THE BILLIONAIRE'S FAKE WIFE

CLAIM YOUR EXCLUSIVE EPILOGUE TO THE BIG BAD BILLIONAIRES HERE

"You must forgive my lips... they find pleasure in the most unusual places."
— A Good Year. Director: Ridley Scott

Summer

"Slap, slap, kiss, kiss."

"Huh?" I stare up at the bartender.

"Aka, there's a thin line between love and hate." He shakes out the crimson liquid into my glass.

"Nah." I snort. "Why would she allow him to control her, and after he insulted her?"

"It's the chemistry between them." He lowers his head, "You have to admit that when the man is arrogant and the woman resists, it's a challenge to both of them, to see who blinks first, huh?"

"Why?" I wave my hand in the air, "Because they hate each other?"

"Because," he chuckles, "the girl in school whose braids I pulled and teased mercilessly, is the one who I—"

"Proposed to?" I huff.

His face lights up. "You get it now?"

Yeah. No. A headache begins to pound at my temples. This crash course in pop psychology is not why I came to my favorite bar in Islington, to meet my best friend, who is—I glance at the face of my phone—thirty minutes late.

I inhale the drink, and his eyebrows rise.

"What?" I glower up at the bartender. "I can barely taste the alcohol. Besides, it's free drinks at happy hour for women, right?"

"Which ends in precisely" he holds up five fingers, "minutes."

"Oh! Yay!" I mock fist pump. "Time enough for one more, at least."

A hiccough swells my throat and I swallow it back, nod.

One has to do what one has to do... when everything else in the world is going to shit.

A hot sensation stabs behind my eyes; my chest tightens. Is this what people call growing up?

The bartender tips his mixing flask, strains out a fresh batch of the ruby red liquid onto the glass in front of me.

"Salut." I nod my thanks, then toss it back. It hits my stomach and tendrils of fire crawl up my spine, I cough.

My head spins. Warmth sears my chest, spreads to my extremities. I can't feel my fingers or toes. Good. Almost there. "Top me up."

"You sure?"

"Yes." I square my shoulders and reach for the drink.

"No. She's had enough."

"What the—?" I pivot on the bar stool.

Indigo eyes bore into me.

Fathomless. Black at the bottom, the intensity in their depths grips me. He swoops out his arm, grabs the glass and holds it up. Thick fingers dwarf the glass. Tapered at the edges. The nails short and buff. All the better to grab you with. I gulp.

"Like what you see?"

I flush, peer up into his face.

Hard cheekbones, hollows under them, and a tiny scar that slashes at his left eyebrow. How did he get that? Not that I care. My gaze slides to his mouth. Thin upper lip, a lower lip that is full and cushioned. Pouty with a hint of bad boy. Oh! My toes curl. My thighs clench.

The corner of his mouth kicks up. Asshole.

Bet he thinks life is one big smug-fest. I glower, reach for my glass, and he holds it up and out of my reach.

I scowl, "Gimme that."

He shakes his head.

"That's my drink."

"Not anymore." He shoves my glass at the bartender. "Water for her. Get me a whiskey, neat."

I splutter, then reach for my drink again. The barstool tips, in his direction. This is when I fall against him, and my breasts slam into his hard chest, sculpted planes with layers upon layers of muscle that ripple and writhe as he turns aside, flattens himself against the bar. The floor rises up to meet me.

What the actual hell?

I twist my torso at the last second and my butt connects with the surface. Ow!

The breath rushes out of me. My hair swirls around my face. I scramble for purchase, and my knee connects with his leg.

"Watch it." He steps around, stands in front of me.

"You stepped aside?" I splutter. "You let me fall?"

"Hmph."

I tilt my chin back, all the way back, look up the expanse of muscled thigh that stretches the silken material of his suit. What is he wearing? Could any suit fit a man with such precision? Hand crafted on Saville Row, no doubt. I glance at the bulge that tents the fabric between his legs. Oh! I blink.

Look away, look away. I hold out my arm. He'll help me up at least, won't he?

He glances at my palm, then turns away. No, he didn't do that, no way.

A glass of amber liquid appears in front of him. He lifts the tumbler to his sculpted mouth.

His throat moves, strong tendons flexing. He tilts his head back, and the column of his neck moves as he swallows. Dark hair covers his chin—it's a discordant chord in that clean-cut profile, I shiver. He would scrape that rough skin down my core. He'd mark my inner thigh, lick my core, thrust his tongue inside my melting channel and drink from my pussy. Oh! God. Goosebumps rise on my skin.

No one has the right to look this beautiful, this achingly gorgeous. Too magnificent for his own good. Anger coils in my chest.

"Arrogant wanker."

"I'll take that under advisement."

"You're a jerk, you know that?"

He presses his lips together. The grooves on either side of his mouth deepen. Jesus, clearly the man has never laughed a single day in his life. Bet that stick up his arse is uncomfortable. I chuckle.

He runs his gaze down my features, my chest, down to my toes, then yawns.

The hell! I will not let him provoke me. Will not. "Like what you see?" I jut out my chin.

"Sorry, you're not my type." He slides a hand into the pocket of those perfectly cut pants, stretching it across that heavy bulge.

Heat curls low in my belly.

Not fair, that he could afford a wardrobe that clearly shouts his status and what amounts to the economy of a small third-world country. A hot feeling stabs in my chest.

He reeks of privilege, of taking his status in life for granted.

While I've had to fight every inch of the way. Hell, I am still battling to hold onto the last of my equilibrium.

"Last chance—" I wiggle my fingers, from where I am sprawled out on the floor at his feet, "—to redeem yourself..."

"You have me there." He places the glass on the counter, then bends and holds out his hand. The hint of discolored steel at his wrist catches my attention. Huh?

He wears a cheap-ass watch?

That's got to bring down the net worth of his presence by more than 1000% percent. Weird.

I reach up and he straightens.

I lurch back.

"Oops, I changed my mind." His lips curl.

A hot burning sensation claws at my stomach. I am not a violent person, honestly. But Smirky Pants here, he needs to be taught a lesson.

I swipe out my legs, kicking his out from under him.

Sinclair

My knees give way, and I hurtle toward the ground.

What the—? I twist around, thrust out my arms. My palms hit the floor. The impact jostles up my elbows. I firm my biceps and come to a halt planked above her.

A huffing sound fills my ear.

I turn to find my whippet, Max, panting with his mouth open. I scowl and he flattens his ears.

All of my businesses are dog-friendly. Before you draw conclusions about me being the caring sort or some such shit—it attracts footfall.

Max scrutinizes the girl, then glances at me. Huh? He hates women, but not her, apparently.

I straighten and my nose grazes hers.

My arms are on either side of her head. Her chest heaves. The fabric of her dress stretches across her gorgeous breasts. My fingers tingle; my palms ache to cup those tits, squeeze those hard nipples outlined against the—hold on, what is she wearing? A tunic shirt in a sparkly pink... and are those shoulder pads she has on?

I glance up, and a squeak escapes her lips.

Pink hair surrounds her face. Pink? Who dyes their hair that color past the age of eighteen?

I stare at her face. How old is she? Un-furrowed forehead, dark eyelashes that flutter against pale cheeks. Tiny nose, and that mouth—luscious, tempting. A whiff of her scent, cherries and caramel, assails my senses. My mouth waters. What the hell?

She opens her eyes and our eyelashes brush. Her gaze widens. Green, like the leaves of the evergreens, flickers of gold sparkling in their depths. "What?" She glowers. "You're demonstrating the plank position?"

"Actually," I lower my weight onto her, the ridge of my hardness thrusting into the softness between her legs, "I was thinking of something else, altogether."

She gulps and her pupils dilate. Ah, so she feels it, too?

I drop my head toward her, closer, closer.

Color floods the creamy expanse of her neck. Her eyelids flutter down. She tilts her chin up.

I push up and off of her.

"That... Sweetheart, is an emphatic 'no thank you' to whatever you are offering."

Her eyelids spring open and pink stains her cheeks. Adorable. Such a range of emotions across those gorgeous features in a few seconds? What else is hidden under that exquisite exterior of hers?

She scrambles up, eyes blazing.

Ah! The little bird is trying to spread her wings? My dick twitches. My groin hardens, Why does her anger turn me on so, huh?

She steps forward, thrusts a finger in my chest.

My heart begins to thud.

She peers up from under those hooded eyelashes. "Wake up and taste the wasabi, asshole."

"What does that even mean?"

She makes a sound deep in her throat. My dick twitches. My pulse speeds up.

She pivots, grabs a half-full beer mug sitting on the bar counter.

I growl, "Oh, no, you don't."

She turns, swings it at me. The smell of hops envelops the space.

I stare down at the beer-splattered shirt, the lapels of my camel colored jacket deepening to a dull brown. Anger squeezes my guts.

I fist my fingers at my side, broaden my stance.

She snickers.

I tip my chin up. "You're going to regret that."

The smile fades from her face. "Umm." She places the now empty mug on the bar.

I take a step forward and she skitters back. "It's only clothes." She gulps, "They'll wash."

I glare at her and she swallows, wiggles her fingers in the air, "I should have known that you wouldn't have a sense of humor."

I thrust out my jaw, "That's a ten-thousand-pound suit you destroyed."

She blanches, then straightens her shoulders, "Must have been some hot date you were trying to impress, huh?"

"Actually," I flick some of the offending liquid from my lapels, "it's you I was after."

"Me?" She frowns.

"We need to speak."

She glances toward the bartender who's on the other side of the bar. "I don't know you." She chews on her lower lip, biting off some of the hot pink. How would she look, with that pouty mouth fastened on my cock?

The blood rushes to my groin so quickly that my head spins. My pulse rate ratchets up. Focus, focus on the task you came here for.

"This will take only a few seconds." I take a step forward.

She moves aside.

I frown, "You want to hear this, I promise."

"Go to hell." She pivots and darts forward.

I let her go, a step, another, because... I can? Besides it's fun to create the illusion of freedom first; makes the hunt so much more entertaining, huh?

I swoop forward, loop an arm around her waist, and yank her toward me.

She yelps. "Release me."

Good thing the bar is not yet full. It's too early for the usual officegoers to stop by. And the staff...? Well they are well aware of who cuts their paychecks.

I spin her around and against the bar, then release her. "You will listen to me."

She swallows; she glances left to right.

Not letting you go yet, little Bird. I move into her space, crowd her.

She tips her chin up. "Whatever you're selling, I'm not interested."

I allow my lips to curl, "You don't fool me."

A flush steals up her throat, sears her cheeks. So tiny, so innocent. Such a good little liar. I narrow my gaze, "Every action has its consequences."

"Are you daft?" She blinks.

"This pretense of yours?" I thrust my face into hers, "It's not working."
She blinks, then color suffuses her cheeks, "You're certifiably mad—" "Getting tired of your insults."

"It's true, everything I said." She scrapes back the hair from her face. Her fingernails are painted... You guessed it, pink.

"And here's something else. You are a selfish, egotistical jackass."

I smirk. "You're beginning to repeat your insults and I haven't even kissed you yet."

"Don't you dare." She gulps.

I tilt my head, "Is that a challenge?"

"It's a..." she scans the crowded space, then turns to me. Her lips firm, "... a warning. You're delusional, you jackass." She inhales a deep breath, "Your ego is bigger than the size of a black hole." She snickers, "Bet it's to compensate for your lack of balls."

A-n-d, that's it. I've had enough of her mouth that threatens to never stop spewing words. How many insults can one tiny woman hurl my way? Answer: too many to count.

"You—"

I lower my chin, touch my lips to hers.

Heat, sweetness, the honey of her essence explodes on my palate. My dick twitches. I tilt my head, deepen the kiss, reaching for that something more... more... of whatever scent she's wearing on her skin, infused with that breath of hers that crowds my senses, rushes down my spine. My groin hardens; my cock lengthens. I thrust my tongue between those infuriating lips.

She makes a sound deep in her throat and my heart begins to pound.

So innocent, yet so crafty. Beautiful and feisty. The kind of complication I don't need in my life.

I prefer the straight and narrow. Gray and black, that's how I choose to define my world. She, with her flashes of color—pink hair and lips that threaten to drive me to the edge of distraction—is exactly what I hate.

Give me a female who has her priorities set in life. To pleasure me, get me off, then walk away before her emotions engage. Yeah. That's what I prefer.

Not this... this bundle of craziness who flings her arms around my shoulders, thrusts her breasts up and into my chest, tips up her chin, opens her mouth, and invites me to take and take.

Does she have no self-preservation? Does she think I am going to fall for her wide-eyed appeal? She has another thing coming.

I tear my mouth away and she protests.

She twines her leg with mine, pushes up her hips, so that melting softness between her thighs cradles my aching hardness.

I glare into her face and she holds my gaze.

Trains her green eyes on me. Her cheeks flush a bright red. Her lips fall open and a moan bleeds into the air. The blood rushes to my dick, which instantly thickens. Fuck.

Time to put distance between myself and the situation.

It's how I prefer to manage things. Stay in control, always. Cut out anything that threatens to impinge on my equilibrium. Shut it down or buy them off. Reduce it to a transaction. That I understand.

The power of money, to be able to buy and sell—numbers, logic. That's what's worked for me so far.

"How much?"

Her forehead furrows.

"Whatever it is, I can afford it."

Her jaw slackens. "You think... you—"

"A million?"

"What?"

"Pounds, dollars... You name the currency, and it will be in your account."

Her jaw slackens, "You're offering me money?"

"For your time, and for you to fall in line with my plan."

She reddens, "You think I am for sale?"

"Everyone is."

"Not me."

Here we go again. "Is that a challenge?"

Color fades from her face, "Get away from me."

"Are you shy, is that what this is?" I frown. "You can write your price down on a piece of paper if you prefer," I glance up, notice the bartender watching us. I jerk my chin toward the napkins. He grabs one, then offers it to her.

She glowers at him, "Did you buy him too?"

"What do you think?"

She glances around, "I think everyone here is ignoring us."

"It's what I'd expect."

"Why is that?"

I wave the tissue in front of her face, "Why do you think?"

"You own the place?"

"As I am going to own you."

She sets her jaw, "Let me leave and you won't regret this."

A chuckle bubbles up. I swallow it away. This is no laughing matter. I never smile during a transaction. Especially not when I am negotiating a new acquisition. And that's all she is. The final piece in the puzzle I am building.

"No one threatens me."

"You're right."

"Huh?"

"I'd rather act on my instinct."

Her lips twist, her gaze narrows. All of my senses scream a warning.

No, she wouldn't, no way—pain slices through my middle and sparks explode behind my eyes.

Summer

"You kneed me?"

He growls, actually growls. A shiver of heat ladders up my spine. My heart begins to thud.

Oh, hell I've done it now. Men and their delicate egos. Bet he won't take this lying down.

I shove at his shoulders and he lurches to the side. I spring up, glance down to where he glares up at me, hunched over. My nerve endings tingle.

Why do I have such visceral reaction to him? Pompous prick.

He straightens, then shoves himself up to standing.

What the—? How could he have recovered from that knee to his balls so fast? I blink. No one has that much endurance, not unless he's trained for it... Nah! I shove the thought aside.

He is a spoiled, pampered brat, no doubt. Typical. One of those who likes to flaunt what he has. Why do those with money think that is the solution to everything, huh? Because it is?

A hot sensation stabs at my chest. I've screwed it up. I've messed up my future and a chance for my sister to live a normal life.

The jackass in front of me swipes out his hand. I duck.

His features harden. He leans forward on the balls of his feet. Hell no, not going to let him catch me this time. I grab my bag from where it hangs on the hook below the bar counter, and head for the exit.

Shoving open the heavy glass door, I burst onto the sidewalk.

"You! Stop, right there." Something brushes my collar. I scream, lunge ahead. Adrenaline laces my veins. The blood slams so hard at my temples, I am sure I am going to faint.

Two cops approach me. Oh, my God! I wave at them. "Help!"

One of them catches sight of me; his forehead pinches.

The heat at my back turns up to a furnace. Shit, he's close. He's really, really, close. The hair on the nape of my neck rises. "Help me, please."

There's a low exclamation behind me.

My stomach flip flops. Damn the man, how did he get here so quickly?

The first cop reaches us, "Everything okay here?"

"This chap," I stab my thumb in Mr. Grouchy Pants' direction, "he's harassing me."

The second officer glances between us, then straightens, "Sinclair."

"Hello Josephine, Will." He nods at them.

What the—! He's on a first name basis with the cops? Does he have them on his payroll?

Of course he does. Asshole here would do everything to ensure circumstances are always within his control.

I dart forward.

"We're not done." His low growl follows me.

I sprint past the cops, up the street, veer right, then a left onto crowded Oxford Street. Safety in numbers. Okay, I got this! The breath rushes out of me.

When I reach the entrance to Tottenham Court Road tube station, I peek a glance behind me. There's no sign of him. Whew!

I swipe my card at the barriers, run down another flight of steps onto the platform as my train pulls into the station. I jump into the first open doors and collapse into a seat. Sweat beads my forehead; my hair is plastered to my cheek. I bend over, gasping. Close call. The woman opposite stares at me, wide-eyed. I meet her gaze and she promptly looks down at her Kindle.

Yep. One good thing about the tube in London, most people avoid eye contact. The anonymity that this city affords is precisely why I love it... and hate it. I slump against the barrier on my right.

It means no-one cares how I dress, or what I eat, or do for a living. It is why no one gives a shit about my sister lurching closer to her grave every day.

Nope, not gonna happen, not on my watch. I am going to find a way out of this mess. I am. At the next station, I check my phone. There's a new email in my inbox.

From: Meredith Vincent
To: Summer West

Dear Ms. West,

Your appointment to pitch for the innovative marketing strategy for 7A Investments is confirmed.

Mr. Sterling, our CEO, will see you at 9am, tomorrow.

Address is below.

Pls confirm your acceptance of the meeting by reply.

Yours sincerely,

Meredith Vincent
Executive Assistant

Wow! Okay. Did I write to 7A investments asking to pitch for their account? I don't remember it. I frown, toss my head. Doesn't matter.

This is my chance. It is an opportunity to salvage my future and I am not going to turn it down. I type out my acceptance, hit reply, then drop my phone into my shoulder bag.

I am going to get this account, if it is the last thing I do.

The train pulls into Mill Hill East tube station, and I step off.

The phone dings again with a text message.

Isla: Soooo sorry, had a work emergency. You know how it is with us wedding planners...

Me: Now you tell me! You got me into so much trouble you biatch!

Isla: What... what? Did you meet someone at the bar?

Me: No, I didn't. Is that all you can think of and... hold on... you wouldn't do that to me, eh?

I huff.

Me: Would you?

Isla: What are you talking about?

Me: You stood me up on purpose?

Isla: Moi? What are you talking about?

Me: So help me Isla, if I find out you did this to me...

Isla: Is he that hot?

Me: No.

Isla: A dominant stranger with a take charge attitude that melts your panties and makes you want to lick him up?

Me: What is it with your hang up with obstinate mules... I mean males?

Isla: Ha, ha. snort Don't mock it until you've tried it.

Me: I have no idea what you're talking about.

Isla: Sometimes you need a hug you know...?

Me: Exactly.

Isla:.... on your backside... with a paddle.

Me: What the...

Isla: Administered by an obnoxious know-it-all who doesn't take no for an answer.

Me: Sweet baby goats, are you getting off on this text message, Isla? I swear if you are...

Isla: Sorry... sorry... not, you're waaay too uptight my girl. Give in, live a little.

Me: If by that you mean fantasizing about some alpha male making rough love...

Isla: Don't bring that four letter emotion into the mix.

Me: Yeah, not all of us want to be controlled.

Isla: Famous last words.

Me: Thanks for shoving your kink in my face.

Isla: Hey, how did you guess that I love doing that?

Me: TMI, bye.

Isla: Are you blushing, West? I bet you are. Seriously I'm sorry for standing you up. Last minute change, a bride called off her wedding and uh, it wasn't pretty.

Me: Wow, good luck handling the pieces of that.

Isla: I'm gonna need it for this one. PS, the bridegroom walked into the office and he's not happy.

Me: Can't your boss handle him?

Isla: She's not around. And gah! This man is completely unreasonable! But wow! Is he smokin' hot. gulp Wish me luck.

Me: Luck! Go get him GF.

Isla: Later xxx

Typical Isla, always taken in by a pretty face. And I'm not?

I suck my cheeks in, drop my phone into my tote bag.

Walking out of the tube station, I race home, then up the short flight of steps leading into the one-bed apartment I share with my sister.

For how much longer, though? If I can't keep up the rental payments on it...? I'll find a way, I will.

"Karma?" I cross the living room into the tiny bedroom.

"Summer?" My sister glances up from her embroidery machine.

Her dark hair flows around her face. Her skin seems paler than usual.

I sink down on the bed across from her, "You okay?."

Her amber eyes flare. "Why wouldn't I be?"

"No reason." I shuffle my feet.

"No breathlessness, no numb fingers or toes. The hole in my heart hasn't eaten me up completely." Her lips thin. "Yet."

"Why do you get so defensive about your condition?"

"Umm, let's see." She holds up a finger tipped with black nail-polish, "Because I'm trying to live and you keep thrusting my disease in my line of sight every time you bring it up?"

I draw in a sharp breath. "That's being uncharitable. Just because I worry about you and do my best to take care of you—"

"—doesn't make you my mother."

All the blood drains from my face. Bet I'm as pale as her, though on Karma, her dark goth get-up enhances her luminous beauty.

On me... bet I am as chalky as the paint on the wall behind her.

"Hell, sorry, Summer." She blows out a breath. "I'm more on edge than usual. Tomorrow's market day, so I need to get my clothes done in time. I need to be at Camden Market before 5 am so..." She raises her shoulders.

"Right, I'll leave you to it then."

I jump up, head for the door.

"Summer, stop."

I cross the floor to the small counter on the far side that doubles as our kitchen. Fill a glass with water from the tap and drink from it.

"I'm sorry for what I said earlier." Karma pauses at the doorway to the bedroom.

"You know how to get to me, don't you?" I firm my lips.

"My specialty, Sis. Chalk it up to my teenage hormones."

I snort, then turn and lean a hip against the counter, "You're almost as clever with words as you are with your clothing designs."

She holds up a hand, "Uh, oh, I sense a Summer sermon, coming on."

"Don't be ridiculous." I redden. "It's just, I don't understand why you'd give up a paid fashion scholarship at Central Saint Martins..."

"They were too mainstream." She sets her jaw.

"What's wrong with that?" I throw up my hands.

"Do you see what you're wearing?"

I glance down at myself, "You made it." I raise my shoulders. "It's offbeat but... it mirrors my personality."

"Exactly." She tosses her head, "My ideas are too... off-beat for their sensibilities."

"So?" I tilt my chin up, "You could have... adjusted..."

She stares, "Says the woman who is a walking talking encyclopedia of trivia that's largely useless."

"That..." I rub my forehead, "That's different."

"Right." She snorts. "How many other twenty-one year-old women can give trivia nerds a run for their money?"

I wrap my arms around my waist. "I'm not sure that's something to be proud of," I mumble.

"You made enough money winning pub quizzes and TV game shows."

"It was one show—"

"That earned you £100,000." She raps her knuckles against the door frame. "It's kept us going this far."

That's how we've survived since I left the homeless hostel at nineteen.

It was because of the money that I'd been able to take on responsibility for Karma and pull her out of the care system. I'd also used a portion of it to launch my marketing consultancy.

I'd expanded the scope to supply quizzes to pubs, bars, parties and to my growing list of online subscribers who love to receive a daily trivia quiz from me... For a fee.

My dream job.

I thrust out my chest. I had defined it, created it, pursued it. I bite the inside of my cheek. What had I been thinking? Following my intuition? Thought I could earn a living from my passion for movies?

Why did I have to turn down the job of marketing manager for the—ugh! —accounting firm? I hunch my shoulders.

It would have paid well, allowed for specialist medical consultations for my sister. I'd been bloody selfish, that's what.

I'd held onto some stupid notion that I could have whatever I wanted without compromising on my dreams. Except, I'd lost the client who contributed to 80% of my business.

I twirl a lock of my hair, bring it to my mouth and chew on it.

"Horrible habit." She frowns.

"It helps me think." I push off from the counter, begin to pace. "I have a big meeting tomorrow. If I get the account..."

"You will."

My phone dings. I stare at my bag.

"You going to see who it is?"

I shake my head.

"Want me to?"

I raise my shoulders, and let them drop, "How much worse could it get, huh?"

She reaches for my bag, pulls out my phone, reads the message.

"Who is it?"

She drops the phone into my bag.

"It's nothing."

"Karma!" I scowl, then flounce over to her and check the screen. There's a new text message.

SmellyGuy: You have one week to pay the rent or else...

Right! I drop the phone into the bag, then for good measure zip my bag shut.

"Vanilla or chocolate?" I cross the floor to the tiny refrigerator, pull open the door of the freezer.

"Is that a trick question?"

"Yeah. No."

"Do I have a choice?" She returns to the settee.

"Nope." I chuckle, pull out the carton of vanilla ice-cream. "I did the shopping so..."

Karma sinks into the sofa, "Your tastes are boringly predictable."

"Yeah, well, I coulda been somebody, instead of a bum, which is what I am." I grab the carton of ice cream, straighten.

She blinks. "Is that from On the Waterfront?"

I chuckle. "You've been paying attention to my trivia quiz emails, huh?"

"Bet you can't guess which movie this is from? She flips her hair over her shoulder. "Don't let anyone ever make you feel like you don't deserve what you want."

I pull out two plastic spoons, then join her.

"Too easy." I scoop up some ice cream, "10 things I Hate About You."

Her face breaks into a smile.

Strange word games the two of us have. Spouting dialogues and having the other person guess the film it originated from is one. Words don't cost, and they comfort. We can use them to weave a world in which we are safe, away from the nightmares that haunt our lives.

"My turn." I pass the carton to her. "Gotta celebrate the Now. Live in the moment."

She licks the ice-cream from her spoon, scoops up more. Her forehead scrunches.

"Give up?" I snatch the ice cream carton from her.

She frowns, "Okay, which is that from?"

I snicker. "None, that was all moi." I lick the remaining ice cream from my spoon.

She grabs at the carton, then peers into it. "Gah! Not fair, you finished it."

I chortle, "See, you shouldn't underestimate me." I hand the empty carton to her. "Now shoo, I need to work on the deck for tomorrow's meeting.

"Brilliant!" She brightens, "I have the right set of clothes for you."

"Y'know, I could eat a peach for hours."
— Face/Off. Director: John Woo

Sin

"Have a good day, Mr. Sterling."

Peter my chauffeur pulls my Aston Martin up to the curb in front of my offices. The heritage building on the South Bank is prime London property that I acquired after a bitter bidding war. It does the job, I suppose. I swing open the door and Max bounds ahead. He pauses in front of the homeless man next to the entrance.

His sign today reads: The Devil returned to Hell by two.

I approach the homeless guy, drop a wad of bills into the upturned cap in front of him. "Byron, again, huh?"

As always, his face doesn't change expression. The two of us are similar that way.

The degree of separation between the man in the palace and the one on the street is less than seven, son.

My father's words echo in my head. He hated the homeless. Perhaps it struck something primal in him. This dread of losing everything, finding himself out on his luck, had intensified after the incident. He'd lost his job soon after, hadn't been able to afford the money for my mother's cancer treatment, if it had not been for my friends. Yeah, I have a few... Six, to be precise. The kind who'd stab me if I turned my back on them.

Figuratively speaking... In business, I mean.

Best if you never trust anyone, not even your friends. There is no way you can be hurt then, right?

I walk toward the heavy glass door where Max waits for me. I push it and he bounds ahead of me. The receptionist glances up; her face flushes.

"Good morning, Mr. Sterling."

I frown. "How long you been here?"

She blinks.

"You deaf, girl?"

"N... no." Color fades from her cheeks, and her color matches the wall behind her.

"Answer the question."

She gulps. "A week."

"You're fired."

"But..."

"You're on probation so no need to go to HR; you can leave right now."

She splutters, "My fault, Sir?"

"Don't like your face."

That is true. Also, because I am getting a little tired of her loss of composure every time I walk by. Reminds me of what my position in this city is all about. Something I hate.

I walk up to the elevator, the doors swish open, and I step inside. Seems the elevator maintenance company can keep their contract... For now.

"Stop." A hand appears in between the doors, halting their progress. A woman steps in. "Sorry... I can't afford to be late, I—" She looks up.

Green eyes stare at me, pink hair tied up into a knot that is already coming undone. The pale creamy skin of her neck colors. It reminds me of someone. I snap my gaze to her face and her jaw drops open. "You?"

The door slides closed. "About time," I glare.

She frowns, "You're acting as if you were expecting me."

"I was." Wisps of candy-fluff colored hair cling to her flushed cheeks. My fingers tingle to whisper it off of her face. The fuck—? I slide my palm into the pocket of my pants.

"Are you stalking me?" She chews on her lower lip and my dick twitches.

I widen my stance, "And what if I was?"

"If... if this is your idea of a joke—" Her shoulders go rigid; she glances up and around the corners of the steel cage.

"No cameras."

Her gaze pops back to my face.

"It's a private elevator." I punch the stop button and she draws in a sharp breath.

The elevator jolts, then halts. "Oh, hell." She pivots, slaps her hand on the door.

"Too late." I lean a shoulder against the steel wall.

She swallows, "Why... why did you do that?"

I fold my arms, "Not for the reason you are thinking."

She sidles away. Her shoulder brushes the wall opposite me, and she jerks upright. "Wha... what reason would that be?"

I scan her features, down the arch of that neck—it's quite stunning, actually—down to the thrust of her breasts. Today, she's wearing a jacket that pulls in her shoulders. Clearly, it's a size too small for her. It's buttoned in the front. The material strains at her chest, showing off her curves.

Annoying little thing that she is, she's used to flaunting her assets to get her way, no doubt. I stare at her breasts, and she folds her arms around her waist.

"Not that either, as I clarified earlier."

Her cheeks flush. Hmm, interesting color. She's a natural redhead obviously, given how the color on her face highlights every single freckle on her beautiful skin. I stiffen. Why is my mind headed that way? I am used to controlling it, ensuring that my will is obedient to me. Every time I see her, though, my brain seems to drop to my groin. My dick twitches. I widen my stance and her gaze drops down to my crotch.

"You could have me fooled. From where I am, it seems you'd very much like 'that.' " She makes inverted commas with her fingers.

I stiffen. Sod this. I will not be insulted by the likes of her. "So that's your game, huh?"

"Now, what has that asshole mind of yours conjured up?"

"You don't want to know." I flex my fingers and she pales.

"Try me." Her chin wobbles.

"You wouldn't be able to stand it, Sweetheart."

"Stop calling me that."

"Oh?" I take a step forward and she blinks, scans the small enclosed space.

You're trapped, little Bird. Can't get away from the big bad bully now.

Her breath hitches; she retreats against the wall. "St... stop."

I take a step forward. "No one tells me what to do." I glare down at her.

"You think waaaay too much of yourself." She juts out her chin.

"You don't think enough about yourself, clearly." Which is why she turned up for the meeting today without checking for any ulterior motives. Anger ladders up my spine. I don't get it. Why am I concerned about her well-being? She's here, in my space, exactly where I want her to be.

She's here insinuating herself into my life. Doesn't she understand how bad this can turn out for her?

Doesn't she care that I could do things to her that she'd never recover from?

My groin hardens. One part of me, at least, relishes the hunt. Adrenaline laces my blood. This could turn out to be interesting. Imagine that? Something to work toward. Someone who challenges me, who doesn't grovel before me.

She dares go toe to toe with me? Interesting. I glare at her and she gulps. Fear radiates off of her.

"You uncomfortable, little girl?"

She shakes her head.

"Such a pretty little liar."

She jerks her chin. A bead of sweat runs down her temple.

I swipe out an arm and she flinches. I scoop up the drop of perspiration, then bring it to my lips and suck on my digit.

She makes a strangled sound deep in her throat. Watches me with unabashed curiosity... Or is that anticipation?

"I could take you right here and you couldn't stop me."

She freezes. Her pupils dilate. Her chest rises and falls; the jacket stretches further. The button squeezes out of the eyehole. Bloody hell. I reach for her and she opens her mouth; her features contort.

"Don't," she whispers.

She pauses. Eyes wide, mouth opened in an 'O.' Pink lips parted, lip gloss gleaming. My mouth waters. My balls pulse. Is she trying to taunt me? I reach for her lapels and every muscle in her body snaps to attention.

I drag her up to her tip toes, drop my chin, until my face is directly above hers. Her eyelids flutter shut, her thick eyelashes fringing those soulful eyes. Eyes that consume me with their vulnerability. That hint at the innocence beneath the surface. An awed hopefulness through which she surveys the world. With bated breath. Waiting for her future to unfurl. An optimism that I want to tear apart with my bare hands.

Rip into her and teach her never to trust anyone.

Not so easy. My breath raises the hair on her forehead and her lips tremble. Her chin wobbles and she tips her head back, showing me the curve of that gorgeous neck. Too fucking vulnerable. I am going to have to teach her a lesson.

"Little Bird?"

"Summer." She swallows, "My name is Summer."

"Are you a virgin, Summer?"

Summer

"Seriously?" I snap my eyes open.

This man has the ability to reduce me to surprised silence and that's not complimentary, though it does take a lot to rob me of my ability to speak, honestly. It's more a testament to his sheer audacity. "You didn't ask me that."

"Why not?"

"Because... it's incredibly rude, for one."

"Is it?"

"Are you kidding me?"

"I never 'kid.' " He says the last word as if it's a bad smell.

"Figures." I can't stop the chuckle that spills from my lips. "If you could stop long enough to actually notice your surroundings, you'd see that we don't live in the dark ages anymore. Perhaps you'd see how everything is wrong about this picture."

"You actually believe there is free will in this world, hmm?"

His voice tugs at my nerve endings; goosebumps dot my skin.

It's being enclosed in this tiny space that's making me faint. I am not claustrophobic, but being stuck in an elevator with a larger-than-life male who has a completely warped sense of his own importance is... is enough to sap the will of any strong-willed woman... and I am... but one desperate to get to her meeting, and wrap up this account. "I am going to be late."

"It can wait."

Anger flares low in my belly, "There you go again, presuming to know what I can and can't do."

"Why should I pretend?"

"Because..." I fidget, "Because... it's polite?"

"Which I am not. We've established that already. So why don't you cooperate?"

"That'll be the day." I huff out a breath.

"The faster you answer my question, the sooner we can both be on our way."

"So, if I tell you if I am a... a..."

"Virgin." His lips curl.

Bastard's having so much fun at my expense. I can't wait to wipe that look of satisfaction from his face. Honestly, I really, truly, want to see him on his knees and groveling. For mercy. And I'd never show him an iota of it, I won't.

"Yeah." I square my shoulders, "That. If I tell you... which by the way, I am not going to because, newsflash, this isn't the dark ages anymore. Women are allowed to live as they want, date whom they desire, sleep with..."

His eyes glitter.

"—not you." I gulp, "I definitely don't want that with you."

He glares at me, "So you're thinking about it, huh?"

Nope.

"Admit it."

Never.

"Since you saw me, you've wanted to find out how it would be to have sex with me?" He drops his nose to the hollow of my throat and nuzzles me there.

I shiver.

"Give me what I want."

I will not.

"Say it." His voice drops to a hush.

A thrill of anticipation heats my blood. Would he be as demanding in bed? Position me as he wants, push me until I give him what he needs, allow him to possess me, dominate me... The elevator lurches. His body bumps mine. Chest to hip to thigh. All of my senses focus in on him. My nerve endings pop. "Yes."

"Yes, what?"

The elevator moves up, "Let me go, the doors will be opening soon."

"Not until you complete your sentence."

"But."

"You have less than thirty seconds."

"Wait..."

"Twenty-eight"

"Fuck."

"Told ya already, that's not on the table."

"Asshole."

"Fifteen seconds."

My heart rate ratchets up, heat flares between my thighs. OMG, I can't be turned on. Surely not. The thought of the elevator doors opening and my being discovered, has a sick kind of appeal. The hell is wrong with me? Apparently, I enjoy being the object of his single-minded attention, something I haven't been at the receiving end of with anyone else.

"Five..."

"No, of course not, you asshole."

"See, that wasn't so difficult, huh?"

The elevator doors slide open. He peels himself off of me, steps back.

I break away, step out of the doors, which begin to close. I angle my body toward him, "Aren't you coming?"

He yawns, leans a shoulder against the elevator walls, "This floor is for plebs."

I open and shut my mouth. Did he actually say that? The doors close.

I watch the floors scroll up on the elevator's panel. It stops at the floor marked 'A.' Does that mean only assholes are allowed there? I snicker, then turn and march toward the reception desk.

"I am here for-"

"The pitch?" The sleekly coiffured woman behind the reception desk looks me up and down. What? Do you have to audition with your superiority complex to be hired here?

"No, the fork."

She blinks.

I stab my tongue into my cheek, "It was a joke."

"Oh!" She purses her lips. Hell, she'd be the perfect companion for the man I left behind in the elevator. Speaking of, "Why are there two receptions in this building?"

"I am the administrator to the upper echelons."

Did she say echelons? Does anyone use that word in daily speech?

Her phone buzzes. She straightens and touches her earpiece, "Yes, Mr. Sterling." Her breath hitches. "Of course, Mr. Sterling, I'll send her up."

She glances at me.

"I heard."

I pivot, then stop. Holdonabloodysecond. I swivel around. "How many offices did you say are up there?"

"I didn't." She huffs.

"How many?" I frown. Alphahole had gone up; he'd hinted he is the boss. Is he the person I came to meet? No, it's not possible. My heart begins to race. "Tell me."

She frowns, scans her nails, "I can't give out private information—"

I grit my teeth, force my lips to curve in the semblance of a smile, "Please, this could change the outcome of the meeting I am about to go into. I really need to be better prepared for whatever is coming."

She frowns, then jerks her chin, "One, just one, Mr. Sterling's."

Summer

I walk out of the elevator. This time, the trip had been accomplished mercifully alone, thank you very much. I get off on the ‘Asshole’ floor then move forward to the conference room at the very end, as directed by the second receptionist.

She'd cautioned me that Mr. Sterling hates to be kept waiting.

What a surprise, huh?

I glance past the doors that open off the corridor. The entire floor is hushed. The faint scent of leather and cigar smoke clings to the walls. The place smells like the inside of an old boy's club.

Figures. Of course, alpha asshole is a chauvinist.

Probably went to boarding school with other rich toffs, all of whom are now top politicians and captains of industry. Bet he could call up anyone to get a favor done for his company. That's how he'd established his company so quickly. Okay, maybe that was uncharitable. By all accounts, 7A had been set up by him and his partners and they'd built it up from scratch.

Though Sterling is in charge of the marketing, which is why I am meeting him. Just my luck. My shoulders droop as I approach the massive double doors of the conference room. Ornate woodwork laces the frame. There's a knocker with a lion's head on it in place of the handle. I blink. My fingers twitch. Before I can stop myself, I've grabbed the knocker. Slam it down, do it. Not as if you're going to get the account so why keep the pretense up, eh?

For Karma, yeah. Okay. Do it for Karma. She deserves you giving this your best shot. I push open the door and enter.

A rectangular glass table stretches the length of the room. There are at least ten chairs clustered around it. One wall is taken up by a white projection screen.

I walk around, until I am facing the table. I have a PowerPoint on my laptop. Which means I have to plug in my computer, or plug in my usb fob with the deck. Should have taken a print-out, but there hadn't been enough time. Okay, don't panic. Deep breath. You can do this.

I drop my tote bag onto the table, pull out my fob, and pivot to face the screen. I spot the console to the side, and walk up to it... How the hell does it open? I press down on the surface. Nothing. To the right... left... What the —? The hair on the nape of my neck rises.

"You won't need that."

A shiver runs down my back. I'd known it was him seconds before he had spoken.

"Of course, I will." I continue to flutter my fingers over the console, and it slides back. Whew!

I shove my fob into position, then straighten. His scent envelops me. Bergamot and fresh cut grass, saturated with testosterone. I gulp, walk toward the table.

He clicks his tongue. "You're going in the wrong direction."

I whip around, and he drums his fingers on his massive chest.

"I don't have much time."

I swallow. Of course. He is the client; this is his office. He knows where everything is.

"Fine." I round the table, drop into a chair.

"Didn't give you permission to sit."

I stiffen. "Controlling much?"

He drums his fingers on his chest, "I can't tolerate childish tantrums. Clearly, you don't have what it takes to manage our account." He pivots on his heels, heads for the door.

In that moment, I have never hated anyone more. Superior jackass with a God complex. If I didn't need his business desperately, I'd have told him that to his face, too.

"Wait."

He keeps going.

"Hold on, please."

He opens the door.

"Look, I'm sorry. I apologize. I shouldn't have said that."

"Too little, too late." He glares at me, "You should have thought of that before you directly contradicted me."

The blood fades from my cheeks. What am I doing here trying to negotiate with a man who has clearly lost touch with reality so much that he doesn't see anything except the tip of his own nose? His strong patrician nose that hooks above a square jaw and hints at the strength of his obstinacy. A strong will that could crush me if I let it.

If you give in now, you are going to regret it.

I need his business, and if I show my desperation, I can kiss any hope of gaining his account goodbye. No, it is time to change course. To hold my own, to fight him at his own game, with his own tactics. Say something, anything, to keep him here. I gulp, then toss my head, "Fine, leave then."

He frowns.

"But you'll never hear about how I was going to put myself at your disposal twenty-four-seven."

Sin

That was supposed to have been my proposition. The hell did she come up with that?

I glare at her.

She shuffles her feet.

Are you uncomfortable, little Bird?

My fingers tingle and I shove them into my pocket.

She tips up her chin, "Well?"

"Well, what?"

She twists her fingers in front of her, "Don't you want to hear about the rest of my proposal?"

Interesting. I am the one normally laying down the conditions. I am the one in charge, who likes to demand, and is never turned down. Not only has she stood up to me since we met; now, she actually wants to lead? I bare my teeth, "Clearly, you are delusional, or plain stupid."

"Clearly." She bites on her lower lip, "But you have to admit you are curious..."

Hmm.

"A teeny tiny bit?" She holds up her forefinger and thumb. Slender fingers tipped with pink nail polish. The woman loves that color.

Bet she also adores candies, flowers and teddy bears. The kind she'd love to receive on Valentine's Day, right after she'd belted out Karaoke on a drunken night out with her girlfriends. Then shagged the man she took home.

My gut tightens. Most females I associate with come well coiffured, long limbed, blonde hair, with designer outfits and high-heeled shoes that have never seen the inside of a tube station. This girl though—I take in her footwear. Chucks?

I blink. She is wearing chucks, with her slimline black skirt that comes to mid-thigh. Why hadn't I noticed the ridiculous combination of her outfit? Probably because I was too busy staring at her breasts... or is it at her ridiculous pink hair, which really has no place in my boardroom?

Max huffs, then shuffles toward her with his ambling doggy gait.

She doesn't notice him... Or if she does, she gives no indication. He circles her, sniffs her ankles, then drops down at her feet. His tongue lolls out of his mouth.

I frown. Max can be stubborn, and when he sets his mind on something... Well, nothing, not even me, can dissuade him. I look at my watch, "You have five minutes."

Her gaze widens.

I stalk forward, drop into the seat in the middle of the conference table. "Starting now."

"B...but." Her mouth opens and closes.

"Do you often do that?"

"Wh... what?" She stutters.

"Sound like you are drowning?"

Her cheeks flame. Her blush is quite spectacular, actually. It sears the expanse of her throat, right up to the tips of her ears. Do the other parts of her turn pink too? Would her pert backside show off every single fingerprint of mine? I drum my fingers on my table.

"Well, you were here to pitch an idea, right?"

She nods.

"So give it your best shot." I kick out my legs.

She leans forward toward the panel that controls the console with the fob and, I shake my head.

"What?" She frowns.

"I don't have time for a long drawn-out presentation."

"Bu... but I pulled together a deck."

"Give me a summary." She chews on her lower lip.

Don't look there, don't. I peruse the glistening flesh. Pink, slightly swollen. Her mouth falls open slightly, and fuck, if I don't want it fastened on my cock right now. My groin hardens. I shove my legs further apart, "Ms. West."

"Mr. Sinclair?"

I tip my chin up, "You now have four minutes and fifty seconds left."

She releases her death grip on her laptop, folds her fingers together on the table, "The brief was on how to humanize the face of the 7A Company, using innovative marketing communications, the kind in which my company specializes."

"Cut to the crux of the strategy."

Her eyebrows lower. "My idea is to go behind the scenes, tail the founders, share behind-the-scenes pictures of each of the Seven, your interactions with each other, how you come up with strategies, the chemistry, the banter, the fights, use the key individuals at the helm to bring out why your company is not as bad as the recent PR that surrounds it."

"Oh, so you think we have a bad reputation in the market?"

"Yes." She holds my gaze.

Took guts to own up to that. It is refreshing, I'll give her that. I place my elbows on the table, lean forward. "Go on."

"You and your fellow stakeholders are seen as cut-throat, mercenary, not caring about your employees, or anyone else, ready to take what you want, earn money for your stockholders."

I frown. "What's wrong with that?"

"Profiting by itself is not enough. Not if you were thinking of going for an IPO, which you are."

How did she find out about that? That is information privy to the seven of us... and our teams.

"If you're wondering how I knew about that," she raises her chin, "there was a piece in CITY A.M. last evening."

"There was?"

"Clearly, your PR team sucks if they didn't bring it to your notice."

"Hmm." I pull out my phone, search for the piece and find it. "We would have announced it in a week... No biggie."

I'm going to destroy whoever leaked the piece.

"It didn't necessarily come from within your company."

"Oh?" Did she second-guess my thoughts, hmm?

"The change in your messaging during the last few months is a clear indicator that you are planning something big. Besides, the brief was aimed at whitewashing your reputation, and companies do that when they are going to..."

"Raise capital?" I pocket my phone.

She nods.

Hmm. Okay, I'll grant her that.

"So you're not just another pretty face, huh?"

Her lips firm. She knits her fingers together in her lap, clearly trying to control herself from saying something she might regret.

Question is, why am I not able to control myself when it's about her?

I survey her features again. Taking in the bright look in her eyes, her enthusiasm writ in every angle of her body, the way her chest heaves, the tension that skitters off of her, for a second, I feel my age. Hell, I am only a decade older than her, if that, but the experience I have packed into that time has clearly made me into a cynic. Not that I'll admit to that. Ever.

"So, you think you can flounce in and tell us that our reputation sucks, that our confidential information has been leaked, and that you know better than us how we should be planning forward?"

She blinks, shuffles her feet. "Umm." The pulse flutters at her throat and I can't look away. It hints at her vulnerability, how tense she is... how nervous she's been throughout, really.

Guess not everyone has been fortunate to be blessed with a fighting spirit such as mine, huh?

"How desperate are you to win this account?"

She stiffens.

"It's clear that you're not the best agency in the market. I mean, your ideas are hardly original."

She curls her fingers at her sides. "It's as original as... as your beard."

"Is that a joke?" I lower my brows.

"What do you think?"

"I think..." I stroke my chin, "that you like how I wear it."

"I hate it."

"Good." I knock my knuckles on the table. "I'll keep it."

She shoots me a look that is so hate-filled, that I chuckle.

"It's not funny." She makes that sound—the one between anger and frustration, that I heard yesterday—deep in her throat.

My dick twitches.

How would she sound under me? When I am balls deep inside her melting pussy, while squeezing her beautiful tits? My groin hardens. Fuck. Get your head in the game.

I thrust out my chest, "It is from where I am."

"Have you always been such an arrogant prick?"

"Watch it, now." I glare at her. "Your idle prattle has ceased to amuse me."

"You know what's really not amusing?" She moves forward to stand in front of the table, then slaps her hand on the table, "That I let myself be subjected to the toxicity of your presence. "

Our height difference is such that even with my being seated, she has to tilt her head back to peer into my face. She really is petite, and exquisite. Made to be broken, to be put on a shelf and taken care of, then taken down on occasion, to be admired.

It's a compulsion of mine. To collect objects that elicit extreme emotions, which I admit is something that doesn't happen often with me.

That's no explanation for what I do next.

I tap my fingertips together, "So how are you going to put up with shadowing me for a week?"

Summer

"A... week?" I squawk. I didn't hear that correctly. "You mean seven days?"

He raises his eyes skyward, "She can count."

Jerk. I swallow, press my knees together, "I won't do it."

"Why not?" He drums his fingers on the table. "Don't you need this gig?"

"I do."

"Then?"

"My uh—my," I twist my fingers together. How do I put this without giving away more about myself? How...? "My personal circumstances don't allow me to—"

"Ditch him."

"What?" I stare.

The ego of this guy. I mean, it's not possible he's managed to get through life with this attitude, is it? Does everyone he encounters bend to him? Do they?

He rotates his foot, clad in Italian leather shoes.

"Time you got rid of whichever lover boy you're seeing."

My eyes bug out, "You're joking."

"There you go again, presuming to know what I mean."

I throw up my hands, "You're speaking in riddles."

"Good, one way for you to put that ol' brain matter to good use."

Anger thrums at my temples. My pulse pounds. Adrenaline laces my blood. "I've never met anyone quite like... like... you." I raise my palm, bring it down.

There's a blur of motion, and the next moment, he looms above me. His fingers lock on my wrist.

"Let me go."

"Your answer first, Pink."

"Don't call me that."

"I'll call you what I want, when I want to, and you'll answer to it."

"No."

"Yes."

Obnoxious ass. I stare at his face, searching for something... anything that would give me a clue to why he is acting so unreasonably. "Were you born this way or did you become such a repugnant beast along the way?"

"You don't get to ask the questions."

He tugs me forward and I squeak. My nose bumps his. That dark edgy scent of him envelops me. Moisture pools between my thighs. Hell. How could someone so horrible smell so delicious?

"Your boyfriend—"

"What about him?"

"Drop him."

Not that I have anyone currently. And if I did, would I do as he's commanded?

Yes.

Yes.

"No." I jerk my head.

He lets go of my wrist only to wrap his fingers around my nape. I flinch.

"You will do as I say."

My nerve endings crackle. That hushed tone of his voice... the angle of his head, the intensity with which he peruses my features, holds my gaze, ripping me to shreds, cutting straight to the core of me, that frightened little girl who's inside of me. Bet he knows how much of a loser I am inside. One who has never managed to get her own way. I'm not going to give in now. If I do, the alphahole will win and I'll never... never give him that satisfaction; not unless it is on my own terms.

"Oh yeah?" I tilt my head, "And if I don't?"

"Hmm." His eyes gleam, "You sure you want to know?"

The hair on my forearms stands on end. This is a trap. Every single action of his since he walked into this room has been carefully calculated to put me on edge, to unbalance me, to ensure that I am so angry that I'll lose my composure. Don't say the obvious, don't. I toss my head. "Bite me, motherfucker."

He peels back his lips. His white teeth flash. Wow. The sheer enjoyment on his face? It changes his features, transforms him into what he might have been as a boy. Full of life, excitement, ready for the next challenge... which in this case, is me. I pull back. "No, don't —"

He lunges forward. The next moment I am splayed across the length of the table, my breasts crushed against the hard surface. "What the—?" I struggle and he leans his heavy arm on the small of my back. I jerk my hips, push up on my toes. A weight behind my knees pins me in place.

"Let me go, bastard."

"Nice of you to have spotted my true lineage, and on our first meeting."

I huff. Don't say, it, don't. "Technically, it's our second meeting."

"Don't correct me." He yanks up my skirt.

Cool air assails my skin. I freeze. No way, he isn't going to... "Unhand me."

He pauses, "Did you say 'unhand'?"

Is there a glimmer of laughter in his voice. I angle my head and he increases the pressure on my back, holding me immobile.

"You wouldn't dare..." My chin trembles.

"You should realize that I don't take kindly to dares." He cups my butt and my thighs squeeze together. I clench my fists at my sides. When I get out of here, I am going to file a sexual harassment lawsuit. I am going to sue the living daylights out of him.

"Won't work," he growls.

"What?"

"Whatever you are plotting."

I freeze.

"Everyone in this office will support me. It's your word against mine, and yours doesn't count for much."

My guts clench. The sheer audacity of this man! Does he really think he can get away with what he is doing? "The cameras."

"None in this room."

"From the entrance to the building?"

"I've ordered them wiped already."

"The bar yesterday..." I bite on my lower lip. Of course, he owns it and everyone there, as well. "Fuck you."

Pain explodes across my backside.

I scream. "You spanked me, what the bloody hell—?"

"Language, Bird." He smacks my butt again.

I howl. No one has ever smacked me before.

I haven't let anyone get this close to me. Certainly, no one in the revolving door of foster homes had cared enough to admonish me. So, how had I put myself in this position with this intolerable asshole?

I strain against his hold and he leans more of his weight on my back. I kick out with my leg as he spanks me again, and again. Five, six... ten. "Stop." I wheeze.

"Learned your lesson yet?"

"Get off me, you brute." I yell, and he slaps my arse so hard that my entire body jerks up the table.

"Sinclair."

"What?" My breath stutters; the pain sinks into my blood, coils in that empty space between my thighs.

"My name, little Bird." He cups my butt, "My name's Sinclair."

Moisture pools in my core. Why the hell is my body reacting this way?

"Say it." His voice lowers to a hush.

I tremble, open my mouth, wanting to oblige him. Do it. Give him what he wants.

"No."

Whack.

"Now." He growls.

My skin stretches; my nerve-endings pop.

"Sinclair." I huff.

His large hand palms my butt. "See, we get along so well when you obey me."

Right. I swallow, firm my shoulders. "This is not about a boyfriend."

He stills, but his body is braced for action. Dense clouds of energy vibrate off of him.

I turn my head so my cheek is flat against the table. "My sister." I peer up at him. "She's unwell, I can't leave her."

"Not my problem."

Anger threads my veins, "She's not well you... nincompoop. I can't leave her."

"Too bad."

The blood pounds at my temples. Until now, I hadn't realized how protective I feel about her. Me? I can deal with shit. But Karma? No way am I going to let her suffer because of this. I twist my torso. His grip loosens. Enough for me to pull free. I scramble up on the table, raise my hand,

"Do it and you lose this account, and your home. You and your sister will be on the streets."

I pause, "You wouldn't."

He raises an eyebrow. Of course, the asshole would go all out to destroy me.

Then another thought strikes me, "You already knew?"

He leans back, straightens the cuff of his jacket. "You don't think I'd let you walk in here without running preliminary checks on you?"

"You had me investigated?" My gut churns. The thought of this man searching out the nooks and crannies of my life? My butt throbs. Every fingerprint of his seems to be etched into my arse.

I clamber off the table, glad to put the width of the barrier between us.

"Didn't take too long, by the way." He straightens, his tone already preoccupied. No doubt he's moved on to other things already. He's dismissed me in his mind. Me and my petty little life. I am inconsequential, not even a blip on the expanse of his beautiful life. I hate him... No, loathe him.

I am going to find a way to avenge this humiliation.

Ensure that he feels as helpless as I do in this moment. I smooth my skirt down my hips, then square my shoulders.

"Good-bye, little Bird." He pivots, struts to the door.

His large body cuts out the sight of the doors. That's how massive he is. Slim waist, jacket stretched across a firm butt. Powerful thighs that ripple with each step he takes away from me. More wetness pools between my thighs. It's not fair that the devil has such an irresistible body.

If he leaves, I can forget about my fledgling business, or paying next month's rent... And if Karma's condition were to flare up..? No, she is stable. That's what her last examination showed, but I have to be prepared for the worst. I can't afford to be selfish anymore.

"Wait."

He continues walking.

"I'll do it."

He reaches the door, "Tonight. 8 pm. I'll send my chauffeur to pick you up"

"I can't drop everything..."

"Don't tempt me to change my mind."

Hate him. Hate him. Hate him. I press my lips together, hold up my middle finger, then for good measure stick out my tongue at his back. Childish, but what he's done to me, how he's coerced me into this situation, is nothing short of crazy; like, completely out of this world, unbelievable.

"Why are you doing this? This entire set up... It's too elaborate, smacks of desperation."

He pauses at the threshold.

"What is it you really want from me, Sinclair?"

He draws himself up to his full height, "I'll tell you when the time is right."

My heart begins to thud. OMG... that... didn't sound ominous. Not at all. The hell is he hiding from me? I bite down on my lower lip. Not yet. Now is not the time to throw more questions at him. I can play his game. If he can bide his time, so can I.

