builds. Heat flushes my cheeks, my chest. My nipples pebble.

"Um," Isla clears her throat, "I guess I'd better be going. Call me if you need anything, Ava."

Her footsteps recede, the door slams behind her and then I am alone, with not one, but two hot, sexy, dominant-as-hell alphaholes.

I tug on my arms, but neither of them releases me.

"Hey, guys," I half laugh, "I think you'd best unhand me."

Neither moves. Both of them glare at me, like they want to hurt me, right before they kiss it all and make it better. OMG, stop thinking about them in the plural! What the hell is wrong with me?

"Baron, Edward, please, can you release my hands? You are hurting me."

Baron instantly releases me, Edward more slowly. I step back, wrap my arms about myself. "I didn't hear the two of you come in."

"I have the password," Baron concedes.

"Of course, you do," I complain. "Karina must have shared it with you,

huh?"

"I didn't give her a choice." He smirks. "And if she hadn't, I'd have simply hacked into her computer."

"Another of your many skills, no doubt."

"Just something I like to play with in my spare time." His grin widens. "Of course, there are other things I'd rather be doing instead, if you must know."

My flush deepens. "Don't think I asked, or that I care, either way."

"Sure, you do." He chuckles, "Admit it, Eve, you are dying to know more about me."

"And I want to know more about you," Edward interjects smoothly. "It strikes me that you haven't had the chance to tell me more about yourself since we met."

"That's true, I guess." I glance between them again. "I mean, I've, uh, been busy, I suppose."

"What do you say we pick you up after class and take you to dinner?" Baron asks.

"Both of you?" I look from Baron to Edward, then at Baron again. "At the same time?"

"It's only dinner," Edward drawls. "What do you say?"

"I... I don't understand." I frown.

"You have to eat sometime," Baron urges. "So do we."

"But at the same time?"

"Why not?" Edward interjects. "We can have a civil meal, the three of us, can't we?"

"Can we?" I step back from them. "The last time I saw the two of you, you were getting ready to smash in the other one's face. Then, both of you were pissed that I was maybe getting...uh, intimate with the other. Now you're saying we should go to dinner together..." I purse my lips. "Do either of you care to explain what the hell is happening?"

They look at each other, then Baron nods at Edward, which is weird. Not that he nodded, but because it's like a sign has passed between them, which means they are communicating, and that is strange. These two couldn't stand the sight of each other. Now, suddenly, they are here asking me to dinner? Together? I shake my head, "What?" I frown. "What is it?"

Edward raises his hand, "We, uh, met up earlier, after you, ah, threw me out."

"I am not sorry about it," I mutter and he smirks.

"Opinionated too, huh?"

I flush. "You were saying? That you two met?"

His eyes gleam. "Yep, we did, and we figured we should come at this at a different angle."

"Which is?"

"That the two of us try to date you together, for a little while."

"So, the three of us," I circle the space between us with my finger, "do stuff together?"

Baron nods.

"So, we hang out together."

"Yep," Edward leans forward, "you okay with that?"

"More to the point, are you okay with that?"

His brow furrows, then he schools all emotions from his features. "For now." He nods, "Yeah, for the moment, I am."

"And you?" I turn to Baron, "You're fine with this arrangement?"

He squares his shoulders. "Temporarily."

"Hmm." I purse my lips. "I wonder how long that will last?"

Edward grunts. "Don't write us off yet," he admonishes me. "Neither of us wants to risk losing you. And while each of us hates the thought of you being with the other, it would be a lot worse if we upset you so much that you turned away from us completely, hence—"

"This arrangement," Baron picks up the commentary. "It's not ideal, but it means each of us knows where the other is in relation to you."

"So, there is some level of transparency?" I venture.

"Exactly," Edward nods. "Earlier, each of us kept speculating about what the other was up to. This way, at least, whatever is happening is out in the open."

"Right." I glance between them again. "You do know that I am not compromising on the no-sex clause."

Edward scowls. Baron glowers back at me.

"Well?"

Edward seems like he is about to say something, then firms his lips.

"I am not deviating from that." I draw myself up to my full height. "I am not sleeping with either of you guys."

Both stay quiet. The silence stretches.

"Guess neither of you is happy with that," I say softly. "But that's one thing I am not budging on." I glance between them again, "So what do you say?"

Baron's jaw tics and a nerve throbs at his temple. Edward glares at me, his amber eyes glowing with a golden light that seems to flare even brighter.

"Well?" I say. "Guess you are both not on board with it, then?" I hunch my shoulders. "If you're not, then I guess you should both leave now."

I am about to turn away, when Baron snaps, "Fine." He grumbles, "Fine, no-sex, for the time-being."

My muscles unwind. I nod, turn to Edward, "And you?" I murmur. "What do you say, Ed?"

"You're killing me, Eve," he says softly.

"Is that a 'no'?"

"It's a 'yes.'" He pinches the bridge of his nose. "I can't believe I am agreeing to it, but yeah, fine, no sex. Temporarily."

"No sex." I hold out my palm. "Promise me, neither of you will push it."

"What?" Baron scowls.

"What the fuck?" Edward glares at me.

"Promise me." I jerk my chin toward my upturned hand.

Baron growls, then places his large palm on my much smaller one.

"What-fucking-ever," he gripes.

My lips quirk as I turn to Ed.

He holds my gaze, then cushions my palm with his, sandwiching my hand between his and Baron's. Heat suffuses my spine. My thighs clench. Warmth from the point of contact with both of them sinks into my blood.

"Fine," Edward grumbles, "we'll do it your way."

17

Ava

I glance over the rim of my menu at the two men who sit opposite me. Luckily, we are seated at a round table at the restaurant, so we didn't need to argue over who was going to sit next to me. Not that they would have fought over that.... I blow out a breath. They totally would have fought over that. Who wants to bet that before the evening is over, the two of them will have come to blows with each other? Right now, though, they are both seated with their drinks in front of them, studying their own menus.

Baron's blond hair is combed back. He's wearing a button-down white shirt that sets off his tan. He's clearly made an effort to dress up for dinner. The strong chords of his throat flex as he takes a sip from his drink before placing his tumbler down on the table. Both men are, of course, drinking whiskey... And yes, it's the same brand. Their tastes clearly run similarly... including in women.

I wince, glance at Edward. His dark hair has shots of brown woven through it. His skin color is darker than Baron's, his jaw more pronounced. He's wearing a white T-shirt that stretches across his broad shoulders. It shows off his biceps, while the tattoo I'd seen on him earlier peeks from under his collar. His hair is disheveled, thick tufts falling across his forehead. Somehow, he seems untamed, unleashed...the mask he'd worn earlier having been ripped away from him at some point. He'd set aside his priest's collar and with it, apparently, the veneer of civility he had donned at one point.

How could I have ever thought of him as being gentle or disciplined? He is wild, this man. All those emotions that he had smothered have only just begun to be revealed. All that passion that he'd locked inside has only now begun to be divulged. The dam has begun to crumble, and when he reveals what he really is to the world... Will I be there to see it? To which woman will he share that deepest part of himself, the secrets that he hides inside? He raises his gaze and meets mine, and a flush heats my cheeks. I glance away, then back at him.

Edward smirks. "You look good."

I chuckle, "I am wearing exactly the same outfit that I had on when the two of you barged in earlier. You've had time to go back and change while I? I had to make do with spritzing my face with water and refreshing my make up."

"You don't need any embellishments." Baron places his menu card on the table. "Your inner beauty shines through, no matter what you wear."

"Oh." My cheeks heat. "That," I swallow, "that's some compliment."

"It's true." He holds my gaze and the heat spreads to my chest. My nipples tighten and my belly flutters. He reaches forward and holds out his hand, I place my palm in it. He winds his fingers with mine, "I knew it from the moment I saw you, Ava, that there was never going to be anyone else but you."

The hair on the back of my neck rises. I glance the other way and find Edward glaring at our joined-up fingers. Shit, knew it. Who were these guys kidding? Two minutes into the meal, and already, I can sense the beginnings of a disagreement.

I place the menu on the table, then hold out my other palm, face up. Edward takes it and I squeeze his fingers.

"You, okay?" I whisper.

He blinks as if coming out of a daze, then nods. "You?"

"I'll be fine once I get some food in me." I tilt my lips up, and his features light up with an answering smile. His face brightens. The gold in his eyes seem to catch fire. My breath catches in my chest. I turn away to find Baron scowling at Edward.

I try to withdraw my hands and both men hold on.

"Guys," I warn, "please."

The tension builds between us; first Baron, then Edward releases me.

I fold my hands in my lap and stare at the menu blindly. Oh, jeez, this is going to be a disaster of an evening.

The waiter comes up to us. "Are you ready to order?" he asks us.

"She'll have the butternut squash ravioli with mushrooms and sage pesto," Baron replies.

"Get her the roast duck," Edward counters.

"I'm vegetarian." I mutter, and Edward blinks, then turns to the waiter.

"Get her the spinach and feta pie," he amends.

The waiter glances at both of them, then at me. I blow out a breath. Of course, neither of them had asked me what I wanted. Typical. The tension at the table grows. The waiter shuffles his feet. "Ma'am?" he urges me, and I roll my shoulders, feeling the beginnings of a stress headache. And this was supposed to be, a relaxing evening?

"I'll have..." both men stiffen, "neither," I murmur. I really wanted the ravioli, but dammit, I cannot show favoritism with these dumbasses without starting World War III.

I sense the surprise from both of them, but don't look at them. Instead, I turn to the waiter, "Can you get me the classic ratatouille, please?"

The waiter nods, turns to the men, who proceed to order. Baron orders the wine; Edward doesn't protest. Well, hallelujah. Apparently, they agree on something. Once the waiter leaves, they both turn to me.

"Thanks," Baron says. "We didn't handle that well, did we?"

I resist the urge to roll my eyes. "That's putting it mildly." I glance between them. "Why does everything turn into a competition between the two of you?"

"Old habits," Baron mutters, "we weren't always this—"

"Combative?" Edward offers.

"I was going to say contentious." Baron smirks.

"I'd settle for cut-throat," Edward muses.

"That too." Baron nods. "It's just, after the incident..."

He glances up at Edward, who toys with his fork. "Fucking incident," he growls, "the aftermath of which seems as if it will haunt us for the rest of our lives."

"What..." I swallow. "What happened to the two of you then?"

Baron's shoulders freeze. His features close and when I look at Edward his jaw is set. Neither man breaks the silence.

"Fine," I mumble, "I get the hint. Sorry if I asked about something I shouldn't have. I mean, this is supposed to be a getting to know each other date...or something."

Edward leans forward. "Hey." He tries to catch my eye. "Look at me, Eve."

I glance away. Why the hell do I feel hurt? I mean, it's not like they had promised me anything, except that they'd try to get along. And they had agreed to my no sex condition. Speaking of, that had been a surprise. I honestly hadn't expected them to agree to that. Totally hadn't. Why the hell hasn't either of them pushed their weight around on that?

Maybe, they don't really want to sleep with me... Oh, come on. Of course, they do. So, the very fact that they had agreed to it...is...something. Maybe they really do want to try to make this work.

"Ava," Edward warns, "don't ignore me."

I huff, then raise my gaze to his. "What?" I scowl. "What do you want?"

"It's not that I don't want you to know what happened then, but it's..." he frowns, "not easy to talk about."

"It's the single worst time of my life," Baron says, his voice hard.

I glance from his closed features to Edward's angry ones.

"Whatever happened then, it defined both of you. It changed your lives. It pulled you apart even as it connected the two of you together for life."

Edward glances at Baron, who shakes his head.

"Nice." I shake my head. "When it suits you, the two of you agree with each other and have silent conversations that I am, clearly, not privy to."

"It's not like that." Baron frowns at me.

"Then what is it like?" I wrap my arms around my waist. "Clearly, there's a part of your lives, a hell of a big chunk of your life experiences, that the two of you share. One which you'll never let me into."

"We will," Edward murmurs. "I promise you, Eve, we'll tell you everything, just not now."

"Then when?" I scowl. "When the two of you are done bashing each other up? Or maybe when both of you have decided that this temporary 'peace' is no longer valid and decide to fall out again and go your separate ways."

"When...if that happens," Baron growls, "you'll be on the same path as one of us."

"Not."

"What?" Ed frowns. "We've had this discussion. You are going to pick one of us."

"Maybe," I mutter.

"No, maybes," Baron snaps. "You will decide on one of us."

"And if I don't?" I firm my lips. Not that I mean to do so. I mean, come on. I have enough drama on my hands just by having the two of them in my life. I am hardly going to risk making both of them angry by going after someone else. Not that I can even think of anyone else. These two... Between them, my heart has been twisted into knots, something I am not going to recover from very soon. So...yeah, not going there at all. Doesn't mean I can't have a little fun with them, right?

"You will not look at anyone else." Edward's voice lowers to a hush, "In fact, you will not even think of anyone else. You will choose from one of us."

"Is that an order?"

18

Edward

"Yes," I growl, "it's a fucking order."

What the hell? What's wrong with you? Why the hell are you commanding her, knowing it's going to piss her off? Maybe I want to make her angry? Maybe I want to see her lip's part, the flush bloom on her cheeks, her green eyes glittering as her chest heaves and she leans forward, to thump her little knuckles on the table...

"What the fuck?" she snarls. "Did you really say what I think you did?"

I allow my lips to curl. "You heard me, babe." I buff my fingernails on my sleeve. "It's either me or Baron here for you."

"Is that right?" She rises to her feet, "You can't control me."

Baron raises his head, a slight quirk to his lips. He stares up at her, peruses her face. Oh, yeah, I get the appeal. It's that sass of hers, the steel in her spine, her feisty sprit that makes me feel alive. It's the same reason Baron's so fascinated with her.

I turn to Ava, "Sit down, Eve."

Her cheeks redden and her chest heaves as she draws in a breath, then another. Oh, yeah, she's certainly found her backbone, the woman who'd been a virgin not so long ago. She's changed, all right. She's found the will to resist and I love it, even as a part of me regrets that I tainted her. I spoiled her. If I had left her alone, she'd probably still be the pure, untouched Ava, who would have ultimately given her virginity to someone else—my pulse pounds at my temples and my belly knots—something which I would never tolerate. The thought of her being with anyone else...? I bunch my fists, press them into the table, much like Ava had done earlier. "Sit down, Ava. Now."

She blinks, stares at me, then at Baron, who jerks his chin.

She sinks into her chair. "There." She huffs, "Happy?"

"Not yet." I don't take my gaze off of her face as the waiter brings the wine. He pours out some for Baron to taste. He nods and the waiter fills our glasses halfway. I raise my glass and shift my gaze to Baron.

He lifts his glass. "To Ava."

I echo his toast, "To Ava."

She glances between us as a blush steals over her cheeks. She raises her glass, then takes a sip, swirls it around her palate. "It's good," she takes another sip, "really good."

"Only the best for my woman." Baron smirks at her and she laughs.

"Not your woman yet," she says.

"Oh, you will be." Baron's grin widens.

"You're awfully sure of yourself, Mr. Masters." She raises one eyebrow.

"No reason not to be." He shoots me a sideways glance. "No offense."

"None taken," I arch an eyebrow, "though if I were you, I wouldn't get too confident."

"Hey," she protests, "I am still here, you guys."

Baron opens his mouth to retort, when our food arrives. The server places the food on the table and leaves.

She frowns down at the food, "I think I lost my appetite."

"Eat," I order.

When she firms her lips, Baron, leans forward. "Eat, Ava, before the food gets cold," he coaxes her, and her gaze grows mutinous.

"Ava," I warn, "don't defy me."

She glances at Baron again, who stares down at her plate then back at her. "Go on, Eve," he cajoles.

She draws in a breath, then reaches for her fork and digs in.

Is she more responsive toward him? Does she place more importance on his words?

I scowl down, push the food around on my plate. Surely, it must be my imagination. Yeah, that's all it is. I reach for my glass of wine, take a sip, then place it down.

"So, Ava, why belly dancing?"

"Why the priesthood?"

"You first." I set my jaw, and she scowls.

"Why do I always have to give in?"

"Because you're submissive?"

Her jaw drops, "Of all the asinine—"

"I joined the army because it was the only way to deal with the ghosts of my past," Baron interjects.

Both of us turn to him.

He looks up from his plate, "In hindsight, it was the most cowardly and the most courageous thing that I had ever done."

"Cowardly?" She frowns.

He raises a shoulder "I simply placed all of my problems on the back burner. Only, they were still there when I returned."

"So, what are you going to do about it?" I murmur. "You going to face them head on now?"

He laughs, "What do you think?"

"I think," I reach for the wine and refill his glass, then Ava's, "you need to get drunk."

"What about you?" Ava asks

"I am the designated driver this evening."

"With your arm in a sling?" She scowls.

I smirk, take off the sling, and stretch my arm, "Surprise."

"Wow," she stares at me, "you're better?"

"The sling was just a precaution, to curtail movement, which would help the wound to heal faster," I explain, "but I'm definitely feeling better."

"Hmm," she purses her lips, "so you weren't as badly hurt as I thought."

"I just heal fast," I offer.

"Guess I didn't really need to ask you to stay with me, huh?"

My neck heats, but I refuse to look away. "You can't blame a guy for trying." I shrug.

"Edward," she gapes, "really... You actually pretended to be worse off just so you could get into my..."

"Pants?"

"I was going to say bed," she snaps.

"I suppose I should say I am sorry," I quirk my lips, "but I am not."

"Of course, not." She scowls. "Why should you? Doesn't matter that I was really worried about you, you...ass." She tightens her fingers around the stem of her wine glass, "Seriously, Ed, sometimes I don't think I recognize you anymore."

"Me neither." I glance away. I should apologize, really, I should, but I only did what was necessary to get a head start over Baron. What's so wrong with that? I glance at her tense face, then at Baron's smirking one. Bastard. I glower at him and he shakes his head.

"What should we toast this round?" He raises his glass and turns to her.

"To not lying?" She shoots me a dirty look.

I wince, then smirk back at her. She glances away and at Baron.

"To following your instinct," Baron quirks his lips, before raising his own glass.

"To..." I stare at Ava, "to you."

She tips up her chin, finally meets my gaze, her green eyes bright with defiance, and something else... Excitement? She is enjoying this thrust and parry, the chemistry between the three of us, something which, I admit, has caught me by surprise as well. I take in her flushed features, the pulse that beats at the base of her throat. She bites down on her lower lip and my dick twitches. She flicks out her tongue, licks her lower lip and the blood drains to my groin. This woman... She simply has to look at me and I want to throw her down on the table and take her right here.

Baron clears his throat and the two of us jerk our heads in his direction.

His features are hard as he stares between us. "Please pass the salt," he says in a toneless voice. I hand over the salt shaker and he seasons his food, before placing it aside. "What about you Edward? Do you regret joining the Church?"

"Never," I scoop up some of the fish, close my mouth around the tines of the fork. "It was a phase of my life...which was essential in so many ways. It gave me structure and discipline, helped me ground myself at a time when I needed a direction."

"Do you ever wonder what you would have been if you hadn't joined the Church?" Ava asks.

"I certainly wouldn't have been sitting across from you and enjoying a meal with you." I glance back at her. "So no, I don't regret a single thing I did with my life because all of it has led up to this moment, when I can look in your eyes and tell you just how much you mean to me."

A glass crashes to the floor beside the table. Ava visibly shakes, turns to glance at Baron.

"Oops, sorry," he murmurs, "I am being exceptionally clumsy today."

"Seems you prefer to have the focus of the table on you, ol' chap," I mutter without looking away from Ava's gorgeous face.

"You accusing me of being an attention seeker or something?" he replies.

"Or something." I reach for the bottle of wine, empty the rest of its contents into my unused glass. I slide it over to Baron, then hold up the bottle for the waiter, who materializes next to me. "Another bottle, please,"

He vanishes with the empty one just as one of the staff scurries toward the table and sweeps up the glass shards.

"Excuse me," Ava pushes back her chair, "I need to use the restroom." She stands, then stares between us, "Can I hope that the two of you have not killed each other by the time I return?"

I frown. "Oh, come now, Ava. This is just friendly fire."

"Friendly fire?" Her voice rises in exasperation, "Seriously, why do I even bother?" She grabs her purse, then leaves the table.

I can't stop myself from taking in the sway of her hips, her thick auburn strands flowing behind her as she walks in the direction of the restroom. I glance up to find Baron's attention as riveted. A growl rips from my chest.

"What?" He frowns. "You're not the only one enamored with her, you know."

"Doesn't make this any easier to stomach." I scowl back.

"If we can't get through a meal together, how the hell are we going to make it through the next few weeks...maybe months?"

"Months?" I pale.

"You don't think this is going to get sorted out that quickly, do you?"

"It's only the question of all our lives." I grimace. "But months... I won't last. Seriously, when I am in the same space as her... All I can think of is...." I squeeze my eyes shut, take a breath, another, "It kills me to have you look at her." I finally manage, "I want to tear your eyes out, then beat you up, tie you up, and throw you into the Thames. That's after I've handed your balls to you, of course."

Baron winces. "Ouch, man. Spare the balls, at least. Not that I haven't had the same thoughts about you."

"How the hell are we going to manage this?" I grumble. The waiter arrives with a bottle of wine. "Thanks," I mutter, then indicate he can leave when he hovers at my elbow. Wish I was getting drunk as well.

"This is going to end badly." Baron takes a sip of his wine.

"It's not going to end well," I agree.

"This no sex thing is going to kill me." He slides a finger under the collar of his starched collar.

"It bloody sucks." I scowl. "I can't decide what's worse: that she's not sleeping with me, or that she's not sleeping with you either."

"I'd have said it's a relief that she's definitely not having sex with you... But hell, if it isn't a bummer that I can't get some either." He rubs his chin.

We glance at each other, and a chuckle breaks out from me. He smirks back. We both burst out laughing.

"Fuck," he rubs the back of his neck, "how did we get here again?"

"Afraid this one is my mess." I roll my shoulders. "If I hadn't picked up the phone and called you—"

"Which I am glad you did."

I stare. "You are?"

"Bet the rest of the Seven are pissed that you didn't reach out to them." His lips quirk

"Bet they are—" I chuckle.

"But seriously," he glances at the wine, "and maybe this is the wine talking... In fact, I am sure it is the wine talking..." He takes another sip. "You called at the right time."

"I did?"

"I guess I was waiting for an excuse to come back." He raises his shoulders. "I was tired of running."

"I was tired of..." Not feeling? Not letting myself think too deeply? Just having an existence which barely scratched the surface? Not facing my fears? My need to live life using all my senses? Not wanting to hide anymore? I take another sip of the water, "I was just tired..."

"You took the brunt of what happened during the incident." Baron's features harden. "If there was any way I could thank you for what you did..."

"You can leave her."

He starts, then laughs out loud. "You don't mean it."

"Don't I?"

"All these years and you choose now to call in that favor?"

"You asked."

"Doesn't mean I am going to give you what you want." His throat moves as he swallows. "Besides, she is not a thing...that we can pass around between each other. She deserves a chance to make up her own mind."

"With some help from us."

"I knew you had changed Edward," his jaw tics, "I just hadn't realized how much."

"And you, Baron." I tilt my head, "You haven't changed at all. You're still every bit as self-righteous, as focused on the straight and narrow as you were when you joined the army."

"Unlike you." He glares back. "You joined the priesthood to cover up just how twisted you really are inside."

"That's right." I bare my teeth. "And don't you forget it, you—"

Baron's phone buzzes. He pulls it out of my pocket, glances at the screen, then holds it to his ear, "Ava? Are you—"

The blood drains from his face.

"Who is it?" I snap.

He springs to his feet and so do I, "Baron, who the fuck was that?"

He shoves back his chair, runs toward the door, and I follow him, "It's Ava, isn't it?" I pant, "Is she—"

"They got to her."

I race after him toward the doors leading to the restrooms.

19

Ava

"Bitch, give me that." The man lunges for me and I scream. The phone slips from my fingers. I turn toward the door that leads to the restaurant but he's already there.

The breath catches in my throat and my heart begins to race. I pivot, heading up the alleyway, with the man in hot pursuit.

I'd finished at the restroom, come out into the corridor, but hadn't wanted to return. It would have been more of the same. The two of them going at each other like dogs fighting over a bone. Damn them, they have reduced me to this—a dog bone.

How could they? Are they both so blind that they can't see what it is doing to me to be stuck in the middle like this? I don't want to come between them, really. At the same time, I can't choose between them. My mind is too confused. And my heart? It's simply not going to be able to take another snarled comment from either of them.

They don't mean to hurt me, though. I am sure of that. They are just so busy trying to get one up on the other, even as they try to figure out a way to give me some space to figure out what I want. Ha, as if... I am giving them too much credit. They are thinking with their dicks, getting all possessive, when the other so much as looks at me. Yeah, this arrangement of the three of us spending time together is all going tits up.

I'd turned away from the dining room and walked toward the back door, instead. I'd pushed it open, stepped out into the cool night air. The sounds of the restaurant had faded away as the door had shut behind me. I'd stood there, simply enjoying the silence, when a man had pushed away from the wall where he'd been leaning. He'd asked me if I had a light, and I had said no. He'd come toward me and I'd stiffened as I'd recognized him. I'd reached into the bag, gotten my phone, and called Baron before he'd realized what was happening. That's when he'd reached for me. I'd evaded him, managed to speak to Baron, and he'd lunged for me.

Now, I pump my legs...trying to go faster... Well, as fast as my heels will allow. Damn it, today of all days, I had forgone my flats in favor of these kitten heels. That's what happens when you have two men in your life. You lose perspective. And when your brain is addled with trying to figure out who you want more, you screw up all other parts of your life. I can't believe I wasn't more careful. After being attacked twice now, you'd have thought I'd have a better sense of self preservation, but apparently, not.

His footsteps sound closer. I turn to glance over my shoulder and cry out. He's right behind me. Ohmigod, oh, my god! I straighten, put on a burst of speed, then scream when he grabs my arm. He yanks me back and I stumble against him. The stench of sweat and cigarette smoke engulfs me. My guts churn; the blood thuds at my temples. I try to pull away, but his grasp tightens.

"I am going to teach you a lesson, bitch. Thanks to you, my friends are in trouble. You deserve to pay for what you did to them."

"I did to them?" I growl, "Asshole, the three of you attacked me. They deserve what happened to them.

"Oh, yeah?"

He releases me, only to raise his hand. I duck...too late. He catches me at the side of my face and my vision blurs. Pain slices through my head; sparks of white flare behind my eyes. I lurch back, my knees give way, and I collapse. He straddles me, shackles his fingers around my neck. He presses down and my lungs burn. I try to take in a breath, cough. Spots of black flicker at the corners of my eyes. Terror bubbles up and my stomach churns. I paw at his wrists, his hands, but he doesn't release me. My vision wavers, darkness closing in. The next second, his weight is pulled off of me. I drag in a lungful of air, then scream when someone bends over me.

"Ava, it's me, Edward."

"Ed?" My chin wobbles and hot tears spill over as Edward touches my cheek. I wince and his beautiful features harden. I hear the sounds of a struggle, the unmistakable echoes of someone getting beaten. The ground seems to shake. I wince and Edward's scowl deepens. He rises, scoops me up in his arms.

"Your wound," I protest.

"Fuck that," he growls, and I begin to laugh.

"What?" He frowns. "What's wrong?"

"I'll always remember how you said 'Fuck my vows' when you came to see me, right before you—"

"Left," he says in a sorrowful voice.

"Oh, Ed." I press my aching forehead against his chest. Behind me, I hear the pounding of footsteps as my attacker races away. Then Baron walks over to us.

"Bastard got away," he swears as he shakes out his fist. His shirt is torn, his jacket blood-stained, his hair is mussed up and he looks...glorious.

Fuck, what's wrong with me? These men saved my life again, and all I can do is think about how I want them to touch me.

"You okay, Eve?" He places his hand against my unhurt cheek and I burst into tears.

"What the—?" He glances at me, then at Ed, "What did I say?"

"N... nothing," I blubber, "It's just...he...he..."

"He's gone," Baron says softly. "He won't hurt you again. Not as long as I—"

"—we," Edward corrects him.

"Not as long as we have anything to do with it," he agrees, and that only makes me cry harder.

"Shit, don't cry, Ava." Baron cups my cheek and I turn my face into the palm of his hand.

I coil into Edward's chest and allow the tears to fall.

Edward rocks me, Baron moves in closer and his crisp mountain air scent weaves with Edward's cut grass scent. Heat from both of their bodies envelops me, sinks into my blood.

"Shh," Edward croons, "you're safe with us."

I know.

Baron runs his fingers through my hair and I shiver. I hunch my shoulders, try to swallow down the sobs, and finally...finally...manage to turn down the waterworks.

"Better?" Baron whispers.

I nod.

"Sure?" Edward asks. "If you want, we could punch each other?"

"Wha—?" I stare up at him from under my spiky eyelashes. "Why would you do that?"

"To distract you, so you'd stop crying?"

"Like that would work?" I sniffle.

He stares at me and I hiccough. "Fine, fine," I mumble. "Be like that."

"You feeling better, Ava?" Baron peers into my face, "I think we need to get your face looked at."

"I'm fine," I mutter. "Just get me some aspirin for my headache and I'll be as good as new. Speaking of," I glance around us, "where's my bag, and my phone? I think I may have dropped them earlier."

Baron pivots, walks around the space. He pulls out his phone, shines the light close to the ground. "There." He picks up my bag, then spots my phone not far from it. He returns and hands both items over.

"Thanks," I mutter.

"There's water in the car," Edward tells him.

At Baron's nod, he turns, and they make their way to Baron's SUV.

He unlocks the car, opens the back and Edward lowers me onto the seat. He straightens and I grab his hand, "Thanks, Ed."

His features soften. "Anytime." He rubs his knuckles across my unhurt cheek, then straightens.

Baron comes around the other side, and slides into the back seat, next to me. Edward gets into the driver's seat, holds out his hand for the keys.

"You promise you'll treat her with respect?" Baron scowls at Ed.

Her? I glance between them. Who are they talking about?

Edward glares back at Baron in the rearview mirror, "Stop fussing."

"Not until you promise."

"Jeez." Edward cracks his neck, and Baron's scowl deepens. "Fine, fine." Edward blows out a breath, "I solemnly swear that I will drive Scarlet O'Cara with the due respect that she deserves."

I blink, "Did you just say Scarlet O'Cara?"

"That's what Baron calls his car." Edward smirks.

I lean my aching head against the side of the car. "You named your car after a fictional character?"

"Not just any celebrity." Baron frowns "It's Scarlet."

"A character."

"So?" He shifts uncomfortably.

"So...nothing." I stab my tongue into the inside of my cheek.

Baron holds up the key fob and Edward snatches it. He slams the door shut, then pauses.

"The bill for the dinner?" he asks.

Baron nods at his phone, "Just emailing the manager to take care of it."

"You also need to text Archer so he doesn't wait for me," I remind him.

"Already done." He flashes me a smile and my heart lurches. Shit, I am definitely a goner. And more confused than ever. My body doesn't seem to be able to differentiate between these two men. Neither does my mind. And my heart? What about my heart?

Edward glances about the space, then snatches the bottle of water from its receptacle and hands it over to me. I accept it, dig out the aspirin from my bag and swallow it.

"You okay?" Ed asks as I cap the bottle and stow it below the window.

"Yeah." I lean my forehead against the car window. "Thanks for taking care of me."

"You don't have to thank me, Ava. You know that, right?" Our gazes catch, hold.

Despite my befuddled state, heat flushes my skin. I swallow. "I know," I whisper.

Baron pockets his phone. Then reaches over and tucks me into his side. "How's your face?"

"It hurts," I whine.

"Let's stop at a supermarket and get some ice for her," Baron tells Edward, who nods. He sets the car in motion. I slide down, place my head in Baron's lap.

He runs his fingers through my hair and my eyes close. The next thing I know, something cold touches my swollen cheek. I sigh in relief as the throbbing instantly recedes. I hear the guys speaking in a low tones, as the movement of the vehicle rocks me to sleep again.

When I wake up next, it's to find that I am being carried into a house. "Where are we?" I yawn.

"At Edward's place," Baron answers.

"Edward has his own place?" I yawn so widely that my jaw cracks.

"I do now," Edward replies.

I am aware of being carried by Baron into a bedroom. Edward pulls back the sheets. Baron places me on the bed, removes my shoes, and then pulls the duvet to under my chin.

"Sleep." He bends to kiss my forehead. I am aware of another soft touch to the top of my head, and sleep, once more, overcomes me.

When I wake up next, I am alone. Light floods in through the crack between the curtains of the window. I sit up and every part of me feels sore, but I feel rested. I touch my face and it doesn't hurt as much. I push off the covers, swing my legs over the side. That's when I notice the glass of water and a bottle of ibuprofen next to it. Guess the guys must have left it for me. I swallow down a couple of tablets with the water, then walk into the bathroom. I shower, and brush my teeth with the toothbrush and paste I find; spot a bathrobe, and not wanting to wear the clothes from last night, slip it on, then gather my clothes. I'll have to look for a washing machine, I guess.

I bundle my clothes under my arm, walk out of the bedroom. The landing is square-shaped with two other rooms leading off from it. I peek into one, find it empty; so is the other. I walk down the steps to the ground floor and the smell of coffee greets me. The low murmur of voices draws me and I head toward it. When I reach the kitchen, I pause. The scent of coffee and food reaches me. How long have these guys been up? I peek inside to find Baron and Edward seated at the dining table. The plates in front of them indicate the remnants of their breakfast.

"Why would they do this?" Baron growls, "Why are they targeting her?"

"Fuck, if I know." Edward rubs the back of his neck. "The only reason I can think of is—"

He exchanges a glance with Baron, who blows out a breath. "Us," Baron declares. "Fucking hell. I should have been more careful. I returned to town, led them straight to her."

"I am as much to blame," Edward rumbles. "I should have realized that being seen with her would draw their attention straight to her."

"Whose attention?" Both men turn to glance at me.

20

Ava

I walk into the room and their gazes track me. Baron pushes back his chair, then walks over to meet me half way. "How are you doing?" He pinches my chin, turns my face this way, then the other. "The swelling is almost gone."

"It doesn't hurt anymore," I confirm.

He glances down at the clothes I am carrying, "Do you want those washed?"

I nod. He reaches down to take them from me.

"They're dirty," I protest.

He shoots me a glance and I shut up. He tugs the clothes from me, shoves the bundle under his arm, then turns and pulls out a chair for me. I slide in and he pushes the chair forward, "I'll get you coffee." He kisses the top of my head, then heads off for a side door that I assume leads to a laundry room. I turn to find Edward staring at me.

"What?" I murmur.

"You two look good together."

My cheeks heat "Yeah, well...guess we did spend some time together."

"More than what you and I spent together." He nods, then pushes his cup of coffee toward me, "Take a sip."

"Baron's getting me a fresh cup."

"Go on," he urges me, "you look like you need your dose of caffeine."

I smile my thanks and take a sip of the coffee, then make a face. "It's black."

"It's coffee."

"It's bitter." I grimace

"It's coffee, woman." He laughs, then takes a sip, "Hot as sin and as black as my heart."

"You don't have a black heart, Ed."

He peers into the depths of the mug, "Somehow I don't think the One Above will agree to that."

"Are you upset that you left the Church?"

"No," he says at once, "I don't regret it one bit. You know, I'd do it all over again if it meant I could have you."

"Oh, Ed." I lean forward, place my hand on his, "I never wanted you to give up what was clearly such a big part of your life."

"You didn't force me to do anything, Ava." He glances up, meeting my gaze, "It was a long time coming. You were merely the spark that triggered what I should have done a long time ago."

"Were you that unhappy in the priesthood?"

"Not unhappy." He rubs the back of his neck. "Incomplete. Then I saw you and knew my life had changed forever. That I'd never be whole, not until I had you in my life."

I glance away. "Ed, please."

"No pressure, Eve." He chuckles but his voice is serious, "You take your time deciding, honestly."

I peer at him from under my eyelashes, "Are you sure about that, Ed?"

"Of course." He turns his hand face up, so our palms kiss. Goosebumps pop on my skin. Heat radiates out from the point of contact, and arrows straight to the space between my legs. I swallow and my throat feels too dry. He leans forward in his chair and his bare feet brush mine. Heat from his body flows over me, surrounds me, engulfs me. My thighs clench. His amber eyes flare and he closes the distance between us, places his lips right in front of mine. His nose bumps mine and we share breath. I part my lips and he tilts his head. When Baron opens the door that leads in from the laundry room into the kitchen, I spring back, my cheeks heating. I glance at Baron who watches us carefully.

"I didn't." I swallow. "We didn't... I mean." I stumble over the words. Oh hell, I didn't do anything wrong, so why the hell do I feel this guilty? "Baron, it's not what it seems like," I insist.

"It's okay, Ava," Baron says, his voice casual, "I understand."

"You do?"

He nods, "We had a talk, Ed and I, when you were asleep."

"You did?" I frown, glance between them. "What did you guys speak about?"

"You," Ed grins back, his tone lazy, "of course."

"Of course." I fold my arms in my lap, "And what was it that you guys discussed?"

"The terms of how we're going to stay here."

"Stay here?" I glance around the space, "Not that I have any complaints with it or anything... It's a nice house, but I need to get back."

"You're not." Baron pours out a cup of coffee, adds in three spoonfuls of sugar, plops in a drop of milk. He stirs it, then brings it over to me, along with a plate of food which he places in front of me.

I glance at the baked beans, hash browns, fried tomatoes and mushrooms, along with the thick slices of toast. Of course, he remembers that I am vegetarian. He's always one step ahead of me.

I dig into the food, am half way through the contents of my plate before I look up. Both of them are watching me with varying degrees of amusement.

"What?" I mumble as I chew on the hash browns, which have been cooked perfectly, by the way, something which I've never managed to get right. "Why are you two staring?" I scowl.

"You've got...something..." Edward leans forward and scoops up some food from the side of my mouth. He brings his finger to his mouth and licks it off.

Heat sears my skin. My toes curl. Shit, one gesture from him and I am putty. I place my fork down, reach for my coffee and take a sip. I can't stop the smile that curves my lips, "Just how I like it."

"You're welcome." Baron smirks.

"Doesn't change the fact that I need to return to my place. My classes are going to start in..." I glance around, can't spot a clock that indicates the time, "What time is it?"

Edward glances at his watch, "It's 10 am."

"In three hours." I take another sip of the coffee, place the cup down. "In fact, I need to be getting back right away."

I stand up, glance between them, "Which of you two gentleman is going to drive me back?"

They glare at each other. A look passes between them, then Baron turns to me, "You're not going anywhere Ava."

"What do you mean?" I laugh, "Of course, I am."

"Even if one of us were to drive you, which we are not," Edward tips his chin up, "we wouldn't reach your place in three hours."

"How far can we be from my place?"

"Have you taken a look outside?" Edward nods toward the window.

I walk around the table, to the kitchen window, and peer outside. Greenery stretches out as far as I can see, which is not unusual in London. There are parts of the city in the outer zones which stretch into the country side, unless... "Where are we?" I turn to glance between them, "We're not in London, are we?"

"Half way to Scotland." Baron replies.

"What?" I blink, "What the hell are you guys talking about?"

"We drove through the night, got here around two in the morning."

"Which is where, exactly?"

"Somewhere in the Lake District," Edward murmurs.

"And you're not going to tell me exactly where?"

Both men shake their heads.

The beginnings of anger twist my guts. "And why is that?"

They exchange another of those looks that makes me feel like they are in on something...and I am not, which honestly, is damn annoying.

"Well?" I tap my toes on the floor? "Why is it that you won't tell me where we are?" I prompt.

"So, you don't call anyone to come get you," Baron finally says.

"Ha!" I blow out a breath, "If you think, that's going to stop me from getting out of here, you have another think coming."

I march back up to my room, glance around the space, but there's no sign of my purse with my phone. Heat flushes my skin. What the hell are these two guys playing at? I stomp downstairs, back into the kitchen, to find both of them sitting where I had left them.

"Where are my bag and my phone?"

"Why don't you sit down first?" Baron gestures to the seat, "And we can talk about our plan."

"I want my phone first, and my things."

"We'll get you another phone." Edward glances at me.

I firm my lips, "I want my phone."

"It may be bugged." Baron explains.

"Bugged?" I stare. "I don't understand."

"We figured it's not a coincidence that you were attacked three times. Each time, you were alone," Edward replies. "The only way they'd have tracked you was if they knew where you were and when you were at the most vulnerable."

"Who do you think is tracking me?" I blink. "Who are you talking about?"

"We think," Baron leans forward in his seat, "the Mafia is tracking you."

"The Mafia?" I open and shut my mouth, "What are you guys talking about?"

"Why don't you sit down, Eve?" Baron gestures to a chair. "Please, give us a chance to explain things."

I walk over to the chair, sink into it. "The Mafia?" I repeat. "What do I have to do with the Mafia?"

"Nothing," Edward raises his shoulders, "and everything."

"Cut the crap, Ed." I scowl at him. "Seriously, what's going on here?"

"The Mafia are the ones behind the incident," Baron offers. "They kidnapped us, held us for ransom—"

"Except for Sinclair, that is, whose parents didn't have much money to begin with," Edward adds.

"They took him by mistake," Baron clarifies, "but that's beside the point. They abducted us. Our parents paid the ransom, and the cops found us—"

"Though by then, the damage had been done." Edward's lips twist. "Since then, the Seven of us have tried to track down the perpetrators."

"And apparently, we are getting close, because they are trying to get to you." Baron adds.

"Why would they do that?" I place my elbows on the table. "Why do they want to hurt me?"

"As a means of using you to get to us," Baron points between himself and Edward. "We think they are trying to send us a signal to back off."

"Which only reinforces our suspicion that we are getting close to finding out the real identity of who the kidnapper was," Edward adds.

"How do you know it's the Mafia who attempted to hurt me?" I frown.

"The man Edward shot; he had tattoos that identified him as one of them," Baron replies, "and the man he tried to kill earlier—"

"Hold on, he tried to kill someone?" I stare at Edward, "You tried to kill someone?"

Edward's jaw hardens. "He was responsible for getting us kidnapped. When I found that out," he tightens his fingers round the handle of his mug, "I couldn't hold back. He is responsible for everything that happened to the Seven of us. Do you understand?"

"Still," I swallow, "you tried to kill him, Ed."

"He didn't die," Baron reasons.

"That's not the point." I take in Edward's features, his amber eyes currently filled with an emotion that I can't quite place, those high cheekbones, the pouty lower lip... So familiar, and yet, not. He's changed so much since I met him. He's the same, and yet... He's not. I am not sure what to make of him. A dull pounding starts at my temples. My face feels numb. Maybe I'm not over last night's attack either. I mean, a girl can only take so much.

"So basically, you guys brought me here to ensure that you could watch over me, keep me safe until you know the danger has been averted?"

Baron and Edward stare at each other, then at me.

"Yes," Edward says, "We thought it best to get you here right away. We didn't want to risk going to your place, in case it tipped off anyone."

"My classes—?"

"I've arranged to email the students that you are taking a temporary leave of absence." Baron explains.

And when I get back, I'll have to likely start from square one, because, well, students of dance are not necessarily the most loyal. My shoulders slump. "And my clothes—?"

"I've asked Archer to arrange for a few changes of clothing to be delivered here." Edward replies.

"A few changes?" I tip up my chin, "Exactly how long do you expect us to stay here?"

"Until the danger blows over." Edward tilts his head.

"And both of you will stay here with me?"

They both nod.

"Also," Edward folds his arms across his chest, "you can fuck either one of us, at any time."

I choke on my sip of coffee. "Wha—" I gape at him. "Excuse me?" I sputter, "Wha...what do you mean by that?"

"Exactly that," Baron murmurs. "We realized it's not right to put you under any more constraints, especially after everything that you have been through."

"We thought it best to keep things simple, so if you want shag either one of us, you can do so," Edward adds.

"So, let me get this right." I narrow my gaze on Ed. "If I sleep with Baron, you'll be fine?"

Edward's jaw hardens, but he nods.

I turn to Baron, "And if I slept with Ed, you'd be okay?"

A vein pops at Baron's temple, "I have to be." He squares his shoulders, "It's the best way for us to see this thing through."

"And neither of you thought of asking me how I felt about it?"

Edward shuffles his feet, "Look, Ava, all we're saying is, we'll just act normal and if, at any point, you feel the desire to...shag one of us, the other one won't get in the way."

"How generous of you." I roll my eyes. "So, what you're saying is, if I get an itch, I should not hold back?"

Baron's jaw tics. "Let's just keep things natural, and allow them to progress organically." He rubs the back of his neck. "I realize how strange all of this sounds, but we've discussed it and believe that this is the best way forward."

We've discussed it. I stare between them and bite back the multiple sarcastic responses that stampede through my head.

Edward continues, "This way, there is no pressure on you, and there are no artificial conditions imposed on the situation. At the same time, if the situation arises where you want to sleep with one of us, then you can do so with a clear conscience."

I am literally speechless. This situation is completely insane. Seriously, the two of them talking about how we are going to stay in this place as fuck buddies, then negotiating the terms of how I am supposed to sleep with either of them if...when I feel like it...? Shit, this is going to be one cozy party... Not. Tiredness drags at my limbs. The headache at my temples intensifies. "I am not feeling well," I murmur. "I rise to my feet and both men get up as well."

"I am fine." I wave them off, "Really, I think I just need some rest."

"You need to finish your breakfast." Edward frowns.

My stomach churns. "No more food," I whisper.

I turn and my knees threaten to give way, but Baron is already there. He scoops me up in his arms.

"I can walk," I protest.

"I am taking you to bed." I sense him exchange a glance with Edward, who doesn't say anything. Turning, Baron walks out of the kitchen and up to my bedroom. He places me on the floor next to the bed. I shrug off the bathrobe, and Baron averts his eyes. I blink. Whoa, what the—? Did he just glance away to give me some privacy since I am not wearing anything under the bathrobe? That is some un-Baron-like behavior.

I slide under the covers. He tucks me in, then bends to kiss my forehead. I tip up my chin so our lips almost brush. At the last second, he turns his head and kisses my cheek.

"Wha—?" I frown, "Why did you do that?"

"You need to sleep, babe." His lips quirk, but his eyes are serious, "Get some rest; we'll talk when you feel better."

He turns to leave and my eyelids flutter down. Sleep pulls me under.

The sound of footsteps grows closer. I glance over my shoulder, but there's no one there. I increase my pace, reach the entrance to the subway, and hesitate. Do I want to walk in there? It's so dark. Just then, thunder flashes overhead, followed closely behind by raindrops. Within moments, they plaster my clothes to my shoulders. Shit. I step inside the subway and the rain cuts out. Cold grips me and I shiver. Goosebumps pop on my skin. I walk into the narrow passageway. The darkness deepens. I half turn, hesitate, then push forward, increasing my pace. I continue walking. Footsteps sound again behind me. I turn and cry out. There's a man silhouetted at the entrance. His shoulders fill the space. No, no, no. I turn, race for the exit. Another man steps up to block the way. He's so tall, so big. He widens his stance, slaps his palms on his hips. My heart begins to race, my pulse pounding at my temples. Sweat beads my palms and I wipe them on my dress. Behind me, the footsteps grow closer. I turn to find the first man is closer. Fear bubbles up; my arms and legs tremble. I turn away, only to find the second man is moving toward me. "No, please, no." My voice echoes in the space. I stumble back, trying to put space between me and the two men who walk toward me. My back hits the wall. The first man moves closer.

"What's wrong, Ava?" Baron frowns. "We won't hurt you."

"Baron?" I swallow, "Is it really you?"

"Of course, Sweetheart, who else would it be?"

"Don't call her, Sweetheart," The second man draws abreast. His golden eyes glow, almost cat-like in the darkness. "She's not yours; she's mine."

Baron's jaw hardens. He pivots, grabs Edward by the shoulder, "She was never yours to begin with. She belongs to me, you hear me?" Baron throws a punch.

"She's mine," Edward blocks him.

"Mine," Baron growls. He raises his fist, sinks it in Edward's side.

"Mine." Edward lurches back, shaking his head to clear it. "I am going to rearrange your face." He leans forward on the balls of his feet, when I step between them.

"Stop it, you two!" I yell. "Stop."

I turn on Ed just as he throws a punch. My head snaps back as pain explodes in my head. I snap my eyes open, breath heaving, pulse pounding at my temples. A dream; it was only a dream.

Sweat drips down my back.

I sit up, shove the covers off and swing my legs over the side of the bed. Reach for the half-full glass of water and down the rest of it. At least, I don't have a headache anymore. Jeez, what was that dream? It seemed so real. Guess the incident from last night traumatized me in more ways than I realized. I need to put an end to this. But how? I glance toward the window, but it's already dark outside. How long did I sleep?

I take another quick shower, then slip into the bathrobe. My clothes must be dry by now. Guess I'd better go get them from the dryer.

I walk into the kitchen and spot a covered plate on the dining table. I walk toward it, find a note:

Eat!

That's all the note says. One word, written in a bossy-ass handwriting, which could belong to either of them. Of course, it's meant for me... They wouldn't dare talk to each other in such an over-the-top, demanding manner. Gah! I uncover the plate, take in the rice and curry on the plate. Whoa, how did they guess I like Indian food? More to the point, how did they manage to procure it here? Does one of them know how to cook? Or did they order it in? The spicy scent teases my nostrils and my stomach rumbles. I walk over to the microwave, heat up the food, then sit down at the dining table and inhale it. Yum. Washing the plate and cutlery, I stow them away, then head through the adjoining door into the laundry room. I pull my clothes from the dryer, glance at the dress, then grimace. It's clean, but torn. Guess I am not going to be able to wear it again. I fold it and place it aside, then walk back through the kitchen.

It's so quiet. I peer up the darkened corridor and see the outline of a closed door at the end, light peeking around the edges, giving it a foreboding air. I guess one of the guys is using it? I turn the other way, head toward a closed door that seems to promise solitude. I push it open, flip on the light beside the door, and gasp.

OMG, it's a studio. An honest-to-god, beautiful studio, with wooden floors, and a mirror that runs the entire length of one wall. The lights in the ceiling emit golden rays that bathe the space. I walk toward my reflection, trail my fingers across the barre in front of the mirror. I glance around, find a table at the far end with a tablet on it. I swipe the surface, and it reveals a playlist... The tracks are all dance songs—dance songs by my favorite artists. Yep, they are all here. The tunes I love dancing to. Who programmed this? And why does Edward have a studio in this place?

I take in the wood on the floor, which is marked from use. Clearly, someone used this studio before...but the playlist... That was programmed for me. The door on the far side rattles. I walk toward it, and find it unlocked. I push it open, step out onto the landing. In the gathering darkness, the countryside stretches out. Lush green and quiet.

"Feeling better?"

I half-scream, turning in the direction of the voice.

21

Ava

The glow of a cigarette lights up the darkness, then a puff of smoke haloes his features.

"Edward?" I frown. "How many cigarettes do you smoke in a day?"

"A pack, maybe more?" He raises a shoulder and I gasp.

"A pack? Seriously, Ed?" I admonish, "These things will kill you."

"But what a sweet death it will be, hmm?" He takes another drag and the fragrant scent of burning tobacco fills the space. "Apparently, when I decided to fall from grace, I took the express." He smirks.

I toss my hair over my shoulder. "Honestly, I never know what to expect from you anymore."

"You and me both." His smile vanishes as he surveys the tip of his cigarette, "I am getting very good at surprising myself as well."

I walk over to him, take the cigarette from him and put it between my lips. I inhale, and instantly, my lungs burn. I cough, tears stream down my cheeks, and he laughs.

Smirking, he snatches the cigarette back and takes a healthy puff... Yeah, okay, so not that healthy. He takes another drag, this time blowing out a smoke circle.

"Why Father—I mean, Mr. Chase, I do believe you are showing off."

His eyebrows knit. "Maybe." His voice grows remote. Shit, what did I do now to piss him off?

"Sorry about the slip of the tongue... I guess, on some level, I still think of you as Father."

"Is it so difficult for you to perceive me as a normal man?" He scowls.

"Yes." I shake my head, "No. I don't know. Perhaps there was always an element of the forbidden about you earlier that attracted me, you know."

"You mean you are no longer attracted to me now?" His frown deepens.

"I didn't say that."

"Are you worried that I am going to lose my temper with you?" he asks softly, "Because I almost killed a man?"

I shake my head truthfully. "It's not that, either. I know I sounded surprised earlier, but that's only because it came out of the blue, to find out what you'd done."

"Then, what is it?" He reaches for the ashtray on the chair next to him and stubs out his cigarette. "Why is it that since I returned, you've held yourself at a distance from me?"

"Distance?" I fold my arms across my chest. "I don't think my behavior with you kept much distance between us."

"You mean my making you come?"

A blush sears my cheeks. Thank God, it's already dark. Hopefully, he didn't spot how fiery my cheeks are right now.

He prowls toward me, his massive shoulders outlined against the inkiness of the night. Heat spools off of his body, slams into my chest. I gulp; my throat dries. He pauses in front of me, the boots on his feet brushing against my bare feet.

"You're not wearing any shoes?" he murmurs.

"I, ah, I was on my way to get my clothes from the dryer."

His amber eyes glow, "So no underclothes either?"

Heat flushes my skin and my stomach flip-flops.

"Answer me, Eve, do you have any underclothes on?" His voice lowers to a hush and I shiver.

"No," I whisper, "I am naked under this bathrobe."

His nostrils flare, "Did you say that purposely to turn me on?"

"Wh-what?" I stutter. "Of course, not. You're the one who started out on this entire train of thought."

"But you're the one who brought it to the surface."

"What, because I said I was naked under—?"

"Shh." He places one thick finger on my lips, "Don't say anything else. Not unless you want me to take this conversation to its logical destination."

His voice is thick with lust. Desire pulses between us. The strength of his dominance pins me down, pushes down on my shoulders. My throat closes. I can't breathe, can't think, can't do anything except stare up into his hard features. His jaw tics and a vein throbs at his temple. "Yes or no, Eve?"

His tone is hard, yet wary. As if he can't predict my response to him anymore. And it's true, in a way, I am not sure myself how to react to him. To what this man gave up for me. How he changed his life completely, to such an extent that I don't know him anymore... And that's a side benefit of this trip, right?

A chance to understand both of them. To find out what makes them tick. To share of myself with them, in the hopes of finding whom I am more compatible with.

"What is it to be, Eve?" he demands. "Yes or no?" The tendons of his throat move as he swallows. Perhaps it's that slight giveaway, the clue that he's not as sure of himself as he portrays himself to be, which propels me to jerk my chin.

His gaze narrows, "Say it aloud, Eve."

"Yes." I clear my throat, "Ye—"

He places his hands on my hips, lifts me up, and I wrap my legs around his waist, the bathrobe parting to reveal what I've tried to keep hidden. He fits his lips over mine and licks the seam. I part my lips and he sweeps his tongue inside. He swipes his tongue across my teeth, closes his mouth over mine and drinks from me. I sense us move, then feel the wall against my back. He thrusts forward, fitting his swollen length that tents his jeans against my melting core. It's so good, so hot, a groan tumbles from my lips. He swallows it, slides his hand down the open neck of my robe. He pinches my nipple and the spot between my legs instantly grows wet... Okay, wetter. He presses kisses down my jawline, to the base of my throat. He nibbles on the pulse there and I can't stop the moan that wells up.

"These little noises you make, Eve..." he growls, "I've missed them. Fuck, I've missed you, baby. So much."

I wrap my arms about his neck, pressing his head down further. He kisses his way down to the valley between my tits, then nips at the curve of my breast. I feel it all the way down to my core. He cups my breast, squeezes, turns his head, and bites on my swollen nipple. Goosebumps flare on my skin. I squeeze my thighs around him, pushing myself into the bulge at his groin.

A growl rumbles from him, "I need to be inside you, Eve."

Yes.

"Say it aloud."

"Yes," I murmur, "Yes, yes—"

He slips his hand between us, thrusts two thick fingers inside my melting channel. Oh, my god! I pant, rolling my head back against the wall. He adds a third finger and I moan. He works his digits in and out of me, in and out, and my entire body shudders. "Edward, oh, my god, Ed."

He kisses his way up my throat, nips on my chin, then closes his mouth over mine again. All the time he's working my pussy, sawing in and out of me, wet, squelching noises filling the space. Heat flushes my skin as I realize that's me... It's my sopping pussy that's causing that filthy sound. And that only turns me on even more. I pant into his mouth, share his breath, as he thrusts his fingers inside of me. He pulls out, only to cram his fingers back in me with such force that my body bucks. The climax crashes over me. I curve my spine, throw my head back and scream... At least, I think I must have, but he absorbs every last sound.

He pulls his fingers out of me. I hear the clink of his belt buckle, the rasp of the zipper being lowered, then he lines himself up with my entrance. He thrusts forward, burying himself inside of me, and I gasp. Too much, too full; there's so much of him. "Edward," I moan, "Ed, pleas—"

"Shh." He stays there, stretching me, throbbing inside of me, allowing me to adjust to his girth. As if that were possible.

"Why do you feel bigger than before?" I whisper. "What have you been doing with yourself?"

"If you mean, did I masturbate while I was away, the answer is no."

"Wait..." I blink. "What? You didn't?"

He shakes his head. "How could I? When all I wanted was to feel your cunt—" he tilts his hips and pushes into me, "gripping my dick." He pulls out, then propels forward, burying himself to the hilt again. I moan. "When all I wanted to hear was the sound of your voice crying out for release." He slides his fingers behind to cup my butt, then drags the tip of his finger against my backhole, "When all I wanted to feel was you writhing against me."

Heat flushes my skin; my belly flip flops. He eases his digit inside my puckered hole. A moan slips from my lips. His dick thickens inside of me and I gasp. I clamp down on his cock and a groan rumbles up his throat.

"You're killing me, Eve."

He begins to fuck me in earnest. In-out-in, he nails me against the wall, and I am helpless, and turned on, and melting inside. I dig my fingers into his broad shoulders, feel the flex of his muscles as he rams into me again and again. His big body shudders, the planes of his back ripple, and hell, if that doesn't turn me on even more. I clench my thighs about his waist. He places his palm behind my head to cushion it, then tilts his hips and lunges forward. He hits a spot deep inside of me, one I didn't even know existed. The climax sweeps out from my core, shudders up my spine. "Ed, I'm—"

"Come with me," he rasps. "Come with me, Eve."

His entire body seems to tremble, then a groan rips from him. His dick pulses inside me and he buries his head in my neck as he shoots warm jets of cum inside me. My climax crashes over me and sparks flutter behind my eyes. I stay there, surrounded by him, engulfed in his masculinity, as the aftershocks grip me. He raises his head, kisses my mouth, my closed eyes, "You, okay?" he murmurs as he holds me close.

I nod, try to open my eyes, but it's like they are weighted down.

"Ed," I force my eyes open, "the studio. Why is there a studio in this space?"

"It's the reason I bought the place."

"I... I don't understand."

"When I was away from you, I knew when I came back, I'd do my best to make things up to you. Sinner helped me reach out to a few real estate agents about the kind of place I wanted to buy. This one just happened to be on the market, and when I read the details, I knew it was perfect.

"Because of the studio?"

"Because I knew you'd love to have a space of your own to work out and dance in." He swallows. "Because I want you to have a space where you can let go...in your own home."

"Oh." I swallow. "You remembered?"

"I remember everything, Eve. How you wrinkle your nose when you're unsure about something. How you move your hips when you dance. How you screw up your eyes when you smile."

"I don't screw up my eyes," I yawn and my eyes water.

He chuckles, "I think I wore you out."

"I'm just recovering from what happened yesterday."

His jaw hardens. "I'll never let anything happen to you, Eve. You have to believe that."

I glance into his amber eyes, and somehow, I believe him. This man... He'd take a bullet for me... Correction, he already took a bullet for me.

"I know." I rub my cheek against his chest. "I believe you, Ed."

He winds his arms around me and the familiar scent of cut grass envelops me. My muscles relax and my eyelids flutter down.

I feel a soft brush against the top of my head, "Sleep, darling, I've got you."

22

Baron

I push away from the desk where I've spent the last few hours working on my investments. I'd taken this room, which had been set up with a desk and a chair, and claimed it as my study. I'd needed a space where I could devote myself to the task of growing my assets.

All these years, I've been happy to coast along. The money that I've made through being a co-owner of 7A investments, along with the rest of the Seven, has been more than sufficient to take care of my needs. I haven't worked a day since I left the army—other than starting a security company with Archer, but I hardly consider that work—and yet, I am a billionaire...

Only, it's not enough now. I want more. I want to make enough to ensure that Ava never lacks for anything. I want to make so much money that my children and their children will have more than enough to have their every wish fulfilled. Some may say that's too much, that ultimately kids need to work for their living so they know the worth of their money, and a part of me agrees. Which is why I've already put a trust in place so the money I make will be held there until they come of age. It will be released to them on their eighteenth, then their twenty-first, twenty-fifth and thirtieth birthdays. Ava and my kids will not only be responsible, but they will also go on to become successful in their own rights. Whatever field they choose, whether it's a creative one like hers or a more finance-driven one like mine, they will shine. They'll be at the top of their game. The envy of everyone else, the—

The floorboards above me creak, and I pause. I glance outside to find that it's completely dark now. Where has the time gone? I glance at the watch on my wrist. It's nearly nine p.m. The last I'd checked in on Ava, she'd been sleeping. I had wanted to wake her up, to feed her, but she'd been sleeping so peacefully, I had held back. Instead, we'd prepared a plate and left it in the kitchen with a note for her. I push away from the desk, rolling my shoulders as I walk out the door. The lights in the kitchen are dim, the food gone; there's no one in the living room either.

Everything is silent, but I swear I heard the sounds of someone moving around upstairs. I take the steps two at a time, reach the landing. I peek into Ava's room, find it's empty. Turning, I head for Edward's room. I glance inside and pause. He's on the far side of the bed, under the covers, his body curled around Ava's. Their shoulders, which is all I can see above the covers, are bare. Clearly, they are naked. His arm is curled about her waist, her head is pillowed on his arm. Their eyes are shut, their breathing even. Guess I heard them come up to bed. Had they fucked before that? While I had been working...they had been working too... Only, on each other.

I curl my fingers at my side. F-u-c-k. The blood pounds at my temples. I grind my teeth so hard that pain tears up my jaw.

It's fine, right? This is what we agreed to. Things could unfold organically... If Ava wanted to shag him...she was entitled to. They'd had each other before I came on the picture. If Edward hadn't called me out of the blue, I might never have met her. In a way, they belonged to each other before I came onto the scene. And in some twisted way, I owe Edward... If it weren't for him, if he hadn't called me, I wouldn't be here today.

I haven't forgotten what he's asked of me... Except, I can't leave. Not yet. Not without giving her a chance to make up her mind. Not without allowing her to get to know me better. This isn't just about what I want or what Edward wants... It's also about her... And maybe it's my greed speaking... Maybe I am being selfish for giving this a little more time, but I can't give up on us, on her... Not yet, not when everything inside me insists that there's still a chance.

And yet, here she is... She chose to go to bed with him.

Fucking hell. I pivot, walk down the stairs to the bar in the corner of the living room. I grab the half-full bottle of whiskey, head for the study. Lift the bottle and take a healthy swig, then another. The liquor burns its way down, hitting my stomach. Warmth tingles out to my extremities. I can still feel though...

Can still sense the softness of her curves as they fill my palms, can scent the sweetness of her arousal as she falls apart under my ministrations, hear her moans as she gives in to her arousal... Fuck! My cock thickens; my groin hardens. I tilt the bottle to my mouth, chug down more of the alcohol. My throat burns as it slides down my gullet. I lower the bottle, walk over to my desk, glance at my laptop, the papers I had worked on. I had mapped out my future, planned how I was going to diversify, where I was going to focus, how I would build a life for us... I had strategized my future with her... Only, I hadn't thought she may not want the same things as me. And clearly, she doesn't. She'd gone to him, hadn't she?

She'd allowed him to fuck her. She'd participated in it, and while I had agreed to this, that she could sleep with both of us while we were here, fuck, if it doesn't bloody hurt. The band around my chest tightens, the blood pounds at my temples, and I swipe out my hand, shove the papers off the desk. My fingers touch the laptop that skids across to the edge, tilts, then falls to the ground with a thud.

A gasp reaches me from the direction of the door. The scent of jasmine infiltrates the space. I stiffen, don't turn around as muted footsteps approach me.

She touches my arm and I stiffen.

"Baron?" she whispers, and the sound of my name on her lips... F-u-c-k. A hot sensation stabs at my chest. My guts twist. I raise the bottle to my lips, take another swig.

"Baron, are you okay?" She grips my arm and I shake off her hold.

"Go away," I say through gritted teeth. "Leave, Ava, or I swear, I won't be responsible for what happens next."

There's silence for a beat, another. Then, "And what if I don't want to?" she whispers. "What if I want to be here?"

"You don't mean it."

"I do," she insists. "I don't want to be anywhere else."

"I saw you with him," I growl. "You didn't seem like you wanted to be any place else."

"And now I am here."

"What do you want, Ava?"

"What do you think?"

"I am past thinking." I grit my teeth. "If I see you now, if I touch you again, I won't be able to back off."

"Maybe I don't want you to back off."

"You don't know what you're saying."

"Don't I?" she murmurs. "Or maybe you are too scared to acknowledge what you'll feel if you see me. It's why you still refuse to look at me. Funny," she chuckles, "I didn't think you were a coward Baron, you—"

I turn and freeze. "Fuck, Ava." I drag my gaze down her features, her plump breasts, her tiny waist, the sweet flesh between her legs with that narrow strip of hair that drives me insane.

"Why the fuck are you naked?" I growl.

"Why do you think?" Her lips tilt up. The minx chuckles. She actually chuckles.

"This is not funny," I growl.

"No," she wipes the smile off of her face, "it isn't."

I chug down more whiskey, wipe the back of my hand across my face. "If you think just because you are naked, I am going to bend you over the desk and rip into your pussy—" I bare my teeth, "you are abso-fucking-lutely, right."

23

Ava

"Oh." I swallow, "OH." Those filthy possessive words send heat racing down my spine.

I'd heard a noise and woken up from my dazed half-slumber to see Baron moving away from the door. I had a vague recollection of Edward carrying me up to his bedroom, and then to the ensuite. There he'd propped me up under the stream of water, then proceeded to wash every inch of my body. I'd barely managed to keep my eyes open as he'd cleaned himself. Then he'd dried me and himself, before carrying me to his bed.

I'd wanted to resist, but I had been so pleasantly tired, and besides, I didn't want to sleep alone. So, when he'd spooned me, I had snuggled into his embrace. I'd enjoyed the heat of his body, the feeling of ownership that his heavy arm around my waist had evoked. That is, until I'd spotted Baron. I'd seen him leaving and I knew he must be upset. Despite the guys insisting that it was fine for me to sleep with either of them, they were both too possessive, too alpha to not get jealous when I was with the other. It's why I had crept out from under Edward's embrace, and followed Baron down to the study. It's also why I hadn't worn any clothes.

Not that I want to seduce him... Ha! Of course, I do. But maybe it's also this sense of mischief rearing its head inside of me.

Could he actually refuse me if I turned up naked in front of him? Would he turn away from me as he had done the last time? Guess I am about to find out.

"Come 'ere." Baron crooks a finger at me.

I hesitate and he glares at me. "Don't defy me, Eve," he rumbles. "Come here, now."

His voice propels me forward. I pause in front of him.

"Good girl." He smirks and that edge of danger in his smile... OMG, he's the original bad boy, all right. He takes another swig from his whiskey bottle, then holds the bottle over my chest and tips it. The scent of woody alcohol deepens and the liquid trickles down my breasts.

He leans in, drags his tongue down the trail. He circles my breast, bites down on my nipple, and I shudder. He follows the stream down to my belly button, swirls his tongue in the hollow. Goosebumps pop on my skin. "Oh," I gasp. "Oh, my."

He laps his way down the slight swell of my belly, across the soft flesh of my pussy.

My thighs clench.

He nips on my engorged clit and my knees seem to give way. I stumble, and he grips my hip, holding me in place. He drops to his knees, buries his nose in my core and inhales. The gesture is so damn erotic. OMG. My nipples pebble and my thighs clench.

Heat explodes up my spine and my belly trembles.

He places the bottle of alcohol on the floor, grips the outside of my thighs. The calluses on his fingers chafe the sensitive skin, and my core clenches. A fat drop of cum slides out from between my pussy lip and he's instantly there. He laps it up, licks his lips, then stares up at me from under hooded eyelashes. "You drive me insane, Ava," he growls. "You taste so fucking sweet that I swear, no dessert will ever compare to the taste of you."

"Baron," I whisper, and he shakes his head.

"Don't talk," he warns. "Not one fucking word out of you, understand?"

I nod.

He lowers his gaze back to my pussy, stares at it. He urges me to part my legs, and heat flushes my cheeks, spreads over my chest. I force myself to watch as he continues to gaze at my flesh like it is the single most important thing in the world. The absolute attention he bestows on me is so hot, so damn sexy. Something hot stabs at my chest. I wriggle my hips, shuffle my feet, and he makes a warning noise at the back of his throat.

The rough sound chafes at my nerve-endings. My breath catches in my throat.

He blows on my heated flesh, and I shiver.

"All the time I was imprisoned behind enemy lines, every single moment that I was tortured, I swore to myself that if I ever got out, I'd live life to the fullest, never regret a single moment. I told myself that I'd fuck every single pussy I could get my dick into. Then I met you." He chuckles, "Turns out, I only wanted one wet hole. One tight, moist space to call my own. Why is it that you feel so much like home, Ava? Why?"

The pressure builds behind my eyes. A teardrop rolls down my cheek as he flicks out his tongue and swipes up from my opening to the swollen nub of my clit.

The rough texture of his tongue, the burn of the alcohol, the heat of his mouth... All of it goes to my head. The world spins. I grab at him, digging my fingers into his hair to steady myself.

He lowers his head, licking me again and again. He swipes his tongue between my pussy lips, swirling that wicked tongue around my clit. He bites down on my swollen core and I swear, I almost come right then. A whine escapes me as he thrusts his tongue inside my melting channel and proceeds to eat me. He weaves his tongue in and out of me, in and out; brings his hand down to grind the heel of his palm into my clit, and the climax sweeps up from my toes.

He pulls away and my orgasm recedes. I'm almost there... Almost. He rises to his feet and I blink. I open my mouth and he shakes his head. He walks around to stand behind me, and I force myself to focus. The heat from his big body pours over me, sinks into my blood. He leans in and his hot breath sears my ear. "Bend over."

"Wh...what?"

"You heard me." He bites the shell of my ear and I shiver. "Bend over the desk, or I'll make you do it."

He steps back.

I gape at him.

He jerks his chin toward the desk, "Go on."

I frown and he clicks his tongue, "Do it. Or do you want me to make you —?" He takes a step forward.

I skitter back, toss my hair over my shoulder. Fine, if he thinks he can coerce me into bending to his will... He is absolutely right. I walk to the desk, lower my head onto my folded arms. Then I have to part my legs to accommodate the angle. Bet the alphahole knew that already.

I turn my head, press my cheek onto my arms. Heat envelops me and I know he's come up to stand behind me. I glance at him over my shoulder.

He shakes his head. "Don't move."

I frown, and he flattens his palm at the small of my back. He applies just enough pressure that I am forced to stay still.

He plants his thigh between mine, kicking my legs apart. Cool air hits the exposed skin between my legs, and I shiver. He palms my butt and a shudder runs up my spine. He drags his fingers up the seam of my pussy and my toes curl. My heartbeat ratchets up. He continues up the valley between my buttocks, playing with my puckered hole.

"Who took you here last Ava?"

I bite down on my lower lip.

"Tell me." His voice lowers to a hush, and damn him, when he uses that tone, I can't refuse him.

"Y-you," I stutter, "you did."

"Good."

I gaze at him from the corner of my eyes, in time to see him spit on his fingers. He slides his digit inside my backhole and I wince.

"Shh," he murmurs, "let me prep you."

"That's what I am afraid of."

"What did you say...?"

"I said—"Oh shit, shit, shit."

He nods.

"What did I say about speaking?"

You told me to shut up, you prick.

"Exactly." He smirks. "And did I tell you how I would punish you for your disobedience?"

I swallow, then shake my head.

"Guess I saved the best for the last, then, didn't I?"

He steps away and to the side, so I can't see him anymore. What the hell? I gulp. What the hell is he up to? I sense him move a second before his palm connects with my backside.

I jump. To be honest, it didn't hurt. It's more my ego that's taking a beating. What the hell is wrong with this man? I crane my neck, and he places his palm again on the small of my back. He holds me down with his hand even as his other palm connects with my backside. The shock of the impact courses through my veins. I yelp, bracing myself as he spans me on one arse cheek, then the next, and again, alternating between the left and right cheeks until my entire backside seems to be aflame.

A trembling courses up my legs and my core clenches. My belly flip-flops and moisture drools from between my legs. I will not allow myself to be turned on, will not. I curl my fingers into fists, dig my heels into the ground as he pauses. He massages my burning butt cheeks with one large palm. The calluses on his fingers chafe against the sensitized flesh. Goosebumps pop on my skin. My thighs clench.

Fuck, fuck, fuck. This is not good. How can I be so aroused by what is, clearly, meant to be a punishment? He's trying to humiliate me, and I like it. Shit, what craziness is this? Where's your ego? Your pride in yourself? All gone... Kaput... Shredded to pieces by the asshole who dips his finger into my pussy. "You're soaking wet, Eve," he rumbles.

No shit, Einstein.

He drags the moisture up to my backhole, smears it around the rim. Scoops up more of my cum and slides his soaked digit inside my puckered hole. He slides his finger in and out of me and pinpricks of heat swirl out from the contact. He adds a second finger and I huff, grip the edge of the desk as he stretches me, preps me.

"Who'd have thought you had a taste for spanking, hmm? Makes me wonder what other secrets you're hiding from me."

As if I am going to tell you. I snicker and he pauses, then drives his fingers in and out of me at an increased pace. My toes curl, my belly clenches, and more moisture pools between my legs. He lowers his face into my line of sight. "I am going to wipe that smile off your face." He smirks. "By the time I am done, you'll remember nothing except my touch, my scent, the feel of my dick owning you, my cock buried deep inside your most forbidden place, you riding me, you coming all over me, you and me, baby, just us, you get me?"

I swallow, hold his gaze. The blue in his eyes deepens to a brilliant azure. Then he straightens. I hear the rasp of his zipper being lowered. The next moment, the crown of his shaft teases my back entrance.

Oh, hell. I draw in a breath and he pauses.

He drags his hand up my back, wraps his finger around the nape of my neck. He bends, placing his cheek next to mine. "Relax," he whispers, "I've got you."

I swallow. It's the same words Edward had told me. Shit, this is getting so very complicated. So bloody complicated, with no solution in sight.

I must have tensed against him, for he drags his hand down the side of my breast, down my hip, and around to strum my pussy lips. He teases my clit and a moan drips from my lips. "Beautiful," he murmurs, "you're fucking beautiful, Ava. If I die, this is the last sound I want to hear. Your voice calling out for me as you give in to the orgasm that I am going to fuck out of you."

He slips his fingers inside my soaking pussy, moving them in and out of me. Heat sizzles out from the contact. I give in to his touch, my muscles relax, and he slips past my sphincter. Too much, too full. I can feel him all the way inside of me. I gasp and sweat beads my brow as he straightens. I sense his gaze sweep down my back, to where we are connected. "If you could only see yourself Eve," he growls, "you're the fucking hottest thing I have ever laid eyes on." He pulls back, then slips inside again and a groan tumbles from my lips. "F-u-c-k," he growls, bending over me. The heat from his big body surrounds me, cocoons me, cajoles me into parting my legs wider, allowing him to slip even further inside as he increases the pace at which he finger-fucks me. My entire body bucks, and his grip on my neck tightens. His fingers are long enough to wrap around my throat, impeding the flow of air. He pulls out again, then propels forward, burying himself inside me with such force, the entire desk shudders. He speeds up, thrusting his fingers in and out of me, even as he fucks my arse.

I try to draw in a breath, but my lungs burn and spots of black dot the edges of my vision. He thrusts into me, hits a spot deep inside, at the same time as he curves his fingers inside my channel. The climax whispers out from my womb, swoops up my spine. He releases the hold on my neck and orders, "Come."

Instantly, the orgasm roars forward, crashes behind my eyes. Floating. Darkness. Peace. When I open my eyes, I find him staring into my face.

I hold his gaze, bring a finger up to touch his mouth. "Kiss me?" I rasp. My throat hurts. Did I scream? I must have. It's the only reason I can imagine my throat feels so raw, right?

He brushes his lips across mine once, twice. So sweet. My eyelids flutter down as he straightens, pulling out of me. He hauls me up and into his arms as I yawn widely.

"You need to eat," he mutters, and I shake my head.

"Sleep... I need to sleep." I yawn again and my jaw cracks.

He chuckles, then pulls me close. I curl into his chest, closing my eyes.

I fall into a deep sleep, and when I open my eyes, I am in bed. I stare at the broad back, the dark hair, the tattoo of the snake crawling up his back and know the man I am staring at is Edward. I try to turn and find I can't move. Glance down to find a thick arm around my waist. Follow the corded muscles up to find Baron is behind me... He's spooning me. I swallow. I am in bed with both of them? Is that good? Not like I am trying to hide from one what I'm doing with the other, right? Shouldn't it be easier like this...? So why do I feel uncomfortable, like I've been caught doing something wrong?

How did I get here anyway? I frown. I fell asleep in Baron's arms. And he carried me up here to Edward's bed? Why the hell would he do that? Does he want to cause a massive disagreement, or what? I try to push his hand off of me, but of course, it's too heavy. Bloody hell. There's movement next to me. The hair on the nape of my neck prickles. I glance up to meet Edward's amber gaze.

24

Edward

I take in her flushed features, her sleepy gaze, her thick hair flowing about her shoulders. Gorgeous, beautiful, a vision to wake up to every day. She bites her lower lip and I feel the tug all the way to the tip of my dick. She shifts her shoulders; I drag my gaze down to where the covers are pulled up to the tops of her creamy breasts. I reach out, tug on the sheet, which slips down to catch on her nipple. I trace the outline of the swollen bud, and her breath catches in her chest.

I raise my gaze to hers. "Good morning," I whisper, "how did you sleep?"

"Good." She swallows. Her hand jerks, as she traces a path down the forearm of the man sleeping on her other side. "I... I can explain Ed." She gulps, "It's just... I um, woke up and, well—"

"Shh," I touch my finger to her lips, "are you hungry?"

"Hungry?" She blinks.

"Breakfast?" I tilt my head, "I could make you my special?"

"Your special?" She opens and shuts her mouth.

Guess I've surprised her with my calm acceptance of the three of us being in the same bed. Hell, if I hadn't surprised myself with my lack of outburst at having woken up last night to find the two of them in my bed. Maybe I'd been too tired, maybe I was just tired of fighting, or maybe they had looked so peaceful sleeping curled around each other in my bed, that I hadn't had the heart to wake either of them. For a moment, my mind had drifted back to when Baron and I were kids, fighting over our favorite toys, learning to take turns, and having sleepovers. Ah, the innocence of youth. I'll never admit it, but I swear, I think I almost felt like it was supposed to be this way. Like we could have had this easy peace between us, if not for the incident.

So, I had contented myself with wrapping my arm around her and falling asleep. I had woken up to the most gorgeous sight ever. Of her in my bed, her face turned toward me, the sheet poised low on her breasts, barely covering her nipples. I'd give anything to wake up to that sight every day. My heart stutters in my chest, as I hold her gaze, "You do eat eggs don't you?"

She nods.

"Good." I throw back my end of the covers, swing my legs over and stand; reach for my sweat pants and shrug into them. When I turn, I find her gaze fixed on me. I drag my fingers down my chest and her breath hitches. I slide my hand toward the waistband and she jerks her gaze up to mine.

I smirk.

She scowls. "Jerk," she mouths the word without heat.

"Your jerk," I whisper back.

She opens her mouth, and I raise a finger to my lips. I glance at the slumbering Baron next to her, then jerk my head toward the door. "Come on," I say in a low voice, "let's not awaken Sleeping Beauty here."

Inch by inch, she slides out from under his arm. Baron stirs in his sleep and we both freeze.

He was a soldier and I'd have expected him to wake up with all this movement around him, but instead, he slumbers on. Maybe he's more tired than usual?

Maybe it's the fact that he slept with her that exhausted him, and sated him? I set my jaw, watch as she scoots all the way over to the end of my bed. Then she swings her legs over the side, glancing around for something to wear. I grab my T-shirt and hand it to her. As she shrugs into it, I walk over to the closet, pull out a pair of my boxer briefs, and return with them. She slips into them and they hang around her hips. The t-shirt dwarfs her. It reaches almost down to her knees and covers the boxers completely, but it'll have to do for now. I walk out of the bedroom and she follows me. I wait for her to precede me, carefully shut the door behind us, then follow her down to the kitchen. She switches on the coffee maker while I pull out the ingredients needed for making pancakes.

"I do eat milk, butter and cheese, as well; and fish," she ventures. "I guess I am a fake vegetarian."

"When did you give up meat?"

"When I was thirteen, I saw a documentary on how livestock are butchered to provide meat, and that was that." She shudders. "I gave up not only meat, but also fish and all animal products, but it was exhausting." She sighs. "Our society is so geared toward animal products... Sometimes I think there is a larger conspiracy at play. Big corporations want to rule our dining tables and dictate our eating choices. I resisted for as long as I could."

"You did well," I mutter as I crack the eggs and whip up the pancake mixture, "Looking at you, though, I'd have never guessed how ecologically and politically conscious you are."

"Why, because I am a belly dancer?" She frowns. "So, of course, I shouldn't have a single original thought in my head?"

"Hold on, spitfire," I say lightly, "you know that's not what I meant."

"Hmm," she purses her lips, "then what did you mean?"

I toss some butter onto the hot skillet, then turn to her, "Just that there's more to you than meets the eye and I, for one, can't wait to unpeel all the layers and get to know your deepest, darkest desires."

She draws in a sharp breath. "Edward," she shakes her head, "sometimes you...you..."

"Impress you?"

"Shock me."

"But you still find me irresistible."

"Whatever," she mutters.

"The sassy Eve, at a loss for words?" I smirk. "That's a first."

"The alphahole, whipping up a meal, in the hopes that he'll get into my pants?" She sticks out her tongue at me and I fix my gaze on her luscious mouth.

"Keep that up and I promise I'll bend you over the table right now and..."

The sound of someone clearing their throat reaches me. I glance up to find Baron in the doorway. He takes in the scene, winks at me—bastard, then saunters over to the table. He bends his head, kisses Eve on the lips. "Good morning, beautiful," he rumbles.

Her cheeks tinge pink. Fucking adorable. She glances at me, then at Baron, who wanders over to get three cups from the shelf; then he proceeds to pour coffee into them. He slides a cup over to me, then doctors one of the remaining two with sugar and cream, before walking over to the dining table. He hands a cup to Ava, places one at the setting next to her, before turning back to pull out plates and other utensils.

I turn back to the pancakes, pour the batter over the sizzling butter in the skillet. Behind me, I hear Baron bustling around as he sets the table.

By the time I walk to the table with a stack of pancakes, he's set three places, and also placed other condiments on the table. I plate out the pancakes, seat myself.

"Can you please pass me the maple syrup?" Ava murmurs.

Baron slides the bottle over to her, as I pour honey over the stack on my plate.

"This place is certainly well-stocked," she muses. "How did you manage to get a hold of all this?" She gestures to the table.

"When I realized that the Mafia was targeting you, I mentioned to Baron the possibility of using this place as a hideaway."

"You did?"

I nod, "We both agreed that the only way to keep you safe would be to bring you here until the danger had passed."

"That's when I reached out to Archer and had the place stocked up," Baron adds.

"Hang on," she scowls, "so you guys have been planning this for a while?"

"Just over the last week." I raise a shoulder.

"And I thought you two didn't get along?"

"Oh, we don't." I glare at Baron, who scowls back. "But when it comes to your safety, we agreed that we won't compromise."

"It's annoying how the two of you gang up on me when it suits you." She rakes her hair back from her face.

"Only because the one thing we both agree on is that we'd do anything to keep you safe," I offer

She snorts, then glances between us, "And that includes cooking up an elaborate dinner?"

Baron frowns. "You mean yesterday's Indian food?" He jerks his chin at Edward, "That was all him."

She narrows her gaze on me, "Really? You cooked yesterday's dinner?"

"Are you doubting my talents?"

She purses her lips.

"You don't think I could whip up a lavish Indian meal for you?"

"Well," she blinks, "I mean—"

"Relax." I smirk. "I had a chef cook meals and freeze them for us."

"You did?"

"Of course, not." I grin. "I didn't have enough time for that, but I did ask Archer to stock up on a bunch of frozen lunches and dinners. All of the best quality, of course."

"Of course," she echoes. "So, all that time, when the three of us were discussing the best way forward, while I was trying to be fair to both of you, you two were secretly plotting a way to get me here?"

She scowls at me and I raise my hands, "And we were right in having a plan."

"After that third attack, it was clear that you need to be protected until we track down the remaining two guys who came after you in the subway," Baron reminds her.

She shivers, folds her arms around herself.

"I don't mean to bring this up to scare you, Eve." I lean forward and take her hand between mine. "It's just, we want to make sure you understand how serious this threat is. Which is why," I gesture to the space around us, "we brought you here."

She blows out a breath. "I understand. I really do." She glances between us. "I just wish I, at least, had a phone. My father's getting married tomorrow, and uh, he wanted me to be there. If I can't make it, I should, at least, let him know."

"Do you want to go to his wedding?" I hold her gaze. "Do you, Eve?"

She swallows, then glances away.

"If you did..." Baron tilts his head, "If you did, we'd make it happen."

She bites down on her lower lip. "To be fair, I'm not sure." She shakes her head. "It's only been six months since my mother died and while she, apparently, approved of the woman he's chosen to marry, I don't know." She shakes her head, "It's too soon. I mean, my parents were married for twenty-five years. They had me and my sister. It's not like it was some fly-by-night relationship, you know. They had a wonderful marriage, a close family... And then, just like that..." she snaps her finger, "she fell sick one day and was gone in a few months." A tear rolls down her cheek, "It was terrible."