"Oh, and Bird? That spanking today, was nothing." He pushes open the door, holds it open for a beat, "Next time, your rudeness won't go unpunished."

Sin

The door shuts behind me. Something hits against the barrier; I ignore it.

She's angry. Good. I flex my fingers.

So far, things are going smoothly. In fact, it has been too easy. I frown.

I can't believe she allowed me to spank her. I'd expected her to run out of there screaming, maybe reach for her phone and dial for help... which, of course, I'd have stopped her from doing. It hadn't taken much coercion to bait her, actually.

I stab my finger on the elevator button. Max butts my leg. I glance down and he darts toward the stairs. Why not? My office is a floor above.

And after that run in with that little spit fire... My cock hardens. The shape of that gorgeous arse is burned into my palm. For someone I've spent most of my life hating... Too bad her physical attributes are so enticing.

I clench my fingers into fists. All a ruse to tempt me. Bet she'd dabbed on that infuriating perfume—jasmine and something more complex lurking below. Notes of pepper that had twisted my guts and had tested my patience.

I hadn't meant to lose control, honestly... but what's done is done. I square my shoulders. Next time I won't veer from my plan. I will not give in to my hate... It hadn't been hate. Far from it. There had been something in the air between us. Something that had annoyed me, had squeezed my chest and hardened my balls until I couldn't stop myself.

Not again. One slip up... one more than I have allowed myself in any other project. Nope. I have to look past that enticing face, to the darkness that taints her. The darkness, so like mine. The fuck?

I shake my head, prowl toward the stairs, hold the door open for Max. He darts ahead and I follow him up the stairs to the floor above.

I shove the door open and he breaks out in a flurry of barks. No one in the foyer looks up. My staff is too well-trained to show any signs of recognition. I shove my office door open and he darts in, jumps onto the rug in the corner. When I'd brought him here the first time, he had headed for it and claimed it as his. I'd been mildly amused, enough to allow him to own it.

"Stay," I stab a finger at him. He pants, tongue lolling, then places his head on his paws.

I swerve right, walk into the adjoining room, as Damian throws his ball at a basket strung up in the corner. The ball bounces once, then rolls toward me. I pick it up, pitch it at him.

"Wassup?" His long blonde hair haloes his face.

"Isn't it time you got that cut, Goldilocks?"

He grins, "Jealous?"

I frown, "Why would I envy your lifestyle?"

"Oh? Let's see." He holds up his fingers, "The women throwing themselves at me, the ability to hold a crowd with my magnanimous presence, the chance to travel the world while following my passion...?" He cocks his head, "Not to mention the fact that I have more than enough to invest in our new venture, and fly down at the least pretext."

"It isn't a pretext, douche-canoe."

"Speak for yourself." Weston turns from the window, jerks his chin. "I need to return in half an hour to prep for a very important procedure."

Fucker's the quietest of us, the most serious, the most accomplished.

I lean forward on the balls of my feet, "Is that a surgery you're talking about or your latest sub?"

His lip curls. "What do you think?"

"Not going there. What you do with your personal time is your own thing. We all have a dark side, but you, Weston, you scare me."

Yeah, did I mention he's the meanest? Still waters run deep and all that.

"High praise, coming from the master sadist." He smirks.

"That's a back-handed compliment. I'll go with the positive meaning of it... For now."

I crack my neck. "I wouldn't have called this meeting if it wasn't important. I realize all of you can't wait to bugger off to whatever depraved pursuits I pulled you away from."

A chorus of snickers greets that.

Like I said, assholes, each and every one of them.

I stalk to the bar, pour myself two fingers of the whiskey and toss it back.

"You gonna share?" Saint prowls over.

"Get your own."

"Why should I, when..." He snatches the glass from me, "...it's so much more satisfying to take what's yours?" He sets the empty glass on the bar counter with a thump.

A slow burn builds inside of me. Saint has always managed to rile me up the wrong way. Bastard enjoys it, probably because we've been competing with each other since the day we met. On the first day of kindergarten, when he'd been knocking a ball around the yard in front of our school, I'd taken the ball from him and run. He'd pursued me.

He hadn't stopped since. Neither had I. No wonder he'd ended up a lawyer, and me a banker. Neither of us had much going for us in the good will department.

"Sore loser, huh?"

"I am not the one holding an empty glass."

"Because I won the last bet?" He smirks.

"I won the three before that."

"You were on a lucky streak."

I drum my fingers on my chest, "You're hurting my feelings."

"Not since you decided to pursue Mary Jane Nokes in sixth grade."

"You barely noticed her." I crack my neck.

"I didn't... until—"

"She succumbed to my charms," I widen my stance. "which, you have to admit, was a bloody given."

He stabs his finger in my chest. "Don't provoke me, you chutiya."

"Settle down children." A new voice sounds. "Would have thought you'd have found a more mature way to fight out your differences by now, huh?"

I turn to the entrance of the room. A tall, broad shouldered man, stands inside the doorway. He has dark, closely-cropped hair, a scar down one cheek, and a tattoo peeking up his neck, enclosed in a priest's collar.

"Edward." I step toward him, Saint at my heels, "Didn't think you'd make it."

"And miss the chance to redeem the souls of the most debauched men on this planet?" He clicks his tongue..

My grin widens, "Life treating you well, Father?" I grip his shoulder.

"Not as good as it's treating you sinners, apparently." He surveys the room, taking in the furniture. The conference table that had been converted to a pool table, the deep-set leather sofa, the fireplace, the wet bar, the floor to ceiling bookcase.

"You like?"

He angles his head. "Nice one, Sin. Almost as beautiful as the woman I ran into who was in such a hurry to get away that she took the stairs going down."

Edward hates elevators because... reasons.

I knit my eyebrows, "Tiny, curvy, pink hair and a face so cute you take an instant dislike to it?"

"Dislike is not quite the word I'd use, but if that's what you want us to believe." He raises his shoulders.

"Huh?" I tilt my chin up, "You're a priest, not a mind reader."

"You're a cut-throat entrepreneur, not someone who's the best judge of character."

"Present company proves your point accurately." I lower my brows.

Edward chuckles, pats my shoulder, "Good to see you too, Brother."

"Now that you pussies have the touchy-feely stuff out of the way, can we get down to business?"

A massive monster of a man prowls through the entrance.

His blonde beard catches the sunlight, the sparkle rivaled by the golden brown of his hair, and his tan that seems to clothe him in a perpetual amber glow.

I groan, "Don't recall inviting you here, Arpad."

"Which is why this is the place I need to be."

"Right, are we starting or what?" Weston asks from his perch by the window.

"Is this a reunion?" Damian drawls, then bounces his ball on the floor of the office.

"If all of our meetings are going to be such a waste of time, count me out." Saint swerves past me and heads for the door.

The fuck? Asshole needs special treatment, apparently. He's not getting any from me.

"You walk out of here, Saint, and I promise I'll cut you out of future deals."

He takes another step.

"You're going to regret it."

He twists his head and shoots me a look, "I regret being here already."

"Get your arse in gear, you tosser."

Saint turns on Arpad, who merely stabs his thumb in the direction of the room. "Surely, you want to find out what he's up to? If you miss this, your curiosity is going to haunt you unless you commit industrial espionage and break down his plan of action."

"Hmm." Saint leans his hip against the door frame.

"Right." I pivot, then walk into the room, "Sit down everyone. Didn't call you here to mess with your time."

"Yeah, it'd better be worth it." Saint growls.

I glare at him.

He smirks. "Go on then."

"How long has it been since you had a decent night's sleep, huh?"

His features close. "What's it to you?"

I glance at the doc, "And you Weston, have you spent a single day not wondering about what happened to the disaster we left behind that day?"

Silence descends on the room. I toss my head. Figures. They are like me—larger than life, big egos, razor sharp minds, the best in their fields... Yet here we were, in search of that one thing that has eluded us since the incident that changed us all.

I fix my gaze on Edward, "How many times a day do you ask the Lord to forgive you for your sins?"

Edward's jaw firms. "Rhetorical questions, Sinner?"

"Takes one to recognize one, Father."

Color bleeds from Edward's face.

"Shit, I didn't mean that."

"Sure, you did." Edward sucks in his cheeks. "That why you called us here? To rehash the mistakes of our past?"

"What's your plan?" Saint stalks into the room, drops into the nearest armchair. "You are too smart, Sin, It's the one thing I hate about you... Possibly the one thing I admire about you too. You've managed to emerge relatively unscathed from the incident, put your life back together, the first of us to earn a million."

And a billion... many times since, but who's counting, huh? I widen my stance, "What do you want in return?"

"50% of whatever profit you are proposing," Saint growls.

"Hold on a second." Weston strides forward, "I am a surgeon, that doesn't mean I'm going to settle for less than my proportionate share of the profits."

"And I am the most in demand Angel Investor in Silicon Valley." Arpad drums his chest.

"That's because Jace decided to turn his attentions to philanthropy," Damian smirks.

He's referring to our mutual acquaintance JK aka Jace. He is part of a select circle of people that Arpad and Damian have become close to in LA.

"Tosser got married and decided to retire." Damian bounces on the balls of his feet.

"More power to him." I snort.

Losers, all those who follow their hearts and get involved in that emo shit. The result: they lose their killer edge, become soft at their edges. Not something that I'll ever fall for. Especially since there is one goal on my horizon—to bring down the man responsible for my ruin.

Arpad tilts his head, "Jace and I were never in competition. Besides," he cracks his neck, "I hold the record for maximum ROI in a quarter amongst all of us. So," he flexes his fingers, "I stake the claim to the biggest share of the profits."

"Don't you want to hear what Sin's proposing?" Damian aims the ball in my direction.

I snatch it up, bounce it once, then balance my foot on it.

"I'll tell you, on one condition."

Saint scowls, "Baron?"

I widen my stance, "Fucking Baron."

Arpad's jaw hardens, "Bastard always manages to insert himself into our conversations without being present."

"He is annoying that way." Edward concedes.

Saint jerks his chin. "The seventh wheel, but clearly, whatever we are planning, he needs to buy into it too."

I tilt my chin up. "He's in."

"You spoke to him?"

"In a manner of speaking." I'd had to follow the security protocol he'd laid down, which involved old fashioned snail mail, and an unsigned typewritten note, to a PO Box. Apparently, physical mail leaves less of a trail than communicating in a clandestine electronic method. "He's happy with whatever we decide."

"Fucking Baron." Arpad snaps his fingers, "Always knows how to use his time most efficiently, while the rest of us are working our asses off."

"Not you" Saint snickers. "You're too busy sailing around the world in that dinghy of yours."

"It's a sailboat." Arpad curls an eyebrow. "And PS, it's called generating passive income, baby." He spreads his hands, "What can I say? I have a knack for investing in exactly the right start ups... Speaking of which..." he stabs his finger at me, "...you going to tell us what it is?"

"FOK Media."

"FOK Media?" Edward blinks.

"What's that short for?" Arpad smirks, "Full of Kink?"

"Funny Ornerly Kangaroos, maybe?" Damian rolls his shoulders.

I shake my head.

"Oh, wait, let me guess." Saint snaps his fingers, "Fill or Kill?"

"An obvious guess," I make a mock gun with my fingers, point it at him. "But no, it's Full of Kindness."

Silence descends.

Saint snickers, "You're joking?"

"No." Not completely. I begin to pace, "After our last unmitigated PR disaster," I turn to Weston, "because of which we had to sell off our shares, divest our portfolio—"

"Hold on." Weston raises his palms, "I made you a profit. We dumped the shares before the stock market tanked."

"Maybe..."

Weston frowns.

"Your sins turned out to be damn profitable for us, this time." I lower my chin.

"As long as you don't repeat them." Edward tilts his head.

Weston raises his hands, "I never should have been caught on that sex tape... Besides, everyone who is anyone has one of those. And it hasn't affected business, has it?" Weston steepled his fingers, "On the contrary, it's brought in a flurry of new patients. Seems the sight of my arse inspires confidence, as much as my success rate in surgeries."

"Win-win situation..." I prop my fingers on my hips. "So we are ploughing in the profits, forming a charity that will invest in a cause—"

"—that gives us legit write offs." Saint drums his fingers on his chest.

"But what's the real business?" Arpad widens his stance.

I scan the room, "We invest in start-ups, in upcoming artists, in musical talent, medical scholarships, we cast our net wide."

"And the returns?" Saint widens his stance.

"Twenty-five percent of their income streams for the rest of their lives."

Weston hums, "It's steep."

"It's fair." I set my jaw.

"It does good." Edward's tone is considering. "I concede that much."

Not that it matters to me. My soul is going to rot in hell, but it's not a bad idea to have side benefits.

I'll also say whatever it is these assholes want to hear to get them to agree.

"If it weren't for the incident, the Seven of us wouldn't have kept in touch. This..." I jerk my chin, "shared venture would be a more positive reason to keep us together."

"All the more reason to walk away from it," Saint grimaces. "If I see any more of you guys, I'll end up resembling one of your ugly faces and that's not on my wish list, no offense."

"None taken." I bare my teeth.

"But." He pauses.

"But?"

He drums his fingers on his chest. "You have my interest, I'll give you that."

Fucking cunt.

Damian scratches his jaw, "And we do this meeting... What? Yearly?"

"Monthly." I firm my lips.

"Monthly?" Damian scowls. "You are aware of my schedule."

"You have a private jet, bitch."

He glowers.

"This way, we meet each month, in person, to evaluate the risks."

Saint smirks, "You'd think you want the strength of the group behind you or something."

I do, but not in the way he thinks.

Makes it easier to keep track of what they are up to. Sure, I have eyes on them, but there's only so much you can trust what the hired help gets you. Best to meet them face to face, read their expressions, study their body language. Deciphering the unsaid, yeah, that's my specialty.

"And the meetings will be in London." I thrust out my chin.

"No fucking way. Why London?" Arpad growls, " I hate this bloody city."

"I proposed this plan. I get to dictate where the meetings happen." I curl my lips, "And it will be on my home turf. Anyone who doesn't agree can sod off."

I scan the space. "No? It's settled then." I thrust my chin forward, "Besides, London is the center of the universe."

The moody, overcast weather the city wears for most of the year suits my temperament fine too.

"Bloody anglophile." Arpad grumbles.

"Filthy Frenchman." I snicker.

"Children, please." Edward walks up to me, grips my shoulder. "For the first time, you've had an idea that I am comfortable putting my weight behind. I'll put half of my investments behind it."

I frown, "In return for?"

"50% of profits."

My jaw drops, "What the—?"

"Kidding." Edward chuckles. "One seventh works for me. Though I won't say no to more, since my share of profits will be donated to the good of my flock."

"You're in a good mood, Father."

"I feel in fine form." His lips twitch.

"Who have you been taking lessons from?"

The smile switches off. He blinks, "No one."

"So, there is... someone?"

He shakes his finger under my nose, "Now, now. You can't trip me up. I take my vows seriously."

That much is true. The guilt in his eyes though, had I imagined it? Nah, not likely.

I survey the room, "Don't go getting your knickers in a twist people. I can assure you that, unlike Father here, I don't have an altruistic bone in my body. This way, we own these people until the day they die, not to mention ongoing revenue streams."

"Self-perpetuating assets? Works for me." Arpad stretches, yawns. "We done now?"

"Hold on." Saint prowls over, "How do we choose what to invest in?"

"Prospective applicants present their projects, and—"

"We get them to pitch to us." Arpad lowers his chin.

"That's good."

"You bet it is." He walks up to us. "It's a good idea, Sin, for once."

Right.

"The next meeting is in my offices." Saint growls.

Of course, he'd want the last word.

"Sure." I tilt my head.

His eyebrows knit. "If there isn't anything else..." he stalks to the door.

"I am not done yet."

"FOK Media is taking on an agency to help with the marketing."

"Oh?" Saint swings around. "Who heads the agency? Someone you're shagging?"

I glower at him.

"Interviewed her earlier. She'll manage our social media presence, and start seeding PR stories, get the ball rolling."

"Definitely shagging her." Damian scratches his chin.

"Did you think she'd have merits of her own?"

"Does she?" Weston's mouth quirks.

Not only.

"At least she's not an employee. That's something." Arpad drags his fingers through his hair.

"You have something to say to me, dipshit?"

He holds up his hands, "Hey, I am not the one with a hard on for her."

I frown. How dare he talk about her in that fashion?

He drums his fingers on his chest, "If she's not an employee, at least it doesn't open us up to further legal issues, when you pursue her."

"That is not going to happen." I grind my teeth so hard that pain slices up my jaw.

"So you're not interested in her?" Saint scratches his chin.

"No."

His eyes gleam. "I can pursue her?"

A growl rips from me. Anger twists my guts. Only when my hands knit in his collar, do I realize I've crossed the floor to him.

He smirks. "Someone's edgy."

I draw my fist back, "Shut the fuck up."

"Wanna try to hit me, Sin?" His tone is pleasant.

It wouldn't be the first time. Fucker knows how to get under my skin good. I smooth my palm down his collar.

"Nope, old chap." I pat his shoulder. "Actually, I do need your help."

"Hmm?" He frowns.

"Summer will be shadowing me for the next seven days to get in-depth information for the social media strategy."

"Oh, yeah?" He snickers. "Is that a euphemism for what you have in mind?"

I ignore it, "She also has a sister."

Saint straightens, "Oh?"

"Who's unwell, asswipe."

He tilts his head. "And you want me to what? Play nanny?"

Damian pipes up. "Technically that would make him a Manny."

"What?" I shoot him a sideways glance.

He shakes his head. "You should keep up with the trends. Not that this is something new or anything. Oh, wait." He snaps his fingers, "Not that you would be aware of that either, huh?"

"I leave those pursuits up to you, Pretty Boy." I turn to Saint, "Can you send your chauffeur to pick her up and move her to my Hampstead Heath apartment?"

His eyebrows knit, "You're taking care of her family? What next? Pay off her debts."

I narrow my gaze.

"And what will you be doing during this time?" Saint curves his hand, makes a pumping motion.

"None of your goddamn business."

I turn to the man on my right, "Doc?"

Weston straightens.

"The sister also has a heart condition, and considering that's your specialization, will you check her out, find out how bad it is?"

"I have a head for business and a body for sin."
— Working Girl. Director: Mike Nichols

Summer

I drag my suitcase toward the imposing door to what has to be the most beautiful three-story house I have ever seen.

The street is off Primrose Hill. Celebrities live here... And of course, the Jerkenstein.

His chauffeur had dropped me off in front of the beautiful wisteria-covered townhouse and I had almost been sorry to see Peter leave.

Not that we had spoken much. I'd been too taken in by the Aston Martin the alphahole had sent to pick me up.

It had smelled of Sinclair. I bring my sleeve up to my nose and sniff. Bergamot and pepper. Correction, I still smell of him.

My stomach flip flops. A hot sensation coils in my chest. I haven't seen the man and already my palms are damp. From hate. That's all it is, right? I raise my fist and knock on the door. It swings open. Huh?

I push open the barrier and walk through, into the large foyer. Ahead, a stairway winds its way up.

To my right is an elevator. Huh? Guess when you're rich you can't be bothered with climbing the stairs?

How much had it cost him to buy the place? Take a number and add at least another seven figures to it. My head whirls. Guess all the money in the world can't buy politeness though, huh?

He is the richest, the snobbiest, the most infuriating man I've come across. And I am going to spend the next seven days with him. Hell.

I bypass the elevator and head for the stairs. He could have been here to welcome me, guide me around. Of course, not. Why had I expected that, huh?

At the foot of the stairs, I pause. I have no idea where I am going, and no way am I dragging my wheelie up the steps.

Hence, elevator...

Hell, does he have to be right even when he isn't physically present to rub it in? I pull my bag to the side, and deposit my tote on it. Then clomp past the foyer, taking a left, through the living room that opens out onto a massive garden.

I pause at the decking that leads out onto a green lawn, flanked by cherry blossom trees in full bloom in the spring sun. Rows of flower beds grace a garden path that leads down to a pond whose water glistens in the distance. I lean forward on the balls of my feet, wanting so much to walk out and explore... I take a step forward when a sound interrupts me. Huh? Was that a moan? I hesitate.

A rustle reaches me from somewhere behind. I pivot, move forward. Another soft sigh. No, I am not imagining things. My heart begins to race. He wouldn't dare. He wouldn't have called me here to humiliate me.

No, actually, that would be exactly his style. Embarrass me further. I stiffen. Why should I hesitate? I haven't done anything wrong, have I? I head past the bay windows on the opposite side of the room, into the adjoining kitchen. And pause. There on the side of the island, he stands, shirt unbuttoned, the lapels parted to show off that sculpted eight pack.

Whoever has an eight pack outside of models and film stars, eh? This alphahole, that's who.

His stomach is concave, and the pants at his waist are unzipped. My mouth goes dry. The blonde hair of a woman covers the most important part of his anatomy. Damn it. Not that I'd wanted to catch a glimpse of his dick. Of course, not.

His fingers dig into her hair, he tugs on it, and she makes a humming sound deep in her throat.

Bet her cheeks are hollowed as she takes him down her throat.

He drags her hair back, then presses her close. Her shoulders tremble and a sucking sound reaches me. My cheeks redden. My thighs clench. The hair on my nape rises and I jerk my gaze up.

Indigo eyes burn into me. His features are hard, his jaw set. His gaze is hot, lust-filled, yet shuttered at the same time. As if he were watching me watching him. I take a step forward, not able to stop myself. If I were closer, would I see myself reflected in his eyes? Would I see how much he wants me? Would he sense how much the entire tableau is turning me on?

I gulp. My scalp tingles. My toes curl. Every part of me seems to be alight with a strange fire. I shouldn't find this erotic. I shouldn't.

A nerve throbs at his temple. He jerks his chin. When my foot slaps the ground, I realize I have taken a step forward. The hell? I blink. One side of his mouth curls.

His biceps flex and he pulls her head back, then forward again. And again. I was wrong. She isn't giving him a blow job. He is taking it from her. He is using her mouth for his pleasure. And yet it is as if he is completely dissociated from the entire proceedings. He set this up for my benefit. He wanted me to find him in this position, of course, he orchestrated this entire scene.

I stiffen, angle my body. I should leave, should get away from him.

His grin broadens. His chest rises and falls. He yanks her away with such force that she falls on her arse.

"Hey," she protests.

"Leave." He says it without taking his gaze off of me.

She glances up, "But, I'm not done."

"I am."

He lowers his hands to the front of his pants. The harsh rasp of the zipper being pulled up, grates on my nerves. All of my pores seem to pop at once. Damn him and his account.

Turning, I race to the door

"Summer, stop."

His hard voice crashes into me. I shudder. My steps seem to slow of their own accord. The hell is he doing to me? I'd been wrong to indulge him this far.

Been wrong to think that I'd survive a week with him... Hell, a few seconds in his presence and I am unravelling. Pinpricks of heat slice my skin and my thigh muscles spasm. I hate the man... No, I loathe him.

No way am I going to allow him to see how much he's gotten under my skin. That I'd wished I had been the woman on her knees in front of him. That he'd been using me to pleasure him. This is sick.

I don't want him. I don't want be part of this charade. Reaching the front door, I wrench it open and race out.

Sin

It wasn't meant to be like this; it wasn't. Let her go; you don't care; you don't.

"Sin?"

Alana glances up at me, her features pinched.

"Get out of the way."

I walk past her and she grabs at the hem of my pants. "What's wrong?"

"Nothing." Everything. "Leave, now."

"I thought you wanted me."

"Not anymore." As I say the words, I realize that it's true. Fuck that and fuck her and fuck the woman who distracted me enough for me to stop a blowjob half-way.

I stalk to the living room.

"Who was she?"

"None of your business." And she isn't. Not mine either. My Bird is an irritant to be dealt with. With her messy pink hair, the jeans and plaid shirt that she'd tucked in, teamed with a pair of chucks... pink, of course. Does the girl own any other color? If she'd intended to highlight how young she is, she succeeded. Every time I see her, her freshness takes me by surprise. No one was meant to look this chaste, this squeaky clean—enough to highlight the differences in our life paths and experiences, right there. I want to taint that wholesomeness, want to mark that pristine air that accompanies her. Mark her, defile her... Fuck. I curl my fingers at my sides. What I feel for her goes beyond hate. I want to destroy her. Then build her up again, a finer, sophisticated version of what she was. Fuck me. When had I thought of this? Breaking her down was part of the plan. Anything else? Unacceptable.

I've come this far, haven't I? I've inched forward toward my goal.

I'd had her on my turf... Then I'd lost her.

I stalk toward the open door, buttoning my shirt up. "I want you gone when I return."

I prowl out the door, down the steps.

Peter straightens. "She went toward the hill." His eyebrows knit.

I ignore him.

Don't need my hired help telling me that I was wrong in what I did.

Max darts out of the house; his collar shines in the last rays of the setting sun.

I head toward Primrose hill, start up the slope, Max at my heels.

By the time I reach the top of the hill, the shadows have lengthened. I pass a group of people huddled on the grass, then a couple sprawled on the bench. His head is in her lap and she bends down to kiss him. Romantics. I snort under my breath.

Life is not about love and hearts and all that stupid shit that Hallmark dreams up in a bid to keep people buying its products. Suckers fall for that crap; good thing I am not one of them.

A squirrel darts past. Max barks and gives chase. That's his weakness. He sees one of those little critters and loses his shit. Like I seem to do with her.

I reach the top, turn to take in the view.

The vista of the London skyline stretches out before me. Lights twinkle, reflecting the setting sun. I survey the space. Where the hell could she be?

I stalk to the edge, past the signs that highlight the landmarks of the skyline. Can't see anyone. I angle my body to turn, when... There! A shock of pink catches my attention.

I head toward it.

Find her hunched into herself, seated on the ground, facing away from the crowd. Her shoulders are bent. She's drawn up her legs and her chin rests on her bent knees. I hesitate. She seems alone, lost in her thoughts... so fragile. Hurt radiates off of her... Nah, must be my imagination. Since when am I so sensitive to the feelings of others?

Besides, she doesn't mean anything to me. She is merely a pawn in the larger game I have going on.

Which means I need her to survive and get through what has taken place... and everything that is going to be hurled her way.

Why does it matter to me that she survives as unscathed as possible? That she come out stronger, able to take on the world.

Why do I want to go to her and draw her into my arms? Soothe her hurt until she smiles again? Why, when she means nothing?

I close in on her. A gust of wind blows toward me. The scent of her—cherries and caramel laced with cut grass—envelops me. My dick twitches. What the bloody hell? So, some part of me finds her interesting. Sure, given half a chance, I'd shag her. I'd do the same to half the willing females that come my way. Except I haven't.

I had had a woman on her knees, in front of me, face in my crotch, in the process of sucking me off and I had walked away. In search of her? Only because I need her to return. I can't lose her, not after having come this far. She plays an important role in my plan for revenge, except she isn't aware of it. Something I plan to rectify at the right time... just not yet. I pause next to her. She stiffens; her fingers tug at the grass, pulling away handfuls.

"Done sulking?"

She doesn't give any sign of having heard me.

"Didn't take you for the jealous kind."

Her shoulders draw back.

"Did you want to be in her place, taking my dick into your mouth, hmm?"

Her head comes up.

"If you ask me nicely, I might fuck your mouth."

She springs up to her feet. Her cheeks are pale, her eyes like glowing emerald orbs. Whoa, stop right there. You don't find her beautiful, remember? She closes the distance between us, and my groin tightens.

She stabs a finger in my direction, and I have this insane need to bend my head and suck on that digit; though that would be a poor imitation of what I've wanted to do to her pussy since the second I'd laid eyes on her. Screw that.

I bare my teeth, angle my head, "Go on then, spit it out, Sweetheart."

"You have a nerve."

I scratch my chin.

"You staged that entire thing for me."

"Oh?" I pretend to yawn, pat my mouth with four fingers.

"You knew I was on my way, and you set it up, including keeping the door unlocked so I could walk in and find you."

"Why?"

She frowns. "What do you mean?"

"Why would I do that, Bird? Why would I go to such elaborate lengths to stage that entire little charade?"

"Because you are some kind of kinky flasher? You enjoy showing off your cock?"

"Wanna touch it?"

Her cheeks flush. "Ego much?"

"I might let you blow me off, if you ask nicely."

"OMG!" She throws her hands up, "you are... are..."

"Irresistible?"

"Obnoxious." She chokes.

"You mean, virile? Admit it, that you are attracted me."

"No." She sets her jaw, "No way am I feeding your already inflated sense of self-worth."

"If the shoe fits." I allow my lips to curl.

"You're such a cliché." She huffs.

I tilt my head, "Every stereotype has its roots in a spark of truth."

"Didn't take you for the philosophizing kind."

"Didn't take you for a sore loser."

"You're right." She juts out her chin. A tear winds down her cheek, trembles at the edge of her jaw. I lean forward, lick it up.

She flinches.

"Why did you do that?"

"Because..." I wanted to taste you? Find out if your essence is as prickly as your demeanor? Because I have this insane desire to break you down and find out what makes you tick, little Bird. "Because I can."

Her jaw hardens and she takes a step back. "You're the most arrogant, most dominating, most selfish man I've ever met."

"You noticed, huh?"

She makes a sound deep in her throat, "It will be my pleasure to take you down a notch before we are done."

"Is that any way to talk to the man who's gonna be paying your bills?" I rock back on my heels, "Don't forget I hold yours and your sister's future in my hands."

She pales, "Not fair." Her breath hitches. "If you keep throwing that at me at every turn, then the deal is off."

Summer

"Oh?" All expression fades from his face. He schools his features into that emotionless mask I am coming to recognize and hate. "You sure about that?"

I nod.

"Okay."

Huh?

He pivots on his heels and stalks away.

Hold on a second. He's leaving? I chew on my lower lip. Why isn't he stopping me? I'd thought he'd laugh at me, perhaps force me to stay... Instead I watch that tight butt of his recede.

My mouth waters. My thighs clench. Stop it. Ogling his gorgeous frame is not going to get your job back. Damn him. Damn him for calling me on my bluff. He is aware of exactly how much I want this position... and how I'd do anything to have it back. Will you grovel to him though? No... No. Do I have a choice?

He takes the path leading down the grassy slope of the hill.

"Wait."

He speeds up.

Asshole. I break into a run. By the time I catch up, I am panting. My hair sticks to my cheeks. Oh, great. Add being shiny with sweat to my already bruised ego. Whatever. "Stop."

He keeps walking.

"Hold on, Sinclair." He pauses.

I draw abreast with him, then brush past him to plant myself in front of him. His big body blocks the sight of the rest of the space. I tilt my face back, all the way back. His face is in shadows. In the lengthening darkness of twilight, he seems formidable.

He folds his arms and his biceps stretch his shirt. I gulp. The heat of his body spools off of his chest, envelops me, reels me in closer, closer.

I squeeze my fingers together in front of my body, as if that will be enough of a barrier. He could haul me up and march away, and there wouldn't be a thing I could do about it. Moisture pools between my legs. Damn him, for the way my body responds to his every move. His presence, his scent, his every action has me attending to him. All of my senses zoom in on his face. I peer up, trying to discern the sharpness of his cheekbones, the hooked nose, the thin upper lip, that pouty lower lip that makes me want to reach up, draw his face down until it's parallel to mine, then sink my teeth into that sensuous, fleshy part of him. And that's not the only part that calls to me either. A chuckle ripples up my throat.

His glare deepens. His mouth firms. "Are you going to apologize or what?"

"What the—?" I dig my heels in my chucks into the muddy path. To be honest that's exactly what I'd been hoping to do, or at least I thought that's what I'd intended, when I'd set off after him. Now, with him watching me with that superior smirk—okay, I concede that look of disdain is hot on him; it makes him unapproachable, yet so sexy... my nerve endings jangle—and that is the last straw.

No way am I going to give him the satisfaction of winning this round. It's not a game, oh stupid one, it's your life. Yah. And it's my prerogative to screw it up, so long as I ensure that Karma is taken care of.

I jut out my chin, "No."

His mouth opens, closes. He blinks once. Ha, guess Mr. Smirky Pants is at a loss for words. Stroke. In my book, that counts as a win.

He closes the distance between us, until his big body brackets me in.

I gulp.

He lowers his chin, and our eyelashes almost kiss. "Say that again."

My body trembles. I fight the urge to step away. Anger scrolls off of him. Nervousness thrums my skin. "No." I tilt my head further back, "No way am I apologizing for that."

"I would have let you walk away, if you hadn't stopped me. You made a mistake by coming after me."

My throat closes.

"What... what do you mean?"

"You had your chance, and lost it." A nerve throbs at his temple.

Oh, no, that... that's not good, is it?

I scuttle away from him and he doesn't stop me. That's not reassuring.

His eyes gleam; his nostrils flare.

Whatever that evil mind of his has conjured up, I am so not going to like it.

"Run, little Bird."

"Eh?"

"You have until I count to five."

The hairs on my nape rise. I angle my body away, ready to take off, anything to get away from this blackhole of a man, who attracts every part of me, even as his temperament repels every cell in my body. Every action has an equal and opposite reaction... Who said that? Einstein? Strike that. Not the time for stupid trivia, not.

"Explain." I clear my throat.

"If I catch you, you do as I command for the next seven days."

"And that's different from now, how?"

He raises an eyebrow, "Want me to spell it out for you?"

"You mean..." I blanch, "you mean the deal—"

"Extends from the meeting room to the bedroom."

"Go fuck yourself."

He smirks. "If I were egotistical, I'd say that you would enjoy that, but it's not your physical surrender that I want."

"Th... then?"

"It's your emotional submission, your mental breakdown."

"You're raving mad."

He raises his shoulder and then lets it fall. "My choice."

"And if I don't agree."

"I don't remember this being a negotiation."

"Jerk."

"You need a new vocabulary."

"And you..." I drag my fingers through my hair. "...you need a new attitude."

"I suppose you're the one who's going to change me?"

No, what's he talking about?

"Many have tried and failed, Sweetheart. I am not the bad boy you can tame. Not the hero of a romance novel come to save you."

"Th... then?"

"Take your worst nightmare and multiply it by 1000... Then add another few zeroes."

"Your wanker instincts are showing."

He bares his teeth, "Your... fight or flight senses need sharpening."

My heart begins to race. Adrenaline fills my blood.

"I meant every word I said." He thrusts out his chest.

The pulse thunders at my temples.

His nostrils flare. Bastard senses my fear. Sweat beads the inside of my palms and I hold up a finger. "Hang on."

His shoulders bunch, every part of him on edge, ready for the start of whatever insane race he has in mind. Darkness bleeds off of him. He's excited. Damn him. This entire thing is a joke for him... and I stupidly came along for the ride. I have to take control, have to. "So, let me get this right."

He angles his head.

"If I evade you now, I can leave?"

"I don't repeat myself."

Icicles crawl up my back.

"If... if you catch me?"

"Then you're mine to do with as I want."

"For the next seven days, right?"

He raises an eyebrow.

"And you'll pay off my debts and arrange for my sister to be treated by a specialist?"

He nods, "I'll deposit another million in your account, in good faith, so both of you are taken care of for the immediate future."

I swallow. Why is he doing this? Something is not right. What is he not telling me?

What choice do I have?

I had upped the stakes. He's made this deal impossible to resist... All the more reason to cut and run. I have to get away from him, before he ruins me completely.

"Deal." I hold out a hand.

He ignores it. He peels back his lips and his pearly white teeth shine in the first rays of the moonlight.

My legs quiver; my thighs spasm. Get away, get away from him now. My body leans away from him, ready to bolt. Something primal inside of me insists that I stay, meet his gaze. Not look away as he bends in closer.

His breath sears my cheek.

"Run now. You have until I complete my countdown."

"Five."

I tense. Go, go. The hard edge of his glare bores into me. He can see my heart, my soul, my every desire lies unleashed in front of him.

"Four."

I take a trembling step back. What am I trying to prove? Why am I not taking the small advantage he's offering me? Because it's a trap, it's a—

"Two."

"You cheated." I gasp, "You missed a count."

He bares his teeth, "One."

I turn and bolt.

Sin

I watch her run down the slope

She picks up her pace, her butt cheeks stretching and pulling against the seat of her jeans. My dick twitches; my groin hardens. My entire body begs me to follow her.

The hell?

I hadn't meant to initiate this little game, but when she'd held her own and dared me, something inside of me had snapped—the hunter inside that loves to play, to race after his prey, toy with it, before he claims it. Claim her? No.

I never meant for this to go this far.

It was supposed to have been easy—crowd her into a corner until she is helpless and alone, then throw her a lifeline, and watch her entangle herself in the snare. Instead, the fine threads of the net tighten around me.

Sweat trickles down my spine.

Bloody long-sleeve shirts; I prefer to be casually dressed... but the front. It always comes down to the face I show the world.

The importance of keeping up this façade until I find those responsible for turning the lives of the Seven upside down.

I can't fail them; not now.

I break into a run, covering the ground in half the time it took her.

Heart pounding, pulse thudding at my temples, adrenaline laces my blood. The hunt, it always comes down to the hunt. The ability to track down my victims and entrap them. It's why I had been chosen to lead this foray against our enemy. Coming from the rest of the Seven, I assure you it's a compliment that I don't take lightly either. Nor my responsibility to them. Catch her, coerce her, make her bend willingly to your maneuvers.

All of the pores on my skin seem to pop. I stalk her as she runs out of the park, up the street that leads to my home. Is she aware of the route she's taken? A pigeon to a homing device. Fly away, little birdie, lead me on the chase.

She rushes up the sidewalk, careening to the very edge where it meets the road, then over to the other side where the walls of the houses skirt the hillside. The hell is she doing? I frown, increase my pace. She continues her hap-hazard retreat. Her shoulders shudder; her speed slows. She must be tired, winded from the descent.

At least she's made it this far without falling arse over tit. The woman needs a keeper.

Max races up from behind to join me. He keeps abreast, his mouth open, tongue lolling.

I prefer to give him his freedom. He has full run of the house and the grounds.

In fact, I have faith in his capacity to look after himself. Unlike her. She needs a goddamn leash to be kept in check. I can't allow her to hurt herself. Not until she's played her role in this charade, of course.

That's all it is. My fingers twitch. How would it be to encircle the expanse of her neck, as I bend her over my desk and take her from behind? My dick lengthens, instantly excited by the thought. I growl low in my throat. This primal reaction I keep having to her is unacceptable. I must maintain my distance from her, or it will complicate things further.

I click my tongue and Max lunges forward. He circles her and her speed slows. She staggers to the gate leading up to my home. Max brushes past her, darting past the open gate, up the garden path. She follows him. Good girl. I'll go easier on her when I catch her. A surge of something fierce unrolls in my chest. Anticipation? Lust...? Admiration that she's lasted this far? Yeah okay. I am not a sore loser. I'll give her her due where it is due to her.

The fuck—? I can't string together a sentence with words, apparently. I slow to a walk, stalk up the garden path. Reach her where she's sitting on the steps. She stares ahead, her legs bent at the knees, her features pinched. I lower myself next to her.

We sit there in silence. The wind rustles the trees that skirt my property. Ahead on the front road, a cyclist races past.

"What were you doing earlier?" My voice emerges huskier than I intended. I clear my throat and she stiffens.

"What do you mean?"

"You careened back and forth as if—"

"As if there were people shooting at me." She brings a strand of that pink hair to her mouth and chews on it.

"There wasn't anyone aiming at you."

"Wasn't there?" She shoots me a sideways glance. "I could feel your gaze drilling holes into me."

I frown. "You are not making any sense at all."

She flings her arms up, "Says the man who is the epitome of all things sane, huh?"

I rub the back of my neck. Well, damn, "You have me there." I drop my arm to my side. "There's a method to my madness, while you are—"

"Spontaneous? Interesting?"

"A little confusing is what I'd go for."

She presses her lips together, "Hmm."

"I have to admit that it piques my curiosity though."

Her head whips around, "Oh, my God. You realize what you did?"

"What?"

"You gave me a compliment." She shoots out a hand and places a palm against my temple, "Are you feeling okay? Not dizzy or anything?"

Blood rushes to my face, the rest of it to my groin. If she looks down, she'll see exactly what her touch is doing to me. How engorged I am. How her nearness crawls under my skin and coils in my gut, urging me to lean in closer... closer.

"Admit it, that you needed an excuse to touch me."

Her lips purse, "You and your ego—"

"Are made for each other."

"Which is unlike what I can say about the two of us." She withdraws her hand.

"Oh, no, you don't." I shoot my arm out and catch her wrist.

"Let me go."

"You should have thought of that before you came back to my lair, little Bird."

"It's not as if I had a choice."

"You always have a choice."

"Easy for you to say that, from your position of power."

"Everything you see here? I fought for it. I created my future and now I am giving you a chance to do the same."

"Right." She tosses her head and her scent deepens. A pulse beats to life at my wrists, my temples, even at the backs of my eyelids.

"Why did you come back?"

"Not to be insulted by you, that's for sure."

"That's for me to decide."

She glances away, her breathing harsh in the still night.

I rub circles over her delicate wrist, "Tell me."

Her pulse rate ratchets up, mirroring mine. Bloody hell. It's the hottest thing I've ever experienced, and I haven't kissed her yet. Something hot coils in my chest. My mouth waters. "Say it."

Her chest rises and falls. Her features twist. Then she squares her shoulders, peers up into my face, "Your money. I need the money, of course."

"Well, maybe I don't need your money. Wait, wait, I said maybe!"
— Friends. Episode, directed by James Burrows

Summer

Something buzzes next to my ear, and I crack my eyes open. Where am I? The large windows let in sunlight. The sun beams light on the wooden floors. My fingers catch on the soft fabric of the futon. I take in my surroundings. Oh! I'm stretched out on a bed. And it's not a normal sized one. The massive bed seems to stretch from one side of the room to the other.

Of course, I'm in Sinclair Sterling's house, in his guest bedroom.

The buzzing sounds again. I spring up to sitting position, and reach for my phone that's plugged in on the side-table next to the bed.

"Hello?" I clear my throat.

"Ms. West?"

"Who is this?" I frown.

"It's Alia from 7A Investments, this is your wake-up call."

"Wake up call?" I blink.

"Yes. Ms. West. Mr. Sterling wanted me to call you to make sure you make it to the office on time for the meeting at nine."

"Meeting?" Was I supposed to meet him? Bet he set it up without giving me notice. Would be just like the alphahole to pull a stunt like this on me.

"Wha.... what time is it?"

"It's 8.15 am."

"8.15?" I scramble towards the edge of the bed.

"Good day Ms. West." The line goes dead.

I glance around the room trying to get my bearings. After that conversation with Sinclair when I'd told him that I had returned to him because I needed his money... He had shown me to my bedroom and I'd crawled into bed and fallen asleep. A-n-d, I hadn't charged my phone.

Which means.... he must have done it.

How the hell had he managed to access my password protected phone. Like that isn't stalkerish at all? I hunch my shoulders.

And he was here in my room while I was asleep? Did he watch me sleep? Goosebumps pop on my skin.

I should be creeped out by it... except... hmm... what had he thought of as he watched me? Had it aroused him? Had that beautiful bulge between the corded muscles of his thighs engorged further?

My thighs clench; my nipples pebble. The hell is wrong with me? I hate the man, remember? I don't find him attractive, I don't. Except I do. The meaner he is to me... the more I want to slap him and simultaneously snog him. Lick him all over his sculpted pecs too, while I am at it. Jeez!

And he's not impervious to me either. Not the way he'd eaten me up with his eyes last night, gah!

There's something between us, some strange unspoken chemistry, that hums and flows and seems to take up all of the air in the room when we are together.

It's the reason I should have run from him when I'd had the chance. But I hadn't. I couldn't.

I need what he is offering too much. It isn't only my life at stake, and he is aware of how desperate I am. It's why he lured me in, trapped me... The worst thing is, every step of the way he's pretended to give me a choice.

Choice, hah! The kind where you point a gun at a girl when she is poised at the edge of the cliff and say, choose now. Lean back and fall to your death, or come forward and I'll decide when that death will come for you. That's what he is going to be, my untimely fall from grace. And I am going along with it willingly. For now.

I survey the room and spot folded clothes on the chair next to the bed. There's a note on top of them.

Yep, he'd definitely been in the room while I'd been sleeping. The hairs on my forearms rise.

I scoot across the bed and snatch up the note.

Office. 9 am. Same conference room.

Wear this.

You're welcome!

That's it? The note isn't signed, typical.

He'd been angry last night. Oh, there had been no outward sign of his fury... except for the flared nostrils. Oh yeah, and the vein throbbing at his temple.

What had he expected, eh?

That I'd throw myself at his feet and tell him how much I wanted him to kiss me, make love—no fuck—me? For that's all it would be with this man. A complete, one-sided power struggle, which would end only one way. With my submission. He'd take me with no compromise, tear into me, and imprint himself in every one of my cells.

He'd possess me absolutely, mark me and change me forever; and there wouldn't be a damn thing I could do about it.

Just as I'd been unable to beat him at his own game. I may have started that little contest yesterday, had thought I could hold my own against him, but he had turned the tables again.

Like a good little soldier, I'd marched right back to his house, to my prison—a gilded cage where he can keep his bird captive.

My toes curl. My scalp tingles. His little bird. Why does the thought of bending to his will seem so tempting?

It has to be because I hate him, loathe the sight of him and everything he stands for. There's a thin line between love and hate, after all, and surely, I am mistaking the signs of whatever it is that stretches between us. I have to get through the next few days, survive them as best as I can, and then I can walk away. Assuming he'll let me go. Assuming there is something left of me that I can call my own.

I glance at the face of my phone, "8:20 am."

"Fuck, fuckity, fuck." I scoot out of bed so fast that I fall on my arse. "Damn."

I spring up and race for the shower. Only Sin-fucking-Sterling, douche-canoe of the first degree would pull a cheap shot like this.

Leaving me to make my way through rush hour traffic. How the hell am I going to get there by 9 am? No way could a car make it through the traffic, not that I have the money for a taxi. Public transport is my best bet. Hell.

Five minutes later, I'm out. I pick up the clothes, put them on, then survey myself in the mirror.

A pencil skirt that clings to my thighs and comes to below my knees. It is a respectable length, actually, but the cut...? Wow.

It enhances my curves, makes my voluptuous body seem almost... Sexy? The blouse has long sleeves that cover me all the way to the wrists, but it is made of lace. I prop my arm on my hip and my flesh peeks through the pattern.

It's coquettish and erotic at the same time.

And the shoes... Okay, they are stilettos; but not very high, they're the right length needed to enhance the turn of my ankles. I look way too well put together. I seem different. Like someone who belongs here in this house, with him, under him. Stop it. I straighten my shoulders, grab my phone.

I've begun to recognize his little glances, the crease that appears between his eyebrows when he is pondering something, the tight curve of his arse, the tented stretch between his legs. Hell, if that was permanent resting position, then how would it look when he was aroused, huh? I gulp, smash my knees together. Don't go there. Not now. I hum to myself under my breath.

An old trick, to try and keep my mind occupied and out of the gutter... More precisely, out of Sinclair Sterling's pants, which is where it would happily dwell given half a choice. The screen on my phone shows 8:35 am.

Oh, hell. I pull off the stilettos, shove them in my bag and put on my chucks. No way am I running to the tube in those things. I grab my phone and bag, race down the steps, and out of the door.

I race up the quiet street, my skirt hampering my progress. Bet he planned all of this, to test my resolve. What had he said? He wants to break me down mentally and emotionally, huh? Well, we'll see Mr. Sterling.

Once I'm in the elevator, I change shoes. He doesn't need to know. The doors open on the floor of the 7A offices.

I walk down the corridor, to the conference room I'd been to the last time I'd been here.

I pull out my phone. I'm five minutes late.

At least he'd set the alarm for 8.15 am... which had given me enough time to make it here despite the rush hour jam on the tube.

Speaking of, why had he thrown me that little carrot?

The hairs on the back of my neck rise.

I shove open the double doors, step inside, come to a pause.

At the head of the table is Sinclair, "You're late." He glares at me.

"As you planned." I step inside; the door snicks shut behind me.

"Explain?"

"This entire sabotage operation of yours is not going to work."

"Oh?"

My knees wobble. I grip my tote bag, and lurch forward.

"Ms. West?"

I stutter. "Wh... what?"

"Lock the door, will you?"

Summer

His voice slinks down my back. Every hair on the nape of my neck rises.

I pivot, shove open the door and place one foot over the threshold.

"With you on the inside, Ms. West."

My mouth goes dry. I pause mid-step. I should get the hell away. Run out of here, take the steps, never look back—

"Don't think about it."

I angle my body forward.

"You leave now, and the deal's off. I'll ensure the doctor never sees your sister again, that she is back in your little hovel of an apartment. Oh, wait, that's not possible because your landlord has already rented it out so—"

I whip around. "How dare you bring my sister into this."

He raises his shoulders and lets them drop, "Because I—"

"—can?" I toss my head, "Tell me something new."

"This entire exchange is getting tedious." He pulls out his sleek phone—latest model, of course, privileged schmuck—presses a number, then holds it to his ear, "Ah, Saint, that girl I told you about yesterday... Would you cancel her next appointment with Doc because—"

"Stop." I fold my arms in front of me.

"Yeah, the deal is off." He says into the mouthpiece.

"Please, I'll do anything you want." Damn him, I am groveling now, but I can't let Karma end up on the streets, I can't.

"Definitely over, you can take her back and—"

I stalk up to him, grab the phone from his hand and raise it above my head.

He tilts his head, holds out his palm. I stare at the phone.

"You'll regret it." There's an edge to his tone that assures me he means the threat.

I stare at the screen. There's no evidence of a call in progress. Bastard. I snap my head up.

"You pretended to get on a call. Why would you do that?"

His features resolve into a mask.

"You know what your problem is?"

He pretends to yawn.

"You think you are the sole adult when you walk into a room, and that you are superior to everyone else."

"That's because, I am." He props a hand on his hip.

"Newsflash, asshole, your confidence is going to be your downfall."

"Oh?" He pulls back his lips and his eyes glitter. He doesn't seem angry. Far from it. He's excited. Intrigued even? He leans forward on the balls of his feet, "And of course, you are the one who's going to bring down the king?"

"You are the leader of this company because your team is too scared of you. They need you to pay their bills, so what do they care? They'll never question you, they'll dance to your tune—"

"But you won't?" He flicks off an imaginary piece of lint from his shoulder.

"No." I take a step forward until we are almost toe to toe.

The heat of his big body pounds into me, weighs me down. The dark edge of anger vibrates off of him, forming a tension-filled bubble that encloses us, not that I care.

I've come this far, haven't I?

May as well get it all off of my chest, huh?

"Those people out there?" I stab a thumb in the direction of the door, "They have no idea what darkness lurks under that polished demeanor. That at heart you are insecure about your wealth, your position. You think you could lose it all in a flash, so you hold onto it with your greedy hands."

His left eyelid twitches. He clenches his jaw so hard, I can literally hear him gnash his teeth together. Oh, good. I hope some of those pearly whites crack on the edges.

"Go on." His voice is so soft, so low; yet the threat in his tone, sinks into my blood, rolls down my stomach to pool between my thighs. I gulp. Resist the urge to curl my fingers into fists, to blink and look away. Pivot, run away, now, before everything goes beyond the point of no return. Ha, likely story. I passed that point a while ago. No turning back now.

I square my shoulders, hold that burning indigo gaze.

"You'll use your power to get anything, to solidify your fake space in the world. Perhaps launder the profits from your business into some bullshit non-profit, so you can build up a fake reputation. Because that's what you are—a fake. Someone who has no idea what it is to do real good, to use your money to actually make a difference. You have no idea what it means to have no money, to live in fear of where your next meal is coming from, stressing about the roof over your head, about the health of your loved ones.

"When you are convinced that you are a failure because all of your dreams have gone up in smoke and every passing day brings you closer to your grave as you fight to hold onto the present and try to make a living of your wretched life because time is running out. It's running out right in front of you and all you see is yourself, in the mirror... a failure."

My chest heaves. Adrenaline laces my blood and I feel tears threatening to spill over. When had I gone from talking about his faults to laying bare my soul? Every single thing I said about him is true... and about me, too. This has become a strange war of sorts, in which there will be no winner. Correction. The person who'll lose everything is me.

He has his money, his position. And his reputation...? He can always rebuild it. While me? I set myself back by zillions of years. I am going to lose everything that matters to me, be left with nothing, not even tattered dreams to hold onto. I called him a fake, when really, the pretender in the room is me. My shoulders slump. A dark feeling of despondency courses through my veins. Every millimeter of my body suffuses with so much cringeworthy shame that I am sure he can spot exactly how much I already regret this outburst. Some fighter I am.

I pivot, drag myself toward the door.

"Oh, Bird?"

"What?" I don't turn. I don't want to see his face, take in the smug triumph that, no doubt, crowns the alphahole's features. Someone, kill me now. Oh, wait, never mind. I am doing a really good job of burying myself alive all by myself.

"My phone."

"Eh?" I glance sideways at the sleek device I clutch in my fingers. Damn it, could have at least done my nails, huh? Maybe not a salon manicure, but I could have allowed Karma to buff them up as she'd often offered to do. Stupid, stupid thought.

I turn once more, shuffle toward him.

Each step brings me closer to his heat; that edgy masculine scent of his deepens. The dominance of his presence creates an invisible circumference in the vicinity. If I step into his field of influence I am gone, caged, trapped forever in the layers of huskiness that would subsume me, draw me in and consume me until I forget about myself, about everything that was of significance to me... Like the world, which has brought me only disappointment so far.

I pause a few steps away from him and hold out the phone.

A beat. Another.

There's no movement from him. I peer up at him and gasp. Those eyes... The darkness of his irises seems to have gone impossibly deeper. His features are so hard that they could have been carved out of some yet to be invented alloy—like "Spider Steel."

What are you blabbing about? Now is not the time to show your preoccupation with useless pieces of trivia.

"Excuse me?" He glares at me.

"Uh... It's the strongest bio-material—stronger than steel and its biodegradable."

"So?"

"Your face could be carved from it, it's so..."

"Breathtaking?"

He says it with a straight face. He actually believes in his own invincibility.

"Ugly." I tilt my chin up, wave his phone in front of him, "Like your stupid phone, which, since you don't seem to want it, I am going to—"

He clicks his tongue. "Temper, Bird. And after that beautiful dialogue that you spewed, too?"

"Guess what, asshole?"

"I'm waiting." He holds out his hand, palm face up.

"Too late." I pitch the phone over his shoulder.

Sin

She pivots and runs for the exit.

It's sheer luck, pure instinct, that I flick up my arm and snatch the phone from out of the air.

"Why, you little hellion!"

I lunge forward and grab her around the waist with my free arm. She yells and strains against my hold. I haul her back against me, her back flattened to my stomach, the curve of that sweet arse pressed up against my groin. Of course, I am instantly hard. The column of steel between my legs tents my pants and stabs into the valley between her butt cheeks. She shudders, then her shoulders stiffen. Every part of her goes rigid.

"Let me go." She huffs.

"After that stunt?" I dip my head until my lips graze her ears. She winces. Her scent deepens in the air. Oh, yeah, the little tease is as turned on as I am. "Which, by the way, failed."

"Huh?"

I thrust the phone in front of her face.

"Damn it." Her body slumps, "Can't do one thing properly, huh?"

Her self-loathing is evident in her tone. Something hot stabs at my chest. Why should it bother me that all the confidence seems to have drained out of her? This is what I wanted right? Her at my mercy? And after that spectacular tantrum that she pulled, which had lodged somewhere deep inside of me. Nothing she'd said about me was accurate. Of course, not.

I am not insecure, not the one who is holding onto my position in the world as if it is all that matters. Which it does, of course. Not that I am admitting to that.

Everything I've done so far was to a plan. It is a means to an end. As is she. So why am I hesitating now that I have her where I want her? Powerless. Because I prefer her fighting me, challenging me, standing up to me... So much more entertaining than the rest of my employees, who scuttle away at the mere sight of me. Maybe I'm bored, and wanted someone other than the rest of the Seven to banter with me, huh? And I admit it, she is far easier on the eye than any of them, of course.

"You going to apologize, Bird?"

She strains against me again and I tighten my hold on her.

"You going to admit you were wrong in what you said earlier?"

Her spine stiffens, "No."

My left eyelid twitches. "What did you say?"

"I didn't do anything wrong... If anything, I was spot on in my opinion of you. It's the one thing I am good at, sizing up a person."

"Oh?" I grind my groin against her arse. My cock thickens. "And what do you say about the size of that?"