I push back my seat, walk around and put my arms around her. "I am so sorry, Eve."

"And now he's getting remarried." She wipes the tears from her cheek. "I can't believe he's replacing her so quickly."

"Maybe she wanted him to marry?" Baron offers. "She'd have wanted him to be happy, right?"

"That's what he claims." Ava sniffles and my heart seems to break.

"Don't cry, babe. If you want to go and see him..."

"I do want to see him," she says in a fierce voice. "It's what my Mum would have wanted."

"If you want to go, we'll take you." I meet Baron's gaze over her head.

"It's dangerous," he cautions. "We'd be revealing our whereabouts."

"Not if we are careful."

"However, as many precautions as we may take, there's nothing stopping anyone from spotting us, then tracking us back here."

"We'll be very cautious."

He blows out a breath. "Is this important to you, Ava?" he murmurs. "Do you definitely want to go?"

"My father and my sister will never forgive me if I don't turn up." She smiles, then adds, "Also, Isla is organizing the wedding and she won't be very happy if I didn't turn up for it."

"Right." Baron scowls at me.

"Right." I jerk my chin at him.

"Where are they getting married?" Baron finally asks.

"In Windermere," she replies.

"That's the next town over," I offer.

"It is?" Ava's face brightens. "That means we can get there and back really quickly, right?"

"It's a forty-five-minute drive, at the most," Baron interjects.

Both of us turn to him.

"We can't stay too late." He raises a shoulder, and Ava's face breaks into a smile. She holds out her hand. Baron glances at it, then back at her. "You also can't leave my and Edward's side."

"I promise." Her grin widens. "Now, will you take my hand, you stubborn man?"

He grabs her palm, kisses the back of her hand. "You sure there's space for two more people?"

25

"I LOVE my dad so much. I mean, I never really talk about him. I normally just talk about my mum, and leave my dad out. But that isn't fair because I love him... Obviously, because he's my dad. I'm lucky to have him as a dad, anyway. Plus, he bought me clothes yesterday! What a lovely, generous man! And omg, I desperately want these shoes that I saw... If I tell him, do you think he'll buy them for me? No, I am not a brat, really I am not..."

– From Ava's Diary

Ava

I glance at the suited man driving the SUV. Baron's broad shoulders are encased in a black jacket. He'd refused to wear a tie and his shirt buttons are open to reveal the demarcation between his pecs. That stubborn lock of hair falls over his forehead and his jaw is hard as he focuses on the road ahead. He looks delicious, and sexy, and so damn hot. My stomach flip-flops and my thighs clench. Being with him would have already made me the envy of every single person at the wedding...

Then, add in the man riding shotgun with him. In his dark jacket and yellow tie that picks out the golden flares in his eyes, Edward is the epitome of suave masculinity. His shoulders are as broad as Baron's, while the rest of him is leaner, which still means that he's a big guy, with his muscled physique, broad chest, tapered waist and those powerful thighs currently clad in what are, surely, tailor-made pants.

After we'd spoken yesterday, the guys had had Archer drop by with their clothes and a suitcase full of garments. Baron had compromised and allowed me to use his phone—which was, apparently, secure—to call Isla to tell her that Archer was on his way. Of course, she had been curious about where I was, and I told her I couldn't reveal my location, which had prompted a flurry of questions. To which I'd said that I would tell her more when I met her at the wedding.

At least, I was able to give her instructions on the clothes she had to pack for me, which included this dress. Made of layered silk, with a modest neckline and a back that dips almost to the cleft of my butt, the pale pink dress coordinates beautifully with my burgundy shawl. Paired with matching lipstick, the combination is both sexy, as well as modest enough, to not steal attention from the bride. Not that it matters. I wouldn't care, either way. I'm not there for Lina. I am there purely to support my dad. I don't want to disappoint my family; that's all.

"You, okay?" Edward meets my gaze in the mirror. "You've been awfully quiet."

"I'm nervous."

Which is true... I am walking in with two men, and don't exactly want to be questioned about why I am there with both of them.

"You worried about raising eyebrows?" Baron asks me. Typical Baron. Never one to mince words, he always puts out there the stuff that others hesitate to say aloud.

"I suppose," I finally concede. "It's not every day that a woman walks into a social occasion with not one, but two gorgeous men, who are, obviously, not gay."

Baron snorts.

Edward arches an eyebrow. "Are you really that worried about being seen with both of us?"

"Yes?" I raise a shoulder. "No. I don't know. This entire situation is confusing enough without my having to try to put a name to this," I wave a hand in the air, "for everyone else."

"I'd say fuck 'em all," Baron drawls, "but I know that wouldn't work for you."

"Not." I chuckle. "No, I am not sure what I am going to say if anyone asks why I am with both of you."

"Tell them the truth," Edward suggests.

"Which is...what? That I am fucking both of you?" I glance out of the window. "Do you realize how that makes me look?"

"Like you are irresistible?" Baron meets my gaze in the mirror, "Which you are. You should know that, Ava."

"You are a gorgeous, confident, young woman who can have anyone you want." Edward turns to me, "And that's what you should tell anyone who asks you."

Baron nods.

"It really is annoying when the two of you gang up on me," I gripe.

Edward chuckles. Baron's lips twist in that smirk which is hot and mean, and so damn filthy. My ovaries spasm. No, seriously, they do. Heat fills my cheeks and I glance out the window as we turn off the highway. Well, here we are then; time to face the music.

I knock on the door of my parent's bedroom. Old habits... I've always call it my parents' bedroom. Just because my mother is no longer there doesn't mean I am going to call it by some other name, alright?

"Come in," my father calls out and I walk inside.

He places the photograph of my mum and him on their wedding day back on the dresser.

I walk up to him, glance down at the photograph. "She was so beautiful," I whisper.

"I saw her across a crowded house party in London and knew she was the one for me."

I've heard the story of how they met a thousand times, and yet, I can't resist asking, "What was she wearing?"

"A sleeveless dress that reached her knees. I saw the back of her neck, the curve of her bare shoulder, and I was a goner."

"And you?" I murmur, "What were you doing?"

"I was in a pair of shorts, wearing a Santa hat while I jumped up and down on the couch." He chuckles.

"Was it Christmas?"

"Not quite. It was the middle of summer, but I was high enough on life... And yeah, enough alcohol to not give a damn. Then I saw her and knew that my life would never be the same again." His voice breaks and I turn to him in time to see a tear run down his cheek.

"Oh, Dad." I grip his arm. "I'm so sorry, Dad."

"Me, too." He swallows. "You meet your life partner and you think you'll be together for the rest of your lives. You think you'll always have them next to you, that you'll be old and wrinkled before you have to say good-bye. Yet one day, they are gone, and you are left to pick up the pieces of your life and move on... Even as the grief consumes you from the inside, and you try to put on a brave face and smile because that's what they would have wanted. I don't want your Mum to be upset. I want her to feel like I am still living my best life for her."

"Oh, Daddy." I stand up on tip-toe and hug him, and he puts his arms around me and holds me close. The woody scent of his aftershave is so familiar, so comforting, that I almost break down. I bite back my tears, pat his shoulder, "I am so sorry I said those horrible things to you earlier."

"I think we all say things we don't mean when we're upset." He rubs his cheek across my hair. "You were hurting. So was I. We were all trying to figure out how we were going to go on without her."

"You're doing the right thing by marrying Aunty Lina." I lean back and he releases me. "I hope the two of you are happy, Daddy."

"Thank you, sweetheart." He smiles down at me, "It means a lot to me to hear that."

There's a knock on the door, then Raisa peeks in. "Everything okay?" She glances between us.

"Yeah," I sniffle, "I was just catching up with Dad, that's all."

"I am so happy you came, Ava." She smiles at me.

"Me, too." I look up at the ceiling to keep the tears from falling and messing up my make-up. "Thanks for being so patient with me, big sis."

She screws up her face, "Don't call me that. Not that I am not your older sister, but it makes me feel old when you do."

"Some things never change." I chuckle.

Her smile widens. "And some things do." She peers into my face, "You ready for this?"

"Yeah," I square my shoulders, "I am."

"Good." She turns to my father, "And you, Dad, you ready to do this?"

He blows out a breath. "Yes." He straightens his spine. "Yes, I am."

He tucks me under his arm, then holds his other arm out to Raisa. She walks over to us, and the three of us hug.

"Thank you," Dad says hoarsely. "Thank you for understanding."

Two hours later, I watch from the sidelines of the small dance floor that had been erected in the backyard of my childhood home. The large white marquee that had hosted the ceremony is aglow with twinkling lights strung from the ceiling. The sides of the tent are open and a gust of air sweeps through, rustling the table cloths behind me. The DJ on the far end plays a tune that has me tapping my foot in rhythm.

"Hey, you," Isla comes up to stand next to me, "long time no see."

I glance at her sideways, "Speak for yourself. You've been missing all through the ceremony."

"Don't ask." She mimics wiping sweat from her brow "Last minute issue with the DJ, but I finally pulled in a favor." She waves at the tall man behind the console, who grins at her before turning his attention back to the set up.

"Thanks again for packing my clothes for me," I gesture to the dress I am wearing. "Thanks to you, I am, at least, properly dressed."

"You can thank me by telling me more about what's up with you." She arches an eyebrow, "What's up with all the secrecy?" She frowns. "And where are you staying anyway?"

"Uh, I told you, it's just a security thing," I mutter. Shit, I hate not being able to share the details with her, but the guys made it clear, I am not to tell anyone about where I am staying.

Even now, the two of them stand on opposite sides of the tent, keeping a wary look out over the crowd. During the wedding, they'd both parked themselves on either end of the small group of invitees and kept a vigil, as well. It's like I am traveling with my own security team, in a way.

"Ava." Isla hisses at me, "Ava, you listening to me?"

"Eh?" I give her my full attention, "Sorry, what did you say?"

"You are so not acting yourself." She frowns. "Is everything okay?"

"Of course, it is." I take a sip of my champagne. "Your wedding arrangements, as usual, have been top-notch. I am glad you were able to take on the wedding preparations so last-minute."

"Not as last minute as the weddings I've had to put together for the Seven." She snorts, "I mean, your dad gave me an entire month to plan. Imagine that."

I dig my elbow into her side. "Stop being so snarky."

"You stop being so secretive."

"I am not being secretive." I glance about the room and feign innocence.

"Oh?" She peers into my face, "So why is it that you didn't mention to me that you were going to be here with both of them?"

"Who?" I frown. "Who are you talking about?"

"Seriously, Ava?" She scowls. "Don't give me that. This is not like you, at all, to hide things from me."

"Yeah," I hunch my shoulders. "Look, it's complicated, okay?"

"When isn't it?"

A waiter passes by and Isla grabs my empty champagne glass, sets it on his tray, and grabs two more. "Thanks, Mark." She nods at the young guy, who blushes before scurrying off.

"Do all of your team have a crush on you?"

"Only the young impressionable ones." She hands me a glass, before sipping from her own. "And don't change the topic, Slick."

"Would I do that?" I widen my gaze.

"And stop giving me the innocent act." She glowers at me. "Tell me what's happening with you, Ava, seriously."

I take a sip of the champagne, and the cool, crisp liquid slides down smoothly. "Well, basically, I am sleeping...with both of them."

She chokes on her champagne, and I pat her back as she splutters.

"Easy, easy," I mutter, "don't go drawing all the attention to us now."

"You're doing fine in that regard all on your own, considering those two have ensured you are always in their line of sight since you guys walked in."

"That's only because they are protecting me."

"Protecting you?" She frowns. "What do you mean?"

"I was attacked..." I mumble, "again."

"Wait, hold on." She stares at me. "You were ambushed in the subway, then in your studio.... Are you saying, it happened again?"

I wince, and her features soften. "Oh, honey, I am so sorry. I didn't mean to bring back any flashbacks by talking about it."

"I'm stronger than that," I lie.

"No one is that strong, Ava. We can pretend to ourselves that things don't affect us, but everything does. Even tripping and hurting ourselves when we are children leaves scars on our physical body. Our cells remember everything. The memories in our body stay with us, whether we like it or not. They change us; they have ramifications for how we act and react. The only thing we can do is manage the stories we tell ourselves about it."

"Wow," I stare at her, "that was profound."

"Right?" She shakes her head, "Sometimes, even I don't know where I come up with this shit."

"You never do talk about your past, you know." I take in her features. "I go on and on about my family and you... You never tell me about yours."

"But we are not talking about me, are we?" She waggles her eyebrows. "You were talking about bedding both of them. How is it?"

"How is what?"

"You know, DP."

"DP?"

"Double penetration?"

"Oh." I stare at her. "OH." I redden. "No, no, no. I don't know about that."

"No?"

"I mean, I don't sleep with them at the same time." I wave my hand in the air, "How could you even think about that?"

"Aw," her lips turn down, "and here I was, hoping things were finally getting exciting."

"Trust me, I've had enough excitement just trying to keep up with two of them in my life at the same time." I shake my head, "Seriously, I am at my wits end."

"Whose dick is bigger?"

"What?" I redden, and she chuckles. Gah! She's always trying to catch me out, this one. I purse my lips, push my finger into my cheek and pretend to consider the question. "You do know, it's not just about the size; it's also the technique." I sniff.

"And?" She taps her feet on the ground, "Give, girlfriend, which one wins?"

I lower my chin. "Sadly, it seems they are neck and neck on both accounts."

She clicks her tongue, "Poor Ava, you have such a hard life." She shakes her head, "All that double dosage of cocks and lips and hands and legs and balls... Girl, you lead a tough life."

"Stop it." I choke. "Seriously, it's not at all how you make it out to be."

"Oh, well," she takes another sip of the champagne, "things could be worse; you could have neither of them."

"Yeah, tried that, and it didn't work, either." I grimace.

"Well, if you can't beat 'em, join 'em."

"Okay, I am getting tired of trying to keep up with you here." I scowl, "What are you trying to say, Isla?"

"Just that you should have a good time, while you can, babe." She snatches my glass from me, then hands both flutes over to the hovering Mark.

She jerks her chin at the DJ, who nods, then speaks into the mic, "Can we have the newly wedded couple on the floor?"

Applause breaks out as my father leads Lina onto the floor. Throughout the dance, she stares up at him with adoration in her eyes. My father seems a little tired, and maybe sad. She places her palm against his cheek, leans up to say something. He chuckles and some of the weight around his shoulder dissipates. Maybe this really is a good thing. Maybe she'll make him happy, and maybe she does deserve him, after all.

I watch as they glide around the dance floor. The song comes to an end, and everyone claps as my father leads Lina off the floor. He smiles at me and I blow him a kiss, then nod at Lina. They move over to talk with their friends and the DJ switches to a throbbing beat. "Okay everyone, time to get on the dance floor." The DJ speaks into the mic, "Let's all celebrate the wedding of Lina and Christopher!"

"Okay, this should be good." Isla grabs my arm and yanks me onto the floor.

"What are you doing?" I laugh.

"Come on, Ava, you've been dying to dance, and I've made sure the music is good for the kind of dancing you like."

"Is that right?" I chuckle. The music changes again, the familiar beats of a fast dance remix come on. I can't stop myself from tapping my feet against the floor, swaying my hips, shimmying my waist, my shoulders.

"Woohoo!" Isla hoots. "Go for it, babe." She launches into her own bump and grind version of a dance that's both seductive and funny at the same time.

I laugh, shake my booty, fling my hands up in the air, drag them down my body as I move to the rhythm. Isla mirrors my moves and soon the two of us are shaking it up, dancing with each other, and to the music. Around us, the dance floor fills up.

More people join and soon we are pressed in from all sides in the tiny space. The music moves to an even faster beat, the lights dim, and strobe lights are flicked, transforming the atmosphere closer to that of a night club.

The crowd seems to thicken even more. Sweat beads my forehead, slides down the valley between my breasts. A man jostles Isla. She turns at the same time as him. He apologizes to her, she laughs. The two begin to dance together. My dress sticks to my back. Shit, I'm too hot. I push my way through the swaying bodies, to the edge of the dance floor. Then walk across the lawn to the side of the house. I can still hear the music, but there's no one here. Besides, it's cooler.

A breeze blows over my fevered skin and I lift my face to it.

The thump of the beats reaches me across the space. The cadence seeps through my veins, sinks into my blood. I close my eyes, letting the rhythm wash over me as I move my feet. I widen my stance as I grind my arse, sinking down in a semi squat, before I thrust my hips out, then my breasts, then weave up to straighten.

I sense a change in the space in front of me, then a pair of warm hands land on my hips.

I snap my eyes open, take in the strong chords of his throat, the sculpted pecs and the black marks of the tattoo exposed by the open neck of his shirt. His broad shoulders block out the sight of everybody else, and I gulp. I lift my eyes to meet his amber gaze.

Edward moves in sync with me, his gaze intense as he takes in my undulating body.

The hair on the nape of my neck prickles. Heat sears my back. I glance sideways, already knowing that I'll find Baron behind me.

His big body towers over me and his biceps stretch the tight fit of his light blue shirt that set off the flint in his eyes. He must have abandoned his jacket at some point—not that I am complaining. He's rolled his sleeves up to expose his thick veiny arms, the powerful forearms dotted with dark brown hair. His wide palms rest on my shoulders, the heat of them burning through the thin material of my dress.

Baron's movements are stiff...as stiff as the unmistakable bulge that tents his crotch. He moves in closer and his pelvis cradles my hips. The thick column of his shaft nestles against the curve of my butt. Lust thickens my veins; moisture laces the hollow between my legs.

I turn forward as Edward bends his knees slightly. His movements are smooth, coordinated, a self-assurance to his steps that hints at some kind of formal lessons. I tip up my chin, rise on tip toe.

"Where did you learn to dance?" I murmur.

"Ballroom dancing classes." He smirks.

"What?" I gape. "No."

"Oh, yes." His smile widens. "One of the few things that my mother cared about. After all, I had to dance so she could take me to parties and show me off. At least, in this, she was determined that I appear civilized." He bares his teeth and my knees threaten to give way from under me. This man... He's deadly. OMG—my thighs clench and my heart begins to thunder in my chest.

I turn my head sideways, "And you Baron?" I tilt my head, "Clearly, dancing isn't one of your hobbies?"

"Is that a challenge?" He growls.

"It's an...invitation?" I bat my eyelashes at him and his grip tightens on my hips.

His forehead furrows and he picks up his pace, matching his moves to mine... To the left, to the right, circle...and to the right again. I face forward to find Edward matching us step for step. To the left, right, circle, again. Just like that, the three of us are in sync. Flying. Floating. When you have the right beat, the right partner—or partners—dancing is like flying.

I raise my arm, wind it around Baron's neck. Bring my other hand up and place my palm against Edward's cheek. His amber eyes gleam. Edward moves in closer, until we are joined from chest, to hip, to thigh. Baron tilts his hips behind me. His throbbing length seems bigger, hotter, more insistent. My throat closes and sweat slides down the valley between my breast. I tip my chin up as Edward lowers his mouth to mine. He kisses me deeply, smoothly, thrusts his tongue between my lips. A grasp on my chin urges me to turn my head. Edward releases my mouth, for Baron to replace it with his. He brushes my lips once, twice, then swipes his tongue across my mouth. I groan, parting my lips, and instantly, he swoops in, closes his mouth around my tongue, sucking, nibbling, biting on my lower lip, and my pussy instantly clenches. Ed kisses his way across my cheek, down my throat, to the valley between my tits. He cups my breast, tweaks my nipple so hard that I cry out. The sound is swallowed by Baron's mouth. He kisses me harder. I pant against his lips, press my fingers into the side of his neck. A moan ripples up my throat, and he shudders. He tears his mouth from mine, then growls, "To the car, right fucking now."

26

Ava

I walk inside the house, then pause in the middle of the living room. The door shuts behind me and I shiver. A ripple of apprehension runs down my spine. Shit, shit, shit, what am I doing? On the way home, none of us had spoken in the car. Baron had driven, barely keeping under the speed limit, and the SUV had seemed to eat up the miles. He'd barely parked when Edward had jumped out of the car and come around to open my door, then led me to the house. After unlocking the door, he'd gestured for me to go ahead. I'd moved in, conscious of his gaze eating me up. I'd headed for the stairs, then stopped.

Shit, what should I do? Go straight up to my room? To Edward's room where we had spent the night? To Baron's room? What is the right protocol to follow when you are about to bed two guys? Two guys... Gah! For someone who'd been a virgin not too long ago, I've, clearly, come a long way. OMG. Two guys. Two alphaholes... Two massive dicks... How the hell is this going to work? Can I handle both of them at the same time?

Why the hell had I thought this was a good idea?

At least I had had the presence of mind to move away from the dancefloor and the crowd of people. With some luck, no one should have seen the three of us engaged in that little dance-fuck-fest.

Why did I care what they thought of me anyway?

Most of the people there were my parent's friends...and I had always been the rebel. The girl who'd dropped out of medical school to become a belly dancer. I mean, who does that, right? So, I shouldn't worry about the fact that I was dancing with two men. Still, I am fairly certain that no one saw us.

Besides, most people had been drinking since the afternoon. Everybody had been happy and ready to dance, and no doubt, the champagne had helped lower my inhibitions too. And the dance... It had been the music which had seduced me. It had gone to my head and I had gotten carried away. I had allowed myself to be seduced by the heat of their bodies, the feel of their hands on my hips, their lips on mine.

Edward stops not far from me. He looks me up and down as he unknots his tie and allows the length to hang down from either side of his collar. Heat zings in my belly. My throat goes dry. Footstep's approach. I glance past him as Baron stalks over to stand next to him. His blue gaze holds mine. He reaches for his rolled-up sleeve and smooths it down his arm. I gulp.

Baron's lips twitch. "You want a drink, Eve?" he rumbles.

"Yes," I breathe, "yes, please."

His smile widens. He knows I am nervous, and he's enjoying it. Jerk. At the same time, he's offering me a drink to help distract me. Typical Baron. Confusing, a little mean, and a whole lot gentle. He stalks over to the bar, grabs a bottle of whiskey and swigs from it. He ambles over, hands it to Edward, who drinks from it without taking his eyes off of me.

He offers me the bottle and I glance from him to Baron, then back at Ed. I twist my fingers together in front of me.

"What's the matter, Ava?" Edward murmurs. "You scared of us?"

I shake my head.

"You changed your mind, Eve?" Baron quirks an eyebrow. "If you have ___"

"No," I rush out, "it's not that."

"Then?" Baron takes the bottle from Edward, tilts it to his lips. The strong chords of his throat move as he swallows and a pulse flares to life between my legs.

"What is it?" Edward studies me. "What's wrong?"

"N...nothing."

Baron tilts his head, "It's something." His lips kick up, "Go on, you can tell us anything; you know that."

"It's just," I shake the hair away from my face, "it was different on the dance floor, you know? It was more organic, more natural, and here... It just feels forced."

"Hmm." Baron's eyebrows draw down. "You know we won't force you into doing anything, Eve."

"I know."

"Nothing you don't want us to do to you, that is." He smirks and goosebumps pop on my skin. OMG, that's what I am afraid of, and I don't know how to categorize the feelings that bubble up from somewhere deep inside.

It seems natural to be with both of them...and yet... It's unusual. This is not what normal people do. This is not how one is supposed to choose between two men... I mean, I feel something for both of them. I've tried scheduling time with each of them. I've tried not sleeping with them, only to sleep with each of them separately... And now, here I am, faced with both of them... Actually, on the verge of doing it with both of them at the same time. It should feel odd...but it doesn't. Which should count for something, right? If only I could, somehow, get past the strange reluctance that grips me.

I lower my hands to my sides, walk up to Baron. I take the bottle from him, tilt it to my lips and take a healthy swig. The liquor burns its way down, leaving a trail of heat in its wake. I take another sip and warmth flushes my skin. A pleasant numbness radiates out from my stomach. I raise the bottle and Edward takes it from me.

"Enough," he scolds, "don't want you getting drunk."

"As if." I toss my head, pivot and head for the stairs. I stop with my leg poised on the lowest step. Turn to find them walking toward me. Oh, hell, this is it. I turn, take the steps up to my room. Yeah, if I am going to do this, then it is going to be on my turf. Not that I am going to be able to control much of what is to come, but hell, if I am going to give in to everything. At least, I am going to initiate the proceedings. Take the lead in something. Famous last words. I stop at the foot of the bed, glance toward where the men stand just inside the doorway of the room. I reach for the sleeve of my dress and shrug it down, then the other side. It slides down, pools around my ankles, I kick it off along with my heels.

Baron's chest rises and falls.

Edward's nostrils flare.

I reach behind me, unhook my bra and drop it to the ground. Then, without taking my gaze off of them, I slide my panties down to the floor and kick them aside.

Baron's jaw tics. He walks toward me, grabs his shirt at the back with one hand and—in that way that men do—yanks it off and flings it aside. He pauses in front of me, and I gesture to his pants.

"Take them off," I rasp.

He toes off his shoes, unbuckles his pants and shoves them down along with his boxers and socks. He folds his clothes, places them on a nearby chair then straightens to reveal his long, thick cock that points straight up. The head is fat and swollen, almost purple with arousal. I can't take my gaze off of its heavy perfection. Precum oozes from the crown and my mouth waters.

He bends, grabs me by my waist and throws me on the bed. I squeak, bounce on the mattress once, then lay there with my hair across my face. I reach up to push the hair from my face and he points a finger at me.

"Stop."

"Wh...what?"

"You don't get to direct the proceedings, little Eve."

"And...you do?"

"Damn-fucking right." He grabs his already erect dick and pumps himself once. His shaft seems to lengthen even more and my breath catches. Oh God, have I actually had that inside of me?

I glance past him to where Edward watches the two of us, an indecipherable look in his eyes.

"Ed," I swallow, "you okay?"

He doesn't reply. He fists his hands at his side, rakes his gaze down my naked body.

"On your knees," he snaps.

"Wh...what?"

"Do as he says," Baron orders.

Well, hell...again, the two of you gang up on me... And this time, it's going to lead to a gang bang. OMG. I snort and Baron glares at me.

"Do it," he growls, "or else." He takes a step forward and I flip over, then push up to my knees.

"Good girl," Edward praises me and I flush.

His footsteps approach and he comes around to stand in front of me. I glance up to find him undoing his shirt, leisurely, one button at a time. He pulls off his shirt, along with his tie, drops them to the floor.

He toes off his shoes and does the same with his pants and briefs. He turns to me and I take in his erect cock. It juts up, thick and heavy, a vein running up the underside. His dick is not as long as Baron's, but what he lacks in length, he makes up in width. Fuck. As I watch, his cock seems to swell further—fat, turgid, and so damn huge. How the hell am I going to take not one, but two, monster cocks inside me at the same time?

He lowers his head, drags his lips over mine. I part my lips, and instantly, he slides his tongue inside. He kisses me, long and deep, and with such intensity that my head spins.

The bed dips, heat sears my back, then big palms grip my hips.

Baron slides his fingers around to strum my pussy lips and I moan. He slides two fingers inside of me and I arch back and into him. Edward cups my breast; he tweaks my nipple and I shudder.

He releases my mouth and Baron instantly replaces it with his. He swipes his tongue across the seam of my lips, licks into my mouth, and drags his tongue across my teeth. My pussy clenches around his fingers and he groans. He presses kisses across my cheek, to the shell of my ear. He sucks on my earlobe and my entire body jolts.

"Fuck." he breathes, "you're so fucking sexy, little Eve."

He shoves my hair aside, kisses his way down to the curve of my shoulder. He bites down and I tremble. Edward cups both of my breasts, bringing them together. He bends down, bites on one nipple, and I shudder. He kisses his way to the other, then sucks deeply on the nipple and I feel the pull all the way down to my core.

"Bloody hell, you're soaking," Baron growls. "You're dripping all over my hand, Eve."

Yeah, well, you have two men, two pair of hands, two pairs of sinful mouths kissing you, sucking on you, licking their way across your most sensitive parts, and then we'll see how you do.

As if he heard me and wants to punish me for my impertinent thoughts, Baron shoves two more fingers inside of me and I moan. He begins to work his fingers in and out of me. The wet squelching noises fill the space, and it's so dirty and so raw that I can't stop myself from panting, from throwing my arm up and around him, pushing my breasts deeper into Edward's roaming mouth. He squeezes my tits with so much pressure that a sound of protest leaves my lips. Baron closes his mouth over mine again, as if he can't bear to let the sound escape. He bites down on my lower lip, then licks into my mouth again. I wind my fingers around his neck, pulling on the hair at the nape of his neck. He shudders, releasing my mouth, just as Edward rises up to kiss my chin. He brushes his mouth across mine again, nipping on my lips, slurping on them, before thrusting his tongue inside my mouth and sucking on my tongue.

Baron increases the pace with which he's moving his fingers in and out of me. At the same time Edward lowers his head to my other breast. He bites down on my nipple and heat sears my spine, my pussy clenches, my thighs spasm and I almost collapse, but Baron's hold on my waist keeps me upright.

He kisses his way down the slope of my shoulder, down my spine, just as he curves his fingers inside me.

Edward releases my breast only to massage my thigh. He slides his fingers around and into the valley between my butt cheeks. That's when the orgasm rips through me.

It washes over me and I pant, close my eyes, and allow the waves to carry me up...higher up...before they fade away. I slump against Baron, who pulls his fingers out of me. He brings it to his mouth sucks on it.

"Fuck," he groans, "you taste fucking sweet, Ava."

I open my eyes in time to see them exchange a glance.

"What...?" I clear my throat. "What was that about?"

Edward glances down at me. "I'm hungry."

"Umm." I swallow. "We had dinner already," I remind him and Edward's smile widens.

"We missed dessert."

"Oh."

"Time to make up for that."

He glances at Baron, who runs his hands up to cup my breasts. He begins to massage them, running his rough callused digits across my sensitive nipples. A moan bleeds from my lips.

"Oh, my god," I groan, "Oh my g—OD."

I cry out as Edward drops to his knees on the floor. Baron positions me to face Edward, so he is at eye level with my pussy. Immediately, Ed fits his mouth to my cunt and begins to eat me out.

"Jesus," I moan as he crams his tongue inside my channel. My thigh muscles turn to jelly. My legs slide apart further, giving him better access. He grips my hips, holds me in place as he tilts his head and sticks his tongue in and out of me, again and again. Meanwhile, Baron continues to knead my breasts. He sucks on my earlobe, then inserts his tongue inside my ear, and my eyes roll back in my head.

"Oh," I gasp, "oh, my fucking god."

I hear Baron chuckle, right before he catches my nipples between the forefinger and thumb of each his hands. He pinches with such precision that I yell. Heat sluices down my spine, and I throw my head back and groan as moisture gushes out from between my legs.

Edward licks it up, slurps his tongue up my melting slit with long, deep swipes that seem to penetrate to the core of me.

Baron releases his hold on one breast, only to pinch my chin, turning it toward him, before he places his mouth over mine. "Come," he growls. "Come right now, Eve," he says, as Edward closes his mouth over my pussy. That's when I explode.

This second orgasm whips out from my womb, up my spine, to crash behind my eyes. Seconds later, I open my eyes to find myself slumped against Baron. I glance up at his blue eyes, which bore into me.

"Wow," I mumble. "What was that?"

"That," Edward rises to his feet, "was just the first course."

I turn to gaze up at him from under heavy eyelashes, "I thought you said that was dessert."

His grin widens, "I lied."

He glances at Baron, who places both of his hands on my hips. He lifts me up, then turns me around before placing me back on my knees, so I am facing him.

"Oh." I blink. "Now what?"

"Now we fuck."

Ava

My muscles have turned to jelly. There is not a single, solid bone left in my body. My brain cells have all melted into a gooey mess. It's the only reason I don't protest as the two men maneuver me as if I don't have a single thought in my head. Which, to be fair, I don't.

Baron lies back, and Edward positions me over Baron, with my knees on either side of his thighs. He grips my hips, and Edward releases me. The bed dips, heat sears my back, and I glance over my shoulder as Edward kneels behind me. He places his hands on my waist, above Baron's hands. There's a least an inch of space between them, as if there's a tacit understanding between them not to touch each other.

Baron increases his pressure on my waist. I turn back to him just he lifts me up slightly so I am positioned a little above him.

Edward leans in so his hard chest is pressed into my back. He reaches under to play with my pussy and I huff. He slides his fingers in and out of me, scoops up my cum, and brings it up to smear it around my backhole. I shiver.

"Ed," I breathe, "please..."

"Please what?"

Please be gentle, is what I want to say. But just then he inserts a finger inside my backhole. I freeze.

"Shh" He brings his other hand up to my chin, turns me to face him, bends down and licks into my mouth. He nibbles on my lips until I part them, then sweeps his tongue inside. He kisses me, tilts his head and swipes his tongue across my teeth. He deepens the kiss, floods my mouth with his taste until I relax.

Baron walks his hands up my waist, cups the undersides of my breasts. He drags his fingertips across the sensitive skin and I shiver. I raise my arm wind it around Edward's neck, just as he thrusts his fingers in and out of me. He scoops up more of my cum, slides it inside my backhole. He inserts a second finger and I part my legs further apart, allowing him deeper access. Baron cups the heavy weight of my breast in one hand, brings the other hand down to strum my clit. He weaves his finger about my clit and a shudder runs up my spine.

Edward pulls his fingers out from my backside, only to slide them in again. He scissors his fingers and my back channel stretches to accommodate him. A groan ripples up my throat and my thigh muscles threaten to give way.

"Fuck," he breathes against my lips, "you're so tight, baby."

Heat sears my skin, and my pussy clenches and comes up empty.

"Please." I clear my throat, "I want..."

I glance down at Baron and he slides a finger inside my soaking pussy.

He adds another finger, a third, and I arch my spine, reach out with my free hand... Searching, wanting. His strong fingers twine with mine. My belly clenches... Needing...wanting... More. I angle my head to meet Baron's gaze. The blue of his irises deepens; green flares in their depths.

I need this. I want this. I am so, empty. So...so...empty.

Baron nods. He pulls out his fingers. At the same time, with his other hand on my hip, he guides me down until the crown of his dick breaches me. A trembling grips me. I lower my thighs, sink down another centimeter onto his fat shaft. Sweat beads his brow and the skin around his eyes creases. He tightens his grip on my waist, applies more pressure, and I slide down the rest of the way.

"Oh." I throw my head back, impaling myself on his cock. His dick stretches me, chafes against my sensitive inner walls. Ripples of pleasure radiate out from the contact. My nipples harden. My chest heaves.

Edward runs his hand down my spine, flattens his large palm at the small of my back. He applies pressure and I lower my arm from around his neck. I flatten my palm against Baron's hard chest, then lean forward and over him. He brings up his hand, fastens it around my nape. He eases my head down, until my face is poised close to his. He rises up to meet me half-way, rubs his nose against mine. My lips curve and he brushes his mouth over mine, and again. He releases my hand only to slide his down and pinch my nipple. My core clenches and my muscles tremble. Behind me, I sense Edward move. He positions his dick against the rim of my backhole, and I freeze.

"Shh," Baron tightens his grip on the nape of my neck, and somehow, it's reassuring and arousing. I feel claimed, and turned on, and incredibly horny. He licks into my mouth and I part my lips, allowing him further access. He kisses me, even as he massages my breast. He deepens the kiss, sucks on my tongue and my eyes roll back in my head. I am melting inside. My thigh muscles quiver. My shoulders tremble. I give in to the kiss completely, and that's when Edward pushes into my backhole.

A moan trembles from my lips and Baron swallows it down. "It's going to be so good for you, baby," he croons, "so good." He feathers kisses against my jawline, down to my mouth. Licks the edge of my lips. "Oh, Eve." He groans into my mouth, "You're fucking glorious."

I relax further and Edward thrusts forward, past the tightness. He hits a spot deep inside and my insides quiver. It's too much. Too full. Like nothing I've ever felt before. The burning in my backchannel is balanced by the fullness in my pussy. I gaze into Baron's eyes as Edward pulls out. He plunges forward and my entire body bucks.

"F-u-c-k," Edward breathes, "you're so fucking tight, Ava. So hot." The heat from his body sears my back, flows over my shoulders.

Inside me, Baron's cock thickens, pulses. "Touch your tits," he orders.

I slide my hand up to squeeze my breast. I play with my nipple and a whine spills from my lips. My pussy clenches, and a groan rips out of Baron. He thrusts up and into me just as Edward pulls out. Edward grips my hips, squeezes, then plunges back into my back channel. Heat sears up my spine as Baron pulls out. He thrusts into me, as Edward retreats. In and out, in and out. They move in rhythm, fucking me, pounding both my front and back holes. The vibrations from the impact radiate out, my toes curl, and my fingers tremble.

There's so much of them in me, it feels like I am no longer in my skin. It's like they've literally fucked me out of myself. A chuckle spills from my lips and Baron frowns. His lips curl, his eyes gleam, then he picks up the pace. He pistons his hips forward and impales me, again and again, just as Edward pounds into me from behind. Edward's hands on my hips... Baron's hold on my neck, his fingers meeting around the front of my throat... His grip tightens and spots of black flicker at the edges of my eyes.

Edward brings his hand to my breast. He shoves my palm aside, and tweaks my nipple so hard that pinpricks of pleasure pool in my belly...

Oh, God. Oh, God. I throw out my hand and Baron catches it. He twines his fingers through mine. I try to draw a breath, my lungs burn, my pussy clenches, and my back channel quivers. Every part of me is stretched and tensed and aching for release. I open my mouth, but no sound comes out. Please, please, please. My eyelids flutter down.

"Open your eyes, Ava," Baron commands. "Look at me."

I snap my eyelids open, hold his blue gaze, just as he releases his hold on my throat. The climax rips through me. Edward grips my chin, turns me toward him. "I fucking love you, Ava," he growls as he thrusts into me one last time. The orgasm crashes into me. The breath rushes out of me. My eyelids roll back and sparks flare in front of my eyes. I swear, I do see stars... No, really, I do. When I open my eyes, it's to find I am slumped over Baron's chest, with Edward hunched over me. Someone—Baron?—rubs my back. Someone else—Edward?—drags his fingers through my hair.

"You okay?" Baron asks, at the same time as Edward.

They stare at each other, then Baron turns to me. "How do you feel?"

"Awful."

"What?" Baron frowns.

"What?" Edward growls. He drops his head down to peer into my face, "Are you okay? Did we hurt you? If we did—"

"Relax." I smirk. "I am good. In fact, I don't think I've ever been better."

"Ah," Edward's brow clears, "you little tease."

He wraps his fingers around my thick strands of hair and pulls. My scalp prickles. Goosebumps pop on my skin and I shiver.

"The only thing that can improve things is..." I turn and lock gazes with Baron, "If the two of you come inside me, right now."

"We don't have to," Baron murmurs, even as his cock throbs inside my pussy.

"We could just jerk off..." Edward grimaces, "if you're too sore."

I squeeze down with my inner muscles, and both men groan.

"Fuck," Baron swears.

"Bloody hell," Edward groans.

"Please," I bite the inside of my cheek, "I insist."

They look at each other, then another of those stupid, mysterious male glances passes between them.

Edward leans in. He kisses me as he starts to thrust into me, again and again. Sweat beads his brow, his jaw hardens, and his dick thickens inside of me as he grunts.

Under me, Baron pistons his hips up, thrusting inside me. Vibrations shiver up my spine and heat flushes my skin. I groan as they fall into an easy rhythm. Baron thrusts, Edward retreats. Edward lunges forward, Baron pulls back. In-out-in, their movements grow more frantic. I glance at Edward's face. His amber eyes gleam and a nerve throbs at his temples.

"I am going to come, Ava." He plunges inside me, ramming into me with such force that a whine tumbles from my lips. I turn back, lock gazes with Baron. His blue irises glow, his jaw tics, and sweat glistens on his forehead. He pulls me down, kisses me as he thrusts up and into me. His dick thickens, and he hits a spot—or was that, Edward? It's difficult to say when both of them are pounding into me, filling me, touching me so deeply inside that I know I'll never feel this possessed again, this changed by another experience.

Baron groans, while behind me, Edward grunts. Then they come, simultaneously shooting their loads inside me.

Edward kisses my cheek, my neck, then straightens. He pulls out of me at the same time that Baron does. I glance down to find cum sliding down my inner thighs.

"Fuck, that's hot," Edward murmurs. He throws himself down on the bed, and I ease down to lie between them. My arms and legs tingle. Then, as the adrenaline fades away, they feel weighted down. The sweat dries on my skin and I shiver. Baron pulls the cover over us. I turn over on my side and he spoons me. I snuggle into Edward and he slides his hand under my neck. My eyes close and I fall asleep. It's the deepest, most dreamless sleep I've had in years. When I wake up, light creeps in from between the curtains. I glance around to find that I am alone in bed.

28

Ava

I slide out of bed and my core hurts. I head toward the bathroom and other parts of me protest. I step under the shower and the heat soothes away the ache in my tired muscles. I get out of the shower, brush my teeth, then head for the closet. The clothes that Archer brought me earlier are still in the suitcase he delivered to me. I pull out fresh underwear. Thank God, Isla had been able to get it for me. It would have been mortifying if it had been Archer who had to pack the bag; not that either of the men would have let him do that. Both of them are too possessive to tolerate that. No wonder Baron had agreed to my calling Isla. They must have realized it was the only way they could get fresh clothes over to me. I finish dressing in a skirt and a blouse, then pull a thick pullover on top, finishing off with a pair of thick socks, before walking down the steps.

I enter the kitchen to find Baron tapping away on his phone at the dining table. Edward's at the stove, making breakfast. The scent of whatever he is cooking wafts over to me. My stomach grumbles. The toaster pops and he pulls out the bread and places it on a plate.

Baron glances up when I enter. His features brighten. He rises to his feet, walks over and kisses me on my cheek. Huh? No demanding kiss on the lips? When was the last time he did something this innocent?

"Eve," he rumbles, "did you sleep well?"

I can't stop the blush that rises to my cheeks.

He peers into my face and his lips quirk, "So you did sleep well."

I nod.

"Good." He leads me to the table, pulls out a chair for me, then eases it back in after I am seated.

"Ava." Edward walks over to place a fully-loaded plate in front of me. "Did you get some rest?" He bends, kisses me on the forehead, then pours some orange juice for me.

Baron heads over to the coffee maker and returns with a steaming mug of coffee. He places it in front of me. I glance down at my breakfast, then between the two of them.

"Wow," I mutter, "that's some service, you guys."

"Only the best for my girl." Baron squeezes my shoulder before sitting down.

Edward points at my plate, "Eat, you must be starved."

"The way the two of you constantly go on about my eating, you are going to have to roll me out of here."

"I don't see an issue with that." Edward looks me up and down and heat sears my cheeks. I glance away, devoting myself to my breakfast.

Baron puts his phone aside, accepts the plate that Edward sets down in front of him. Then, Edward takes his place and the three of us eat in silence. When I've managed to put away most of the omelette and the toast and fruit salad, I pick up my coffee, wait until the guys have finished eating.

"So," I ask when Baron sets down his fork, "are we going to address the elephant in the room?"

"If you're talking about Ed, here, I see him more as a rhino."