Her entire body jerks, "I could sue you for sexual harassment."

"Don't be crude."

"I'm being crude?" She makes a gurgling sound.

"And untruthful."

"Seriously, you need to get your head examined."

"I'd rather examine... you."

"Aargh." She pulls up her bent arm and I sidestep. Good thing I am so agile, huh? Her elbow grazes the side of my abs and she huffs.

"Stay still or you'll hurt yourself."

"Stop telling me what to do."

"I haven't begun."

She makes a hissing sound.

How cute. I bite the inside of my cheek. "You're beginning to sound like a scratchy vinyl."

"And you're seriously pissing me off." She snaps her head back and connects with my chest. The vibrations ricochet down to the inevitable destination... my groin. My shaft engorges further. Fuck.

I widen my stance. She links her fingers, snaps back her arms and buries her elbows in my solar plexus.

Stars flash behind my eyes. My vision narrows.

"That's enough."

I push her against the conference table, and she squeaks.

I bend her over, so her cheek is flat on the surface. Her arse sticks out in the air, and slots in very nicely against my front, thank you very much. I drop the phone face up on the table, then flex my fingers. "If you continue this way, it's going to make things worse."

"Buzz off." She kicks out, catches me in the shin.

My thighs flex, my balls throb in reaction.

"I can't let that go unpunished." I step back, putting a smidgen of space between us, then spank her arse, once.

Her entire body jerks, "Jesus," she yells.

"You called, Babe?"

"OMG, that was beyond corny. Did you read the book on Ten Ways to Seduce a woman? Newsflash asshole, this is not one of them, by the way."

"It's a million ways actually. I wrote it."

There's silence for another beat, then a chuckle wheezes out of her. Something lifts from my shoulders. Guilt at how I am behaving with her? How being with her pushes me to indulge myself; actions I always regret later, me second-guessing my own actions? What the hell is happening here?

"We're too bloody combustible together," I whisper my knuckles over her delectable jawline, "and therein lies the problem."

"Oh, no... no, no, no." She shakes her head, "Don't try to put this down to some weird chemistry that riles us both up, and that I hate you because secretly, I am attracted to you, because I am not. I am not."

"Let's find out, shall we?"

I grab that pencil skirt and yank it up and over her butt.

17

The cool air hits my exposed arse.

What does he see? My backside covered in slinky red panties. The underwear that he bought for me. I gulp. Is this why he laid out that silk and lace concoction of lingerie for me? And I hadn't been able to resist it, huh? Had he been planning this scene all along? I push up, try to turn, and he clicks his tongue. The blood pounds at my temples. How dare he treat me so? I use my elbows for leverage and twist my torso, or at least try to; he leans the weight of his arm around my waist, effectively pinning me down. "Hey what are you—?" He kicks my legs apart and I stutter.

He eases his fingers under the waistband of my panties. I gulp.

The heat of his body sears the back of my thighs. "So you were saying...?"

Was I? What had I been saying? What—

"What happened to all that sass, huh?"

Why is he still talking? Why can't he deliver whatever humiliation he had in mind, huh?

"Should I spank you again?"

Yes.

Yes.

I shake my head.

"You liked it that much, little Bird?"

I actually am growing attached to that name, not that I'll ever tell you that. If I did, I bet you'd insist on flinging it in my face all the time, and hey, didn't I shake my head earlier?

"That was a 'no,' Smirky Pants—"

He slaps my butt and I squeal.

Honestly, the slap wasn't all that hurtful. It's my ego that's taking a real kick to the rear right now... Rear... Haha, so not the time for word play.

He slaps my arse, harder this time; bastard probably read my mind. And his hand connects with my backside again. My entire body moves forward this time with the force of the hit. A moan bleeds from my lips. The hell? I didn't enjoy that. I didn't.

He brings his palm in contact with my arse again, and pain warms my blood. Moisture pools between my thighs.

"So, you were saying that you are not attracted to me?"

Crack. I yelp.

"You said I couldn't seduce you?"

"Hey that's not what I—"

Crack. My entire body jerks. My back tingles. My toes curl. I huff, squeeze my fingers together. I will not scream again. Will not.

"You said there's nothing between us—"

"You're twisting my words, jerkass."

He flips me around, "It's your knickers which are all twisted out of shape, Sweetheart."

He cups the space between my legs, and I stare up at him, my breath coming in pants. My back throbs, my scalp seems to be on fire.

He squeezes my fabric-covered pussy, and the dampness between my legs intensifies. Heat sears my cheeks.

"You're fucking soaked."

Thanks for stating the obvious.

He massages my core, and a groan trembles up my throat. He slips his fingers under the seam of my panties, and I pant. Goosebumps flare on my skin. Please. Please do it. Please slide your fingers into my underwear, thrust your massive fleshy fingers into my melting, aching pussy. Hell, what does one have to do to get a finger fuck, huh?

"Say it."

I frown.

"You know you want it."

"No."

He grinds the heel of his palm into my core, and the heaviness of his palm combined with the friction of the fabric against my clit... Gah! A trembling sensation sweeps up from the soles of my feet. No, no, no. I can't come. Not like this. I bite down on my lower lip and his nostrils flare. He lowers his head, until our eyelashes tangle.

"Ever climaxed in a boardroom before, Darlin'?"

I scowl at him and his mouth quirks.

"That's what I thought." He raises his hand and I blink. What the—? He brings down his palm on my already sensitized pussy.

A scream boils up.

My entire body tenses, my spine curves, the orgasm swoops up to envelop my thighs, my waist, it bursts up my spine and crashes behind my eyes. Sparks of red and black squeeze my vision. Moisture gushes out from between my thighs. My shoulders tremble, my breasts hurt, the hollowness in my womb intensifies.

I crack my eyelids to find him perusing my features. "You're beautiful when you orgasm, little Bird." Something burns deep in those eyes, "You're unique, you know that?"

Heat flushes my cheeks. "Did you just say what I think you did?"

All emotions fade from his face and his features shutter. Oh, so it's like that, huh? So, we are going to ignore that the alphahole showed me the first crack in his countenance?

He scrunches his forehead and a line appears between his beautifully arched eyebrows. "You enjoy trivia, Pink?"

Here we go again. I am beginning to get familiar with his manipulative nature. And PS, I like this nickname less. I jerk my chin.

"How many orgasms do you think a woman is capable of in the space of five minutes?"

Don't think that's a rhetorical question. Also, I have a feeling I am going to find that out. Btw, if he thinks I am going to answer that question, he has another trick coming.

"I hope you are keeping count, hmm?"

His lips curl at the corners; intent glitters in his eyes.

Wait. What? Don't, don't.

He slides his finger inside my panties and eases it into my melting pussy. "Oh!" I stutter. My hips tremble.

"Did that turn you on, little Bird?" He adds a second finger, a third. I gasp. Pinpricks of pleasure radiate out from my core. He thrusts all three fingers deeper, then curves them. My breath catches; my thighs spasm. My eyes roll back in my head. OMG. What's he doing to me? A vibrating sensation buzzes up my spine and down again. My entire body seems to be humming with an out-of-body sensation. The vibrations intensify. I sense him lean toward me.

He's suspended above me for a second, enough for me to pick up the shift in the air. He pulls his fingers out of me, and I crack my eyes open to find him reaching for his phone which is buzzing in my line of sight. He picks up his phone, plonks it between his ear and his shoulder, "Hello?"

What the hell? Did he just answer his phone, and in the middle of getting me off? Anger explodes low in my belly. I tilt my chin, raise my shoulders off the table and he jams his fingers back inside of my thrumming core. Too much. Too full. I hit the table with a thump. His gaze locks with mine. Indigo eyes intensify to a color that is almost jet black. Dark, brooding, edgy like the rest of him. His features tighten with almost painful intensity; his jaw tics.

"Tell me." He speaks into the phone.

Is he actually holding a conversation while being knuckle deep in me?

I mean... honestly... this is... not happening. No way. Adrenaline laces my blood.

I rear up from the table, and he hooks his fingers inside of me again. Sensations shudder up my spine, my toes curl, and my fingers tingle. My scalp feels as if it's on fire. Oh, no, no.

I am not coming again for this jackass, not when he has no respect—like negative two hundred and fifty regard or feelings of any kind for me—and not when he's holding a conversation with someone else on the phone. The hair on my forearms prickles; my nipples pebble. No way, and I'm turned on? My sex clenches. Jesus, I can't be turned on. My bullshit barometer didn't spontaneously combust just now, did it?

He yanks out his fingers, leans in close enough for his breath to raise the hair on my forehead.

"Those projections are way off. No way am I paying 50% more for a brand that is clearly on the decline."

The voice on the phone squawks back something that I can't discern.

And he's mouthing off figures while jerking me off? Color flushes his cheeks; his nostrils flares. The bastard's enjoying himself immensely. It has to be the ultimate show of superiority, a fuck you to the world, that he can do whatever the hell he wants and will never be punished. I clench my fingers into fists. I will be his downfall. I swear it upon all that I hold dear, I will have my revenge for this utter compliance that he's wrought from me today—he thrusts his fingers inside of me again and the trembling zooms up my thighs—right after this unholyest of all orgasms that threatens to overwhelm me. A moan spills from my lips.

The voice on the other side of the phone falls silent. Then, "Sinclair, are you with someone?"

"Of course not, there's no one in the room with me."

No one?

Hey, I am more than the sum of all the people you've ever met, asshole. I open my mouth to tell him.

His gaze narrows, his chest heaves, he drops his head and closes his mouth over mine.

The taste of her seeps into my mouth.

Honey and cherries laced with something so intangible, so delicate, my head spins. I tilt my lips and her entire body goes rigid. I lick her mouth. Ripples of sensation tremble up her chest and her breasts heave. I nibble on her lower lip and her mouth opens. I ease my tongue in, dance it over hers. The taste of her intensifies.

Not innocent, not at all.

Something husky, sensuous, layers so complex that it would take me months, years to decipher her, to solve the puzzle that is her. My groin throbs; my balls harden. I swirl my thumb around her clit and a whine trembles up her throat. I absorb it.

I swipe my tongue past her sharp little teeth and goosebumps flare on my skin. A low growl rumbles up my chest, I lean forward, so my chest brushes the full ripeness of her breasts.

"—so you see we have to see this deal through."

I deepen the kiss, and the trembling of her body intensifies. Her spine curves. Her breasts thrust upwards. I grind the heel of my palm into the swollen bud of her clit, and she explodes.

Her body jerks, her head falls back, mewls of pleasure bleed from her mouth into mine. I swallow it all. Swallow down every last drop of her pleasure. My chest hurts. My dick lengthens. No way am I going to come in my pants. Her body goes limp under me.

"Sin, you there?"

I tear my mouth from hers. "I am not budging. They can accept my offer or they can go to hell."

There's silence at the other end. Then, "got it."

I toss the phone aside, making sure to disconnect the call.

Her eyelids flutter and a husky moan spills from her lips. My balls harden and my legs tremble. And t-h-a-t's my cue. I should step back from her. Should pay every last penny I owe her and cut her loose. And put aside everything that I've fought for my entire life?

She opens her eyes, and those beautiful green irises stare up at me, pupils blown from the orgasm I wrenched from her. Her eyelids are hooded, yet deep inside, hurt flickers. I misused my position. Hell, I've broken every sodding rule in the book, from the first time I had encountered her. So what, huh?

What's another falsehood, in my every growing list of guilty pleasures? At the top of which is her.

I pull my fingers from inside of her and we both shudder. I raise my hand to her mouth and ease my fingers in between her lips. She curls her tongue and sucks on my digits.

I feel the suction all the way to the tip of my dick. My balls grow harder, if that were possible. Got to get away from her. Now.

I drag my fingers from her mouth, then bring them to mine and lick her combined juices. Her pupils dilate further, the scent of her arousal... and mine, intensifies. Oh no, not going to stay for the rest of this clusterfuck that my life is fast descending into. I draw back and her gaze widens. Her lips stutter. And I can't stop myself. I can't.

I drop my head and kiss her. So damn sweet. So irresistible. I nibble my way up her jawline to her temple. Press my lips to the soft skin there. "You okay?"

Silence. A beat. Another. Then she nods.

"Good."

I lean back, hold out a hand. She scowls up at me, glances from my face to my palm, then grips my fingers. I pull her up to a sitting position, then to her feet. She stumbles and I lean into her, then pull back, steady her with my grip on her shoulder. When she stays standing for another second, I release her. Then smooth her skirt down her hips. My fingertips brush her calves and she shudders. I step back, putting distance between us.

"You never did get to share your plans."

She stares at me, a dazed look in her eyes. "Plans?" she mutters.

"My office, ten minutes." I pivot, stride past the table, then pause. "You'll be safe there." Why did I have to give her that? It's unlike me to concede an inch, let alone give someone another chance. It has to be because she is crucial to the success of my plan, and I had almost screwed it all up. Almost. Well... I raise my shoulders and let them fall. Too bad. Time to move on. If there is one thing I am good at, it is learning from my mistakes, and this little bird here is the biggest of them all.

"You expect me to believe that?" Her voice is unwavering. Good. A flush of pride fills my chest. She is stronger than she realizes.

I glare at her over my shoulder, "Your belief, or lack of, is immaterial."

She draws herself up to her full height, which still means she has to tilt her head back to meet my gaze. Damn, if the little spitfire isn't fearless. Or naive. Or possibly, both.

"I have many faults, lying isn't one of them."

And isn't that the biggest whopper of them all?

She wraps her arms around her waist. "As if I have a choice..." she mutters.

"You don't."

"No need to rub it in." She tosses her head, "Where's your office?"

"One floor down, the office at the very end. You can't miss it."

"Does it have whips and chains and little baby goats waiting to be sacrificed to the devil?"

I can't stop my lips from curling, "Only if you want it." I turn, stride to the door, then stop, "Oh, and Bird?"

"What?"

"Don't be late."

Summer

I hold my wrists under the running water from the tap. Goosebumps pop on my forearms. Get a hold of yourself; it's okay.

It will be okay.

I came all over my new work client's fingers while he negotiated some kind of deal on the phone. My thighs clench. I stare at myself in the mirror. What the hell is wrong with me?

I seriously don't think that what he did to me is hot, right?

The complete control of his actions as he'd finger fucked me to not one, but two orgasms, right there on the conference table, was... hedonistic. It was a hundred ways screwed up. These things don't happen in real life. The audacity of the man. He seriously thought that he could get away with it, too. Has he tried this with anyone else previously? I shut off the tap, and my fingers clutch at the cold metal.

Of course, he must have.

Had he done it in that same conference room? The one where there are no cameras so there can be no incriminating evidence of his trysts. I tip up my chin. I am not going to be yet another in a long list of fuck buddies that he's gathered along the way. Someone he thinks his power and money can buy off. Isn't that what brought me here in the first place?

The fact that he holds all of the cards. He has the money I need so desperately. Hell, I could sell myself and not come up with the kind of cash he is offering, at least not as quickly as I need it. It is my life, my sister's life, my fledgling company.

How far would I go to secure my future? Would I sell my body to the fucked-up machinations of one man? A power drunk, obnoxious jerkface. Too bad he has a countenance that could floor a woman at twenty paces. And that body? I gulp. He could have stepped off the pages of a fashion magazine. Not to mention a razor-sharp mind, with the ability to stay fully in the present and navigate his way through a complex deal, while the rest of him is focused elsewhere. The man had literally split his attention with cold calculation to ensure all of the tasks at hand were fulfilled to his satisfaction.

And mine.

Moisture laces my already damp panties. I shift my weight from foot to foot. Damn it, I didn't have a choice. I shove my underwear down my legs, and stuff it into my bag.

The door opens and an older woman walks in. She's dressed in a fitted skirt, obligatory jacket, and stilettos. She pauses at the wash basin next to mine, and pats her already sleek bob. Not a hair out of place. I stare at my own flushed appearance, the strands of pink hair stuck to my forehead. Grabbing a paper towel, I dab at the shiny skin. Her gaze meets mine in the mirror.

"You have beautiful skin."

I bite the inside of my cheek. "Thank you."

"You're new, huh?"

"No prizes for guessing?" My voice comes out sharper than I intended.

"Don't let him get to you."

"Who?"

"Sinclair." She flips out her compact and dabs at her nose, "His bark is worse than his bite."

"Oh?"

"It's the difficult upbringing he had."

I tilt my head, "Difficult?"

"The kind of horrific things he and the rest of the Seven faced as children would have forced many others to have committed suicide or turned to the wrong side of the tracks... which," she snaps her compact shut, "I admit they dabble in the gray area, but they have each other's backs. And true loyalty among men... Well, there's something that marks out the character of a man, huh?"

The Seven? Who are the Seven? Is that what 7A is all about? How do I find out about them? I wad the tissue into a ball and drop it into the slit provided. "There's no honor among thieves. Doesn't mean their actions can be condoned."

"What if you weren't seeing the whole picture and your point of view was biasing you?"

I turn to her, "What are you not telling me?"

Her features soften. "That's for you to find out. You are a resourceful woman. Surely you can solve the rest of this puzzle on your own?"

She reaches out a hand and pats my shoulder. "Come dear, he hates to be kept waiting."

She turns and heads to the doorway.

"Wait."

She pauses, angles her body.

"Who are you?"

"I work with the Seven; I've been with them since the beginning."

"The beginning..."

"When they formed their first company."

Ah. I had searched for Mr. Alphahole's background, of course, but hadn't found much. He'd kept his tracks covered, until he'd come out of nowhere, or so it seemed, and bought the flailing Tenor Investments. He'd rebranded it as 7A Investments. He'd kept himself out of the limelight since. Bet he used his power/money to buy his privacy. And then there's FOK Media. The company I am working for, which just launched. That had been the latest news I had found, when I'd searched the internet last night before falling asleep. Hmm. I walk toward the woman, "That's all you are going to say?"

"For now." She dips into her pocket and pulls out a card, "Come find me when you get a chance."

I take the card. Meredith Vincent.

"You're the one who emailed me?"

She nods.

There is no designation, no phone number or email address. "And you're so high up in the company you don't need any introduction?"

She giggles, and the sound is so girlish, I can't stop my lips from quirking.

"Don't be silly." She searches my face, "My job is highly confidential. I work with the Seven, and I don't need to introduce myself to them, do I?"

Right. That doesn't quite make sense, but I'll take any support I can get in this place.

"So, you'll help me?"

She pushes open the door, "I have a feeling we are going to help each other."

20

Sin

She is exactly fifteen seconds late. I pace the floor in front of my desk. Glance at the watch on my wrist.

Twenty seconds now.

How dare she keep me waiting? I drag my fingers through my hair. And she threw my entire morning off course. I'd missed the second meeting of the day, because I'd been sidetracked. At 9 am in the morning, which was arguably the time of day I was at my sharpest, I hadn't been able to function because I had taken one look at her and all thoughts had drained from my head... leaving me with a part of me that throbbed and ached, and was very alive.

My dick twitches again. My fingertips tingle. I bring my digits to my face and sniff. The scent of her arousal clouds my senses. My cock lengthens immediately. Damn it, why didn't I wash her off of my skin?

I'd wanted to hold onto some evidence of how I had made her writhe and throb under me, had her begging for more, if that call hadn't interrupted me—fucking Saint.

Remind me to take him on the next time we meet— Yeah, if he hadn't phoned with some negotiation detail or the other... We won, by the way, and will be expanding our presence in South East Asia. Another market, another day.

World domination is what I live for, right? We had been negotiating this acquisition for the last six months, and things had gone our way. Another billion in the bank by the end of this financial quarter; we'll be richer. Have resources to go after the bastard who caused us so much grief. And I have the biggest pawn in this move right where I want. In my grasp. At my mercy. I roll my shoulders. So why am I not satisfied? I rub the faint sensations that stab at my chest.

There is nothing personal about what I am doing. She is a means to an end. It isn't her fault that she is the personification of my worst nightmares. I just need to use her to break my enemy. So why am I pacing back and forth, wearing a line in the wooden flooring? Everything in the space is muted—wooden paneling, plush leather sofas, floor to ceiling books.

This is one corner of my domain which I haven't hesitated to furnish to my taste, given the amount of time I spend in it. The armchair is made to order, and opposite it, a wide settee, big enough to double up as a bed on the occasions I've had to sleep here.

The dark leather would highlight her creamy skin beautifully; set off the freckles on her arms, lend a sheen to those glossy pink curls on her head... unlike her pussy where she is as bare as the day she was born.

My dick lengthens, stretching the crotch of my pants. Fuck the woman for worming her way into my thoughts. I pivot toward the door, walk toward it, just as there's a knock.

I pause, roll my shoulders. "Come in."

Silence stretches for a beat, another.

So, she is gathering herself too, huh? Game on, little Bird. I pivot toward the table... Nah, best to put a barrier between us. I round the expanse of the desk and drop into my chair.

She steps through, pauses inside the doorway.

I lower my eyes to the chair opposite, then back to her face.

Her lips tighten. Fire burns in those eyes. My dick instantly stretches my pants. Damn, the spirit of this girl. She is a fighter through and through. Good. She'll need every bit of that strength to hold up to what I have in store for her.

She stomps to the desk, plops her bag on the floor, then drops into the chair.

"Ms. West."

"Mr. Sterling." She pulls out a brick-like device from her bag and places it on the desk.

"What the fuck is that?"

She flips open the cover, presses down on a button. "It's a time machine." There's a grinding noise as the machine boots up. "What do you think?" She frowns down at the screen.

"It certainly seems to be something that's teleported forward from the eighteen-hundreds."

There's a whirring sound and she frowns.

"No, strike that." I rub my chin. "It's from way earlier."

"Ha, ha," she deadpans.

The laptop makes crackling noises; she rolls her shoulders, "Come on, come on," she mutters under her breath. There's a wheezing sound and she stiffens her spine. "Not now." She slaps down the cover, turns the brick over and proceeds to punch it.

"What are you doing?" A headache begins to pound at my temples.

This entire scenario isn't going as I'd planned. I am so close to getting my revenge... Not just mine, but a comeuppance for all the Seven, and this tiny thing is threatening to destroy every inch of my carefully orchestrated scenario.

I lean forward and grab her wrist; she freezes. Her shoulders go so rigid, I am sure she's having a seizure. "Relax." I place my fingers on the pulse that flutters against her skin.

She tugs at her hand and I release her. What is this weird compulsion to touch her, huh?

"You don't need that... that device for our discussion."

"But," she shuffles in her seat, "I had a presentation, all prepared for the social media plan."

"Bet you have all the highlights up here." I tap my temple, "Give me the key points."

"I don't do impromptu." She wrings her fingers together. "Mr. Sterling, I put a lot of thought into that deck."

"So you must be bloody familiar with the gist of it. Summarize it for me."

Her chin wobbles and a bead of sweat slides down her cheek, "I... my mind is a blank."

Stage fright? More likely, she's still riled up about what happened in the boardroom. I lean back in my very comfortable leather chair, place my elbows on the armrests.

"You are going to learn a few things in the time you are with me, Pink."

"You mean like how to misuse your power." She starts ticking items off on her fingers, "How to use your money to buy the silence of your team, manipulate people's lives as if they were mere playthings..." She draws in a breath.

"Is that how you speak to the man who holds your future in his hands?"

She blinks, looks down. "I'm sorry... I am not always this impolite; it's just, you can be annoying."

"Oh?" I tilt my head.

"I am also not used to losing." She juts out her chin.

I peruse her features, "Neither am I."

I hold her gaze for a beat, then steeple my fingers together. "Better?"

Yeah, so that little diversion had been to take her mind off of the task at hand; one way to get past nervousness. A little trick I've learned along the way, and apparently, it worked for her.

Her forehead furrows. She peruses my features, then nods. "As we've already agreed, I'll be shadowing you—"

"Living in my house"

"—for six days more."

"Six days and three hours"

"Right." She opens her mouth as if to tell me off, then squeezes her lips together.

I frown. Is she going to behave herself? I hope not. It was more interesting when she was fighting me, hmm?

She sits up straight, "The original strategy had been to humanize the face of FOK Media, in order to generate positive PR in the hope that it would rub off on the faces of the people involved i.e., the same people who are the promoters of the 7A company."

"Agencies are always good at this, huh?"

"Huh?"

"Summarizing the brief I give them and throwing my words back at me."

She balls her fingers into fists.

I raise an eyebrow.

She stuffs her hands in her lap, then seems to compose herself.

"As I was saying, that was the purpose behind FOK Media, except I don't think your idea will work."

Summer

Shut up, shut up. What are you saying? Couldn't you have found a way to share your opinions in a diplomatic fashion? This is when he loses his shit, and fixes his cold glare on me, and probably buzzes for security to throw me out. My stomach churns. I swallow down the bile that taints my throat.

All expression leaches from his face, leaving behind a cold hard mask. It's as if every single emotion inside of him has been flash-frozen. His jaw tics. Ugh, that's not good, right?

A vein throbs at his temple. I gulp. Here it comes. I grab the arms of my chair, brace myself.

A chuckle vibrates up that massive chest.

I freeze. No, no, he's having a complete breakdown. Wow. Did I cause that?

His eyes gleam. "Go on."

"Eh?"

"You've certainly gotten my attention, little Bird, don't waste it."

I draw in a deep breath. "There's only so far that you can pull the wool over people's eyes." Unlike those in your inner circle, the general populace cannot be bought. "Why do you want them to believe that you want to right your wrongs?"

"I don't."

"Right. So why are you embarking on this entire plan? Why FOK Media?"

He taps his forefingers together.

My hold on the chair tightens, "I signed the non-disclosure agreement, so whatever you say stays within these walls."

His eyebrows knit. "Very well. As you're already alluding to it, I estimate that you have guessed that FOK Media is a cover. We need to buy goodwill with the public. We also need a legitimate business that is a tax write off."

"Ergo, a nonprofit."

"Besides, the money channeled through the entity will be used for doing good."

"Finding the best talent in the world, from different fields, sponsoring them, providing seed investment in return for a percentage of their lifelong profits."

He drums his fingers together, "Get to the point."

"I suggest that you a) change the name to reflect your intention; b) that instead of a percentage of profits, you give the chosen talent a portion of the share capital, along with the immediate funding. That way you bind them to your company, while helping them grow their own nest eggs for the future. Everyone wins. And c).."

He doesn't move a muscle. Well, except for the bulging vein at his temple, he may as well be carved out of rock.

"You Seven not be involved at all with the company."

"Oh?"

I nod.

"Who do you recommend should lead this initiative?"

My guts churn; my heart beats so hard I am sure it's going to jump out of my ribcage.

"You've come this far, Pink, don't stop now."

"Me."

"Eh?" He blinks. Yeah, the man actually seems surprised. I rendered the notorious gazzillionaire alphahole silent. Fist pump.

Adrenaline laces my blood. I tip my chin up, "Me. I suggest that I lead the initiative."

Color sears his cheeks. Okay, strike that. Maybe it is too early to celebrate. His biceps bulge; the tendons of his neck flex as he swallows. Guess he didn't like what I said, huh? I don't blame him. If I were in his shoes—though his pants are what I'd rather be in, actually— Shut up, what are you thinking? Get the hell out, while he's too shocked to react.

"Umm. I'll be going then." I slip out of my chair, grab my bag, slink toward the door.

"Ms. West."

I keep going.

"I didn't dismiss you yet."

The look on your face said it all, asshole. If you think I am going to wait for you to dole out any other punishment—my stomach flip flops—nervousness that's all it is. The faster I get out of here, the better. I reach the door and squeeze the handle.

"Okay."

I freeze. He didn't say that. No way. Nope. Nah. I open the door a crack.

"If you leave now—"

"Yes, I am aware." I raise a finger above my shoulder "You'll get my sister's appointment with the doctor cancelled. And you won't give me the account to FOK—which, by the way, the name sucks— I mean it's intriguing, but not exactly what you'd call a public relations success, considering all the connotations that go with it—"

A feminine groan fills the air.

I stiffen.

The sound of skin hitting flesh, a low moan bleeds into the space between us. All the hair on the nape of my neck rises. Bloody fish in boots, it couldn't be.

I spin around. His burning indigo gaze clashes with mine. I flinch. The force of his dominance seems to swell, until the air is thick with unspoken words... desires... lust. Anger coats my blood. At him. At myself. For hating him. And wanting him. Dense hatred for everything he stands for; the absolute power that he wields crashes home. "You didn't."

He doesn't move a muscle.

Another harsh gasp pulses from the phone on the table and the blood thuds at my temples. I race to the table. He doesn't react. I snatch up the phone. Don't look at the screen. Don't. My gaze drops to the expanse.

My face is front and center. Head thrown back; eyes closed. Color flushed cheeks, hair clings to my forehead. It's the visage of a woman in the throes of absolute ecstasy. Bile rises up my throat. The camera angle had caught me in all my pre-climactic glory; and him? There's only the hard muscle of his bicep from the arm he'd thrown around me—it could have been anyone. Of course, he'd ensured that his reputation wouldn't be touched by this.

The on-screen me grips the muscle of his forearm, arches her neck, her mouth rounded in an O. It's filthy, dirty... and completely arousing. My stomach clenches. I can't tear my eyes off of the screen.

An arm fills my line of vision. He takes the phone from me, shuts off the video.

Silence descends on the space.

He stands not a few inches away from me. The heat from his body envelops me. I shiver. My palms and feet are so cold. "I thought you said there were no cameras—"

"I lied."

Of course. "Hangonabloodysecond," I force the words out through lips gone numb. "You answered your phone, so you couldn't have been recording on it..."

He curls an eyebrow. I stiffen. "So there was another camera in the room...?"

He circles the air with his finger.

"More than one camera?"

He tilts his head. My knees buckle, I dig my heels in for purchase.

Honor among thieves? Meredith has no idea she is working with the devil in disguise. As am I.

The world spins, my knees seem to buckle, and darkness closes in.

When I open my eyes, all I see is blue and turquoise and shades of cerulean. Eyes, his eyes. They aren't cold and empty. There is an ocean of hidden emotions, tucked away deep inside. So deep, so intense. Angry waves crashing on a stony shore. Pulling at me, tugging on me. My skin feels too tight. My hands and legs tremble.

"Don't you dare faint again."

Fury vibrates off of him, and all of my nerve endings seem to flare at once. The world comes into focus again. I swallow, and my throat hurts.

"Drink this." He holds a glass to my lips.

No way! If he thinks I am going to accept a drop of water from him, he's

He glares at me; I purse my lips.

"Don't be stubborn." He growls.

I turn my face to the side. My heart begins to race and my vision wavers again.

"Fine."

I hear him step back, then hear the thunk of a glass hitting a surface.

"I didn't poison the water. Honestly." He shakes his head as if he can't believe I'd suspect him of such a thing.

My tongue feels swollen in my mouth. A bead of sweat slides down my back. There's silence a beat, then another.

"Please, Summer."

Goosebumps flare on my skin. Maybe it's the fact that he spoke my name, or he used the 'P' word. I chuckle to myself. Why do I care about that, huh? But I'm too thirsty; an itchiness crawls down my throat. I turn on my back, then sit up and swing my legs over. The world tilts then straightens. I reach for the water. My fingers are shaking. How strange. I mean, nothing much has happened, except... My entire world has come completely undone. All the moorings gone, everything I thought I was, had worked toward, all my hopes and dreams and ambitions. My company, my sister... Karma. Focus on Karma. I need to get through this for her. I drain the glass, place it on the table. Then wipe the back of my palm across my lips.

"Why?" I raise my head, take in those features that I've come to hate. "Why do it?"

"Because I need revenge against your father."

Sin

"My father?" She pales further. The pink strands of her hair seem too bright against her gaunt features. She's too damn skinny.

"When was the last time you ate?"

She blinks, presses her knuckles to her eyes, "Answer me first, why do you want revenge against a dead man?"

"Because—" I take a step forward, stop. I'd meant to tell her all of this, of course, just hadn't thought it would come so early in the game. Too bad. She'd thrown me a bouncer and I'd flung the ball right back at her.

I hadn't meant for it to lay her so low that she'd faint.

Bloody fucking hell. When she'd collapsed... my heart had stuttered. Everything inside of me had come to a halt. Only when I caught her before she hit the floor, did I realize that I had raced to her.

Ha! The cold-hearted gazillionaire who's swallowed companies for breakfast, laid low by the sight of a woman fainting. If the business media had seen me then, eh? Thank fuck I'd caught her before she'd hurt herself. If she had, I'd never have been able to forgive myself. I shake my head. The fuck am I thinking?

I square my shoulders, thrust out my chin.

"Because?" She lowers her hands. Her gaze is a little wild, her pupils dilated from the shock.

"Because he destroyed my life and those of my friends, and because..." Why do I care that I'd wanted to break the next piece of news to her gently?

Why does it matter that it would hurt her? This is what I wanted, right? To sway her to our side, no matter what it takes.

To lure her father into my trap. I need to see the bastard pay, and this is the most foolproof way, so damn the collateral damage, right?

I set my jaw.

"Because he's alive."

She blinks. "No."

"Yes."

"No, you don't. My father was killed in a plane crash. They never found his body...he—" Her chin wobbles, "He didn't die, did he?"

I shake my head.

"So... where... where is he?"

"In the States."

"How did you track him down?" She frowns, "Or for that matter, me and my sister?"

I click my tongue. "Do you really have to ask me that question?"

"How many people did you have to pay? How long did you search before you found us?" She squeezes her elbows into her sides.

"Does it matter?"

She draws in a breath. "Guess not." She wraps her arms around her waist, and I notice the goosebumps on her forearms.

"He never reached out to me in all these years." Her shoulders slump, "He let me and my sister think he was gone. He left us alone."

Emotions spike her features. Her hands clench at her sides. My heart lurches. I shouldn't have sprung this on her without warning. Eh? What am I thinking?

I ball my fists.

I did exactly the right thing. The faster she realizes the real reason for this charade, the better it will work.

She shuffles her feet, "So all this... this drama of meeting me in the pub, then calling me in to pitch for your company's account... It was all a farce?"

"Not completely. 7A and FOK Media need marketing help, though you wouldn't have been my first choice to take it on."

"I'm bloody good at my job." She growls.

"You lost your biggest client."

"Through no fault of mine. Hell, the last out-of-the-box marketing campaign I delivered, had their brand retention increasing by 75% year on year... If that isn't a good result, tell me what—" Her gaze narrows. "You?" she breathes.

Oh, this is getting interesting.

"You did it?"

"You have to be clearer than that." I tilt my head.

She stabs a finger in my direction, "You made sure that they dropped me."

"Maybe." I drum my fingers on my chest.

"You ensured I'd be so desperate that I'd jumped at the opportunity to pitch."

"I may have... ah, had a hand in them moving on, yes." I fold my fingers, glance at my fingernails. "But the events that followed?" I click my tongue. "It's entirely your fault."

"Mine?" Her eyebrows knit.

"If you had listened to me at the bar—"

"You were a complete jerkface." She juts out her chin. "What did you expect? That I'd throw myself at your feet and agree to do your bidding because you commanded me to?"

I tilt my head.

"Oh, for heaven's sake!" She makes that noise deep in her throat again, and fuck, if my dick doesn't twitch. I frown. Who is this woman who thinks she can hijack every single conversation we have?

"Time's running out." I pull down the cuff of my shirt sleeve. "Fall in line with my plan... or... Well, you don't have a choice, do you?"

Her lips tighten, "You are as callous as my parent who kept away all these years. One who clearly wants nothing to do with us... So why would he care what you do to me?"

"Oh, I think he'd care very much if he found his daughter was marrying one of the richest men this side of the planet."

She stares at me, then chuckles, then throws her head back and laughs. She leans into the settee, rocks from side to side. Tears run down her cheeks.

I stalk to the other side of the room, pour out a generous finger of whiskey, then stalk toward her. When I pause in front of her, she flinches, and my gut lurches.

Of course, she hates me as much as I had despised her—or rather the concept of her—all this time.

She had been merely a pawn in a much larger game and now... Now I can't give up. I am too close. So things haven't proceeded exactly how they should have, thanks to her. She's resourceful, I'll give her that. Nevertheless, nothing will come in the way of this last mile. Not after a decade of planning and plotting every last move. So close, I am so close.

I place the glass on the table, move away. "Drink it."

"I don't need it."

"You look like you are about to pop it, and believe me, while I don't care one way or the other, I need you to be alive for the time it takes to see this through."

She shoots me a stare. Her green eyes burn into me, color flushes her cheeks, and her breasts heave. Damn, she is magnificent. My fingers tingle. My groin hardens. Oh, that fire, that fury inside of her. It had all been locked away, behind that scatterbrained façade. She is a little volcano, waiting to erupt, and guess who will be at the end, receiving all of that goodness? Not me. Nope. N-a-h. Don't fall for her. Don't try to rescue her. Just because she didn't turn out to be exactly what you'd thought she would be.

"Drink it... or not. Your call."

I saunter away, toward my desk. Behind me, I sense her move. By the time I reach the desk and prop a hip against it, she's drained the glass. She coughs, splutters, then stares at the glass, "I fucking hate you." She throws the glass against the wall. It bounces off, hits the ground, rolls to a standstill not half a foot away from her. She springs to her feet, picks it up, and pitches it at the wall again. It shatters, pieces raining down on the floor. She stays there, shoulders heaving.

"Did that help?"

"No." She pivots around, "You were joking, right, about what you said earlier?"

I allow myself a half-smile, "Do I seem as if I am joking?"

Her shoulders sag, "No." She raises a hand to her hair. "But marry you?" Her fingers tremble as she tugs on a strand. "It's preposterous."

"You woman. Me man." I shrug. "What's wrong with it?"

"Everything."

"Who cares? It will be an event your remaining parent will not want to miss."

"One who's been absent all of my life, who preferred not to tell us about his existence. Why would he care?"

I twirl a finger in the air. "Ring a bell, Sweetheart?"

"What? He wants to see the decor of this room?"

I motion with my palm.

"He wants to sit behind your desk?" She squeezes her eyebrows together.

"Go on."

"He wants a liaison with your company?"

"Not bad." I drum my fingers on my chest.

"He's in debt, I assume?" She grabs a strand of her pink hair and brings it to her mouth.

Interesting habit, if a little weird for my tastes. The fuck do I care? I need her for as long as it takes to bring the old man to my doorstep.

"After the massive losses that his business suffered, he had to sell off his assets. He moved to the US."

Her forehead crinkles, "If you are aware of his whereabouts, why don't you take revenge on him?"

"What's the fun in that?" I widen my stance. "I want him to pay for his sins in the city where he instigated his crimes, in front of those who once knew him."

"You want to destroy him completely?" She locks her fingers together in front of her.

"Guilty as charged."

Her lips firm, "Why would he return?"

"A chance to redeem himself in front of his peers in his home country, courtesy of the contacts I'd introduce him to." I spread my arms wide, "It would be a wedding gift to my bride-to-be, to ensure her father is taken care of."

She flinches. "So, you'll bring him here with the lure of money?"

"And a fresh start, not to mention the chance to be reunited with his daughters."

"What if he refuses to come?" She brings her arms down and tucks her elbows into her sides

"Oh, he'll come all right."

Her chest heaves, "Why is that?"

"Because I'll be personally inviting him, to attend his daughter's wedding which takes place in..." I glance at my watch.

"In?"

"Three days."

She throws up her hands, "What world are you living in where the paperwork can be completed in such little time?"

I flick some imaginary lint off my lapel.

"No." Her chest heaves and she clenches her fists. "You... You..."

"It's amazing how money can buy you anything, anywhere... especially when you can call in favors to those in power." I bounce a little on my heels. This is fun.

"You... You can get the registrations and such done by then?" She blinks rapidly.

"With time to spare." I angle my head. "You don't have to do anything."

"I have to show up." She pinches her lips together, glances toward the exit.

I hold up the phone. "Don't even think about it."

She pales further.

I stiffen. "If you're going to faint again, make sure that you're sitting down."

Her shoulders draw back, spots of color burn her cheeks, sparks of gold flare in her eyes. There you are, my little Bird.

She juts out her chin. "Name the place and time and I'll be there."

"Not so fast." I lean forward, and the scent of her body intensifies.

My dick twitches and sweat slicks my palm. Fuck her for the response she always elicits from me. I scowl, "Move in with me for the next 30 days."

"What the—" She opens and shuts her mouth. "The original deal was for a week!"

"I changed my mind."

"I agreed to 7 days." She trembles.

"It's not enough time to see this plan through." Why am I bothering to argue with her? It's not as if she has a choice.

"Bu... but... 30 days?" She swallows. "That's too long."

I raise my shoulders, "Gotta convince the world it's real, huh?"

Fuck that.

I don't care how it seems on the outside. Truthfully, I hadn't thought about the time span as such, except... Okay, I did need time... Just enough to figure out what the hell I am going to do about this little—okay, big—problem I have, for when it comes to her, I am not myself.

Not in control... and that... I can't stand. I have to get to the bottom of what it is about this woman that constantly claws at me. An itch. An irritation. She is a rash that clings to me, refusing to fade from my skin, my blood and I... must find a way to resolve it.

I allow my lips to smirk, "So?"

She squeezes her fingers together, "So?"

"That wasn't a request."

"Will you keep me here against my will."

I glance at the phone.

"Yeah, yeah." She drags her fingers through her hair, "So you have incriminating evidence on me... but... 30 days?"

I narrow my gaze.

"It's a much longer period of time than I had anticipated."

My heart begins to race. So, the Bird has claws after all, huh? My gut clenches. What had I thought? That she is different from the rest? That it isn't about the money? That she is actually attracted to me? I'd coerced her into this arrangement, after all, pushed her to the edge, hoping... Hoping what? That she'd emerge from it like some bloody phoenix? Fuck. I straighten my spine.

"How much?"

She blinks.

"Think of a figure."

"Right." She bites her lower lip, and I squeeze my fingers at my sides.

"Say it before I change my—"

"Five."

I lower my eyebrows.

"Five million." Her chin wobbles.

Not bad. She has the presence of mind to pull a larger figure than I expected.

"Two." I wipe all expression from my face.

She straightens, "Four."

My pulse thuds at my temples. And she negotiates too, huh? At least, she is a survivor. I have to give her that.

"Two point five." I keep my arms loose at my side.

She opens her mouth. I hold up a hand. "Final offer and we both know it's more money than you'll ever see in your lifetime."

"Asshole."

I yawn, raise my phone. "Fine, guess I'll upload this to—"

"I'll take it."

"And sex."

She pales; her breathing grows shallow. "Not part of the deal."

"Hmm." I touch my finger to her cheek.

She winces.

"I'll never force you." I draw back, "But by the time we are done with this arrangement, you'll be begging me to own you, possess you, to have me balls deep inside of you, as you come on my dick."

She shudders, then straightens her shoulders, "Never."

I slide the phone into my pants, "You will give in to me, little Bird, this I promise, and it will be of your own volition." I brush past her, toward the exit.

"One day..."

Her voice follows me.

"One day I'll make you regret what you're doing to me."

I bare my teeth, and the blood pounds in my ears, at my temples, my wrists. Fuck, if that's not the hottest thing I've ever heard from anyone.

I glare at her over my shoulder, "Oh, I'm counting on it."

23

"These damn things are as hot as a stiff cock!"
—Julie & Julia, Director: Nora Ephron

Summer

"Cruel." Stab. "Sadistic." Stab. "Twat." Stab, stab. "Alpha-fucking-hole." I bring the knitting needle down toward the cushion again, only for Karma to pull it away from me.

"That bad, huh?" She pats the pillow and places it behind her neck.

"Swine. Pig. Horseshit." I fume.

"Manure." She holds out her palm and I place the knitting needle in it.

I spring up and begin to pace, "Bastardo."

"Is that Italian?" She loops the wool around the needle, drags it out in that rhythmic fashion that makes my head boggle.

"Does it matter?" I walk toward the other end of the room, turn, head toward the other side.

"Guess not. He's certainly helping you expand your vocabulary."

"It was already quite extensive, thank you very much."

"You talkin' to me?" Her needles clack.

"Taxi Driver." I toss my head.

"Keep your friends close and your enemies closer." She tugs wool from the yarn.

"Godfather." I smirk. "Is that the best you can do?"

Her eyes gleam, "You know how to whistle, don't you, Steve? You just put your lips together and blow.”

"What are you trying to tell me, huh?" I throw up my hands. "I always know when you are trying to manipulate me."

"Moi?" She coils wool between the needles. "As if I'd ever try to get you to do anything you didn't want."

"Yes, you. You're every bit as scheming as that nasty jerkface."

"Thought you liked his features." She frowns at the wool.

"What's that got to do with anything?" A headache begins to drum against my temples.

"You can't handle the truth."

There's silence, broken by the clack-clack of the needles.

I turn, flounce to the front of the settee where she's sprawled out.

"What are you trying to say?" I frown. "And that line is from A Few Good Men."

She doesn't answer. Her fingers flex, the wool is eaten up in the space between her needles to be spat out on the other side, woven into a perfect design. Unlike my life, which is as messy as a knotted, all-over-the-place, dirty, cast aside, bag of unwanted thread. This must be a new low for me, comparing myself to fabric... Not even—the raw material that goes into making cloth. Ugh.

"How do you enjoy knitting?"

"It's calming, helps me focus on something other than what's going on in my mind."

"Right."

"You should try it."

She glances at me over the needles.

I sidle away to the far side of the settee.

"No, thank you, I have better ways of getting rid of my frustrations."

"Oh yeah? How? By destroying cushions?"

"I barely touched it. The surface is all smooth... Look." I pull the pillow from behind her neck and fondle the fabric.

Silky cotton, soft, yet packed with textures. Like the skin on his chest, the sheath that envelops that turgid muscle between his legs. Concentrate on the topic at hand. Ugh! I bury my head in my palms. "What am I going to do, Karma?"

"Nothing."

"Huh?" I survey her through the gaps between my fingers. Yesterday morning—after that stunt that he'd pulled on me, the asshole had stayed away from me for the rest of the day; or vice versa. I'd done my best to avoid him completely.

Which was easy, considering he'd been away from the office, or so Meredith had informed me.

She'd shown me to my cubicle, which is nowhere near his office—thank God. It is on the floor below his, with the rest of the marketing team.

Should I be thankful that he isn't showing me favoritism, or be upset that minutes after proposing to me he was casting me aside as if I was some... piece of disposable machinery? Or a stain on his carpet that he could walk over.

Hang on a second. I am not seriously considering his stupid proposal, right? I mean, this entire scheme is insane. I slide down to the floor, then tilt my chin up. "What do you mean, nothing?"

My sister knits another stitch, "Exactly that. It's not as if he gave you a choice, right?"

"Eh?"

"Whether you like it or not, he's going to put you through the scheme. He's not going to take 'no' for an answer."

My heart begins to thud. "So what? I play dead?"

"Oh, no." She weaves the yarn between her needles, taking her time. I follow her action, trying to focus, focus—ah, hell. "Gimme that." I tear the knitting out of her hands and fling it aside.

"Fifteen minutes." She chuckles.

"Huh?"

"That's how long you lasted this time, before yanking away my piece of art."

I snort, "It's a scarf... Or whatever..." I frown, "What were you making anyway?"

"It's a stole... for you."

"Oh!" Something hot coils in my chest. My sister can be a bitch, but she does love me. She has my best interests at heart, like I have for her... Right?

She snickers.

Blood thuds at my temples. "You idiot."

"You believed me, didn't you?" Her shoulders shake, chortling sounds issuing from her.

"Gah! Can't believe I fell for that." I spring up and onto the sofa, then dig my fingers into her side.

She laughs harder.

I drag my fingers down her sides, tickling her, squeezing her. Her laughter rises in volume. "Stop." She gasps.

"Swear you'll never do that to me again."

She slaps the arm of the sofa; tears run down her cheeks. "Swear. You win. Peace."

"Too late," I crow, tickling her under her armpits. She snorts, gasps, pushes at me. I duck, lose my seat on the sofa, and pitch over, onto the carpet. I lay there gasping, glance up at the ceiling. The skylight is open and light pours in.

She follows me down, throws herself next to me. "You are horrible."

"Says the Wicked Witch." I smirk, referring to our childhood nicknames for each other.

"All the better to eat you with." She makes a growling voice.

"Bet, that's what Mr. Big Bad is saying about me, right now." The chuckle catches in my throat. It isn't funny, not at all. I'd run out of the office yesterday at six pm on the dot, the official closing time for 7A Investments. I hadn't spoken to anyone, just messaged Karma, and when she'd replied with the address she was at, I'd come here.

"Is he?" She tilts her head.

"Bad?" I trace the pink lighting up the edges of the clouds far above. "Yes."

"And the other." She turns onto her front. "Is he?"

My cheeks redden. "None of your business."

"Aww. You're blushing. So cute." She pats my cheek.

I shove it away. "Oh, get a life."

She coughs—on cue. Come on, don't be uncharitable okay? She's unwell. But her sharp thinking and general bitchiness makes up for what she lacks in the stamina department. Enough that sometimes I forget that she's technically unwell. Then, of course, she pulls up her condition, and hell. I curl my fingers at my sides.

She coughs again, and her entire body shakes. "Jeez, thanks girlfriend, so blame me for living vicariously."

"Hardly, vicarious." I sniff. "Nothing happened."

"Something did."

"You mean other than what I already told you—?"

"About him proposing that you marry him, then invite our father who we'd presumed to be dead to attend the wedding, and plot his downfall—?" She counts it off on her fingers.

"Exactly." I drag my fingers through the carpet again. "By the way, this place is nice."

"Don't change the topic." She surveys the sunny three-bedroom apartment. "It is, isn't it? The car that brought me here was as nice."

"Oh?"

"The chauffeur helped me pack what I needed too. He drove me here, then told me I have an appointment with a specialist for tomorrow."

I wave my hand in the air. "And you agreed to... to all of this?"

"He had an official letter, all signed by Sinclair Sterling of 7A Investments, which is where you were going for an interview. He told me part of the deal is that you get company quarters."

Something he had neglected to tell me.

"And you believed him?"

"What's not to believe?" She wrinkles her nose. "He seemed trustworthy, the signature on the note was legit. Besides, when I peeked out of the window and saw the Aston Martin..."

"You saw the car, and that was it, you forgot everything else."

"Not only, it was the 7A connection."

"Wait until I get my hands on them." I flex my fingers.

"You have actually, on precisely one of them, to be accurate."

"A-n-d, finally we tackle the issue at hand." I grab a strand of hair, chew on the tip, "What should I do?"

"Go along with it." She straightens, walks past me to retrieve her yarn.

"Easy for you to say. You don't want to lose this pad."

"No one says pad anymore." She surveys the remnants of her knitting.

"I do."

"It's a beautiful apartment in Regent's Park." She sniffs.

"Aren't you worried about what happens if all this goes pear-shaped?" I drag my fingers through my hair. "What if our father refuses to come, or hell—" I shoot up to sitting position. "What if he agrees?"

"He definitely will." She twists her fingers together in front of her.

I spring up to my feet, begin to pace again. "Which means I have to go through with this wedding—assuming I don't kill the alphahole first, that is. And then, what if... what if...?"

"He demands sex?"

I shoot her a glance, "Not funny."

"Has he asked you?"

Yes.

"No." I shake my head.

"You two discussed it?"

Boy, have we!

"Of course, not."

"Is he as highly sexed as the tabloids claim him to be?"

"What have you read about him?"

She curls a lip, "See, I knew you were interested in him."

"Of course, I am." I drag my fingers through my hair, "I am supposed to fake an entire relationship with him and then walk away unscathed."

My shoulders slump. Therein lies the problem. If I spend more time in his vicinity, I am going to throttle him... Or worse, throw myself at his feet and beg him to lick me all over... After I've kissed him, and sucked on that Adams apple of his, and dragged my tongue down his chest, to—no don't go there, not yet. Not ever.

"You're attracted to him, huh?"

"No."

"You wish this was real?"

I pause, glance at her. "What?"

"The marriage, the life of privilege, father returning to our lives, and attending your wedding, with you wearing my wedding dress that would be showcased for all the paparazzi, and me, of course, as your bridesmaid..."

"There you go, inserting yourself in the tableau. Not that I mind." I don't. Truly. But the rest of it? Yeah, she is right. I mean, no. I mean, yes, I'd wanted all of that, but not with a man I love to hate. And hate to lust after. And want to throttle to within an inch of his life... After he's given me enough orgasms to keep me high on endorphins, of course.

"Oh," I push my knuckles into my eyes, "What am I going to do, Karma?"

She pulls at the patchwork of her knitting, and the entire thing comes undone. She flings it aside, then crosses the floor to me, "You know what I'm going to say, right?"

I blow out a breath. "What?"

"Show me the money!"

And ain't that the goddamn truth?

When it comes down to it, that's all that really seems to matter.

It sure does make the world go round; it's what brings grown men to their knees, what buys you the best treatment from the foremost specialist in town, what ensures that you can pursue your dreams, your goals, your ambitions, ensure that you never go to bed hungry, or feel helpless... Okay, maybe not the last.

But nine out of ten times, it is the money that wins out.

And it is why I am going through with this crazy scheme, of marrying this billionaire-bully. I link my fingers together. Damn it, why are my palms sweating?

I pivot to face my sister. "Really? You're scraping the bottom of the barrel if you're referencing Jerry McGuire. It's... waaaay too iconic. A child would have guessed it."

"So?" She raises her shoulder and lets it drop.

"Guess what my response is going to be?"

She tilts her head, "Try me."

"Money's something you need in case you don't die tomorrow."

There's a lesson somewhere in those words, about my life, but damned if I can decipher it.

She purses her lips, "Wall Street? You stooped low enough to quote Wall Street?"

Desperate times and all that... What can I say, huh?

She grips my shoulder. "You'll be okay, Summer."

"Famous last words."

Sin

"You did what?" Saint looks up from pouring the hundred—or was it two-hundred-year-old?—whiskey from the bottle. Some of the amber liquid splashes onto his tie.

It's a red color today. For fuck's sake, you'd think the man was all dressed up for his wedding. Oh, wait, that's what we were discussing. Only it isn't his nuptials, it's mine.

"Yeah." I drag my fingers through my hair. The strands are long enough to brush my collar, the longest I've worn them. I need to cut it, but when she'd run her fingers through it, the sensations had been pleasant—okay, more than pleasant.

I'd loved that she'd dug her fingers in and held on as I'd brought her to orgasm... Wait. What? Now I am changing my look, and because it reminds me of how she came all over my fingers, as the sugary scent of her arousal teased my nostrils and I plunged my tongue between her lips and tasted of her, from her, drawn on that honeyed essence of hers—fuck. My dick is instantly erect. Clearly, it didn't get the memo this is all a pretense. I march to the phone on my desk, scoop it up.

"Meredith? Can you fix an appointment with my barber? Yeah, tonight after work is good." I pause. "No wait, have him come to my residence." One of the perks of being a gazillionaire? You can get the service to come to you, whenever you want. What? It's true.

"Your mind is wandering, asshole."

Saint places the bottle on the counter with a thump.

"Your aim is off the mark, you knobhead."

"Huh?"

I jerk my chin at his tie.

He glances down, shrugs. Then pulls off the tie, and drops it into the wastepaper basket.

"Why do you bother with those things?"

"It has its uses." He picks up the glass. "And that particular brand, withstands a lot of wear and tear."

"Spare me the details of your kinky tastes." Not that I am not aware of them. My PI keeps me informed about the proclivities of the others in our little 'happy family.' Which is how I am aware of the particular club that he likes to frequent. So do I, on occasion, except I ensure never to cross paths with him. Some things need to be kept hidden, capisce? "Your personal life is none of my concern."

"But you went and made yours of interest to all of us."

I glare at him. He's right though; dipshit states the obvious every fucking time.

"Marriage?" He brings the glass to his lips and drinks from it. "Really? What were you thinking?"

With my dick, obviously.

He takes another healthy swig, then gestures at me, "You are attracted to her, I get it. She's hot... in a certain fashion." He lowers his chin, "So shag her, you twat, get it out of your system, but, marriage?"

Anger curls in my guts.

"Don't talk about her that way."

"Oh?" His shoulders go solid. "Do I detect a trace of sentimentally in your rather boring facade?"

"Bugger off."

"Very original." He raises the glass at me, then knocks it back. "So, tell me then, what were you thinking?"

Yeah, I will, as soon as I sort things out in my head. I clench my fists at my side, then stalk to the window and stare at the square outside. A couple kissing in one corner of the space. A little girl runs after a dog, her mother calling out to her. That's the thing about London.