"A rhino?" I blink.

"He constantly butts in where he's not needed and tramples over everything." Baron smirks.

"I rather see myself more as a cheetah." Edward yawns.

"And I'm what, a lion?" Baron's grin widens.

"And I'm confused." I glance between them. "Aren't you two supposed to hate each other?"

"Temporary truce." Baron raises his shoulder, "You have to admit, that entire going at each other's throats dynamic was getting a little passé."

"And that was a good diversion," I scowl, "but as I was saying earlier, aren't we going to talk about—?"

"No." Baron shakes his head.

"Nope." Edward scowls.

I gape, "You don't even know what I am going to—"

Baron holds up his hand. "We're never talking about it." He exchanges a glance with Edward, who nods.

"Never," he agrees.

"So..." I set down my mug of coffee, "let me get this right." I glance between them. "We are not going to talk about what happened last night?"

"What happened last night?" Baron fixes me with that impenetrable gaze.

"Yeah, do enlighten us." Edward tilts his head.

I can't believe this. They are going to make me recap the details. Jerks. Fine, if they think I am going to back down from it, they have another think coming. "I slept," I glance at Baron, "with you," I turn to Edward, "and with you." I glance between them and wave my arms, "at the same time."

"And it's not happening again," Baron says in a hard voice.

"Never again," Edward emphasizes, "and that's the last we are ever going to refer to it."

I throw up my hands. "There you two go again, doing the thing...you do..."

"What?" Baron scowls.

"Excuse me?" Edward arches an eyebrow, all cold and mean-like.

Well, whatever. This time, their over-the-top sexiness is not going to distract me.

"When it suits you, the two of you unite against me, and when it doesn't, you decide to fight over me."

"Which is stopping right now," Edward drawls.

"It is?"

Baron nods, "We're done behaving in such an immature fashion."

I snort, "Famous last words."

"We mean it this time." Edward leans forward, "We had a talk this morning."

I push back my chair and jump up, "Another talk? And once more, I am not part of it?"

"You were tired." Edward scowls. "We let you sleep in."

"Oh, you let me sleep in." I scoff. "If you expect me to thank you, prepare to be disappointed," I snap. "Besides, who's fault is it that I was tired?" At their blank looks, I continue. "I handled the both of you, at once, Jesus, do you know how difficult that was for me?"

"I don't know, babe," Baron mutters, "from what I saw, you enjoyed yourself tremendously."

"Asshole." I pale. "The both of you... Fuckers. Wankers. Tossers of the first order." My chest heaves, "I hate both of you. I wish I'd never met either of you."

"Done having your tantrum?" Baron says in a cold voice that, honestly, pushes me over the edge.

"Done?" I glance between them. "No, I am not done." I grab my plate with the remnants of my breakfast and smash it to the floor. Neither of them reacts. Oh, yeah? That's how it's going to be, is it? I seize Baron's plate with his leftovers and throw it down, reach for Edward's plate when he grabs my arm. "Let me go," I snarl, "let me the fuck go."

"Sit down, Eve," Baron snaps.

"No."

"Do it, or I'll make you." I shoot him a sideways glance, take in his hard features, the tic of his jaw, the nerve that throbs at his temple. I hold his gaze and his blue eyes turn even colder. Chips of ice that can burn me, cut through me, slice me to the bone and I'd never be able to stop him. Never. I release my hold on Edward's plate, sink down into the chair.

Baron pushes a glass of water toward me. "Drink," he orders.

I lift the glass and my fingers tighten around it. I so want to throw it in his face.

"Don't," Edward says in a mild tone.

I glare at him, take a few sips, then keep it down.

His lips twist, "Now we talk."

29

Ava

"Talk?" I purse my lips, "I thought the two of you said that you would never again discuss what happened last night."

"We're not doing it again Eve," Baron rumbles. "That was a one-off."

"Oh, why is that?" I stare at him. "Because you two decided so?"

"Among other things." He nods, and I blow out a breath, "See, this is the problem, the two of you deciding things that concern me, without keeping me in the picture."

"We let you decide how to manage the situation first, and see what happened then?"

I pale. "That...that's not fair," I say in a low voice. "I tried my best to be fair. I tried to figure out how best to allocate my time between the two of you."

"And it made you miserable." Edward leans forward, "You were torn apart and unhappy. You put so much stress on yourself that you stopped finding enjoyment in life."

"Not true." Actually, it is. That entire phase of trying to be with each of them separately, only to feel guilty when each became jealous of the time I spent with the other was nerve-wracking.

"Exactly," Baron nods, "which is why we are taking the onus off of you."

"I thought that's what bringing me here was about."

"That was for your safety," Edward clarifies.

"And both of you sleeping with me at the same time?" I frown. "What was that?"

The two exchange glances, then Baron turns to me, "That was a one-off."

"A one-off?"

"It was..." he blows out a breath, "inevitable."

"Inevitable?" I scowl. "You could be a little more complimentary about the experience."

"Fucking you is as close as it gets to a spiritual experience," Edward growls. "Is that what you wanted to hear?"

"It's like coming home," Baron snaps, "but you know that already."

"Oh," I mumble, and my cheeks burn again. Shit, I am not used to this... I mean, sleeping with the both of them was...like...mind-blowing. But talking about it? Hell... My pussy clenches, my backhole hurts, and every part of me seems to come alive. My heart begins to thud in my chest. Shit, just thinking about it...is sending my libido into overdrive. "And it is...an experience I am never going to forget."

"But it won't happen again," Baron growls. "You understand?"

"Either we sleep with you individually, or not at all," Edward grumbles.

"And for now, we choose not at all," Baron interjects.

"Wait," I blink, "what do you mean?"

"It means, for the moment, sex is off the table," Edward murmurs.

"Neither of us is gonna shag you," Baron clarifies.

"B...but, why?" I grip the edge of the table. "I mean...are you two sure you can go without shagging?"

They glare at each other, then both nod.

"Yes," Edward rolls his shoulders, "I can."

"I'll make it work," Baron mutters.

"But...why?" I drag my fingers through my hair, "I don't understand the rationale behind this decision."

"Sex only confuses the issue," Edward offers. "I should know, right?" he says in a self-deprecating voice. "Apparently, the Church was onto something, in this respect, at least."

"This way, that particular source of tension is dispelled. So, you can focus on the individuals." Baron drums his fingers on the table. "We can all focus on the relationship aspect instead. Gives us the opportunity to think with a clear head."

"Do I get a say in this?" I glance between them.

Baron sets his jaw.

Edward folds his arms across his chest.

"No, don't answer that." I raise my hand, "You've already made up your minds, and of course, why does what I think about it matter?"

"You know, it's the right thing to do," Baron says softly. "You do, Eve."

"It will help you in coming to a decision faster." Edward reaches for my hand and I pull away. He frowns and I firm my lips. Just because they are right, doesn't mean I am going to let them know that I agree, right?

"Fine." I rise to my feet. "Whatever."

"So, you're okay with this?" Baron asks cautiously.

"Do I have a choice?"

"No," Edward replies. "No, you don't."

"Well then," I raise a shoulder, "there's nothing left to say anymore."

Turning, I storm out of the kitchen. I suppose I should help them clean up the mess I created, but too bad. Since they are making all of the decisions, they can handle this on their own.

I head back to my room, unpack the rest of my clothes, put them away, have a long bath, wash my hair and dry it, take a nap. When Baron peeks his head inside and asks me to have lunch with them, I refuse. For once, he doesn't insist and I'm both relieved and pissed off. I mean, he'd never have allowed me to go hungry nor would Edward... And now, they are letting me stew here on my own? Gah!

As the day wears on, I can't bear being locked up in here further.

I grab my hip-scarf from the closet—thank God, Isla had packed it for me—then I head down to the studio. I shut the door, pull up the playlist to a medium beat song, one that I can stretch to, and ease into a rhythm. By the time I am on my third song, my heart is pumping and sweat beads my brow. I throw myself into a choreographed routine that I've been working on, in the hope that I can professionally compete someday.

I shimmy my shoulders, grind my hips, raise my arms, allow the music to sink into my blood as I move my body to the beats. I close my eyes, twirl again and again, and once more. I throw back my hair, tip up my chin and see Edward at the doorway. I continue to dance, undulate my shoulders, lift my hips, drop them heavily, then lean into a lighter half-drop.

His gaze narrows. The beat on the track kicks in.

I lift my hips upward and slightly forward in a strong, accented move. Activate the outside of my thigh and my hip to give the movement oomph, drop slightly, then lift again.

His chest rises and falls. He takes a step forward, then another.

Sweat trickles down between my breasts. I shift my weight from leg to leg, straighten my supporting knee, and release the other, then slide my hip out to the side, then back.

He swallows, closing the distance between us. He places his big palms on my hips, then sinks to his knees. I continue to lift one hip and drop, then the next, and the first.

A groan rips from him. He stares at my curves, slides his palm down to cup my butt cheeks. A moan slips from my lips. I keep moving, lift and drop, thrust to the side and drop. He doesn't release me. He leans in and presses his cheek against my stomach. The warmth of him sears me through the clothes I am wearing. I dig my fingers into his hair and tug. Urge him to look up.

He glances at me from under his long sooty eye lashes. "You slay me, Eve," he whispers. "You are my downfall and my saving grace."

"Oh, Ed." I sink down to my knees, cup his face, "I love you, Ed."

He leans in close enough for our eyelashes to tangle. The music winds down, then switches off completely. Our noses bump and we share breath. My heart begins to pound in my chest.

"Edward." I whisper, and he stares down at my lips.

"I want to kiss you, Eve."

"Do it." I swallow and my throat hurts. "Do it, Ed."

His lips part, then he raises his gaze to meet mine. "I can't."

He rises to his feet. "I'm sorry, Eve, but you understand, right?"

"No" I jump to my feet. "I fucking don't."

"You heard us earlier; no sex."

"Fuck that." I curl my fingers into fists. "Fuck the stupid, idiotic condition you guys have laid down."

"I can't," he mutters. "We all agreed."

"No, the two of you agreed." I throw up my hands. "Oh, for fuck's sake."

I brush past him, out the door, and run into Baron. He stares at me, then at Ed, a strange look in his eyes.

"What?" I snap. "What do you want?"

"Eve, please." I hear Edward approach, and fuck, I really don't want to talk to either of them now. I brush past Baron, take the steps two at a time. I reach my room, slam the door and bolt it, then throw myself on the bed.

"Bloody hell." I bury my face in my pillow. This entire situation is untenable. I really have to get away from them. Just be on my own, get a respite from this crazy sexual tension that's always there when I am with either of them. It's just not possible that I am so attracted to both... That I can't make up my mind if I prefer one over the other.

Someone knocks on the door.

"Go the fuck away," I growl.

"You missed lunch," Baron calls out.

"I am not hungry."

"I am leaving your plate by the door."

"Go away," I yell, then bury my face in my pillow again. Exhausted, I fall asleep, and when I awake next, the light is fading outside. My stomach grumbles. I slide off the bed, walk to the entrance and open my bedroom door. I glance outside, then on the floor. On a tray near the door is a covered plate. I snatch it up, shut the door, then sit on a table near the window and polish off the sandwich. It's a little soggy, but still delicious.

Wonder who made it? Baron or Edward? Probably, Edward made it, and Baron brought it to me. Gah! The two of them have a certain understanding between them that comes from having known each other for years. There's animosity between them, no doubt, but they seem to be getting along better than ever. And hell, if I am not beginning to think fondly of both of them. This, despite the fact that both of them feel that they have the right to order me around.

Shit. I really need to find a way out of here. If I can get to the main road, I can hitchhike back, right? Why couldn't the alphaholes have trusted me enough to give me a phone? Well, this is why... Because I'd have found a way out of here much faster. Damn it, why can't they treat me like I can make up my own mind? Because I can't? After all, I am still dithering over which one of them is my 'one'? Bloody hell, all this thinking is definitely not helping me any. I jump up, begin to pace. I only have to stay awake until they go to bed. And then I can leave.

I can try to find the keys to Baron's SUV...and then drive away. They might hear me leave, but that's okay. They don't have another mode of transportation. By the time they figure out a backup plan, I'll be long gone.

They haven't mentioned any security around the place. I haven't seen anything either. Bet they thought keeping an eye on me was enough, right? Would it be safe, though? Is it safer to stay here? Not for my sanity, at any rate. I am done bending to their will. It's time for me to strike out, assert my independence. I've come this far, haven't I? I've forged my own way in the world, despite everyone telling me I couldn't make it. I'm only twenty-one, and an entrepreneur already. I founded my studio, cultivated a successful clientele... I can do this.

An hour later, I am dressed in jeans and a shirt, with a jacket. I still have my handbag, so I pull out my wallet, check the money I have, and my credit cards. Yeah, I'll be okay. I pace a little, glance out of the window, wait. A few hours later, I hear the sound of footsteps ascending the stairs. The footsteps approach, stop outside my door. Then there's a knock.

"Ava," Edward calls, "are you coming to dinner?"

"I'm not hungry," I call back.

"Did you eat your lunch?"

"Yes," I snap, "now go away."

"You still sulking?"

"What do you think?"

"If you come down, we could provide you with free entertainment."

"If you mean the two of you bashing each other up," I snort, "you forget, I've seen that already."

There's silence, then he says, "We only want what's best for you, Eve."

"You're not my parents," I yell, realizing as the words leave my mouth that I sound like a spoiled child. "Now, go away."

I sense rather than hear him sigh. "I'll leave dinner outside the door for you." A few minutes later, I hear his return and the sound of a tray being placed on the floor. Then, his footsteps recede.

I wait another half-hour before I peek out the door, grab the food and demolish it. The pasta is yummy. Shit, Edward can cook. Or was that Baron? I know he can cook, but there's so much more I don't know about him. I can stay, of course, and get to know him better. And then what? I'll still be as confused as I am now. And honestly, I can't bear that anymore. I can't.

I pace a little more before finally laying down on the bed. When I awaken again, it's completely dark outside. I slip on my shoes, slide my wallet into my back pocket, then crack the door open. It's dark outside and the doors of the other two rooms are closed. I walk across the landing, down the stairs. One of the steps creaks. I freeze, wait... Nothing moves. I blow out a breath I hadn't been aware I was holding, then walk down, past the living room, to the table near the front door, where I'd seen Baron toss the keys. The bowl is empty. Shit.

I glance around the living room, head for the coffee table. Nothing. I walk down to the room that doubles as Baron's study, crack the door open, peer inside. It's dark. Good. I walk across to the desk, and spot them. There, next to his laptop. I snatch the key fob, retrace my steps to the front door. I swing it open, slowly, expecting something. Maybe alarm bells to go off?

Nothing moves. An owl hoots somewhere and the wind rustles the leaves of the trees. The house is silent. I step out, close the door behind me, then reach the car. I press the key fob, and the door beeps open. Shit, the beep is too loud. I'm sure they definitely heard that, right? I glance at the still silent house, but there's no movement. I open the door to the driver's side, haul myself inside. Adjust the seat, then start the car. Sweat beads my palms and my hands slip on the steering wheel. Shit, shit, shit.

Keeping the headlights off, I grasp the wheel tighter, then ease the car down the short driveway, and onto the country road. I drive carefully, then when I feel confident enough, I switch on the headlights. I steer the car down the narrow road, until I reach the highway. A car whizzes by. I glance both ways, accelerate onto the main road, and head in the direction of London.

I speed up, keep a look-out in the rearview mirror. The road is empty. I blow out a breath, peer through the windshield at the road ahead. Cars pass by, and I continue on. A few more minutes pass and my muscles relax. Maybe...maybe I'll make it. Even if they do catch up with me... Well, big deal... Maybe they'll punish me... I smirk... More likely, they'll lock me up in the room like an errant child. Seriously, those guys need to get a life. If only they had included me in their decision-making, maybe I'd have stayed. Maybe not. I glance up at the rearview mirror and freeze. Headlights light up the space behind me. Shit. I step down on the accelerator and the car behind me speeds up too. I accelerate further; the car keeps pace. Shit, could it be them? I can make out two passengers in the front of the car, but they are too far for me to see their features. Shit, how the hell could they have gotten hold of a car that quickly?

I glance at the road, then back at the mirror, to find the car gaining on me. Shit, shit, shit. I accelerate further, and the car behind me increases its speed. Hell, ugh! I can't lose this round... Not that it's a competition, but I have my pride. I am going to outrun them if it's the last thing I do. I step on the accelerator, grip the steering wheel more tightly. The SUV leaps forward. The headlights light up the road and there, straight-ahead, eyes stare back at me. I scream, swerve to miss the deer. The brakes screech and the car hits the bank of the road, hurtles down the short slope. A tree looms ahead, there's a loud bang, then everything goes dark.

30

Edward

"She's gone."

"What the fuck?" Baron swears aloud.

I'd thought I'd heard a beep, followed by the sound of a car driving away, had glanced outside and seen the SUV gone. I'd rushed into her room... knowing already that it would be empty. Then stepped out to find Baron at the doorway to his room.

"The SUV's gone."

"Fuck. The car keys." He races down the steps to the study. I follow him, knowing already what he is going to find. He reaches his desk and swears. "Fuck, fuck, fuck." He turns to me, "The car, we can track it."

He stalks out of the study, up the stairs to his room. I follow him. He snatches his phone, pulls up the app. I reach him, glance over his shoulder at the green dot on the screen.

"Well?"

"It's not moving."

"What does that mean?"

"How the fuck do I know?" He turns on me, "This was a bad idea. We should have spoken to her, reasoned with her, not acted like overbearing brutes..."

"Which we are." I grimace. "Let's get to her first, then point fingers at each other."

He nods. "Fuck, fuck, fuck." He squeezes his fingers around the phone, the skin across his knuckles stretching white. "If something happens to her, I'll never forgive myself."

"Hold on, man." I grip his shoulder. "We'll find her."

"I should have walked away when you asked me to." He squeezes his eyes shut, I stayed on. I couldn't bring myself to leave, and now she's gone."

"We'll find her, Baron," I insist. "She's not far. You said so yourself; we just need to hurry before anything happens to her."

He snaps his eyelids open. "Shit," he shudders, "if they get to her first."

"They won't."

He drags in a breath, "We'll find her first."

"We will."

"And when we do, I—"

"Not now," I snap. "Pull yourself together. Focus, solider. Let's get going."

"Right."

"Right." I clap his shoulder, "See you downstairs." I head for the doorway, when he calls out.

"Edward, how do we get to her? She took the car."

I glance at him over my shoulder, "You didn't think I'd allow you to have the only ride in town, did you?"

His eyes gleam, "Bastard."

"Wanker." I smirk. "See you in a minute."

By the time I pull on my clothes and reach the door, he's already there. I walk around the back of the house, to the garage in the far corner. A few minutes later, we pull out of the driveway in my Aston Martin.

"You had this in the garage, all this time?"

I raise my shoulders. "I had Sinner equip the place with the essentials."

"Remind me to thank him..." He shakes my head, "No, actually, don't. That would only feed into the bastard's ego, and he has more than enough of that to go around."

"As do you."

"And you," he reminds me.

"It's what got us into this situation in the first place."

Baron stares straight ahead.

"Fuck," I slam my palm down on the steering wheel. "Bloody fuck." I turn onto the highway, press down on the accelerator. "How much further?"

"Another few miles." Baron repeatedly glances down at the phone, then up at the road, finally cautioning me, "Slow down. We should be coming up to it."

I lose speed, search the area as I drive.

"There," Baron exclaims.

I slam on the brakes, park on the side of the road. By the time I am out of the car, he's already at the SUV. He races over to the passenger side and freezes. "She's not here."

I take in the car's front end, which is crumpled against the tree. "The airbags deployed," I state unnecessarily.

"Where the fuck is she?" he swears.

I walk around to the driver's side, spot the trampled grass around the space. "Look at this"

Baron stalks around the car, follows my gaze, and his features pale. "Fuck," he growls. "Fuck, fuck, fuck."

"They got to her."

"We need to find her before they hurt her."

Baron's phone rings just then. We glance at each other, then he answers the phone. "Archer?" He listens for a few seconds, then disconnects and stares at me, "The man you injured at the church? He's awake."

Two hours later, we pull up at the safehouse outside of London, where both the homeless guy and the guy who'd broken into Ava's studio, have been taken.

I park the car behind two other SUVs and follow Baron into the house. We walk past the empty living room to the bedroom where the homeless guy is. Archer straightens from his position by the window.

"Has he spoken?" Baron takes in the figure on the bed.

"Not yet." Weston glances up from his chair next to the bed. When Archer had moved the injured men here for their own safety, Weston had opted to come with them, staying available to monitor their progress.

I walk around to stand over the man. He's a big man, and his bulk takes up most of the narrow bed. His eyes are shut, his hair in disarray. His features are ashen, the marks around his neck standing out in contrast against his skin. I curl my fingers into fists. I should have killed the bastard; too bad he didn't die. I take a step forward and Baron grabs my shoulder.

I turn to him and he shakes his head. "Let me question him."

I scowl. "Asshole was responsible for what happened to us."

"And he may have information that can help us find her," he reminds me. "Information that I can pry from him."

I open my mouth to protest and he raises his hand, "This is my specialty, Ed." He rolls his shoulders, then continues, "The guy who broke into Ava's studio—the one you shot? He would have more information on why Ava was kidnapped."

"But he's still unconscious," I point out. "Whereas the homeless guy is awake."

Baron purses his lips.

"Also, he did mention that he's involved with the Mafia." I add, "Surely, he must know something about Ava's abduction?"

The sound of a car pulling up outside reaches us. This is followed by the sound of a door slamming, then footsteps approaching from the front of the house. We exchange glances, then look at Archer.

"Did you alert the rest of the Seven?" Baron asks him.

"I did," Weston confirms.

"What the fuck?" I scowl at Weston.

"Why did you do that?" Baron growls, before turning to Archer, "Did you know about this?"

"Uh." He rubs the back of his neck, "It's—"

"Not his fault," Weston interjects. "I threatened to go to the cops unless he agreed to let me call the others."

"The fuck?" I turn on Wes, "Why would you do that?"

"Because you guys need back up." Weston leans forward in his chair. "Something which you two are too proud to ask for. So, I took the decision out of your hands."

"Seriously?" Baron balls his fists at his sides. "It's bad enough we agreed to let you monitor this bastard in the safehouse."

"Not that you had a choice. I am his doctor and he's my patient." He leans forward to check the vitals of the guy, who stirs.

"He doesn't deserve an ounce of care," I growl. "Bastard's behind our kidnapping... And chances are, the same people are behind Ava's kidnapping."

"Ava?" Weston straightens. "The hell you talking about?"

"She ran out on us," Baron rubs the back of his neck, "and they took her."

"And both of you couldn't do anything about it?" Weston scowls.

Baron's face flushes. He leans forward and I slap a hand in his chest,

"Easy, ol' chap, we need to keep our cool here."

"This bastard," Baron glares at the man on the bed, "he'd better have some answers."

The sound of wheels on gravel reaches us, car doors slam, then Damian walks in, followed by Arpad, Saint, and finally, Sinner.

They take up positions around the room.

"Well?" Sinner levels his gaze at Baron, "You going to question him or what?"

Baron draws in a breath. Degree by degree, he seems to force himself to relax. He unfurls his fists, rolls his shoulders. He pulls another chair up to the bed. He stares at the features of the man on the bed, then stiffens.

"Shit," he swears aloud, "now I know where I've seen him before."

"You've seen him before?" I growl, and he nods.

"I thought I recognized him when I first saw him, but couldn't place him."

"But you can now?" Arpad straightens.

"Yeah." Baron blows out a breath and looks at Saint. "Remember the time you and I fought at the underground parking lot and I defeated you?"

"You didn't defeat me."

"Sure, I did," Baron smirks, "though that's not the point." His features harden. "I saw him in the crowd that day."

"You did?" Arpad frowns.

"You sure?" Sinner asks.

"Yeah." Baron squares his shoulders. "Best to get on with the questioning." He glances toward me, "Do you know his name?"

"Anton," Weston interjects, "Anton Ruzlovksy."

I whip my head around, "He's Russian?"

Arpad stiffens; he stares hard at the figure on the bed. "I am going to call Nikolai in on this."

Arpad's wife is Nikolai's sister; their father is Pakhan of the Bratva. Arpad, himself, is part of the Bratva...as a special consultant, of sorts...or so he claims. Asshole is probably more in with the Bratva than he is letting on.

He straightens, exchanges a glance with Baron, who nods. Arpad pulls out his phone and walks out, while Baron leans over the man, "Anton, can you hear me?"

Anton's eyes flutter.

"Anton Ruzlovsky?" Baron's voice is firm, "Nod if you can hear me, Anton."

Anton swallows. His eyes flutter again, then he nods almost imperceptibly.

"Good," Baron says in an encouraging tone. "I'm Baron. Baron Masters. Can you tell me who you work for, Anton?"

He opens and shuts his mouth, but nothing emerges.

"His vocal chords suffered some trauma," Weston mutters, "but he should be able to speak."

"Can you hear me, Anton?" Baron asks.

Anton nods.

"What do you have to do with Ava's kidnapping?"

The guys stiffen.

"Ava was taken?" Sinner snaps.

Neither Baron nor I reply.

"Fuck," Saint growls, "this asshole had better start talking, and fast."

I scowl down at the prone figure, who takes in the faces around the room. His chest planes move.

"Anton, hey!" Baron snaps his fingers and Anton jerks his attention back to him. "Ava," Baron growls, "what do you know about Ava's abduction?"

His lips move. Baron presses his ear close to Anton's mouth.

He clenches his jaw. "You are lying," Baron growls. "You do realize, we are not going to go easy on you. The only way you can alleviate what's coming to you, is if you tell us the truth."

Anton swallows, then shakes his head again. His lips move and Baron straightens. "Asshole insists he had nothing to do with the kidnapping."

Anger coils in my gut. "We don't have time for this," I growl. "We're here holding our dicks in our hands, while Ava is, at this moment, being held by kidnappers."

"I know," Baron growls, "I fucking know."

"Ed," Damian cautions me, "take it easy, man."

I glare at Baron, who glowers back at me.

"You too, Baron," Damian says in a low voice. "The two of you fighting is not going to help anyone, especially not Ava."

Sinner straightens. "Ask the asshole who's behind the incident? Who did he give the information to?"

"Who did you work for, Anton?" Baron growls. "Who asked you for information on the seven boys which led to their kidnapping?"

His lips move and Baron leans forward. "What was that? Can you repeat yourself?" Anton's lips move again. Baron stiffens; he stares at me. "Byron?" He scowls. "Did you say Byron?"

A ripple of tension runs round the room. I scowl at the prone man. "Do you have a full name, you asshole?"

Baron holds up a hand and I purse my lips. "Ask him Baron," I insist and Baron glares at me, before turning to the guy.

"Do you have a full name for us? Does Byron have a surname?"

The man's lips move again. Baron leans in, presses his ear close to the man's mouth. His scowl deepens. "Michael Byron? Is that right, Anton?"

Anton nods.

"Did he send you to talk to us?"

Anton shakes his head.

"So why have you been interacting with each of the Seven? Why have you been appearing at crucial junctures at each of their lives? Why have you been tracking them?"

Anton's lips twist, he whispers again, and Baron pulls back to stare at him, "You expect me to believe that?"

Anton's lips curve. His shoulders shake. Is the asshole laughing? What the fuck? I move forward, but Baron reacts before me. He shoots out his hand and his palm connects with Anton's cheek. Anton coughs, or at least I think that's what he does because no sound emerges. His face reddens and spittle flies out of his mouth. He shakes his head, then beckons Baron closer.

Baron leans in and Anton tips up his chin. The tendons of his throat strain. "It's true," he whispers, and I catch the words this time. "All of it." He swallows. "I wanted to make up for what my actions did to all of you. I wanted to make sure you found some measure of happiness."

"We didn't need your help," Saint growls. "We were doing fine on our own."

Anton snickers. Saint's face reddens. He thrusts his chest out, takes a step forward, and Sinner grabs his shoulder.

"Steady, ol' chap," Sinner mutters, "he's trying to get you worked up."

"Well, he's succeeding." Saint shakes off Sinner's arm. "Asshole has two seconds to come through with some information of use, else I swear, I am going to finish what Father—I mean, Edward here, started."

I scowl at him. "I am no longer a priest, you prick. Best remember that."

"Priest? Somehow, now that you are no longer one, this new nickname suits you." Saint looks me up and down, "Hey, Priest." He snickers, "How are you, Priest?"

I ball my fists at my sides, glare at him. "The fuck is your problem, you piss-head?"

"Welcome to the real world, ol' chap," Saint grins, "where you are allowed to speak your mind without fear of a larger power striking you down for your sins... Unless you are like our man on the bed here, in which case, it's only a matter of time before they catch up with you. And no one can save you from what's about to come next." He glares at Anton, "You catch my drift, motherfucker?"

"You heard the guy." Baron straightens his spine. "You have one last chance to tell us something that's going to help find Ava, else I am going to let Saint, here, take a shot at you, and I can tell you, there's nothing holding him back. Not the law, not the fear of any repercussions. Sadly, the man has enough money to buy out not just the cops, but also governments, if needed, not to mention the Mafia. He can kill you right now and vanish your body and no one would ever know."

Anton's lips twist... Did the asshole just smirk? I glare at his face. "So, you expect us to believe that you followed us around to make sure our lives didn't go to shit?"

He nods.

"And you came to me to confess, because you knew I was one of the Seven?" I scoff.

He stills, then nods again.

This doesn't make sense. I stare at him, hard. "I still don't understand why you came to see me. Clearly, you wanted me to lose control. You knew there was a good probability I'd react exactly the way I did with you... Unless..." I roll my shoulders. "Unless you guessed that I was at the end of my tether. You knew I was falling for Ava and conflicted about how to balance my feelings for her with my calling."

He tilts his head.

"You were hoping that your revelations would push me over the edge, that it would make me do something that I would regret enough to leave the priesthood? That it would nudge me toward her?"

His lips twitch and anger curls in my chest. My blood hums and my pulse rate ratchets up. I step toward him. "Or were you hoping to get exactly the kind of reaction you got from me, where I almost killed you? Did you hope to die in church at the hands of a man of God as a way of repenting for your sins?"

Asshole stays quiet. He doesn't even blink.

"Answer me, you motherfucker," I bark. "What kind of game were you playing when you came to see me?"

His jaw hardens but he doesn't say a word. Bloody-fucking-hell. I clench my fists at my sides.

He'd better start speaking, or else, Saint will have to get in line behind me. Strange how, once you go down the path of sin... Each progressive one becomes simpler, easier, faster until you forget the true nature of your actions, until everything is tainted by the same brush, until... To err becomes a part of you...and then you walk the line between light and dark, knowing you'll always be a shade of grey. It's only the intensity of that in-between color which changes... And well, that doesn't count for much. It's still grey.

"You have one minute," Baron growls, "sixty seconds before I step away and let these guys beat it out of you..." he shrugs, "so what's it going to be?"

Anton glances around the room, then back at Baron. He tips up his chin and Baron places his ear next to Anton's mouth again. Anton's lips move. Baron's features grow stonier. He shoves back his chair and heads for the door. I follow him.

"We're coming with you." Sinner pushes away from the wall.

"No." We both say in unison. I nod, then Baron turns to glance at the guys.

"This one's ours."

31

"My happiest moments are in a car. Looking out the window, the music on full blast, without a care in the world. I just like watching the world go by. I get this overwhelming feeling as I pass fields upon fields or people upon people. It's like I'm in a film. And then, that perfect song comes on and the sun shines and it's pure happiness."

-From Ava's Diary

Ava

My head pounds and my mouth is so dry. I swallow and my throat hurts. I try to move and my shoulder screams. I try to open my eyes, only to find my eyelids are glued together. I pry them apart, and stars burst behind my eyes. I groan, and the sound echoes around the space. Where am I? What the hell happened? I remember being in the car... The deer... I'd veered off the road. I remember the headlights of the car lighting up the tree and then... Nothing. Shit, I must have crashed. So how did I get here? I try to move, find my arms are bound behind me. I glance down to find my legs are tied to the legs of the chair that I am seated on. What the hell?

My heart begins to race. Had they found me? The men who had assaulted me, then broken into the studio... Had they finally gotten to me? It must have been them who chased me on the highway. And I'd thought it was my guys. Shit, if only it had been Baron and Edward who had been after me. I never should have left the house...but they hadn't included me in their decisions and I had been so mad. Shit, had they realized that I was gone? Would they come in search of me? Of course, they would, but how quickly could they find me?

A bead of sweat slides down my back.

I glance around the space, taking in the rest of the room. High ceilings, walls which must have been white at one point but which are now a faded gray. Near the doorway there's a pile of cloth—looks like faded carpet. Had someone bought the material with the hope of doing up this room, then abandoned it? A ray of sunlight filters in through the only window, and motes of dust dance in its path. I stare at them, watch as they are highlighted by the sunshine, only to disappear.

Shit, life really is fleeting. Time doesn't wait for anyone. It hadn't for my mother. She's gone, and we are left grappling in the aftermath. A family broken and grieving for her, yet unable to come together to comfort each other. My father had done the right thing. He'd moved on, not from my mother, but from wallowing in self-pity. He'll never forget her and he's chosen to honor her memory by living.

And me? I am still stuck there—in my head, a girl without a mother, someone who misses her so much, and yet, has refused to spend time with her family. I've rebuffed my sister at every turn, not wanting to comfort her or let myself be comforted. I've allowed my selfishness to override everything else. I've clung to my grief, nurtured it, not allowed anyone or anything to touch it. I've held it close, reveled in it, thinking as long as I had it, I had a connection with my mother. I am still holding onto the memory of how it was to be with her. As long as I house that grief in me... At least, I have some last vestige of connection to her physically... I haven't wanted to move on and I have blamed my family for dealing with it, for coming to terms with it, for wanting to honor her memory by staying in the present. Me... I am still stuck there...with her...the memory of the last breath that she took.

And then, when I had been so attracted to both of them, it had only pushed me to withdraw into myself. No wonder I hadn't been able to make sense of my feelings for both of them. No wonder I hadn't been able to choose. How could I, when so much of me was still trapped in coming to terms with the grief in my life? The grief I am ready to relinquish.

No, I won't forget my mother...but... I am ready to live for her... Ready to make her proud of me. To fulfill my potential completely, to let my true nature shine in everything I do. Whether it is dancing...or love. I am going to give it my all... I am finally ready to make my choice. I know what I want. I know who I want to spend the rest of my life with, and no asshole kidnapers are going to come between me and the kind of life I have always wanted.

Heat presses down on my shoulders and sweat beads my forehead. Why is it so hot? Did they crank up the heating in here? I glance outside at the sun shining through the window, the warmth amplified by the glass panes. Where are Baron and Edward? Do they know where to look? If they don't find me... No, they will. They are smart. More than smart, they are tenacious. They'll track me down. They wouldn't let anything happen to me.

My palms sweat. I tug on the ropes that restrain my hands, but it only seems to tighten them further. Shit, whoever tied me up knew what they were doing. I force myself to relax my muscles, blinking away the sweat that drips into my eyes. Why the hell is it like a sauna in here?

A low vibration hums through the space and the hair on the back of my neck stands on end. Shit, what was that? What the hell is happening? I strain my ears, close my eyes, and try to focus in on the sounds. The scent of smoke reaches me. I cough, snap open my eyes. Is someone smoking out there? The scent of burning intensifies. Bloody hell, is the house on fire? My heart begins to race. "Help," I yell, "Help me!"

I tug on my ropes, yank at them, but they don't give. I push down with my feet, managing to move the chair slightly. My muscles protest. Sweat pours down my face. Shit, this is not good, not good. "Help," I cry out again. There's silence, except for the crackling sound, which I swear, has grown louder. The heat in the room pushes down on my chest, my shoulders. My throat closes; the band around my chest tightens. Shit, if there's a fire, am I going to stay here like a sitting duck? I stare at the door, then back at the window. If only I could creep a little closer. Surely, the air nearer to the pane would be fresher?

I push against the floor, leaning toward the window. This time the chair moves a little more. I force myself to push again, and again. My breath catches, panting. I focus on the window pane. I've managed to move, maybe a few inches. It's just the angle at which I have been tied to the chair—it's all wrong. OMG! I am going to burn in here. Shit, shit, shit.

Why are the guys not here? Surely, they should have figured out where I am by now? And if they haven't? What if there are no clues to lead them here? What if they have no idea where to look?

Tendrils of smoke slither in from under the door frame and I cry out.

"Please, no," I gasp, "no, no, no." I push against the floor, leaning in the direction of the window. Pretend it's a belly dance, but one where you are burdened with weights. Where your arms and legs are bound and it's up to you how well you can put the muscles you've gained thus far to use.

I undulate my hips, wriggle my torso, even as I push my heels into the ground and careen to the right. With a screech the chair moves toward the window. I repeat the action, and again. My head pounds, my heart hammers so hard against my chest that I am sure it's going to break through my ribcage. I pant, draw in a breath and cough. I panic as I realize the room is filling with smoke. Shit. My eyes water and my pulse thuds at my temples. Damn, if I am going to go down without a fight. I lean my torso to the right, push off with my feet. This time, the chair careens to the right, then tips over. "No..." I scream as the chair hits the floor, my cheek smashes into the wooden planks, the reverberations sweep through me, and the hammering in my head intensifies. "No...please." I sob, "No, I don't want to die like this. Please."

32

Baron

"What the fuck is that?"

I stare through the windshield at the smoke that rises into the air. Edward leans forward, peering through the windshield. "Fuck." He presses down on the accelerator and the car leaps forward. He negotiates the winding country road, screeching around the next corner, as I fix my gaze on the plumes of black smoke.

"If anything happens to her, I'll never forgive myself," I reach for the phone, dial 999. As soon as the operator comes on the line I give them the location of the fire, then hang up.

Edward clutches the steering wheel, the skin stretching white across his knuckles. "F-u-c-k!" he yells. "This is fucked up; why the hell would they want to harm her?"

"To get to us?"

"We were wrong in not discussing everything openly with her." He slams his fist on the steering wheel and the car wobbles.

I brace myself against the door, staying focused on the scene ahead, "If we get her out unhurt... I'll..." I can't bring myself to say it. I can't walk away from her, can I? But I'd heard her tell Edward that she loved him. That must mean something, right? I should have walked away when Edward had asked me to. I hadn't, and now, here she is, likely trapped in the burning house.

"Fuck." I grab my hair and tug on it. "She's going to be fine; she has to be fine."

Edward careens around the next corner, pulls into the driveway of the house. I've unbuckled my belt and jumped out before the vehicle has come to a stop. I race toward the doorway, Edward in on my heels.

I try to push open the door and it doesn't budge. I put my shoulder to it and it barely moves. "Motherfucker."

Edward notches his shoulder against the door "On my count: one, two three..." We put our strength behind it and the door shudders.

"Once more," he grunts. "One, two three..."

We smash our shoulders against the door and it creaks, groans, then comes away at the hinges. We stamp across the fallen door, into the hallway. Smoke fills the hallway, and I cough. Heat sears my skin, sweat beads my forehead.

"Fuck." My heart pumps in my chest like it wants to escape. "This is not good."

"Where the fuck could she be?" Edward cries.

We stare around the space. "I'll take the stairs, you check the rooms on this floor."

"Hurry," he urges me.

We split up, I race for the steps, hit the landing on the first floor. Glance down the corridor and swear. Smoke swirls across the space. I tear off my jacket, hold it to my nose. Four rooms; there are four on this floor.

Ahead, flames zip up the doorframe. The door catches fire then crashes to the floor. The sound sweeps through my mind—the zing of bullets, the cries of soldiers. All of it overwhelms me. My stomach churns, bile boils up my throat. Images flood my mind and I am powerless to stop the flashback.

Smoke, so much smoke, so thick that I can't see in front of me. My foot brushes something. I glance down, take in the charred body. My guts twist. Bile splashes up my throat. I swallow down the acidic taste, grip my gun, keep going. I can't see my hand in front of my face. Cries fill the space, more bullets, the thump of bodies hitting the ground. I keep my gaze trained forward. Keep moving. I just need to get to the other side. A bullet whizzes past me. My pulse rate ratchets up. Adrenaline laces my blood. I train my gun, take aim and fire. And again. And again.

There's a touch on my shoulder and I snap out of the memory. I turn to find Edward next to me.

"She's not on the ground floor." He coughs. "I am going to search the rooms on the top floor." He peers into my face, "You got this?"

"Yeah." I swallow.

I pull away, head for the first room, kick down the door, and see it's empty. Head for the second one, step through the doorway. Smoke fills the space. I cough, try to draw a breath and my lungs burn. The smoke parts, I glance around the space, realize she's not here. I race down the corridor, and up the stairs. As I reach the landing, I hear Edward cry out, "I found her."

I spring forward, toward the only room with an open door. I dash through the smoke, to find him bent over a prone figure tied to an upturned chair.

"Fuck." I rush to him, drop to my knees.

"Found her unconscious," he murmurs, as he unties the ropes on her feet.

I reach for the knots that tether her wrists together. My fingers slip. I swear, draw in a breath, then pick at the knot again. It loosens. I pull the rope apart, attack the second knot, which falls away. I tug at the rope again and it slackens enough for me to pull it down and off of her.

She slips from the chair and I grab her just as Ed completes untying the ropes on her feet. I haul her up in my arms, move toward the door just as a stack of fabric near the doorway catch fire.

I've barely made it through before a lick of fire flares up behind me. I turn, to find Edward on my heels. Behind him the doorframe is on fire. I head for the stairs and am halfway down the last flight when I realize Edward is not with me. I turn to find him frozen at the top of the stairs. What the hell? I retrace my way up the stairs, and pause a couple of steps below him, "Edward," I yell, "What's wrong?"

Sweat beads his forehead, his gaze is focused on a point in the distance. His muscles are locked, and he seems frozen, in shock? Shit, "Edward!" I growl, "Get a grip, man." I step up next to him, nudge him with my shoulder, "Ed! Jesus Christ, man, snap the fuck out of it."

He blinks, then turns his gaze on me, "Baron?" He murmurs, before his gaze moves to the woman in my arms.

"Go," he gestures, "get her to safety."

"Oh, I will, I promise, but you are coming."

He tilts his head, "I can't."

"The fuck you mean?"

"I must atone for my sins."

"Sins? What sins are you talking about?"

"I gave him up and now I must pay my due." His voice is without inflection as if he is in a dream, or in shock? "This is not the fucking time to have a crisis of faith." I snap, "You need to come with me, now."

He shakes his head, "Take her out of here, Baron."

Behind us, something crashes to the floor and the entire building seems to shudder.

"Fuck." I glare at him, "I am not leaving without you."

"Ava." His voice grows haunted. He glances down at her again, then back at my face. "She's the priority here."

I hesitate.

"Go." He points down the stairs, "Go, before it's too late. I'll be right behind you."

Fuck, fuck, fuck. No way, am I leaving him, but if I hesitate, I'll endanger Ava as well. Bloody hell. I pull away from my friend and race down the last flight of steps, only to slip. I lose my footing, tumble down the rest of the stairs and turn my body at the last second to cushion the impact.