Every damn building faces a green space, a park, a patch of woods. Enough for families to thrive and prosper. Well boo-fucking-hoo. That was never part of my plan. No family... or any of that emo shit for me. So then...

Why did I do it?

I had reacted on instinct when I had made that statement, had been thinking on my feet. Although, if I'm being honest—Ha! Why start now?—I'd known I might need to escalate things to ensure the bastard takes the bait. Plus, I kind of like the idea... The fuck am I thinking?

"Sleeping with her wouldn't have been enough." Not that I hadn't come close to that. And for the life of me, I don't know why I didn't just do it.

I could have taken advantage of her that day in the conference room, when she had been spread out, legs wide apart for me. My mouth waters. My groin hardens. A pulse flares to life in my balls.

Of course, my body is right on track to win the Olympic gold medal for being ever-ready to find a way to get aroused at the merest hint of thoughts of her.

"You saying what I think you are, old chap?" Saint drawls.

"Which is?"

"That you are attracted to her? Maybe you've developed a soft spot where the poor, defenseless, little bird is concerned."

I stiffen. How does he know that I call her Bird?

"Yeah, you're not the only one to have eyes on the ground, old chap."

My vision narrows; anger thuds at my temples. "You had me followed."

He clicks his tongue. "Tit for tat... Although the tit I prefer to be thinking about comes fixed to the female anatomy."

"This isn't about sex."

He raises his eyes skyward, "And that is exactly what I've been trying to get through your thick skull, you chutiya."

"What?"

"Fuck her—"

I glare at him.

"Sayin' it as I see it." He raises his hands. "Since when have you started pussyfooting around the four-letter word, by the way?"

"Not pussyfooting."

"Just pussywhipped."

"Ah, fuck you, dickhead."

"Real creative with your insults too." He shakes his head. "I fear you are crossing over to the dark side, my man. Better get your dick in hand and point it in the right direction."

I flex my jaw so hard, pain slices up my face. "Told you, don't talk shit about her, not when I am around, and especially when I am not in the room, you feel me?"

His jaw drops open. He scans the space, then walks to the table, grabs an antique letter opener, and slices it across his other palm.

Blood gushes out.

"The fuck you doing?"

"Relax, I don't have a death wish. Besides, if I wanted to off myself, there are other ways which would ensure I go down in a blaze of glory."

"You really should stop listening to classic rock."

"A much-overrated Bon Jovi song, by the way, but if the shoe fits." He pulls out a handkerchief, wraps it around his hand.

"The point of this entire exercise being—?"

"To prove to myself that I wasn't dreaming."

"Man, and I thought I was the cold-blooded of the lot?"

"You?" He tilts his head, "You, Sinner, have a conscience. Me, on the other hand, I never hesitate."

As I have witnessed first-hand. I drum my fingers on my chest, "You saved my life that day in the basement."

"My hand was just as steady, when I buried the bastard's pen in his neck. His blood sprayed across my face." He holds up his fist, now clenched around the ruined handkerchief.

"And I'll never forget that." It's why I tolerate his general fuckedupedness, not that I trust him or anything. I crack my neck, "Don't underestimate me or the rest of the Seven."

"I can assure you that I don't spend any time thinking of the rest of you. Speaking of, to complete the point of this tedious exercise, all I can say is, do whatever the fuck you must to get her out of your system. Don't get entangled with her."

Too late.

"You feel me, Sin?"

Fucker's right. Again. That's what I should have done. That's what I had been planning to do. That's where it had been headed. Me taking advantage of her, bending her to my will, forcing her to participate in my plan to bring her old man out of hiding, and making him pay for everything. No, we are not going to leave it up to the law. The thing about money? When you have enough of it, you can use it to mask all of your sins. Except me, of course. I use my wealth to amplify my reach, to ensure I am never forgotten. To imprint my mark on the revenge that we have been planning all of these years. And then I had to go and mess it all up.

Okay, so maybe that's not entirely true. Maybe I'm not giving myself enough credit for my strategy, or my instincts, for that matter. "Don't get your knickers in a twist, ol' chap," I spread my arms, "This is all part of a plan."

"It is?"

I nod, "I needed to find a way to tie her to me in a way that would convince Adam it's serious."

He rubs his jaw. "Hmm."

"What?"

"Don't believe you."

"What-fucking-ever."

"You should never have embarked on this slippery slope. You could have just had her move in with you, pretend to be in a relationship."

"Like you know so much about relationships, huh?"

"Hey, I know how to avoid them, and have been far more successful at it than you, or the rest of the Seven, for that matter."

He's right, of course.

All of us—with the exception of Edward—have played the field, and well, you don't dip your dick in pussy without occasionally something sticking to it, if you get my drift. What? So, I am an uncouth bugger. I may wear £10,000 suits, get chauffeured around in an Aston Martin, and never fly commercial, doesn't mean I can't tell it like it is, huh?

"I wouldn't count preferring to pay for liaisons as experience."

He stares at me, then chuckles. His shoulders shake so hard that he has to hold onto the edge of the bar counter.

I frown. "What's so funny?"

"You, douchebag. You, who's gonna pay for the biggest fuckin' mistake of your life."

"You're getting on my nerves." I stalk toward the phone on the conference table, reach for it, and depress the speaker phone.

"Sin?" Meredith comes on the line.

"Call Security," I growl.

There's a pause, then, "Is this about Saint?"

"How did you guess?"

"Because whenever you two speak, one or the other threatens to call Security on the other. Don't waste my time, I have a lot to do."

The dial tone rings out.

"What the—?" I release the switch and the annoying buzz cuts out. "She hung up on me?"

"She saved your life, and that of the rest us. She anchored us lost boys by giving us a home away from home to hang out in. It's thanks to her that we are here and didn't end up as crackheads or criminals—present company excluded."

"Of course." A headache begins to squeeze my temples.

He straightens, "She's entitled to ignore you if she thinks that's the right thing to do."

"You had to bring that up, huh?"

"Someone needs to keep their feet on the ground, and stick to the plan." He ambles toward the exit, "Especially since you seem hellbent on screwing it up."

My stomach churns. I'd hoped talking to Saint would help me come up with a solution. As if.

The twat has a way of flagging my mistakes. He is the devil's fucking advocate. The only one of the Seven who can stand up to me. Which means, I hate his guts and yeah, also rely on his particular brand of meanness to call me out at my own game. Which he had successfully done. And that leaves me where? Holding my fucking balls in my hand.

"Stop."

He reaches the door, keeps going.

"Fuck you, Saint. What do you want me to do? Beg?"

"Words are overrated." He twists his shoulder, and throws me an amused glance, "We've always dealt in a different currency from the rest."

I stiffen, fold my fingers into a fist. Of course, it has to come down to a bargain with this wanker. He is way too similar to me. A fact I loathe. And which is also why we are the ones who can go toe to toe with each other. Hell, I'd call him a worthy opponent if I was feeling charitable. Which I'm not now, not when a sinking feeling pervades my stomach. I square my shoulders.

"Name your price."

Buttercup the Princess Bride: We'll never survive.
Westley: Nonsense. You only say that because no one ever has.

— The Princess Bride. Director: Rob Reiner

Summer

"I'll get it." My voice echoes in the wake of the doorbell.

I am alone, again, in the mansion on Primrose Hill.

It is the start of the weekend and I haven't seen him...or anyone else for that matter. He seems to subscribe to the philosophy that servants shouldn't be noticed, except for the results of their efforts.

He definitely has a staff... for food seems to appear magically in the refrigerator and the entire place is spotless, so someone does clean the space. Besides, I'd returned home last night to find my bed made up. It is disconcerting, like living in a hotel... which isn't quite one. I shiver, scrutinize the massive library. I've adopted the space as my own. The floor to ceiling bookshelves, framing the window that looks out on the garden, is my happy space. So why do I keep glancing toward the door, hoping to see him, huh?

Not that I missed him. Nope. N-a-h.

It is a relief not to be on tenterhooks, or peeking around corners before daring to go to my destination within the house. I'd come home from the office—on the tube—again, not complaining. If anything, I am envious of folks who go about their everyday life with scarce in the world to worry about except which bar to go out to on Friday night. Which dress to wear to work in the morning. Which job to hop to next. Which date to shag and take home for the weekend... Oh, on the last... Okay, I've always really admired those who could do that.

Not that I hadn't tried, mind you, but apparently, I have a weird set of morals; imbued, no doubt, from the nuns in the convent school that Karma and I had last attended.

While I had held onto those beliefs—perhaps desperately, for they had grounded me—Karma had gone the other way.

Maybe that's because she had been such a sickly child.

When she should have been laughing and playing with the other kids, she had been confined to peering at us from behind the windows. So, when she'd finally come of age, and had joined me in the real world, she couldn't wait to explore her fledgling sexuality. On the days that her health permitted, of course.

I race down the steps and fling open the door.

Karma swaggers in.

She's wearing dark skinny jeans, torn at the knees. Boots that have massive platforms, a blouse that slipped down one shoulder and is held together by safety pins; another of which is pierced through her lip. Her lip? I blink.

"Didn't the Gwen Stefani look fade with the Nineties?"

"Shows how little you are in touch with current trends, Sis."

Huh? I frown and she chuckles. She tugs on my hair, "So easy to pull a fast one over you, huh?"

She saunters past.

"You could, at least, pretend to be a responsible adult."

"Hey, I knit... That's my two-pence contribution to The World According to Garp."

"What are you talking about?" I knot my hair around my fingers.

"It means, adulting is overrated. Besides, you do enough of that for the two of us."

Her boots leave muddy footprints on the polished floor. Should I say something? Why do I care? This isn't my home. I am borrowing it for the duration of... what? A fake marriage to a cold-hearted, obnoxious alphahole, who is trying his best to forget about my existence, apparently.

"Why are you here?"

She does a turn, blows out a low whistle "Damn, you hit the jackpot, woman."

"Or the end of my patience." I tighten my hold around the half-open door.

"Being able to recognize a good thing when it hits you in the face has never been your strong point."

"What do you mean?"

She pivots, waves her hands in the air. "All this, honey. All of this can be yours. Correction, is yours, already—"

"It's all pretense." I huff.

"Haven't you heard?" She leans forward on the balls of her feet. "You gotta fake it till you make it."

I grimace, "You mean like, Legally Blonde?"

"I was thinking more, Pretty Woman."

What the—! "So, I should prostitute myself?"

"You said it." She smirks.

"Honestly, Karma, you sure can be a bitch sometimes."

She drops her hands to her side, "OMG, that was a low, low hit even for you."

"And your stupidity in telling me that I need to accept my fate, and go along with whatever this weird-ass plan spun by a psychopath—"

"He's not a psychopath—" She scowls.

"Full of himself, vicious billionaire—"

"Gazillionaire, actually—"

"—has concocted, and actually be happy about it, is sheer and utter nonsense."

My chest heaves.

Her features tense. She moves toward me. "Hey, Summer, I'm sorry that I upset you."

I snort. "No, you're not."

"I really, truly am. You're right, I can be a bitch sometimes. I think it's some self-fulfilling prophecy. After all, with a name like Karma I didn't stand a chance, huh?"

"It's better than Summer."

"You're not the one having to pronounce your name to people, when you introduce yourself."

"Better than people instantly assuming I am some kind of a hippie."

"Of course, your get-up doesn't inspire that at all, huh?"

I glance down at my long skirt, teamed with a peasant blouse, and pink Chucks. "What's wrong with what I am wearing?"

"Nothing."

"Not my fault if people go by appearances." I snort.

"Woman, you are an optimist. The world is ruled by how you appear. Haven't you gotten that through your head yet?"

"What I reflect to the world is not what I am on the inside."

"It's true." She nods and her lips quirk.

"Don't go laughing at me. As you are aware, I am more rebellious than I seem."

She looks me up and down. "Let's agree to disagree on that, Sis. You're more of a quirky misfit."

Huh? Is that good or bad?

"You're someone who wants to soothe things over, make the world a better place, someone who yearns for male approval."

I glower, "You think I have daddy issues?"

"Don't we all?" She raises her shoulders, then lets them drop.

"That is the most honest thing you've ever said. I mean, given how we were abandoned by our own father, of course, we'd be looking for approval from the men in our lives, huh?"

"Difference is you fear loss of control. You'll do anything to tame your circumstances, while I..." She looks past my shoulder.

"You?" I jerk my chin.

"I leverage the cards I've been dealt, rather than upset the entire table, looking for that one Ace that'll probably never land in my lap."

"If you are implying that I'll never settle for anything other than the one, you're right." I tip my face up, and peer into her eyes.

Damn, I could do with some heels about now. Except this isn't a power play. It isn't. This is me and my sister having a conversation about priorities, huh? And it's time she understands where I stand on this.

"I won't stop searching for the person who is compatible with me in every way."

She shakes her head, blinks, and I frown. Did something go into her eyes? Doesn't matter. This once, I am going to have the last word.

"This marriage is as fake as Posh Spice."

The hair on the nape of my neck prickles; a frisson of electricity ladders up my spine. Too late, I realize what she'd been trying to tell me. Don't turn.

Don't. A blast of heat at my back makes me wince.
"Care to repeat yourself?"

26

Sin

Her shoulders stiffen and every part of her goes rigid. "You heard me." She pivots around.

I glare at her.

Her cheeks redden, but she holds my gaze. Impressive.

My little bird is trying to flex her fledgling wings, huh? Why should it matter to me that she's dismissing this relationship as a pretense? It is, isn't it? I was the one who'd initiated it, so why am I so angry that she's insisting that it is all a fake, huh? Because that's all this is ever going to be. Another lie in a long string of deceptions, which is what I excel at, after all.

I prowl over to her. Closer, closer. Her chest heaves; her breathing grows shallow. I pause when I am right in front of her. She tilts her head back, all the way back, to look at me.

"Actually, I don't think I did." I raise my hand and she flinches. She's afraid. Good. I drag my finger down the side of her cheek. "Say it again."

"You mean play it again, Sam?"

"Huh?"

"Casablanca." She gulps. "That scene where Ilsa—"

"Asks Sam to play 'As Time Goes By'?"

She nods

"You have it wrong."

"No, I don't." Her eyebrows knit.

I smooth the crease between her eyebrows, and she turns her head away.

"Listen," she huffs, "you may be the boss in the office but when it comes to movie trivia—"

"—I am always right." I curl my lips.

"You can't be perfect about everything." She huffs.

"Oh?"

This should be good. "What will you give me if I prove you wrong?"

She sets her jaw.

"Well?"

"What do you want?"

"You."

"Excuse me?" She whisper-screams.

"You heard me."

"You already have me right under your thumb, agreeing to every sneaky plan you've no doubt spent the last many years—"

"A decade, actually."

Color smears her cheeks. "—thinking about. You made me agree to this pretend marriage—"

"That's where you are wrong." I lean forward until my chest almost grazes her chest. Almost.

I don't need to glance down to find out that her nipples have puckered. (Expected.) Or that my pants are suddenly too tight at my crotch. (An unfortunate byproduct of our proximity, one that I'm going to alleviate as soon as I have called her out on her mistake.)

"That's twice in as many minutes, by the way."

Her gaze widens. "You are such an arrogant know-it-all. It's not possible to have a single straight conversation with you."

"Right?" I allow my grin to broaden.

A pulse beats to life at the hollow of her neck. I want to drop my head, nuzzle that space where her scent would be the most concentrated. Fuck, why would you want to do that, huh?

I start to raise my arm, then lower it; my fingers tingle. How can I ache to touch her again? Feel that silky smooth softness of her skin under my palm, cupping her, palming her arse, thrusting knuckle-deep inside the soft core between her legs—

"Hey." She claps her hands.

I tip my chin, up. "Don't raise your voice."

"I'll do whatever the fuck I want."

"Summer!" A new voice sounds within the space.

I glance past her, spot the woman Summer was talking to when I entered.
"Who're you?"

"Hi." She moves forward, "I'm Karma."

"Karma?"

She blows out a breath. "Excuse my parentage, and hers." She jerks her head toward Summer. "We are what happens when you cross a flower-chewing hippie with a loser ex-millionaire with a penchant for gambling."

No kidding! And isn't that the root of this entire fucking problem.

"Good to meet you by the way," she holds out her hand.

I glance at it, then at her face. "The jury is out on that."

She blinks, her features taking on a stunned countenance, then she chuckles, her shoulders shaking. She bursts out laughing, a full-throated giggle that's oddly infectious.

I find my lips twitching. "You must be the sister."

"You must be the alphahole." She grins.

I frown, "Alpha—?"

"Shut up, Karma." Summer pivots, and I pull her against my side. She struggles and her hip grazes my side.

I wind my arm around her tiny waist, dig my fingers into the curve of her butt. She shudders, then falls still.

"So, that's my nickname, huh?" I smirk.

Summer snorts, "Only you would take it as a compliment."

"I'll let that pass."

"Why do I find that so difficult to believe?"

"You're right to be suspicious."

She huffs, "Why don't you say what's on your mind?"

"Where's the fun in that?"

Karma Chameleon's gaze darts between us. "Guess you two get along quite well, eh?"

"What are you talking about?" Summer throws her arms in the air, "We hate each other."

"Right." Karma's eyes gleam. "My sister is rather good at believing her own lies."

"It's the first thing I noticed about her, though in this case, I hate to admit she is right."

Summer turns on me, "OMG, are you feeling feverish or something?"

"Eh?"

"You agreed with me. That's a first? Is it raining outside?"

"It always rains in London, haven't you noticed?"

She makes a noise deep in her throat.

I chuckle. "By the way," I tug on a strand of that pink hair, "completing what I started earlier—"

"Do you always have to have the last word?"

"Definitely getting to know me better." I tilt my head, "Be careful, you may end up liking me."

"Never." She wrinkles her nose.

"I'll hold you to that, and as I was saying earlier, I was right."

"About what?"

"What you quoted was a misquotation of the line "Play it, Sam"."

"No." She blinks.

"Look it up." I smirk.

She scans the room, pats the pockets of her skirt.

"You searching for this?" I produce her phone and she snatches it up, stares at the screen.

"You called me—?"

"What's the point of a phone if you never keep it with you?"

"Twenty times?"

"I expect you to be at my beck and call at all times. Have you forgotten?" I shoot up an eyebrow.

"It's the weekend."

"You work for me, twenty-four-seven."

"How can I forget!" She sets her jaw.

"Well?"

"What?"

"Are you going to look it up?"

"I'll save you the bother." Karma steps forward, "He's right."

"So, what else is new?" I can't keep the slightly victorious tone from my voice. Cheap shots.

For some reason, when I am around her my control seems to slip, and hell, if I am not going to take every single opportunity to come out on top. Literally.

Summer glances between us, then pulls up her phone. Her fingers tap on the screen, then she stiffens. Tucks her elbows into her side.

"Told ya."

"Yeah, yeah." She blows out a breath and the hair on her forehead flies up. "That's a first. I'll give you this one."

I lower my voice, "You'll give me every one of your firsts."

Her chin comes up, and she whips her head around to look at me. "Happy?"

I shake my head.

"What more do you want?"

"We made a deal at the start of this conversation, have you forgotten?"

"I am losing count, asshole."

I lower my head, nuzzle her cheek, then whisper, "Much prefer alphahole."

"I think I'm going to call you pain in the ass."

"At least wait until I've stuffed my cock into that hole too," I murmur.

Her breathing hitches.

I pull back, survey her features. Pupils dilated; creamy skin of her neck flushed with color. My dick instantly lengthens.

Her mouth opens, and that's when, cunt that I am, I move in. I close the distance between us, drop my head and close my mouth over hers.

She stiffens; every muscle in her body solidifies. I swipe my tongue between her lips and a small sigh escapes her. I nibble on her mouth, suck on her tongue, and her spine curves. I bring her firmly against my side. She literally seems to melt into me.

My cock hardens, my balls throb, an answering pulse flares at my temples. Fuck.

The sound of a throat being cleared reaches me. I lessen the intensity of the kiss, move back, and she follows me. I can't stop the rumble of pleasure that vibrates up my chest. She must have heard it too, for she stiffens. Then pulls away. I let her put some distance between us. Not too much, for I keep my arm about her waist.

"So." I turn to Karma. "Glad you could make it."

"Wouldn't miss helping my sister plan her wedding."

"Wait." Summer shuffles her feet, "You're the one who invited her?"

"He did," Karma confirms.

Summer shoots me a dirty glance, "Did you hack the password to my phone?"

"Didn't need to. I used your favorite number."

"How did you know...?" She purses her lips. "You had my laptop rigged so you could figure out my patterns?"

"You give me too much credit. Turns out, you are predictable."

She snarls low in her throat. Damn it, those little sounds she makes? I'll ensure it's an all-out cry when I have her spread out on my desk and—

"It's an invasion of privacy." She hisses.

"That's not the only thing I'm going to invade."

She reddens, and her chest heaves in the way that implies that she's seriously turned on. Bet her panties are soaking wet, not that I am complaining. I wish we were alone so I could shove my fingers between her legs and confirm my theory. My fingers twinge and I fold them into a fist at my side.

"Are you going to use every word I say against me?" Summer mutters
I arch an eyebrow.

She swipes her hair back, "Forget I asked."

"Mr. Sterling," Karma interrupts. "That sure is a generous offer, by the way."

"What is?" Summer frowns.

"He didn't tell you?" She blinks, "How many men would give carte blanche to their bride to organize the wedding their way."

"Only the cunning, conniving, obnoxious ones." Summer mumbles.

So fucking feisty. This woman, she hasn't a hope in hell of keeping up with me. Still, I have to give her full points for trying, which is more than what I'd acknowledge with any other opponent. She is turning out to be nothing like what I had expected. Surprises, I hate them. Challenges... Yeah, I can definitely credit her as a puzzle to be solved, a game to be played, safe in the knowledge that there will be one winner—me.

"That all you've got?" I allow my lips to curl.

"And you..." Summer glowers at Karma, "I can't believe you are ganging up on me with him."

There's a loud bang on the front door, which flies open. "Are we too late?"

Summer blinks. "Isla, Amelie?"

"I took the liberty of inviting your closest friends too."

Summer

"He gave you his credit card, right?" Karma hops up and down on her heels. My sister is excited. And she's also right.

I hold up the black piece of plastic he'd slipped into my palm. Yeah, hadn't expected that. Not sure what I am going to do about it either.

"I vote we put it to good use." Amelie snatches the card from my hand.

I reach for it and she holds it out of reach. "Oh, no, Ms. Goody-Two-Shoes, I am not going to allow you to spoil this fun."

I tuck my elbows into my sides, "Christ, Amelie, this is seriously not on. I am not going to spend time being indebted to him."

"You already are," Karma drawls from the comfortable leather armchair in the corner, a glass of wine held between her fingertips. She looks at home in the living room, which overlooks the beautiful garden behind the house. The doors are thrown open to allow the warm summer breeze to waft into the house. Large pink and yellow roses bloom to the side; a meadow of wildflowers stretches out on the other side. A path stretches out, leading to the pond in the center of the garden, and beyond that, tall trees overlook a waterfall that gushes down from the wall that brackets the property on three sides. Idyllic. Beautiful. And so wrong.

I don't deserve to be here, soaking in the rightness of the moment, when everything else about this picture is wrong. Wrong place. Wrong time. Wrong groom. What had I been thinking, agreeing with him? Oh! Wait, I didn't have a choice. If I had refused, I'd have been on the streets, scrambling to save my life and that of my sister's. The very sister who, right now, pours out wine from the, no-doubt, obscenely expensive bottle, and raises it in my direction. "Salut."

I frown. "You're not supposed to be drinking. It neutralizes the impact of the medications you are taking."

"Not what the doctor said," she mutters.

"Oh, yeah?" I march up to her. "Why didn't you call me when you went to see him, huh?"

"Does it matter?" She chugs down the wine. "They're all the same—not able to diagnose what's wrong with me, only to start me on a different medication, then tell me to be careful about my diet, exercise... As if I were eighty instead of eighteen."

"It's a good thing drinking in this country is, at least, legal at your age."

"Which really takes the edge off this rebelliousness." She takes another mouthful of wine, then hiccoughs.

"You've had enough."

"And you haven't had any yet." She offers me her glass.

I stare at it, then purse my lips.

"Aww, come on, Sis, indulge me. It's a time for happiness. Time to celebrate."

"You sound strange."

"I know, right?" She stares into the glass, "Must be the alcohol, or the rather pleasant surroundings we find ourselves in. It's certainly not your temperament, which as usual, leaves much to be desired."

She raises the glass to her lips and I snatch it from her.

"Hey!" She protests.

I drain the glass. Then blink.

"Yummy, huh?" She smacks her lips.

"So that's how wine's supposed to taste?"

"It's certainly a step up from my last drink, which came out of a cardboard box." Amelie walks up to us, a freshly-opened bottle in hand, and tops me off. Then reaches for a new glass, fills it up and hands it to Karma.

"I think she's had enough," I mutter weakly.

Amelie grins. "Come on, we need the liquor to brainstorm."

"Besides the wine is sooo good," Karma giggles.

Isla rushes in from the garden, hair tousled, her cheeks flushed. "Guys, the flowers, OMG, there's a hot house with orchids. Those blooms must be worth thousands."

"Try millions." Nothing I have encountered in this house gives me the confidence that their value is anywhere in the area of the numbers I have in my head. Best to add many zeros after any of our guesses.

"This man, he's beyond loaded." Isla flings out her arms so wide, she almost decks me.

I retreat to a safe distance.

"He's a gazillionaire, many times over." She walks over to the massive mirror that takes up almost one corner of the entire wall. "And this is one helluva space." Our reflections greet us, with the garden stretching out in the background.

It is overwhelming, dominating, yet brutally sensuous, with a tinge of sophistication—very much like the man who owns it.

"It's... ah... something." I swallow.

Karma laughs. "Damn, she's already mastered the art of understating stuff, huh?"

"Yep, have you noticed?" Amelie snickers. "The more money you have, the less you talk about it."

"Now, that's not fair." I turn on them. "I'm a little overwhelmed with the speed of everything that's happened, that's all."

"Hey." Amelie walks to me, "Didn't mean it the way that came out. And for the record, I think you're doing the right thing."

"What?" I scoff. "Mock marriage to an obnoxious Mr. Moneybags who's using me to further his empire?"

"Is that what he told you?" She narrows her gaze. "That it's a pretend wedding?"

I nod.

"I think he's lying."

Karma and Isla move in closer.

I wrap my arms around my waist. "What makes you say that?"

"Calling your sister and your best friends to come out and help you plan your wedding." Amelie waves her hand in the air. "Do those seem like the actions of a man who feels nothing for you?"

"Oh, he has feelings all right." I snicker.

"Aha!" Her eyes gleam. "You fucked him, huh?"

"No... uh..." I shift my weight from foot to foot. "Not quite."

"Either you slept with him or you didn't." Amelie tilts her head.

My neck heats. "It's kind of complicated."

"It always is." Isla nods.

"As if you'd know. Miss I'm-saving-myself-for-marriage." I quirk my lips.

Karma props her palm on her hip, "And you're not?"

"Nope." I jut out my chin. "I've been too busy earning a living, to consider wanting to sleep with anyone. Besides, I haven't meet anyone I wanted to have sex with, okay?"

"Summer, no." Amelie rounds on me. "Tell me that's not true."

I lean back, "Hold on, what's going on in that head of yours now?"

"Are you a virgin?" Amelie frowns.

"Now you sound like him."

"I knew it." She snaps her fingers.

"What are you talking about?"

"Bet, that's part of the attraction. You're probably the first halfway decent looking woman he's encountered—"

I cough into my hand, "Gee, thanks."

"—who's also never been with another man. Bet it brought out all of his possessive instincts and he decided he was going to claim you."

I snort, "Asshole whisperer, that's me." I swipe my hair over my shoulder, "He could have slept with me without wanting to marry me, you know. Besides," I jut out my chin, "I told him I wasn't a virgin."

Amelie stares, "Bet he subconsciously knew that you were lying."

"Like, we have some secret connection, so he can read my mind?" I scoff.

"Do you?" She lowers her chin.

I stare, "Of course not."

"But, you haven't fucked him yet?"

"Jeez what is this, the Spanish Inquisition?" I throw up my hands. "And no, I haven't. Besides, all of you are forgetting one thing. This entire thing is a pretense."

"I don't know, the oncoming wedding seems all too real." Isla squeezes my shoulder.

Tell me about it.

"Karma did mention that there's a deal involved."

"She did?" I growl.

"It's perfectly okay." Amelie pats my cheek. "You're finally wising up, leveraging your best assets to earn a living."

"Jeez, thanks, with friends like you who needs—"

"Enemas?" Karma smirks.

"Ugh." I make a gagging sound in my throat. "Hate it when you come up with gross jokes."

"Which this wedding isn't." Amelie frowns at Karma who makes a gesture as if she's zipping her lips.

I sober. "How am I going to plan a wedding in 2 days? I mean, I never thought I'd be walking down the aisle." The entire scenario is fake, but you know what I mean.

I wring my fingers together in front of me. Swallow down the tears that prick at my eyes. Why does everything seem so overwhelming all of a sudden? I sniffle.

"Hey." Amelie rubs my back, "We're here for you. I, for one, think you should do exactly what your heart dictates."

Which is what? Throw myself at him and beg him to fuck me? No, not that. Rewind. Throw myself at him and demand that he release me from this stupid charade? Better. Which he is not going to do. He is hellbent on taking revenge for whatever my father did to him, which he hasn't revealed yet. I mean, how bad could it be? Some corporate war gone wrong, no doubt. I'm sure that's all it was. He's probably blown it all out of proportion too.

"My skills as a wedding planner were clearly honed for this day, huh?" Isla brackets me in from the other side. "Besides, you have one thing going for you."

"I do?"

"Yep." She grins. "You have his credit card so..." She raises her shoulder.

Yeah. My shoulders slump further. Money really can buy anything, even the arrangements for an unplanned wedding, huh?

"Listen, Babe, we are all on your side, even if we are constantly taking the piss." Karma folds her arms behind her back.

"Hmm. You sure about that?"

"Completely." Her features resolve into an expression of determination. "I promise not to say anything bitchy—"

"Hallelujah."

"At least for the next half an hour."

I laugh, "Thank you for your kindness."

"Oh, and leave your wedding dress to me."

"I... I'm not so sure Karma." I twist my fingers together.

Her eyes gleam. "You do want to catch his attention?"

I bite on my lower lip.

"You want to ensure he never underestimates you again? You want to surprise him, huh?"

"Yes... but, can you create it in 2 days?"

"It's difficult, but not... impossible." She taps her finger to her cheek. "Not if I take the barebones of the dress I had been working on... and...." She brightens, snaps her fingers. "Oh, I think I know just the thing." She squeezes my shoulders. "Trust me."

Famous last words.

"You won't regret it." She winks.

Oh, hell. My stomach plummets.

"That's settled then." She grins. "Let's get this show on the road."

Amelie waves the black credit card, "Right, what should we order first?"

"...there's only two syllables in this whole wide world worth hearing: pussy."
—Scent of a Woman. Director: Martin Brest

Sin

"Is it too warm in here?" I run my finger around the collar of my shirt. I opted for a straightforward long-sleeved shirt, tapered pants and a jacket. No tie for this occasion. My way of showing it doesn't mean anything. A pointless gesture. Who am I trying to convince? My stomach rolls and I tug at the sleeves of my shirt. My fingers tremble. The fuck?

"You nervous, ol' chap?" Saint asks.

"The fuck you dithering on about?" I pull out my handkerchief, rub at the bead of sweat that trickles down my temple.

"Should I turn up the air-conditioning?"

"Fucking hate that artificial atmosphere." Truth is, being stuck in any enclosed space makes my head spin. Unless I have something to distract me. I play with the clasp of my watch. Some of the nervous tension drains from my shoulders.

"Yeah." He sobers. All seven of us have that specific phobia in common. All of us have different ways of coping with it.

"Here." He snaps open a wooden box.

"If you were thinking of proposing, it's a little too late. Besides, I am not into you that way."

"Har, har." He smirks politely. "Knowing how much you abhor jewelry, I figured I'd get you the next best thing."

He holds out the box. Rolled tobacco leaf columns nestle in the humid air.
"Aww, you remembered. I am so touched."

He chuckles.

I gently pull out one of the cigars. It is one of my bloody weaknesses, along with rare whiskeys. Turns out money grows on you, sensitizes your tastes so you began to appreciate the finer things in life.

He takes one for himself, then places the box on the table. Producing a cigar cutter, he snaps off the ends, then holds a lighter to my smoke, then his.

The pungent scent of crushed leather and toasted almonds, woven with something sweet—cherries?— almost as fine as the taste of her, fills my senses.

I tilt my head back, puff out a smoke circle. My muscles unwind a little.

"I hate to tell you, this was a good idea."

"Feel that?" He tilts his head.

"What?"

I raise the cigar to my mouth, take in a puff.

"That stillness inside, that calm before the storm, that sense of everything about to hit a shitstorm, your last few minutes as a single man, when the fragrance of a 100-year-old cigar loosens your tensed-up tissues?"

I cough, "Only 100 years? You disappoint me."

His eyes glint, "You're welcome."

I draw in another reverential puff, "I'm touched you remembered my weakness for these."

"At half a million dollars per smoke stick, well, you'd better be."

"Now who's counting their pennies, huh?" I grin.

He smirks, takes a puff of his own. "I see what you did there, by the way."

"Oh?"

"You're not fooling me any, Sin."

"Not trying, you pretend toff."

"If you wanted to marry her, you didn't need to pull this elaborate shenanigan. I mean, you could have told the rest of us that you were in love."

Love? I cough. "I barely know the woman."

The collar at my throat digs into my skin. I resist the urge to loosen another button.

"It's a pretense, 30 days and we are done."

He taps his fingers together, "Did you sign a contract with her?"

I freeze. I didn't. I was confident that the incriminating video would ensure that she'd do whatever I wanted. Besides, I was planning on letting her go as soon as I sign my deal with her father, which should be happening very, very soon.

"I don't need one."

He opens and closes his mouth, then chokes. His shoulders shake, he chortles, and tears fills his cheeks.

"Don't die on me yet." I thump his back, hard enough for him to stumble forward.

He staggers away, leans his hip against the window. "Is it a magic pussy? Is that what this is? Is she so damn succulent that your dick overpowers your brain now?"

"Told you already, don't—"

"Yeah, yeah." He straightens, "Don't talk about her that way. I know. And honestly, no disrespect to whatever there is between the two of you..."

"Which is nothing—"

He cups a hand behind his ear, "Are you listening to yourself? No contract, asshole. You've left yourself open to some crazy-arse shit here. Possible sexual harassment in the workplace. No pre-nup either. If she doesn't take you to the cleaners by the end of this..."

I set my jaw, "She won't."

Fact is, it honestly hadn't crossed my mind to draw up a contract with her. Why is that? Do I trust her that much? Am I so sure about my ability to control her? Did I really think that I would be able to manipulate her into doing exactly what I want? An interesting conundrum. One I haven't found myself in ever before. I survey the ash building up on the cigar.

He scans my features. "You have something on her?"

I tilt my head.

"Something incriminating enough that it'll make her bow to your every whim?"

I allow my mouth to curl with a smirk.

His muscles unwind. "Well then." He puffs out the fragrant smoke. "I want to believe you..."

So do I.

"—and for your sake, I hope you come out of this unscathed. Considering...."

I slip a hand into my pocket, "Do pray tell."

"Clearly, you are slipping."

I frown. "What do you mean?"

"This may be a fake ceremony, but it is legally binding. It has to be for it to work. So clearly, that's what's making you nervous."

"Not." I raise my cigar to my mouth. My fingers are rock steady. "I know what I am doing, but do you? Considering the £150,000 you spent on this cigar—"

"Its £500,000..." His cheeks hollow as he takes a puff, "per smoke stick."

"Hmm." I narrow my gaze, watch him through the fragrant cloud. Bastard outdid himself on this one. He never did know when to stop.

"Consider it my gift." He raises his cigar in a mock toast. "After all, it's not every day that my worst enemy gets married."

I snarl.

"Sorry, I mean," he air quotes, " 'mock married.' " He speaks out of the corner of his mouth, "Without any kind of paperwork to cushion the fall."

Luckily for him, I ignore that last part. "It's not going to distract me from my ambitions, nor take away my instinct for business."

He chuckles, "I think thou doth protest too much."

I bare my lips, "We'll see, shall we?"

Summer

Alphahole: Ms. West, have you forgotten that you are getting married in precisely 3 hours?

Me: I am trying my best.

Alphahole: Stop being obstinate.

Me: Stop being so dominating.

Alphahole: I was born this way.

Me: You know what they say about people who try too hard to project themselves?

Silence

Me: It's that old saying about how those with small balls try to overcompensate in all other fields of life.

Alphahole: I can assure you my balls are bigger than normal size, as is my dick. As you must have guessed from the way you thrust your pelvis wantonly against my groin.

Me: Anyone ever told you that you're crude? And does anyone use the word 'wanton' anymore?

Alphahole: I do.

Bet the jerk has his lips curled in that smirk. My thighs clench. Damn it, can't I have a single normal interaction with this man without getting hot and bothered? I wipe my clammy palms on my shirt.

Alphahole: Are you there, Ms. West?

Me: Does it make a difference?

Alphahole: No.

Jerk.

Alphahole: As long as you turn up for the wedding, I don't care what you wear.

It'd serve him right if I turned up naked.

Alphahole: Don't do that.

Me: You have no idea what I was thinking.

Alphahole: Don't I? You're too predictable, Pink.

Bite me. I am going to spring a surprise on him, and he won't see it coming.

Alphahole: You won't have the courage to do that after our time together, either.

Me: Stop putting words in my mouth.

Alphahole: That was too easy.

Me: What? Being able to predict that your ego has no bounds? You think you can manipulate anyone and get away with it.

Alphahole: Can't I? I've gotten you to toe the line thus far, haven't I?

I toss the phone aside. Begin to pace. Think of the money in the bank. The million that was already deposited. Another million on the day of the wedding—today—then for every day after until we reach the thirty days, or my father agrees to join forces with him, whatever comes first. If he wasn't holding that video recording over me, I'd have walked out by now.

If he hadn't been holding it over me, I wouldn't have agreed to this in the first place, either. Damn, poverty sucks. Except, I am no longer poor. I just have to get through the next twenty-five days. That's all.

The phone vibrates again and I ignore it. And again. After the third buzz, I swoop down and pick it up.

Alphahole: That was uncalled for, I'm sorry.

Wait, what, he apologized?

Alphahole: Don't expect me to do so again.

Just as I was thinking he had no heart he had to go and break the illusion. That's not good. I don't want to see him as human, for he isn't. He's a freakin' heartless monster and I am best served thinking of him as one.

Alphahole: You there?

No.

Me: Yes.

Alphahole: The doc gave you a clean bill of health.

Right. He'd arranged for his personal doctor to check me out in the privacy of my bedroom yesterday. Of course, he could have warned me about it, but no, why would he? The doctor had shown up and I'd been livid.

I'd wanted to refuse... until common sense had won out.

When he'd recommended I use the contraceptive injection, I'd agreed. Best to be protected. The last thing I want is to become pregnant. I swallow.

Alphahole: I'm clean too.

Riiight... I chew on my lips. What does that mean?

Are we going to have sex on the first night of our marriage? My cheeks flush. God, I sound so archaic. Besides, no way do I want to have to sleep with him... Do I?

Silence. A beat. Another, then the dots jump on the screen.

Alphahole: I know what you're thinking.

Me: So you can read my mind now?

Alphahole: Very easily. Right now, you're stressing out that I plan to seduce you on our first night. You're wrong.

Eh?

Alphahole: I'm going to take what is already mine.

Me: I'm not yours.

Alphahole: We'll see.

Me: Fuck you.

Alphahole: I am counting on it. Oh... and Pink

What?

Alphahole: Don't embarrass me.

Summer

Embarrass him, huh? If he hadn't goaded me, I wouldn't have fallen in with Karma's plan.

I survey myself in the mirror.

What had I been thinking when I'd agreed to wear the dress that she had created? I'd gone along with the idea, because... yeah, I did want to shock him. Show him that he shouldn't underestimate me. I toss my head.

This entire pretend wedding is a car crash waiting to happen. It's inevitable that everything is going to go wrong. I am nudging it along.

It is his fault, for treating me like... like worse than dirt. Like I don't exist.

Hell, he treats that damn old school watch of his with more affection. At least he massages it, touches it, tinkers with it. He gives it attention.

Me? He dismisses as if I am an errant child, or a dimwit who has no idea what I am doing. Which I don't, I admit. Else why would I have landed in this situation? Faking a wedding that I very much want to be real.

I tighten my fingers around the bouquet of flowers.

There, I've acknowledged it to myself, huh? Although logic dictates that I abhor him, my body cannot deny the effect he has on me.

It isn't that he's good-looking. Not only.

It's that complete confidence that clings to his every move, the way he seems to walk into a space and own it, how everyone else in the vicinity acknowledges he is the most lethal of them, how he wears his arrogance with absolute single-mindedness. A cockiness that the world owes him—a mindset that is so alien, so different from everything that I am used to—a sureness I wish I possessed.

Is that what this is? Am I envious of everything he represents? What I lost out on, thanks to the error of my parents? Except, that isn't me. I've always been proud of being my own person and making my way through this world on my own steam. I don't need anyone to rescue me. I don't.

So, what am I doing here? I glance down at my posy.

Wildflowers. White, pink, and violet blooms mixed with green. Thankfully, it isn't the expensive bouquet that Amelie had wanted me to order.

It isn't that I was averse to spending his money... More that every single option that Amelie had shown me in the catering, the decorations, the entire idea of how I'd wanted a wedding to be, well, it had all felt strange.

I'll be honest. I've never spent time imagining my dream wedding.

When you grow up trying to figure out how to survive and where your next meal is going to come from—especially after you had all of it one day and it had been taken from you the next—well, you learn not to think too far out in the future. You really do try and focus on the now and what you have. Maybe it also had to do with my mother's slight obsession with seizing the moment.

Perhaps she had an intuition for things to come, that her life would be brutally cut short one day when she'd contracted blood poisoning. I mean, for hell's sake, what were the odds, huh? The dye from the hand painted fabrics she'd loved wearing had bled into her skin and prolonged exposure to it had killed her. Hell. The mind boggles.

It had wrecked my father enough for him to throw himself into his work.

He'd neglected me and Karma, progressively, and one day had not returned home. Apparently, he hadn't been the above-board businessman he'd made himself out to be. He'd made a series of bad business decisions, then borrowed from the Mafia—bad idea, Dad—and when he hadn't been able to pay them back, he'd abandoned us to the system and left the country. The coward.

We'd been lucky to be able to escape with our lives. At least our foster homes hadn't been too bad—I'd heard some of the horror stories of the other kids. I'd thanked our stars that we'd ended up with people who, while they weren't too loving, hadn't been monsters either. And they hadn't separated me and Karma. We'd stayed together until I'd turned sixteen and found myself at a homeless hostel. I had tried to protect her, but my sister's illness had made her far older than her years, too soon.

I raise the blooms to my nose and inhale. The scent of the open countryside envelops me. Whoever had plucked this had known exactly which blooms to fold into the mix.

There's a knock on the door.

"Come in." I face the mirror and survey myself.

Footsteps sound, then Karma's face appears next to mine. "Wow," she breathes.

"Is that good or bad?"

"Umm." She tilts her head. "You look..."

"Go on." I grip my bouquet until my knuckles whiten.

"Nice flowers. Your favorites?"

I glance down at the burst of colors. "Aren't they beautiful? Wonder who got them for me?"

"Maybe Amelie or Isla?" She leans forward, brushes a piece of lint from one of the panels of my dress.

"Maybe." I shift my weight between my feet. "And you haven't answered the question."

Her lips quirk, "Which one?"

"You know," I huff out a breath. "How do I look, Karma?"

She puts distance between us, looks me up and down. Her eyebrows knit. "You look..." She bites her cheek.

"That bad, huh?" I swallow.

"You look... Not as I expected." Her face breaks into a grin. "You're going to make such an impression."

Oh. The breath rushes out of me. "Not too much?"

"Yes, much." She brushes away a strand of hair from my temple. "Isn't that what you were going for? To shock him?"

"Kind of." My heart begins to hammer. "Maybe I should forget about—"

"No."

She grips my hand. "You are strong, gorgeous, one hell of a woman. No one can show you up. No one. You are the queen of all you survey, who can have anything you want. You were born to live an epic life, on your terms. You are going to fulfill your destiny and no alphahole can take that away from you, for you own your power. You are you."

I blink, "Wow."

Her eyebrows furrow, then she straightens herself, pulls away. I swoop down and grab her arm. "Did you mean everything you said?"

She hesitates, then glances away.

"Do you believe in me, Karma?"

She draws in a breath, then tilts her head up. "I do."

Something in my chest lightens. Tears prick the backs of my eyes, and I blink them away. "Thank you."

She nods, shuffles her feet, then peers up at me from under her eyelids, "I also believe in this dress that I created for you."

"Ha." I toss my head. "I can't believe you turned it around so quickly." I grip her shoulder. "Thank you, Sis."

Her chin wobbles.

For a second, I am sure she's going to hug me. I move forward, but she ducks, drops down, straightens the skirt of my dress.

"Your little speech earlier," I wrinkle my brow. "It wasn't from a movie, was it?"

"No."

"Then?"

"Something I read in a self-help book."

"You read self-help books?"

"Naah." She hesitates, "Happened to find it on the tube. I read a few pages, and the sentiment of it stuck with me."

"Hmm."

She rises to her feet, "I really do love the dress. It's audacious, outrageous. It's so not you, that it is you."

I straighten, survey myself, one last time. It made sense in a funny Karma-esque way. "You're right. This time."

She meets my gaze in the mirror. Her eyes are too bright.

"Do you have something in your eyes, Karma?"

"Of course not." She turns her head aside to wipe her cheek. "Come on, you want to be on time."

"On the contrary." I grin. "Let's not."

"Just because she likes the same bizzaro crap you do doesn't make her your soul mate."

-500 days of Summer. Director: Marc Webb

Sin

"She's late."

I crack my neck, shift my weight from foot to foot.

"Where the fuck is she?" I rub the back of my neck, "I hate being kept waiting."

"Better get used to it, old chap." Saint smirks from his position by the window.

"The fuck is that supposed to mean?"

"Simmer down."

"Don't tell me what to do," I grumble, begin to pace.

It's not that I am uncomfortable... Okay, maybe a little. Not because I am the cynosure of all eyes. I thrive on the attention. But the fact that I am here, cooling my heels, in front of the people who know me for always being in charge, the one who calls the shots and ensures everything always runs to plan—that she is making me wait? Unacceptable.

This woman is taking advantage of the fact that I can't do much about it. Not yet, not right now in front of the group of people assembled in the back garden of my house.

Summer loves this space—I'd caught her walking among the flower beds, her head raised to the sun to catch the sun rays—and no that's not why I chose it as the venue for the nuptials. It was practical. That was the only reason... right? I rub the back of my neck.

"Good thing it's not raining, huh?" Saint stares up at the clear blue skies.

"So that's what we've been reduced to talking about, the weather, huh?"

"I'm being considerate of your pride." He shoots me a sideways glance. "Better unlearn that attitude of yours. It's downhill all the way from here."

"Shut your trap, you fuck."

His grin widens, "This is only the beginning, her making you wait at the altar. When you're enjoying marital bliss, don't forget about the reason why you embarked on this trip."

"You have it all wrong."

"Do I?" He arches an eyebrow.

I drag my finger around the collar of my shirt.

A trickle of sweat runs between my shoulder blades. Could do with some cloud cover about now. But, of course, on the one day that I'd counted on the weather behaving per norm, everything has to turn out to be as surprise. I glance at the watch on my wrist. She's fucking late.

"Fifteen minutes." Edward's voice interrupts my thoughts.

I peer up at him. "Sixteen minutes now."

"She's the bride."

"It's a fucking pretend wedding." I lower my chin.

"Not from where I am." One side of his lip arches up. The Father is enjoying himself.

"Don't get too used to it." I growl.

"I don't know, from where I am, it's a wonderful sight, seeing you all uncomfortable, Sin."

"Won't last forever. And I demand a 25% share of the profits of FOK Media."

"No way." Edward shakes his head.

"There you are." Saint snickers. "Wondered how long it would take for the asshole part of you to show up."

"It was never gone. I had it temporarily shielded out of deference to the rest of you."

Edward frowns. "Here I thought your bride was finally beginning to round off your edges."

"Never." I crack my neck from side to side, trying to loosen the muscles that have somehow knotted themselves up. Where the fuck is she, anyway?

I glance at my watch again. "Seventeen minutes." I breathe. "No one... No one has kept me waiting this long."

"There's always a first time." Saint rocks back on his heels.

"Wait until you stand in this position, dipshit."

He chuckles, "Never gonna happen."

"Never fucking say never." I grumble.

"Think you can refrain from swearing for another few minutes?" Edward stares past me, then stiffens.

An electric tingle runs down my back. She's here. Silence descends. A complete and utter stillness. My skin tightens. My throat closes. I should turn, I should. I stare straight ahead. There's no music—my choice. This wasn't supposed to be a fucking happy occasion. It is a formality. I needed enough gravitas to convince her old man, who is about five minutes away from the house, so Peter has informed me. I'd timed this down to the last detail. Good thing they'd been stuck in traffic and had taken a little longer than expected to arrive. That's how much to the last detail I had orchestrated this little circus; the only thing I hadn't expected was for my bride to screw it all up—back up a second. Not my bride—my business partner. No, hostage, in this little arrangement that will ensure I can finally put the ghosts of my past behind me and... Her scent envelops me. Cherries and caramel laced with that mysterious note of anticipation. A uniquely feminine scent that could belong to only one woman. Her.

Don't turn, don't.

I pivot, and every muscle in my body tenses. All of my senses hone in on her. My vision narrows; the blood drums at my temple. She didn't. No way.

A long line breaks through the slit on the skirt that runs to mid-thigh. The lace and chiffon clings to the curves of her waist, nipped in to show off that impossibly tiny circumference, that begs me to wrap my hands around her body and haul her close; before I place her across my lap and spank that luscious butt for what she's done. That dress... She doesn't wear it, she owns it. It is her.

The fact that it is a neon pink sets off the color of her hair that pours in glorious waves around her face. Bold. Daring. It personifies that streak of sassiness that she tries so hard to hide, and which slips through the cracks in her facade anyway, especially when I push her. She can't control it. No more than I can rein in the desire that rushes to the fore. My groin hardens. My dick twitches. I take in the proud thrust of her breasts, ensconced in the delicate lace that runs up her chest, and over one shoulder.

I bet if she turns around, I'll see the plunging dip of the dress at the back. My fingers tingle. How dare she exhibit herself so?

Next to me, Saint draws in a sharp breath.

I don't need to turn to find out that he's turned on. All of my friends—no, strike that —none of them deserve to be called anything except my most hated acquaintances because they've seen her in that dress.

I want to tear the fabric off of her, bury my nose in the cloth and drag her essence into my lungs. Right before I spin her around, bend her at the waist and claimed her for myself. Imprint myself in every orifice of her body, until every pore on her skin oozes with my sperm. Fuck.

"Who is she?"

"What do you mean?" I growl. "She's my bride."

"Not her." Saint jerks his chin. "The other woman, in the golden-brown sheath who just walked in."

The hell is he talking about?

There is no other woman here except the siren wrapped in that delectable dress that I am going to ensure will be burned. Only so that she'll never tease me again with the hint of flesh that peeks from between that slit as she takes a step forward. Another.

Summer's gaze locks with mine, holds.

Her hips sway under the silky soft fabric. Her cheeks are pale, despite the blusher. Good. I narrow my gaze and her throat moves as she swallows. She is within a foot of me when I glare at her. Her pupils dilate. Her chin trembles. She pauses.

Don't give up now, little Bird. Come closer. Closer.

She inches toward me. Her scent deepens. The pulse at the base of her throat flutters with such speed that I am sure she is not only afraid but also aroused. As turned on as I am in this instant, my cock jumps forward, and I widen my stance to accommodate my arousal. Bet it's clear to the rest how aroused I am, but what-bloody-ever.

She takes the final step that brings her within a few inches of me. Nervousness vibrates off of her. She blinks and the chemistry between us seems to ratchet up. Takes another step, then pitches forward.

Summer

Fuck, fuckity, fuck.

The ground comes up to meet me. This is it; I am going to fall and ruin every bit of impact I've created so far. Gonna make a fool of myself after all that effort I went to, to appear sexy and alluring. So damn clumsy. How could you do this, Summer? I squeeze my eyes shut, wait for the inevitable collision with the floor. A hard band fastens around my waist and I am tugged against a very hard, broad expanse of what seems to be pure, unforgiving, muscle. No, no, no. I hold onto the bouquet of flowers. Then scent of bergamot and expensive leather fills my senses.

"You need to look where you are going." His warm breath sears my cheek.

The hair on my forearms stands on end.

"Open your eyes, Bird."

I shake my head.

"You can't postpone it forever. You may as well accept your fate."

Never. I'll fight this... this thing between us, no matter that the attraction thrums at the edges of my nerves. All of my brain cells seem to have turned into mush. My knees tremble. His hold on my waist tightens.

I peer up and my gaze collides with his.

Silver flecks flare deep in those indigo eyes.

"You need to be careful about what you decide to take on."

I tremble and he straightens me. I try to pull away. His grip on my chin tightens. He peers into my eyes, the intensity almost a physical caress. My thighs clench. Damn him and this overwhelming physical response I always have to him. I straighten my spine, hold his attention. Will not look away. Will not. One side of his lips curls. He tilts his head. In acknowledgement? An acceptance of the battle lines that I have drawn?

Why am I intent on making this difficult for the two of us? Why can't I fall in line with whatever he has in his mind, toe the line, and then walk away unharmed? Because that is never going to happen. If I give in to him, he'll only want more. The only way to come out of this in one piece is to hold my own. To dig in my heels and show him that he can't take me for granted. If that means I have to resort to grandstanding, then so be it.

"I know exactly what I am taking on." I jut out my chin.

"Oh?"

I tilt my head back, not breaking our connection. "Question is, do you?"

His nostrils flare; the skin around his eyes tightens. A cloud of heat spools off of his body and slams into my chest. I gasp.

The weight of his dominance seems to intensify, pinning me in place. I can't move. Can't breathe. Can't turn away from the heavy weight of his presence which seems to coil around me, squeezing my hips, my thighs. I gulp. A bead of sweat slides down between my breasts and his gaze darts down, then swivels up to my face. His lips curl in that infernal smirk. All of my nerve-endings seem to flare at once. Damn the man.

"Typically, you'd kiss the bride after the wedding, but perhaps you want to do the honors now?"

A voice cuts through the tension between us. I stiffen.

He leans in closer, drops his head until our eyelashes tangle. I part my lips. Do it. Please. My breath catches.

Sinclair lets go of me so suddenly that I stumble, then right myself. Jerk.

I clutch the stems of my flowers with such force that my nails bite through the tender stems and into the palms of my hands. Why did I think this day would be any different from the other times we've spent together, eh?

He turns to face the minister. "I can wait."

A hot feeling stabs inside my chest. I didn't want him to kiss me anyway. So why is there a heaviness behind my eyes? I raise my head, stare forward.

The minister's lips move. I don't hear what he's saying. I stare past him at the wall at the far side of the property—the water rippling down the surface, the birds that fly off a tree to the side, taking with them, the last of my composure. My lips tremble. Damn the man.

"Sinclair Amadeus Sterling, do you take Summer Cora West as your lawfully wedded wife?"

"I do."

I hear the words as if from far away. Above me, the wind picks up. A gust blows past me and I stagger. I can't do this. I can't. The world swims around me. The minister's face fades in and out in front of my eyes. I. Can't.

A wide palm grips my fingers, coaxes me to loosen my grip. I watch as the bouquet slips from my fingers. He catches it midair, hands it to someone next to me.

Sinclair tugs at my arm and I turn to face him.

Indigo eyes fill my vision. Turquoise and cerulean and so many shades of cyan that they seem to reflect the skies overhead.

"Summer Cora West, do you take Sinclair Amadeus Sterling as your lawfully wedded husband to love, respect and to obey?"

I blink. Obey? Of course, he'd highlight that, huh?

His gaze intensifies. Those dark pupils seem to sweep away all barriers and tear right into my soul. He can see me naked. All of my fears and hopes and aspirations—he owns all of them. I've been his from the moment I set eyes on him. When he'd commanded me, the bartender, that I'd had enough. When he'd swept into my life with the force of a hurricane sweeping aside all protests. I never stood a chance. I'd added my yes to his every command. And yet I am here, standing in front of him, trying to make a last stand. A ball of emotion plugs my throat. I try to draw in a breath and my lungs burn. I shake my head. Open my mouth.

His glare deepens. Then he drops his head and closes his mouth over mine. He thrusts his tongue between my lips, draws on any remaining air I had left. He sucks from me, drinks from me, buries his teeth into my lower lip with such force that I taste blood. Pain sweeps down my spine. My thighs spasm. All thoughts drain from my mind. A silence replaces the screaming echoes in my head. He softens the kiss, swipes his tongue across my lower lip. Once, twice. A trembling springs to life, low in my womb. A moan bleeds from my mouth and he swallows it up. His entire body seems to shudder. Nah, must be my imagination. The next second he pulls away. Searches my features. He must have found what he was looking for, for he nods.

"Ask her again." He addresses the priest without taking his eyes off of me.

"Sin..." the priest's voice has an edge of something hard to it.

"Do it." He growls.

Silence for another beat, then the priest asks the question.

Sinclair doesn't break the connection between us. He rubs his thumb over my wrist, a gentle circle that leaves a trail of sparks in his wake. I gulp.

"Summer?" The priest's voice coaxes me.

Sweat beads my palms.

"I do."

My heartbeat ratchets up. My guts churn. A gust of wind blows my hair about my face and I shiver.

He pushes the strands of hair away from my temples. "You did well, Bird." His lips quirk.

Something warm coils in my chest. I can't tear my gaze from his features. Those high cheekbones, that hooked nose, and the pouty thrust of his lower lip.

"Do you have the rings, Sinclair?"

His features harden.

"Sin?"

His jaw tics. "No rings."

Oh! I blink. What had I expected? That he'd have rings for the both of us? I mean, I hadn't consciously thought of it, to be honest. I'd assumed, though, that he'd surprise me. And he had, just not in the way I'd expected.

His features harden and he scans my features again. If he wants a reaction, he'll be disappointed. It's better this way. No physical signs that there is anything between us... Nothing except that piece of footage which he holds over me, which ensures that I'll comply with his every demand. I firm my lips.

"... I now proclaim you man and wife. You may now kiss the bride."

He lowers his head, I turn my face, and his lips brush my cheek.

He whispers, "Enjoy your last few seconds of freedom, for soon you'll be caged."

I draw in a sharp breath, peer up to find his lips curved in a smirk. He tilts his head, and the fire in those eyes switches off. How does he do it? Blow hot one second and cold the next. Why can't I be that heartless, that single-minded in my quest? Because I am too human, too emotional. Too good for him. I am no match for his iron will, the sheer strength of determination that resides in every pore of his body. And I am wedded to him... At least, for the next twenty-five days. Anger floods my chest and my guts heave. I raise my palm.

He shakes his head. "You'll regret it."

He's right.

The realization sinks into me, at the same time a trembling grips my body. The pulse thuds at my temples; adrenaline laces my blood. I need to get away from him before I have a complete breakdown. I pivot and rush down the path I had taken earlier, when a man steps in front of me.

Tall, broad shoulders, gray streaks his temples. His green eyes with specks of gray similar to mine brighten with recognition.

"Summer, look at you, my little girl, all grown up."

33

Sin

"Father?" Her spine tenses.

The older man walks toward her.

"I'm sorry I wasn't here to walk you down the aisle."

I'd made sure of that. One of the many wedding gifts I'd had in store for my new bride.

Her father extends his hand, and she flinches. He folds his arm around her and draws her in for an embrace.

She stands stiffly in the circle of his arms as he pats her back.

She cringes and I clench my fists. Of course, I hadn't expected the meeting between them to be effusive. After all, the man had abandoned his daughters and left them to their own fate. But hey, I'm not completely heartless. I had given her enough warning that he would be here... She hadn't known exactly when and I'd made sure it would be at her weakest. I'd wanted to see her fall apart in front of her father. Wanted to see how he'd react to seeing her after all this time. Well, I have my answer. The bastard is gloating at the chance to use her to further his own interests, while Summer is in complete shock.

If she'd been close to falling apart earlier, clearly, she's reached the end of her tether.

Adam's features twist. He glances past her and his gaze locks with mine. I tilt my head.

What will he do next? How will he orchestrate the rest of the meeting on which depends the rest of his future? This is what I excel at, right? Putting the pawns together, watching their interaction, enjoying their discomfort, and waiting for something to give. It's how I've won my business successes. Constantly on the move, looking for my next victim, which in this case, happens to be him.

I should be happy, celebrating how I am so very close to getting revenge for everything I had lost. So, why is my heart heavy? Why is there a burning sensation in my gut?

Adam's lips twist in a half smile. He grips her arm; she pulls away.

He wraps his arm around her shoulders and every muscle in her body goes rigid. Fuck this. I cross the distance to them.

"Aren't you going to introduce us, Summer?"

She doesn't react.

I slide my arm around her waist, tug her close.

Adam steps back, a gleam in his dark eyes.

Bastard had been trying to get a response out of me. He'd been trying to gauge how far my feelings for his daughter actually go. Have I underestimated him? I frown. Did I make a mistake by calling him to be witness to this wedding?

Does Adam actually care about his daughter or is he trying to figure out how much I do, then use it against me?

It doesn't matter. I'll find a way to get what I want from him. I always do. Right now, I need to get my wife away from the cause of her discomfort.

Her body trembles and I tuck her into my side.

"Adam Rhodes." The older man thrusts out his hand. "Pleasure to meet you."

I glare at his palm, then tip my chin up, "Can't say the same."

Summer shifts her weight from foot to foot.

I rub the curve of her hip, and she draws in a breath. Some of the tension seems to drain out of her. Good.

"Well, at least you're straight talking. We have that in common."

"Do we?" I thrust out my chin.

He raises his hands, "You invited me, Sinclair. When do we talk about the business proposition?"

My gut clenches and I tighten my hold on Summer. "You came this far for your daughter's wedding, the least you could do is pretend to be happy on her behalf."

"Hmm." He taps his chin. "Oh, I think my daughter understands how happy I am on her behalf." He peers sideways. "Don't you, Summer?"

She drops her head and her features fold into a hardened mask. I've never seen Summer this... cold, this defeated. She's been sassy, full of life, angry and upset... but always, always she's worn her emotions on her sleeve. It's one of the things I've come to expect of her, that she can't hide from me. That is also her appeal. It gives me the security that she'll speak her mind, challenge me, always get a rise from me. It is a fucking turn on. It's also what I miss the most right now. I don't relish seeing her this defeated, this on the verge of being broken... Only I get to do that.

"My wife is tired."

Summer doesn't react to my using that term aloud. Damn it, that isn't good. Why isn't she saying something?

"I think she needs to get some rest."

"Of course," he angles his body, "but first I want her to meet someone."

"Victoria," he beckons to the woman behind him. "Come dear, meet your stepdaughter."

A woman steps forward. She's wearing an exquisite golden-brown dress that falls to below her knees. The cut clings to her curves and highlights her pale skin. Her dark hair is a lustrous cloud about her shoulders. She's at least two decades younger than Adam, about Summer's age. Broad forehead, sharp features, her ethereal beauty is enhanced by the haunted look in her eyes.

Behind me, I hear a sharp inhalation of breath. Saint draws abreast with me. I glance sideways and find him staring at Victoria.

Victoria frowns then inches away from Adam. Her movement also takes her closer to Saint, who stares between the two of them.

"Summer, it's lovely to meet you." Victoria stretches out a hand.

Summer swallows. "I didn't realize..."

"That you had a stepmother?"

"...that I had a father." She spits out the words, then straightens.

Adam's jaw firms. "I was hoping you two could get acquainted."

Saint shuffles his feet; his hands are clenched at his sides. Huh? It's as if the man is upset about something.

Victoria's lips twist, "I didn't mean for this to come as such a surprise. I wish there had been a way I could have warned you of our coming... but..."

Summer nods, "You don't need to apologize." Her gaze travels to her father, her eyes narrowing, "I understand how it could have been."

No doubt, the bastard planned this out, springing his new wife on his daughter. I clench my fists at my sides.

Victoria glances from Summer to me, "Perhaps, we can catch up once you are recovered from your wedding and the honeymoon—"

"There is no honeymoon." I interject.

Summer's body tenses again.

Damn it, I hadn't meant for it to come out quite that way... Okay, so I had planned to drop that little piece of knowledge at the most opportune time, which is clearly now, seeing the way Summer's breath caught in her chest. She tries to pull away and I grip her to me tighter.

"Not until we've sorted out the little business between us." I nod toward Adam. "Tomorrow."

Why am I postponing this meeting, one for which I've waited for so long?

I step around the couple. Summer follows my lead without protest. That's so not like her. Clearly, her father's presence has completely taken the spirit out of her. It's not exactly what I'd intended. And I don't like it, not one bit. I increase my pace, dragging her along.

I hear Saint strike up a conversation with Adam's wife, "So, Victoria, is it?"

"Mrs. Rhodes to you." Victoria cuts him off. "Are you the hired help?"

34

Summer

"Did she actually ask him that?"

I turn to Sinclair in time to see his lips twitch.

"I do believe the chemistry between Saint and your stepmother is interesting, to say the least."

"He's not the kind who'd seduce a married woman—"

Sinclair shakes his head. "Not that he has many ethics... But that's something he steers clear of. Which is one reason I find that scene intriguing."

"You could have warned me that he remarried." I tug my arm free from his and he lets me go. His warmth recedes and chills pepper my arm.

"So could you." He jerks his chin to my dress.

"It's not the same thing."

"Oh?" He tilts his head, "My wife parading herself in almost next to nothing—"

"This is a completely decent dress—"

"Not." He growls, taking the steps two at a time.

I increase my pace to keep up with him. "Aaannd... I'm only your pretend wife," I pant.

His jaw tics and a vein bulges at his temple.

"So, you can't really tell me what to do or wear, considering I don't even have your ring on my finger."

Reaching the landing leading to his room, he stops, turns to peruse my features. "Is that why you're pouting?"

I force all emotions from my features. "This is my normal resting face."

"And it's a beautiful one, too."

"Did you pay me a compliment?"

He frowns.

"Yes. No." He drags his fingers through his hair. "Maybe."

I go to brush past him and he stops me. "I had your belongings moved."

"Huh?"

He jerks his chin toward the closed double doors. "My suite."

"Bu... but."

"We need to put up enough of a front for people to buy into the pretense."

"No one's gonna pry into your living quarters, are they?"

"They wouldn't dare." He widens his stance, "Consider it a precaution. As much as I trust my staff—I wouldn't have them employed if I didn't—still, I am not taking any chances until the deal is done."

"But—"

He blows out a breath. "Look, Summer, you look beat and I could do with a rest, before we have to join the guests for dinner."

I pale.

"I don't think I can survive having to put up this pretense again today."

"Tell me about it," he mutters. The lines around his mouth seem pronounced. His hair is mussed—from standing outside and because he'd run his hands through the thick strands. Not that I had been watching him closely or anything.

"Can we have this conversation inside my suite?" He runs a finger around his collar as if he finds it particularly constricting. He isn't wearing a tie. Come to think of it, I've never seen him in one, in the little time I've known him.

He shoves open the double doors.

I hesitate.

He raises his shoulders, "Suit yourself." He disappears inside.

I shift my weight from foot to foot, grab a strand of hair and begin to chew on it. Better stop that. Don't want him to realize how nervous I am feeling right now. I walk toward the suite. Then step inside. The doors shut behind me with a snick.

The living space is massive. Three times the size of the room I had occupied. Right. Lifestyles of the rich and famous, huh? I walk to the massive window and peek outside.

A balcony wraps around the entire floor. On one side of the house the rolling slope of Primrose Hill extends down. I turn the other way and the skyline of London stretches in the distance. It's rare to get a panoramic view of the city, considering government regulations dictate that you can't build above a certain height. To see it here at will is a treat.

The sound of water running in a bath reaches me. I turn, walk toward the door that leads into the bedroom. The room sprawls out about the same size as the one I'd left behind. The pride of place is the massive king size bed that takes up almost one wall. It's draped in a royal blue, the sheets flowing down the sides.

Large pillows are thrown against the headboard, which is made of unembellished wood. At the foot of the bed is a bench, on which he's discarded his jacket.

The sound of running water grows louder. He stalks out of the bath, his shirt sleeves rolled up. I take in the veins that run up the sides of his powerful forearms. Does the man work out? He has to, considering the shape he is in. The light from the bath highlights the gap between his narrow waist and his forearms. His pants cling to his powerful thigh muscles, showing off the bulge between his legs. Is that his normal resting condition? The man's packing all right, as I discovered from my brush with that particular muscle of his anatomy.

"If you keep staring at me, I'll think you want me to exercise my husbandly duties."

My cheeks burn. I glance up at his face, to find his lips curled in that smirk that I am coming to associate with him. Why does he have to be so overpoweringly handsome, so completely sure of himself? It's part of his appeal and yet—it also makes me want to say something to show him I am not affected by him. Liar.

"Where do I sleep?"

He glances past me.

"But there's only one bed—"

"Which is wide enough for the two of us to sleep without touching each other all night.

I chew on my lower lip.

"Trust me." He looks me up and down, "I am acquainted with what you have under that dress, and while I'd love to shag you, I promise you I am not that hard up."

"That's not what it looked like when you finger fucked me in the conference room."

"There was a reason for doing that."

The video.

He prowls past me, walks toward another door at the far end and shoves it open. He glances back, "I ran a bath for you."

The hell? I walk to the bathroom door and peek inside. It's a beautiful bright space, wide enough to run the length of the bedroom and the living room, a sunken tub takes up a large portion of one entire wall. Beyond that, huge windows open out to let the sunlight inside. To the other side are twin sinks. Piles of folded towels, soap bottles, other bottles of various sizes and colors grace one of the sinks.

I pivot around and he drawls, "You're welcome, by the way."

"You had to go and spoil it by saying that?"

He leans his hip against doorway to the walk-in closet. "Ah, but that's the point. You're still trying to find something nice about me, when really, every single move of mine is calculated to ensure that I get closer to my goal."

"Your revenge, your empire, that's all that matters."

He folds his arms across that broad chest, "Is there anything else?"

"Obviously, The Wolf of Wall Street, took lessons from you."

"Actually, it was Gordon fucking Gekko." He smirks.

"This entire thing is a freakin' joke for you, huh?"

"On the contrary." His smile switches off, "I've never been more serious about anything else in my life."

A nerve throbs at his temple. His gaze intensifies.

My breath hitches, my pulse pounds, and liquid heat curls between my legs. I don't realize I've taken a step forward, until he straightens.

He nods toward the bath, "Rest up, Bird, you're going to need it."

Sin

"Surprised you went through with the reception, bro." Damian, the self-designated bartender for the evening, hands me a tumbler of whiskey. I grip the glass, toss back its contents.

He raises an eyebrow, but tops me up.

"You okay?"

"Peachy." I suck down the 200-year-old whiskey like it's going out of fashion.

"How's the bridegroom?"

I glance up to find Jace walk in, flanked by Arpad and Weston.

I scowl, "What are you doing here?"

"Wouldn't have missed seeing you hitched for the world, bro. Besides, your friends made sure I knew the date and time."

"Sinclair." A woman shoves herself between Jace and Arpad. The men move apart, and she stalks through. "How could you?"

Bloody hell! "Sienna?" I hold out my glass, Damian shakes his head. "You're drinking this way too fast. You need to be sober."

"Bollocks." I grab the bottle from Damian and top myself up. I'm halfway through emptying the contents of the glass before Sienna reaches me.

"Really, Sin. You thought you could get away with keeping this a secret?"

"I prefer to keep things low-key."

"Huh?" She props a hand on her hip, "You expect me to believe that?"

"Umm." Damn it, I don't want to lie to her.

Sienna and Jace are the only two outside of the circle of the Seven that I'd count as friends. I survey the room. The fuck do I do with this bottle anyway? Damian takes it from me. I shoot him a grateful glance, as he shakes his head and walks off. "You tell him, Sienna. He hasn't introduced his bride to us yet."

Her gaze widens. "Why, Sinclair, how could you?"

"It's not like that." I glance past the comfortable chairs arranged on the decking. Everyone who means something to me—not necessarily in the friend space, but you know what I mean—is there. They look at me with varying expressions of curiosity. There's a hum of anticipation in the air. They're waiting for the bride to arrive. Well, technically so am I, though I don't want to admit it.

A laugh breaks out from a corner, and I turn to find Amelie, engaged in animated discussion with Isla and Karma.

Weston follows my gaze. "Who's that?"

Like I care.

"Why don't you go ahead and introduce yourself? You can find out for yourself that way."

"Maybe I'll do just that, but first..." He turns to the bar and pours out two flutes of champagne. "Can't believe you trusted this wanker to man the bar." He jerks his chin at Damian.

"Hello to you, too." Damian raises his whiskey tumbler and takes a sip. "I do think I am livening up the environment quite nicely."

"Surely you mean bringing down the collective IQ of the place by a hundred, old chap?" Weston chuckles.

Sienna looks between them. "You guys are so delightfully British."

Jace saunters up, pulls her close. "It's the only time I am thankful to my old man for insisting that I go to boarding school in the UK. That accent always does it." He palms her stomach.

"As long as our son or daughter speaks like you, I'm good." She peers up at him.

Damian straightens, "When are you due?"

"We are due in less than four weeks." Jace's chest seems to expand.

Well fuck, the man's done for. Hook, line and sinker.

"I am right chuffed for the both of you." Weston straightens. "However, I see something that needs my attention." He excuses himself and walks over to Amelie.

The three women fall silent as Amelie eyes him suspiciously.

Good for her. She has street smarts written all over her, unlike my wife who is clearly trusting. She has to be for having allowed herself to be ensnared by me. And why do I keep insisting on calling her mine? When she isn't. I haven't touched her, not since that day in my conference room, when I had almost come in my pants, as I had fingered her to orgasm. The taste of her lips, the feel of that soft wet core as she had climaxed on my fingers. The hair on the nape of my neck rises.

I pivot and see her.

She stands at the doorway, the simple pale pink-colored sheath covering her from the high collar to below her knees.

I'd chosen it for her from the wardrobe I'd had delivered for her. It is the most conservative of all the dresses I'd personally picked out for her. What I hadn't counted on was that the sheer simplicity of the cut brings out her curves. It enhances her luscious figure rather than hide it. And the color... The soft pink deepens the flush of her cheeks and compliments the highlights in her hair. My mouth waters. My groin tightens.

I want to lick up the creaminess of her skin, bury my nose in her scented hair, grab the upright perkiness of her breasts and squeeze until her nipples bead, her thighs clench, and the soft flesh between her legs melts with anticipation for me. My cock. My essence inside of her, filling her up and overflowing from her every orifice. Fuck. I squeeze my eyes shut, shake my head. When I crack my eyelids open, she's still there. She surveys the room and her gaze homes in on me.

She swallows and I swear I can hear the sound from across the space of the room. She tips her chin up. My dick instantly mirrors the move. This woman... I'd sense her in a packed stadium. Blindfold me and I'll home in on her in a crowded room.

Every pore in my being snaps to attention, every muscle in my body coils with tension. If you cut me open now, my flesh would hum with the need for her. To be inside of her. To pin her to the ground with my cock and thrust into her.

Shag her, mark her, claim her.

The bloody hell—?

One make-believe almost-ceremony and I want to show the world who she truly belongs to. Why is that? Why does it matter that every damn male gaze in the room is drawn to her? And yes, they are people whom I trust, as much as I can trust anyone, and who'd never breach their loyalty for me—well, all except Saint. That twat, I don't trust. He throws me a smirk. Then crosses the floor toward her. The fuck—? What does he think he's doing?

Only when my feet eat up the ground in front of me, do I realize I am moving.

I stalk toward my newly-wedded wife—apparently being at the ceremony did not get the message home to my soon-to-be-murdered ex-friend and business partner—when a man steps in front of me.

Summer

What's wrong with him?

Sinclair pauses to speak to my father, his gaze never wavering from me. His nostrils flare; his eyebrows knit. Those indigo eyes blaze as if he's got murder on his mind. Why the hell is he so angry?

Was it something I did?

He fists his fingers at his sides; the skin stretches white at his knuckles. Huh? There's a fierceness to the set of his features that hasn't been there before.

"Jealousy suits him, don't you think?"

His friend steps in front, cutting off Sinclair from my line of sight. That is, if you could call this six-foot six-inch giant of a man—with the elegant gait and the £10,000 pound suits to rival—a friend.

He holds out his hand. "I'm Saint."

"No, you're mistaken." I tilt my head back, all the way back, to peer into his eyes. What is it with these guys? Did they put something in their water growing up, that all of them seem larger than life?

"Trust me when I say this. I've known Sin for a long time, and I've never seen him so riled up about a woman before."

"Maybe it has something to do with—" I hesitate. How much is this guy aware of Sinclair's agenda, huh?

"Revenge?" His lips quirk, "Your father?"

I nod.

"That's primary on all our minds right now. Why do you think all of us—well most of us—are here today?"

"Not for the wedding—" I mumble.

"—As much as to pin your father into a corner and make him, and the men he worked for, pay."

He holds out his arm and I take it. He leads me to the side.

I glance behind to see that the rest of the men have closed in on where Sinclair and Adam are speaking.

"What did my father do to make all of you so hellbent on revenge?" I chew on my lower lip.

Saint stiffens, "How much has Sinclair told you about what happened to us?"

"Nothing." I huff out a breath. Why would he? He doesn't have to. He doesn't owe me anything, except I am now his lawfully wedded wife. No, not even that. "He didn't have to, right? After all he—"

"—Coerced you into this wedding, huh?"

I shoot him a sideways glance, "You don't think I would have done this willingly, do you?"

"Well, he has a way with women."

"Not this one." I pull away from him and he holds on.

"It's in your interest to play along."

"Huh?"

"You want something out of this entire arrangement."

"I'm already getting—"

"Other than a monetary pay off."

"Are all of you as egotistical as him?"

"The jury is out on that. We each have our strengths." He looks up, and I follow his line of sight to the woman standing on her own, staring into the fireplace.

"And weaknesses, apparently," I mutter under my breath.

He shoots me a quick glance. "How well do you know Victoria?"

So, he doesn't want to refer to her as my stepmother, huh?

"First time I've met her."

"Ask her to meet me before she leaves for the States."

"Why?"

"I have a proposition for her."

"Why would she be interested?"

He rakes her figure from head to toe, "Trust me, women like her always are."

I stiffen. I owe nothing to Victoria, but she... is family... sort of. It isn't that I want to look out for her, or my dad... A little bit maybe. Besides, what is Saint's motivation here?

I frown. "We've only just met."

"So?" He pats my hand. "You help me, and I promise, I'll help you find a way to get even with Sterling there."

"I thought you were friends."

"Of the competitive kind.'

"Why do you want to meet her?"

"My intentions, I promise you, are..." He hesitates. "I want to get to know her better."

"You want to get in her pants."

He chuckles. "That too. I won't hurt her." He peruses my features. "Not unless she wants me to."

Does he have the same proclivities that Sinclair has hinted at? "Did whatever happened to all of you... result in the same warped tastes tainting each of you?"

He frowns, then drops my hand, "You'll have to ask Sterling that."

"I thought you were going to help me with him?"

"What do you want to know?"

"What's his weakness?"

His lip curls; he surveys me from toe to head.

"No, you're wrong."

"Yes."

"I don't understand.'

"You, Summer West, have singularly ruffled him. You've gotten under his skin to an extent you don't realize."

"What do you mean?"

"This marriage, it wasn't part of the plan."

"Oh."

"We tried to dissuade him."

"We?"

"The Seven." He makes a circular motion with his fingers.

Ah! I scan the faces of the men in the room.

"Jace isn't one of us," he adds. "The Seventh, Baron, is not here currently." Saint slides his hand into his pocket, every inch the picture of a self-assured, domineering, upper-class twat. "Sinclair feels something for you. He's so far gone in his emotions that he doesn't realize how much he is vested in this sham."

My heart begins to thud. "What are you trying to say?" I can guess, but I want him to tell me. Want to hear it in his own words.

"You, my dear, are his weakness."

A hand descends on his shoulder. I glance past Saint to find Sinclair glaring at me. "Get away from her."

"Just a conversation, old chap."

"Anything you want to say to her, goes through me."

"Hold on a second." I huff, "I am still here."

Saint steps away, "Whatever you say." He turns to me, "Ask her, will you?"

Sinclair plants his body between us, "Here, asshole," he indicates his face, "you direct your questions here."

Saint's eyebrows fly up. "Possessive much?"

"Bugger off."

"You can take the man out of the gutter, but not the upbringing that clings to every part of your core, eh?"

Every muscle in Sinclair's body goes solid. His shoulders seem to bulge, stretching the already tight fit of his shirt. He withdraws his arm and I grab it. "Don't."

The tension radiates off of him, under his skin. The warmth of his body sinks into my fingertips, travels straight to its logical destination. My core.

I dig my fingertips into his forearm. He's so big that I have to use both of my hands to circle the circumference of his muscle. "Please."

He leans forward on the balls of his feet; his jaw tics. "I am going to kill you for touching her."

I stare. What's gotten into him?

Saint glowers, "Getting tired of your empty threats, Sterling."

Oh, for heaven's sake!

I shove my body between the two of them.

Sinclair glares at Saint.

I stand on my tiptoes and grab Sin's collar.

"What the—?" He glances down.

I tug him toward me, rise up on my tiptoes and kiss him.

His lips are softer than I remembered them to be. Which must be my imagination because there's nothing soft about this man. I nibble on his lower lip, and his entire body goes solid. He stays there, unmoving. I'm trying to distract him from getting into a fight? Why?

Why does it matter to me, that I don't want him to embarrass himself in front of his friends? They know him better than I do, for much longer than I have. They are probably used to him creating a scene. But instinct had taken over, and a surge of possessiveness, maybe. My heart stutters. For that second, I'd felt a kernel of ownership over him, concern about his reputation. Or a thrill at the fact that he'd been jealous because another man had touched me? Either way, I had been stupid to act on impulse. I disentangle my arms and step back.

"Sorry." I mumble. "That was not warranted."

I angle my body with the intent of leaving. The next second his arms loop around my waist. I squeak. He hauls me up and to him. His mouth crashes down on mine. I gasp aloud and the sound is lost, consumed by him.

His tongue thrusts between my open lips, tangles with mine.

The dark taste of him fills my palate. The heat of his body slams into me, surrounds me and ties me to him. His palm cups my cheek, cradling my head, tilts my face up, deepening the kiss further. He yanks me close, until my breasts are flattened against the unforgiving wall of his chest. My nipples bead and my sex clenches. Every pore in my body seems to open with anticipation, and still, he doesn't stop.

His teeth clash with mine, his tongue laps at mine, the scent of him fills my senses. His hard thighs cradle my hips and the turgid length of his cock jumps against my core. I swallow, try to pull away, but his large fingers wrap around my neck. I stutter. He holds me in place, every millimeter of my body pressed against his, branding me, owning me, a clear signal that I am his.

I won't be able to escape him. Will not be able to leave this relationship unhurt. He's possessed my soul since the second he'd laid eyes on me, had claimed my body from the moment he'd met me. I'd been so wrong to think that I could find my way out of this, because I can't. I am caught, going to burn up in the flames that are Sinclair Sterling, for he gives no quarter. Cares for no one. Looks out for no one, except himself... and perhaps, the Seven?

A trembling sweeps up my body. My hands shake and my knees knock together. The utter rightness of my thoughts sinks into my bones. My heart begins to thud. He is every bit the untamable alpha male that his reputation pains him to be. Is that why I am so drawn to him, unable to pull away from him, as he ravages my mouth, brands me with his touch? Is that why I can't stop the moan that bleeds from my mouth? He bites down on my lower lip. I gasp. Goosebumps dot my skin. He tears his mouth from mine, and I sway.

"Look at me."

I crack open my eyelids, meet that indigo gaze. The silver flecks in them flare.

"You're mine, Bird."

I swallow. Can't look away. Can't refute the heated possessiveness in his eyes.

The sound of clapping reaches me. I wince. My shoulders shake. He wraps his arm around me, turns me around and tucks me into his side.

My hands and feet are so numb. A cold sensation slides down my back, and I shiver.

He tugs me closer, searing my side with the heat of his intention. My throat goes dry. He wants me, that much is clear. That doesn't change anything. Yet something has shifted in the last few seconds. The balance has tilted further in his favor, if that is possible. I want him, want to feel his touch on my skin. Yet everything inside of me wants to turn him away. My head spins.

The blonde man from behind the bar, steps around the barrier. Comes toward us with two glasses of Champagne. "A toast."

Sinclair takes the two glasses and hands me one.

The voices in the room quieten. A beat, another.

He releases me, only to step around to face me.

I stare at the strong cords of his throat. If I leaned in, I could press my nose to the space between them, inhale that dark edgy scent of his. I shiver.

"The moment I saw you, I knew you were the one, Summer."

A hush descends on the room. I swallow hard, and in the silence, hear the blood pound in my ears.

"Then you walked into that elevator and I was sure." He pauses, unbuttons his jacket. His white shirt clings to the hard planes of his chest, the buttons opened enough to reveal a few strands of black hair. Heat pools between my legs and I squeeze my thighs together.

"The third time I saw you, you were talking to yourself."

What? I tilt my chin up and—mistake, dammit—his gaze locks with mine.

My throat closes and my pulse begins to race. His eyes gleam with sincerity; a warmth that draws me in and insists that he's telling the truth. Is he? The skin around his eyes creases.

"That's when I fell in love with you."

I blink. This man... he's such a consummate liar. If anyone could reflect their heart in their eyes, then it would be him, in this instant.

"I knew then, I had to make you mine. To tie you to me irrevocably, so you could never leave me."

A sigh sounds from behind me. A drawn breath. Can no one here see through his pretense?

He moves closer and the chemistry between us ratchets up. His broad shoulders shut out the sight of everyone else. He could be talking only to me, revealing his true self. I watch entranced, a part of me applauding at the show he's putting on.

"For, you complete me."

He did not just say that.

The most overrated movie dialogue of all time; and he's using it at this precise moment.

If he'd wanted to cut right through my heart, he couldn't have done it better. Oh, he's smart, this man. He knows me too well. Knows how to throttle every last one of my silly desires.

Someone claps, and another, and a third joins in.

Without anyone in the room realizing what he's done.

"I am the luckiest man alive to be able to call you my wife."

I turn away, tears pricking my eyes. My throat closes. Pressure builds at my temples.

"Summer Sterling."

The complete confidence in his tone lashes me about my shoulders. I strain against the pull he exerts on me, force myself to take another step forward. And another.

"Can I call you by my name?"

I pause. My feet refuse to move. Damn this man. How can he throw me down one moment, then lift me up high above the clouds, make me reach for the sun the next?

Doesn't he realize how cruel it is when he does that?

It will leave me floundering in the gutter, mired in the throes of the passion that laces his words; the one that compels me to turn around and swallow.

"Never."

37

Sin

She wasn't supposed to be this smart, this magnificent, this able to match me step for step.

After that rejoinder to my completely unplanned speech—yeah, that's how much she's managed to throw me off course—the entire room had gone silent. Anger had crawled down my spine, mixed with fierce pride.

Then the room had erupted in applause.

"Bravo." Arpad had come forward and kissed her on both cheeks. I hadn't stopped him, only because the tosser's heart is keen on someone else. Besides, it is a typical Gaelic affectation, one that I'd let him get away with, this once.

Her friends had surrounded her. Saint had held back. Good. Guess he'd gotten the message, finally. Don't hold your breath.

I'd stepped forward and the crowd had parted.

Had approached my new bride. "Touché, Darling." I'd raised my glass at her, and she'd shot me a look, one filled with so much anger that my dick had jumped to attention. Fuck.

She'd jutted out her chin, held my attention, refused to cave in as I'd glared at her; and that took a lot of courage. Not even the Seven—except Saint, maybe—would have taken up the gauntlet I'd thrown down. She had.

She'd known what I had been up to; that I'd used her love for movie trivia against her. I hadn't been kidding when I'd said that I was a master at it—an old love, that I had forgotten and which she'd rekindled in the past few days. I was using it to undermine her. It could have very much been code language that I was speaking. I had intended the underlying meaning for her, had no idea if she'd pick up on it. Especially the last movie title I had pulled on her? It wasn't a mainstream Hollywood film but an Indie flick based on a novel. The fuck? Those forgotten loves from my childhood... of reading, running in the countryside. Those had been idyllic days before her father had changed my life forever.

It's why I had tracked her down, ensured that she'd have to agree to my plans. Only she'd overthrown them completely. She'd turned out to be something completely different. She may be younger than me in years, except she makes up for it by her sheer determination. That hunger for survival which had kept me going all through the time that the Seven and I had almost lost our lives—? I sense that naked intent in her too. She's my perfect foil. I couldn't have chosen a better life-partner if I had set out to intentionally find one. I stiffen. The accuracy of my words sinks into my blood, confirming what I already knew. I need to stop this crazy one-track road to my destruction. Need to focus on the end goal. The big finish I have been setting up for so long.

The end of her father, destroying him so he no longer has the will to survive. Which, means one thing—taking away his money, his freedom, his new wife, and any remaining connection to his daughters.

And getting permanently tangled up in her life, with her relationship to him always at the forefront of my mind, is unacceptable. It is time I fuck her out of my system.

I glance up from the window of my bedroom, twist my neck to find her by the entrance. I'd made our excuses and hustled her here.

Not that anyone would have missed us.

Each of the Seven knew what was expected of them. All of the players were assembled on the lawn below. They'd do their bit. It was time I put my own plan in action.

"Shut the door."

She trembles, and I tilt my head.

She firms her lips, turns and slams the doors inward. They close with a soft snick.

"Look at me."

She hesitates.

I wait a beat, another.

"Don't keep me waiting, Bird."

She pivots to face me. Her fingers curl into fists at her sides. Guess I pissed her off, huh?

I jerk my chin and she takes a step forward. Another, until she reaches the bed.

"Stop."

She pauses.

"Undress."

She stiffens.

This is when she protests, yells at me, or better still, turns and rushes out to appeal to our guests, who are partying below.

Instead, she reaches behind.

I hear the hiss of a zipper and fuck me but I'm instantly hard.

She raises her hand to the neckline, tugs the material down one shoulder, then the other. Her movements are precise; her fingers tremble. The dress whispers down to pool at her hips.

My mouth waters; my chest hurts. "Take it off completely."

She shimmies out of the outfit. It pools at her ankles and she kicks it aside. She stands, chest thrust out, the perfect globes of her breasts bared. I rake my gaze down her chest and her nipples harden. Down the concave of her stomach to the satin triangle of her panties.

I glance at the scrap of cloth, then at her face.

Her cheeks pale.

I raise my eyebrow and she sets her jaw. Then shoves her underwear down and kicks it off. I drop my gaze to the flesh between her thighs, the completely bare flesh with the tiny slit at its base that glistens pink in the late evening sunlight.

My cock thickens. A pulse drums at my wrists, at my temples, even in my fucking balls. The fuck is she doing to me? I need to be inside of her before I explode right here in in my pants.

Her fingers clench at her sides, "Happy?"

Not even close.

"Get on the bed, on your hands and knees."

Her chest heaves. Her beautiful green pupils dilate. From anger? From lust? I am going to find out. "Do it."

She draws in a breath, then clambers onto the bed. On her elbows and knees, her sweet butt thrust out in the air. My dick lengthens. My throat closes. She has such a hold on me, and she doesn't realize it. I plan to keep it that way.

I stalk over to her, stand at the foot of the bed, "Open wider."

She wriggles her hips, then increases the 'V' between her thighs. The blush pink of her pussy glistens between her legs. The blood empties to my groin so fast that my head spins.

I lean forward, cup her arse. She whimpers.

Drag my thumb down the valley between her butt cheeks. She shudders. A moan bleeds from her lips. Her spine bends.

I pull back and let my palm connect with her arse. She hiccoughs.

"You defied me."

Crack. I slap her curved behind and her entire body jerks. She huffs.

"In front of everyone."

I spank her again, and she snarls.

"You like to challenge me, Bird?"

I slap her curved tush. She makes a noise somewhere between a growl and an assent.

"Tell me, you want to go toe to toe with me?"

She nods.

"Speak."

"Yes." The word comes out on a moan.

"Good, then you must pay the consequences for your actions. Let it not be said that I did not give you enough of a warning, sweet Summer."

I spank her beautiful, tight arse again. She howls. And again; she cries out. Six, seven, eight. I increase the intensity of my beating—faster, harder, more frequent. Her thighs quiver; her body sinks down into the mattress.

"Hold up your butt, or else I swear, little Bird, I won't stop until I've forced an orgasm out of you, without touching your cunt."

She growls something unintelligible. Lowers her head, until her cheek is smashed into the mattress. Glances over her shoulder. Her green eyes blaze at me; her lips tremble. Color flushes her cheeks. Every curve of her body is defiant, every angle of her spine rigid. Her fingers dig into the fabric of the bedspread. Good. "Are you turned on?"

She stares.

"Speak now, or so help me Bird, I'll—"

"No."

I spank her butt and she shudders.

And again.

"Are you going to fight me again?"

She winces.

"Say it."

"Yes." She juts out her chin and I can't stop my lips from curling.

"Good." Then you won't mind if I punish you a little longer?

Her lips part, "No, don't—"

Ten, eleven, twelve... I spank her heart-shaped behind again and again. With each slap, her entire body bows, trembles, her knuckles whiten, the scent of her arousal deepens, her feet, still in the satin custom-made stilettos, dig into the mattress.

Her chin quivers, her shoulders heave, a tear rolls down her cheek; she doesn't lower her eyes. Doesn't look away. Doesn't make a noise, until I raise my arm again.

"Stop." She wheezes.

"Why should I?"

"Because..." She swallows, "I'm sore."

I bring down my palm again on her butt and she moans.

"Because I want you to."

Wrong answer. I spank her again and her entire body shudders. Her chin wobbles; her shoulders pull back, "Because I am your wife?"

"That's right." I lower my arm, loosen the buckle of my belt, and her gaze drops to my crotch. "It's why I am going to fuck your cunt, so you'll never forget it."

I drag down the zipper of my pants and my dick swings free. She draws in a sharp breath.

"It's why I am going to imprint myself on every cell of your body." I lean forward until my dick is lined up with her pussy. "Until your every thought, every sentence, every last string of trivia in your mind will begin and end with me."

She shudders. "Fuck you, Sinclair Sterling."

"With pleasure."

I back up, then bring down my palm.

Summer

His palm connects with my pussy, and I explode.

Moisture pools between my legs. The trembling sweeps up my calves, my thighs, zings up my spine and shatters behind my eyes. My hands shake, my legs give way. I lurch forward and come to a stop.

Wha—?

His hands grip my waist, the width of his palms span me end to end. The warmth from the connection sinks into my blood, rolls toward its inevitable destination—my melting center.

"Sinclair—"

"Sin."

"Eh?"

"Call me Sin."

"Goddam you." I bite down on my lower lip, "Why don't you fuck me and be done with it?"

"Ask for it."

"No."

He palms my throbbing arse and sensations coil in my core. He drags the head of his cock between my melting lower lips and I moan. The thick length of him hints at how good it would be if I gave in to him. The emptiness inside of me claws, deepens. So hollow. So incomplete. I dig my fingers into the bedspread. No way am I giving him what he wants.

"So stubborn."

I sense him move. The heat of him envelops my back, sidles down the dip between my sensitized thighs. My throat closes.

"So responsive."

He nuzzles the skin at the point where my shoulder meets my neck, and my sex clenches. Goosebumps flare on my skin; my breath catches. He moves my hair aside, presses little kisses to the nape of my neck. I shiver. He sucks on the skin right there where I am the most sensitive and I moan.

He massages my hip, his blunt fingers long enough to graze the edge of my sensitive slit. The rough hair on his groin grazes my tingling backside and pinpricks of pain radiate out from his touch. A whine spills from my lips.

Is that me? Why do I sound so needy? Why is my body betraying everything that I am trying to communicate to him?

"So beautiful." He nibbles a path down the length of my spine and my heart begins to thud. Blood engorges my clit, my nipples pebble with such intensity that they hurt. I bite the inside of my cheek to stop myself from asking him to take me, to put an end to this craziness, whatever it is that stretches, connects me to him. My mind to his. My heart to the essence of his being that is surely the darkest, blackest soul to ever exist. So why am I aching for him?

He drags his chin down the length of my spine and goosebumps flare on my skin.

"Ask me to fuck you."

I shake my head.

"Please."

I shudder. My heart clenches. Something inside of me snaps. Oh, hell, I am so going to regret this. I draw in a breath, "Fuck me, Sin."

His entire body seems to freeze. Tension radiates off of him. The heat from his body intensifies, until I am sure I am melting inside and out. Sweat beads my forehead, my nerve endings pop, crackle, waiting, waiting.

His breath teases the shell of my ear, "Thank you, Bird."

My throat closes.

I sense him draw back, his hands grip my hips, then he plows into me. I scream. Pain slices through me and I try to pull away.

"The bloody fuck—?"

His grip tightens.

"You lied to me?"

"Nothing you didn't do first. I was returning the favor."

His fingertips dig into my side, "You were using me?"

"As were you."

"You wanted me to feel guilty about taking your virginity?"

"Do you?" I glance at him and wince.

His face is all hard planes and shadows. His cheekbones stand out so sharply that I could cut my skin on them.

"No." He sets his jaws with a snap, and I can literally hear the sound of his molars grinding. "You want to know how it makes me feel, Bird?"

A vein throbs at his temple.

"Answer me."

"H... how?"

A bead of sweat slides down his temple; a muscle jumps at his jaw line. The white lines that crease his mouth reveal how close he is to losing control. The force of his dominance leaps off of him, and crashes down on my shoulders. It pins me down. I stare unable to move. Unable to glance away.

His hand slides down my belly and grazes my clit. Sensations of heat spiral from his touch. He leans his upper body closer, until the hard planes of his chest seem to envelop me from all sides.

I gulp; my toes curl. What's he going to do next?

He drops his head and licks my lips, "It makes me want to fuck the defiance out of you, so you'll never lie to me again."

My throat closes. A ball of emotion fills my chest. All of my brain cells seem to ignite together. How can he sound so harsh, so uncompromising, yet so filthy at the same time? And why the hell do I find it so arousing? My pussy spasms and he groans.

"You like the thought of that, eh?"

Yes.

Yes.

I shake my head.

"Still lying, hmm?" He tilts his hips, and his dick twitches. "Time you learned not to lie." He pinches my clit.

More wetness pools between my legs. A moan bleeds from my lips.

His shoulders bulge, his biceps seem to grow larger. "Those tiny sounds you make fucking turn me on, you know that?" His eyelids half close, until only a sliver of indigo shines from between them. I shiver. His features close, his gaze intensifies.

"I don't want to hurt you."

I swallow.

"Though I am beginning to think you like it when I do."

I bite the inside of my cheek, to stop myself from agreeing.

He pulls out of me and the pain recedes; he stays poised at the entrance to my lower lips. His fingers strum my clit. I shiver. He releases my hip to bring his other hand up to cup my breast. His palm is so big, it dwarfs my flesh. My nipples grow turgid. He tugs at the sensitive peaks, and I shudder. Throw my head back, arching my neck. He drags his chin down the delicate column. My scalp tingles, my toes curl.

"I am going to fuck you now."

I swallow. He strums the swollen lips of my pussy and a trembling starts from deep inside.

He releases his hold on my breasts, only to wrap his fingers around my throat. Panic bubbles up from somewhere deep inside and my skin stretches until it feels too tight. He presses his thumb to the pulse at the hollow of my neck.

"Shh." His warm breath lifts the hair at my temples. "Let me do this right for you, Bird."

I shiver.

"Focus on my touch, my heat, my voice; forget everything else. Follow my lead. Can you do that, hmm?"

I nod.

"Good girl." His warmth cocoons me, his thighs cradle mine, his fingers play with my pussy. He nudges my wet entrance with his dick, "Do you trust me?"

No.

No.

I nod.

His chest expands behind me and his muscles seem to go solid. "Hold onto me." His shaft nudges my wet entrance; his grip on my neck tightens.

He thrusts forward and his dick fills me. I gasp; my thighs clench.

Tendrils of heat coil deep inside, as the pressure at the base of my spine grows.

He stays there, and I draw in a breath. His cock pulses inside of me and a moan wells up.

"You okay?"

"Y... yes."

His muscles tense; his arms vibrate with the stress of holding up his body weight.

He pulls back, then pumps his hips forward. Pain slices through me, the pleasure welling up on its heels.

The vibrations slam against the fingers that stroke my throat and I can sense every single separate intonation.

"Shh, let me make this good for you."

His lips touch my nape. Pinpricks of heat radiate out from the contact. He draws my hair aside, nibbles on the skin at the juncture of where my neck meets my shoulder. I shiver. He licks his way down the curve of my arm, then bites down.

My sex clenches; moisture pools between my legs.

A groan rumbles up his chest. "You're killing me."

He buries his nose against my skin, "And you smell so fucking good."

A pressure begins to build between my legs...

"I can't hold back, Bird. I have to move."

I jerk my chin, bite down on my lower lip. "Please." The word spills from my lips.

"Thank fuck." He tilts his hips and thrusts, sliding into me again. Too much, too full. Pain thrums up my spine. I huff, curve my spine.

"Shh." He kisses the side of my neck, then fastens his teeth on my earlobe. He tugs and a melting sensation unfurls somewhere deep inside.

"Oh." I tilt my head, giving him access and he obliges.

He strokes his tongue over my earlobe, then eases it inside the hollow of my ear. I shiver; goosebumps flare on my skin.

What the hell?

How had I not known that it could be so erotic to have him nibble on my ear lobe, suck on it, as he grips my hips, propels forward and buries himself inside me?

"Sin. Please."

I squeeze my eyes, throw my head back. His grasp on my hip holds me in place. He cups my breast, pinches the nipple. Jesus. Flashes of heat go off behind my eyes. I am flying, floating... somewhere in that space between pleasure and pain.

He releases my breasts, and I groan.

He slides his hand down to cup my pussy, strum my lower lips, pinch my clit, and I cry out.

The pressure intensifies, grows, radiates out to my extremities. My feet dig into the mattress, my fingers clench, and every pore in my skin seems to open.

He slams into me again with enough force that my entire body bucks. His lips brush my ear. "Come."

And I shatter. The sensations sweep up my chest; my heart pounds against my ribcage with such force that I am sure it's going to jump out. He loosens the grip on my throat and the climax engulfs me. The blood drums against my temples. Sparks of red and white fill my vision. Then, that too, fades away. Darkness pulls me under.

Something cold slides between my legs, and my eyelids flutter. I glance down to find that I am on my back, legs spread wide. A dark hand wipes a pristine white towel down my throbbing center. I wince.

"Shh! Let me take care of you."

He dabs the cold towel on either side of my thighs. The coolness permeates my skin, and the burning eases, somewhat. "Better?"

I nod.

He straightens, walks into the adjoining bath. The door is open, and light pours out. I hear the sound of a cabinet being opened and closed. Then he walks out again. The bed dips as he places a knee between my legs. He squeezes out something from a tube. "What's that?"

He spreads it out onto my thighs. A cold sensation sinks into my blood and all remaining aches instantly recede. "Is that—?"

"Aloe."

"Do you do this often?"

"What?"

"Take care of virgins in your bed."

He straightens, caps the ointment, then walks past the bed to place it on the side table.

"I've never slept with one before."

"Oh."

"And I am only taking care of you, so you are ready for another round."

"Wait... what?"

He slides onto the bed, "Scoot over."

"You don't mean that?" My pussy clenches. Moisture seeps from my core.

I shift to the other side, making sure there's the width of the bed between us.

He folds his arm behind his neck, "Don't I?"

He closes his eyes, and I peer at his features. That hard countenance, the hooked nose that caps the surprisingly pouty lower lip, and I am familiar with how that tastes.

"I suggest you get some sleep."

"And round two?"

He opens one eye, "I'm beginning to think you can't get enough of me."

Jerk. I scramble back, then pull the covers up to my chin.

Close my eyes, try to sleep. Turn on my side. Wriggle my feet, then turn over on my back. Dammit, now I have an itch on my back. I shift my hips, arch my spine, try to reach the spot which is below my nape.

"What are you doing?" He grumbles.

"Trying to scratch an itch, you mind?"

"I can do that for you—"

"Not that kind." I huff.

"Hmm."

I roll my shoulder blades against the bed.

There's a long inhalation of breath. Then the mattress, dips. He shifts toward me. "Turn over."

"But."

He grabs my shoulder and moves me on my side.

"Where is it?"

"Center of my back."

He places his palm unerringly on the right spot and drags his fingers down the length of my back.

"Oh," I can't stop the moan that bleeds from my lips. He repeats the action, this time in reverse.

"Ah."

I stretch into his touch, and he obliges. He digs his fingers into the space between my shoulder blades, and all the way down to the cleft of my butt. And again. Soo good. A sound of pleasure escapes my lips.

"You remind me of a kitten I had."

"You used to have a kitten?"

His actions stop for a second, then he continues his strokes.

"It doesn't matter."

"Of course, it would only humanize the bad-tempered alphahole if you were to share something of his personal life, huh?"

"Exactly."

Getting this man to talk about himself is like... trying to find a seat on the tube during rush hour. "Soo... Amadeus huh?"

He caresses his big palm up my spine and I arch into his touch.

"Is there a story there?"

His touch stills, then he massages his fingertips over the knotted muscles of my shoulders. Oh!

"My mother."

I still.

"She loved classical music. She was listening to Mozart when she went into labor, hence..." He digs his fingers into the back of my head and scratches my scalp.

Goosebumps tingle down my skin. I shiver, "Where did you learn to do that?"

"Experience."

Of course. My stomach lurches; something hot stabs at my chest. I am not jealous. Why am I jealous?

"That's enough." I pull away and he doesn't comment.

I peer into the darkness, then clear my throat.

"What?" He sounds half-resigned, half-aroused. "I can hear you thinking, so say it aloud."

"That... What happened?"

"What...?"

"You know, 'that,' when I almost blacked out—"

"You mean your second orgasm in as many minutes?" I can't see his face, but damn, I can sense the smug satisfaction in his voice.

"You're welcome."

Jeez.

"How can you be both considerate and an alphahole?"

"You do realize that's technically not an official word in the English language, hmm? Not that I'm protesting its usage." He smirks. "And it comes naturally to me."

Why did I ask? I groan aloud.

Silence for another beat. Don't ask him, don't.

"Is it... ah, always like that?" I mean, I know it can't be, but I have to ask.

Not that I expect him to answer or anything.

The silence stretches. It's completely quiet. In the shitty apartment I'd shared with Karma, there was always some noise at night. The ambulance screaming, late night party-goers returning home, the staff from the pub downstairs cleaning up before heading home. Here, I can hear my thoughts. Which I am not sure I appreciate. Not when all of them seem to lead back to him.

"It's never been that way for me." His voice is low.

Oh! "You mean—"

"Go to sleep, Bird."

He turns on his side.

His breathing deepens. Apparently, that stupid switch on-switch off mechanism he has that allows him to flip the switch on his emotions can also help him fall asleep in an instant. The man really doesn't have a soul.

Taking the virginity of the woman you blackmailed into helping you get revenge by destroying her father? Check.

Ensuring you make her life completely and utterly miserable during the process by crawling under her skin, and occupying her every waking thought and invading her dreams? Double check.

I close my eyes, and my limbs grow heavy. My breathing deepens, then catches.

One second, I'm empty. The next, he is there. His heat sears my back, envelops me from behind. I lean into it, rub my butt against the hardness that throbs between my legs. He slips inside of me, filling the emptiness, stretching me from end to end. I shiver and a whine tumbles from my throat. I stretch my spine, seeking that delicious presence, the complete comfort, that absolute awareness of what it is to be so in sync with another. Wait, what? I crack my eyes open and peer into the dark. "Sin?"

"Shh, I didn't intend to wake you."

He drags my hair away from my nape, whispers a kiss to my shoulder. Moisture pools between my legs. I turn my face toward him, and he takes the hint. He nibbles his way up the column of my throat to my ear lobe and bites down. "Ah!" I shudder, raise my arm and wrap it back and around him.

He's so massive, that I barely reach halfway around his broad back.

He brings his hand up and cups my breast. The warmth of his fingers sinks into my blood and I thrust myself into his grasp.

He plays with my erect nipple and heat ignites between my legs.

He drags his hand down my stomach to cup my pussy. The gesture so possessive, so completely confident, that my head spins. Or maybe that's because his hardness lengthens inside of me, bumps against my inner walls. Pinpricks of sensations shimmer up my spine.

"You're so gorgeous, Summer." He presses little kisses down my jawline.

I twist my upper body, crane toward him, and he closes his lips over mine. His tongue sweeps inside my mouth, sucking on mine, drinking from me. His possession is absolute, his strength incomparable. He's taking from me, marking me, re-forming me into a shadow of himself, and I can't stop him. Another whine tumbles up my throat, and he swallows it. He propels his hips, and his cock leaps forward. The hard ridge of his pelvis chafes the soft bump of my arse, every part of him rigid, unforgiving. A complete contrast to me. I've never felt this helpless, this vulnerable. This open and giving. This... unable to get ahold of the emotions that twist my stomach, coil in my guts. What is he doing to me? I open my mouth to ask and he deepens the kiss. His tongue scrapes across my teeth, his fingers pinch my clit, and his cock seems to expand further, pervading my pussy. A groan rumbles up his chest and the vibrations sink into me. My blood thuds at my temples; my heartbeat ratchets up. Sin, Sinclair. Mr. Sterling—the alphahole who swept in and turned my entire life upside down.

He tears his mouth from mine, then pumps his hips. His cock leaps forward and I gasp.

"Look at me, Bird."

I crack my eyes open, meet his deep indigo gaze.

A trembling urgency builds from somewhere deep inside. He thrusts again and again. Grinds the heel of his hand into my clit. Sensations coil at the base of my spine.

He wraps his other hand around my throat, shoves his thumb into my mouth. I suck on his digit, and his pupils grow darker.

He holds my gaze, pumps his hips, impaling me further on his dick. A bead of sweat runs down my spine and I shiver. He bends his head, until our noses bump.

"Come for me, Bird, come all over my cock."

His whisper sears through the silence in my head and I explode. The climax grips me, and my entire body bucks. My back stretches, my stomach rolls, and cum gushes out from between my legs.

"So fucking beautiful, my little Bird."

A groan rumbles up his chest. His cock lengthens, throbs, then liquid heat bathes my insides. He raises his palm from my pussy to his mouth and sucks on his fingers, then drags the liquid of our joint essences down my breasts.

"Sleep now."

My eyes flutter shut. I float in that space between sleep and wakefulness. He draws me closer, and his dick twitches inside of me. He can't be hard again, can he?

"I am, Bird. It seems where you are concerned, I have an insatiable appetite. Apparently, I like to punish myself." He draws in a breath and his entire body seems to expand. "Another first." The tone of his voice dips further.

Did he say that? Nah, must be my imagination. He can't read my mind. Nope. This was a really good dream, all of it. I snuggle into the warmth, begin to drift off, then it comes to me. "Timotheé Chalamet."

"Huh?" His grip on my waist tightens.

"I loved him in Call Me by Your Name."

"Hmm."

A whisper brushes my hair. Did he kiss me?

"How did you know that was my favorite movie ever?"

He hesitates. "I didn't." He cups my pussy, "But I wanted to taste your cum as badly."

Wow. "That's... ah..." I swallow. "The most romantic thing anyone has ever said to me."

"Good." He tucks me firmly into his chest. "Go to sleep."

I drift off with his cock inside of me.

When I awake, his side of the bed is empty.

"...I believe in long, slow, deep, soft, wet kisses that last three days."

—Bull Durham. Director: Ron Shelton

Sin

"Whiskey at 9 am? Isn't that a tad hard core?"

I down the rest of the liquor and it burns a trail down my throat. "The fuck do you want now, Saint?"

He walks to the bar at the corner of the office and the coffee machine kicks into action.

"What's the point of having this £5000 machine if you never use it?"

I shrug. I had it brought in only because the rest of the Seven prefer coffee. Me? I am a tea drinker. Blame it on growing up in the East End. Tea so strong and with enough sugar that you can float a spoon on it. That's the first drink I'd ever had, and its taste is something I have never been able to shake off.