Her limp body collapses on top of mine. My back hits the floor and pain flashes behind my eyes. My guts churn, nausea bubbles up, and I swallow it down. I draw in a breath, scoop her up in my arms as I straighten, then race out of the doorway. I draw in gusts of fresh air as I place her down on the grass, then lean away, coughing, gasping. Next to me, she stirs, coughing, and I turn to her. I cup her face, "Eve?" I plead. "Ava, open your eyes. Please."

Her eyelids flicker open. Her gaze widens as she takes in my features. "Baron." She swallows, "Oh, my god, Baron." She coughs as she rises up and throws her arms around my neck, "The fire... I was so afraid."

"You're safe." I close my arms around her, bury my face in her hair. Smoke, burning wood, and below that, the faint scent of jasmine. My heart stutters. "Fuck, Ava, if anything had happened to you..."

"I'm fine." She coughs again. "I knew you'd come." She begins to cry, "Knew you and Edward would find me in time."

I stiffen and she must sense the tension in me, for she pulls back, and peers into my face, "Edward." She swallows, "Where's Ed?"

"The important thing is that you're safe."

"Edward." She grabs at my collar, "Where's Edward, Baron?"

I stare toward the burning house, then back at her.

"No," she shakes her head, "no, no, no." She scrambles away from me.

"Ava, stop."

"Oh, no," she snaps, "don't you dare ask me to stop. If Edward's in there, I am going in." She staggers to her feet, hobbles toward the flames. I spring up, dash after her and grab her arm, "He'll be fine. He said he'd be right behind us."

Just then a creaking sound reaches us. We glance up to find flames shooting up from the roof of the house.

"No!" she screams. "No, Edward!"

She tries to break free and I throw my arms around her, "Shh, Ava, please..."

"No!" she screams and turns in my arms. "I can't let anything happen to him, Baron." She grabs my collar and rises up to tiptoe, "I love him, don't you understand?"

Something cold stabs at my chest. I glance down at her sobbing face.

"You love him?"

"Yes." She sobs, "Please, help him, Baron, please... He went in there to save me. If anything happens to him, I'll never be able to forgive myself. Please, Baron... Please."

I circle her wrists, pull them away from my collar, before I release her. Then I brush past her and walk into the burning house.

33

Edward

I glance over my shoulder at the flames that lick the far end of the corridor. If I am going to die, at least, I know that she is safe. That I'll be sacrificing myself for her.

The crown molding catches fire. The flames edge toward me as I watch, trapped in my own personal hell.

If there was going to be a way for me to go, then it makes sense it would be like this—bathed in fire, purified of my sins. The cross that I have borne since the incident. The event that had scarred my life, had ruined me for any relationship... Until her. She had given me a reason to haul myself out of the unfeeling, unseeing existence I had settled for.

I believed I had found my calling... And in those years, I had found a certain kind of peace, dedicating myself to the higher good... Focusing on everything else... Anything else, but the festering mass of pain deep inside that had only grown, bigger, wider, more solid with time... Until it had lodged in my gut, had weighed me down, anchored me to a state of being from which I couldn't escape.

If becoming a priest was the single most courageous act I had undertaken, then walking away from everything familiar was the riskiest one. One I hadn't hesitated to take, because the path led to her. She saved my life, and I willingly sacrifice myself for her...and in that...there is a certain poetic justice.

I will die, consumed by the fire that will finally purify me. That will wipe away the hate I carry deep inside, the scars, which are all that remain of the boy I had once been.

And she won't be alone. She has Baron to protect her, to take care of her. She'll be safe and happy. My woman and my best friend. I clutch my fingers at my sides. My woman. Mine. Fuck... I close my eyes. Why is it I find it so difficult to let go of her, even now?

Baron is right for her. He isn't tainted, like me. He is right for her. He has to be. Fucking Baron. Seems, he was always destined to come out ahead of me... It's not a fucking competition, Ed.

Of course, it is. The race to capture the heart of a woman who means so much to me... It's right I don't win this one. I don't deserve her.

"Priest, motherfucker."

I snap my eyes open, turn to find Baron, racing up the stairs.

"The fuck you doing, asshole?" He pants as he comes to a stop next me.

"What the fuck is it to you?" I scowl.

"I don't give a rat's ass what you do to yourself, but the woman out there... She's losing her shit, and if you don't get out of the fire, she's walking right into it with you."

I lower my chin to my chest, "I don't fucking deserve her, man."

"You can say that again." Baron growls, "But it's not for you or for me to decide. She gets the final choice in this matter." His jaw tics. "And she chooses you."

"What?" She wants me? She chose me? She needs me? She wants to be with me? I frown and Baron's features soften; there's an indecipherable look in his eyes.

"Yeah," he closes the distance between us, "she wants you, man. You're her first love. Hell, it was always you and her. Me? I was the interloper."

"You watched over her, took care of her while I sorted my shit out."

"And that's all it was ever meant to be." Baron's features harden. "I was wrong to think otherwise. I should have stayed true to my word to you. I should have bowed out a while ago... It's just... I couldn't."

"Baron, I—"

Fire licks up the wall, the chandelier hanging from the ceiling in the hallway shudders before the crystals explode. "Fuck." I throw up my arm to protect my face. Pain slices up my side. "Shit, we need to get out of here."

"Now, you're talking." He bares his teeth.

There's a high-pitched whine, and the ceiling above us groans.

"Motherfucker." Baron charges down the steps, and I follow him.
The stairway seems to tremble. Intense heat overwhelms me.
Behind us the crackling, popping sound intensifies. Flames hiss and a lick of fire lashes out from the side. I duck, then jump down the last step.

34

Ava

Come on, come on, where are the two of you?

I gaze at the burning house, at the flames that leap up into the sky. The fire's gotten even more fierce in the last few minutes. Shit, shit, shit.

It's bad enough that they risked their lives to save me. I shouldn't have sent Baron in there...but Edward. Oh, my god, Ed. How could I have allowed him to be consumed by the fire? They are going to be okay; they have to be. The sirens wail in the distance and I close my eyes and sob. Help is on its way. It's going to be fine, you guys. Just make it out of there. Please, just make it out.

Only when my knees touch the ground do I realize that I am praying. I clasp my palms together, stare at the entrance of the house. Come on, come on, please.

God, I am so sorry that I tempted him away from you. Please don't take your anger out on him. Please. Let them both live. Please I beg you.

The sirens draw closer, then the fire-engine pulls up next to me. The firefighters jump out. One of them squats next to me. He's saying something, but I can't focus. Can't take my gaze off the doorway. Come on, you guys. What's taking you so long?

The firefighters swing into action. They unravel their hoses, train them on the house. A torrent of water zooms forth. Someone places a blanket around my shoulders. My thighs tremble and my heart flip flops in my chest. I stare at the doorway. Please, please, please.

"Miss, you have to move away; you are too close to the fire."

I shake off the arms that grip me. Not close enough. I am not nearly close enough. Please, you have both got to make it through. I'll never forgive myself if anything happens to either of you.

I close my eyes, tilt my chin-up. Please, if you are up there and watching over us, I am sorry if I took him away from you. You know I didn't do it to hurt you. I wasn't being vindictive. It just felt right. Please don't punish him for that.

More sirens sound, then an ambulance drives up and a medic jumps out. Someone's talking to me. I ignore them. Please, please, please. I repeat the word like a mantra. If anything happens to either of them...please no, you can't be that cruel. Please help them. Please.

A cry goes up around me. I snap my eyes open, lower my gaze to the door, to the two figures outlined against the burning inferno. I am on my feet and running. They stagger toward me and I throw myself at them. Edward catches me, then sinks to the ground, with me on top of him. "Ohmigod, ohmigod," I blubber, "ohmigod, Ed. I thought I'd lost you."

He rubs his palm down my hair and his fingers catch in a knot. My scalp tingles and it's so familiar, so comforting, that my tears intensify.

"Shh," he holds me close, "it's okay, I am here."

"Thank god, Baron got to you in time."

Edward kisses my forehead, "He saved my life." He glances past me, "Baron, where is he?"

"He was right here." I turn around to find he's gone. "Wait, where did he go? Baron?" I call.

A few firemen surround us. One of them wraps the blanket around me again. "Miss," he says firmly, "we need to check him out and treat his wounds."

"Of course." I move away from Ed, who holds out his arm.

"Don't go too far." He smirks.

"I won't," I promise, half-smiling, half-crying. I glance around for Baron and can't see him anywhere.

One of the medics tends to my wounds. Another attends to Edward. They place a mask over his face, then strap him onto the stretcher. I follow him toward the ambulance, glancing around again. Where the hell is Baron?

One of the medics walks past me and I hail him, "Excuse me, do you know what happened to the second man who walked out of the building?"

"If you mean the guy who saved your friend, he left."

"What do you mean, he left?"

The medic raises a shoulder, "He refused to be treated."

"But...he was hurt. How could you just allow him to leave?"

"Can't force him to accept help, ma'am." The medic urges me into the ambulance. Shit, shit, shit. This isn't good. It can't be good. Why did Baron leave and without saying a word to me or Edward?

The medic slams the door of the ambulance, which sets off. I bite down on my lower lip. My fingers tremble, and I squeeze them together in front of me.

Edward pulls the oxygen mask off of his face. The medic protests and he dismisses her concern. "Just need a second," he insists.

She frowns, then nods at him.

He turns to me, "What's wrong, Eve?"

"It's Baron," I murmur, "he left."

"What do you mean, left?"

"He walked away. One of the medics saw him leave. He literally just took off, without saying a word to me. Why would he do that, Ed?"

Edward draws in a breath. "Maybe," he says carefully, "maybe he's telling you by his actions what he can't say in words."

"You mean," I swallow, "you mean, this is him saying goodbye?"

He reaches over and takes my hand in his, "You knew this was inevitable, Eve." He weaves his fingers with mine. "One of us was always going to come away empty-handed."

"It's not fair." A tear runs down my cheek. "I love him, Ed. I love both of you."

"I know." He tugs and I sink down on the floor of the ambulance. I place my head on his chest. He flinches.

"Shit," I mutter, "you're hurt."

"Nothing I can't bear," he assures me. "I love you, Eve." He runs his fingers down my hair.

I turn my nose into his chest, breathe in the scent of smoke, of cut grass and testosterone. My belly trembles, my thighs clench, yet the emptiness in my chest gapes. More tears well up and I swallow them down. "I love you too, Ed."

A day later, I park the Aston Martin in front of my house. Edward had wanted to drive, but when I'd pointed out that he was on painkillers to combat the burns he'd suffered, he hadn't protested.

His wounds hadn't been extensive though, thank God. All in all, we had escaped with minor injuries, considering how serious the fire had been.

Within hours of arriving at the hospital, the rest of the Seven had turned up, wives in tow. The men had huddled in conversation with Edward over the next few hours, while the women, including Isla, had kept me company.

I'd sensed their curiosity about the situation, though none of them had asked me where Baron was, and for that, I was grateful.

It seems he made my choice for me... Which is fine. I had told him that I loved Edward, after all; and I do. I am happy to be coming home with him, right?

But why couldn't he have told me that face-to-face? Why did he have to leave without a word? I had tried calling him, but had only gotten his voice mail. I'd tried texting him, but he hadn't replied.

None of the Seven had heard from him either.

He had disappeared on his friends once before... And apparently, he is doing it again now. Does he just want to lay low for the moment? Away from me...and his friends. He had returned to his life and now, thanks to me, he had decided to go quiet on them again. Shit, I curl my fingers around the wheel.

"You, okay?" Edward turns to me. He's wearing a black T-shirt, a jacket on top, and jeans with his usual shit-kicker boots. I am still getting used to seeing him in such normal clothes, I guess. With his hair long enough to brush his collar and the makings of a beard clinging to his chin... He looks so different... So rough. So not like the sleek, powerful man I saw slicing through the pool that day. He's the same...yet not. And I know I caused the change in him... And it's thrilling, but also...a little bit overwhelming. Does anyone want to take on the onus of changing someone else's life that completely? Had meeting me caused him more harm than good?

"Don't," he mutters. He reaches out, places his palm against my cheek, "Don't overthink it."

"Yeah." I glance away and he pulls his hand back.

"It's safe for you to go back home, if that's what you are worried about."

Ed had told me that the man he'd almost killed—Anton was his name—had given them more information on the men who were behind the attacks and my abduction. With Archer's help, they had tracked down the men as they had been about to board a flight to Sicily. The men had confessed to all the attacks on me, including kidnapping me then setting the building on fire before leaving. They said that they were only following instructions. Their goal had been to send a message to the Seven, to stop enquiring after the Mafia.

They should have known that everything they did would only strengthen the resolve of the Seven to go after whoever was behind the attacks.

In this case, the Seven had made the decision to hand the two men over to the police, along with the third man, who is still unconscious. While the Seven prefer to stay away from the cops on most occasion, this time, they felt it was the best way to put the men behind bars long enough for them to not be a threat to us anymore. Of course, Ed mentioned, they have a contact in the police force who helped them to put the men away with the least fuss possible.

Of course, they do. The Seven are nothing, if not powerful and resourceful. They take care of their own. Which is why I don't understand why they've decided to allow Baron this time away? I mean, aren't they concerned that he might be upset enough to do something that he shouldn't?

I turn to Edward. "I am not worried about my safety," I murmur, "I know you guys have dealt with my..." I swallow, "my attackers."

Yeah, it is still difficult to say that aloud. Given a choice, I'd prefer to forget about how they'd ambushed me, then broken into my studio, and ultimately, kidnapped me and left me, restrained, in a burning building. Thankfully, there are no other lasting injuries, though the last two nights I still haven't slept properly. Which is to be expected. It had been an emotionally traumatic experience. And this, despite the fact that I had been so sure that the guys would get to me.

I can only imagine how difficult it must have been for them after the incident. I had been kidnapped and held for a few hours. They had been kidnapped and held for closer to a month. The kind of scars they both carry... Are, clearly, so much more intense.

"Then what is it...?" he murmurs. "You can tell me, babe."

"It's..." I close my eyes, "It's nothing."

"It's something."

How can I tell him, that while I am happy to be with him, a part of me misses Baron? Somehow, I had not thought that he would leave. While I'd chosen Edward...technically... I hadn't realized that's what I was doing, and I hadn't completely comprehended that it meant losing Baron. Shit, why do I feel so...forlorn? Like I lost something vital, something I didn't know had ended, until it was gone.

"It's Baron, isn't it?" Edward blows out a breath, "You're thinking of him."

"No," I lie, "it's just...everything over the last few days has been so much to take in."

I sense him peruse my features and I turn my face away. If I meet his gaze now, he'll see exactly how little truth there is in what I am telling him.

I push open the car door and walk around to the curb. Edward steps out. His ankle is bandaged, and he has a cane to help him walk. It's just a sprain. The burns on his back are more serious and will require daily visits to the burn unit for debridement.

I tuck my handbag under my arm—a new handbag that Isla had gotten for me. She'd also helped with packing my clothes at Edward's house. Archer had packed up some of Edward's things and helped transfer everything to my place.

I'd asked him about Baron, but Archer had confessed that he didn't know where Baron was. He'd told me that he was moving Baron's things into storage. That's when I'd asked him for Baron's home address—and he'd revealed that Baron had left the city. Temporarily, at any rate.

Which is good. It's good that he's away, that there is no temptation to go check on him.

No, I have Edward. The man I had fallen in love with first. This...is everything I had hoped for. So, why am I not happier?

I reach for Edward's backpack and he scowls at me. "No woman's carrying my load."

"Of course, not," I mutter. "God forbid, you admit to actually needing someone's help."

"Eve," he scowls, "that's not what I mean."

"Hmm." I turn away, as he heaves his pack on his shoulder, then takes a step toward me.

"I know how you can help me," he says.

"Oh?"

"Yeah." He holds up his arm, points at the space next to him. "Come 'ere."

I notch myself under his arm, and he leans on me. I wrap my arm around his waist, take some of his weight. Gah, he's too heavy, but I am not going to say anything.

"Happy?"

I scowl up at him and he chuckles.

"Shall we go inside?"

35

Ava

It's been a week since Edward and I returned from the hospital, and things are going... Fine. Every morning, he cooks me breakfast, then I do my admin stuff for my studio, while Ed gets on calls with the rest of the Seven. He's been taking an active interest in 7A, the company that he owns with the rest of the Seven. The money he's made, up until leaving the Church, has all been in a trust that carries out charitable work, and he doesn't want to touch that. So, he's working on a separate 'starter portfolio' with the Seven that he can grow and invest. The gains will provide an income from which he is going to live. And when I say live, I mean he can live a very good lifestyle off the money he's set to make.

His sprain healed up quickly, and while I took the tube to work the first two days, from the third day onward, Edward has insisted on taking me. I can tell that leaning back against the car seat—any seat, really—causes discomfort, but he denies it.

Now that the men who attacked me are behind bars, at least, I've been able to regain some level of independence. I have told Ed he doesn't need to drive me, but he insists.

While I am in the studio, he heads off to the offices of 7A or makes calls, or sometimes, simply heads back home to work on his assets some more. He's always back in time to pick me up... And yeah, he has cameras stationed within my studio, so he can keep an eye on me. And yeah, also tracking devices in my phone—a new one that he bought for me.

We normally have dinner together, which he insists on cooking, and then, we sleep in my bed. He spoons me as I fall asleep and I am glad for his warmth. Still, most mornings I wake up on the opposite side of the bed from him. It's like he's giving me time and space to come to terms with the decision. And somehow, it's not helping.

I wish he were more demanding, more dominating, more the kind of Edward he was when he'd sauntered into my home and fucked me before taking off. Somehow, that Edward had been raw and hurting. He hadn't cared that he was going to upset me when he left... Or if he did...he hadn't shown it. And it had been honest and real and... Everything that I had been looking for. Now, he's the same man... So, why do I feel so unsettled about being with him?

Today, after the last student departs at the studio, I decide to stay a little longer. I text Edward to let him know that I need a little more time. Then I flip the music to one of my favorite pick-me-up dance songs. The beats of Gasolina by Daddy Yankee fill the space. It's reggaeton, not strictly belly dancing music. But told ya, I love to interpret belly dancing in my own style.

I shimmy my shoulders, lift one side of my hips, drop, swirl into a figure eight, then lift my arms, allow the beats to thrum over my skin, sink into my blood. I plunge headlong into the rhythm, the music already pounding at my temples. Lift and drop my hips...lift and drop, let the beats ripple down my spine, curve my torso, my hips, twirl on my toes, and again. Drag my fingers down my arms, turn, and crash into something hard. My heart hammers in my chest and my eyelids snap open. I meet Edward's amber gaze.

"Oh," I press my hand to my heart, "you scared me."

He grips my shoulder to right me. "Did I?" He peers into my face. "You didn't expect me to come in, did you?"

"N...no." I step back and he lowers his arm. "I won't be long, I just wanted to take some time to perfect a new routine."

"That's okay," his lips twitch, "I love watching you dance."

And there was a time when I'd loved having him watch me. I walk over to the panel in the wall and shut off the music. Silence descends. My breath still comes in pants from my earlier exertion. I reach for my towel, mop my forehead. "I really won't be much longer," I murmur.

I sense him move, hear his footsteps approach, and stiffen.

He bends, pressing a kiss to the curve of where my neck meets my shoulder. I freeze.

He takes my shoulders, urges me to turn around. I drag my feet, allow him to position me so I am facing him.

I stare at the tendons of his throat, the familiar square jaw, now set in uncompromising lines. He notches a knuckle under my chin, tilts it up. I raise my gaze, meeting his eyes, then glance away.

His chest rises and falls; he blows out a breath.

"It's not working, is it?" he asks, almost tenderly.

"What...what do you mean?" I swallow. My heart begins to race. Shit, shit, shit. And I thought I had disguised my emotions so well.

"Don't hide from me, Ava." His voice softens even further. And somehow, that makes it all so much worse. I wish he'd rage at me. That he'd throw a tantrum; that he'd demand that I give him my full attention, that I dance for him, strip for him, that I drop to my knees in front of him... But he does none of that. He wipes the tear that trails down my cheek, before urging me to glance up at him.

I raise my gaze reluctantly, gazing into those glowing golden eyes. Eyes that have seen so much. That see me now, for what I am. A woman in love with his best friend. The man I've missed since he walked away from me.

"It's okay," he says, "I understand."

"No, you don't..." I burst out. "How can you, when even I don't get what's wrong with me?" I pull away from him and begin to pace. "You are my first love, Edward. You swept into my life, you turned it upside down. It was so full-on, so everything, so much that I wanted and then—"

"I left."

I pivot to face him, take in the set lines of his features.

"I hurt you, Ava. I broke your heart. I was selfish... I'd like to think I wasn't but... Maybe it was all too much for me. Maybe I had been waiting for a sign, for something or someone to push me to take that step, to force me to face my demons... Maybe all of that came to the fore when I met you. I wanted you, Eve... I still do... But I lost you then. I came back and expected to take up from where I had left off."

"And that's what I wanted too," I blurt out. "You're everything I want, Ed."

"But I am not everything you need."

I frown, "What...what do you mean?"

"Look at you, Ava. You're not fully here. You haven't been since the fire. Since Baron left. You go through the motions of the day, but you barely pay attention to the food that you are eating. At night, you flinch when I wrap my arms around you. You wake up on the opposite side of the bed from me—" So, he had noticed?

"You've been going to the studio earlier and earlier, preferring to stay later."

Argh, have I been doing that? Have I become that much of a cliché?

"And even now, when you were dancing, you weren't really there, were you?"

I jerk my chin around and meet his gaze.

"You were miles away; you hadn't realized when I walked into the studio... You didn't even sense when I was in your personal space, Ava."

"Oh, Ed," my lip trembles and my eyes well, "this is such bullshit."

"It's love." His lips curve in a sad smile. "We don't choose who we fall in love with, when we fall, or how we fall... Indeed, sometimes we don't realize it until it's all but lost to us."

"Ed, no," I shake my head, "please don't do this."

"It's done." His throat moves as he swallows. "You are too good a person. You'd stay with me, just out of a sense of duty...of purpose, even, but you and I both know, your heart is elsewhere."

"Oh, Ed." A ball of emotion clogs my throat. "This...this isn't how I wanted it to be."

"It is, what it is, Ava." He raises his hand as if to touch my cheek, then lowers it to his side. "Know this. I want you to be happy, Ava. I wanted to make you happy. When you chose me, I had been thrilled and excited and flattered and... I'd wanted you. I'd wanted to make a life with you. I'd looked forward to spending the rest of my days with you. I'd wanted it all and returned here with you... Only, something had shifted."

I stare at him through tear-drenched eyes.

"Whenever I've tried to kiss you over the last few days, you've flinched."

"I... I have?"

He nods, "Even now, when I try to touch you—" He reaches for me and I lean away from him.

"See?"

I swallow, "It's...it's not intentional."

"Exactly." His lips twist. "Your body recognizes what your heart has been trying to communicate to you for days."

"Which is..."

"That you don't belong to me, Ava. Not anymore."

"Oh, Ed." I take a step forward and he holds up a hand.

"Don't feel badly, Ava. I am not going away completely empty-handed."

"You...aren't?"

He shakes his head. "It's thanks to you that I found a new lease on life. The Church was everything I needed at that stage in my life to stay sane, calm, and feel loved. You showed me I am still human, that I could feel that pull toward another person, someone who could calm me and help me feel normal. In a way, I transferred the dependence I had on the Church to you. But really, what you did was give me a starting point. You opened me up to other possibilities in life, to forgiving myself without the crutch of blind faith—not that faith isn't helpful, but blindly following isn't healthy—and that's where I was."

His gaze softens, "You taught me that it's possible to find that one person I could truly trust, help, and be helped by. You also made me realize that I can't replace one obsession with another. You've shown me that I need to find myself first."

"I have?"

He nods.

"If I don't discover who I truly am, how can I give myself up to another?"

"I think, you're giving me too much credit," I murmur.

"Or not enough." He tilts his head, "You were at the right place at the right time...for me. Call it serendipity or call it an act of God," he smiles, "but you showed me I could keep my faith in the Power Above, without having to bind myself to an institution to nurture it. You set me free to explore, to discover who I truly am, and for that, I will always be grateful."

"Oh, Edward," I fold my fingers together, "whenever you decide you are ready for a relationship, whoever it is you decide to be with, she is going to be a very lucky person."

"And you and Baron are lucky to have found each other. You have what so many of us will spend a lifetime looking for."

"Hopefully, you'll find her well before that."

He tilts his head, "If you or Baron, ever need anything...at any time..." He shakes his head as if to clear it, then turns and heads for the door.

When he reaches the exit, I call out, "Edward, stop."

He pauses, his big body almost filling the doorway.

"I... I did love you, Ed."

"I know," he says softly, "but you love him more."

36

"So... everybody says that nobody's normal and that everyone is different right? The definition of normal is conforming to the standard or the common type; usual; not abnormal; regular; natural. So, if everyone is different, then doesn't that make being different normal? And if being different is normal then everybody IS normal, but at the same time, they're different. So, in actual fact, everyone is normal BECAUSE they're different. Ugh...sooo confusing!"

From Ava's Diary

A month later

Ava

I ring the doorbell to Summer and Sinclair's townhouse on Primrose Hill. I'd barely managed to complete the practice session after my classes at the studio before I'd changed and raced over, for a get together with the rest of the girls.

I haven't seen Edward since he left my place a few weeks ago. And while I initially was upset about it, I realize now, he was right. It would have been wrong for both him and me, if we had stayed together—not when my heart is clearly dwelling on another. Since then, I had thrown myself into work and my studio is flourishing. Which, in turn, has given me the confidence to compete.

Yep, I had finally put aside my fears and am now practicing for the next World Belly Dancing Championships. Apparently, I am done hiding my talent from the world. This is my passion, this is what sets my heart on fire, so I am going to embrace it and share my talent with the world. I am going to do it for myself this time, and not because I am trying to prove anything...but because... I enjoy it, thrive on it, and I know I am good at it. Baron was right. I needed to have more faith in myself. Now, I do. I am gonna aim for the first prize. No half measures anymore for me.

The door opens and Summer stands there wearing a pink jumpsuit that declares: Mommy To-Be.

I glance at it, then at her face.

"Too obvious?" She quirks an eyebrow.

"No," I laugh, "it's you." I step forward and hug her. "You are glowing," I compliment her.

"So are you." She moves back, looks me up and down, "Yep, definitely glowing."

"Must be the sweat from practice." I chuckle. "I didn't have time to take a shower."

"We women glow, period." She grins back at me, "You can take a shower in the guest room, if you want."

"Oh, can I?" I cry gratefully. "That would be perfect."

"Come on," she pulls me inside, then glances over her shoulder at the hovering butler. "It's okay Jeeves," she waves at him, "I've got this."

He lurks there for a few more seconds, then half bows. "As you wish, Madam." He pivots and leaves.

"Is his name really Jeeves?" I whisper as she shuts the door behind me.

"No, but he answers to it." She giggles, "And he definitely looks like a Jeeves. I've yet to get Sinner to respond to any of my Bertie Wooster jokes though."

"Good luck with that." I frown. "I can't see the grouchy Sinclair Sterling laughing at anything."

"Oh, he laughs alright; he has a weird sense of humor."

"Only because you bring that out in him." I tilt my head at her.

"Yeah, guess that's the sign of a healthy relationship, right? I mean, I am sure Baron would laugh at—" her voice trails off. "Jeez, sorry," she blinks rapidly, "didn't mean to bring the B word into our conversation."

Yeah, well, I'd had a few very drunken nights with the girls over the past week where I had poured out my heart to them.

"It's okay," I murmur, "I can't hang around you and the Seven without mention of Baron, or Edward, for that matter."

"Hmm," she peers into my face, "so he hasn't contacted you at all?"

"Who?"

"You know who I am talking about." She leads me toward the flight of stairs.

"If you mean Baron, no, and I don't expect him too either."

"Hmm." She huffs again.

"What?" I scowl. "What is it?"

"Nothing."

"Tell me," I pause with my foot on the first step, "please, Summer."

"It's probably nothing, but Baron has been in touch with the Seven."

"He has?"

"He's taking an active interest in all of their investments, so he attends all of their calls."

"Oh." I swallow. "And how is he? I mean, has Sinclair mentioned anything—?"

She reaches down and grips my shoulder, "He's apparently, okay, and back in London. He's staying at a service apartment that he's renting from Saint."

"A service apartment." I swallow, "You...uh, you don't happen to have the address, do you?"

Her eyes twinkle. She whips out her phone from her pocket and fingers flies across the screen.

My phone dings and I pull it out, glance at the message she sent me. "Thanks, Summer."

"You're welcome." She nods toward the front door, "Go girl, what are you waiting for?"

Baron

I glance at the view outside the window of my penthouse apartment. The lights of London twinkle back at me, their cold, silvery haloes a reflection of my surroundings. Chrome and steel, blacks and browns. The colors and lack of textures is perfect for how I feel.

I raise the glass of whiskey, drain it. Then head back to the bar to top up my glass. At this rate, I am going to become an alcoholic, which is probably not a bad idea. Though, even the alcohol is not helping me of late. The thoughts in my head, the visions of Ava laughing, dancing, teasing me... The images overwhelm me. Truthfully, I haven't tried too hard to stop thinking of her. Why should I, when it is all I have left of our time together?

Sometimes I wonder if I imagined it all. Spending time with my best friend and my woman... It had been a special kind of heaven...and hell. Both, rolled into one. I had done the right thing...leaving her... So, maybe it had been cowardly. I hadn't been able to face her, to tell her that I was giving her up. Hell, I'd been worried that if I saw her face, I'd lose all reasoning, that I'd plead with her to walk away with me. And she didn't deserve that. She didn't need me putting her on the spot again.

I slide my hand inside the pocket of my pants. My fingers brush something. I pull it out, glare at the purple hairband. Her purple hairband that I've carried around with me, since the day I first met her outside her house. I bring it to my nose and sniff it. Instantly, the lingering scent of jasmine laced with raspberries fills my senses. My groin hardens, heat flushes my chest.

Fuck. I'll never be rid of her. I'll never get of her... and she...? She loves Edward. I had seen the distress in her eyes, when she'd thought he was trapped inside the burning building. I'd seen the relief in her eyes when we had both staggered out. How she had run to him, and embraced him. And seeing them together had clarified everything for me. I'd done what was needed. I had taken care of her while Edward was away. And now... I need to get out of their way. They need to get on with their lives together... While me? I have to figure out how the hell I am going to live mine.

I stuff the hairtie back into my pocket.

One step in front of the other, soldier. Keep going. Don't stop. Tunnel vision. Focus on...what? Making money? Yeah, that's the one thing I'm good at. I may not have worked directly with the Seven the last few years, but I haven't lost my touch for keeping on top of my investments. Truthfully, work is the only thing that has managed to distract me. When I am applying my mind to mathematical equations...and tinkering with the algorithm that Saint and Sinner invented to forecast the movements of the stock market... For those few hours, at least, I have been able to push her to the back of my mind... Kind of...

Frankly, she is always on my mind. The scent of her is entrapped in my skin, the taste of her, a remembrance on my palate. The memories of her coil in my heart. And I guard them jealously. If this is all I have to hold onto... Then I'd be a fool to forget a single moment of the time I had with her.

I drain my glass, reach for the bottle again, when the intercom buzzes.

I walk over, depress the button and the porter's face appears. "I have a Ms. Ava Erikson here for you."

"Excuse me?"

"Ms. Ava—"

"Send her up."

I step back from the screen. What the—? What is Ava doing here? How had she found out where I'm staying? Probably, through one of the Seven... Or their wives. I shake my head. Why had Edward allowed her to come? Likely, he doesn't know. He hasn't been on the last few calls with the Seven either. I figured it's because he needs time to concentrate on his new relationship. I have tried hard not to be angry or jealous about it... And have failed. In a way, it's good that Ed hasn't been on the calls. Likely, I wouldn't have been able to disguise my bitterness. So, I had given her up. Doesn't mean I have to be gracious about my loss, does it?

So, what the hell is she doing here? I head back to the bar, topping up my glass.

Behind me, I hear the elevator doors part. I hear the click of her heels against the marbled floors. Is she wearing the same purple tipped boots that I had seen her in so often? The scent of jasmine invades the air, and the blood rushes to my groin. Fuck. I haven't even seen her, and already, my body is betraying me. I cannot think of her in this fashion, cannot allow her to play havoc with what little bit of restraint I have managed to hold onto.

"What are you doing here?" I growl.

She doesn't answer, but the scent of jasmine intensifies. Her footsteps approach. I raise my glass to my lips, and damn it, my hand trembles. It actually trembles.

"Answer, the question," I snap.

"No, you answer mine first." Her voice cuts through the space.

I turn, look her up and down. "Making demands, are we?"

"Not in a good mood, are we?"

"I was, until you came through the door."

Her lips tighten. "Still the same old alphahole, I see."

"Leopard. Spots, and all that," I drawl. "Why did you come here, Ava?"

She glances around the space, then back at me, "Uh, nice place."

"It's cold and boring." Everything you are not. "Next?"

She locks her fingers together in front of her body. "Ah, can I get a glass of water?"

I hesitate and she frowns, "Come on. Surely, even you can extend that much hospitality to me?"

"Not." I growl, "But what-fucking-ever." I head behind the bar, pour a glass of water and hand it to her. Keeping the barrier of the bar between us is cowardly, I know...but it's best this way. If I stand next to her, I won't be able to keep my hands to myself.

She drains the water, places the glass back on the counter.

"Well?" I glance at my watch, "Better make it quick. I have a date."

"No, you don't."

I arch an eyebrow, "And you know that, how?"

"Because you love me."

Shit. I feign a yawn. "There you go, deluding yourself. If I loved you, I wouldn't have left you."

"It's because you love me that you left me."

I smirk. "This isn't one of your sweet romances."

"I only read erotic romances. The ones in which the villain is also the hero."

"Neither of which I am." I place my elbow on the counter. "I don't play any part in your story, babe."

She pales. "I don't believe you."

"Better believe it."

"You still love me."

"And you love Edward."

"I love you more."

"And you arrived at that brilliant piece of deduction, how?"

"Sometimes it takes absence and time to put things in perspective. After you left... I missed you. Nothing was the same. I was with Edward but..." she swallows, "all I could think about was you. I realized that you are the one I want. You are the one I need. You are the person I want to be with, Baron."

Something hot stabs at my chest. I fold my fingers into fists, glare at her as she shuffles her feet.

"Edward and I are no longer together." She lowers her chin and folds her fingers together in front of her. "It's been a month since we decided to break up."

"A month?"

She nods. "I wanted to give myself enough time to make sure that I knew exactly what I had to do next."

"I know what you need to do next." I jerk my chin toward the door and her gaze widens. "You should leave."

"No."

"You need to get out of here, Ava."

She shakes her head, "I know you're upset Baron—"

"Upset?" I laugh, "That's putting it mildly. You made up your mind; I've made peace with it. I am ready to move on—"

"No, you're not."

"Oh?"

"If you were, you wouldn't be glaring at me like you'd like to spank me and kiss me simultaneously."

My cock twitches; my groin hardens. The thought of marking that sweet curved backside of hers, right before I turn her over and bury my face in her melting core—I stiffen, and no, I don't mean only my dick. I square my shoulders, crack my neck. "Nice dialogue—" I drawl, "but it's too late."

"It's not."

"It's time you took that sweet tush of yours out of here."

"Not yet." She places her bag on the counter, pulls out her phone and places it face-up. Then swipes across the screen. She pulls up a playlist.

"What are you doing?"

"Something I should have done a long time ago."

She digs in her bag, pulls out her hip scarf and ties it around her hips. The material clings to her luscious curves, emphasizes the tiny span of her waist. She takes a few steps back into the center of her room, and juts out a hip. She places a hand on it, then tips her chin up, "Can you press play, please?"

38

Ava

His blue eyes glower as he eats me up with his gaze. The skin around his eyes tightens and his lips thin.

"Please," I urge him. "Please hit play."

"No," he snaps, and I draw in a breath. Fine, I can do without the music.

I bend my knee to drop the hip. The tiny coins at the edge of the hip scarf jingle. I straighten the knee to lift the hip, keep my knees soft and centered. Drop hip downward, then flow into a heavy deep-seated drop. Every tiny move is amplified by the sound of the coins rubbing against each other.

His chest rises and falls. He leans forward, his gaze captured. He watches my every step as I rise up and into a lighter half-drop. I trace a circle with my hip, out to the side, then back, then pull into my center.

I keep circling, keep an open connection between my hip and heart, drawing energy in my movement. Keep everything supple and flowing, allow the energy to flow around my body.

I sense him walk around to stand in front of the bar. Good. He's caught in the energy, the rush of the performance. As am I.

I lift my hip upward and slightly forward, activate the outside of my thigh and hip to give the movement oomph. Drop slightly, then lift.

He takes a step closer, leans forward on the balls of his feet.

I bring my shoulders up together, then let both go. Another fast shoulder drop, while swaying my body from side-to-side. I ground my feet and shift my weight to the side, push my hips back, then round to the other side.

I peek up at him from under my eyelashes, and flinch. The coldness in his arctic eyes—it's freezing. His gaze intensifies. I hold the connection, refuse to look away as I move into a figure eight. I twist my hip forward, shift the weight onto the front of the foot, then turn the foot and the hip inward.

He swallows, clenching his hands into fists.

I twist my hips inward, then out again. I lift and drop, lift and drop again. Shimmy shoulders, undulate my waist, as I flow into a figure eight, this time in the vertical direction. Keeping my movements fluid, I channel the energy from my belly. Again. And again.

Sweat beads his forehead. The skin around his lips whitens. I twirl my fingers, beckon to him, and he takes a step forward, and another. I reel him in and he closes the distance between us. He glares down at me as I hold up both of my arms, lean my torso forward. My breasts brush his chest and he hisses.

"I need you, Baron." I tip my chin up, and his lips firm.

"You're stretching my patience." His jaw tics and a nerve throbs at his temple. His blue eyes deepen into that almost cerulean color that takes my breath away.

"Fuck," he growls. "F-u-c-k."

"Yes, please." I widen my legs, shimmy down his length in a wide plié squat. I lower my butt until I almost touch the floor. Then gaze up at him from under my eyelashes. His glare intensifies and his chest heaves. The blue in his eyes is stormy, tortured, tormented. Tension rolls off of him; the force of his dominance pins me in place, and I stay there, poised. A beat, then another. My throat dries, my thigh muscles protest, but still, I don't move.

The band around my chest tightens, my leg muscles scream at me to move. I begin to straighten and he clicks his tongue. "Don't even think about it," he growls.

I freeze, tip up my chin, and hold his gaze.

"Did you mean what you said?" he finally asks.

"A...bout?"

"About making up your mind?"

I nod.

"Are you sure this is what you want?"

I jerk my chin.

"Are you convinced that you belong to me?"

Yes. Yes. Yes. I tip up my chin, meet his gaze. Allow him to read the expression on my face. "

His throat moves as he swallows. Then his jaw firms. "If we do this, if I fuck you now, there is no going back."

I don't take my gaze off of his face.

"If I take you now, I am never letting you get away."

My scalp tingles, my fingers tremble, and a pressure builds at the back of my eyes.

"If we are together, Ava, I'll ask everything of you. I'll strip you bare, I'll infiltrate your deepest desires, your most secret dreams, the most intimate of your places. Nothing about you will be off limits. Not your thoughts or your words, not your body or your mind... Certainly not, your soul. I'll imprint myself in every cell of your body... Your every breath will belong to me."

My toes curl, my belly trembles, and moisture pools between my legs.

"The flutter of your eyelashes as you fall asleep, your dreams, the first thing you see when you wake up in the morning... All of it will be mine. I'll be in everything you see, in every taste you draw into your body. Every sensation that filters to you will originate from me... Do you...understand what I mean?"

I draw in a harsh breath. The band around my chest tightens. My skin feels too tight for my body. This man, these words... They are etched in every particle of my being.

"Do. You. Understand?" he snaps.

I jerk my chin. My legs threaten to give way from under me, and I push my heels into the ground to hold steady.

"Say it, then," he growls. "Say you are mine."

"Yours." I swallow. "I am yours."

"That you get that there's no going back.

"No going back."

"That you belong to me."

"You." I nod.

"That—"

"I love you," I burst out. "You, Baron, only you."

His breath catches. His gaze bores into me. The emotions rolling off of him vibrate between us, thicken and swirl. Heat spools off of his body, slams into my chest. I gasp, trying to draw in a breath, and my lungs burn. The strength of his intention lassoes around my shoulders, ties me to him. Then he moves. He dips his knees, swoops down and grabs me between my legs. He straightens, hauls me up with him, by my pussy, and my entire body jerks.

"Last chance, Ava," he cautions. "Leave while you can."

"I... I can't." I lick my lips and his gaze darts to my mouth.

"If you stay, I am not letting you go, not until I have fucked the thought of any other man out of you."

Heat flares low in my belly. My core clenches, and he must feel the instinctive reaction, for his lips curl.

"So, you in or out? Eve?"

Oh, my god. My nipples pebble, my breasts ache, and all of my brain cells seem to combust. "In," I rasp, "I'm in."

"Good." He releases me so suddenly that I lose my balance and wobble. He steps back and the warmth of his body recedes. A shiver runs up my spine.

"Take off your clothes," he growls.

I hesitate and he arches an eyebrow.

"Now." He lowers his voice to a hush and my nerve endings spark.

"Do it." He leans forward.

I spring into action. I untie the hip scarf. It pools around my feet, and the coins jingle. I toe off my boots, kick them away with the scarf. The clinking rises then fades away. I lift the skirt of my dress, grab my stockings and begin to roll them down. I pull them off, hold them up, and let them slide through my fingers. They flutter to the ground, and neither of us glances that way.

"All of it," he grates out. "Take. It. All. Off."

My mouth dries. Not that I haven't been naked in front of him before, but this...feels different. Like it's the first time that he'll be seeing all of me. Nude and vulnerable and completely bared for his inspection.

I undo the top button on the front of my dress, then the one after it, and the next. Push one sleeve down, then the other side. I tuck my elbows close to my sides and the dress flutters to the ground. I step out of it, then shrug off the camisole I am wearing as well.

I stand in front of him, clad only in my purple bra and panties.

He looks me up and down, "You know what they say about purple, right?"

"N...no," I stutter.

"It's a sign that you haven't been fucked enough, something I need to rectify...soon."

He smirks, and goosebumps pop on my skin.

Shit, all this build up. It's doing me in. The cool air in the room brushes over me and my nipples pebble. Or maybe it has to do with how he's staring at me, like he's going to eat me up. Oh, how I do hope he does.

He raises his gaze from my chest to my face. "Off with it," he growls.

A giggle bubbles up and he frowns.

"What?"

"That was a very imperious command."

His glare intensifies. His shoulders flex. "If you need help taking the rest of your clothes off—" he leans forward, and I hastily reach back and around for the clasp of my bra. I undo it, shrug it off. Reach for my panties, roll them down and step out of them. I stand before him without a shred of clothing. Without a shred of armor. He takes his time perusing my form—from my eyes, to my lips, my breasts, my stomach, the flesh between my thighs, to my feet. By the time he raises his gaze to my face, every part of me feels like it's on fire. My nipples are so hard, they are twin points of pain. My belly trembles and my core feels too moist. I squeeze my thighs together and he shakes his head. "Not yet. You don't have any right to relief. Not until I give you permission."

Oh, hell. I gulp, "This is going to be a long...long night."

"You have no idea." His lips twist. He makes a circle in the air with his fingers. I frown and he lowers his chin. "I can help you...if you want." He closes the distance between us and I instantly pivot, turn my back on him. Heat from his big body flows over me, cocooning me. The contrast between that and the cooler air on my front makes me shiver.

His breath sears the shell of my ear as he whispers, "Bend down; grab your ankles."

"Wh...what?"

"Don't make me repeat myself."

He places his palm at the small of my back, urging me to do his bidding. I widen my stance, lean over and grab my ankles. I glance between my parted legs as he sinks to his knees.

"What the—?"

He slides his tongue up my exposed slit from the entrance of my pussy to my backhole.

"Oh, hell." I gasp, "Oh, my, bloody hell."

"Indeed." I sense his lips curve against my tender flesh. He thrusts his tongue inside my cunt and my thighs tremble. I would fall, except he grabs my hips, holding me in place. He thrusts his broad shoulders in between my legs, forcing me to slide them apart further.

He thrusts his tongue in and out of me, in and out. Bringing his hands up to grip my inner thighs, he pries them apart, pulls his tongue out of my pussy, only to bite down on my swollen clit. I scream. The climax screeches up my legs and that's when he releases his hold on my cunt. He straightens, and my orgasm retreats. I blink. What the hell? What's that all about?

He bends forward, winds his fingers around the nape of my neck, urges me to unbend, stand straight. He pinches my chin so I turn to glance at him, and he licks my lips. He brushes his mouth across mine and the taste of him, laced with my essence, sinks into my palate.

"You fucking taste of honey, you know that?" He groans into my mouth and my heart hammers in my chest. "You're so damn irresistible. Once I let you in, I'll never be able to get you out of my head." He stills, "Who am I kidding?" He murmurs as if he's talking to himself, "You're already imprinted on my heart, Eve, and I don't know what to do about it."

I swallow.

"When I thought that I'd lost you, I swore that I'd never let anyone this close to me again. Why should I trust you again, Eve? Why?" He stares into my eyes, "Tell me what stops you from leaving me again?"

"I... I won't," I promise.

He holds my gaze and somehow, something in his eyes tells me he doesn't believe me completely yet.

"How can I prove it to you?" I murmur. "Tell me what I should do, to show you how much you mean to me."

"You won't be able to do it."

"Try me."

"You're sure?" His eyes gleam.

I nod.

"Move in with me."

"O...kay."

"Marry me."

"What?" I blink. "What did you say?"

"Marry me, Ava."

39

Ava

"Is that a proposal?"

"If that's what you want it to be."

I stare at him. "You sure are romantic." I strive for a light tone, but my voice comes out all breathless.

The expression on his face doesn't change. He holds my gaze, "Well?" He tilts his head, "What do you say?"

"Okay." I blow out a breath,

"Is that a yes?"

"It's..." I swallow, "It's a yes."

"Good." He releases the nape of my neck, steps up and around me. "Come." He jerks his head.

"Wh...where?"

"I'll show you to your room."

Right. I bend to pick up the clothes I had kicked aside earlier, then grab my bag from the counter and trail behind him. He leads me down the short corridor and pauses at the first room on the right. He pushes the door open, gestures for me to enter. I walk in, take in the double bed, the nightstand, the walk-in closet in the corner, the dresser pushed up against one wall, a writing table and chair on the other side. My feet sink into the thick carpet, and I wriggle my toes. "It's nice," I say.

"It'll do."

He retreats to the exit and I stop him, "Wait."

He turns to glance at me.

"Where...where are you sleeping?"

"My room is across the hallway."

"So...uh, we're not sleeping together?"

"When you're in my bed, you won't be doing much of that."

Oh, my god. He sure has a way with words. And that's not the only thing he knows his way around. My breasts feel too heavy, my scalp tingles, and moisture beads between my legs. His nostril's flare and his eyes gleam. Damn it, he knows exactly what his words do to me.

"So...we are going to have separate bedrooms?"

"Only until the wedding." He turns to leave and I take a step forward.

"But why?" I blurt out. "Why this distance?"

He pauses, then continues toward the door.

"Is it because you want to punish me for not coming to you sooner?"

He doesn't say anything, but the set of his shoulders, the way he holds himself so erect that his spine is totally upright gives him away.

"Just so you know," I lower my hands to my sides, and my stuff falls to the floor, "I am not going anywhere."

He stares straight ahead.

"Also, it's really not fair that you judge me this harshly. You were there, Baron. You saw how conflicted I was between the two of you. It was difficult for me to untangle what I felt for each of you."

He holds up a hand, and I firm my lips. Damn him. Only Baron can have this effect on me. His one gesture, and I want to follow his lead. His one look, and I want to throw myself at his feet and ask him to take me. His one touch, and I am ready to debase myself to please him. This...this is what I missed. The surety of his demeanor. The way he can be hard toward me and yet gentle, at the same time.

There is a poetry to his actions... A certain push-pull at play that always keeps me on the edge. It makes me want to hit him, then kiss him again. The way he constantly challenges me, forces me to become a better version of myself. And the fact that he loved me enough to walk away from me...? It's what clarified everything for me.

Not that Edward wouldn't have made me happy. He'd have loved me and protected me. Hell, he took a bullet for me, for hell's sake... But Baron wanted my happiness enough to turn his back on me. He thought that I deserved to be with the man I had confessed to love. He still thinks that I don't love him enough.

But he's wrong. He'd been there for me when I'd needed someone the most. Second to losing my mother, the time I had been away from him were the worst days of my life... Especially because I hadn't been able to put a name to the emptiness, the desperate sensations that had eaten away at me from the inside. It had taken me a while to figure out what it was. Luckily, Edward had loved me enough to point me in the right direction. As soon as I had sorted out everything in my head, I had come to him.

And I am not leaving. Not now. Not ever. This is it for me. But how do I convince him?

He takes another step toward the door and I call out again, "Wait, if I am moving in here, then what about my stuff?"

"We can go get it tomorrow."

"And my classes, my studio?"

He turns so I can see his face in profile, "None of that needs to change. I want you for my wife, not my captive."

He faces forward, and I call out. "Wait..."

He glances over his shoulder.

"I... I need a T-shirt or something to change into for bed."

He looks me up and down, "You can survive for one night. I'll arrange to have your things delivered tomorrow."

This time when he leaves the room, I don't try to stop him.

I glance around the room, then back at the door. Shit, shit, shit. So that's it? We live under the same roof, have our own rooms, then we get married and what? He fucks me?

I chose to come to him...and he what? Holds me at arm's length? This is not the kind of welcome I foresaw. When he'd asked me to bend over, I'd been sure he'd fuck me... Instead...he'd aroused me, brought me to the edge of an orgasm, and then he'd pulled away. Bastard. What the hell is he trying to do here?

I pick up my bag, place it on the nightstand, and drape my clothes over the chair. I grab a quick shower then slip into my panties and camisole, before sliding under the covers with my phone. I dial Isla. Her phone rings, then she picks up the call. Her face appears on the screen.

"Hellooo," she sing-songs. I hear voices in the background, see lights, a blur of people...

"Sorry, are you busy?"

"Not for you, babe." She steps out of the room; a door closes behind her and the sounds fade.

"Where are you?"

"Out with a bride who needed a shoulder to cry on."

"You mean..." I lower my chin

"Yeah," she blows out a breath, "the bride of the man who shall not be named." Her lips firm. "Except for the one wedding rehearsal, asshole didn't turn up for any of the tastings or for any of the other meetings. It's like he really doesn't care. I really feel sorry for the bride...so..."

"So...you're hanging out with her?"

"So?"

"So, you broke your rule about not socializing with the clients."

"She was just sooo sad." Isla grimaces, "When she asked me out for a drink, I couldn't refuse."

"Or maybe, you wanted to get more info on Li—"

She frowns.

"I mean, the man who shall not be named."

"Of course, not." She purses her lips. "Not really. I mean, I did lend a sympathetic ear to her as she poured out the details of their relationship, which is beyond dysfunctional, but really, I was just doing my job."

"Hmm," I scowl, "if you say so."

"And we are not here to talk about me." She raises an eyebrow. "What's up? Everything okay with you and Baron?"

"Wait, what?" I blink, "How did you know about...?"

"Why else would you be calling me?"

"You mean, I only call you when I need a sounding board?"

She smirks.

"Iz..." I scowl.

"Not that I mind. I mean, your life is far more interesting than mine right now."

"Trust me, I'd trade mine for something tame and boring..." I mutter.

Her gaze narrows, and I rush to add, "Not that I could ever accuse you of that. Not now that what's-his-face is occupying so much of your time."

She glowers and I motion zipping my mouth, "Okay, won't go there."

"So... Baron?"

I deflate a little. "I am at his place."

"Finally." She blows out a breath, "I mean, honestly woman, what took you so long?"

"I just needed some time to cleanse my palate."

She stares at me and I point a finger at the screen. "I didn't mean it that way."

"Then how did you mean it?"

"Just that I needed a little bit of space from both of them... Enough to sort out my thoughts." I raise a shoulder, "I mean, I admit I surprised myself when I realized it wasn't Edward but...Baron that I want... But uh, I may have needed a little bit of time to get my courage up to face him, you know?"

"And?"

"And what?"

"You're in his house, but you're not with him...so?"

I narrow my gaze, "Jesus, woman, give me a chance to tell my story."

"Go on..." she says impatiently, "why the hell isn't he ravishing you as we speak?"

My cheeks pink. "Uh, I thought that's what he was going to do."

"And then?"

"Then he pulled away."

"Like, literally pulled away?"

My cheeks heat, "He, uh, asked me to marry him."

"He what...?" She opens and shuts her mouth.

"Yeah." I bite the inside of my cheek. "It surprised me too. As much as him putting me in another room and telling me that he isn't going to sleep with me until after the wedding."

"And you agreed?"

I raise my shoulders, "Umm...yeah?"

"So, you are going to, once more, toe the line."

"Uh, not sure he gave me a choice."

"So, first he...comes onto you physically, only to retreat and ask you to marry him. Then he puts you up in his guest room."

I nod.

She taps her cheek, "Seems to me, your alphahole is insecure."

"Well, that's an oxymoron. Alphaholes don't get insecure... But," I hunch my shoulders, "I have to concede, you may be right, in this case. He did ask me if I was going to change my mind again."

"How dare he?" She grimaces, "I mean, it's a valid question. But seriously, how could he question your intent?"

"Yeah," I nod, "I mean, I am here; I am not going anywhere. This is where I want to be. With him. And I told him so, and I thought he believed it, but—"

"He's having trouble accepting it."

I nod.

"His mind gets it, but it hasn't quite sunk in."

"Exactly."

"So, you know what you have to do, right?"

"What?"

"Come on, Ava, do I have to tell you everything?"

"Gah." I sit up in bed, clutching the sheets under my arms "Can you please tell me what you're thinking?"

Her eyes twinkle. "If he doesn't come to you, you'll have to go to him, Ava."

40

Baron

I lower my whiskey glass, as I stare at the screen of my computer. What the hell had come over me? When she'd walked in... When I had seen her, it was like I could finally breathe. All that time away from her, I'd thought I was alive. I was so wrong. How could I be, when my heart no longer belongs to me? She'd walked into my apartment and I couldn't believe that she was really here.

At the same time, I knew... I know it's right. That she belongs with me. Has been mine from the moment I laid eyes on her. I'd known it, and yet, I'd walked away. I'd thought, he deserves her. After everything he's done for me, I'd thought I owed him this much... I owed him a chance at happiness. So, I'd left... And she'd come to me.

And I'd wanted to throw her down and tear into her pussy. I'd wanted to bury myself in her tight little cunt; I'd wanted to cram myself in her arse, and fill her mouth with my cum. I'd wanted to paint every inch of her body with the evidence of my arousal, my ownership. I'd wanted to lick her up and bite down on the sensitive skin between her legs. I'd wanted to mark her creamy thighs, redden her bottom with my handprints. I'd wanted to... Fill every hole in her body and show her who she belongs to. Hell, I wanted to put my ring on her finger and mark her as mine for the world to see.

So yeah... I'd run with it. I'd asked her to marry me... Until that very moment, I hadn't realized how much I wanted her to be mine, in every sense of the word.

Which is all good; but the distance? Putting her in another room while I stay in mine... Shit, what was I thinking?

I'd checked in on her earlier, to find that she was sleeping. She seemed to be naked. Her clothes were dumped on the chair by the desk, the soldier in me had cringed. I'd walked over and folded her clothes, then sat there next to the bed. I'd watched her sleep. Like that's not creepy or anything. I was simply making sure that she was okay. She'd slept deeply, her cheeks pink, her lips slightly parted. Her auburn hair was in a cloud around her face. She'd looked innocent and at peace, and I'd wanted to cover her body with mine and bury myself inside of her...

That's when I'd gotten up and left. I'd ended up in the third room, which is my temporary office. I'd gone over my investments, put in calls to Asia and the US. That's the benefit of running a portfolio with global interests. There's always someone, somewhere in the world who is working.

As I wrap up my last call, my phone rings again. Damian's picture—or to be more specific, that of him and his pregnant wife Julia—shows up. I stare at it, take in their laughing faces. Will I ever have that? Do I want that? Can I have that with Ava, given everything we've been through?

I answer the call and Damian's face fills the screen. "Hey, motherfucker." He smirks.

I groan, "Now I know why I stayed away from you guys for so long."

"And we're going to make up for it with a vengeance."

"We?" I frown, "What do you—?"

Another face appears on the screen. Sinner; it's bloody Sinner. Then Saint, and Arpad, and Weston. I grip my phone, am about to chuck it aside, when Sinner warns, "You want to hear what we have to say, asshole."

"Do I?" I growl.

"Stop being a bastard," Saint barks, "and listen to what we have to say."

"Look who's talking." I roll my shoulders. "The biggest bastard of them all."

"At least, I know who I am," he mutters.

"What's that supposed to mean?"

"Exactly what I said." He smirks. "I've never shied away from what I am. I wear my proclivities on my sleeve."

"That wife of yours needs to have her head examined for staying with you," I snipe.

Saint's features freeze, and for a second, I am sure he's going to explode.

Probably drive over and bash my face in, which I deserve, considering I had broken the only rule... One I had repeatedly violated during my interactions with them since I'd returned... Wives and significant others, including kids, are off the table when we speak to each other. Specifically, when we insult each other. I had just broken the rule again... So, what's new?

The rest of the Seven threaten...and posture, but with the exception of Edward, they all conform, one way or the other. It's only me and Ed who'd tried to forge a different path to cope with the aftermath of the incident. We were hurt the most and we'd lashed out at life... At ourselves. Then at each other. And look where that has gotten us. In a mess I am still trying to make sense of.

"Apologize." Saint's features are hard. "You're not yourself, so I understand why you said something you didn't mean. Say you're sorry, you piece of shit."

I stare at Saint. Whoa? What? No raging and tearing things up? No threats of punishments...? He isn't coming over to physically beat the shit out of me? Something which I had actually been looking forward to, if I am being honest. Nothing like being able to use my fists, to be able to let off steam. Of course, I could walk in next door and fuck my woman... I shake my head. Not yet. She isn't mine yet. She came to you, remember? She wants you. This time, she chose you... But hell, if a part of me inside, still can't believe it.

Just like I can't believe Saint—motherfucking—Caldwell is ready to forgive me for my error of judgment.

"I'm sorry," I say through gritted teeth. "You're right; I didn't mean it."

"You're angry." He nods, "It's understandable."

"I apologized, didn't I?" I growl. "You don't have to pretend to get what I am going through."

"Oh, but we do," Weston says, his voice soft. "If we, the alphaholes who've been brought to our knees by the right women, don't get what you're going through, then who can?"

"That why you called me up at—" I glance at my watch, "four in the morning?" I smirk. "Thought you guys had your families and stuff to take care of."

"That's what we are doing." Damian's smile widens.

"What?" I frown.

"Taking care of family, you turd," Saint growls.

"I...ah..." My throat closes and a pressure builds behind my eyes. "The hell are you guys trying to say?"

"Want us to spell it out?" Sinner sighs, "Fine, you are our family, you tosser. We are each other's family. We have been since the incident and you know it, and you have been fighting it."

"No, I have not." I scowl.

"Yes, you have." Saint nods. "Edward was the stubborn one, but you were the sensitive one."

"Sensitive?" I laugh, "You guys been drinking...? Oh, wait," I pretend to think, "you guys don't do that anymore, now that you are the responsible ones."

"Nice try," Arpad smirks, "but you can't distract us."

"None of us realized how much you had been hurt," Weston picks up the narrative. "If we had any indication just how much you and Edward had been impacted..."

"It's done; it's behind us," I say through gritted teeth.

"Is it?" Weston, tilts his head. "Edward managed it by joining the priesthood, and it was there for him when he needed it most. However, he eventually realized just how much of a crutch it was, and opted out. He's still trying to find his mooring, and that's okay. He's already started on the journey. But you?" He shakes his head, "You have your destination in front of you, but refuse to recognize it."

"If this is about Ava—"

"Of course, it is about Ava, you toff," Sinner growls. "We know that she left Edward."

"And that she came to you last night," Damian murmurs.

I glare at them. Not a surprise that they know she's here. Much as I'd like to deny it, the Seven of us are up in each other's business. Put the wives and girlfriends into the mix, and well... You have communication pinging back and forth faster than a ball at a Wimbledon tennis match. Ava must have, no doubt, spoken to one of the women, and that would have alerted the entire network to what's happening.

"Remember what you said earlier, Saint, about not talking about the women?" I remind them.

"This is different." Saint glares at me, "We're talking about you, and your completely asinine attitude in refusing to accept what's right for you."

"And you guys know that, how?"

"Experience." Sinner blows out a breath, "Like we've said, been here, done that. And we're not allowing you to fuck up your life... No more than it is right now."

"Not sure you guys get a say in that," I mutter

"Might be a little too late for that, ol' chap." Arpad chortles.

"What do you—?" The intercom app on my phone buzzes. I'd switched off the connections in the rooms so it wouldn't disturb Ava. "Hold on."

I switch out of the call and place the phone to my ear, "Yes?"

"A Mr. Chase to see you, sir."

"Chase." I frown.

"Should I—?"

"Send him up." I switch back into the call to find the rest of them waiting.

"Well," Damian asks, "is it him?"

"Who?"

"Cut the crap. You two finally going to bury your differences, or what?" Saint growls.

"You guys behind this?" I mutter.

The guys stay silent. I take in their faces and blow out a breath. "The fuck, you think you're doing?" I growl. "What the fuck is wrong with you? If you think this is going to help, you are so wrong."

"Hold on," Sinner's glare intensifies, "we were only trying to—"

I switch out of the call and raise my phone, intent on throwing it, then stop. Fuck. That would only wake up Ava, and that's the last thing I want." I place the phone on the table, then get up and head out of the study. Making sure Ava's door is firmly shut, I head for the living room, just as the elevator dings. It opens and Edward steps out.

41

Edward

When the guys had called me earlier, I had been pissed. But then they'd reminded me, again, how I'd intervened when each of them had been at a critical juncture in their lives. What I didn't tell them was that I had been a different person then. Someone who had literally divorced myself from what was going on inside of me. Someone who was focused on others, on the betterment of my flock. In their happiness lay mine. Which, honestly, wasn't a bad space to be in. Only, it had meant that I had locked away every damn feeling of my own. I had turned away from myself, had turned my back on my emotions, on the guilt and recriminations I had carried inside for so long. I hadn't been able to save him... Hadn't been able to save myself.

Until she had come along. A bright light at the end of a period of soul-searching darkness. Ava had been the catalyst, and I had been ready to break my vows. It was as simple as that. And I had loved her, truly... And it was that part of me which had known that she would be happier with Baron.

The guys had asked me to bury my differences with Baron. The truth is, there's nothing to forgive. So why hadn't I joined their conference calls? Why hadn't I been able to face Baron before this? Honestly, I don't have an answer to that. Now, as I step out of the elevator and take in the unsmiling countenance of the man who glares at me, I know he's hurting. As much as me.

I walk toward him, and he doesn't move. I pause in front of him, hold out my hand.

"Friends?" I murmur. "You ready to be friends?"

He glares at my proffered hand then back at my face, "What are you, ten?" He pivots around, heads to the bar, and pours out whiskey in two tumblers.

Well, at least, he hadn't asked me to leave. Though that's not Baron's style. I'm the one more liable to lose my temper nowadays. Breaking free of the discipline of priesthood has, apparently, unleashed an entire range of emotions in me, many of them unused for decades. Is that good or bad? The jury's out on that.

I stalk over to the bar, pick up the tumbler from the counter. "Ava?" I murmur.

"She's asleep."

I raise the glass to my mouth, and toss back the alcohol. Baron does the same. He fills up both of our glasses, then contemplates his own tumbler.

"What are you doing here, Ed?" he asks.

"I had to see you."

"What for?" he growls. "We've said everything there is to be said."

"Have we?" I peruse his brooding features, "We've never spoken about the incident."

"There's nothing to speak about." He begins to prowl about the space. Walks around, restless, before he comes to stop by the window. "There's nothing more to it."

"There's everything to it." I tilt my head, "We need to address what happened that day. We couldn't face it afterwards. Both of us agreed we'd never tell a soul what actually transpired that day..."

"And we haven't." He glances over his shoulder. "It's gone, buried, forgotten."

"But it isn't, is it?" I place my glass on the counter with a thump. "It's festering away within each of us. It's eating us inside. We didn't confide in our families, not our therapists, not even in the Seven. Hell, we haven't spoken about it to each other since."

"So?" He shrugs, "Neither of us turned out the worse for it."

"We could have put ourselves out of our misery a long time ago, if we had acknowledged how much it had scarred both of us. It's no joke when two young boys have to bugger—"

"Stop." He pivots so fast that some of the liquid sloshes over the side of his glass, "Shut the fuck up, Priest."

"Yeah," I glance at him thoughtfully, "I left the priesthood, and the rest of you seem to have adopted that nickname so naturally. Apparently, you can try to leave your past behind, but it always tags along somehow, know what I mean?"

"Go preach somewhere else," he growls, "I am not in the mood."

"Well, too bad." I stalk forward and he stiffens.

"The fuck you up to, Ed?"

"Just trying to put things right."

"There's nothing to righten," he snaps

"There's only everything to lose if I don't."

"Fuck off," he snarls, "don't come the fuck closer, man."

"Oh, yeah, what are you going to do if I do?"

He bares his teeth, "You wanna fight? Is that it, asshole?" He tosses back the rest of his drink, then flings his glass aside. It hits the floor and shatters. He throws up his fists, jumps forward as I rush him.

We meet somewhere in the middle. I bury my fist in his shoulder, but the asshole gets one in, right in my injured side. Fucking bullet injury—it hasn't healed completely. Pain slices through my head. I shake to clear it. Punch him in the stomach. He staggers back, only to straighten and lunge at me. He head butts me and the breath leaves my lungs. He gets in another punch to my solar plexus. I reel from it, then lob one at his side. His chest heaves, he lurches back, then throws himself at me. I take his full weight, and the bastard's fucking heavy. I sidestep the shards of glass on the floor but my feet slip on the drink he'd spilled earlier.

I crash to the ground, him on top of me. It's like a brick wall has collapsed on me. My lungs burn, my side screams, and my shoulder hurts like a bitch. I shove him to the side and away from the broken glass. We roll over and over, until we come to a stop, me leaning over him. I dig my elbow into his throat. "Give up," I growl.

"No fucking way," he snarls.

I increase the pressure until the color leaves his cheeks.

"Give the fuck up."

He glares at me. Anger, hatred...and something else. That fucking helplessness I'd witnessed in his eyes, that I'd felt when we'd locked gazes during that fateful time.

"Fuck," I growl, "F-u-c-k." I release him, only to lower my forehead to his. "Fucking hell, man." I swallow. "I am so fucking sorry for what I did to you."

"Yeah." His breath emerges on a rattle. "Me too. No one's more fucking sorry than me for what I did to you that day." He grabs the back of my neck, searches my eyes, "It wasn't your fucking fault though, you understand?"

"Yeah." A hot sensation stabs at my chest. "It wasn't your fault either." I hold his gaze.

"I forgive you, man," I finally say. The pressure builds behind my temples. My throat closes. I draw in a breath, then another. Force myself to feel every single fucking emotion that coils in my chest. "I forgive you; you hear me?"

"Me too." He swallows. "I forgive you."

That's when I hear footsteps approach us.

"What the hell is happening here?"

42

Ava

The sound of voices had woken me up. I had pulled on my clothes then crept out of the room. I had peeked into the living room, to find the two of them engaged in conversation.

I had hesitated, not wanting to interrupt, when Baron had charged Ed. They'd sprawled to the floor, rolled over. I had stepped toward them, intent on breaking up the fight; that's when Ed had placed his forehead against Baron's in what was, clearly, an emotional moment between the two.

They had spoken in low voices. I crept close enough to hear them forgive each other... And the way they had looked at each other... There was so much pain, so much shared history, so much...anger, and underneath all of that, so much...connection. It was such a private moment... I had felt like an intruder. It didn't feel right, somehow. I had witnessed what was, clearly... something very emotional between them and they weren't even aware of it... That's when I had spoken up.

Now, both of them glance at me, until Edward springs up. He holds out his arm to Baron, who hesitates, then grabs it. Ed pulls him up. Both men turn to face me.

"Well?" I glance between them, "What was that all about?"

Both men hold my gaze; twin expressions of stubbornness greet me.

"Come on," I blow out a breath, "I heard you guys speak, and this wasn't a normal bro-to-bro conversation, the kind you guys normally indulge in."

"Bro-to-bro?" Edward mutters. "What does that even mean?"

"I mean, it wasn't the kind of posturing you Seven indulge in when you get together. This felt...raw...and real...and painful."

"That's because it was." Baron blows out a breath. He glares sideways at Ed, and the two exchange one of their looks.

"See?" I throw up my hands, "This is what I mean. You guys have a shared history and neither of you ever shared it with me."

"It wasn't the right time earlier." Baron stalks over to me, "But it is time now." He cups my cheek. "Believe me when I say, it's not an easy story to tell but," he swallows, "you deserve to know."

I glance past him at Edward, who nods at me.

"Okay." I swallow. "Tell me then."

Baron leads me over to the settee, then sinks down next to me. Edward sits in the chair opposite us. He glances at Baron, who takes my hand in his. He weaves his fingers through mine and the gesture is so...tender, so unlike how Baron has been with me before. And it's not like he hasn't been affectionate... But this, is almost more like a plea for my support... My heart stutters. My throat closes. Oh, hell, do I really want to know about what they are going to tell me?

"So," I square my shoulders, "what is it?"

He hesitates and I glance down at my palm that is swallowed up by his much larger one. I bring our joined hands up and kiss the back of his. "You can tell me anything, Baron."

His chest rises and falls. I glance up to find him staring at me with such vulnerability in his eyes, my breath grows shallow and my heart begins to pound. "What is it?" I murmur, "You're scaring me, Barry."

"Barry?" He blinks. "No one calls me Barry."

"Guess I do, now."

His lips quirk. He rolls his shoulders before composing himself. "You know about the incident, of course, and I guess you've heard something about how Ed and I..." he firms his lips, "how we were hurt the worst by it?"

"It's what I gathered from the girls, yes." I nod.

"When we were kidnapped, Ed and I were initially held with the rest of the Seven," Baron says in a hard voice. "We were all blindfolded and gagged then, so we could hear the rest of the boys, but not see them."

"Baron managed to free himself. He got to me and freed me. We'd been best friends since the first grade. Before we could remove the restrains of the other boys, they got to us. They separated us, took us into a different room,"

Edward murmurs. "And then," he swallows, "then one of the men raped me."

"Oh, Ed," I swallow, "I am so sorry." My heart feels like it's going to shatter; tears prick the backs of my eyes. I swallow them back and my throat burns.

"The worst thing was, as he bugged me, I was actually aroused. I was twelve-years-old. I didn't understand the difference between physiological reactions and desires, and they used my naiveté to shame me." Edward pauses to gather his thoughts, or maybe, his courage. "But it gets worse... They forced me to use the erection on Baron."

"What?" I cry in horror. "How could they? Oh, my god!" I glance from Ed to Baron, who stares into the distance.

"I refused, of course." Edward murmurs, "so they began beating him up. I could see them hit him, hear his groans." Ed swallows. "It was..." He shakes his head, "When I finally couldn't take it any longer, I agreed."

"You...a...agreed?" I blink.

"It was either that or stand by and watch him being beaten to death." Ed sets his jaw. "When I agreed, one of the men raped me again. He forced an erection on me, and this time, I had to use it on Baron."

"Which, in turn, elicited an erection from me, and when they asked me to use it on Ed, I—" Baron's throat moves as he swallows, "I knew if I didn't, they'd only beat him up, or beat me again and... I couldn't bear the thought of it...so I did it."

Edward jumps in, "They made it seem like they were giving us a choice, which only added to the guilt each of us felt—and still do—but the truth is, we didn't have any other option. They used our shame to manipulate us. The thing is, if you want to cause serious psychological harm to a child, use shame. It's the most powerful emotion, and the hardest one to erase."

"We didn't know how to handle it, so we buried it," Baron adds. "As you may have noticed, that didn't work out so well." He grimaces and shares another look with Edward.

"There were so many times, when I was sure that I was going to break, that I couldn't bear it anymore. It was the courage in Edward's gaze that kept me going. Baron's voice cracks, and I grip his palm between both of mine.

"Oh, my god." Tears flow down my face and I wipe them away. "I am so sorry for what they did to you guys. You were so young, just coming to terms with your own sexuality. It would have hurt you, and scarred you for life."

"And it did." Edward lowers his chin. "So, there it is, our sordid little secret."

"Now you know." Baron tries to pull his hand away from me, but I hold on.

"And you haven't told anyone else about this?"

Both men shake their head.

"So why tell me?"

"Because," Baron turns me, "I want you to know. We," he jerks his chin toward Ed, "we want you to know about what happened between the two of us. You need to know everything about me, so we can make a fresh start."

"A fresh start." I tip up my chin, "Is that what it is?"

"It's," he peers into my face, "whatever you want it to be, Eve."

I swallow down the sobs that threaten, "Okay." I half smile, "It's going to be okay." I reach up, brush the hair off of his forehead, "Thank you for telling me."

He nods.

I turn to Edward, "Thank you for sharing this with me. Thank you for trusting me."

"I came today because," he links his fingers together and leans forward, "because I wanted you two to know that you have my blessing..." He chuckles. "Not that a blessing from an ex-priest means a whole lot." He lifts a shoulder, "And it's not that you two need it, but for what it's worth, I don't hold a grudge against either of you."

Baron wraps his arm around me and pulls me close. I recognize his gesture for what it is. Possessiveness, a mark of ownership, establishing his claim in front of his friend... And I can't blame him. After everything we've been through, this feels right. And organic and natural, and so real.

"Thanks, man," Baron murmurs, "it...means a lot to hear that from you."

"You better treat her right," he says quietly, "else you'll have to answer to me."

"Edward," I swallow, "I... I'm so sorry."

"Don't be." His lips twist. "You gave me a new lease on life and I'll always be grateful for that." He rises to his feet, "And now, I need to get going."

He has almost made it to the elevator when Baron calls out to him, "You're coming to the wedding, right?"

Ed stiffens, his shoulders go solid, then he seems to force himself to relax. He jerks his head in our direction, "I'll make sure to swing by."

43

Baron

The elevator doors close behind Edward. Silence descends in the room. I pull my hand from between Ava's grasp and stand. "I am going to bed."

I begin walking in the direction of my bedroom, when she calls out, "That's it?" Her voice is incredulous, "That's all you have to say about what just happened?"

I tilt my head, "Well, that was a surprise. I hadn't expected to reveal my background quite that way... But now you know."

"What happened wasn't either of you guys' fault." Her voice grows closer as she walks up to me. "You know that, right?"

I raise a shoulder, "Doesn't matter whose fault it was or wasn't; it happened."

"And you are not responsible for it."

"Maybe so," I rub the back of my neck, "but surely, I could have done something to prevent it."

"Like what?" She reaches me, presses her palm against my back, "You were kids, and you had been kidnapped and—"

"Spare me the details." I drag my fingers through my hair, "I was there, remember?"

I move away from her, pushing open the door to my bedroom, "Goodnight, Ava. Get some rest."

I turn to close the door, getting a glimpse of the hurt on her face. Her features are ashen, those big green eyes wide with hurt and...empathy. Shit, this is why I hadn't been able to tell her what had happened. This is exactly why I had refused to tell anyone else about the incident. I don't need anyone's sympathy. Certainly, don't need them telling me how sorry they are.

Shit happens. You deal with it... Or not, as the case may be. Either way, you move on. As I had.

I had left for the army, and while the rest of the Seven may think it was a way of escaping what had happened, and perhaps it was, it had been my way of dealing with the shit-show of cards that I had been dealt. Besides, I had come back, right? I have faced the music, so to speak. Hell, I've even buried my differences with Edward...

So why the hell can't I let this woman, who means so much to me, in? Why is it so difficult for me to take that final step and allow her into my life completely?

I close the door gently, shutting out the sight of those gorgeous green eyes. My heart squeezes in my chest and I ignore it. I strip as I head to the bathroom, stand under the shower. Not that it helps. I need more.

I. Need. Her. Need to bury myself in her sweet core and forget about the world for a while. I need to wrap myself around her curves, draw in her scent, lick her lips and taste her cries as she comes. I need to bite down on the tender skin where her neck meets her shoulder, and mark her as mine. My dick throbs as the blood rushes to my groin. But I refuse to jerk myself off. I hurt her. Again. I deserve to live with the discomfort. It is the least I can do.

I switch off the shower, dry myself on the way out of the bathroom. Dropping the towel, I climb under the sheets.

I close my eyes, and instantly, the sound of my screams fills my ears.

"Don't hurt me." I cough. "Please don't." I throw up hands to protect my face, even as the vicious kicks continue—in my side, in my stomach, on my other side. Pain rips up my spine and I gasp for air.

"Stop." Edward voice sounds behind me, "Stop beating him. I'll do it. I'll do as you say."

The blows stop and I slump against the floor. My back aches, my shoulder screams in pain. My entire body is one throbbing mass of hurt.

Hands grip my pants and someone pulls them off of me, along with my briefs. Someone else pulls off my shirt. The cool air hits me and goosebumps pop on my fevered skin. I want to cover myself, want to draw into myself and pretend I am not here. But I can't. I won't. I will survive this. I will do what is needed to come out of this alive. I will do what is needed to keep myself and Edward in one piece. Edward, I need to get to him. I push myself up to my hands and knees, beginning to crawl toward him.

Laughter follows me. "Look at him go," a voice yells. I jerk my head around and glare at the masked man with the gray eyes. I memorize the shape of his eyes, his height, the width of his shoulders. If I get out of here alive, I am going to hunt down these monsters and kill them. I am going to make them pay for this.

"What are you looking at, you piece of shit?" He takes a step toward me and I scramble away. I crawl as fast as I can until I reach Edward. "Ed," I grip his shoulder, "Ed, you okay?"

"Baron," he blinks rapidly, "Baron... I am so sorry."

"I am sorry too, Ed."

"Enough." Someone kicks my thigh from behind and I fall onto my side. He kicks me in the stomach and I groan, double over.

"Stop," I pant, "please, stop."

Behind me, I hear Edward growl, "Stop hurting him, you prick."

"Insult me, will you?" The man steps around me, and kicks Ed in his side. Edward groans, throws his hands up to protect himself. Shit, shit, shit. "Stop," I yell, "we'll do as you say. Stop hitting him, you bastard."

Something—someone kicks me in the side. Pain explodes up my spine. "When will you two learn to stop speaking, and do as you are told?" Another kick to my already bruised ribs, and I cry out. Another to my legs, my arms. Someone plants his foot in my stomach and my entire body bucks.

"Stop," I howl, "don't hurt me."

"Baron?"

"Stop it," I cry. "Stop."

"Baron!"

Something closes around my neck. Someone's hands. My breath traps in my chest. I can't breathe; my lungs burn. I lunge toward my tormentor. I swoop out and my fingers brush something. I grab hold of an arm, tug. The breeze rushes over me as he stumbles and falls, his hold on me loosening. Instantly, I am on him. I reach for the direction of his face, wrap my fingers around his neck, begin to squeeze. I am going to kill you. Kill you.

"Baron, stop! You're hurting me."

I snap my eyes open, and meet her wide green ones. My fingers are around her neck, squeezing down, as I lean over her, straddling her on my bed. She coughs, digging her fingers into my palms, "Stop," she gurgles, "stop it."

I loosen my hold and she draws in a breath, coughing. Tears run down her cheeks. I bend and lick them up. She gasps. Her chest rises and falls. I peer into her features as I press my thumb into the pulse that flutters at the base of her throat.

"What are you doing here, Ava?" I lower my voice to a hush and she pants.

"I... I..."

"Couldn't keep away, could you?" I drag my palm down to her breast, squeeze.

A moan spills from her lips. "I... I heard you scream, came in to check, and saw that you were caught up in a nightmare."

"You shouldn't have come." I rub my thumb across the nipple outlined against the cotton of her camisole. "You should have known that once I get you in my bed, I am not letting you go."

She stops struggling, glances up at me.

"Or maybe that's what you wanted, hmm? You wanted to catch me at my most vulnerable, so you could slip past my defenses?"

"Baron." She swallows, "Th...that's not true."

"Oh?" I drag my fingers up her throat to notch them under her chin. I push up and she lifts her head, holding my gaze.

"I... I came to help. I know you have flashbacks from the incident, and now I understand what happened to you."

"Do you?" I tilt my head. "Do you really understand how it is to have been through what I have?"

"I..." Her lips tremble, "I can't claim to know how that feels. Whatever happened to you was terrible and completely wrong. And I have not the tiniest inkling of how it is to live with it. But...if I can help ease the burden somewhat."

"And how would you do that?" I lower my lips until my mouth is positioned just above hers. "How would you, as you say, lessen the pain of what happened, little Eve?"

"With my body..." she gulps. "With my body, I thee worship. With my heart, I will ease your sorrow. With my soul... I... I'll share your grief. With my hands I will soothe the loss of the little boy you once were. With my cunt, I'll... I'll welcome you into me so you never feel alone again."

My breathing grows ragged. My chest tightens, my throat hurts, and a burning sensation crawls up my spine. "Is that right?" I choke out. "Is that how you mean to sacrifice yourself for me?"

"It's not a sacrifice, if it's what I want to do," she murmurs. She reaches up to cup my cheek, "I want to ease your agony, in any way I can, Baron. That is," she peers up at me from under her eyelashes, "if you'll let me."

Bloody fuck, this woman... She guts me. How can someone so young and so beautiful be this... Profound, this intense, this ardent in her intentions. Her green eyes gaze up at me like I am the center of the world. My heart stutters and my groin hardens. In all my life, I have never felt this...connected...this vulnerable...yet this powerful. I want her. I have needed her since the moment I saw her. And now she is in my bed, in my space. With nothing and no-one standing between us. It's time...she finds out what it means to be owned by a man who is never going to let go of her again.

I hook my finger in the center of her camisole and tug.

Ava

The cloth tears. I yelp, glancing down to find he's torn my camisole right down the middle. He lowers his mouth to my breast and bites down on my nipple.

"Oh, my god," I huff, "Baron."

"Shh." His hot breath sears my skin. He licks the swollen bud, then turns his attention to my other breast. He swirls his tongue around the nub of my nipple, and my pussy clenches. He glances up at me as he closes his hot mouth around my aching flesh. Goosebumps rise on my skin. He increases the pressure around my neck and my breath catches.

"Baron," I whisper, "please."

He bares his teeth as he reaches between us. He slides his fingers inside my panties. His fingertips brush my soaking center and I shudder. Closing his palm around my pussy, he squeezes. Heat shivers out from his touch. I squeeze my thighs together, trapping his hand there, and his eyes gleam.

"Who does your pussy belong to, Ava?" he growls.

"You," I groan, "it belongs to you."

He slides two fingers inside me and I gasp, "And your cunt?" he asks. "Who does your cunt belong to?"

"You," I gasp, "only you."

He brings his face close to mine, as he pulls out his fingers, only to shove them in between my lips.

"And your mouth?" His gaze intensifies, "Who does your mouth belong to?"

"You." The sound emerges garbled as I speak through his fingers, "You, Baron."

He nods. He pulls his fingers out, wipes them on my chest, and the gesture is so filthy, so hot that I have to squeeze my thighs together again. His nostrils flare and a pulse beats to life at his temples. He reaches down to slide his fingers between my arse cheeks. His fingers brush my backhole and I flinch. "And this hole?" He growls, "Who will you let inside here, sweet Eve?"

"You." I moan, "only you—"

He pulls back, only to shove his fingers between us. He snaps the delicate strap that holds up my panties and I shiver. He reaches down, positions his dick against my entrance. "I am going to fuck you now, Eve."

He hooks an arm under my knee, pulling up my leg so it is bent and next to my chest, then he plunges forward.

A scream rips from me as he buries himself to the hilt. Too much. Too full. I throw my arms about his shoulders, holding on, as he stays there, filling me, stretching me, possessing me. His dick throbs inside of me. Every hard ridge imprinted against my melting channel.

"Fuck," he groans, "you're so fucking tight, Eve."

He pulls out, then propels his hips and impales me again. His balls slap against my butt, his cock lengthens, thickens, as he begins to fuck me. He pounds up and into me, and my entire body bucks. The headboard of the bed hits the wall, something crashes to the ground. I can't stop the giggle that bubbles up, and his gaze intensifies. "You find this funny, Eve?"

His fingers around my throat tighten as he pulls out, stays poised at the rim of my entrance, only to propel forward as he buries himself inside me again and again. He hits that spot deep inside of me that makes me tremble.

"Oh, my god, Baron. Oh, Baron."

He thrusts into me again as his fingers tighten around my neck. Darkness mars the edge of my vision as he pounds into me. The climax rips up my legs, threatens to overwhelm me. That's when he loosens his grip on my neck. He lowers his mouth to mine and commands, "Come," and I shatter.

My orgasm shrieks over me, or maybe that's me screaming. He closes his mouth over mine, absorbs every last sound I make as he continues to nail me. In and out, in and out. My entire body shudders. The aftershocks grip me as he rips his mouth from mine, pushes his forehead against mine and groans.

He pulls out of me, releasing his hold on my neck and leans back on his haunches as he comes.

He paints my stomach and chest with hot streams of white. He drags his fingers up his cock as he squeezes out every last drop. Then he rubs his cum into my breasts, down my stomach, into my pussy. Then he flips me over. He pulls me up so I am poised on my knees and forearms. He scoops up the cum, slathers it into my back entrance, then fits himself there. I stiffen and he winds his fingers around the nape of my neck. "Shh," he whispers, "I've got you, Eve."