He walks up to the window, peers outside. "Anything interesting?"

I snarl.

"Bad night huh?" He snickers.

"What do you care?"

"You're the one who's spearheading this entire scheme. I'm checking that my investment is in safe hands, bro."

"You're not the one who has anything to lose."

"And you do?" He turns to me. "Anything you want to 'fess up to, Sinner?"

"Bugger off. I am not looking for a priest." What I need is a bloody surgeon to look inside my brain and tell me, what the hell had I been thinking last night? I had taken her without an inch of empathy, smacked her butt, torn into her pussy.

Then, I had pretended to drift off on my side of the bed, hoping she'd take the hint.

She'd mumbled to herself, then her breathing had deepened.

I had turned to face away from her, yet every morsel of my attention had been focused on her. The way her scent had intensified as she'd slept. The soft inhalations, the twitch of her limbs which indicated that she had fallen deeper into slumber.

I'd had my eyes closed, yet I hadn't needed to see her to imagine her features. The flushed cheeks, parted lips, the rise and fall of those sugar plum breasts, the quiver of her flat belly, the melting triangle of her pussy. My dick had lengthened, and I had palmed myself.

I could have turned and helped myself to her and she wouldn't have resisted. She is no match for my deviousness; fucking innocent that she is. Okay, not completely. She's packed a lot into her years so far. She is a survivor. I have no doubt she'll get through everything I have planned. Question is, will I? I hadn't anticipated wearing a raging hard on while lying next to her. Me fisting myself, trying to jerk off, without disturbing her.

I'd taken her virginity. And that had been unexpected.

She'd denied it when I had asked her, and although that question had been to rile her, I had taken her answer at face value.

I had had no reason to suspect that she was one.

I had been her first. Fuck! Her first! I had assumed... What? That she was experienced enough to stand up to my inclinations? That I could take what was mine. Is she mine? The fuck am I doing thinking along those lines, huh?

And why am I in my office at the crack of dawn, leaving her warm willing body in my bed? It had been too fucking right, that's the problem. Her skin, her scent, the taste of her is in my mouth.

After I'd taken her that second time, I hadn't been able to sleep. I'd waited until she'd drifted off, then crawled between her legs, like a starving schmuck, and eaten out her pussy.

Even asleep, her thighs had tightened around my ears, and that had spurred me on. I'd cupped her arse, scooped her up and sunk my tongue inside of her.

I'd lapped at her cunt, sucked on her, pinched her clit, rubbed the engorged nub between her lower lips. I'd cupped her butt, brought her closer, sunk my thumb into that tight little back hole, and she'd come again. The sweetness of her cum had exploded on my palate as she'd moaned out her release.

Those little noises she makes when she is close to coming? Fuck. They are going to be my destruction. Her voice, husky with lust, is fast becoming the soundtrack of my life. One I can't do without.

I'd known then it was a bloody mistake. I am in too deep, trapped by the lure of that sexy little body... No, not only. It is her spirit I crave. Her thirst for life which I had once had but I've lost along the way. In her presence, every part of me stands to attention—my dick twitches—yeah, especially that particular appendage. Fucking hell.

She's imprinted herself in every part of me, and fuck, that's a scary thought. No one is allowed to get this close to me. No one.

I pull away from the window, walk to the bar and pour another, then toss it back. The liquor sparks a burn deep in my stomach. I can still feel my hands and legs though. Her taste still laces my tongue. Her scent lingers on my skin—I hadn't wanted to shower. Don't judge. Just another twat throwing himself off a literal cliff; all in the name of some stupid emo shit. Jesus, have I lost my balls completely?

I grab the bottle to pour another finger.

Footsteps approach. Saint snatches the bottle from me.

"Hey."

I reach for it and he clicks his tongue. "Get your head in the game."

I glare at him, and he holds my gaze. He's as tall as me, as broad, as able as me to lead any initiative for the Seven; he'd had as much at stake, but he'd withdrawn and given me enough rope... To hang myself, as it were.

"You knew."

He angles his head. "The fuck you talking about?"

I thrust out my chin. "You wanted me to fall for her?"

"Are you falling for her?"

"Stop answering one question with another."

He clicks his tongue. "You have it bad."

"Don't change the fucking topic." I grab his collar and yank him forward.

"Tell me, you didn't set me up to take the fall in this."

"I didn't."

He lowers his eyebrows. "You're imagining things, old chap."

Am I?

"Why?" I growl, "Tell me Saint, or so help me I am going to punch you in your pretty face."

"You couldn't." He smirks. "The last time we went a round, you know what happened."

Neither of us had won. It had been a fucking tie, again. He and I are too well matched. It's what makes us compete with each other for everything.

"What were you doing speaking to her yesterday?"

"What are you doing in the office the day after your wedding? Shouldn't you be busy taking your bride on a honeymoon?"

"A pretend honeymoon, and no, that was never on the cards, as you well know."

What the fuck is his problem anyway? How dare he talk about her?

"Let go of my collar, Sin." I glance down to find I am gripping his shirt. I let go, step back, and hold out my arm.

He thrusts the bottle at me. "Your funeral."

"Since when are you so concerned about my well-being?"

"Ah, let's see," He holds up a finger. "Since you decided to come up with a hare-brained scheme of doing good to salvage our reputation—which I could have told you for free was a bad idea. Then hired the one woman you should have kept your distance from, then married her. All in the name of revenge?"

I swig from the bottle. The liquor goes down smoothly, burning a trail in its wake. My toes feel numb... That's good.

"You don't fool me."

"Blah-fucking-blah." I mimic a mouth talking with the fingers of my left hand. "You done?"

His lips firm. "You need to get it through your head that not all of us are your enemies."

"Oh? And let you come in and rob me blind in front of my eyes?" I snicker. Then, toss back another swig of the alcohol. Yep, can barely feel my fingers. I lower the bottle to the bar counter with exaggerated care.

The conference call device in the room buzzes and I wince.

Saint struts to it and depresses the speaker. "Rich Prick's office."

Meredith's chuckle fills the space, "Hello, Saint."

"Hey, M."

"Is Sin there with you?"

"Barely."

She laughs.

"Loser." I can't feel my lips, or the tip of my nose either. Makes for a nice change. "Anyone ever tell you that you're an annoying motherfucker?"

"What's up, M?"

"Ask her why she didn't come to the wedding," I grumble.

"You're on speaker, Sin." Saint smirks.

"I knew that." I blink, stalk to the table. "You're not off the hook, M. You didn't turn up yesterday."

"I'll come when you decide to have a real wedding."

Huh? Don't know about the wedding, but the night sure felt like the first of a new life together. Hold on, back up. Emo central. "The woman's too smart." I peer up at Saint.

His face fades in and out in my line of sight.

"I may be old but I am not deaf... yet." Meredith's chuckle sounds from the phone. "I heard you, Sin."

"Oops." I curve my lips. "It was a compliment."

"I know." She laughs. "Called to remind you to eat your breakfast. It's on the desk in your office."

I glance through the adjoining doors, spot the tray laid out.

"Thanks, M."

"You're welcome, my boy."

The woman makes me feel like I am a kid again.

After the incident, I'd gotten into so many scraps on the street, it's a wonder I made it through that patch of my life alive. I probably wouldn't have if Meredith hadn't found me beaten up and rushed me to the hospital. She'd met the rest of the Seven... and had become a big part of our lives.

"Sin?" Meredith's soft voice breaks through my thoughts. "The books you ordered are here."

"Cool scene."

"I'm sending them up."

The line goes dead.

"Cool scene?" Saint frowns. "Books?"

"None of your business."

A knock sounds. I walk through to my main office and fling open the door. A girl—an intern? How many of them do we employ?—walks in.

She glances at me and her cheeks redden. She stands there, blinking. I point to the desk and she walks toward it. Drops the books on the wooden surface. She straightens and Saint enters the main office.

Her gulp is audible. Her chest heaves. Here we go again. My presence can be overwhelming on its own. Then add in Saint, and the entire area is a pheromone kill zone.

"You may leave now, Tanya."

"It's Alia."

"Bye, Stella."

She huffs out a breath, walks past me, stumbles, then rights herself and darts out the door.

Saint chuckles. "My effect on the opposite sex is not to be underestimated, huh?"

Wanker.

He prowls to the table, stares at the books. "Movie Trivia Unleashed. Advanced Movie Quizzes. Dialogues from Movies You Always Wanted to Know—"

"Thanks for spelling out the titles." I stalk over, gather up the books.

"You feeling okay, Sin?"

"Eh?" I shuffle my weight from foot to foot.

"Something you want to tell me?"

"About what?"

He stares at the pile of books in front of me.

That? "It's a new hobby."

He tracks me as I stride to my desk.

"You don't do hobbies, Sin."

"Things... have changed." I pick up a book, relax into my swivel chair.

"You don't say?"

I plant my feet on the table, begin to read the book. I glance past the cover to the corner, where Max normally keeps me company. He'd refused to leave the house, had spent the night moping outside the bedroom door.

Yeah, I'd locked him out last night. Apparently, I couldn't share my bride with my own mutt. Fuck! When I'd opened the bedroom door this morning he'd shot inside, then curled up on the floor by her side.

I'd left both woman and dog sleeping peacefully.

"What are you doing?" Saint's voice cuts through my thoughts.

"You're still here?" I mutter.

He ambles over as if he owns the office—which he doesn't—okay, maybe 1/7th of it, but this is my domain, and I am getting a little tired of one or the other of the Seven constantly dropping in.

It's almost as if they are checking in on me... More likely, their investment is what keeps them returning. I smirk.

He reaches for the book I'm holding and I hold it out of his reach. "What the—?" I glower.

"You're losing it, old chap." He rubs his chin.

"Piss off." I jerk my chin at the door.

"Fine." He holds up his hands. "But you should know that there is a lot of talk already."

"Oh?" I pick up another book flip it open.

"The tabloids got wind of the wedding.

"Took them what, 24 hours? They're losing their touch."

"No, you are."

"You're seriously pissing me off." I crack my neck.

"You're pissing on everything we've worked on."

"Don't be so dramatic." I turn another page.

He grabs the book and tosses it on the table. "Get your head out of your arse for one second."

I tilt my chair back, yawn. "You're getting on my arse."

"I'll do more than that if you don't come clean with me on what's happening."

"I have it in hand." Right. My heart begins to thud. I fold my palms in my lap. "But since you've obviously got a bee in your bonnet about this..." I jerk my chin. "Say your piece or forever hold your piss."

He widens his stance. "This sham of a wedding didn't convince anyone. Not me, and certainly not her father."

"It was meant to bring her old man out of hiding and into our net, which it has."

He drags his fingers through his hair, then begins to pace. "It's not enough. You're the fourth richest man in the country. Your net worth ranks below mine—"

"Hold on a second." I slam my feet on the floor, lean forward. "Last I checked, our net worth was exactly the same."

"That was..." He taps a finger to his chin, pretends to think. "Twenty-four hours ago, before you took your name off 'the most eligible bachelors in the country' list."

"What does that have to do with anything?"

"Only everything?" He chuckles. "You have your head so far inside your arse that you didn't realize this would have been the perfect occasion to drum up some PR, paint the picture. 'Most sought after playboy of the decade, settles down, finds his happily ever after.' Blah, fucking blah."

I press my lips together. "Your point being?"

"Not too late. You wanted a simple, romantic, wedding under wraps. You got it. Now throw the press a bone, do a quick briefing, introduce your lovely wife, and launch—"

"FOK."

"FOK, indeed." He widens his stance, props his palms on his hips. "It may work in your favor. The pretense of wanting to keep things private. When they can't have something, you know how crazy the press gets trying to sniff up a story."

I shuffle around in my seat, trying to find a comfortable position. "What's in it for you?"

"Launch FOK properly, get all attention on that and your nuptials. It'll ensure her father has no reason to doubt the relationship. Then when he's at ease, we lower the trap."

I chuckle.

Saint nods, "Strip him of all his assets, and then you divorce his daughter."

I can do that much. As long as I don't get any closer to her. I rub my clammy palms on my pants, "You any closer to breaking up his marriage?"

He rubs his chin, glances at the watch on his wrist. "3, 2—"

His phone buzzes. He flashes me a glance and picks it up. "Hello." He nods, then bares his teeth. "You bet. I'll meet you at Claridge's for tea, in an hour." He shoots me a thumbs up sign. "Looking forward."

He slides his phone into his pocket. "See? You can count on me, old sport."

"Stop shittin' me."

"You're welcome." He raises his hands. "I only had to intervene to salvage every last tactic in your very sorry plan... Which sucked from the beginning, by the way."

A headache begins to drum at my temples. "Get off my balls, man."

He half bows, "Avec pleasure." He pivots, heads to the door as it's flung open.

My wife barrels into the room, "Sinclair Amadeus Sterling, you have a bloody nerve."

Summer

"Hi Summer."

I glower past Saint at the obnoxious, douche-canoe, conceited waffle, rat's arse of a man, aka my husband, and all the breath promptly leaves me.

"You okay, there?" Saint frowns.

"Of course." I make a sound deep in my throat. "Why wouldn't I be?"

"You were muttering to yourself."

"He has that effect." I growl.

Saint glances from me to Sinclair, who gives no sign that he's surprised by my appearance. Asshole hadn't waited for me this morning. He'd left, after laying out a dress for me to wear—he hadn't forgotten that, of course.

He'd ensured that one of the interns in the office had helpfully woken me up at a quarter to nine.

Giving me enough time to drag my sorry arse out of bed, and into the shower. I'd raced to the tube and managed to reach the office by half past nine. "You could have waited and offered me a lift to the office."

"Oh?" Sinclair folds his arms behind his neck, his legs up on the £5000 custom-made desk which, no doubt, he could replace in an instant. Like he could switch me out for another. Which he will do. The question is, when, and it is something I intend to find out.

I take a step inside the room, and Sinclair smirks.

My pussy instantly salivates. Hell. Something in that meanness of his glance, the way he rakes my body from top to bottom, undressing me...Just as he had made me take off my clothes less than nine hours ago. It already seems far in the past, in the cold light of the gray London morning.

"And why, pray tell me, Bird, should I have delayed my very important meeting, while I waited for you to stop snoring?"

"That was you, asshole." I pull out my phone, "I have proof. I recorded it."

"What?" He frowns.

I wave the device at him, "Guess none of your girlfriends dared tell you about your condition, huh?"

"Are you fucking kidding me?"

Saint chuckles, "Damn, this should be interesting."

"Get the hell out of here." I snarl at the same time as Sinclair.

"If this is what marriage does to people—"

"Fake marriage."

Sinclair echoes my indignance.

"Right." He looks between us. "Bye, Summer." He lowers his voice, "I'd wish you luck, but I think that tosser needs it more than you."

He heads for the exit; the door snicks shut.

"Missed me, Darlin'?" Sinclair drawls.

His rough tone tugs on my sensitive nipples, then slithers down to the valley between my legs. I shiver.

Damn the man. He's unshaven, his hair mussed up as if he's been running his fingers through it, or like he rolled out of bed and came here, which he had, considering I had his dick buried balls deep inside of me less than 3 hours ago. My sex clenches. Hell. I fold my fingers at my sides.

Why the hell does his potency only seem to magnify every time I see him? Considering the number of times he fucked me last night... Were the last two times my imagination? Had he actually gone down on me? He'd made me come, then kissed me, making sure I'd tasted our joined-up fluids. I flick out my tongue and his nostrils flare. Even across the room, I swear I can see his biceps expand. His shoulders stretch the width of the custom-made shirt. No tie, of course.

The first two buttons of his shirt are undone, revealing the sculpted chest underneath. The planes of which I had drummed my fingers over, had tugged on those dark hairs that arrow down to the part of him that is currently hidden.

My fingers tingle. I'd felt him inside of me... Clearly, he is massive—my pussy throbs—okay, bigger, much bigger than I had expected, but I hadn't had a chance to touch him, circle that thick muscle and find out for myself how big he really is.

What? I may have been brought up by nuns, but my education is far from lacking when it comes—haha! No, don't go there—to the opposite sex. Blame it on Karma. My sister has her faults, but some of her curiosity has rubbed off on me, enough to read her romance novels... None of which had prepared me for the sheer dominance of the man who stalks me as I saunter into the room.

Keep it casual, don't blow this. Don't show him how pissed you are at him. I walk up to the desk, keeping my arms at my sides. "We had a meeting this morning."

"I'm aware."

"We could have spoken at home before you left."

"You forget, I prefer to keep work things strictly in the—" he air quotes, "—official space."

Jerk. What does that say about us? "I thought this, whatever-it-is-between-us, was work. You don't seem to have a problem bringing this," I wave my finger, indicating the space between us, "home."

He ignores me. "Speaking of, you are officially—" He checks the cheap-ass watch on his wrist—What's the story there, huh? "—five minutes late."

"I don't fucking care."

"Language, Mrs. Sterling."

"Fuck you very much, Mr. Sterling."

He chuckles, "You're welcome." He swings his legs to the floor, leans forward, then pours tea into a cup. He reaches for the sugar, adds a spoonful, another. He reaches for the third and I huff.

"What?" He shoots me a glance from under those beautiful thick eyelashes.

"If you keep poisoning yourself with that stuff, you're gonna be diabetic before you know it."

"Oh?" He pauses, with the third spoonful of sugar poised above his tea. "You worried about me, hmm?"

"Hardly," I swat away an errant strand of hair, "I'd have said the same to... any stranger I'd meet in the street."

"Really?"

"You bet."

"So you wouldn't mind if I..." he lowers his spoon toward the cup and I dart forward, grip his hand with enough force that the sugar spills in an arc on the table.

"Oopsie." I lurch back. "Sorry, didn't mean to get so..."

"Possessive?" He smirks, then stirs his tea with the now empty spoon.

"Aggressive." I shuffle my feet.

"I am beginning to see the appeal of both versions, in fact—" He brings the cup of tea to his lips, sips. The beautiful tendons of his throat flex as he swallows. "I enjoy all of your emotions, revel in every single insult that you throw in my direction." He licks his lips, and hell, I am instantly wet.

I chafe my thighs together, shuffle my feet, then squeeze my bag in front of my chest, as if that will diminish the impact of his ridiculously sexy presence on me.

He returns his cup to the breakfast tray.

"Why don't you take a seat?" He pushes the platter aside.

"I'm fine here."

He frowns. "Even standing up, you are barely at eye-level with me—"

Thank you for pointing out my lack of height, you reprobate.

"So, if you think this gives you an edge—"

"God forbid," I look skywards, "anyone try to show up Mr. Big Bad himself."

"Cute."

"What?"

"Your nickname for me."

"Not a nickname, you perv."

"But you enjoy that part of me so much."

The blood rushes to my face. He peruses my features and his eyes gleam. "Why I do believe, my darling, that was a blush."

"So, sue me." I blow out a breath, then drop into the chair. A burn sears my bottom and I jump up. "Ow!"

"What's wrong?" His brow clears. "I see."

"You know nothing, Jon Snow."

"Even I know that's from Game of Thrones... That was too easy. You're slipping, Bird. Unless—" he frowns, then straightens, "Guess, your butt must really hurt, huh?"

"Thanks for figuring that out, genius."

I grip the edge of the desk, look to the right, the left, where there's a rug, the kind used for pets, in the corner. Strange, had it been there the last time I came in here? Of course, I'd been distracted then.

He stalks to the door, locks it.

"What are you doing?"

"Making sure you're okay."

"Of course, I am. I came here, didn't I?"

"Hmm." He prowls closer. His big body blocks out the sight of the room, draws in all the oxygen in the space. I try to breathe and my lungs seize.

He pauses in front of me. "Turn around."

"What?"

"So I can check your behind."

"You did it already last night." My cheeks flame.

Damn it, why does his proximity reduce me to a spineless blushing female? I am better than this. I don't need him. I don't need a knight to ride in on his white horse and save me—which, by the way, he's not. Though he probably has many Arabians in his stables—

"Thirteen."

"What?"

"Arabians, and they are all white."

My jaw drops. "What the—did you read my mind? You can't read thoughts, can you?" I frown. "Is that how you win in business, you have a secret ESP-ish instinc—"

"Stop. Bird. Your expressions are way too easy to read." He laughs. His entire face lights up. His indigo eyes lighten until they are almost sky blue. Something hot stabs in my chest.

He's a 100% obnoxious-as-hell, pompous prick... but damn, he's a magnificent, utterly irresistible one, who somehow, somewhere, perhaps, has a flicker of humanness hidden deep inside. Of course, you have to look for it with a blow torch... But hey, I've never backed down from a challenge, huh?

He cups my cheek, "Go on, let me assess the damage I inflicted."

"It's nothing... really—"

"Let me be the judge of that, hmm?"

I twist my fingers in front of me, scan the space.

"No cameras."

"Yeah, that's what you said last time."

"You weren't my wife then."

I stiffen. Does he mean what I think he means? Can his alphanoliciousness actually acknowledge that the ceremony yesterday meant something to him? I grab a strand of my hair and bring it to my mouth, chew on it. He reaches out and gently tugs on the strand until I release it.

"I promise I won't take advantage." He holds up his hand, "Besides, it's nothing I haven't seen."

Thanks for reminding me about exactly how you reduced me to a melting blob of jelly. I bite the inside of my cheek, glower at him.

He merely smiles. He seems almost harmless... Almost. Yeah, and I am the Queen of England. I snort, pivot to face the table.

He presses his big palm into the small of my back and I shiver.

He applies pressure. I follow his lead.

I bend over the polished surface of his antique executive desk.

Sin

I have her where I want her. Bent across my desk.

I've imagined this scene a hundred, no a thousand times, since the day I saw her at the bar. She'd reached across the bar for her drink. One glimpse of the creamy column of her neck and I'd been a goner.

Her dress had clung to her impossibly tiny waist, then swooped down to cup that gorgeous heart-shaped arse, and fuck me, but I'd known she was trouble. My fingers had tingled to touch her, caress her, palm the eggshell shape of her butt, and fondle her. I do just that. Cup that sensuous curve, the parabola of my desire, the shape that has haunted me, called to me, the one that has competed for attention with the circle of her breasts. I palm her butt and she trembles. A moan spills from her mouth. "Does that hurt, Bird?"

She shakes her head.

"You okay, if I drag up your skirt, Sweetheart?"

The fuck? Was that another endearment? They come so easily, like rain falling from the leaden London skies. Something inside of me burst open, at some point in the last twenty-four hours. Something shifted, and I cannot, for fuck's sake, put my finger on it. A corner was turned, a line crossed. I slipped into the gap between the platform and the tube train, crushed by thousands of metric tons of steel. Ha!

There is no going back, after this. What does that mean? I am going to find out.

"Summer?"

"Hmm."

"Can I check out your butt?"

She giggles. "Umm, a bit late to be asking that question, huh?"

"Never say never."

"Sean Connery, James Bond. Hated that film, actually," she murmurs.

I knew that.

I am beginning to echo her love for movie trivia. It is addictive. She is addictive. The water vapor to my clouds; the sunshine to my rainy weather. We are opposite, and yet we fit. Fuck. Get your mind off the poetic license wagon.

"And it's Never Say Never Again." She turns her head, so her cheek is flat on the table, then peers up at me.

"I must be doing something wrong."

She frowns. "What do you mean?"

"You're still talking, still thinking." I curl my lips. "I am going to take that as a personal challenge."

"What?"

"I am going to distract you, Bird. Gonna take care of your poor hurt arse, then shred your asshole, and make you come so hard there will be no other thought in your head, no other word, no other name, except mine."

Her pupils dilate; her cheeks redden.

She opens her mouth to speak and I draw up her skirt.

"Sinclair—"

"Sin."

She chews on that damn lower lip of hers and the crease deepens, that beautiful dip which makes me want to rest my cock on it, as I thrust my heavy length inside of her mouth.

"Say my name."

She shakes her head.

Hmm.

I reach down, tear off her panties, and she squeaks. Her gaze widens. I bring the piece of silk to my face, bury my nose in it. A whine wheezes out of her.

"You enjoy that, hmm?"

She rubs her cheek against the wooden surface. "I shouldn't."

"But you do." I drop the scrap of fabric into the pocket of my pants, then bend and kiss the reddened surface of her behind.

Her hips wriggle. I slide my thigh between her legs, spread them apart, and she stiffens.

"Relax." I press tiny kisses up the curve of her spine, making sure to keep space between me and her reddened butt cheeks.

I swipe the heavy fall of her hair to one side, then kiss her nape.

"Why are you doing this?" She shivers.

"What?"

"Being so nice to me?"

"You don't like it?"

She blinks, "I am not sure."

"How about this." I nuzzle her cheek, then press another kiss to the corner of her lips.

"You've been drinking?"

"I tried, Bird."

"Tried?" The skin at the corners of her eyes creases.

I nod. "Tried to forget the memories we made last night. How you felt under me, your pussy clamping on my shaft, the slickness of your cunt as I moved inside of you, the trembling flesh of your breasts as I squeezed you, the firm indentation between your arse cheeks as I spanked you."

She swallows, the sound loud enough to echo in that tiny, infinitesimal, hair's breadth of space that separates us. "You sound like... like—"

"A man who's losing his mind?" I allow my lips to curl.

"A man who's falling for me."

My shoulders go solid.

"It's too late for that."

Her lips turn down. "Ah."

"I'm more than halfway in love with you." I peruse her beautiful features. "You are all that keeps me from sliding into some dark place."

"Cold Mountain." Her features light up.

"Directed by Anthony Minghella." I tilt my head.

"You've been reading up?" She reaches for one of the books scattered on the table.

"I've been trying to keep up."

"So, what's next?"

I snatch the book from her, put it aside.

"We fuck like minks." I smirk.

"I hate minks." She whispers.

"That's from Basic Instinct." I snicker, "And you got that wrong."

"You're going about this all wrong." She reaches up and strokes my lower lip.

My dick is instantly hard... Okay, harder.

I've been throbbing since the moment she flounced into my office spewing fire. I knew then, I can't let her go, not until I've satisfied a particular fantasy of mine.

"You're right."

"Wow!" She draws in an exaggerated breath. "That's twice in two seconds that you've ceded to me."

"Don't get used to it. The truth is—"

I stare into those ocean green eyes. I get distracted, and not just by her sexy-as-fuck mouth, or those wide eyelashes that stand to point when she cries, or that pert little nose, turned up at the end, which doesn't begin to do justice to her. It is the entire damn package. It is her, all of her.

She clears her throat, "Truth is?"

"—I haven't started." I straighten, reach for the food tray, pull it close.

"What are you doing?"

"Shh." I grab the tiny silver crucible and place it next to her face.

"No." She quivers.

"Are you saying No? Or are you, saying No?"

"I'm not saying, No."

She draws her hand back, and I reach for her wrist.

"Then?"

"I'm scared."

"So am I." I lower her palm to the tent between my legs, turning her arm enough for her fingers to cup my hardness. "See what you do to me? Whenever I am near you, all I see is you. Especially when I am not in the same space as you."

Her forehead furrows.

"What are you saying?"

That I want you, I need you. "I need to be inside of you. I want to write my intentions onto every part of you, saturate your cells with my essence, pour myself into the fabric of your being until all you can do is think of me, hear my voice in your dreams, scent me first thing in the morning, melt into me when you fall asleep."

"Oh."

"I am saying," I squeeze her palm, press her fingers against my cock. She has me by my fucking balls, literally and physically. "I am going to fuck you."

"I thought you were going to make the pain better."

"That too."

"How?"

I can't stop the smirk that tugs at my mouth, "I admit my methods are a little unorthodox, Bird, but I believe they'll prove to be effective."

"Tell me." She tips her chin down.

"With my ministrations I will distract you." I squeeze her hand, then release it. She keeps her fingers wrapped around my dick. Good.

I reach for the rest of the butter, scoop it up.

"With my mind I will ensnare you." She licks her lips.

"With my cock, I will—" I drag the butter down the valley between her arse cheeks.

She shudders.

"Sin."

"That too." I curl my finger into her back hole.

42

Summer

His finger prods at that forbidden part of me and every muscle in me curls with tension.

"Relax, Bird."

I squeeze down on the rigid length of his dick. My Sin. He is that, and so much more. Forbidden. Out of reach. Yet so much everything I need. Am I going to allow him to do this to me? Yes.

There, that is the answer. I'd gotten on the fast train to hell from the moment I'd heard that rough voice of his. No turning back now.

His dick seems to lengthen, thicken, in his pants. The scent of him is overwhelming. The air saturated with his dominance, his intentions, the heat of him that burns me, invites me to cross the line.

"Sin."

"Summer." He reaches for the remaining butter on the silver dish and scoops it all up.

I gulp, lower my gaze.

My distorted reflection on the polished wood surface gapes at me. Eyes wide, nostrils flared. My mouth quivers; my nipples harden. Damn him for making me want every single thing that is wrong. This is wrong. We are wrong. This goddamn venue is a mistake. A never-ending movie on a loop, repeated, again and again. I raise my gaze to his face.

He's watching me from under hooded eyes.

"Do you want me, Bird?"

I nod.

"How much?"

"Take me to bed, Sinner, or lose me forever."

"That's from Top Gun." His brows draw down. "Did I say that? Jesus, I can't believe I am playing this your way."

He glares at me. My nerve endings stretch.

My skin crawls, my toes curl, and I wriggle my hips. I can't... cannot contain this craving, this yearning, this sheer carnal hunger to have him buried inside of me.

"No more games, Summer. Tell me you want what I have in mind."

I swallow.

"Say it. Tell me 'no.' "

"Yes."

His cock leaps in my grasp. I squeeze it and a pulse beats to life at his jawline. Wow.

He dips his fingers into the crease between my butt cheeks, unerringly finding my back hole. He slides one finger in.

I gasp. Too full. Too much. It's tight, but not really. It's beyond my comfort level. Enough that I want... I need...

"More?"

I jerk my chin.

He eases the finger inside and I swallow. He curls the finger inside and a trembling grips me. "Sin."

"I'm here."

He inserts another finger and my body bucks.

"My God." Color sears his cheeks. "You're so..." the tendons of his throat flex. "Beautiful, my Bird." He licks his lips and goddamn him, I sense that swipe deep inside in the most intimate part of me.

"You're unique, exotic, one-of-a-kind, my Summer. Your every response is my salvation."

His words envelop me, sink into my blood, curl in my chest, satisfying something deep inside. Something I hadn't acknowledged in all these years. That I'd wanted more than the physical. I'd hoped to meet someone who'd match me word for word. Who'd teach me, push my boundaries, understand why the trivia is more than sentences. More than emotions. They are images of my unsaid desires, that I can hold in the palm of my hand, relish in real life, in front of my eyes, just as he worships me. Here. Now. In this very moment, there is nothing else. Just me, him, and the pleasure he's going to wring from my body.

"Sin."

"Tell me."

"I want you inside me."

His indigo eyes blaze. "Anything you need." He slips a third finger inside and my pussy spasms. Liquid heat drips from my core. I drag my fingers up the length of his dick, constrained by my position. I strain toward him "I want —"

"I know."

He pulls out his fingers and I am empty. Hollow. A shell of my former self. Ready to embrace—

He pushes away the food tray, then drags my fingers down, and onto the table in front of my face.

His eyes never lose their steady calmness. He's a man close to reaching his goal. The one thing he's sought since he'd stated his intent. My complete and utter destruction. My submission. And I'm giving it to him, willingly. "Take it."

"You possess me." His voice chafes my already sensitized nerve endings.

He loosens the buckle of his belt, drags down his zipper, and his cock springs free. There's Sin... A whole lotta Sin there. And it's all for me... At least for this instant. And after... After? Don't go there.

"What's wrong?"

He pauses, dick in hand. His fingers grasp the base of his thick length. It's massive, veins run up its length, a drop of precum glints at the tip. Of course, I'd felt it inside me. But seeing him, naked, wanting, greedy for what I can give him... Is that right?

Is it only me that he wants to claim? The others? Why am I thinking of that? Do I have a claim on him? This entire marriage thing is getting to me. I was beginning to believe my own lies. Fake it till you make it has never sounded truer.

"Summer." His jaw flexes.

"I.."

"What do you need?"

"Thought you could read my mind."

He hesitates. "I don't want to get it wrong."

"You won't."

A vein throbs at his temple; his shaft pulses. So much emotion, so many secrets all coiled up under the surface. He's not in control. It's all a sham. A face he shows the world. A mask he wears, and I ripped it away from him. Sensations crawl inside my chest. I am getting to know this man too well. Too quickly. Everything is happening at breakneck speed and I am powerless to stop it.

He reaches down with his free hand and grips my nape. The strength of his intensity drips into my skin, and I swallow. I've never felt closer to anyone else, as much as I have in this instant.

He draws in a deep breath. "I can't give you that."

I bite the inside of my cheek.

"I've always been up front about what I wanted."

Have you?

"I should have stopped before things got so out of hand, and for that I take the blame."

Blame? What does he mean?

"I'll tell you this much. I've never wanted anyone as much as you. Never felt this... close to anyone else before. Never allowed anyone to see the parts of me you have."

But it's not enough. Can't you see that?

"I don't know if I can give you my heart. Hell, I doubt that exists after everything I have done so far, but my body, it's yours for the taking."

My throat closes.

This man, he could talk forever, and I could listen to him. Hell, I could orgasm, multiple times, one after the other to the timbre of his voice. I want more.

What? What do I need?

"How about a deal?"

"Oh?" He tilts his head.

"You've gotta admit, you're not exactly in any position for negotiating."

He smirks. "Clever girl."

"I'm learning from the master."

"Damn right." He squeezes his dick from base to tip and my gaze drops to his crotch. Droplets of cum drip from the tip of his cock, which has definitely engorged further in the last few seconds.

"Why, Mr. Sterling, I do believe, that you love it when I sass you."

"Never denied that." He growls. "Stop dicking around, Bird, what's your game?"

"Not a game." I bite down on my lower lip and he inhales.

See? He's definitely not as much in control as he pretends. He's as much at a loss as I am. I draw up my shoulders, cross my fingers, "I get to take the lead in bed."

43

Sin

"No." My voice sounds almost as hard as my dick. I wince. She could have asked for my money, my empire, my fucking heart, at that moment and I'd have given it... Okay, maybe not the last one. Dominance in bed is the one thing I will not compromise on.

She tilts her head, the expression on her face a mirror to the one I've pulled on her so often. The back of my neck heats. My cock leaps against my palm. How is it that I can possibly find her attempt to take control so... so arousing?

I glare at her, and she sets her jaw.

"You said you'd give me your body."

I jerk my chin.

"Then this..." she stares at my crotch, "all of this is mine."

This woman. Fuck. How can she surprise me so much? Blood rushes to my groin. My balls grow so hard that I am sure I'm going to jizz myself right there, right now.

"You'll let me take your ass."

She nods.

"Your pussy."

She hesitates, then tosses her head.

"Your mouth."

The pulse beats so fast at her throat that I am sure it's going to tear through her skin.

"At the same time?"

I tilt my head and she juts out her chin. "Okay."

"Anytime I want?"

She squeezes her eyes together, "Why do I get a feeling I am going to regret this?"

You have no idea, little Bird.

She cracks her eyelids open. "What else?"

Smart woman, she knows I am not done yet, hmm? A surge of pride fills my chest. She's come far, my wife, in a few days.

"I will allow you to lead..." Her breath catches.

"Once."

"You..." She swallows. "You'd do that?"

Yeah, what I said earlier? Clearly, I am bloody good at lying to myself, for when it comes to her... Turns out, I am unable to disappoint her. All for a reason, of course. It's the long game that matters. That's me. I bide my time. Never retreat. Keep my focus on the target. Revenge. What a hollow word. It's second nature now. It's what's driven me so far. I can't let down the Seven either. Giving up the thing that defines me? A price I hadn't thought I'd ever have to pay.

Doing it for her? Yeah, only her. Only for her.

"Don't celebrate yet." I splay my fingers on the back of her waist. She flattens her shoulders, her arse juts out. Perfectly heart-shaped. My beautiful responsive, Bird.

I line up my dick with the crease between her butt cheeks. She squirms. I apply enough pressure, so she turns her head toward me. I drop my head and brush my mouth over hers. She stiffens. I swipe my tongue between her lips and she whimpers. I tilt my head, deepen the kiss and she opens for me. I draw from her, suck on her tongue, bite down on the infuriating crease in her lower lip. She cries out and I swallow down the sound, at the same time that I slide my hips forward.

My cock nudges against her back hole and she murmurs deep in her throat.

I slip my fingers in between her legs and play with her pussy. She shudders, parts her legs, and I slide two fingers into her melting pussy. Her spine arches, she thrusts out her butt, and I slip in. I rub my heel on her clit, kiss her with even more intensity.

Her arm comes up and she holds onto my neck as she bows into me.

My sweet Bird. I slide my finger inside her pussy and her knees buckle. I tighten my grip on her nape. A trembling sweeps up her body. She digs her fingers into my skin. I tear my lips from hers and she swallows. Pupils blown, lips parted and swollen from my kisses. I drag my palm down her spine.

When I apply pressure, she bends.

Lowers her head to the desk, her cheek, once more, flush with the antique surface. A thing of beauty, a perfect composition. A merger that clicks into place effortlessly. She's all that. She's mine. I grip her hips and thrust forward; her entire body jerks. And again. My balls harden and pressure builds in my groin. I need more. Much more. I pull out of her, then flip her over. The front of her dress falls open.

She blinks, wide-eyed. Her lips part.

I don't hesitate. I bend with her, over her, touch my lips to hers and kiss her. Drag my hands up her hips to her breasts, cup them, and squeeze her nipples. She moans, the sound so sweet, so right.

I bring my hands down to her thighs, pull them wide apart. She swings her legs up and around my waist. Fuck. I grit my teeth; I need to slow down. Sweat beads my forehead. My heartbeat thunders in my ears. What's happening to me? This was meant to be some kind of hate fuck. A last try to overcome whatever hold she has on me. I'd sweetened her up with words—well, it was all truth, really— then tried to break her. Instead, it's me who's broken.

I squeeze the base of my dick, position myself at the entrance to her weeping pussy. Then tip my head up to stare into her eyes.

"I'm going to fuck you now."

She nods.

"You can say 'No.' "

"Yes."

"Last chance to walk away." Am I warning her or myself?

"Oh, for heaven's sake." She grabs my dick, lines me up with her slit, then slides forward.

She impales herself on my shaft. My cock slips all the way home. I can't stop the growl that rips out of me. Holding her gaze, I grip her hips, withdraw until I'm poised at the opening of her pussy. Pause a beat. Another. Then I thrust into her so hard that the entire desk shakes.

She links her arms around my neck and holds on.

"Good girl."

I proceed to fuck her with an intensity I've never felt before. A complete carnal possession that overrides any other intention I may have ever held.

Remember what I said about fucking thoughts of any other men from her mind? I lied. Again. Turns out, I am the one who's never going to be able to think straight. Ever again.

I thrust into her, again and again.

Fix my fingers on her nape, with my thumb pressed to the front of her neck, where I can sense every single vibration of her voice that emerges in small hoarse cries.

Sweat beads my shoulders. I don't stop. I withdraw then pound into her again and again.

Her lips part; a flush covers her breasts, her face. Her entire body trembles. She throws her head back, her gorgeous hair a halo tumbling down her shoulders. "Come," I growl. And she shatters. Beautifully.

Her eyes roll back in her head and she shudders.

I pull out of her, my balls draw up, and white streams of my cum splatter across her chest. I squeeze my dick from base to tip, empty every last drop of myself on her.

Reaching between us, I rub my seed into the skin exposed by the gaping front of her dress.

She slumps and I scoop her up in my arms. Walking around the desk, I sink into the chair. She curls into my chest and her breathing deepens.

I hold her close, tilt my chair back, turn it toward the window, and watch the raindrops drip down the windowpane.

"I didn't know how to love him. I only knew how to fuck,"

Summer

I come awake to find that I am curled up in the center of the massive bed—his bed, in his house on Primrose Hill.

I sit up and the sheet slides down to pool at my waist. When I swing my legs over, I wince. My thighs ache; there is a soreness in my center. I straighten, glance down, and the breath leaves me. The skin on my thighs is chafed and abraded. I take a step forward and my arse hurts... Yeah, also that part of me where he had proceeded to butter me up, before driving into me from behind. A slow burn starts somewhere below. No. I didn't enjoy it, I didn't. Who am I kidding? He'd... surprised me again.

He'd brought to life one of the most notorious scenes from film history and ah! Liquid heat pools between my legs. It had been the singular most degrading experience of my life... and the most turned on I've ever been.

I squeeze my fingers at my sides.

Then he'd turned me around... and... kissed me. He'd made love to me.

"I'm more than halfway in love with you."

Did he mean it? Sinclair Sterling does not say anything lightly and definitely not the emotions associated with that particular sentiment. Perhaps my imagination is leading me down a path of wishful thinking?

What do I have to do to clear my head? Rid my body of the imprints of his palm that I can feel on my butt, on the curve of my waist, the thickness of his fingers... inside me, bringing me to orgasm, the cold slick of the butter as he'd lubricated me before he'd taken me, with absolute confidence.

He'd known that I wouldn't refuse him. I'd wanted to. No... I'd wanted him. When I am in his vicinity, I can't think of anything else but him... Liar. Even when I am not in the same room, I see him in my mind and yeah, my pussy has a way of homing in on how it will be to have him buried balls deep inside of me.

Jesus, get a grip, here. Stop with the pornographic scenes playing on repeat. Not that I've seen porn... If you don't count 9 1/2 weeks, which had explored BDSM long before Fifty Shades of Grey, or 9 Songs. Wait... What is it with the 9 anyway? I shake my head. Or any of the myriad other arthouse flicks that I'd snuck in to watch, whenever they came to play at the Prince Charles Theatre—one of the few existing arthouse cinemas near Leicester Square.

My entire life is beginning to resemble a badly-produced indie flick, for that matter... For he hadn't stopped there. After I'd fallen asleep on his chest... Yeah, it's large, hard, and surprisingly comfortable, and despite all of the ways he's fucked me over—literally—seems something in me innately trusts Mr. Big Bad.

I'd woken up to find he was carrying me up to the roof top. He'd ordered a helicopter because... Well yeah, he could.

He'd said he wanted to get inside me again and didn't want to wait. Of course, not.

I swallow, lurch toward the bathroom.

He'd carried me inside the house to the kitchen. Fed me strawberries and cream. He'd insisted I eat it and drink every drop of the glass of orange juice he'd poured for me.

Then he'd shagged me.

Over the kitchen table, on the steps, against the wall of his bedroom, on the bed... He'd broken off to bring me some cheese and biscuits at dinner time. No alcohol because... he wanted all of my faculties about me.

I'd lost count somewhere after orgasm number thirteen, or was that twenty? I bite the inside of my cheek. I'd fallen asleep with him inside of me again. My pussy clenches. How can I miss him already?

I shove open the bathroom door and cross the floor to the sink on the left; the one with an array of feminine cosmetics, none of which I'd brought. The brand is absolutely top of the range. Individually, they'd account for what I'd probably get paid in a week working at FOK. Fuck.

I drag my fingers through my hair. I'd never gotten a chance to mention the reason I'd barged in on him. Because I'd had an idea for the marketing strategy. Something I need to bring up to him right away.

I glance at the mirror and notice the note tucked into a corner of the glass frame. Reach for it, pull it out. The gold SS on the cream paper confirms who it was from.

"The cosmetics are for you—don't refuse them."

Asshole. His cursive is as dominating as his presence.

"Breakfast is waiting for you in the kitchen."

Huh? You don't say.

"Because I'm feeling charitable, you may work from home today. You're welcome."

What? Am I supposed to be grateful or something? I purse my lips. Bring the note to my nose and sniff. Bergamot and leather... and a whiff of something intangible I label as testosterone. I chafe my thighs together. Place the note aside. Brush my teeth, shower in record time. When I return to the bedroom, I spot the dress he's laid out for me.

I slip it on, survey myself in the mirror. It has a long flowing skirt and the blouse fits me so closely, I have to wonder. Did he have it tailored to my specifications? Does he know my measurements that well?

He knows my body more intimately than anyone else ever has. I fondle the soft material. The skirt is a dark red. How did he guess that it's the color that sets off my coloring best? My pink hair flows around my shoulders, the blonde highlights in it seem lustrous, and my skin is a pearly effervescence against the fabric.

Once again, he's unerringly figured out what is right for me. Does he always know what is best? Am I beginning to harbor some kind of secret crush on him, where I am beginning to acquiesce to his every single demand? No. I drag the brush through my hair, drop it on the table. I won't wear any make up. After all, I'm not dressing for anyone. Besides, I don't want to use any of the cosmetics he bought for me. The dress? Well, that is different. I have to wear something—though left to the alphahole, I bet he'd prefer me to go naked.

Don't second guess me, Bird.

I scrutinize the room. The mussed-up bed where we'd spent the night, the table and chair at the far end, the comfortable-looking settee on one side of the fireplace. The furnishings are luxurious, but otherwise there is a sparseness to it that hints at... what?

Something more complex about the man than I've been giving him credit for?

Nothing to think about here. Nothing to unearth. He is a greedy, narcissistic, pompous prick, who thinks about one thing—himself. And how to amass more money. See? Puzzle resolved.

I slide on the ballet flats—made of the softest leather I've ever worn—then pivot and walk down the stairs. Walk into the kitchen and find a covered tray, with a note.

"Eat it all."

I stiffen. I should ignore the food, turn away, leave, right now, before this entire farce of a relationship backfires on me and I begin to harbor feelings for him. Too late. I feel something... already. Hate, yeah, that's all it is.

I uncover the tray to find a massive sandwich. A plate of fruit, crisps. There's another note stuck to the side of the plate.

"It's gluten free. You're welcome."

How did he know I am allergic to gluten? I've never mentioned it to him, and managed to ignore any food that could have traces of it so far.

Of course, he had to go and spoil it all with that know-it-all tone.

I crumple the note, fling it away,

The kettle clicks on. What the—? I hear the water boil. Did he set it on a timer? Some kind of sensing device that picks up when I'm in the room? I blow out a breath.

I walk to the kettle as it switches off. Make myself a cup of tea, and seat myself at the table. I've just finished the sandwich when the doorbell rings.

My heart begins to thud. Is he back? Did he decide he is going to work from home today? Better still, does he want to spend it with me? I am halfway across the floor, before I slow down. By the time I reach the front hallway, there's a banging on the door. I fling it open.

Familiar features peer down at me.

"You?"

"Hello, Summer."

I glare at the man who is my father.

The bastard who'd abandoned me and my sister when we'd needed him the most. He'd never looked back, until he'd sensed the first whiff of a possible business gain, and then he'd come running. The asshole would sacrifice his family for money—oh, wait, he already had.

There's a light roll of thunder in the distance—as if it is asking for permission. That's British weather for you, just like our vocabulary. Apparently, we use the word 'sorry' more than any other country—up to 8 times a day. Yeah, sorry—not sorry. I frown, "I don't want you here."

"Can I come in?"

It begins to drizzle outside, some of the drops blowing in to bead on his shoulder.

"Do I have a choice?" I jut out my chin.

"That's my girl. Still got a spine, huh?"

"No thanks to you, and don't call me your girl."

"You're my daughter."

"Really?" I stare. "You lost the right to that when you decided to leave me and Karma to the vagaries of our fate."

"Don't exaggerate." He frowns. "Look at you now. It doesn't look like you suffered too much."

If you don't count the fact that we'd gone from having an abundance of every luxury to having two meals a day, and a school where we were the laughingstock because of how different we were. So, we weren't abused physically. Mentally and emotionally, though, it was another story. I wrap a strand of my hair around my fingers. "You could have taken us with you—or better still, you could have told us what was going on, found a way to face up to the mess you'd created."

"And what? Gone to jail?" He rocks back on his feet, "Where would that have left you?"

"Exactly where you left us anyway. Fighting to make something of ourselves. Trying to undo the hurt of our childhood years, and betrayal. And yeah, issues with trust, let's not forget that."

"Your husband has money; he can afford the best mental health professionals."

"Are you listening to yourself?"

He draws in a breath, "I didn't come here to fight."

"Too bad." I wrap my arms around my waist, "I've been waiting for the chance to tell you how much of a shitty parent you were... No, strike that. That I disown you, for how you abandoned us." I attempt to close the door. He grabs the handle, "Sunshine, please."

I freeze. Only my father called me that. I'd been his ray of sunshine once, or so he'd told me. Those mornings when he'd cook me breakfast, before anyone else was up. Our time together. Then he'd drive me to school. Karma had been a baby then, and dependent on our mother. He'd been proud of me once. And I had looked up to him.

"Five minutes. That's all I'm asking." Oh, he knows how to push the point when he has an advantage, huh?

I step back, walk inside, then head toward the living room that overlooks the garden. He follows me.

I stop at the massive French doors, and he pauses behind me.

"I can explain, Summer."

"Save it. I don't want to listen to your sorry excuses."

He draws in a breath. "Everything I did was so I could ensure that you and your sister had a future."

"You expect me to believe that?"

"I was mixed up with the wrong people. After your mother died, I wasn't thinking straight. I made many wrong business decisions. Ended up falling into debt."

I don't want to hear it. I don't.

He swallows, the sound audible in the silence, interrupted by the patter of the rain outside.

"I ended up owing a lot of money to the Mafia. I had to leave before they took everything I held dear to me."

"So you dumped us?"

"The only way was to start afresh, for all of us." He moves away. "I put you in the care system, then faked my own death. I moved to the US, changed my identity, wiped all traces of our past."

"You did it very effectively too." I stare straight ahead. "Guess you were good at something."

He winces. "Everything I did was to throw the Mafia off of your tracks. It was for your good."

"So parents say. They have no idea how much they screw us kids up. So we have to spend the rest of our lives unlearning everything we were subjected to in our growing up years."

The breath whooshes out of him. "I'm sorry, Summer. I did what I thought was best for all of us..."

"Yeah, I'm sorry too." I turn on him. "You've assuaged your conscience, said your piece... Why don't you leave now, huh?"

"There is." He shuffles his weight from foot to foot. "One thing."

I knew it. "Money? You think because of this..." I wave my arms around, "that I have some claim to his wealth and his power? Then you are wrong."

"You're the wife of a rich and powerful man. It has to count for something."

"It means nothing."

"Not from where I am." He lowers his chin, "And it's not about the money."

"Don't lie." A headache begins to pound at my temples.

"I admit, it might have been one of the main reasons that I accepted Sinclair's offer, but when I saw you and your sister after all these years." His throat moves as he swallows, "I realized it wasn't about that at all."

I don't believe him. I don't. Something hot unfurls in my chest, "What then?"

"Are you happy?"

I blink.

"Excuse me?"

"Does he make you happy?"

"What's that got to do with anything?"

"You're my daughter"

"You lost all right to call me that."

He holds up a hand. "I get it. You're unhappy with the cards life dealt you, so far. It's normal. It's time you put it behind you as you start your new life."

"Is that why you're here? To give me advice?"

"When Sinclair asked me over, I agreed to come, on one condition. I had to be satisfied that he was the right man for you. Someone who could take care of you, protect you—"

"The way you never could."

His lips twist. "You grew up fine, with all your wits about you."

"No thanks to you."

"Tell me you are content, and I can seal the deal with him."

"Deal?"

"He didn't tell you?" Adam frowns.

"We haven't had the time to speak." Heat sears my cheeks. I hadn't meant it to come out that way.

My father doesn't seem to notice.

"It's understandable. Sinclair is a busy man. He bought me amnesty from the government, gave me a chance to return home to attend my daughter's wedding." Adam shuffles his feet. "Still, considering what he wants..."

My pulse begins to race. The hairs on the nape of my neck rise. I wipe my suddenly damp palms on the skirt. Something thrums at the edges of my conscious mind and I push it away. "What does he want?"

"What do you think?" A familiar voice cuts through the space.

I whip my head around to find my husband leaning against the door frame.

He trains his gaze on my father, "I want to ruin you, of course."

45

Sin

My wife stiffens.

Ahead of her, the man who was responsible for destroying my childhood stares past her at me. He looks confused.

"The deal was you'd keep me and my family safe and share enough business interests for me to redeem myself on my home turf."

I tilt my head.

"You didn't invite me to attend the wedding because my daughter wanted me here?"

I make a twirling motion with my fingers. "Go on."

"You want something more from me?"

I bare my teeth.

He swallows, "Either way, you don't intend to stick to your word?"

I walk toward them. "Now what makes you say that, hmm?" I pause next to my wife.

Adam looks at her, then back at me, "She's innocent." Sweat beads his forehead.

"That's what I told the men who kidnapped me."

"Kidnapped?" Summer angles her body to face me. "What are you talking about?"

"Ask your father."

She steps away, putting distance between herself and the both of us. Anger slices my gut.

Of course, she is wary of me.

She has the right to be, given how I had taken her in my office yesterday, and then I couldn't keep my hands off her body. She is singlehandedly, the biggest distraction in my life right now, and I would do well to be done with her and this sham of a marriage.

I'd hoped for time with her, hadn't reckoned things would come to a head so soon. What-fucking-ever. I can work with the cards I've been dealt. So what if I told him I'd protect them? I don't owe him, or her, anything.

"Dad?"

Adam glances down at his daughter. "I haven't heard you call me that since—"

"Since you abandoned us."

He winces. "I've already explained to you, Summer—"

"Stop." She cuts the air with her hand. "I don't want to hear your excuses." She jerks her chin toward me without looking at me, "Tell me what he's referring to, will you?"

"I... I'm not sure." Adam looks between us.

"Bull-fucking-shit." I explode. Adam's shoulders hunch. My wife winces, but doesn't take her gaze off of his face.

"Tell her." I gesture toward the older man.

He blinks rapidly, then peruses my features. "Who... who are you... really?"

"Haven't you guessed yet?"

"It can't be," he whispers. His face blanches.

"Tell her what you did to me... you fucking piece of shit."

Adam takes a deep breath. "It's a long story."

I twist my lips, "Trust me, nothing as extended as the time I spent with the rest of the Seven locked up in a windowless cellar."

"You were locked up?" She whips her head around, and I feel every millimeter of that green gaze. Waves of confusion emanate from her. Fuck that. I don't need her sympathy; I don't need anyone feeling sorry for me. I want revenge. Anger coils my gut. A hot feeling stabs in my chest. I click the clasp on my watch. Control it. You gotta rein in your temper. Stay focused. I click the clasp again.

The cold metal soothes me; some of the noise in my head recedes. So close. I am so close to my goal, I can practically taste the ending. Revenge: his utter destruction, tracking down the men responsible, and putting this whole ugly segment of my life behind me.

A pressure builds behind my rib cage.

"Tell her right now, or I swear I'll kill you with my bare hands. Right now."

Summer inhales sharply. Go on Bird, go to his defense, tell me off. Show me how the blood of my enemy runs through your veins.

Her gaze is fixed on her father, "Spit it out, whatever you did to him." She firms her lips.

Huh?

Adam makes a choking sound. He pulls out a handkerchief and mops his forehead. "Can you get me some water?"

"No." My wife's features are pale. The hollows beneath her cheeks are pronounced. She grabs a strand of that glorious pink hair and chews on it, a giveaway that she is stressed. I take a step forward, then stop myself. What am I doing?

Why do I want to go to her, pull her close and ask her to lean on me? Tell her that she doesn't have to worry about anything as long as I am around. I'll take care of her forever. Fuck. These motherfucking emo thoughts? Where are they coming from? Just because I fucked her— You made love to her, asshole. Last night had been as close to a declaration of intention as you can get.

You worshipped her body with your own. You kissed her, took her arse, wrecked her pussy as if it were yours. For she is yours. She is. Only it's too late. I've come too far, planned too much. I owe it to the Seven to see this through.

She? She is collateral damage. A drumming intensifies behind my eyes. I drag my fingers through my hair.

"No point delaying the inevitable." I glare at the man.

He makes a choking sound.

"Don't faint on me now." I lean forward on the balls of my feet. "You're not getting any sympathy from me."

"I don't need it." He draws himself upright. Then turns to my wife. "You remember what I told you about owing money to the mob?"

She nods.

"I was in their control. I had to do what they asked. They threatened to kill you and Karma. Or worse."

"The fuck?" A growl rips up my chest.

Both of them turn in my direction.

"They threatened her life?" I flex my fingers at my sides, Summer's gaze narrows, "What's your problem?"