I swallow as he leans down and kisses my shoulder. He nibbles his way up to my cheek, urging my face toward him. Then he kisses me. He presses his mouth to mine, licking my lips, sucking on my tongue. Warmth fills my chest. He slips inside my backhole and I groan. He swallows the sound. Brings his other hand around to play with my pussy lips. He slides one finger inside my cunt, and a whine slips from my lips. He works two fingers, then three, and it's so full, so much. Every hole of my body is filled with Baron. His touch, his lips, his fingers, his cock as he slips in through the tightness. He presses his heel into the nub of my clit, as he thrusts his tongue inside my mouth. Simultaneously he plunges forward, owns my arse as his dick throbs in my back channel. He begins to move, sawing in and out of me, as his cock seems to thicken inside of me. That feeling of fullness as he slides one more finger inside my pussy is too much. Too soon. Oh, my god. I am going to—

"Come," he growls against my mouth, "come all over my fingers."

The orgasm floors me. It seems to go on and on. My knees give way and it's his hold on my nape that keeps me upright. He thrust into me one more time, then buries his face in my neck. He bites down on my shoulder, as his dick throbs and he empties himself inside of me.

My eyelids flutter down, and I slump. I am vaguely aware of him leaving me, and I protest.

"Shh," he kisses me, "I'll be right back."

I vaguely hear the water run in the bathroom, then footsteps sound and the cool wetness of a washcloth presses into my pussy, then between my arse cheeks. I flush, open my eyes to find him wiping his dick, before he tosses the cloth aside.

"You forgot to clean the parts of me where I am wearing your cum."

"Good." He laughs, "Now you can't forget who you belong to." He climbs into bed, pulls me to him and I pass out again.

When I come to, I am resting on his chest. His arms are around me; the thud-thud-thud of his heartbeat is a comforting sound against my cheek. I peer up at him from under my eyelashes to find him gazing at me. His blue eyes burn in the dark, the look in them, contemplative.

"What," I clear my throat, "what are you thinking?"

"Why are you so good to me," he murmurs, "when all I have done is hurt you?"

"You saved me," I whisper. "You showed me, it's possible for me to be anything I want. The only limitations are those I set on myself."

"I did?" He frowns. "How's that?"

"By being you." I rest my chin on his chest, "When I think of everything you've been through, and yet, you never lost hope. You continued to believe."

He chuckles, "You sure you're talking about me?"

I nod, "You watched over me, protected me, loved me..."

He frowns, opening his mouth, and I place a finger across his lips, "Shh, I know you do. It's only a technicality that you haven't said it yet."

"A technicality?" He blinks.

"I mean, you do love me. Why else would you ask me to marry you, and then break your condition—which was stupid anyway and destined for failure—of not sleeping with me until the wedding?"

"Stupid?" His lips curve and his eyes gleam.

Before I can react, he flips me over so I am on my back, and he's bracketed me in between his arms. "I'll show you exactly how stupid it was."

He pushes forward and impales me. I am still so wet that he slides inside to the hilt. My pussy spasms around his dick. His thick, fat shaft pulses and a groan spills from my lips.

His chest rises and falls, his shoulder muscles tense, and his biceps bulge as sweat beads his forehead. "How is it that every time I am inside you, it's like the very first time?" He growls, "Why is it that I can't get enough of you? What is it about you that pulls me back to you again and again? That I want to stay buried inside you... If I were to die like this, I'd be the happiest man ever."

He hooks his arms under my knees, pushing them up, until my thighs are pushed in next to my chest. He lowers his mouth to mine, kissing me deeply as he begins to move. Slowly, so I can feel every ridge of his cock, he buries himself inside me and pulls out, again and again. I wrap my fingers around the headboard, as he tunnels into me.

"I am going to fuck you so hard, you won't know where you begin and where I end. I am going to come inside you again and again until your every pore leaks with my cum. You feel me, Eve?"

"Yes," I pant against his mouth, "yes, Baron."

He pulls out, then slams into me, hitting that spot deep inside, and I cry out. He propels his hips forward again and again, hitting that very same spot, and my entire body bucks. He doesn't stop until my orgasm screams up my spine, when he growls, "Look at me, Eve."

I stare into his blue eyes and the connection is so hot, so real, so everything that I shatter. He holds my gaze, as he empties himself inside me with a hoarse cry. Sweat clings to his beautiful shoulders as he slumps over me. His weight pushes me into the bed, holding me down, pinning me in place... And I know, there's nowhere else I'd rather be.

The next time I open my eyes, he's gone.

"Baron?" I call, and my voice echoes in the empty space. I slide out of bed, find a shirt he must have folded and put aside earlier. There are so many facets to this guy, I don't think I'll ever really get to know him completely. It's what draws me to him, knowing I can never really predict what he's going to do next.

I pad out into the hallway, peek into the living room, then the kitchen, finally, walking down to the partially-closed door at the end of the corridor. I push it open to find him standing at the window, wearing only his sweats. His broad shoulders block out the view of the early morning sky. I walk over to him. His shoulder blades bunch and I know he's aware of my presence. I slide my arms around his waist, rub my cheek against his back.

"I missed you," I whisper. "What are you doing here?"

"Waiting for you."

"Were you?"

He nods, then turns around and lowers himself onto one knee.

"Baron..." I open and shut my mouth. OMG, it can't be, can it? Is he going to—? No, is he, really?

He slides his hand into his pocket, then pulls out a ring. He holds it up and the light glitters off a band made of jade.

"Oh." I swallow. "Oh wow, how...how did you get this? Where did you get this from? Did you know I was coming here?"

"I had hoped." He smiles. "As for the rest, I got this made the day after I met you."

"You...you did?" I gape, "No, seriously?"

His lips twist. "What can I say? I saw you and knew you were going to be my wife. I should have asked you right away, but I hesitated. Not anymore."

He holds out his palm and I place my hand in his.

"No gems are free of conflict and I know how important ethical sourcing is to you." He slides the ring onto the finger of my left hand. "The green reminds me of your eyes, and the jade is forever."

"Forever." I stare down at the band on my finger.

"Will you be mine?"

"Yes," I cry, "yes!" I take a step forward, go to throw my arms around him, but he moves aside. Huh? I frown, "What is it, Barry?"

"There's one more thing you need to know," he murmurs.

My heart begins to thud and my pulse rate ratchets up. "What?" I whisper, "what do you want to tell me?"

He walks over to the coffee table and I follow him. He picks up his wallet, pulls out a photograph and hands it over to me.

"It's the photograph that I carried in my purse. I thought I'd lost it."

"I found it when I walked into your studio, the day Edward turned up," he replies.

I notice he doesn't directly refer to the attack that day, for which I am grateful.

"Thank you for returning it to me." I peer up at him from under my eyelashes.

That's you in the picture, isn't it? The girl wearing the red dress."

I nod, and he blows out a breath. "I knew it was you, the moment I saw you."

"Knew it was me?" I blink. "I don't understand what you're saying."

He moves away and begins to pace. "That day, when Edward left you and I found you on the sidewalk, it's not the first day I saw you."

"It isn't?"

He shakes his head, "I saw you first when you were much younger. Maybe you were ten or so?" He raises a shoulder. "You and your family were having lunch at a pub on the outskirts of London. I was there with the Seven. You were wearing this same red dress on that day."

"I was?" I blink.

"I noticed you because you were so happy, so utterly carefree, and wished

I could be like you."

"Oh." I swallow, "That was a long time ago."

"It was," he agrees, "but I never forgot your face."

"I have a vague recollection of a family outing that summer," I murmur, "and I remember wearing that red dress. It was a gift from my mother. It was my favorite dress. She told me I resembled a shining light when I wore it."

My eyes fill and I glance away. I'll never get over losing mum. Just when I think the pain is lessening, something like this happens, and the loss seems so very insurmountable.

I hear the sound of footsteps and the next second his strong arms surround me. He pulls me into his chest. "Shh," he croons, "I didn't mean to upset you."

"You didn't." I rub my cheek against his shoulder, "It's just... I still miss her, you know?"

"You were lucky to have her. My family threw money at me and hoped my problems would resolve themselves. They didn't realize that all I needed was their support to get through the hellish aftermath of the incident."

"You have me now." I glance up at him. "And apparently, you knew I existed long before I met you."

"I saw you again, you know?" he murmurs. "Two years ago, on one of my infrequent visits to London. I was at Paddington Station, about to catch the Heathrow Express to the airport, and I heard your laugh."

"My laugh?"

"Your laughter is the most beautiful sound in the world. I heard it that day at the pub and never forgot it. Every time I remembered it, it made me feel hopeful and happy and wistful, all at the same time."

"Wistful?"

"You were so young, just a child, and yet I couldn't forget your face. And then I saw you all grown up on the railway platform, and knew you were the one for me, but the timing was all wrong."

"All these years," a ball of emotion fills my throat, "all this time, you knew?"

He nods. "I thought I'd never find you again." He cups my cheek, peers into my eyes, "And then when I did, I knew the most important thing was for you to be happy. It didn't matter who you were with, as long as you were happy."

"That's why you left?"

He nods, "And I thought my life was over. I thought..." His throat moves as he swallows, "I thought that I'd lost you, Eve."

"But you didn't," I glance up into those glistening blue eyes, "I am here and I am never leaving you again."

"I'll hold you to that." He smirks, "There's one more thing I need to confess."

I tilt my head, "What?" I frown, "What is it?"

He slides his hand into his pocket then holds up something purple.

I blink. "My hair tie?" I turn to him, "Where did you find it?"

"At your place, that first day I carried you home. I took it without telling you." He glances at the purple hair restraint then back at me, "I needed something of you to carry around, apparently."

He holds the hairband out to me and I shake my head, "You found it, you keep it. It's yours now."

"And you?" He searches my eyes, "What about you?"

"I'm yours, Baron. Only yours."

"Mine." He lowers his lips to mine.

45

Ava

I glance at myself in the mirror in Summer's town house. The simple white gown I've chosen has a sweetheart neckline and cinches in at the waist before flowing down to my feet. My hair's flowing around my shoulders, just how he likes it. On my feet, I am wearing green colored heels which match the green of my ring. My make-up is light, a touch of lip gloss, and purple eyeshadow to bring out the green of my eyes.

"What do you think?" I meet Isla's gaze in the mirror. "Too simple?"

"It's," she looks me up and down, "gorgeous; very you."

"Not that I had much time to find a dress," I mutter. "I mean, how did he manage to accelerate all the paperwork so we could be married in 24 hours?"

"Welcome to the brotherhood of the Seven." She grimaces, "Each of them seems to try to break the record of the previous one, when it comes to organizing their wedding. And of course, each of them has to ask me to organize it. And of course, I can't say no." She mock wipes her brow, "The number of grey hairs they have given me over the past few months is not funny."

"You like the challenge; admit it," I giggle.

"Yeah, right." She blows out a breath, "At least, I am not marrying one of them."

"No, you decided to set your sights on the older brother to one of them."

"Gah, stop it." She throws up her hands, "Liam's getting married in a week, and that will be that." She dusts off her palms.

Summer peeks in, "Isla, I think Amelie needs your help with the catering."

"Of course, she does," She turns and marches toward the door, then points a finger at Summer, "You make sure she gets down to the back garden in ten minutes, you hear me?"

"Yes Ma'am." Summer chuckles as Isla throws me a smile, then disappears down the corridor.

"Whew, she's in a mood." Summer saunters in, then sinks down into a chair. "How are you feeling?" She peers up at me. "No nerves or anything?"

"Nope," I smile, "I feel good."

"Good."

"Only thing."

She leans forward, giving me her full attention.

"He hasn't yet told me that he loves me."

"Hmm." She places her fingers together. "But he asked you to marry him and pulled out all the stops to get this ceremony underway as soon as possible."

I nod.

"And he found you a ring that's exactly the kind you'd have wanted."

"Mm-hmm." I jerk my chin.

"Seems to me like love."

"It is love," I declare. "It's just, I wish he'd say those three words aloud, you know?"

"When Sinclair asked me to marry him, it was part of a transaction." She tilts her head at me, "Did you know that?"

"No," I blink, "but you two are so much in love."

"Oh, the alphahole was in love with me, all right. It just took him a while to figure it out. Hell, it took me a while to figure out what my feelings for him were."

"But it all worked out."

"And how." She laughs as she places her palms across her belly. "I can't believe how thrilled I am to be carrying his baby."

"You're glowing." I smile back at her. "You look radiant."

"I feel radiant." She grins back, before glancing away. "If only my sister were here to share my happiness."

"Karma, right?" I turn to face her, "Hasn't she been away in Sicily, with her new beau?"

"That's the thing," Summer pushes her hair back from her face, "I've never met this man, and it's not like Karma to be away for so long."

"But she does call?"

"She texts me most weeks. Why she can't just pick up the phone and call me, I don't know. She doesn't answer when I call, just texts me back, which is really strange. I messaged her to tell her that I'll be coming over there if she didn't visit me soon, to which she didn't reply." Summer scowls, "I mean, meeting someone who sweeps you off your feet is all well and good, but what the hell is so pressing that she hasn't come back to visit even once in all this time?"

"Maybe he's possessive?" I chuckle. "He doesn't want to let her out of his sight."

"Don't we know all about that?" Summer rolls her eyes. "If you think Barons' bad now, wait until you get pregnant. He'll chain you to his side."

There's a knock on the door, then Julia walks in. In her hands is a bouquet of cascading greens. She offers me the bunch of eucalyptus, ferns and sage.

"Wow," I gaze at it, "it's beautiful. It's exactly what I would have chosen for myself." I had been so preoccupied with everything else, I had forgotten about the bouquet. "Thank you so much," I cry as I reach for the bouquet.

"Thank your husband to-be." Julia laughs, "He had this ordered especially for you. Clearly, he knows you well."

The blood rushes to my cheeks. I bring the bouquet up to my nose and sniff at it. "I think I am going to cry," I sniff.

"Don't you dare," Summer admonishes, "don't want to spoil your make up, now do you?"

Just then Amelie pops her head in, "There you are." She smiles at Summer, "Your man's been looking for you."

"I saw him, not ten minutes ago," Summer mutters.

"Yeah, but the Seven." Amelie chuckles.

"The bloody Seven." Summer laughs as she rises to her feet, "Speaking of, it's time for you to officially join our collective." Summer grins. She walks over, taking my hands in hers, "You ready?"

I weave my hand through my father's arm, and clutch my bouquet of cascading greens.

"You look beautiful," my father says as he places his palm over mine.

I blink away the tears that his softly spoken words elicit... Christ, what's it with me and the waterworks? "Thank you for being here with me, Daddy." I sniff, "And after how horrible I was to you."

"You know, you could say anything to me and I'd never take offense." My father pats my hand, "It's a child's prerogative to say what's on your mind, and it's a parent's prerogative to forgive."

"Oh, Dad," I glance up at him, "I was so wrong to judge you. I understand now that it's possible to love two people. Ma was your past and Lina is your future. I get it now."

"You've grown up, Ava." My father glances down at me, his eyes shining. "My little girl is a woman, ready to start her new life."

"You're going to make me cry," I sniffle.

"Oh, no." He beams down at me, "No tears today, only smiles."

Isla gestures to us that it's time to walk down the aisle. I draw in a breath, as my father leads me onto the garden path.

We'd decided to marry in the picturesque backyard of the Sterling's home, with the slopes of Primrose Hill, stretching out before us. We'd also decided to exchange vows in front of our friends and family and without having anyone officiate the wedding.

I glance up and my gaze collides with Baron's searing blue ones. The connection is instant. Electrifying and sexual, caring and full of those emotions he seems to carry under that hard exterior of his.

We reach him and my father places my hand in his. Baron brings it up to his lips and brushes his mouth across my knuckles. I shiver. His lips curve against my skin and his gaze intensifies as he stares deeply into my eyes. My thighs clench and my palms grow sweaty. I part my lips and his gaze drops to my mouth.

I blush. Baron smirks. He moves away, but doesn't release my hand. I lift my chin up, hold his gaze as we exchange our vows.

Then Baron grasps both of my hands in his. He leans down as I tip my head up. He gazes into my eyes, and in his blue ones, I see that unsaid emotion again. His irises deepen, until they seem almost azure in color. He lowers his lips to mine. "I love you," he whispers, then kisses me.

I pause my conversation with Raisa to glance around at the faces of my friends and family. Saint stands with one arm around Victoria, the palm of his other hand on her five-month pregnant belly. Amelie leans into Weston as she converses with Victoria. The two men gaze down at their wives, looks of such adoration on their faces, that honestly, if I hadn't seen it for myself, I'd have never guessed that they could be such alphaholes.

The doors to the house are flung open to reveal a piano, with Damian seated at it. He plays the keys and the notes float across the distance. I watch as Julia leans a hip against the piano, then leans over to kiss him.

Meredith, assistant to the Seven, and in many ways a guardian to all of them when they were younger, looks on with a smile on her face. Next to her is Peter, Sinclair's chauffeur and Meredith's now fiancé. That's the thing with the Seven. Despite being gazillionaires, none of them allow class or economic status to define what they are or who their friends should be.

Arpad and Karina are seated at a table, engaged in an animated conversation. Summer and Sinclair stand nearby, their arms around each other.

Raisa nudges me and nods toward a particular group, making me smile. Baron converses with my Dad and Lina—yes, I invited her—periodically laughing and looking my way. I am trying my best to accept her. I realize now that she is not trying to replace my mother. She reached out to me and told me as much. I can see how much she and my Dad love each other, and somehow, in light of recent events, and knowing how it feels to be torn apart by my feelings for two men, I can empathize with their situation too.

Isla walks over to me, a glass of champagne in hand. "Congratulations, babe," she smiles widely, "that was a gorgeous ceremony."

"All thanks to you." I tip up my chin, "You have one hell of a talent in organizing the best weddings in such a short time." I grip her hand, "Seriously, Iz, thank you for putting this together so quickly."

"Oh, pfft." She tosses her hair over her shoulder, "Anything for you, babe. At least, I didn't have to herd guests, considering you guys wanted to keep this so intimate."

"Speaking of," Raisa nudges Isla with her elbow, "who are those three delicious men in that corner?"

I turn in the direction of her gaze to the far corner, where, as if they are keen to distance themselves from the rest of the married folks, three men—and the only bachelors among the group—level hard looks at each other as they engage in some, evidently, serious conversation.

"The growly one is Isla's Liam," I say, then chuckle and duck when Isla smacks my arm and protests, "Not my anything, that one."

"The one in the grey suit is Hunter Whittington, a friend of Baron and Liam's." I continue, "And the third guy is Karina's brother Nikolai Solonik. All three do business with the Seven."

Raisa opens her mouth to ask a question when the barking of a dog cuts through the space. Max—Summer and Sinclair's dog—tears across the garden toward me. I bend down, hold out my arms as he jumps up and licks my face. His paws brush my dress, leaving doggy prints all over it, but I don't care.

I giggle, pet him as Jeeves hurries over to me. "I am so sorry, Madam; he escaped me."

"It's okay." I laugh as I pat the excited dog. "He's so cute," I chuckle as he evades Jeeves outstretched arm and darts off with the butler in his wake.

"He's certainly ensuring that Jeeves' fitness levels have shot up." Summer smirks as she approaches me. Sinner follows, not far behind, with my husband next to him, holding two glasses of champagne.

My husband... Gah, he's my husband. Baron hands me a flute, then raises his glass to me as he raises his voice to our guests, "I'd like to propose a toast." His lips quirk.

Isla and Raisa move away as the group hushes.

Baron gazes into my eyes, "When I saw you the first time, I knew you were the one. When I am with you, I like myself more. When I look at you, I know I can weather any storm. When I hold your hand, I know you are what was missing all along. When I think of you, I become a better person. When you are with me, I know I can overcome any challenge. When we are together, anything is possible. Now that you are mine, I can't think of anything I want more than to take care of you, to love you, to cherish and protect you. As long as I am alive, you'll never want for anything, and after I die—"

I reach up and place my finger on his lips, "No talk of dying today."

He smirks, "As you wish, my love."

He raises his glass, "To my wife, the most beautiful woman on this earth, and to me, the lucky bastard who doesn't deserve her."

He kisses my fingers and I blush, raising my glass to my lips. Baron takes a sip from his flute, then glances past me at the sound of a loud engine. He hands me his glass, and at my puzzled look, he bends down, kisses me on the cheek, and says, "I'll be right back."

He walks past me, and I turn to find him stalking toward a familiar figure.

Edward stands by his motorbike, on the other side of the house. He's wearing a leather jacket, his helmet under his arm. The wind ruffles his dark hair as Baron approaches him. He holds out his arm. Baron eschews it, instead throwing his arm around Ed. Ed hesitates, then hugs him back. The two talk, then as one, they turn to me. Edward waves at me, a smile splitting his face. I wave back. The two men converse some more, then Edward claps Baron on his shoulder. Baron returns the gesture, before stepping back. Edward slides on the helmet, mounts his bike, then raises the stand and starts the machine. The double barrels thunder, the noise clearly heard even at this distance. He takes off, and Baron turns and prowls over to me. I hand him his glass as he bends to brush his lips over mine.

"How is he?" I murmur.

Baron frowns, "He'll be fine... I think."

Jeeves walks in just then. He hovers at the side until Summer turns to him,

"What is it?" she asks.

"Umm, I'm sorry, madam, but your sister and her husband are here to attend the wedding, though they haven't been invited."

"My sister?" Summer scowls, "What do you mean, my sister? And she's not married, even if she is my sister. Which she can't be, because my sister is in Sicily, so..." She glances past Jeeves, then pales, "Oh, my." She swallows. "Oh, my god," she squeals, then takes off in the direction of a woman who's wearing a pant suit. She's standing next to a tall, broad man whose cold eyes take in the gathering.

"Karma." Summer throws her arms around the woman, "Oh, my god, Karma, you're here! I missed you so much. Why didn't you tell me that you were coming? I would have sent the car for you."

"There's no need for that," the man next to her interjects, "my wife has my car and chauffeur at her service."

"Wife?" Summer steps back. She tips up her chin and plants her palms on her hips, "And who are you?"

The man casts a glance around the garden, making sure to meet the gaze of each of the Seven who is present. My husband tenses. He wraps his arm around me and pulls me close. Saint and Weston move forward as one. Their shoulders are a solid wall that blocks their women from the man's line of sight. Arpad rises up from the table and flanks Weston, effectively blocking Karina. Peter wraps an arm around Meredith, while Damian rises up from the piano. He covers Julia with his bulk as he steps up to the double doors that lead to the garden.

O-k-a-y, what the hell is this? Some kind of battle lines are being drawn here that I can't quite figure out. "What's happening?" I whisper to Baron. "Who's he?"

Sinner stalks toward the new arrivals, and plants himself in between Summer and the man. "My wife asked you a question," he rumbles. "Who are you?"

"I," the man's lips turn up in a semblance of a smile, one that resembles a shark who's sniffed his next prey, "I am Michael Byron."

EDWARD GETS HIS OWN STORY AND HEA IN THE PRETEND CHRISTMAS BRIDE HERE

READ AN EXCERPT

Mira

"You're pregnant?" I yelp, then flush when everyone at my friend Gio's wedding turns to stare at me. We're at the bookshop her husband had gifted her, because that's where Gio wanted to hold the ceremony. And the brew of choice? Coffee. Also there's cupcakes, because what else do you need when you're a smuthead getting married in your favorite space? Talk about marriage goals. Tiny the Great Dane who's currently being dog sit by one of Gio's friends, parks himself next to me. He looks at me with melting eyes and I swear he's the only sympathetic gaze in the house.

I tighten my grip on the mug of coffee in my hand, flash a smile at Gio, "I mean, you're pregnant; oh my god, you're pregnant!"

I take a step forward and stumble across Tiny's flag-like tail. Oof! The cup goes flying from my hand, the contents spill over the man standing to the side. The cup bounces off his chest and hits the ground, then spins away.

"What the—?" He glances down at the coffee stain he's wearing across the front of tailor-made jacket which mold his shoulders and pants which cling to his powerful thighs. My heart stutters. My pulse booms at my temples. I draw in a sharp breath and under the bitter whiff of coffee is the sharp tang of something more complex, something spicy and savory and so laced with electricity it arrows straight to my center. My toes curl, goosebumps pepper my skin. I glance up and into his face and tawny-brown eyes blaze at me. The anger in them cuts through the noise in my head. I flinch, take in the mess that was once his $10,000 three-piece suit. I should know the price; it's the world of privilege I come from too. Which indicates he can afford another with ease, but to see the loathing in his features you'd think otherwise. I manage to get ahold of myself and gasp, "Oh god, I'm so sorry."

I remove the scarf from around my neck and dab at his suit lapel, then at his thigh then—stay away from his crotch. Not his crotch—I brush my scarf over the impressive packet between his legs. His thigh muscles bunch. Anger vibrates off of his big body and I flinch, retrieve my arm.

"Am I always like this? I'm not. Do I often ask questions of myself and reply to them? Only when I'm nervous." I chuckle, make sure to keep my eyes averted. "Which is when I'm a klutz. What comes first though? Being nervous that leads me to being a klutz. Or being a klutz that makes me nervous. Or maybe one leads to the other in an endless feedback loop." I nod. "Yep that's what happened, which is why I tripped over Tiny's tail. But Tiny didn't mean to cause the accident, did you?"

Tiny woofs, then head-butts me. The momentum causes me to tumble forward. The man catches me around the waist. I look up and this time when our gazes meet, gold fire sparks in his. A lick of fire, a whip of mahogany, a sheen of amber all polished to a burnished, searing flame that would burn you on contact. The air between us seems to ignite, drawing in all the oxygen in the room. I try to breathe, my lungs protest. I sway and his hold on my waist tightens. His jaw hardens. The sharp contours of his cheekbones lend a stark, almost cruel quality to his features. I've never met this man before but I've heard of him from Gio. Edward, that's his name, and he's a former priest. He walked away from the church and embraced a life in pursuit of money—or so I heard from the girls—not that I have a tendency to gossip, okay maybe a little. When you don't have a choice in your future, you take pleasures in the little things in life, and gossip happens to be one of those treats I refuse to deprive myself of. Besides, I want to know why he walked away from what was surely his calling? It takes strength of conviction to become a priest, but then to leave it behind? Why would he do that? On that count my girlfriends had been mum. It was his story to tell they'd said. Which let me to speculate it had to have been because of a woman? Did he break up to be with her? Though from what I've heard he is single. So does he still think of her? And why is my mind racing at a million miles an hour? Why are my palms sweating, my stomach twisting and turning, why is my heart banging into my chest like thunder cracking across the skies before a storm?

A heavy weight pins me in place. I can't move. Can't speak. Caught up in the tractor beam of this man's gaze, I'm a butterfly trapped in a bell jar. Then Tiny woofs, and both of us jump back from each other.

"Sorry, sorry, oh my god, I am so sorry." I wave my hands in the air. "And I sound like I'm a record, stuck on repeat. You do know what I mean by a record, right?" I peer up at him. "Of course, you do." I take in the threads of grey at his temple. "You're older than me—not dinosaur age, but close to it—so I'm sure you do."

The man's already rock-hard jaw grows more rigid. A nerve throbs at his temple. The tension coiled in his muscles thickens the air between us. I swallow around the ball of nervousness in my throat, and attempt a smile. "I didn't mean to imply you were ancient. I mean, you're, what, twenty years older than me?"

He scowls.

Ugh, that didn't come out right. He probably thinks I'm insulting him. Which I didn't mean to.

"Okay, fifteen, at least." I cough. "Not that I don't like older men. I have a soft spot for them." I shuffle my feet. "No, no, not that kind of soft spot. I find older men much more confident. You know what you want, and don't hesitate to get it. You guys have your shit together, you know?"

His scowl deepens.

"I don't mean I find you attractive. Not that you're not good looking. You have that whole tall dark and intense look going on, which I admit, is a turn on. Not that you turn me on."

The blood drain from my face.

"Oh my god, I didn't mean to say that. Also, whoa—you'll have to dry-clean your suit. I'll pay for it, of course."

Utter silence follows my proclamation. Even Tiny is quiet. Guess I shouldn't have offered to pay? Maybe I should have kept quiet. But his demeanor is daunting. Why is he standing there, silent, except for his body language which screams his displeasure? A muscle works above his jaw. If he grinds his teeth any harder he's going to crack a molar or two. Why is he so annoyed? It was a honest mistake after all, "At least, the coffee was decaf." I offer.

Someone titters— then turns it into a cough. Someone else, chuckles, then manages to stifle it. But the man in front of me stays silent. His shoulders are bunched, the tendons of his neck stand out in relief. He might as well be carved out of stone but for the rise and fall of his impressive chest.

I hunch my shoulders. "You're not saying anything. Why aren't you saying anything? Are you pissed-off? Oh god, you're pissed-off. I'm sorry, you make me nervous, can you tell? Haha, I prefer to fill the silence when the person I'm talking to stays quiet. I do like to speak, the only time I clam up is in church, so I hope you won't insist I go to confession and own up my sins to the—" don't say priest, don't say priest—"priest." Oops!"

I had not meant to say that out aloud. No shit, Mira why did you think of the p word in his presence? You know you have no filter between your brain and your mouth, or where he is concerned between that part between your thighs and your mouth. No, don't think of how moist you are down there. Not right now.

Edward's shoulders swell. The tendons of his throat are so pronounced he's beginning to resemble the hulk. Only his face is utterly emotionless which is frankly terrifying. I gulp. At my side I sense Gio trying to smother her laugh, but I don't dare look at her. I draw in a ragged turn, want to turn and run out of there. But one thing I'm not is a coward. It's why I didn't run out on my family either. That would have hurt them too much. Instead I'd bargained with them—a few months of freedom in exchange for returning to the fold. Helplessness squeezes my chest. Any day now I'll get the call and have to go back home, to the arranged marriage that would follow. Until then—I can live life the way I want. I'd found work at a local kindergarten, made enough to rent my own studio, everything was going well. Until the kindergarten went out of business. But I'm going to find another job soon. I'm not going to give up and going back home, not until my parents call for me. I have the strength to face my uncertain future knowing I won't have control for much of it. And this, here, in this moment I hold the power.

I square my shoulders, jut out my chin, "I didn't mean to talk about your past. I was warned not to. Not that I'm a gossip—okay, maybe a little."

I hold up my thumb and forefinger. "And only because gossip is good for you. It helps to de-stress. And you look like it would help if you were to relax. I'll bet you keep it all locked up inside. Which makes you a prime candidate for a coronary. Not that it's any of my business. Oh my god." I squeeze my eyes shut. "I've done it now, haven't I?"

When I look at him again, his expression veers between fascination, disgust and anger.

"Okay, that's it. I will not speak anymore. I'll wipe you down, and you can be on your way." I leans forward, brush my scarf over the front of his pants again and again. His thigh-muscles coil. The fabric of his pants stretch until I'm sure they're going to pop at the seam. I sense his gaze bore into the top of my bent head but I don't dare look up.

"You done?" He finally growls through gritted teeth. And his voice—it's gravelly and hard and carries the promise of all the delicious, unforgivable things he could do to me. And I want him too. I swallow around the ball of emotion in my throat, "It's not getting any better, is it?" I ask in small voice. "No, it's not. Am I making it worse? Of course, I am." I slowly tip up my head and meet his gaze. "Can I make it up to you?"

His lips thin, he looks ready to bite my head off, then a cunning look comes into his eyes.

"How are you at obeying orders?"

Mira

"Orders?" I blink slowly. "What kind of orders?"

Not the kind you read in your smutty books. Definitely can't be those kind of orders.

The skin around his eyes tightens. "What are smutty books?" he rumbles. My never-endings spark. Oh my god, that caramel-velvet voice of his brushes up against my skin, and every cell in my body seems to come alive. Also, no, no, no, did I say the S-word aloud?

"I meant, slutty books." I cover my face with my hands. "I said that aloud, as well, didn't I?"

I peek through the gaps in my fingers in time to see him nod slowly. He doesn't say a word, though. He merely glares at me like I'm a puzzle to solve, or maybe, an annoyance, or an irritant, or a pest he'd prefer to swat away.

The silence stretches. Our gazes catch. The air between us crackles with awareness. The fine hairs on the back of my neck rise. A heavy feeling pushes down on my chest. I swallow, and my throat feels like it's lined with sharp glass. What's happening to me?

"Do you always say what comes into your mind?" he asks in a voice that's detached but also curious, in the way a scientist might be while observing an animal in the wild.

I frown. "Of course not." I wave a hand in the air, striving for casual. "Only when I'm nervous. Not that I'm nervous now. And do you make me nervous? Of course not."

"Also a liar." He drags his thumb under his lower lip, and my gaze is drawn to his mouth. Gorgeous mouth. Hard mouth. A mean upper lip that hints at the his authoritarian nature. That puffy lower lip that might signify his pursuit of pleasure. A hedonist. A savage. A fiend. He's all of them. Does that make him a heartless monster? Or a merciless lover? One who seeks gratification, but not in an instant way. This man would wait months...years, if needed. This man would pursue what he wants with a singular focus. And oh, to be at the receiving end of that intensity.

What I'm facing now is a tiny insight into how it would be if he were to get fixated on me. I shake my head. Fixated? I don't want that. Not at all. I don't know this man. All I know is the passing reference to him within the circle of my girlfriends, whose husbands he's a friend of. I've never seen him with a woman, though.

"I've never seen you with a woman." What the—! "Did I say that out loud?" I ask weakly.

His features harden until they could be carved from a diamond-hard material, whatever that's called.

"Oh, shit," Gio says in a soft voice from behind me.

Indeed.

"Umm, sorry? Did I say something wrong? Of course, I did. But why is it wrong? I have no idea. No one has ever seen me with a man before today either, so it's not odd not to be seen with someone of the opposite sex. By the same token, it's allowed for a woman to have friends who are men and a man is allowed to have woman friends. Besides, you're no longer a priest, so..." I swallow, for he's leaned forward on the balls of his feet.

It's a slight movement, but it brings him close enough for his spicy electricity filled scent—to crash over me. It's as if I've been bathed in a cloud of aphrodisiacs—oh wait, those are his pheromones! A-n-d my stupid stomach goes into free fall. "Sooo, what I'm trying to say is, it doesn't matter if you have women friends. Or girlfriends. Or ladyloves, as they called it in the regency era. I mean, you look stuffy enough to belong in an historical romance. All you need is a ruffled shirt..." I hum thoughtfully. "Yep, a white ruffled shirt, which would stand out against your skin and be the perfect foil to your cut-glass cheekbones. Does that mean you're good-looking? Of course not. I mean, if you smiled a little more... Now—"

"Smile?" he asks in that dark, dangerous voice, and that swirling sensation in my belly intensifies. My toes curl. Goosebumps pop on my skin.

"Smile," I say in a dazed voice. "You know, when the sides of your mouth curve up because your sense of humor is tickled, or when you feel the urge to show your appreciation of a situation like this." I project my most confident, school-picture-day smile. "Not that either of those have crossed your mind for a decade."

"How do you know that?" he asks in a curious voice.

"Oh, b-b-b-because your lips have been set in a firm line since I saw you earlier. And there's this wrinkle between your eyebrows which seems to have been etched in permanently, and then the frown-lines that radiate out from the corners of your eyes, which are, no doubt, because you're old—er,"—I cough—"older and distinguished. Anyway, you have that dark-cloud-brewing-over-your-head look that only adds to your charm. From far away. I mean, it's understandable you don't have a girlfriend or any significant woman in your life. You look like you're angry at the world, and there's an internal war going on inside, and you're all scowling and brooding and menacing. Which is all fine in a smu—I mean, romance novel. But in real life, no one wants to be around a man who's an alphahole."

"Alphahole?" He says the word as if he's trying it on for size, and it fits. Speaking of fits, from the looks of it, he'd need an XL condom, given the size of the resting-package at his crotch. A-n-d, my gaze slides downward. It... it's bigger than what it was earlier, so the tent under that coffee-stained fabric is... because he's aroused? Am I thinking in questions? That's a first. That's how rattled I am in his presence.

Tiny woofs. I jerk my chin up to find he's looking at me with a glint in his eyes.

"Was I caught in the act?" When he only raises an eyebrow, I continue, unabated. That's me, I keep digging that hole. "I was. So what?" I tip up my chin. "A man can stare at a woman's chest, but a woman can't ogle a man's package?"

One of my girlfriends—Penny?—gasps, before turning it into a cough.

"Hear, hear," Gio calls out.

Someone else titters, then the sound cuts off.

I don't dare look around the room, though. Can't take my gaze off those tawny eyes of his. Burnished gold, glistening copper, hard like topaz gemstones. They could sear me, look right through me to decipher my secrets. They could turn soft like melted butter which... is not me. He's an unfeeling brute, a vicious beast. The devil incarnate. The kind of man who'd be all wrong for me.

Besides, I don't like him. I don't like the fact I can't read him. I prefer someone who's open and honest with his feelings, who can be sensitive to my needs. This man... He'd break me down, then leave me. I'd be better off keeping my distance from him.

"Oh, look at the time." I raise my hand and pretend to gasp at my empty wrist—no, I don't wear a watch, but so what? It's the intent behind my gesture that counts, right? "I need to be someplace else, somewhere urgent. Nice meeting you Mr. Ex-priest who shares his name with the man who's side I was not on in Twilight."

I turn to leave, when he drawls, "Team Jacob, are you?"

I pause, then scowl at him over my shoulder. "Is that a problem for you?"

"Is it for you?" he shoots back.

"Of course not."

"Good." He nods with satisfaction. "Remember, you asked how you could make things up to me?"

I nod slowly.

"Marry me."

My jaw drops, "You're kidding."

"Am I?" His eyes glint.

My heart crashes into my rib cage. This is a joke—him asking me to marry him. Only it doesn't feel like that. His harsh features indicate he has not one funny bone in his gorgeous, sexy, chiseled out of granite, body. And to be married to him? This brooding, unfriendly, severe man, this... dark, handsome in an uncompromising manner man, who'd relish getting his way with me in bed... is... not something I want. Of course not.

I turn to face him. "Of course, you are." When the expression on his face doesn't change, I swallow, spare a glance around the room and find no one willing to meet my eyes. "Aren't you?" I ask in a small voice.

He tilts his head, "What I am, is offering you a job."

"A-a job?" I manage to choke out.

"I assume you need one?"

"What makes you think—" I shut up because there's a knowing look on his features. What gave it away? I am still a plus-size woman. Never mind,

I've been surviving on dry ramen for the last week, ever since the kindergarten where I worked went bust—my body shows no signs of losing those stupid curves. Good thing, Gio had already moved out of the apartment when I lost my job. There's no way I would have wanted to bother her with my problems or allowed her to buy my food. And I know she would have insisted. It's not that I don't want to burden her because I know money isn't an issue for her and Rick. Hell, most of my friends are married to rich men. I'm too ashamed to admit I need help. I need to do this on my own. But what hurts the most is not being able to see the kids I used to take care of.

Between my aching heart and my empty stomach, I've only managed to make it to two interviews, both for jobs I didn't get. I'm running out of options. And there's no way I'm calling up my family. My stepmother and stepsisters would be only too happy to tell me, again, I'm a failure. I had enough of that when I lived with them. I am not subjecting myself to that ordeal again. So yeah, I need a job.

He sees the expression on my face, and a flash of satisfaction fills his face before he schools his features back into a mask. He reaches into his suit pocket and pulls out a card before handing it to me. "Be at my office, eight a.m. tomorrow."

Edward

"You think she'll turn up?" Sinclair spots me as I bench press twice my body's weight. My chest squeezes down, my shoulders scream in protest, my biceps threaten to tear apart, but I ignore it. Breathe through it. In and out.

"She will."

"And if she doesn't?" He assists me as I push the barbell up and over my head.

"She will," I grunt.

"There's a chance she won't."

"If she doesn't, there are more fish in the sea, but she will." I lower the weight down to my chest, hold, then he assists me as I hoist the barbell up again. The tendons on my throat strain, and my triceps feel like they are being shredded. I push the barbell up and hold. And hold. Sweat runs down my temples, between my pecs. My stomach muscles harden, my thighs contract. I push my feet into the floor and brace. Brace. You need to bear the weight. Bear the mistakes of your past. Bear how you were abandoned by your parents when you needed them most. Bear how she decided you were not the one. Not that I blame her. Baron would be—has been—a better husband for her. And now, they had a child. A family. Moisture trickles out from the corner of my eyes, joining the beads of sweat on my face.

"You okay, mate?" Sinclair murmur.

"Why wouldn't I be?" I begin to lower the barbell down, and he doesn't let go. He helps me as I push up and through the pain again. Work through it. Keep riding it. At some point, you'll find the calm in the center of the storm. At some point, I'll figure out my life's purpose.

It's the only reason I took the meeting my grandfather. My father's father, who I never met before. Imagine my surprise when he called me and introduced himself. My father never spoke about him.

After the incident the communication with my parents broke down. They were at a loss for how to deal with what had happened to me. And I took refuge in whatever helped me find oblivion from the emotional pain I was carrying—am still carrying—inside. I almost hung up but he pleaded with me to meet him. Just once. Ten minutes of my time. I finally agreed because, why not?

Being the General Manager of the London Ice Kings has given me some focus. Working with Rick Mitchell, the captain of the team, we steered the team to victory in the League. From being the underdogs to one of the highest paid teams in the world, and in one season. It was unheard of. I'd accepted the position as a favor to Knight, the owner of the team. But in working toward a greater goal, I discovered some measure of satisfaction. You can take the priest out of the church, but you can't take the need to help people from him. It's also the reason I agreed to my grandfather's request.

"You've been through a lot in the past week." Sinclair helps me ease the bar onto the rack. I draw in a breath, feel my heart thunder in my chest, and the blood pounds in my ears, drowning out all thoughts for a few seconds. It's the main reason I work out. Pushing my body in a way I can't push my mind. Controlling how much I can lift in a manner I never can control my thinking.

All those restraints, the limitations I imposed on myself. I lived my life according to the direction of the Church. Found some modicum of peace in the routine, the daily prayers, the sermons... All the while, knowing the storm brewing inside me would break loose, and ignoring the warning signs. Until it did. I sinned. And punished myself by leaving the house of God.

Unmoored, I left everything behind. I travelled until I managed to ground myself. And by the time I returned, it was too late. She had turned to Baron. And they were happy together. And me?

The empty shell that constitutes me, Edward Chase, lives from moment-to-moment, not quite sure what I wanted out of life. I feel un-needed, unwanted, useless to everyone, even myself. Maybe that's why I grasped onto Grandfather's ask. I could be of help to someone, after all.

I don't need a shrink to tell me I'm going about this all wrong. I don't need a shrink to tell me the person I see when I look in the mirror is not the person I was. I don't need my friends to point out I'm on a one way trip to a crisis again. Hell, I'm living from one crisis to another internally. Every minute I get through without doing something I'll regret is a win. As is the deal I made with my grandfather. It gives me a reason to... keep going.

I sit up, then reach for my bottle of water and chug from it. I lower it and raise a shoulder. "I'll live."

"For how long?" he asks softly.

"For however long it takes, I assume."

He searches my features. "I'm worried about you."

I bark out a laugh. "Since when did you start going soft?" I raise a hand. "Forget I said that. All six of you are married, and most of you with kids... Who'd have thought?"

His mouth curves in a smile, the kind I never thought I'd see on Sinclair fucking Sterling's face. The meaner they are, the harder they fall, apparently. The seven of us were united by an incident that changed our lives forever. And each of my friends went through their journey and found their soulmates. It's not to be for me, and that's okay. I'm happy they're happy. All of them. Including Baron. He makes her happy, and in her happiness is mine.