I shoot her a glare; she juts out her chin. She takes a deep breath and opens her mouth. I shake my head. She purses her lips and I am sure she's going to speak or say something; instead, she wraps her arms around her waist and glowers back.

Later, Bird. You and me are going to have this out, and I promise, you won't be able to speak at all by the end.

Her cheeks redden. Perhaps she read the intention in my gaze, hmm?

I turn on Adam, sorry excuse of a human that he is. "And you call yourself a father? You left them in danger and ran away?"

"I faked my death, severed ties with them. I released them into the system because, let's face it, the government would have had more success in miring their trail in paperwork so that it would be difficult for anyone to find them."

"You did a brilliant job too. In fact, I'd almost forgotten about your existence." Summer's voice is harsh; there's an edge to it I've never heard before. She holds her body so tightly that her shoulders seem to vibrate.

"Too bad you couldn't do the same for yourself."

Adam loosens the tie about his neck, "What do you mean?"

"My husband tracked you down, didn't he? So you weren't as efficient in covering your tracks as you thought."

Adam turns to me, his eyes wide, "How did you find me, when the Mafia tried and failed for all these years?"

"Clearly, they aren't as resourceful as I am. Funny how almost dying can light a fire under you, and ensure that you never give up until you track down your quarry."

Summer angles her body toward me. "Wha... what do you mean? Who almost died?"

I slice my hand through the air, "Doesn't matter."

I glare at her. Now is when she explodes, and tells me off, pulls off a snarky comment at my expense. My pulse rate picks up; my blood thrums in my veins. Come on, little Bird, give me a taste of that sass and fire hidden below the surface. I scan her features, wait... wait. She peruses my features with a searching look in her eyes, then shakes her head.

"Cora." Adam's chin quivers.

Summer stiffens, "You lost the right to call me that."

"When you were born, your face was a perfect heart shape. I wanted to name you Cora. Your mother insisted on Summer. We compromised, as was often the case." His lips twitch. "And Cora became your middle name." His features soften. "You were so beautiful. The tiniest little child with the sweetest disposition ever."

He sways; rubs his chest.

"I'll never forget how you lit up my life, my child. The time we spent together is among the most precious memories of my life."

She firms her lips, raises her chin, "I am pleased to say I don't remember much of my growing years."

He winces, "I deserve it."

I take a step forward, "Tell her what you did to us."

"You mean there's more?" Summer tucks her elbows into her sides, her entire body stiff. Her chest rises and falls. She's imagining—I can't begin to fathom what it is she's thinking, but the reality is far worse.

"I..." Adam licks his lips, "Please, can you get me some water first?"

I turn to do that.

"No."

I pause, glance toward my wife.

"The complete story first." Summer sets her jaw, "Enough with your delay tactics."

A small smile turns up his lips, "You remind me of your mother."

"You don't get to do that." Her chin trembles. "Spit it out already." She spits out his name, "Adam."

He squeezes his eyes shut and when he reopens them, they glitter with unshed tears. "Fine." He weaves on his feet, puts out his hand, and grabs onto the nearest chair. "They coerced me... I had to obey them." He looks from me to her, "I kidnapped your husband."

She scowls, "What do you mean?"

"Your father aligned with the Mob in furthering their business interests." My voice emerges as if it belongs to someone else.

I glare at Adam, "Tell her how you kidnapped me on the way home from school when I was twelve."

His gaze flicks to his daughter, "It's not how it sounds."

"Oh?" The blood thunders at my temple. "Are you denying what you did."

He tips his chin up, drags his fingers through his hair. His fingers tremble.

"It's true that I delivered you to the Mafia."

I fold my fingers into fists, "As you did the rest of the Seven?"

He furrows his brow. "I wasn't responsible for any other children. The Mafia must have put others up to that." He raises his hands. "I swear. After taking you, I knew I couldn't do that again. That's when I faked my death."

Anger explodes behind my eyes; my vision tunnels.

"Why me?" I growl. "I was the sole scholarship kid in that school. My parents had no money, let alone the kind of old wealth that the rest of the Seven did."

"It was a mistake. Last-minute change of plans. The child they had set their eyes on didn't come to school that day. You walked out instead." He raises his shoulders. "I was desperate; you fit the bill."

"Wrong place, wrong time, huh?"

His lips twist. "You could say that."

There's a sharp inhalation from my wife.

"You were unlucky, Sinclair." He waves a hand at his surroundings, "But look what it did to you."

"The fuck you mean?" The blood drums at my temples with such intensity that the edges of my vision go dark.

"Clearly, it gave you the motivation you needed to lift yourself to the very top."

"Are you actually trying to take credit for my success? It drove my parents to an early grave, you dumb fuck. My entire life changed in an instant." A trembling stumbles up my spine. I grip my fingers at my sides. Take one step forward, then another.

"Sinclair." My wife's voice follows me

I reach him, grab his collar.

"Sin." She grips my collar, "Don't."

"Do it." Adam smiles, then his lips pull down. "I deserve all of it."

I pull back my hand in a fist; my wife screams.

Adam crumples to the ground.

Summer

The rhythmic whoosh-thump of the respirator thuds against my chest, mirroring the whump-whump-whump of my heart. I stare at the man who was... is my father.

I hadn't seen him in fifteen years and when he'd shown up at my wedding I had ignored him. I had insulted him when he'd turned up on my doorstep— Okay, my husband's doorstep. I had refused my father water. He'd asked for it twice and I had ignored him.

I curl my fingers into fists.

I had been too intent on revenge; on cutting into him with my words; wanting him to feel as broken as I had been in the years after he'd left me. When I'd found out he hadn't actually died, I'd wished him dead so many times... And here he is, on death's door. His ribs visible through the hospital gown, his face so pale it blends in with the sheets. When had his dark hair gone so grey? I hadn't noticed it earlier.

In the blurry images I carried in my head, he'd been tall, larger than life, a wide smile, a full head of dark hair. He'd been some kind of hero... a vision I'd wanted to cling to in my weaker moments. Someone who would one day come back for me and tell me that he was sorry, that he still loved me.

And he had returned. And I hadn't wanted to acknowledge that he still existed. He is the cause of every bad memory from my childhood come to life, and he claimed that he'd done it all for my own good. Typical. Why do parents always think that their children need to be shielded? That they can't bear what their parents are going through?

All he'd had to do was take us with him—love us, hate us, we'd have been together, and that's all that would have mattered.

But he hadn't.

And here we are in a hospital room. My father had crumpled and Sinclair had caught him before he could hit the floor. My husband had called for his helicopter, then phoned ahead for his private doctors to be on standby. For once I didn't begrudge him his wealth.

We'd arrived at the hospital, and Dad had been rushed in. A cardiac attack. They'd operated on him right away, put in a stent to widen his blocked arteries. Now all I have to do is wait. For what? What am I going to say when he comes around? What will I tell him? What is going to happen to him? To us?

Karma and Victoria were in to see him already, and now they are in the waiting room outside.

I'd put it off, until... until Karma had urged me to go in. She'd told me that if something were to happen to him, I'd regret it if I didn't at least see him. But Dad is in his fifties; nothing is going to happen to him, right?

People survive multiple bypasses and go on to live full lives. Surely, my father will be no different. He'll pull through. He has to. I press my knuckles into my eyes.

The door whispers open behind me, and a shiver runs down my back.

It's him. He's in the room.

Sinclair draws abreast; the scent of bergamot and leather cleaves through the cloud of antiseptic. I draw it into my lungs, hold it, savor it. How many times will I be able to do this?

"How are you?"

These are the first words he's spoken to me in the last many hours. He'd ensured I didn't have to deal with the paperwork, the formalities, talking to the doctors. He'd taken care of all of it, leaving me to grieve... What? How things could have been, had my father not abandoned us? How I could have handled things differently with him? Could I have told him everything I carried around in my mind? My father... Sin... Why are my emotions always such a tangled web?

"Bird."

"Summer." My voice is too loud in the room, "My name is Summer."

"You should take a break, go home—"

"No." I glance away, "And it's not my home."

"Call it mine then." He widens his stance. "Go, eat, take a bath."

"What if he dies while I am gone?"

"He won't."

"Oh?" I stop the chuckle that bubbles up. Hysteria? No way am I giving into that. Not in front of him. "You think you can stop death?"

"I know it."

I stiffen, "What do you mean?"

"I almost died as a child."

"What?" I swing around. He's staring at the opposite wall. A pulse flares to life at his jawline. "The Mafia kidnapped us and kept us captive."

"For how long?"

"Too long." He fiddles with the clasp of his watch. "It was close to a month." His jaw tenses.

I don't dare speak, don't want to break this line of thought. He's thinking of... something... caught in the throes of his nightmares. I am not the only one running from my past, eh?

"We were bound to our beds, kept drugged." He clicks open the clasp of his watch, then shuts it with a harder click. "I floated in and out of consciousness." The tendons of his throat flex. "In my lucid moments, I tried to communicate with the other boys in the room. There were—"

"Seven of you."

He nods. "That's how we met. From different homes, families, different realities; and our lives were changed irrevocably in that time."

"A powerful bond."

"One that unites you and haunts you for the rest of your life."

"What did they want?"

"They blackmailed our families for money. Until they realized mine didn't have any."

The clicking of his watch grows louder.

He pulls himself up to his full height, "After about 3 weeks in that hell hole, one of us managed to break free. He was caught and brought back. That day they decided to make an example of me. I was the expandable one, after all." His smile grows fierce. "They beat me so hard that I lost consciousness."

I gasp. "The scar over your eyebrow...?"

He nods.

"The other families paid up. The kidnapers took the money, revealed the location where they were holding us. I was rescued with the other boys." He clicks the clasp of his watch. "When I arrived at the hospital I wasn't breathing. They resuscitated me." The clicking grows louder.

"They brought you back." The breath rushes out of me.

"I chose to live."

"Is that why... uh! You're so intense?"

One side of his mouth kicks up, "Now you're being diplomatic."

Yeah, but when a man decides to reveal something of his deepest self, you don't exactly kick him for it, eh?

He straightens, rubs the back of his neck, "I almost died... The rest of the Seven didn't escape unscathed either."

"What do you mean?"

"That is their story to tell."

He turns to me.

His shirt is unbuttoned, his hair mussed as if he's been running his hands through the thick strands. It gives him a veneer of vulnerability. An act. Surely, it's an act?

He'd wanted me to draw my father into the open. He'd wanted to destroy him.... Guess he got his wish, huh? So, what's left? "Why share all of this with me... now?"

He holds out his hand. "Take a break."

I stare at his hand. "Is everything a negotiation?"

"Yes." He draws in a breath. "It's the most important lesson I learned during the time I was locked up there. You had to think on your feet, hold back. As long as you had something that your opponent wanted, you had a chance."

"Am I your opponent?" I tip my head back, peruse his features for the first time since he'd come into the room. Dark shadows circle his eyes, and his stubble seems wilder somehow.

It enhances his potency.

Those dark, brooding, smoldering good looks just kicked up a notch. Combined with that hint of defenselessness that laces his features, it's intoxicating. An addiction. A low burn simmers in my belly. My body is too conditioned to react to him. I don't stand a chance.

I reach for his hand, his fingers brush mine and he pulls me up. I straighten and our knees bump.

He tucks an errant strand of hair behind my ears and I shiver.

His gaze deepens as he surveys my face. He sighs, "Bird, I'm..."

A cough sounds from the bed. I blink. Sinclair withdraws. I swivel, walk toward the bed, "Daddy?"

My father's eyes blink open. "Summer?"

"I'm here."

His fingers twitch. I grasp his palm. His hand is bigger than mine, yet his bones seem hollow.

"I'm sorry, for everything."

"You need to rest and recover."

"It's time for me to leave."

"Don't say that." My heart begins to race; a weakness hollows my knees. I grab the edge of the bed.

"You need to get better and..." My voice falters. I am not sure what to say. Come home with me? Do we have anything in common anymore? Our worlds are too different; so much time has passed. "We can... make a fresh start."

"You do that for me." He glances up at the man towering above us. "Take care of her."

Sinclair moves closer, until his warmth envelops me. "I will." His voice seems to be coming from far away.

"I can take care of myself."

"I know." My father's face lights up in a smile. "But life is a long walk; there are ups and downs, and the time goes faster when you have company."

My father's face waves in and out in front of my eyes. Only then do I realize that I am crying.

I swipe at the tears on my face. "Is that how it was between you and my mother?"

"I was never the same after she died." His chin trembles. "But it won't be long before I see her."

My blood pounds behind my eyes, "Don't talk like that," I sniffle. "You are going to be fine."

He gasps, glances up at Sinclair, "There's something you should know." He swallows; his chest heaves.

The beeping from the monitor next to him increases in pace. "Daddy, please don't talk. Please, you need to conserve your energy."

"I must." He draws in a breath, "I'm afraid he's tracked me down."

"Who?" Sinclair moves closer, "Tell me, Adam."

"Stop." I shove at Sin, "Back off, asshole, let him recover first."

"Mob. Underworld boss." My father coughs; all color leaches from his face. "He called me and threatened me. He's going to hurt my girls."

"Don't talk Dad. Please." I wring my fingers. He doesn't look well at all. "I'm going to get the doctor."

"No." My father wheezes. "Stay with me, Summer." He holds out his arm. I step forward, grasp his palm, twine my fingers with his.

He trains his gaze on Sinclair, "The same faction that was behind the kidnapping of you and your friends." His chest heaves.

The beeping in the room intensifies further.

My pulse begins to race. "Dad, don't exert yourself, please."

Sinclair comes closer. "Who is it? Tell me."

My father's eyelashes flutter, his lips move, but nothing emerges. Shit. This is not good. Not good. My throat closes. My stomach twists.

"Don't crowd him. Can't you see he needs to regain his health first." I yell, "Get away from him!"

Sinclair's feature harden. A nerve throbs at his temple. "Tell me who's responsible." He brushes past me and leans over Dad. "If I need to keep her safe, I need to know who I am after."

My father's mouth opens and closes. Sinclair places his ear next to his lips, "Say it."

His lips move. "Byron... Capo..."

The beeping monitor next to the bed flatlines.

"No." I scramble up, squeezing my father's fingers. "You can't do this." The door slams open and footsteps sound. A doctor, followed by two nurses, comes rushing in.

The doc checks out his heart with a stethoscope, nods to the nurse, who turns to me, "You need to wait outside."

"No." I hold onto my father's hand. It's warm. He can't have left me. I didn't get to tell him how much I care for him. That I forgive him. "Daddy."

"Ma'am, please." The nurse turns to the man by my side.

Sinclair pulls me close, "Bird."

I shake my head, tears pouring down my cheeks.

"Come with me." He tugs me back; my father's hand slips from my grasp. A second doctor, additional nurses flood the space. Cut the sight of the figure on the bed from my line of sight.

He urges me to turn; I follow him outside. He leads me down the corridor, through a door, into a waiting room. Faces... familiar faces turn to us.

"How is he?" Saint asks, from where he's waiting not far from Victoria.

I glance away.

Karma rushes to me; I open my arms and hug my sister.

Victoria stands with her fingers clasped in front of her. She's wearing a dark blue, almost black in color, dress that falls to below her knees. Her make up is perfect, her lips a red slash. She stares at the door, her features blank. Did she love my father? Maybe I should comfort her?

I try to move toward her, but Karma tightens her hold on me.

Or maybe not.

The doors open behind me.

No, I will not turn. Will not.

There's a soft murmur of voices. Then footsteps approach me. The doctor clears his throat. "Mrs. Sterling."

"It's Ms. West" I turn, with Karma holding onto me.

His face says everything.

"No." I swallow.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Ah, Ms. West. His body rejected the stent. It's extremely rare but..."

His voice fades.

Victoria approaches us. I meet her blank gaze. She draws Karma away from me. My sister shoves at Victoria half-heartedly, then folds her arm round the other woman's slim shoulders.

I brush past the doctor, walking toward Sinclair who watches me approach.

His lips move... I don't register the words. I stare at the broad chest, in that crisp white shirt... The color pristine, the tendrils of black hair that pepper his tanned skin. Up to that strong chin, the square jaw.

"You okay?" He dips his face, peers into my eyes. Cerulean, blue and black. Everything I hate.

"You killed him." A coldness grips my chest. "He wasn't old enough to die; he could have lived to be ninety."

Sinclair's jaw tics. "I'm sorry for your loss, Summer."

"No, you're not. This is what you wanted. You wanted to ruin him and you made me help you. Well, guess what? You've ruined all of us." My knees wobble. I clench my fingers at my sides. I thought I had done my share of grieving when my mother had died... the first time I thought my father had died... but this... Everything feels too sharp, too real. Is it because I am older now? Because I can separate each individual shred of emotion that pierces my gut? I press my fingers together in front of my chest.

"I didn't intend for this to happen." His jaw tics.

"Bullshit." My chest hurts and pressure builds behind my eyes. "You made him come; you subjected him to this farce. You threatened him, told him you were going to ruin him. You must have known this was a possible outcome."

The skin at the corners of his eyes creases. He firms his lips. "I didn't want him to die. I wanted Adam to be alive to witness his destruction."

"How big of you."

A vein pops to life at his temple.

"If it weren't for you," I stab a finger at him, "My father would be alive."

"And you'd still think he was dead."

I wince.

He drags his fingers through his hair, "Fuck, I'm sorry Summer."

I lean forward on the balls of my feet, "I hate you."

"You don't."

That hard certainty in his tone whips through the jumble of thoughts in my head. "You know nothing."

I throw myself at him.

Raise my fist until it connects with that beautiful jaw. Punch his neck, his chest, any part of him that I can reach.

"I loathe you. I never want to see you again. I want you to leave, I can't stand you. Go. Away." I raise my arm and he catches it.

"Do you mean it?"

I tilt my chin up. Don't say it. Don't. "Get away from me, you monster."

Sin

I'd turned and stalked toward the door of that hospital waiting room... and paused. I'd turned and caught a glimpse of Karma and Summer holding each other, Victoria, slightly to the side.

At least Summer would have company. My wife wouldn't be alone in her grief.

That had reassured me; enough that I'd walked away.

I had set her free, just as I'd intended to do all along. Arranged the funeral for her father; had told myself I wouldn't go. Then had contented myself with watching her from a distance.

Fuck, when had I started second-guessing my moves, huh?

Why is it that I can recall the shape of her black dress as it had hugged her curves, ending below her knees? Her pink hair had shone in the afternoon sun.

Yeah, unlike in the movies, in real life, the fucking sunshine bathes a funeral scene in golden light, even in rain-drenched London.

My wife had held onto her sister, flanked by her stepmother on the other side.

Saint had represented the Seven.

He'd stood at the other end of the crowd, his attention focused on Victoria. Again.

Summer had glanced up and spotted me.

Our gazes had connected. I'd held hers, willed her to come to me. She'd stiffened, then deliberately turned away, and I'd forced myself to leave.

That was exactly seven days ago. I'd focused on 7A and FOK media, had buried myself in my work.

She'd told me to get away from her, and I had.

For the first time in my life, I had gone against my every instinct, which had screamed at me to gather her close, comfort her, take care of her. She hadn't wanted it. And I had listened to her wishes. Fuck me. Fuck her. Fuck this thing between us that seems to grow bigger with every second.

I raise the bottle of whiskey and chug it down. The liquid hits my stomach like a fireball. I stare out through the open window of my office.

"Planning on alcohol poisoning yourself, huh?" Saint walks up to stand next to me.

I don't reply, stare into the distance, where London spreads her skirts out, waiting for the next big bastard who will fuck her in the cunt. Oh, wait. That's me. I am the one who's turned every innocent thing that's come my way into sordidness; who's made my millions doing whatever it took, for as everyone knows, you can't reach the top without stepping on some bodies.

That's all she'd been. Collateral damage. So why am I standing here brooding when my plan had worked spectacularly? I had destroyed Adam, and in the process, my wife. I hadn't thought she'd take me down with her. Without trying. Without raising a finger. She'd bared herself to me and I had crushed her.

"It wasn't your fault."

"Oh?" I raise the bottle to my lips, take another healthy swig.

"He could dish it out, too bad his heart couldn't take it."

Whatever.

He holds out his hand and I hand the bottle to him.

"How long are you going to sulk?"

"Do I look like I am sulking?"

"Abso-fucking-lutely."

I thrust out my hand and he holds out the bottle. It's empty. Typical.

"Why did you come here, Saint?"

"No reason."

"You always have a reason."

"Making sure you're alive, old chap."

"I am. You can bugger off now."

"You're in a piss of a mood."

"Get off my balls, you knob."

"Have you spoken to her yet?"

I'd tried, once. She'd hung up on me. No one hangs up on me. No one. I'd almost walked out of there and to her house... And then what? What would I have done? Apologized? Told her I'd become a new man? This is what I am. And it is true that her father played a big role in that. Perhaps the old man had been right; I had forged my identity from that incident. I wouldn't be here if I hadn't forced myself forward. Aimed so high that no one could touch me. So I could have the perfect revenge until... It had gone all pear-shaped on me.

"I'm divorcing her."

Saint stiffens.

"I'll ensure that she's set up for life. Give her enough money so she won't have to work ever again."

"Is that what she wants?"

"It's what she gets." I place the bottle on the table nearby. "That should be enough compensation for what I put her through, right?"

"Well, then." He turns, walks to the bar. I hear the ice clink. He returns with two glasses of whiskey.

"A toast then." He raises his glass.

I toss the alcohol down my throat.

"You're such a chutiya."

"That's me." Always ready to bring out the worst in people.

"Maybe you should try to placate her?"

"Not my style."

"Not that you should change your approach or anything... not unless you want her."

"I don't—"

"If you love her—"

I scoff, "I don't."

Jace walks in. "The man doth protest too much."

"Thought you'd left the country." I glower.

"I returned last night. Sienna and I are buying the house up the street."

"What?" I frown, "Why?"

"Let it not be said that you didn't welcome me with open arms." He laughs. "It wasn't my call. She wants our child to grow up in the UK. Don't ask me why." He shakes his head. "Besides, she fell in love with Primrose Hill when she attended your wedding." Jace's face lights up, as it always does when he speaks about Sienna. All of this emo shit, fuck, it's too early for that. "She figured this way she could get to know your wife better as well."

"You missed the memo." I grind my teeth so hard, pain flicks up my jaw. "I'm getting divorced."

He shakes his head, "Don't be such a..." He turns to Saint, "What was the very eloquent word you used?"

"Chutiya."

"Yep, that."

My left eyelid twitches, "And you're the master of relationships because?"

"I am the one who's married to a woman who lights up my days and my nights."

"What-fucking-ever. That flowery-ass bullshit may suit you, but it's not for me."

"Hmm." Jace approaches me. "Close your eyes."

"What?"

Saint snickers, "If I were you, I'd be careful. Whatever Jace is on, it's clearly infectious. I, for one, intend to savor my single status." He steps away, giving us both a wide berth.

Jace grimaces, "You going to be swayed by this sorry excuse of a douche, or you going to, for once in your sorry life, listen to your fucking heart?"

"Newsflash." Saint stretches out on the couch, "He doesn't have one."

Jace jerks his chin at me, "Didn't take you for a pussy."

Fuck this. I shut my eyes. "Now what?"

"What's the first image that flashes behind your eyes?"

Her.

"What's the first voice you hear?"

Hers.

"The first scent?"

Her arousal.

"Color?"

The pink strands of her hair.

"The first touch you recall?"

How her lips had parted under mine. How she'd moaned, opened up for me. Welcomed me into her body, her life, her soul.

My eyes flash open.

"You doubt what you feel for her?"

A hot burn stabs at my chest.

"What are you going to do about it?"

Saint punches a cushion behind his neck, "Shag her out of your system, that's what you should do. Get it all out, man."

I turn in his direction.

"Then," he rubs his hands together, "divorce her."

I prowl toward him.

"After," He links his hands behind his neck, "making her sign a watertight contract that she gives up all rights to your name, your firm, every goddam thing that she's come in contact with."

I squint down at him. "You're right."

"I am?"

"Good thing I am not you, eh?"

"It was Beauty killed the Beast."

Summer

"He didn't." I crumple the paper and fling it aside.

Karma looks up from her laptop, "Let me guess." She pretends to think, "It's the alphahole, otherwise known as, your husband?"

"My soon to be ex." A situation I can't wait for. Something hot stabs at my chest; my heart begins to race. I can't wait to be rid of him, to put all of this sordid mess behind me.

"Hmm." She resumes working.

"What are you doing?" I growl.

At least my own sister could be sympathetic to my cause, huh? She's been curiously controlled in her reactions the last few days. Every time I try to talk to her about Mr. Sterling. Yeah, it's back to that. Best to think of him in formal terms. Newsflash: tell that to my subconscious which has a one-track mind where Sin is concerned—Yeah, see what I did there?

"Karma." I march up to her, slap the laptop's face down, a second after she yanks her hand out of the way.

"Oy, you were never this violent before."

"Shit happens." I scowl at her. "What are you hiding from me?"

"Moi?" She fluffs up her hair, "Nothing. Honest." She widens her gaze, looking not innocent at all. "After all there's no crying in baseball."

"That's from A League of Their Own." I shoot back. "And, you can't distract me."

She huffs out a breath. "I tried."

"What?"

"You are overanalyzing this."

"Me?" A slow simmer starts somewhere inside. "I'm overanalyzing?"

I spot the piece of crumpled paper, scoop it up, and walking back, I thrust it under her nose. "Read it."

She accepts it, reluctance written in every angle of her body. She opens it, peers up at me.

"Go on."

She sighs, opens it up, and begins to read.

"Aloud."

"Dear Ms. West,

This is to inform you that you are appointed Head of FOK quizzes a new division of FOK Media. Please report for work, 9 am tomorrow, and present your long-overdue ideas in response to the earlier marketing brief—I take it you have the details?

PS. You're welcome."

"Aargh! That man."

She continues reading.

"Yours sincerely,

Sinclair Sterling

MD, FOK Media

Chairman, 7A Investments"

"Yeah, yeah, I know all that." I grab the sheet from her, then thrust the other piece of paper at her.

She reads it and her eyebrows shoot up.

"Divorce proceedings?"

"Yeah." My shoulders slump.

"That's what you wanted, right?"

"Hmm? Yes."

"Then?"

"Don't you see the problem?" I scowl.

"That you'd be working with him?"

I glare at her, "You're taking the piss, right?"

"Why should it bother you?"

"Only that he'd be my ex, not to mention the history between us."

"He's giving you a chance to accomplish all of your dreams. You've always wanted your own quizzing company, and you'd be the CEO of it, so to speak."

"As a part of his company."

"So?"

"So, I want complete autonomy."

"Maybe that's what he's calling you to discuss?"

"Why is he doing this? It's favoritism, nepotism."

"It won't be if he's divorcing you."

"I'd be his ex."

"Gives more credibility to the fact that he's recognizing your potential."

"But I don't—" I bite my lips.

"You don't want to be separated from him?" She tilts her head.

"I didn't say that."

"You almost did." She continues, "You're making too much of all this."

"It's only my life."

"And he returned it to you."

"Huh?"

She waves her hand around. "Gave you back this shitty apartment, reinstated all your outstanding bills, transferred the £4.5M to your bank account."

Y-e-p.

You read that figure right. When I saw it, I almost fell over. Like, how many zeroes were there in that figure, huh? Well, ask me, I know. I counted and re-counted it quite a few times in my online bank balance.

"He hasn't backtracked on the money and he hasn't sneakily tried to pay off our debts." Karma steeples her fingers together. "He hasn't shown you favoritism... Hasn't bullied you into doing anything you don't want."

"Yeah, yeah." I huff. "What are you? The alphahole's personal PR flunkie?"

"No, that's your official role." She chortles.

I throw my hands up. "I walked into that one."

"No, seriously Summer. He's trying. He made sure I have access to Dr. Weston...if I choose to pursue the treatment with him."

"Which you are."

"It's something we need to discuss."

"What do you mean? He's the best heart specialist there is in the city."

"I..." She tips up her chin, "I'm not sure I want to see him."

"There." I stab a finger at her, "That's the problem. You're afraid of getting the right diagnosis, because then you'd have to do something about your condition. You'd have to stop pretending there's nothing wrong with you."

She jumps up to her feet, "So not true, and you should speak."

"What do you mean?"

"You're the one denying you have feelings for Mr. Gazillionaire."

"Not." I grind my teeth.

"You do. And now when he's doing everything as you wanted, you are livid."

She's right, though no way am I going to admit that.

"You were hoping for a chance to find fault with him, which you can't. In fact, I'd go so far as to say that you're missing him."

"You're deluded."

"Oh?"

"I can't be bought with good intentions."

"You should be telling him that."

I stiffen.

"Unless you are too chicken about keeping that appointment and telling him that to his face?"

Umm. I begin to pace. "I don't trust him."

"You mean you don't trust yourself?"

I swing around. "What?"

"You have to admit there are serious sparks between the two of you. Maybe that's why you don't want to keep the appointment?"

"I don't have to. I could sign the divorce papers, mail them to him. Then go tell him to stuff the job offer where the sun don't shine."

"You could." She relaxes into the sofa, places the computer on the side. "Or you could tell him to his face."

I grab a strand of my hair, bring it to my lips. "Imagine the look on his face, huh?"

She nods. "Bet he wouldn't be able to deal with the fact that someone could actually turn him down."

That's true.

She places her fingers together in front of her, "You'd have the last word. You'd enjoy that."

That would be cool. I raise my shoulders, and let them drop, "Well, nobody's perfect."

She snorts. "You're a long way from that, girlfriend."

"Gotcha." I clap my hands.

"Wait. What?" She sits up. "I'm confused."

"That last line of mine?" I chuckle, "It's from Some Like It Hot."

"Not fair, Summer." She scowls.

"I got a point on you." I pump my fists in the air, then fling out my arms and do a shimmy. "Woohoo." It's childish of me, but gosh does it feel good to let off some steam.

"I'm not as obsessed with movie trivia." She tosses her head, "So I keep missing things. Not that I'm competing or anything."

"Such a sore loser." I grin.

"Now it's you changing the topic." She waggles a finger at me.

"Yeah." I sober, straighten my shoulders, "What should I wear tomorrow?"

“I thought about what you would look like having an orgasm.”
— Sex, Lies & Videotape. Director: Stephen Soderbergh

Sin

I drag my finger around my collar of my shirt. Is it hot in this room or what?

I stalk to the desk in my office, grab the glass of water and chug it down. My stomach churns. I swallow down the bile that rises up, slap the glass back on the surface.

Why am I nervous? I don't need to be nervous. This is me at my A game. I am the CEO of this company, the fourth richest man in the country, a billionaire... Blah-bloody-blah.

I squeeze the bridge of my nose.

The last three days had been bugged to hell. I'd tried to bury myself in work, but every turn I took, every new investment I'd tried to consider was held up by the fact that FOK media isn't up and running yet. Yeah, I had delayed its launch. I snort.

Me. CEO, shark of an investor, a businessman at the top of his game, had been met with closed doors... of my own making. I'd sent her that letter with the divorce notice... The hardest fucking thing I've ever done. For once, I had parked my ego in a corner.

I know when I have to pretend to retreat so I can move in for the kill. Lure the prey into my lair, and then—I draw in a breath—I'll pounce. No... I'll seduce her into my web, ensure she understands what I need from her. I'll lay the fucking world at her feet if she'll allow me. As if.

I smirk.

The adamant pink-haired goddess won't allow me to treat her as special. She wants to be my equal. Entreated me to give up the thing I cherish most—my control. I'd opened my blasted world to her, revealed my regrets, told her things I hadn't shared with anyone else; I'd ripped out the darkness for her... Given her an insight into what made me what I am. But had it been enough? I rock back on the balls of my feet. Hell, no.

She wanted more.

She wanted every last thing that I had hidden away and tried to forget.

She needs me to show, not tell. Bloody fucking hell. That... is the hardest thing ever. And I am trying. Goddamn her sweet mouth, and her beautiful cunt that I remember every second of my waking moments, her gorgeous lips and her sun-kissed limbs, her husky voice and her alluring scent that clings to my pores and drives me insane until I can't sleep for fear that I'll recollect every single glance, moment, touch, kiss, regret... Fuck! I rub my chest.

She crawled under my skin, sank into my soul, and I hate it. And love it. She made me unrecognizable to myself, and damn, if that isn't the biggest welcome surprise ever. Is that why I am rooted in front of my desk, mumbling to myself? Definitely turning into a pussywhipped loser. The last I checked, I have my balls, thank fuck.

A whine sounds at my feet. Max nudges his head against my thigh. I glance down and rub his sleek head. "You miss her too, huh?"

He huffs, arches his neck. I lean down and rub under his ears. "You've been a good boy, always exiting the room whenever she was around. I swear, sometimes I think you are human... No, better than them. You had a sixth sense when it came to giving me my privacy with her. That ends now."

He stiffens, muscles quivering in that alert way whippets have. Where they are relaxed and tensed at the same time. Kind of like how I feel now, huh.

"You're going to meet the woman... I... want. The one who is something special to me, Max. The one who's going to change the future... for both of us."

He slumps on his behind, whines again. "Exactly. I'll do everything but beg... No, maybe even that. Okay, maybe... if it comes to it... Fuck." I roll my shoulders, "I sound insane, huh? Talking to myself, like I am a kid again."

I'd had to do it in that room, blindfolded. It was what had kept me sane.

Hearing my voice in my head, hearing the others, communicating through claps and thumps. It had been the only way to communicate, since we'd been gagged. But I am not that boy anymore. I've come a long way. I've taken revenge. My shoulders slump. Only it hadn't been half as satisfying as I'd hoped.

My landline buzzes. Adrenaline laces my blood. I scoop up the receiver, "Send her in."

There's a pause. "You okay, Sinclair?" Meredith's voice is soothing.

"I won't be if you don't send her in, in the next second—"

"She's on her way."

I draw in a breath. Stay calm, no need to panic now. She's only a girl... standing in front of me, asking me to bare my emotions for her. No pressure. And now I sound like one of the movie trivia questions she loves to show round. It's fucking catching. She's catching. Onto me. My failures. My pretensions. "Sorry, M."

"You better not let her go this time."

"Yeah." I chuckle. "Thanks for the vote of confidence."

"I'm counting on it, boy, and when you get married this time around, for real, I—"

There's a knock on the door, "Gotta go, M."

I drop the receiver so fast that it crashes and bounces onto the desk. I grab it, balance it properly in its cradle. I can do this. I've stared down bigger negotiators, more lethal ones, none of whom had large green eyes, breasts that were an exact fit for my palms, and her lips, those lips. That crease at the bottom that is sure to drive me insane, if I let it. You've got this, Sinner.

I swivel around, lean against the desk. Drum my fingers on the surface. No, that won't do. I prop my hands on my hips.

The knock sounds again.

"The door's fucking open. What do you expect, a red-carpet invitation?"

50

Summer

The alphahole's voice crashes through the barrier. I freeze. My knuckles stretch white. He's the one who invited me. He could sound a little more welcoming. A little less intimidating. To hell with that. I am going to teach him that he can't mess with me. I've got this. I twist the door handle, and the double doors swing open. I step inside and pause.

"Well? You going to keep me waiting all day, woman?"

Anger thrums at my temples. I raise my head, and those indigo eyes lock with mine. All of the breath leaves me. The force of his dominance spears me with the precision of a heat-seeking missile, pinning me in place. The scent of him... bergamot and leather and woodsmoke. It fills the space, crawls into my cells, and I am instantly wet.

He frowns; his glare sweeps me from toe to head. He licks his lips and a whine bubbles up my throat.

He tilts his head and his jawline cuts through the air.

The rough chafe of those whiskers between my thighs, across my sensitive, swollen, throbbing pussy... I gulp. The image is sharp, larger than life, so real that I squeeze my thighs together.

"Close your mouth or you'll catch a fly, and it's not a sexy look, I promise you that."

I snap my teeth together. What a wanker! I'd forgotten he has this ability to turn me on and the next second dump freezing cold water on all of my heated desires. I walk forward and the door snicks shut behind me. The sound shivers up my spine and my knees knock together. I pause, hold onto the straps of my bag. Dig my fingers into the leather.

"How dare you?" he growls.

"What?" I stiffen.

Not a second in his presence and he is issuing orders and declarations. It's as if no time has passed between us, no incidents... Nothing except the death of my father, and his subsequent actions trying to show... What? That he is trying to put things right between us? As if that would ever be possible. "What are you talking about?"

He struts forward. I take a step back, but he's already standing in front of me. He shoots out his hand, I cringe.

"Your hair." The muscles of his jaw flex. "You changed it."

"The color... Yeah."

"Why?"

"Why?" I shuffle my weight from foot to foot. "I needed a change, I guess." I jut out my chin. "It's what some of us do when everything else spirals out of control. Unlike alphaholes, who decide to go about destroying other people's lives."

The skin across his cheeks stretches; he pales. The look in his eyes is bleak, so stricken, that I blink. It clears. The cerulean and blue roars forth. Nah, I was mistaken. He couldn't have revealed himself so clearly there. No way.

"Going auburn suits you."

"It does?"

"Makes you ordinary enough that you can blend in with the rest."

Ouch. My shoulders stiffen. I thrust out my chin. "Nice to see you've been polishing up your manners."

"Nice to see that you've accepted my job offer."

"I haven't."

He blinks. His features pale yet more.

Gotcha.

He drops his hands to his sides. "So why are you here?"

I reach for my bag, pull out the papers. My fingers tremble so hard that they flutter to the ground. The hell? I stare at the rectangle of white on the ground between us.

So does he.

Neither of us says a word.

Then he clicks his tongue, "Max, get it."

I frown, watch him. He has his gaze trained on the paper. I wait a second, another. A bead of sweat rolls down his temple.

"Sinclair?"

His jaw tics.

"Sin?"

A vein throbs at his temple.

"What's wrong?"

"Max." He clears his throat, tracks his gaze across the floor toward me. "You like her, don't you, boy?"

I scan the room again, see nothing... except for the pet rug in the corner—which I'd spotted before—and next to it, a leash. My heart begins to thud.

"Sin, you're beginning to scare me."

"I knew you liked her from the moment you saw her at the pub. How she leaned across the counter as if she owned the place, sucked down that pink concoction—"

"It's called a Daiquiri—frozen, not stirred."

"What-bloody-ever."

I stiffen. For a second there, I was sure I'd sensed something different. "I signed it, so that's it. It's over between us." I pivot, walk toward the door.

"Stop."

I hasten my steps.

"Bird."

My heart stutters. No, I will not give in to his stupid nicknames. He doesn't mean anything when he calls me that. It is how he manipulates my emotions, which, apparently, I have a shit ton of when it comes to him.

I reach the door, grab the handle.

"Max, go to her."

My spine stiffens.

"Go on, good boy, that's it, brush up against her ankles, grab the hem of her skirt, rub her back—"

"Stop." I pivot to face him, "Who's Max?"

"My imaginary dog."

51

Sin

"Surprised?" I thrust out my chest. I've done it. I've told her the one thing I had confessed to no one else.

Not the Seven, not M. Definitely not my parents in the time that they'd taken me home and tried to understand what had happened to my mind.

She stares at me, a furrow between her eyebrows. "I... don't understand."

I widen my stance. "It's a coping mechanism."

"So Max... isn't... he's not—"

"Real."

"Oh."

"After I was rescued from the kidnappers, I spent a month at the hospital recuperating. When I was released, my parents struggled to cope with my changed behavior. Not that I had been the easiest child before," which was putting it mildly; I grimace, "but I became more withdrawn. I was pissed off with the world, with them, with myself for being in a situation where I'd had no control."

"It wasn't your fault." Her tone is soft.

Wasn't it? I drag my fingers through my hair.

"My parents were busy trying to make ends meet, as it were. They didn't know how to deal with me. My mother tried, I suppose," A pulse throbs at my temple. "She tried to get me to see a therapist, but—"

"You refused."

"Yeah," I glower. "I can be a stubborn twat."

"I hadn't noticed." Her lips curve.

Say something more. Say what a freak I am. Off my nutter... Yeah, that would be a more accurate description. Why the fuck would she want to stay with me after everything I've told her?

I bare my teeth, "You think I'm crazy, huh?"

"No." She shakes her head. "Not more than usual."

Turn around. Fly away, little Bird. The cage door is open. The world awaits you. Sail forth. Conquer. Find new friends... A lover. Another husband. My thighs spasm. My shoulder muscles bunch.

If she glances at anyone else, takes someone else in my place... I'd kill the asshole... Fuck that, I won't allow it. I can't.

I'd brought her here, thinking I'd coerce her to stay; bribe her with more money, a job that fulfills her dreams, a hint of what she's missing. I'd hoped she'd feel the loss of what could have been between us. I'd been sure that she'd take one look at me, and what? Throw herself at me, ask me to take her back? Fuck. I roll my shoulders.

That had been exactly my line of thinking. Then she'd walked in, and I'd known, it wouldn't work. All of my arrogance had been stunted and forced to take a back seat. I had done the unthinkable.

I'd ripped open the one thing that would unravel my entire persona, my existence, the face I show the world.

I'd exposed myself to her. I was bare. Nothing to hide. Almost. "You should leave now," I growl.

"Okay."

She turns, heads to the door.

The fuck? She's going? Sure, I'd told her to... But when had she ever obeyed me before? Without question.

This time. The one time I'd wanted her to disobey me, fight me, hold her own, she'd... flummoxed me again. She is perfect. She is mine. And I've lost her again. I squeeze my eyes shut. The blood thuds at my temples. My ribcage tightens. I draw in a breath. My lungs burn. Images from the past overwhelm my mind. Darkness envelops me.

Voices reach me in the damp musty space. Muffles, thuds, scrapes. I hear the moans of the boys in that enclosed room—six of them—I know them by their grunts, stifled by the rags in their mouths.

The door opens, footsteps sound. Someone is coming. Nearer, nearer. No, please, not me. Not this time. I'll do anything you want. Is there a God? I've never prayed before. If I knew how to... I could. I can't. So all I can say is help me. Someone. Anyone.

I try to swallow, but my throat is too raw. Attempt to breathe, but my lungs spasm. My face hurts. My arms are numb. Can't feel my fingers. My toes. I am floating... floating... looking down on my hurt broken body. Myself. I am no more.

Click. More. I need more. Click. Click. My fingers fumble with the clasp of my watch. Cold. Metallic. Click. Click. Click. The sound pierces through the noise in my head.

Focus. Focus on it.

The shape of the clasp. Rectangle. The indentation in the center. Like her lips. The crease. Pink. Soft. Beautiful. Click. Click. Click. Click.

"Sinclair."

Her voice. Soft and husky. Her breath catches. She does that when she comes. In my arms. On my dick. On my fingers. All over my tongue. Click. Click. Click. Click.

"Sin." Her warm fingers encircle my wrist. Her scent fills my senses. Focus on that. On how she leans into me, her breasts thrust up and into my chest. The nipples erect. The pink areolae twitching, yearning for my mouth. My groin hardens. My dick lengthens.

"Sin." She grips my crotch through my pants.

Heat shoots up my spine, the darkness recedes, and I snap open my eyes.

I am back in my office, in the present, with the only person in my life who matters. Her.

"You don't want to do this." I glare at her.

"But I do." A smile curves those beautiful lips.

"You don't understand."

"Your watch." She glances down.

I pull my fingers away from the steel clasp.

She leans closer, "That's why you wear this worn out watch, huh?"

I set my jaw, "If you've figured it out this far, you don't need my help for the rest."

"You play with its clasp as a means of grounding yourself, connecting yourself with the present, right?"

I smirk. "Anyone tell you that you should have been a psychologist instead? I'd use your services. Hell, we'd make full use of your couch. I bet we'd wear it out in a week, tops." I angle my head, "What do you say?"

"I say that you shouldn't change the topic."

"Hmm." I thrust my pelvis forward and into her palm.

She swallows. "Sin. Please." Her tone turns beseeching. It doesn't stop her from gripping the bulge that tents my pants. Good. I widen my stance.

"Love it when you plead with me."

"Can I speak what's on my mind?"

"As long as you keep your hand on my dick, everything is fine."

She scowls. "It's not though."

"Oh?"

"You have an imaginary dog for a companion, Sin, and you have been holding onto a watch from your boyhood days, as a means of connecting you to your sanity. You need to face what happened to you. You need help."

"Not happening." I set my jaw.

"You overcame your past, Sin. Look at you today, an incredibly handsome, gorgeous, self-made gazillionaire with a heart of gold hidden behind that asshole exterior."

Heat flushes my neck. I've been complimented by many but this... from the woman who's mine... nothing tops this. I want to say something flippant—because a douche-canoe never changes his stripes, eh? I open my mouth, but there's something blocking my throat. A pressure builds at my temples.

I peer into her eyes, and all I see is myself. The fuck?

"What you've been through would have broken a lesser man." She rubs my dick through my pants. "Not you, Sinclair Sterling. You survived. You are here, standing in front of me, proud—"

"And hard."

She purses her lips, "And still an alphahole."

"Who's ready for you."

She withdraws her hand, but I am faster. I grab her fingers, press them into my aching hardness.

"Need you, Bird."

She swallows.

I tighten my grip, thrust myself into our joined hands. "See what you do to me?"

Her pupils dilate; her breathing grows shallow. She shuffles backward, putting more distance between us and my heart begins to thud. My throat closes; my guts churn, "Don't leave me, Bird."

"That's not fair." Her lips turn down. "You're playing the emo card."

What me? Nah! Uh!... okay, m-a-y-b-e. I'm not beyond using sneaky ways to get her attention, and if it means I can bind her to me? Well then, all bets are off.

I press down, use her hand to massage myself. "You mean this?" A groan rips up my chest. "See how I react to you?"

Her fingers curve and my balls tighten.

Sweat beads my forehead. "So fucking hot, Bird. Admit it, that no one else can make you come the way I do."

"You know it's true."

I smirk.

"It's not only that." She bites on her lower lip, and of course, I feel the tug all the way to tip of my cock. Fuck!

I lean in close enough for my breath to raise the hair on her forehead, "So, you don't want to feel me hard and throbbing and pulsing inside of you, hmm?"

She shivers.

"You don't want me?"

"I didn't say that."

"Then?" I glare at her. "Enlighten me here, help me out, Bird."

"It's your trusting me enough to reveal how—"

"Broken, I am?"

"I was going to say resilient, but if you want to put yourself down." She raises her shoulders. "Be my guest." Her fingers squeeze and blood rushes to my groin.

"Fuck." I groan.

She slides her hands down, cups my balls.

A snarl rumbles up my chest.

Her green eyes gleam, "You undervalue yourself."

I frown, then chuckle. "Good joke. Your sense of humor has improved."

"You think your sharing your nightmares and how you managed to not let them overwhelm you is—"

"—A sign of weakness."

"Let me finish." She squeezes my balls.

My cock thickens; blood rushes to my groin. I glare at her.

She glares back.

"Just because you've fooled the world into believing that you are an obnoxious asshole—"

"I'm being myself, Babe."

She twists my balls, and I growl. "The fuck, Summer?"

"Let me complete my train of thought."

I pull my hand out of my pocket, fix my fingers around her nape. "You dare tell me what to do?"

"No." She shakes her head. "I dare to show you what you really are."

"Oh?" I tilt my head, yank her close enough for our lips to almost touch. Almost. "And what's that?"

"A man who needs a soft touch."

"I don't know, from where I am, I am quite hard—"

She lets go of my balls only to grasp my cock once more. She massages it and all thoughts empty from my mind. This woman? Fuck! She knows exactly how to please me.

I shove myself forward, thrusting into her grasp, fucking her hand. I pull my fingers off her palm, grab the desk for support.

"That's fucking hot. But I'd much prefer to fuck your mouth—"

"Listen to me, this once, you prick."

"Your prick." I allow a smirk to curl my lips, "And you have my attention."

"What I have, is your manhood in the palm of my hand." She pumps me through my pants, a long hard swipe from base to tip. Goosebumps flare on my skin.

"Jesus, woman, spit it out already."

"It makes you human, okay? What you told me; it wouldn't have been easy for anyone to admit. And for a full-of-himself asshole such as you, well, it must have taken hours of prepping."

"Days... Weeks... Since I met you, actually."

She frowns.

I firm my lips, nod toward her.

"I mean, it means a lot to me... That you trusted me enough to share your secrets."

I lower my eyebrows. I sense a but coming there... Nah! She wouldn't dare, would she?

"But it's too little too late."

My mouth falls open. I know I am gaping, but fuck that. "Don't you dare do it, Bird."

"What?" She unzips my pants, and my dick swings free. She grabs my swollen shaft at the base, swipes up to the tip, and I huff.

Tighten my hold on her nape.

"What were you saying?" She peers up at me from under her thick eyelashes, massages me again. The blood rushes to my groin; my cock jumps.

"Don't you dare leave—"

She squeezes me with enough pressure for my shaft to thicken. The pulse thuds at my temples, behind my eyeballs. My balls are so fucking hard that I am sure I am going to come right now.

My head spins; my knees tremble. And fuck, this isn't about the blow job. It's simply that the woman I love, is getting me off— Hold on.

Love. What? No. I did not think that.

I mean, I'd confessed to almost being in love... When had I crossed the line? Is that why I'd spilled all my secrets to her like she was my sounding board? Which she was... She is... Mine.

I am hers. Hers. I stare at her flushed features. Take in the dilated pupils, the color on her cheeks. Her parted lips. She, too, is aroused. Good.

I force my shoulders to unlock. Widen my stance. "Bird."

"Hmm?"

She drags her fingers to the base of my very excited cock.

"I love you."

Summer

His features contort. His hard chest shudders. His hard, veiny shaft jumps in my palm and hot bursts of cum sear my forearm, my chest; streak the blouse I'd teamed with my short skirt.

Sin in the throes of an orgasm? It's the hottest thing I've ever seen. A moan bleeds up my throat, I swallow it. Tilt my chin up.

"You're lying."

His features relax. His dick pulses in the aftermath of the orgasm. My fingers don't meet around the column of his hardness. Damn him. And he just came. The hell?

He smirks, "When you have a man's balls in your grasp, it's more potent than a dying declaration."

I frown. "You mean that a man will say anything to get his dick sucked?"

"Are you offering?" He scowls.

"No." I release him and his hold on my neck tightens.

"Then I will."

He flips me around, so I am the one leaning against the desk. He drops to his knees in front of me.

"What the—?"

"Let me." He peers up at me from under hooded eyelids.

"Sinclair, what are you doing?"

"Let me pleasure you, Darling."

I shake my head, grip the edge of the desk with my palms, mirroring his stance from earlier.

"Please." His features soften.

"Wow."

"Didn't think I knew how to say that word, huh?" He smirks.

A chuckle bubbles up. "Only you could turn a simple request into a—"

"Demand?"

"An asinine string of words."

"Love it when you talk filthy to me."

I set my lips together. "That wasn't talking filthy you ass—" He leans in and touches his lips to the center of my body. Pleasure zings up my spine. I throw my head back, huff.

"Love it more when you moan."

"That was... a—"

"A yes?"

"Stop putting words in my mouth."

"Then say it aloud, Bird."

"I can't think when you touch me."

"Okay."

"What?" I blink. Sin being this... agreeable? Wow! All of my senses go on alert.

I glance down to find he's indeed holding his hands up.

"See? I can comply with your wishes."

Hmm. "So why don't I trust you?"

"Give me a chance, Bird."

I chew on my lower lip.

"If I don't make you come in the next five minutes—"

"Three."

"What?" He glares at me.

I shiver, shuffle my weight from foot to foot. That rough tone, that harsh edge to his intention... Wetness slicks my core, as he's going to find out in the next few seconds... "Two minutes."

"Summer." He growls.

I bite the inside of my lips, "You have one minute to make me come. If I were you—"

His hands swoop out, he drags my skirt up above my hips again.

"You didn't wear panties."

"Didn't want a panty line."

"Liar." He drops his head, licks my pussy from my back hole up to my clit.

I gasp. "Not. Lying."

"You came here with the intention of seducing me."

"Not."

He licks my swollen nub and a trembling starts up my toes. No, no, no. I can't let him win this. I arch back, away from him. He grips the backs of my thighs, "Spread for me, Baby Girl."

My legs part like the words of my favorite movie prose.

"So beautiful. So sweet. Your cunt is my home, Darling."

I swallow, thrust my pelvis forward, and he plunges his tongue inside my pussy.

"Sin."

"Shh." His hum rolls deep inside of me. A whine slips from me and his grip tightens. He dives into me, licking, sucking. I dig my fingers into his hair and tug. Raise one leg and hook it over his shoulder. He lowers his other and fits it under my other knee. I am riding his face, as he fucks me with his tongue. Thrusting, throbbing, stabbing at my center. I'm coming. "I'm coming." I arch my shoulders back, my spine curves, and the climax rips through me. Sparks of blue and white...Stormy, swirling, big fat tears roll down my cheeks.

He doesn't stop. He thrusts that wicked sinful tongue of his into me, hooks it across the most delicate part of me. Another orgasm throbs at my center and shoots out, vibrates out to my extremities. He rips his mouth from my lower lips. "Come for me, Bird."

And I do. Again. I shatter on his desk. Moisture drools out from between my thighs. He bends his head, laps up all of my cum. Wipes me clean.

I slump onto the table. He swoops up, rolling my legs up and around his waist, then scoops me up.

My head falls against his chest. Thud-thud-thud. His heart gallops under my ear. Or is it mine?

He walks around and sinks into his chair, holding me.

"Sinclair."

"Hmm?"

"I love you too."

A chuckle rumbles up his chest. "I know, Bird."

"You're still a jerk."

"Swoon, I'll catch you."

Sin

"Have a good day, Sir." Peter pulls up to the curb in front of my office. I lean across and open the door of the Aston Martin, as he comes around.

"I got this." I wave him back.

His gaze widens, then he nods and retreats.

Max bounds out of the car, straining at the leash. He pauses in front of the homeless man next to the entrance.

His sign today reads, "Morn came and went—and came, and brought no day..."

I pause in front of him, "Bloody fuck. Can't you write something a little less depressing?"

He stares up at me.

I pull out my wallet, "There's a job waiting for you" I nod toward the building. "If you need one. Not that I'm one to mock your lifestyle, but so you know, if you change your mind."

He tilts his head.

Right. So all of a sudden I am some kind of a do-gooder? Trying to change the world? Not. It's Bird who's affecting me. Maybe I am so happy that I want to share my good fortune with the rest of the world? What-fucking-ever. I pull out a few bills, drop them into the hat in front of the man.

Max races toward the entrance, pulling me in his wake.

"It's from Darkness."

"Huh?" I turn, blink.

"A poem by Byron." Homeless Man stares at me. The fuck is up with that vacant gaze of his? Is he high on something?

A prickle of unease grips me. "Byron? You mean the poet or the Capo of the Mafia?"

He picks up the bills and pockets them. Then gathers up the hat, slams it on his head, without losing a single coin or bill. He strides away, board tucked under his arm.

The fuck? "Hey, hold on." I stalk forward and Max whines. I pause glance back.

Max wags his tail, pivots toward the office building. He whines, then tugs at his leash. "Jesus, hold on, you mutt."

I turn around to find Homeless Guy has disappeared.

What the fuck just happened there?

I rub the back of my neck, then prowl toward the entrance. Max keeps pace.

I shove open the door and he bounds ahead, dragging me along into the building that I own. Fuck my life.

He, flops on the ground in front of the receptionist's desk.

She smiles at the puppy.

I scowl. All of that sweetness that the bugger leaves in his wake is seriously cloying. But Bird had insisted.

It had been her gift to me on the first anniversary—the first month of her moving in with me. She'd made me promise I'd take the little fucker to work, and me... Well, I couldn't have refused her.

Max snaps up on all fours, and bounds toward me. He circles me once, then drops down on his hind legs, right in my path.

I blow out a breath, lean, tap his head. He rolls onto his back. Yeah, okay, it's a second more. I drop down on one knee, tickle his stomach.

His jaws open; his tongue lolls out. He wriggles his little body around, his eyes rolling back in his head.

A shocked gasp reaches me from the direction of the reception table. I glance up and she instantly reddens. She looks down, shuffles the papers in front of her.

I straighten, walk toward her.

She pales.

"Alia, right?"

She blinks, peers up at me. "You... you remember my name?"

Lucky guess.

I'd assured Bird I'd tone down the grumpiness. This is me keeping my word. Make a note. Yeah, and on that... I gave in to her and saw a shrink yesterday; I'll survive. Besides, she's promised me a whole lot more in return. I smirk.