"Speaking of,"—he tilts his head—"what time is your girl coming to the office?"

"Not my girl, merely a—"

"Cog in the wheel?" His smile grows sly. "A piece in the puzzle. A—"

"Stepping stone to my larger plan? Yes," I say dryly.

"Hmm." He grabs the bottle from me, drains in.

"The fuck does that mean?"

"Nothing. Why should it mean something?"

I frown. "No, of course not, but if you have something to say—"

He caps the bottle, then wipes his hand over his face. When he lowers his arm, his eyes gleam. "It would be lost on you. Ergo, you need to learn your lessons yourself."

"Thanks. And to think, I'm the one who gave the sermons."

"You know what they say? Even a doctor needs another when he's unwell."

I lower my eyebrows. "Are you saying—"

"Nothing. You do you, Ed. Find your way. I have every confidence that you will."

I snort. "What-fucking-ever."

He laughs. "The classic rejoinder of a man who's at a loss for words. Also,"—he nods toward the clock on the wall—"you need to rush if you don't want to be late."

I am late but not for the meeting with her. I left instructions with my HR director to get her settled in. I'm on my way to a much more important meeting. When I walk into the conference room adjoining my new office, the five men in the room turn to glare at me. Once again, I'm the outsider, but I prefer it this way. They're brothers. Some of their blood runs through me, but I've never met them before today.

"Knox." I jerk my chin toward the man standing in the far corner. The sunlight streaming in casts his face in shadows. The other four are at strategic positions around the conference room. None of them are seated. And I'm sure their locations weren't chosen by chance. These five are united in a way that tells me I am the opposition. The enemy. The one who came in from the cold to take over their business. The one chosen by their grandfather to take over as the CEO of their company.

"Edward,"—Knox tips up his chin—"or should I call you Priest?"

There's a challenge in his tone—one I don't rise to. I've come across enough men who've decided it's best to go on the offensive when they're backed into a corner, as my half-brothers, no doubt, are at this moment.

"Priest, I prefer Priest."

"Yet, you left the church?" This from Ryot who's standing closest to me.

"Funny how you only value something when you don't have it anymore,"

I murmur.

"Like your girl who's not your girl anymore?" Tyler, the brother standing on the other side of the table, drawls.

Anger squeezes my guts. My pulse begins to race. "Better than not knowing if your child is your own or not." The moment the words are out of my mouth, I regret it. I raise my hands. "Sorry, that was a low blow."

Tyler's jaw tics. A nerve pops at his temple. He folds his fingers into fists and takes a few steps forward, as if he's about to jump over the table and hit me.

But the brother standing near him—Connor—moves forward and touches his shoulder. Tyler seems about to shake it off, but the other man says, "Don't. William won't be happy if you fuck up this meeting."

William. So they do refer to our grandfather by his first name? He's the chairperson of the company, so it stands to reason it's easier for all concerned to call him any other name at work, and he'd asked me to do so the one and only time we'd met. But I'd have thought when they were among family they'd refer to him as Grandpa? Or Grandad? Not that he looks like either of those.

Tyler lowers his arms to his sides but continues to glower at me.

The fifth man who, so far, stands in one corner of the room reading, looks around, then snaps his book shut and walks over to the table. From my research, I know that Brody is the quietest of the five, and the one I know the least about. He keeps to himself and does not participate in the day-to-day running of the company. The only reason he's here is because William asked him to come.

Brody pulls out a chair, turns it around and straddles it. The rest of the brothers look at him, their expressions ranging from anger to frustration. All of their gazes are tinged with stubbornness. Do I really want to take over the company and deal with their egos, not to mention, the roadblocks they'll put up to block any plan I want to execute?

If it's challenge I'm looking for, being the GM of the London Ice Kings provides me plenty—or rather, did provide me plenty—right until the time they won the League, and on their first attempt. I played a role by helping to put the team together, but the glory belongs to the players. And they won the championship.

I have the option to continue as GM, but I'm ready to hand that off. I paved the way for someone else to take over and build on the foundation I set up. That's me. I prefer to do the hard work, the dirty work, the work that requires the most obstacles to be overcome. And once that's done, I moved on.

The only time I stayed consistent was when I was part of the church. The routine, the discipline, and the regulations ensured I could focus on the only thing which mattered—my devotion to the Lord. And then I left it behind, and with it, my ability to have a focal point in my life. I hoped being the GM of the Ice Kings would provide me with that anchor, and it did. Briefly. But something was missing. The position always felt temporary. I loved building something with the team, but like I said, something was missing. Something I hope I'll find as the CEO of the Davenport group of companies.

It's why I accepted William's offer to take over this role. The fact that it means working with my half-siblings is something I've both been looking forward to while also dreading. It's not every day a man finds out he has an entire blood family he never knew anything about.

I glance about at the faces of my half-brothers, then pull out the chair at the head of the table and drop into it. The men stiffen. None of them move for a few seconds. Then, Knox steps forward into the light. I take in the scars on his face as he crosses over to the chair at the other end of the table. He sits down, and his brothers follow suit.

Then, Knox leans forward in his seat. "You have something to tell us?"

TO FIND OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT READ EDWARD & MIRA'S STORY HERE DOWNLOAD YOUR EXCLUSIVE COPY OF AMELIE'S RECIPES AS WELL AS AN EXCLUSIVE EPILOGUE WITH DAMIAN & JULIA, AND ARPAD & KARINA, HERE
[READ MICHAEL AND KARMA'S FORCED MARRIAGE ROMANCE IN MAFIA
KING HERE](#)

READ AN EXCERPT FROM MAFIA KING

Karma

"Morn came and went—and came, and brought no day..."

Tears prick the backs of my eyes. Goddamn Byron. His words creep up on me when I am at my weakest. Not that I am a poetry addict, by any measure, but words are my jam. The one consolation I have is that, when everything else in the world is wrong, I can turn to them, and they'll be there, friendly, steady, waiting with open arms.

And this particular poem had laced my blood, crawled into my gut when I'd first read it. Darkness had folded within me like an insidious snake, that raises its head when I least expect it. Like now, when I look out on the still sleeping city of London, from the grassy slope of Waterlow Park.

Somewhere out there, the Mafia is hunting me, apparently. It's why my sister Summer and her new husband Sinclair Sterling had insisted that I have my own security detail. I had agreed... only to appease them... then given my bodyguard the slip this morning. I had decided to come running here because it's not a place I'd normally go... Not so early in the morning, anyway. They won't think to look for me here. At least, not for a while longer.

I purse my lips, close my eyes. Silence. The rustle of the wind between the leaves. The faint tinkle of the water from the nearby spring.

I could be the last person on this planet, alone, unsung, bound for the grave.

Ugh! Stop. Right there. I drag the back of my hand across my nose. Try it again, focus, get the words out, one after the other, like the steps of my sorry life.

"Morn came and went—and came, and... and..." My voice breaks. "Bloody asinine hell." I dig my fingers into the grass and grab a handful and fling it out. Again. From the top.

"Morn came and went—and came, and—"

"...brought no day."

A gravelly voice completes my sentence.

I whip my head around. His silhouette fills my line of sight. He's sitting on the same knoll as me, yet I have to crane my neck back to see his profile. The sun is at his back, so I can't make out his features. Can't see his eyes... Can only take in his dark hair, combed back by a ruthless hand that brooked no measure.

My throat dries.

Thick dark hair, shot through with grey at the temples. He wears his age like a badge. I don't know why, but I know his years have not been easy. That he's seen more, indulged in more, reveled in the consequences of his actions, however extreme they might have been. He's not a normal, everyday person, this man. Not a nine-to-fiver, not someone who lives an average life. Definitely not a man who returns home to his wife and home at the end of the day. He is...different, unique, evil... Monstrous. Yes, he is a beast, one who sports the face of a man but who harbors the kind of darkness inside that speaks to me. I gulp.

His face boasts a hooked nose, a thin upper lip, a fleshy lower lip. One that hints at hidden desires, Heat. Lust. The sensuous scrape of that whiskered jaw over my innermost places. Across my inner thigh, reaching toward that core of me that throbs, clenches, melts to feel the stab of his tongue, the thrust of his hardness as he impales me, takes me, makes me his. Goosebumps pop on my skin.

I drag my gaze away from his mouth down to the scar that slashes across his throat. A cold sensation coils in my chest. What or who had hurt him in such a cruel fashion?

*"Of this their desolation; and all hearts
Were chill'd into a selfish prayer for light..."*

He continues in that rasping guttural tone. Is it the wound that caused that scar that makes his voice so... gravelly... So deep... so... so, hot?

Sweat beads my palms and the hairs on my nape rise. "Who are you?"

He stares ahead as his lips move,

*"Forests were set on fire—but hour by hour
They fell and faded—and the crackling trunks
Extinguish'd with a crash—and all was black."*

I swallow, moisture gathers in my core. How can I be wet by the mere cadence of this stranger's voice?

I spring up to my feet.

"Sit down," he commands.

His voice is unhurried, lazy even, his spine erect. The cut of his black jacket stretches across the width of his massive shoulders. His hair... I was mistaken—there are threads of dark gold woven between the darkness that pours down to brush the nape of his neck. A strand of hair falls over his brow. As I watch, he raises his hand and brushes it away. Somehow, the gesture lends an air of vulnerability to him. Something so at odds with the rest of his persona that, surely, I am mistaken?

My scalp itches. I take in a breath and my lungs burn. This man... He's sucked up all the oxygen in this open space as if he owns it, the master of all he surveys. The master of me. My death. My life. A shiver ladders along my spine. Get away, get away now, while you still can.

I angle my body, ready to spring away from him.

"I won't ask again."

Ask. Command. Force me to do as he wants. He'll have me on my back, bent over, on my side, on my knees, over him, under him. He'll surround me, overwhelm me, pin me down with the force of his personality. His charisma, his larger-than-life essence will crush everything else out of me and I... I'll love it.

"No."

"Yes."

A fact. A statement of intent, spoken aloud. So true. So real. Too real. Too much. Too fast. All of my nightmares... my dreams come to life. Everything I've wanted is here in front of me. I'll die a thousand deaths before he'll be done with me... And then? Will I be reborn? For him. For me. For myself.

I live, first and foremost, to be the woman I was... am meant to be.

"You want to run?"

No.

No.

I nod my head.

He turns his, and all the breath leaves my lungs. Blue eyes—cerulean, dark like the morning skies, deep like the nighttime...hidden corners, secrets that I don't dare uncover. He'll destroy me, have my heart, and break it so casually.

My throat burns and a boiling sensation squeezes my chest.

"Go then, my beauty, fly. You have until I count to five. If I catch you, you are mine."

"If you don't?"

"Then I'll come after you, stalk your every living moment, possess your nightmares, and steal you away in the dead of night, and then..."

I draw in a shuddering breath as liquid heat drips from between my legs. "Then?" I whisper.

"Then, I'll ensure you'll never belong to anyone else, you'll never see the light of day again, for your every breath, your every waking second, your thoughts, your actions... and all your words, every single last one, will belong to me." He peels back his lips, and his teeth glint in the first rays of the morning light. "Only me." He straightens to his feet and rises, and rises.

This man... He is massive. A monster who always gets his way. My guts churn. My toes curl. Something primeval inside of me insists I hold my own. I cannot give in to him. Cannot let him win whatever this is. I need to stake my ground, in some form. Say something. Anything. Show him you're not afraid of this.

"Why?" I tilt my head back, all the way back. "Why are you doing this?"
He tilts his head, his ears almost canine in the way they are silhouetted against his profile.

"Is it because you can? Is it a... a," I blink, "a debt of some kind?"

He stills.

"My father, this is about how he betrayed the Mafia, right? You're one of them?"

"Lucky guess." His lips twist, "It is about your father, and how he promised you to me. He reneged on his promise, and now, I am here to collect."

"No." I swallow... No, no, no.

"Yes." His jaw hardens.

All expression is wiped clean of his face, and I know then, that he speaks the truth. It's always about the past. My sorry shambles of a past... Why does it always catch up with me? You can run, but you can never hide.

"Tick-tock, Beauty." He angles his body and his shoulders shut out the sight of the sun, the dawn skies, the horizon, the city in the distance, the rustle of the grass, the trees, the rustle of the leaves. All of it fades and leaves just me and him. Us. Run.

"Five." He jerks his chin, straightens the cuffs of his sleeves.

My knees wobble.

"Four."

My pulse rate spikes. I should go. Leave. But my feet are planted in this earth. This piece of land where we first met. What am I, but a speck in the larger scheme of things? To be hurt. To be forgotten. To be taken without an ounce of retribution. To be punished... by him.

"Three." He thrusts out his chest, widens his stance, every muscle in his body relaxed. "Two."

I swallow. The pulse beats at my temples. My blood thrums.

"One."

Michael

"Go."

She pivots and races down the slope. Her dark hair streams behind her. Her scent, sexy femininity and silver moonflowers, clings to my nose, then recedes. It's so familiar, that scent.

I had smelled it before, had reveled in it. Had drawn in it into my lungs as she had peeked up at me from under her thick eyelashes. Her green gaze had fixed on mine, her lips parted as she welcomed my kiss. As she had wound her arms about my neck, pushed up those sweet breasts and flattened them against my chest. As she had parted her legs when I had planted my thigh between them. I had seen her before... in my dreams. I stiffen. She can't be the same girl, though, can she?

I reach forward, thrust out my chin and sniff the air, but there's only the damp scent of dawn, mixed with the foul tang of exhaust fumes, as she races away from me.

She stumbles and I jump forward, pause when she straightens. Wait. Wait. Give her a lead. Let her think she has almost escaped, that she's gotten the better of me... As if.

I clench my fists at my sides, force myself to relax. Wait. Wait. She reaches the bottom of the incline, turns. I surge forward. One foot in front of the other. My heels dig into the grassy surface and mud flies up, clings to the hem of my £4000 Italian pants. Like I care? Plenty more where that came from. An entire walk-in closet, full of clothes made to measure, to suit every occasion, with every possible accessory needed by a man in my position to impress...

Everything... Except the one thing that I had coveted from the moment I had laid eyes on her. Sitting there on the grassy slope, unshed tears in her eyes, and reciting... Byron? For hell's sake. Of all the poets in the world, she had to choose the Lord of Darkness.

I huff. All a ploy. Clearly, she knew I was sitting next to her... No, not possible. I had walked toward her and she hadn't stirred. Hadn't been aware. Yeah, I am that good. I've been known to slit a man's throat from ear-to-ear while he was awake and in his full senses. Alive one second, dead the next. That's how it is in my world. You want it, you take it. And I... I want her.

I increase my pace, eat up the distance between myself and the girl... That's all she is. A slip of a thing, a slim blur of motion. Beauty in hiding. A diamond, waiting for me to get my hands on her, polish her, show her what it means to be...

Dead. She is dead. That's why I am here.

A flash of skin, a creamy length of thigh. My groin hardens and my legs wobble. I lurch over a bump in the ground. The hell? I right myself, leap forward, inching closer, closer. She reaches a curve in the path, disappears out of sight.

My heart hammers in my chest. I will not lose her, will not. Here, Beauty, come to Daddy. The wind whistles past my ears. I pump my legs, lengthen my strides, turn the corner. There's no one there. Huh?

My heart hammers and the blood pounds at my wrists, my temples; adrenaline thrums in my veins. I slow down, come to a stop. Scan the clearing.

The hairs on my forearms prickle. She's here. Not far, but where? Where is she? I prowl across to the edge of the clearing, under the tree with its spreading branches.

When I get my hands on you, Beauty, I'll spread your legs like the pages of a poem. Dip into your honeyed sweetness, like a quill pen in ink. Drag my aching shaft across that melting, weeping entrance. My balls throb. My groin tightens. The crack of a branch above shivers across my stretched nerve endings. I swoop forward, hold out my arms, and close my grasp around the trembling, squirming mass of precious humanity. I cradle her close to my chest, heart beating thud-thud-thud, overwhelming any other thought.

Mine. All mine. The hell is wrong with me? She wriggles her little body, and her curves slide across my forearms. My shoulders bunch and my fingers tingle. She kicks out with her legs and arches her back, thrusting her breasts up so her nipples are outlined against the fabric of her sports bra. She dared to come out dressed like that? In that scrap of fabric that barely covers her luscious flesh?

"Let me go." She whips her head toward me and her hair flows around her shoulders, across her face. She blows it out of the way. "You monster, get away from me."

Anger drums at the backs of my eyes and desire tugs at my groin. The scent of her is sheer torture, something I had dreamed of in the wee hours of twilight when dusk turned into night.

She's not real. She's not the woman I think she is. She is my downfall. My sweet poison. The bitter medicine I must partake of to cure the ills that plague my company.

"Fine." I lower my arms and she tumbles to the grass, hits the ground butt first.

"How dare you." She huffs out a breath, her hair messily arranged across her face.

I shove my hands into the pockets of my fitted pants, knees slightly bent, legs apart. Tip my chin down and watch her as she sprawls at my feet.

"You... dropped me?" She makes a sound deep in her throat.

So damn adorable.

"Your wish is my command." I quirk my lips.

"You don't mean it."

"You're right." I lean my weight forward on the balls of my feet and she flinches.

"What... what do you want?"

"You."

She pales. "You want to... to rob me? I have nothing of consequence.

"Oh, but you do, Beauty."

I lean in and every muscle in her body tenses. Good. She's wary. She should be. She should have been alert enough to have run as soon as she sensed my presence. But she hadn't.

I should spare her because she's the woman from my dreams... but I won't. She's a debt I intend to collect. She owes me, and I've delayed what was meant to happen long enough.

I pull the gun from my holster, point it at her.

Her gaze widens and her breath hitches. I expect her to plead with me for her life, but she doesn't. She stares back at me with her huge dilated pupils. She licks her lips and the blood drains to my groin. Che cazzo! Why does her lack of fear turn me on so?

"Your phone," I murmur, "take out your phone."

She draws in a breath, then reaches into her pocket and pulls out her phone.

"Call your sister."

"What?"

"Dial your sister, Beauty. Tell her you are going away on a long trip to Sicily with your new male friend."

"What?"

"You heard me." I curl my lips. "Do it, now!"

She blinks, looks like she is about to protest, then her fingers fly over the phone.

Damn, and I had been looking forward to coaxing her into doing my bidding.

She holds her phone to her ear. I can hear the phone ring on the other side, before it goes to voicemail. She glances at me and I jerk my chin. She looks away, takes a deep breath, then speaks in a cheerful voice, "Hi Summer, it's me, Karma. I, ah, have to go away for a bit. This new... ah, friend of mine... He has an extra ticket and he has invited me to Sicily to spend some time with him. I... ah, I don't know when, exactly, I'll be back, but I'll message you and let you know. Take care. Love ya sis, I—"

I snatch the phone from her, disconnect the call, then hold the gun to her temple, "Goodbye, Beauty."

*TO FIND OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT READ MICHAEL AND KARMA'S FORCED MARRIAGE STORY HERE

*READ LIAM AND ISLA'S FAKE RELATIONSHIP ROMANCE IN THE PROPOSAL WHERE TINY, THE GREAT DANE FIRST MAKES AN APPEARANCE, CLICK HERE

READ AN EXCERPT FROM THE PROPOSAL

Liam

"Where is she?"

The receptionist gazes at me cow-eyed. Her lips move, but no words emerge. She clears her throat, glances sideways at the door to the side and behind her, then back at me.

"So, I take it she's in there?" I brush past her, and she jumps to her feet. "Sir, y-y-you can't go in there."

"Watch me." I glare at her.

She stammers, then gulps. Sweat beads her forehead. She shuffles back, and I stalk past her.

*Really, is there no one who can stand up to me? All of this scraping of chairs and fawning over me? It's enough to drive a man to boredom. I need a challenge. So, when my ex-wife-to-be texted me to say she was calling off our wedding, I was pissed. But when she let it slip that her wedding planner was right—that she needs to marry for love, and not for some family obligation, rage gripped me. I squeezed my phone so hard the screen cracked. I almost hurled the device across the room. When I got a hold of myself, for the first time in a long time, a shiver of something like excitement passed through me. *Finally, fuck.

That familiar pulse of adrenaline pulses through my veins. It's a sensation I was familiar with in the early days of building my business.

After my father died and I took charge of the group of companies he'd run, I was filled with a sense of purpose; a one-directional focus to prove myself and nurture his legacy. To make my group of companies the leader, in its own right. To make so much money and amass so much power, I'd be a force to be reckoned with.

I tackled each business meeting with a zeal that none of my opponents were able to withstand. But with each passing year—as I crossed the benchmarks I'd set myself, as my bottom line grew healthier, my cash reserves engorged, and the people working for me began treating me with the kind of respect normally reserved for larger-than-life icons—some of that enthusiasm waned. Oh, I still wake up ready to give my best to my job every day, but the zest that once fired me up faded, leaving a sense of purposelessness behind.

The one thing that has kept me going is to lock down my legacy. To ensure the business I've built will finally be transferred to my name. For which my father informed me I would need to marry. Which is why, after much research, I tracked down Lila Kumar, wooed her, and proposed to her. And then, her meddling wedding planner came along and turned all of my plans upside down.

Now, that same sense of purpose grips me. That laser focus I've been lacking envelops me and fills my being. All of my senses sharpen as I shove the door of her office open and stalk in.

The scent envelops me first. The lush notes of violets and peaches. Evocative and fruity. Complex, yet with a core of mystery that begs to be unraveled. Huh? I'm not the kind to be affected by the scent of a woman, but this... Her scent... It's always chafed at my nerve endings. The hair on my forearms straightens.

My guts tie themselves up in knots, and my heart pounds in my chest. It's not comfortable. The kind of feeling I got the first time I went white-water rafting. A combination of nervousness and excitement as I faced my first rapids. A sensation that had since ebbed. One I'd been chasing ever since, pushing myself to take on extreme sports. One I hadn't thought I'd find in the office of a wedding planner.

My feet thud on the wooden floor, and I get a good look at the space which is one-fourth the size of my own office. In the far corner is a bookcase packed with books. On the opposite side is a comfortable settee packed with cushions women seem to like so much. There's a colorful patchwork quilt thrown over it, and behind that, a window that looks onto the back of the adjacent office building. On the coffee table in front of the settee is a bowl with crystal-like objects that reflect the light from the floor lamps. There are paintings on the wall that depict scenes from beaches. No doubt, the kind she'd point to and sell the idea of a honeymoon to gullible brides. I suppose the entire space would appeal to women. With its mood lighting and homey feel, the space invites you to kick back, relax and pour out your problems. A ruse I'm not going to fall for.

"You!" I stab my finger in the direction of the woman seated behind the antique desk straight ahead. "Call Lila, right now, and tell her she needs to go through with the wedding. Tell her she can't back out. Tell her I'm the right choice for her."

She peers up at me from behind large, black horn-rimmed glasses perched on her nose. "No."

I blink. "Excuse me?"

She leans back in her chair. "I'm not going to do that."

"Why the hell not?"

"Are you the right choice for her?"

"Of course, I am." I glare at her.

Some of the color fades from her cheeks. She taps her pen on the table, then juts out her chin. "What makes you think you're the right choice of husband for her?"

"What makes you think I'm not?"

"Do you love her?"

"That's no one's problem except mine and hers."

"You don't love her."

"What does that have to do with anything?"

"Excuse me?" She pushes the glasses further up her nose. "Are you seriously asking what loving the woman you're going to marry has to do with actually marrying her?" Her voice pulses with fury.

"Yes, exactly. Why don't you explain it to me?" The sarcasm in my tone is impossible to miss.

She stares at me from behind those large glasses that should make her look owlish and studious, but only add an edge of what I can only describe as quirky-sexiness. The few times I've met her before, she's gotten on my nerves so much, I couldn't wait to get the hell away from her. Now, giving her the full benefit of my attention, I realize, she's actually quite striking. And the addition of those spectacles? Fuck me—I never thought I had a weakness for women wearing glasses. Maybe I was wrong. Or maybe it's specifically this woman wearing glasses... Preferably only glasses and nothing else.

Hmm. Interesting. This reaction to her. It's unwarranted and not something I planned for. I widen my stance, mainly to accommodate the thickness between my legs. An inconvenience... which perhaps I can use to my benefit? I drag my thumb under my lower lip.

Her gaze drops to my mouth, and if I'm not mistaken, her breath hitches. Very interesting. Has she always reacted to me like that in the past? Nope, I would've noticed. We've always tried to have as little as possible to do with each other. Like I said, interesting. And unusual.

"First," —she drums her fingers on the table— "are you going to answer my question?"

I tilt my head, the makings of an idea buzzing through my synapses. I need a little time to flesh things out though. It's the only reason I deign to answer her question which, let's face it, I have no obligation to respond to. But for the moment, it's in my interest to humor her and buy myself a little time.

"Lila and I are well-matched in every way. We come from good families —"

"You mean rich families?"

"That, too. Our families move in the same circles."

"Don't you mean boring country clubs?" she says in a voice that drips with distaste.

I frown. "Among other places. We have the pedigree, the bloodline, our backgrounds are congruent, and we'd be able to fold into an arrangement of coexistence with the least amount of disruption on either side."

"Sounds like you're arranging a merger."

"A takeover, but what-fucking-ever." I raise a shoulder.

Her scowl deepens. "This is how you approached the upcoming wedding... And you wonder why Lila left you?"

"I gave her the biggest ring money could buy—"

"You didn't make an appearance at the engagement party."

"I signed off on all the costs related to the upcoming nuptials—"

"Your own engagement party. You didn't come to it. You left her alone to face her family and friends." Her tone rises. Her cheeks are flushed. You'd think she was talking about her own wedding, not that of her friend. In fact, it's more entertaining to talk to her than discuss business matters with my employees. How interesting.

"You also didn't show up for most of the rehearsals." She glowers.

"I did show up for the last one."

"Not that it made any difference. You were either checking your watch and indicating that it was time for you to leave, or you were glowering at the plans being discussed."

"I still agreed to that god-awful wedding cake, didn't I?"

"On the other hand, it's probably good you didn't come for the previous rehearsals. If you had, Lila and I might have had this conversation earlier—"

"Aha!" I straighten. "So, you confess that it's because of you Lila walked away from this wedding."

She tips her head back. "Hardly. It's because of you."

"So you say, but your guilt is written large on your face."

"Guilt?" Her features flush. The color brings out the dewy hue of her skin, and the blue of her eyes deepens until they remind me of forget-me-nots. No, more like the royal blue of the ink that spilled onto my paper the first time I attempted to write with a fountain pen.

"The only person here who should feel guilty is you, for attempting to coerce an innocent, young woman into an arrangement that would have trapped her for life."

Anger thuds at my temples. My pulse begins to race. "I never have to coerce women. And what you call being trapped is what most women call security. But clearly, you wouldn't know that, considering" —I wave my hand in the air— "you prefer to run your kitchen-table business which, no doubt, barely makes ends meet."

She loosens her grip on her pencil, and it falls to the table with a clatter. Sparks flash deep in her eyes.

You know what I said earlier about the royal blue? Strike that. There are flickers of silver hidden in the depths of her gaze. Flickers that blaze when she's upset. How would it be to push her over the edge? To be at the receiving end of all that passion, that fervor, that ardor... that absolute avidness of existence when she's one with the moment? How would it feel to rein in her spirit, absorb it, drink from it, revel in it, and use it to spark color into my life?

"Kitchen-table business?" She makes a growling sound under her breath. "You dare come into my office and insult my enterprise? The company I have grown all by myself—"

"And outside of your assistant" —I nod toward the door I came through—"you're the sole employee, I take it?"

Her color deepens. "I work with a group of vendors—"

I scoff, "None of whom you could hold accountable when they don't deliver."

"—who have been carefully vetted to ensure that they always deliver," she says at the same time. "Anyway, why do you care, since you don't have a wedding to go to?"

"That's where you're wrong." I peel back my lips. "I'm not going to be labeled as the joke of the century. After all, the media labelled it 'the wedding of the century'." I make air quotes with my fingers.

It was Isla's idea to build up the wedding with the media. She also wanted to invite influencers from all walks of life to attend, but I have no interest in turning my nuptials into a circus. So, I vetoed the idea of journalists attending in person. I have, however, agreed to the event being recorded by professionals and exclusive clips being shared with the media and the influencers. This way, we'll get the necessary PR coverage, without the media being physically present.

In all fairness, the publicity generated by the upcoming nuptials has already been beneficial. It's not like I'll ever tell her, but Isla was right to feed the public's interest in the upcoming event. Apparently, not even the most hard-nosed investors can resist the warm, fuzzy feelings that a marriage invokes. And this can only help with the IPO I have planned for the most important company in my portfolio. "I have a lot riding on this wedding."

"Too bad you don't have a bride."

"Ah," —I smirk— "but I do."

She scowls. "No, you don't. Lila—"

"I'm not talking about her."

"Then who are you talking about?"

"You."

Isla

I stare, sure I haven't heard him correctly. "Eh? What are you talking about?" I shake my head as if that might clear it. "If this is some kind of joke —"

"Not a joke." He slides his hand into the pocket of his tailor-made slacks.

"There's no way I'm not going ahead with that wedding. And I do need a bride. Ergo—" He tilts his head as if his words are self-explanatory.

"I'm afraid you're making no sense."

His lips twist. "Oh, you definitely need to be afraid, but of the repercussions from turning me down."

I scowl. "This entire conversation is fascinating but as you can see" —I gesture to the computer in front of me— "I have miles to go and promises to keep."

"Quoting Frost won't change the fact that you're going to be marrying me in" —he pulls back his coat sleeve, exposing a watch that I have no doubt cost more than the annual rent of my office, and which is nestled amidst a smattering of dark hair on his thick wrist— "exactly seven days."

A shiver of something—excitement, apprehension, nervousness, disbelief... maybe all of the above—ripples under my skin.

"I think you'd better leave."

"I think you'd better start making preparations to make things up to me." Bastard's grin widens. He's enjoying himself at my expense, no doubt about it.

Anger bubbles up, and I tamp it down. I can't afford to lose my temper. Liam Stick-in-the-mud Kincaid may not be utilizing my services any longer, but he's one of the most powerful men on this continent—in the world, even—and the last thing I want is to make an enemy of him. I curl my fingers into fists, draw in a breath, then another. When I finally speak, my tone is even. "What things? I don't have anything to make up to you."

"Oh, but you do. It's because of you my bride decided to jilt me at the altar—"

"You didn't reach the altar," I point out.

"Semantics—"

"Are everything." I allow myself a small, tight smile. I'm not going to let this gazillionaire-McGrumpy walk all over me. I have a couple of weddings to plan right after this one. They are nowhere near as high profile as Lila's but they'll keep me busy for a while. All the more reason to get this stuck up wanker out of here.

"Which is why I can't marry you."

His eyes darken further. "Sure you can."

"I can't, I'm already married."

He lowers his gaze to my left hand before I have a chance to cover it.

Shit, shit, shit.

"So, you're not only a bad friend, but you're also a bad liar."

I shoot up to my feet. "I'm not a bad friend. I'm a good friend. The kind who dared to tell Lila exactly what she needed to hear when no one else had the guts to tell her the truth."

"You ruined her life."

"I gave her a chance to live life on her own terms, and I'm not a liar."

He smirks. "You lied that you were married."

"I am married."

"You're not wearing a ring."

"Plenty of married women don't wear rings."

His smile grows broader, and it's not a nice one. My stomach churns. Why do I get the feeling that I've walked into a trap?

He leans forward on the balls of his feet. "Isla Bailey, twenty-five, university dropout. Mother and brother live in Lymington. You had a happy childhood... until your father died of a heart attack when you were eighteen. A fact that made you decide to drop out of college and travel the world."

"That's very presumptuous of you to think one was linked to the other."

"Doesn't take much to join the dots."

"Go on," I say slowly.

"You tried your hand at being a tie-dye designer—"

"I like colors."

"A diving instructor—"

"I like the colors of fishes underwater." I raise a shoulder.

"A beekeeper."

"I like the color of—"

"Bees?" He smirks.

"I was going to say honey, but yeah, sure, bees, too."

"A professional bridesmaid?" He arches an eyebrow.

"Weddings can be very colorful, you know? Also, you'll be surprised how lucrative a job it is. Also—" I frown. "How do you know all this?"

"It's on your bio on your website," he points out.

Of course, it is.

"I also had you investigated."

I gape at him. "You had me investigated?"

"You didn't think I'd allow you to plan my wedding without making sure your background was acceptable? Which also means, I know you're not married."

I plant my hands on my hips. "And I intend to stay that way. I'm focused on building my career and my company—"

"And there won't be much of that left, considering I'll personally make sure you never work in this country or on this continent—or in fact, organize any wedding anywhere in the world—again."

My heart flips up into my throat, and my pulse begins to race. "You wouldn't do that."

"Try me." He reaches over, picks up the pencil I was using earlier, then twirls it between his fingers.

I try to focus on the action, but the scene in front of my eyes blurs. I blink away the hot tears that have accumulated in my eyes and set my jaw. "You're blackmailing me."

He raises his gaze skyward. "Finally, she gets it."

"So, if I don't marry you, you'll destroy my career and my reputation?"

He lowers the pencil to the table. "You'll pose as my wife. Put up a united front with me to my family. Convince them and my friends how much you love me. Also, you need to produce an heir—"

What the—? I shake my head. "Whoa, whoa, whoa. Hold on. Back up. What do you mean, 'an heir'?" I make air quotes with my fingers.

"I need to be married and have a child before I can get ownership of my business."

"You talk like this is a stipulation of some kind..."

He shuffles his feet. For the first time since he prowled into my office, he seems less than confident. In fact, he looks downright pissed. "My father's will says, unless I marry and produce an heir by the time I'm forty, I won't inherit my company or get access to my trust fund."

"I see." I lean back in my seat. "So, this is why you proposed to Lila and hustled her into marrying you."

"If by that you mean I courted her—"

"You used your charisma to unduly influence her."

"—I wooed her, took her on dates, to dinners, even the blasted opera, then bought her the biggest engagement ring I could lay my hands on."

"You mean that tasteless hunk of stone on her finger?" I cover my mouth and cough. "No wonder it was so easy to convince her to walk away from you."

His jaw tics. A nerve pops at his temple. He looks about ready to burst out of his uber-fitted suit. Oh, goodie. At least I got a rise out of him. That has to count for something, eh?

"That tasteless hunk of stone cost close to a million dollars," he says through gritted teeth.

"Money isn't everything," I announce in a prim voice.

"You certainly weren't complaining when you chose the most expensive venue possible for the wedding."

I straighten my spine. "If you mean the All Villa in Bali, that was Lila's choice. She wanted to get married in Bali, you know."

"And, no doubt you jumped at the idea, considering you get a fifteen percent commission on the entire cost of the wedding."

"Hey, you get what you pay for. I've been busting my ass for the past few months to get this event organized. Do you even know what an impossible task I've pulled off? I've managed to get all of the preparations completed in eight weeks. Eight bloody weeks. That's just forty-two days. It normally takes close to a year to organize a ceremony of this scale. And I pulled it off in less than one-fourth that time."

"Good, so it won't be a problem to flip things around to accommodate yourself as the bride, too."

"I never said I was going to marry you."

"Haven't you been listening to anything I've been saying?" His features grow even harder. Grays and greens shoot through the blue of his eyes until the color resembles that of a gathering storm. "If it's custody of the child you're worried about, once you deliver the child, we will separate. There'll be a prenup, of course, but I'll make sure you're reimbursed for your time." He says all of this in a voice so casual, he might as well be asking about the weather. No, strike that. I've heard people speak with more emotion about the weather changes in London than he has about his entire crazy-ass idea.

I curl my fingers into fists and resist the urge to leap up screaming. Won't do to lose it. Need to keep my cool. Need to make him see just how crazy this entire conversation is. "Have you even heard yourself? We barely know each other, and now you're saying you want me to marry you—instead of the woman the world thinks you're going to marry. Not only that, you want me to produce a child, and then you'll divorce me?"

"We'll co-parent and have equal rights to the child." He raises his arms in a conciliatory gesture. "I'm not the kind who'll keep a mother away from her child."

"Of course not," I scoff. "But you're the kind who'd force a woman to marry him."

"Fake marry."

"Doesn't seem fake when we're supposed to produce an heir," I protest.

"There are ways of doing it without my having to touch you. Unless," he looks me up and down and a calculating look comes into his eyes, "unless you prefer it to be done the old-fashioned way. In which case, I might oblige you. If you ask me nicely, that is."

My head spins. My heart seems to have taken up permanent residence in my throat. My stomach feels like a twister has become entangled inside.

"You're not making any sense. You can't walk in and threaten me into marrying you, then announce you need me to produce a child for you, in the same breath."

His grin widens. "I just did."

"There's still time." I raise my hands. "Walk away now, and I'll forget any of this happened. In fact, I won't even go to the media with news of how you intimidated me."

"You're not going to do that."

"Oh, yeah?" I snap back my shoulders. "And why is that?"

"Because when you marry me, even though the marriage is fake, no one else will know. To the outside world, you'll be the wife of Liam Kincaid, which means, doors will automatically open for you. Your past transgressions —"

"Transgressions?" I shout.

"Transgressions" —he firms his lips— "will be forgotten. Socialites and influencers will queue up to patronize your services. You'll run the most successful wedding planning outfit in this country, if not all of the continent."

I blink. Now that he mentions it... It's true. Once I hitch my star to the Liam Kincaid reputation, it'll be easy sailing. Everyone will want a piece of my wedding planning company. I'll have more projects than I can handle.

"Your showpieces will, of course, be your own wedding. You can give it any twist you like; make it the kind of wedding you've always imagined for yourself."

"For myself?"

"You must have thought about how you'd like to get married." He glances at his watch and straightens. "Well, this is your chance to execute it. Use it to show the world and all the headline seekers exactly how it should be done."

"S-o-o-o, I can do anything I want for my wedding ceremony?" I pluck at the rubber band around my wrist.

"Yes."

"The budget?"

"Unlimited. I'll need to sign off on the bills, but nothing is too good for my bride. Whatever you want, you can have it."

I squeeze my fingers together. Surely, I'm not considering this. I'm not actually thinking of going through with this insane proposal of his. On the other hand, if I do, I'll have everything I want. The wedding of my dreams, the chance to prove a point to all the naysayers who thought I'd never make it, and a resounding 'fuck you' to all my competition. Hell, there won't be competition. I'll wipe them off the map with this showpiece of a wedding. No one will ever question my competency again. And I'll have enough clients to keep me going for years. Even after I divorce him, it won't make a dent in my reputation.

"Well?" He scowls. "What's it gonna be?"

I pluck at the rubber band with more intensity. "So, I can transform it into the wedding of my dreams, the kind that'll make every media outlet, gossip magazine, and wedding blog sit up and take notice?"

"Do you not understand English? Or have you not been listening to me?"

I straighten in my seat. "I heard you the first time," I say in a low voice.

"Good, so what's your answer?"

TO FIND OUT WHAT HAPPENS NEXT READ LIAM AND ISLA'S FAKE RELATIONSHIP ROMANCE IN THE PROPOSAL WHERE TINY THE GREAT DANE, FIRST MAKES AN APPEARANCE, CLICK HERE

CLAIM YOUR EXCLUSIVE PREQUEL TO THE BIG BAD BILLIONAIRES SERIES HERE

DID YOU KNOW ALL THE CHARACTERS YOU READ ABOUT HAVE THEIR OWN BOOK? DOWNLOAD YOUR EXCLUSIVE L. STEELE READING ORDER BINGO CARD HERE - THEN CROSS OFF THEIR STORIES AS YOU READ THEM, AND SHARE YOUR BINGO CARD IN L. STEELE'S READER GROUP HERE

WANT TO BE THE FIRST TO FIND OUT WHEN L. STEELE'S NEXT BOOK IS OUT? SIGN UP FOR HER NEWSLETTER HERE

FROM THE AUTHOR

Hello, I'm L. Steele. I write romance stories with strong powerful men who meet their match in sassy, curvy, spitfire women.

I love to push myself with each book on both the spice and the angst so I can deliver well rounded, multidimensional characters.

I enjoy trading trivia with my filmmaker husband, watching lots and lots of movies, and walking nature trails. I live in London.

CLAIM YOUR FREE BOOK

FOLLOW ME:

ON AMAZON

ON BOOKBUB

ON GOODREADS

ON AUDIBLE

ON TIKTOK

ON THREADS

ON PINTEREST

MY YOUTUBE CHANNEL

JOIN MY SECRET FACEBOOK READER GROUP

READ ALL MY BOOKS

MARRIAGE OF CONVENIENCE BILLIONAIRE ROMANCE FROM L. STEELE

The Proposal - Liam and Isla's story. What's a wedding planner to do when you tell the bride not to go through with the wedding and the groom demands you take her place and give him a heir? And yes plot twist!

Read the Amazon top 7 bestseller, The Wrong Wife, in which Knight comes back from the war front and asks Penny to pose as his fake wife, only there's a plot twist.

CHRISTMAS ROMANCE BOOKS BY L. STEELE FOR YOU

Read A Very Mafia Christmas, Christian and Aurora's story HERE

Read a marriage of convenience billionaire Christmas romance, Hunter and Zara's story - The Christmas One Night Stand HERE

AGE GAP BILLIONAIRE ROMANCE BY L. STEELE FOR YOU

Read Daddy JJ's, age-gap romance in Mafia Lust HERE

FREE BOOKS

Claim your FREE copy of Mafia Heir the prequel to Mafia King

Claim your FREE copy of Vicious Billionaire the prequel to The Billionaire's Fake Wife HERE

Claim your free very spicy romance from Laxmi (L. Steele's penance)

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Hello, I'm L. Steele.

I write romance stories with strong powerful men who meet their match in sassy, curvy, spitfire women.

I love to push myself with each book on both the spice and the angst so I can deliver well rounded, multidimensional characters.

I enjoy trading trivia with my filmmaker husband, watching lots and lots of movies, and walking nature trails. I live in London.

CLAIM YOUR FREE BOOK

FOLLOW ME:

ON AMAZON

ON BOOKBUB

ON GOODREADS

ON AUDIBLE

ON TIKTOK

ON THREADS

ON PINTEREST

MY YOUTUBE CHANNEL

JOIN MY SECRET FACEBOOK READER GROUP

READ ALL MY BOOKS

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Edited by: Elizabeth Connor
Cover Design: Jacqueline Sweet

Huge shout out to my Giorgina Meduri, Rachel Kroeplien, Karen Barton, Rosario India and Nancy Haggerty. You gals are my very own personal cheerleaders and I couldn't do this without you!

And to everyone in L. Steele's Team Facebook reader group, you guys are awesome!

©2023 Laxmi Hariharan. All rights reserved under the International and Pan-American Copyright Conventions. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher.

This is a work of fiction. Names, places, characters and incidents are either the product of the author's imagination or are used fictitiously, and any resemblance to any actual persons, living or dead, organizations, events or locales is entirely coincidental.

Warning: the unauthorized reproduction or distribution of this copyrighted work is illegal. Criminal copyright infringement, including infringement without monetary gain, is investigated by the FBI and is punishable by up to 5 years in prison and a fine of $250,000.

✿ Created with Vellum