"You bet, I do, Ste—I mean Alia." I brush away an imaginary speck from my collar. "I know all of my employees by name." Not. Though, I had asked for the employee list. Another step toward the softening of my profile to the world.

Apparently, internal PR is more important than external, and the fastest way to fix our reputation in the market is to begin on home ground, by turning our people into ambassadors who'll amplify that message blah-bloody-blah... a whole lotta soft arse corporate bullshit if you ask me, b-u-t—Summer had asked it of me, and I'd never turn down my wife.

Besides, I have a sneaky suspicion that it might build the market image of FOK, which will go a long way in driving up the capitalization of 7A. Which is what I need right now. The butterfly effect, huh?

Bird had pointed all of that out to me—when I had finally let her share her marketing ideas with me... i.e. when I had spared her mouth long enough for her to get a word in. I've been keeping her busy, all right.

She'd seconded Saint's idea of holding a quick press briefing where we'd play the role of happy couple—no strike that—where we'd be ourselves, and introduce FOK Media properly to the public. Get the positive coverage, blah-fucking-blah.

I'd hated the idea and told her so. But she'd insisted, and well, that was that.

Besides, my wife's bloody smart, and that's the goddam truth. Though sneaky woman that she is, I know when I'm being manipulated into getting to know my employees better. Still I want her to have this little victory; and no, I'm not softening. Not.

She'd hated the name FOK... wanted me to change it; but I wasn't giving it to that... yet.

I scowl and the receptionist swallows.

She backs away from the desk. Bloody hell. Who knew trying to tone down my assholeness would take so much effort, huh? Eyes on the prize. If this makes Bird happy, it's worth it. I'll be nice to my employees if it's the last thing I do.

I peel back my lips, flash my teeth. So it's more a grimace than a smile, but it's the best I can do.

"Uh... Ah... Mr. Sterling, are you okay?"

I keep the smile fixed on my face. "Of course, Alia." I tilt my head, "You're doing a good job." I knock my knuckles on the receptionist's console. "Keep up the good work."

Her jaw drops.

Guess I convinced her, huh? I deserve an Oscar for my performance. I push away from the platform, stalk toward the elevators.

Then pause, "Oh, and Alia?"

I turn to face her.

She's staring after me, her mouth half open. "When Mrs. Sterling—"

She smiles, "You mean Summer?"

My heart jumps. Summer. My Bird. My sunshine. The woman I'd do anything for... because I am a pussywhipped motherfucker. That's me, all right, and her happiness is paramount. I want her happy. And naked. And content, after she's come in my arms. Everything else takes second place, including my wants.

I straighten my spine.

"Exactly. When my wife comes in, please ask her to come directly to my office?"

"Of course, Mr. Sinclair."

I pivot. Did she call me Mr. Sinclair? I pause, then raise my shoulders. What-bloody-ever. They can call me motherfucker for all I care. As long as they do what I command.

I stalk across to the elevators, pause in front of mine as the doors slide open. Max bounds in, and I follow. Stab the button for my offices, then drop down to one knee and scratch behind his ears.

"You think she'll enjoy the surprise, little bugger?"

"Why are you trying so hard to fit in when you were born to stand out?"

Summer

"Thanks Peter."

I open the door of the Aston Martin and cross the sidewalk to the 7A office building.

I am already two minutes late.

It had been a surprise when Karma had called me last night and asked me to come over.

What was more shocking? Sinclair had allowed me to leave. It was unlike him, to let me out of his sight. He liked me by his side, in bed and out of it. And every second in between. Possessive Jerkface—and I use that term affectionately, I promise.

He'd told me I must go if Karma needed me. He'd insisted that Peter drive me, and I had accepted. I didn't want to put myself in a situation where the Mafia could get to me either.

It would only compromise Sinclair's standing to do so. Besides I had found my way back to him, no way was I going to lose him again.

Still, a little bit of distance is also healthy, right? One night away from him, to have space to myself, to recuperate from the impact of his physical closeness that I am reeling from... Surely, my sore pussy and my thighs that have been getting one hell of a workout this last month would appreciate it...

You'd think? I hasten my steps.

I had the money to buy out the apartment we'd rented and gift it to my sister. It had taken a good chunk from the money that had hit my bank account. Yeah, London's a bloody expensive city.

I had almost not accepted the cash, but Karma had reminded me that I had earned it fair and square. It was part of my deal with Sinclair.

Besides, it means I have a base and Karma has a home—as Sinclair had not hesitated to remind me. This once, the alphahole had been right too. So, I had taken the money and used it. He'd also had a bodyguard assigned to Karma, for which I was grateful.

I had accepted a job with him... as the Director of Marketing for FOK Media and 7A Investments.

The quizzing division he'd mentioned earlier? That was off the table.

Instead, I was relaunching my marketing consultancy as a quizzing company, using the money that I had earned.

It would be separate from any of Sinclair's other business interests.

When I'd mentioned this to Sin, he'd been more than supportive. He'd suggested that I pitch it for a loan with FOK Media to fund international expansion, rather than dip into my personal funds. Hmm, it couldn't be because he wanted to watch out for me, huh? It did make business sense though, so I'd agreed.

I glance at the time on my phone.

Damn it, I'm five minutes late now. I'd wasted time at Karma's this morning, not wanting to say good-bye. I'd have taken the tube to save time, but Sin had insisted I wait until Peter arrived to pick me up. Sinclair Sterling, still an alphahole. But he was my alphahole. Mine.

My fingers tingle and my scalp tightens.

So close to seeing him again. His masculine scent, that hard voice, those beautiful lips that could tease me to orgasm, while his tongue stabbed in and out of me... in a simulation of how his cock would be buried inside of me... soon, very soon. Moisture teases my core. Damn. How, I've missed the man. Missed his dominance, the sense of security, his warmth, his closeness, his ability to look inside my soul, and read my fears. I am complete when he is in me. Corny much? I huff out a breath.

If this is love... Well, I don't want to know the alternative. It isn't all physical—okay, a lot of the attraction is, and my poor ravaged cunt appreciates that, honestly. It's more... It's the way he follows me with his gaze, the way he watches me when he thinks I am not aware, how he holds the door open for me, loans me his jacket without asking if I am cold. How he'd agreed to my keeping a separate room in his house, no questions asked, even as his lips had firmed at the suggestion. Surprised? So was I.

I had wanted an expression of my independence, a place I could retreat to, where I could think, read, stare into the distance. He has his study and this retreat is mine. It is a room that opens up off of his bedroom, that he had insisted on, and I had agreed. No use prodding the monster more than needed, right?

He'd invited the rest of the Seven home—at my suggestion—and we'd played... One guess. Yeah, movie trivia night. OMG. It was hilarious, and addictive, and there had been sparks flying between my friends and some of the Seven. Karma had been absent that night...

All the more reason that I had made sure to go when she had called yesterday. We'd spent the night talking, gossiping, and she'd waved goodbye to me this morning with a strange look in her eyes. My footsteps slow.

Maybe I should have stayed with her, found out what was bothering her? I am sure that she'd called me to discuss something... but every time I had tried to bring it up, she'd changed the topic. And I... I had been too consumed by my new obsession, my passion, my love for the man who Sinclair Sterling is turning out to be.

Sin. As sinful in deed as in name. As sexy as hell when he spanks me, torments me to the edge, then makes love to me with a tenderness that soothes away the pain.

I reach the entrance to the offices of 7A, then barrel through. My chunky wedges slip, then catch, and I careen past the receptionist, who flashes me a smile, "He wants you to go up to his offices."

"Oh?"

"Can't get enough of you, huh?"

I laugh, "Me neither."

"I don't know what you're doing to him... I mean, other than... You know." She flushes. "Didn't mean it that way, Mrs. Sterling."

"Summer, I told you to call me Summer."

She beams. "Summer. He's different since you came into his life."

"You mean one notch less than horrendous?"

"Many notches less than horrible."

"Ha." I smirk, "Don't let his charm get to you."

Her forehead furrows. "You're not jealous that he spoke to me?"

I laugh. "If I got envious of every woman who glanced at my husband..."

I shake my head. "He has that impact, huh?"

She sighs, "You're one heck of a lady, Summer."

I grin, "Be sure to tell him that."

"You bet I will."

I wave my goodbye then, race for the bank of elevators and take his private elevator up. Glance up at the camera in the far corner. Yes, there is one; he had it installed, and only he has access to the feed. So, he can track me as I approach his office, he said. I know, slightly creepy, but... it means I can do this: I raise the hem of my slim pink skirt, it's conservative except for the slit that goes up to mid-thigh. Flash him the long line of my thigh. Then laugh. Heat simmers off the surface of the security cam...

Hope you got that, Alphahole. Two can play this game. Haven't you learned that by now? I blow him a kiss as the elevator slows to a stop. The doors slide open and I race out on the executive floor. I'd insisted on my office being three floors down, with the rest of the team.

He'd looked as if he was about to lose it... Then, he'd agreed. Huh? The man is trying, though he ends up calling me up for meetings five times a day. Once he'd met me halfway... in the stairwell, and we'd... Ah! Made out. It had been hot, I confess. We'd been late to our next meeting and he didn't care.

Yep, he's definitely trying. Wonder what he'll ask for in return though, hmm?

I pass the desk where Meredith normally sits. It's empty. Huh? Pick up speed, reach his office, prise open the door, and there's no one there. What the—? My heart picks up speed.

I place my tote on his desk, then cross the floor to the door that opens into the adjoining conference room. Swing it open and see him. His back is to me.

He grips the window frames with his arms outstretched on either side. His biceps bulge, stretching the perfectly cut sleeves of his tailor-made suit. My breath catches. He's as fucking hot as... Sin. If ever a name appropriately fit a man, it is his.

His dark jacket clings to every hard plane of his back. His waist is so damn narrow and that tight butt. I gulp. I know how it feels to palm that ass. Those powerful thighs with a smattering of hair that chafes across my sensitive skin. The thick calves, the wide stance.

"Bird."

I jerk my chin up. I hadn't made a sound. I swear the man has eyes at the back of his head.

"I know you're there."

I huff.

"Come on in, I've been waiting..."

I step in and the door closes with a snick behind me.

"Come close, you know I don't bite..." He laughs softly, turns around.
"Not always."

I gasp.

"You... you shaved."

He smirks. Without the hair that covered his chin, his lips are exposed in all their glory, and that square jaw—"You have a dimple in the center of your chin?"

He frowns.

"It's..."

"Don't say it."

"So sweet."

His cheeks redden. "You make me sound like a cupcake."

"I'd love to lick off your cream."

His gaze widens. "Come again?"

"I'll come as many times as you want, if you promise to keep that school-boy look."

He prowls forward, "Care to repeat that?"

"Ah!" I take a step back.

He ambles closer.

I move away, until my butt hits the door. I search for the handle behind me as his long strides eat up the distance between us.

"School boy, huh?" He leans forward on the balls of his feet.

The light haloes his perfect features. That indigo glare envelops me, the scent of testosterone saturates the air, and I swallow.

He raises his hand, tucks a strand of dark hair behind my ear.

I'd opted to keep my natural auburn locks, and he loves it. Loves me as I am. Maybe this is what it means to be into someone? When you miss a person even when he's standing right in front of you, eating you up with his gaze, when you know he's as turned on as you are. And you can't wait for him to kiss you, own you, possess you, write his name on every cell of my body, script his language on my pussy, drag his tongue across the underside of my foot as he sucks on my toes before he bends me over and—

"Shall we shag now, or shag later, Baby?" He waggles his eyebrows.

"Austin Powers." I throw my hands up, "Of all the movies to quote from, you had to choose that one?"

He raises his shoulders, "I'm a guy, what did you expect?"

"Flowers, hearts, chocolate?" I count them off on my fingers. Okay, so you've got two out of three there. "Maybe a ring?" I let my lips curve up. "Nah, just kidding on that one." Not. I slap at his shoulder. "Whatever it is you have planned, Sinclair, it won't buy you into my good graces—not after that completely pathetic attempt at trying to be romantic."

He slides his hand into his pants pocket and his brows draw down.

"Seriously, if you think Austin freakin' Powers is your role model to be amorous then—"

He yanks his hand out, pats his breast pocket.

"What are you doing?"

"Nothing."

"It's something."

"Jesus, woman, give me a break, I am trying—"

"What?" I frown. "You're acting all mysterious and I hate it."

My pulse rate ratchets up.

"Give me a second—"

"What? Why?—"

He drops to his knees.

"No." I step back, hit the door again. I angle my shoulders, and his forehead smooths.

The breath rushes out of him.

"Summer Cora West, will you be mine?" He holds up his palm. The sunlight slants over his head and golden flames explode from the single perfect yellow sapphire set in the center of beaten gold.

I swallow, lift my gaze to his face, "Why?"

His eyebrows lower. "Why?"

I flatten my lips. "Why should I marry you... a second time?"

He glares up at me.

"You really want to do this now?"

"Now." I tip up my chin. "Convince me, Sinclair Sterling, what's in it for me?"

55

Sin

This woman. Every time I expect her to act in a certain fashion, she throws me for a bouncer. I'd proposed to her and thought... What? That she'd fall into my arms, with declarations of love and forever? That she'd be floored, perhaps be so swayed that she'd collapse and I'd catch her? Then ease her into my arms and kiss her senseless? Then we'd... live happily ever after? She is going to make me work for it, huh?

My thigh muscles twinge. I ignore it. Man up, bastard. Tell her what you really feel. It's now or never.

"What? No words?" she peers down at me. "Apparently, I've finally rendered you speechless, eh?" She pushes a finger against her cheek. "Should I be congratulating myself on that?"

I glare up at her. One side of her lips curves.

"The alphahole who'll sit across a table and negotiate until he gets his own way on everything, struck dumb." She swipes her hair from her face, "And all because I asked you to navigate a delicate matter of the heart?"

My shoulders bunch; my pulse begins to race. Sweat slides down my spine.

She glances at the ring in my palm, then at my face. Her lips turn down. "Guess that's it, huh?"

She turns to leave.

"Flowers."

She pauses.

"I know you love the violets among the wildflowers because they remind you of my eyes."

She stiffens, reaches for the door handle.

"You're allergic to gluten, yet you sneak your favorite brand of cake from Gregg's because it's not available anywhere else, then you swallow down half a bottle of Benadryl to compensate for the allergic reaction."

She flinches.

"A habit you have to stop, by the way."

She pushes down on the handle and the door whispers open.

"You hate stuck up snobs who have way too much money they don't know what to do with, yet you forgave the worst of them, because you realized he was broken enough to have to overcompensate for his insecurities."

Her shoulders shake.

"You love waking up at dawn sometimes and walking on the grass barefoot, while you lift up your head and sniff the delicate breeze that wafts down from the East."

Her entire body tenses.

"You hate the color pink."

She swings around.

"Who told you?"

"It's why you colored your hair and bought clothes in that color, because it was a way of training yourself to realize that you don't get what you want, so you have to embrace your flaws, and look beyond the surface to what really matters."

"What matters?" Her throat moves as she swallows.

"You."

My phone buzzes.

I glance at the device placed face down on the table; so does she.

I walk toward it, pick it up, then glance at her.

Her breath catches.

Holding her gaze, I pitch it toward the wastebasket. The buzzing cuts out.

She blinks. "Don't you need to check who that was?"

"You come first."

Her gaze widens.

"It could have been a potential merger or acquisition deal worth millions."

"Screw that," I growl.

She grabs a strand of her hair and tugs, "Wow, you sure can be intense, huh?"

"Better get used to it Bird." I chuckle. "You are all that matters to me. Your smiles. Your laughs. Your sighs. Your little moans when you come, the soft mumbles when you talk in your sleep, the little crease..." I touch my lower lip, "That drives me crazy. The deep lines..." I rub the center of my forehead, "That form when you are arguing with yourself. The heated fires in your eyes when you are angry. Your scent which deepens when you are aroused." I lick my lips, "The way you chew on the strands of your hair—"

She releases the tendril, purses her lips.

"It's gross, but hell, I love every single quirk about you. Especially this sexy, professional look with the fuck me pumps."

She giggles. "These are 1-inch wedges."

"It kind of went with the entire speech."

I smirk and she firms her lips.

"Especially that."

"What?"

I jerk my chin up. "The way you challenge me. You never give an inch, always push my buttons, and when you grab my dick and squeeze it..."

She reddens.

"...Hell, you are the only woman who has had me by the balls and all I could think of was, she can take the fucking lead in bed if that is what she wants."

"Anytime?" Her gaze widens.

"Sometimes." I growl.

"Next time?" She bites on her lower lip, and my dick twitches.

"On one condition."

"Oh, no, no, no." She backs away, arms raised. "You're not making this into a deal."

"You started it, Babe, better deal with the repercussions now."

"So?" She draws in a breath.

"So." I draw my shoulders back. "Summer, you're my fucking other half, so get your arse here, so I can put this damn ring on your finger, then bend you over my desk and spank you until you are on the verge of climax; then bury myself balls deep inside of you and claim you again and again and again until you want to come, and then I won't let you, not until I've fucked every damn orifice in that sexy little body, so you have no more thoughts filling that over-stimulated brain, and you've run out of anything to say, and then, if you are good, and perhaps if I feel like it... I might..." My groin hardens. "Let you come at the same time as me."

Her mouth opens and shuts.

I angle my head, "Is what I think I might have said."

"Huh?"

"When actually... No... In reality, what I want to say... I mean..." I draw in a breath. Fuck, get a grip on your emotions man.

"You... You okay, Sin?"

Nope.

I've never been better, never as good as now, when everything is so clear to me. I square my shoulders, "What I actually want to say is that I loved you when I hated you. I loved you when I didn't want anything to do with you. When I thought I wanted revenge for something that wasn't your fault, and now when I know I love you... I can't stop thinking about you... The truth is, I am crazy about you Summer. I can't live without you. Not for one second more. So, what do you say, Bird, will you be mine?"

Her eyes shine. Her chin wobbles.

Fuck. I went too far. That will teach me to try and restrain myself. All it did, was bottle up my goddam true emotions and then it all surged forward... into the worst, terrible, unintentional, proposal. I am done. So done.

I swallow. My heart hammers; my pulse pounds. Adrenaline laces my blood. If she turns me down... I'll... I'll... fucking let her go, that's what. Then I'll haunt her for the rest of her life, while I jerk off every night to the images of her gorgeous face.

Her lips tremble, her chin quivers, then tears stream down her face.

"Fuck, Summer. Don't cry."

"Cry?" she snuffles. "You think I'm upset?"

"Aren't you?"

"Nope." She swallows, "That... that was the most romantic thing anyone has ever said to me. You didn't hold back. For the first time, you said what was on your mind without thinking, with real feeling. You were there, present, for every single second of that proposal." She wipes her face. "The first part wa-a-s a little convoluted, and very obscene, by the way."

"Why you little tease." I growl

"I forgive you for it."

I blink, "You do?"

"Yep." She nods. "I know how it is, sometimes your mind is racing forward and then the words pour out. It's called, obeying your instinct."

"Eh?"

"It's okay, Sin." She pats my cheek, "I'll take it, both your proposals, and also..." She holds out her fingers.

I chuckle, slide the ring onto her left ring finger.

She glances at it and fresh tears pour down her cheeks. My heart stutters; something hot stabs my gut. "Bloody hell, Bird, don't cry. I can't deal with your tears."

"Sorry." She sniffles. "It's just... It's so..."

"Gorgeous?"

"It's—"

"Stupendous?" I smirk. "You love it, I know."

"Sinclair Sterling, shut up and kiss me already."

"With pleasure." I spring up, wrap my fingers around her nape, tug her to me and lower my lips to hers.

She moans, that little throaty whine, and my cock thickens.

I kiss her deeply, nibble on her lower lip until her mouth opens, then thrust my tongue inside her honeyed mouth and draw on her essence. She twists her fingers on my lapel, pulls herself closer, until she's folded into me, her breasts crushed against my chest. The blood rushes to my groin. Fuck. I need her. Want her. Now. I slide my other arm around her waist, down to her

Paws patter on the wooden floor, the door pushes open the rest of the way and Max rushes, in barking wildly.

She lurches closer, and I steady her.

"What the—" I glance down to find Max, clawing at my wife's skirt. She drops down and scoops him up. He licks her cheek and she giggles.

I frown. So now I am jealous of a dog? I lean in close and whisper, "Be home before me and undressed, on the bed, legs wide apart, pussy showing, with your fingers in your—"

"Shh!" She presses her lips to mine. Soft, Sweet. My heart fucking melts. "I'll be there." She murmurs.

"Promise?"

"What do you think?"

I laugh.

Saint appears at the entrance to the conference room. "The fuck happened to you?"

Summer

My husband plants his body in front of me, blocking me from Saint's line of sight.

"What the—?" I shove at Sin's immovable bulk.

He wraps his arm around my waist, holding me in place.

"Sinclair."

He twists his neck and shoots me a glare.

I glower back. "What are you doing?"

"I am possessive."

"You don't say?" I tip up my chin.

"I can't change this part of me."

"I don't want you to change that part of you." I dig my fingers into his biceps. His muscles flex and the power thrums through the material of his shirt and jacket. His gaze drops to the ring on my finger.

"I really do love the ring."

"I'm glad." His lips kick up at the sides, "I'm sorry I couldn't get you another bouquet of wildflowers."

I stiffen, peer up at him, "So it was you who gathered the flowers for me at our wedding?"

"Ah." He shuffles his feet.

I blink. Sinclair Sterling, with an uncomfortable look on his features. Wow.

"I didn't mean for it to come out that way." He squeezes the bridge of his nose.

"Are you apologizing?" I widen my gaze, "Why do I find that hard to believe?"

"When it comes to you, Bird, I've learned never to underestimate your responses." The skin around his eyes creases, "Or mine toward you, for that matter."

"Oh."

"Oh!" He chuckles. "Love it when I drive you speechless, you know that."

"I love you... Full stop."

There's a gagging sound from the direction of the doorway.

"Shut up Saint." My husband says without turning around. "So, where were we, hmm?" He straightens, pulls me forward and into his side.

I melt into him, twine my arms about his lean waist, rub my cheek against that hard chest.

"Like I said." Saint retreats into the office and drops into an armchair. "You look different, Sinner."

"The fuck I care about your opinion?"

"It's not the fresh-faced look, which takes years off, by the way."

I glower at him.

"It's that disgustingly self-satisfied glow all you hitched-up couples in love have where you can't wait to shackle all of your friends into the same institution."

"Do you find me saying or doing anything to that effect?"

Saint raises his eyes skyward, "Thank fuck for that."

His phone pings, and he pulls it out of his pocket, glances at the screen.

"The fuck?"

Sin's shoulders bunch. "What is it?"

"Probably a crank message, except..."

"Except?"

"He or she knows their poetry."

Sin stiffens. He walks forward, his arm around my shoulders. I lengthen my steps, to keep pace with him. We halt by his desk, and he pulls me against his chest. "Let me see that."

"Don't get your knickers in a twist, Sinclair, probably an irate woman I fucked."

"Read it out." Sin's voice is hard.

Saint's shoulders stiffen, then he glances at the screen.

*"I had a dream, which was not all a dream.
The bright sun was extinguish'd, and the stars.
Did wander darkling in the eternal space..."*

"Byron." Sinclair and Saint say in the same instant.

"Speaking of." Sinclair stiffens. He lets go of me long enough to grab his phone from the wastepaper basket. He straightens, pulls me back into the 'V' between his legs, then checks his phone.

He stiffens.

"What?"

He shows me his phone.

*"The crowd was famish'd by degrees; but two
Of an enormous city did survive,
And they were enemies..."*

I read out.

"The fuck?" Sin growls from somewhere above me.

Saint's shoulders bunch, "Byron again."

There's a buzzing sound from my bag.

"Sin." I nudge him, "I need to get my phone."

"Fine." He lets go of me so I can grab my bag and pull it toward me.

He pulls me close, keeps an arm around my waist as I fish out my phone.

There's a missed call from Karma and a voicemail. I listen to it, then frown.

"Everything okay, Babe?"

"Yes... No... I don't know. It's a message from Karma, saying she's going to Sicily. Her friend had an extra ticket so she's going with him."

"Him?" His hold stiffens on my hip.

"That's what she said. She shouldn't be traveling in her condition."

"She's stable, right?" He begins to draw circles over the curve of my waist.

I shiver.

"She's fine for now, but she needs to protect against over-exposure, excitement."

I dial her number and it goes to voicemail. "Shit! She isn't answering her phone." My heart begins to race. "She didn't mention anything yesterday or this morning, when I left her house."

Saint glances at Sin, then stands up and stretches, "A few days in the sun, with a man..." He curls his lip, all casual like. "Maybe that's what she needs?"

"Don't treat me like I don't know what's happening." I turn to glower at Saint then at my husband. "You guys are worried, admit it. First my father mentions Byron, the Mafia boss guy, then you two get messages quoting Lord Byron and now..." I frown at my phone. "Karma suddenly takes off for Sicily?" I shake my head. "Something's not right."

There's a knock on the door.

Max springs up from his rug, races to the door and scrapes at it.

Another knock, then Meredith pops her head through, "There's a woman here to see you."

"I'm not expecting anyone." Sin frowns. "Besides" he wraps a strand of my hair around his thick finger, he rests his chin on my head, "we were leaving."

"Not you, him." Meredith angles her head at Saint.

"Oh! And congratulations Mr. and Mrs. Sterling." She beams at me.

I flush. Wow. Mrs. Sterling. It sounds... sounds so right. My heart flutters. "Thanks, Meredith."

"Always a pleasure, my dear." Her entire face lights up.

"Thanks, M," Saint straightens, "send her in."

Meredith nods and retreats.

Sin growls, "Make yourself right at home."

Saint lifts a middle finger at him, then turns to the door. It swings open.

Victoria stands there. Not a hair out of place. Perfect make up. Except, her lipstick is smeared. She glances at me, "Hope I am not intruding." She twists her fingers together.

"You are already here." Saint looks her up from head to toe. "May as well come all the way in."

Her dress falls to below her knees, and there's a tear at the hem.

I stiffen, "Victoria, are you okay?"

Max sniffs at her ankles, whines. She bends, pets him. He licks her fingers, then runs to his rug, settles there with his chew toy.

"Victoria?"

She looks up at me, "Everything will be fine now." Her tone is composed. She turns to Saint. "I've been looking for you."

Saint smirks, "About time."

She takes a step forward, then stumbles.

"Hey." Saint closes the distance between them.

Her legs seem to wobble and she crumples, but he's already there. He grips her shoulders, straightens her, "You okay?"

"Help me."

THE BILLIONAIRE'S SECRET

PROLOGUE

I have a heart that never beats, I have a home but I never sleep. I can take a man's house and build another's, I love to play games with my many brothers. I am a king among fools. Who am I?

Answer: The King of Hearts in a deck of cards

Victoria

"Will he, or won't he?"

I turn to the man playing the role of my husband. "Who are you talking about?" I ask.

"Saint," he replies.

"Who?"

"The man glowering at you from across the garden." Adam swipes a finger under his collar, "I wonder if he'll approach you before the night is over?"

I angle my body, but he shakes his head, "Don't look there."

Right. I swallow. "Is that good?"

"It's perfect," he reassures me. "Things are on plan."

This is what I want, don't I? This is why I am here. So why is my heart pounding? Why is my stomach tying itself in knots? A trickle of sweat runs down my spine.

"Act natural." He half smiles.

I swallow, tip up my chin. I can do this.

"Come, dear, meet your stepdaughter," he beckons.

I step forward, and my heels sink into the lawns attached to the beautiful town house located in prime real estate in the heart of London. I smooth my palm down the golden-brown dress that comes to below my knees. Good thing I'd packed this dress near the top of my luggage; that had made it much easier to change before leaving the airport. Finding the shoes had been a different story. Our flight from LAX to London had been delayed, leaving no time to spare for a stop at our hotel.

The hair on the nape of my neck prickles. An electric shiver runs down my spine. I jerk my chin up.

Blue eyes blaze at me—cerulean, cold, never-ending whorls of cornflowers in summer time, the dark depths of a lake before the water freezes over. How could so many facets be intertwined with his gaze? I swallow; sweat beads my palm.

The words from Happiness is a Warm Gun, by the Beatles scroll across my mind. Heat flushes my cheeks. I have a penchant for the Beatles, but why the hell did I have to think of that particular song?

Saint glances from me to my 'husband.' His jaw tics. Anger rolls off of him, a thick black cloud that slams into my chest, sinks into my blood, hooks into me and seems to yank me toward him. Closer, get closer. I gasp and my fingers tremble.

Saint's gaze intensifies and I shudder. My toes curl. Why am I so affected by his presence?

Adam nudges me.

I blink, then tear my gaze away from the stranger. "Summer." I hold my hand out to my stepdaughter. "It's lovely to meet you."

She's beautiful in her wedding dress. At twenty-one, she is a year younger than me. And she has already found the man of her dreams. Me? I am taking it one day at a time. I am trying to survive. I clutch my handbag to my side.

Summer swallows. "I didn't realize..."

"That you had a stepmother?" I ask.

"...that I had a father." She glances at the man she is meeting after fifteen years.

Adam shifts uncomfortably. "I was hoping you two could get acquainted," he mumbles.

Across from me, Saint widens his stance; his hands are clenched at his sides. Huh? Is he upset about something?

"I didn't mean for this to come as such a surprise." I force myself to focus on Summer, "I wish there had been a way I could have warned you of our coming...but..."

Summer nods, "You don't need to apologize." Her eyes narrow, "I understand how it could have been."

I glance from Summer to her new husband, Sinclair Sterling, who hovers protectively over her.

He and his six friends—often referred to as the Seven by the media—co-own 7A Investments. They are among the richest, most powerful men in the country.. and... Saint is one of them. Why the hell can't I stop thinking of him?

I clear my throat, "Perhaps, we can catch up once you are recovered from your wedding and the honeymoon—"

"There is no honeymoon," Sinclair interjects.

Summer's body tenses again.

Strange. His words are brusque. Yet he hasn't been able to look away from her, his body leaning into hers. Funny how body language conveys so much more than words.

Like the man who hasn't glanced away from me since our eyes first met. Goosebumps pop on my skin.

"Not until we've sorted out the little business between us." Sinclair nods toward Adam, "Tomorrow." He steps around us and walks off, guiding Summer along.

"I won't be more than a minute." Adam strides toward a group of men in a corner of the garden. I glance after him, wanting to ask him not to leave me alone with Saint.

Too late. He prowls closer, "Victoria, is it?"

Black coffee, crushed ice, hot chocolate sauce—the timbre of his voice coils about my waist, slithers down to the hollow between my legs.

I clench my thighs together.

That voice? What I wouldn't give to have him read aloud from a Harry Potter novel. Oh, my god, did I think that? Why is he insinuating himself into my every obsession? I shift my weight from foot to foot.

He tilts his head, looks me up and down. Those blue eyes pale until they resemble chips of ice. My heart begins to race.

This man? He'd not take 'no' for an answer. Never turn down a challenge. His lips curl and he widens his stance.

The movement draws my attention to the fabric tented at his crotch. What the—? Is he turned on? And he's making no move to hide it either? The arrogance of the man. A warmth pools deep inside of me. A melting sensation thrums out from my core. And why am I not able to stop my response? No way, am I going to indulge his interest... Or his ego for that matter.

"Mrs. Rhodes to you." I tip up my chin, up, all the way up to peer into his beautiful face, "Are you the hired help?"

His expression falters, then a chuckle rumbles from within him.

The harsh sound grates across my skin. All of my nerve endings pop in response. Why am I so tuned into him?

He abruptly stops laughing, pretends to flick something off of his suit.

Bastard. So, he thinks he can disguise his surprise by feigning boredom? Typical.

His resting dick face is all hard angles, cut lines, a mean upper lip, patrician nose and prominent chin...spoilt by that full pouty lower lip which hints at something more—sensuous, luxurious, a personality that indulges in hedonistic pleasures, that controls and does not hesitate to take. My core clenches. I raise my hand, ready to chew on my fingernail. Ha! And wouldn't that be a dead giveaway of how much I am affected by his presence?

I tuck my elbows into my sides. I will not give in to the temptation. But would I give in to him?

No. No way, would I indulge this melting sensation that seems to have gripped my center. I square my shoulders, twist my fingers together in front of me.

He drops his gaze to my hands, then up to my face, "You're not wearing a wedding band." He frowns.

I cover my left hand. "Not everyone who's married wears one."

He thrusts out his chin, peruses my features. His blue gaze deepens. Don't blink. Don't look away. When you meet a predator, it's best to not show any fear. My heart beat ratchets up.

His nostrils flare.

Bloody hell, can he sense my uncertainty?

He tilts his head, "Your husband left you on your own?" His voice ripples up my spine. My scalp tingles.

What in the ever lovin' hell is happening to me? I brace myself, tip my chin up. "He knows he can trust me," I reply.

His lips curl, "But can you trust me?"

I blink. The hell does he mean? My fingers tingle and my palms itch. I've tried every bloody remedy to cure myself of this horrible nail-biting habit. But the events of the last few months have wiped out any progress I had made.

He holds out his hand. "Saint Jordan Killian Caldwell," he drawls.

"Did you miss a name?"

His features go blank, then his lips curl, "Very good."

"Not looking for your approval," I mutter.

"You sure?" His lips kick up in a smile that isn't one at all.

I shiver.

"I'm Saint to my friends."

I glance down at his proffered hand, then thrust mine behind my back.

"Good thing I am not one of them," I mutter.

He lowers his arm. "No, you're not." His eyes gleam, "You and I, we could never have such a bland relationship."

"No?" My belly flutters.

He shakes his head, then looks me up and down. "In fact, you don't feature on my radar at all."

Jerk. Pretentious, spoilt, rich prick who wears his privilege as if the world owes him. I firm my lips.

He flicks another invisible piece of dust from his tailored jacket. The breadth of his shoulders stretches the fabric. His biceps strain against the cloth. He widens his stance, and I can't stop myself from taking in the sculpted abs outlined through the white dress shirt that sheaths his muscles. Power surrounds him. The force of his magnetism is a tangible sensation that pours off of him, hits me in the chest. I gasp. My throat closes.

"Good bye, Victoria." He turns to leave, takes a step away, then another. His jacket stretches across his tight butt—clearly, he forgot to remove the stick when he left home. My lips quirk. He prowls forward and his slacks mold to powerful thighs. I swallow. Shit, this man wears that suit like it was stitched onto him. The muscles of those powerful thighs coil and coil, barely contained in those pants that narrow over boots. Huh? He wears faded cowboy boots that've seen far better days.

What the hell?

Is that a quirk, or another affectation? Why would he wear boots that simply don't match the rest of his £7000 suits? Only when my heel sinks into the ground do I realize that I've placed my stilettos squarely in his footstep. I bite the inside of my cheek.

Let him go; don't say it. Don't let curiosity get the better of you.

"The more you think, the more you find; what am I?" I call out.

He tenses, then swivels to face me.

"What did you say?"

Those cold blue eyes bore into me, the force of his personality pinning me in place. My heart begins to race.

"N...nothing." I wave a hand in the air, "Forget it." I turn away.

Hard fingers clutch at my wrist. I am spun around with such force that I stumble. The grasp on my arm increases in pressure, and I find my balance. He keeps my hand imprisoned behind me, his arm lined up against mine, my back curved, my breasts thrust up. The heat from his body crowds me, envelops me. Less than an inch separates us. How would it be if he had plastered my chest to his? I flick out my tongue to wet my lips. His gaze drops to my mouth. His nostrils flare.

"Repeat what you said," he rasps.

"No."

He lowers his voice to a hush, "Do it." All other noises fade away. My mind focuses on him. I take in the creases that fan out from the edges of his eyes, the furrows on his forehead, the tendons that pop at his throat.

"A puzzle," I whisper. "The answer is a puzzle."

"Why did you ask me that question?"

"I wanted to take you by surprise." I firm my lips. "That's all."

"You expect me to believe that?" He searches my features. "That you'd ask me a riddle for the hell of it?"

"Why? Does it scare you?"

The wind blows, and a tuft of his hair falls over his forehead. I raise my hand toward it. He grabs my wrist, wrenches it behind my back, then lowers his head until his nose bumps mine, "Be afraid, Victoria. Be very afraid."

"Of you?"

"Of this game you are playing." He releases me and I slump back on my heels. My chest heaves. My heart pounds so hard I am sure it's going to tear out of my rib cage.

"Or what?" I purse my lips.

"Or get ready to get hurt." He straightens the cuff of his shirt. "For I never lose, and when you do—" he straightens, fixes me with that penetrating gaze,

"—no one will be able to save you."

1

Saint

"And what if I don't?" Her low voice slices through my guts. "What if I don't want to be saved?" she whispers. Her lips tremble and her chin wobbles. Her beautiful green eyes grow impossibly large in her face. An act, all an act. She's married, for fuck's sake.

"Is that how you trapped your husband?"

She pales. Her breath catches.

A sharp pain stabs at my chest. Shit, now I am upset because I hurt her feelings. Bloody fuck, do I have my balls or what?

She turns to leave, my rib cage tightens. My lungs burn. I swoop down, grab her wrist, and pinpricks of heat crawl up my arm from the touch. What the fuck?

She shivers, did she feel that too? Nah. Surely, it's a figment of my imagination.

I tug at her; she angles her body half toward me, half away, her handbag a red slash of color against the brown of her dress. "People are watching," she hisses.

"The fuck I care?"

She glances at me, "What if I do?"

"Do you?" So I'm attracted to her. Shit happens. She's another man's wife, the kind of complication I've preferred to steer clear of. What is it about her that insists I stay, tug at her wrist until she turns to face me?

She shakes her head. One side of her beautiful mouth twists. "But I'm afraid my husband does."

"And you care about his feelings?" I glower.

"I care about mine." She tips up her chin. Her eyes blaze with an inner fire. "If I were looking for an affair, it wouldn't be with the likes of you."

"Oh?" I peruse her features, "And are you looking for one?"

"What?"

"A lover. Someone who could arouse you with a glance, who would kiss you until you moan, someone who would pull you aside and take you while your husband mingles with the guests." I lean in close enough for her sweet sugary scent to lace my nostrils. Damn, but she's aroused. "Is that what you want?"

"No." Her eyebrows twist.

"Good." I release her so suddenly that she stumbles. "For when I take you, there will be no space for sweettalk, no emotions involved, no reason for hesitation. I'll treat your body like it were mine."

She draws in a sharp breath.

"You scared, yet?" I drawl.

"No," she mumbles.

"You should be."

A gust of wind blows her hair across her face. I reach up to tuck it behind her ear.

She shivers.

I unbutton my jacket, shrug it off.

She frowns. "What are you doing?"

I place it about her shoulders, position my mouth next to her ear, "When I finally drive into you, you'll weep not because I'm hurting you, but because you are empty without me."

Her breath hitches.

"Because you ache for me and will do anything for my fingers in you, my tongue on yours, the squeeze of my hand on your hips, the burn between your thighs as I drink from your wetness." I lower my voice.

Her breasts heave.

"When you plead with me to hurt you, to hold you down and claim you, to put you out of your agony even as you ask to be tormented further; when you beg for me with your pretty mouth, when you yearn to be filled in any way I deem fit... Then, and only then, I might let you come..." I pause, "Or not."

She swallows.

"And when I finally take you, it will be unexpected, life-altering, mind-blowing, intense. Everything else before will fade in comparison. "

Her breathing grows more ragged. Good. I step back, pull the lapels of my jacket together. My knuckles brush against her breasts and she shivers.

My groin tightens and my balls hurt. Fuck me, but this might be the first time I've talked myself into a hard-on—thanks to her.

"You want that, hmm?"

She shakes her head.

I chuckle. "If I touched you between your legs, you and I both know you'd be wet. And you are soaking, aren't you?"

She bites down on her lower lip, spots of color burning high on her cheekbones.

I lower my voice to a hush, "Answer me."

She trembles, "Yes."

"Do you want me?"

She tips up her chin, "What if I do?"

"All you have to do is ask."

"And you'll give me what I want?" Her eyebrows knit.

"I'll make sure you get everything you deserve." I look her up and down, "The time you spend with me will be the single most pleasurable time of your life."

Her lips part.

Her pupils dilate.

"You feel me?"

She nods.

"Say it."

"I... I feel you," she whispers.

"Good."

I turn to leave. Take one step, another.

"Wait," she calls out.

Bingo, I bite the inside of my cheek to keep from smiling. Give it another second, then turn to glance at her.

"Your jacket." She begins to shrug out of it.

I hold up my hand, "Keep it." I pivot and leave.

What the hell happened there?

Why did she ask me a riddle? How did she know about the ghosts that have haunted my worst nightmares since the incident when six of my friends and I had been kidnapped? And why the hell had I allowed myself to be drawn into further conversation? I'd seen the hurt in her eyes and had wanted to replace it with a twisted pleasure. A primal part of me had wanted her to wear clothes I bought for her. Had wanted to replace memories of any previous encounters with her husband with those that my words had aroused in her.

Does she enjoy it when he fucks her?

I clench my fingers at my sides. What the hell is wrong with me? She's taken, married to another. I should let her go. So why does every pore in my body insist that this is not over?

I head inside the townhouse that belongs to my friend Sinclair Sterling, aka the groom of the wedding. Striding to the bar, I lean over the counter, "Where the fuck did she come from?" I slide my fingers into my pocket, searching for the pack of cigarettes that isn't there. Shit, why did I quit again? Whose bloody idea had it been to give up smoking? I sure could do with a puff now.

Weston tops up my champagne flute. "Who are you talking about?" he asks.

"Victoria," I mutter.

"You mean the woman you've been ogling—"

I snarl.

He snickers, "—I meant 'staring at' for the last half hour."

"Fuck off." I reach for the champagne.

"She's married." Weston pours the remainder of the bubbling liquid in his glass.

"Yeah." I raise the flute to my lips.

"Isn't that off limits, even for you?" He overturns the bottle, places it in the bucket of ice.

He's right. I stay away from married women... Normally. Don't need the kind of emotional baggage that comes with them. Hell no, I prefer my hookups to be neat—swoop in, decimate, get out.

I chug down the drink, then grimace. "Isn't there any real alcohol in this place?"

"That's £20,000 you chugged down there, ol' chap."

I stare into my glass. "Could have fooled me." I survey the shelf of liquors behind the bar. "Whiskey," I growl. "Why are you bartending anyway?"

"Because Damian decided he preferred the company of one of the fairer sex than our esteemed selves."

"Right," I mutter.

Weston half turns his body, reaches for the bottle I'd have chosen myself. Good man. He places the bottle on the counter, pulls out tumblers, then proceeds to pour in a generous measure. I dunk my hand into the bucket, pull out ice-cubes that I plop into my drink.

"Classy." Weston grimaces, uses ice-cube tongs for his. "So, you interested in Summer's stepmother?"

"She's Summer's age." I glower.

"You're not seriously considering this, are you?"

"Why not?" I swirl the liquid in my glass. "Besides, something about that marriage is not right."

"You can never tell from the outside," Weston retorts. "Only those in the relationship have an inkling of what's happening."

"Come on." I jerk my chin, "Watch the two of them. You really think she has feelings for that piece of shit husband of hers?"

Weston glances past me. He takes a sip from his glass, "Didn't think you were the kind to indulge in speculation."

Me neither. I rub the back of my neck. What the hell am I doing thinking about possibilities, about could-have-beens? Hadn't the events of my past taught me to move on swiftly? To never look back, never dwell on the piece of shit hand I'd been dealt. I chug down my drink.

"You're right." I set down the glass with a thump. "I am going to find out everything about her, ex-boyfriends, what food she likes, her taste in clothes —"

"Wouldn't you rather ask her about it?" He tilts his head.

"What would the fun be in that?"

He stares at me, then nods. "True. Knowledge is power and all that."

"I am going to dig out every piece of dirt on her and why she's married to that fucker of a husband." I tighten my fingers about the bottle.

Weston pulls out his phone, moves his fingers over the screen. "I know just the person to help you."

What is always in front of you but can't be seen?

Answer: Your future

5 days later

Victoria

Sunlight shines off the polished casket of my husband. Adam Rhodes died 4 days ago in his home city of London of a heart attack. He was fifty-five years old.

If I sound like I am reading the words from an impersonal obituary, it's because I didn't spend much time with him. I had played the role of his wife for less than two months. Nevertheless, I should cry, shouldn't I?

I bite down on my lower lip, stare as the casket disappears out of sight into the ground. No one deserves to die that young. I hadn't spent much time with him... Yet the fact that he was breathing one second, gone the next is...a shock.

A wind blows and goosebumps dot my skin. That's London for you. One moment you are warm in the sun, then the breeze brushes over you and it's as if someone walked over your grave. Not a good comparison right now. My lips twist. I hunch my shoulders in my jacket—okay, Saint's jacket. It dwarfs me, and I had rolled up the sleeves so it would fit. Why the hell had I worn it? What the hell had I been thinking? It had seemed like a small act of defiance, one way to exert control over my life, I suppose. Had I wanted to be surrounded by his scent? I huddle into its warmth.

Next to me, Summer's shoulders shake. She clings to her sister Karma. Both girls had reconnected to their father after so long, only to lose him again. This wasn't supposed to happen. It means I am on my own.

An electric current surges up my spine. I stare past the open grave. Blue eyes bore into me. The force of his physical presence crashes into me. The impact of his dominance pulls at me. The hollow feeling in my belly intensifies. The melting sensation in my core deepens. Shit. My 'husband' is in his newly-dug grave, not a few feet away, and I can't stop eye-fucking the man—the almost stranger—the man who'd threatened to hurt me if I engage with him again. What the hell is wrong with me?

He takes a step forward, and hell, if I'm going to let him approach me here in front of my family—my dead husband's family. That makes me a widow, right? A pressure builds at my temples. This entire thing is getting out of hand. This is not what I had agreed to when I had bargained with the kidnappers for Nina's freedom.

I'd agreed to pose as wife to Adam Rhodes on this trip, and returned to my home country, as part of the plan. But Saint...? This chemistry between us...? Hell, if it isn't a complication. In that sense, Adam dying had been opportune. It means I don't have to add the role of cheating spouse to my persona.

I squeeze my eyes shut. Bloody hell. How can I be this callous? I barely knew the man who had posed as my husband, but when had I become so insensitive that I couldn't pause long enough to mourn the end of someone's life?

I turn to Summer. "I have to go," I choke on the words. I don't have to fake the confusion or the pain that I am sure is etched on my face.

She glances at me, "You okay Victoria?"

I nod.

"Why don't you come home with me and..." She glances at Sinclair and her voice trails off. So, the two of them haven't resolved whatever has been marring their relationship? I wish I could offer her some advice, but glass houses, and all that.

"You could come to our place," Karma offers. "It's a tiny apartment, but you'll have company."

"I..." I swallow. "I think it's better if I am on my own." I glance between them. "Not that I don't appreciate the offer. Honestly, you two have been more than generous, considering how much of a shock the last couple of days have been." My chin wobbles. I twist my fingers together. "I need to get my head around what's happened."

Karma opens her mouth to speak, but Summer shakes her head at her sister. Karma frowns, then subsides. Whew! Okay. I don't want to tell any more lies... I need to crawl into bed and think about how to put the next phase of this plan into action.

Summer reaches forward and hugs me. I pat her shoulder. "Thank you for accepting me," I whisper.

"You're welcome." She steps back, "We need to stick together, huh? It's the only way to get through this shit that life insists on throwing at us."

I squeeze her hand, then brush past her, and head for the black limo that had brought me here. I twist open the door handle and sink inside the vehicle.

"Move over."

Saint ducks inside, forcing me to scoot over.

He drops into the seat opposite me, slams the door shut.

"What are you doing?" I gape.

He half turns and raps on the partition that separates the chauffeur from the passengers, then straightens.

The car pulls away from the curb, leaving me trapped with this...this man whose face I have seen only once; whose features are burned into my mind. Hell. No way, am I riding with him. Not for one second more. I grab at my handle; the door doesn't open. The hell? I slap at the barrier between the seats. The driver doesn't respond. Hit the switch that opens the communication channel with the chauffeur,

"Pull over. I want to get out."

There's no answer.

"Stop this car now, or I am going to call the police."

"Go ahead." Saint smirks.

I pull out my phone from my handbag, position my fingers over the keypad. And pause. A beat, another.

"Thought not." Saint takes the phone from me and pockets it. "I'll take that jacket now." He jerks his chin at my attire.

"What?" I gape.

"My jacket, my rules." His eyes glint.

Jerk. I undo the buttons, shrug off the jacket.

"It wasn't your color anyway," he comments.

"No?"

He shakes his head, "It accentuates the dark circles under your eyes."

"Fuck you very much." I hold out the jacket to him.

He chuckles, then jerks his chin. I follow his gaze to the coat hanger by the window on his side.

It's either maneuver around him or over him to reach it.

"Do it."

What a complete bastard.

To hell with it, I am not going to allow him to intimidate me. I half crawl over him, reach for the hook at the far side, miss, then swear aloud.

His chuckle floats from over me, his scent surrounds me, and the corded muscles of his thighs graze against my stomach. I shiver, reach up for it again. Success. I hang the damn thing up, then retreat to my side of the seat.

"You get much sleep?" His voice dips, takes on that gravelly tenor that sends a fresh surge of heat down my spine. Hell, this crazy reaction to his proximity? Clearly, I hadn't imagined it from our first meeting.

"What do you think?" I glance out through the tinted windows as the car eases onto the main road. "Where are we going?" I ask.

"Where do you think?" I hear the amusement in his voice.

A fresh burst of anger flares to life in my chest. I turn on him, "Stop this, whatever it is."

"You started it." He folds one leg over his other knee, and my gaze is drawn to the beat-up cowboy boots.

"Is that the same pair you had on the other day?"

He stiffens, then circles his ankle with his thick fingers. "Curious about me? Want to get to know me better, hmm?"

"Of course, not."

I turn away, glance at the bumper-to-bumper traffic. Who knew there was a graveyard in the middle of the city tucked away behind all those trees? That's London for you. Full of surprises. You are never too far from a park, or as it turns out in this case, a resting place reserved for the very rich.

"I am taking you to your hotel." Saint's gravelly voice chafes over my skin. I'm instantly wet... Okay, wetter. Oh, my god! If anyone can seduce with words, it is this man.

"This is my car," I turn to him, "so it stands to reason that I am the one taking you—"

His smile widens.

I snap my mouth shut. "That's not what I meant."

"Oh?" He tilts his head. "I beg to differ, but let me be absolutely clear, you won't be taking me anywhere. I'll be taking you. And I promise you, I will take you, and when I do, it will never be a meeting of equals, for..." He leans in close, "I hold the power. Never forget that."

I stare into those cold blue eyes.—the blackness that crawls in their depths, that pulls at me, calls to me, that resonates with that most intimate part of me, the one that I've never acknowledged, that wants to be taken without mercy. How dare he find out about my innermost needs when I had never acknowledged them myself? Only when my palm connects with his face, do I realize what I've done.

I gasp. My fingers tingle. I take in the reddening fingerprints on his cheek.

"I... I'm sorry," I whisper.

He peels back his lips, his teeth flashing white against his tanned skin. "Oh, you will be."

He swoops down. I cringe away, but he's too fast. He buries his fingers in my hair, tugs me forward. I strain against his hold. He applies pressure—not bruising, not punishing, but just enough for me to lean into him. The black scarf slips from around my neck.

He lowers his gaze to where the tops of my breasts are exposed from above the low-cut neckline.

His jaw tics.

"What belongs to you, but is used by others?"

His voice coils around me, slithers down into the crevasse between my lower lips, reaches deep inside, touching, stroking, molding to my contours—a living entity that wants and takes, that never stops, that will not be satisfied until I submit to him. Submit.

"Answer the bloody question." His tone rams through the jumbled quagmire of my mind, pulling me in, drawing me down, insisting that I focus my attention on that beautiful visage.

"You have one second to answer." He raises heavy-lidded eyelids; a flush of red suffuses his cheeks. So, he's not impervious to me either. This, whatever it is between us, affects him as well.

What does that mean? Can I use it to my advantage? Do I dare leverage it to get what I want from him?

I tip up my chin. "I... I don't know." I swallow.

"Are you sure you want to find out?" He leans in close enough for his scent to overpower me. The heat from his big body slams into my chest. His breath sears my cheeks, and our noses bump. He drops his gaze to my mouth. I part my lips, close the remaining millimeters between us. The world tilts. He grabs my shoulder, applies enough pressure that I slip off the car seat and down onto the floor on my knees.

I glance up at him, "You have some nerve."

He smirks, widens his legs.

Don't look down. Don't. I glance down at the bulge that tents his crotch, which is definitely considerably larger than what I'd noticed at the wedding. Saliva pools in my mouth. How big, how beautifully heavy he'd feel down my throat. What the hell am I thinking?

"I just buried my husband," I swallow.

"You didn't love him."

My jaw drops, "How dare you arrive at that assumption?"

"Am I wrong?" His gaze burns into me. A pulse beats at his temple. He peruses my features, "Tell me."

I shake my head.

His shoulders relax. Huh, does it mean anything to him that I had no feelings for Adam? That it was all a front to get me here? Why is it important to him that I didn't love another man?

I blink at him.

He lowers his chin, "Ask me to pull the car over and leave."

"Would you do it?" I frown.

"Nope," he chuckles, "but it sure was fun allowing you to think you had the option."

Anger twists my chest. Blood thuds at my temple. I raise my hand again.

He doesn't take his gaze from my face. "Don't," he rasps.

One word. A softly spoken command. My belly quivers. The force of his personality seems to grow until it fills the space, pushes down on my shoulders, holds me in thrall of this strange connection between us. I lower my arm

"Good girl."

A flush burns my cheeks. Why does his praise mean the world to me? Why do I want to please him with every fiber in my being? This is unnatural. I frown.

"You think too much, Gigi." He touches his finger to my forehead.

"My name's Victoria," I retort.

"Gigi suits you better."

"Why is that?"

"Short for Good Girl." He presses his knuckles below my chin, "Also you look like a Gigi." He turns my face up, "Definitely, Gigi."

I stare up at him. I've always hated my name. How the hell did he perceive that? My pulse begins to race.

"Also, the answer is 'my name,'" he drawls.

"What?" I frown. "What do you mean?"

"The answer to my earlier riddle, of course. And you're welcome."

"For what?"

"I've decided to spare you the blow job."

"What?"

He nods.

"Don't tell me you didn't think about it?"

"Of course, not." I lie.

"How about this? The more you cram into it, the wetter it grows. What is it?"

"Another riddle?" I bite the inside of my cheek.

"You started the game," he reminds me. "Think you can keep up with me?"

His lips curl in that smirk—that I am coming to hate.

"This your idea of fun?" I set my jaw.

"No, but this is."

He lowers his zipper and his cock springs free. Hard, massive, it points up at me, inviting me, mocking me. A vein pulses up the underside. The head is swollen, nearly purple— How is he this aroused? Why is it that every time I see him, he seems to be erect? Why do I care? So what if my mouth waters and a pulse flares to life between my legs? The man's seriously packing, and hell, if I don't want to wrap my fingers around that beautiful length. No, no, no, did you call his dick beautiful? Look away, look away. I raise my gaze to his face.

"No boxers?"

Did I say that? Why is it that there is no filter to my thoughts? I am not normally this way. I am reserved, aloof... That's what I've been told, anyway. Is it the role I'm playing that's allowing me to lower my barriers? To speak what's on my mind and damn the consequences? I mean, how much worse could it get, right?

"You prefer I wear boxers?" he asks.

"I don't prefer you at all."

"More lies." He clicks his tongue. "We'll have to work on that."

"I am not working on anything with you," I mutter.

"Oh, but you will." He grips his thick cock, swipes himself from root to head. A bead of precum appears at the top.

Saliva pools in my mouth. Why is the sight of him getting himself hot so hot? I've seen my share of porn online, researched more in preparation of this role—yeah, the nerd in me couldn't stop until I'd done a bloody thorough job of it—but this...? Saint's thick fingers wrapped around himself is...a study in eroticism.

"A hole." His voice is harsh.

I blink up at him, "Is that the answer to your last riddle?" I whisper.

"Did it turn you on when I said that?" he asks.

Heat flares low in my belly. My core pulses in agreement. My throat closes. My mouth is so dry I am sure I can't force out a word.

He jerks his chin as if he's already heard my answer, then releases me, only to scoop up the moisture from his dick. He holds out his thumb. "Open." His voice is low, hushed. The dark edge to his tone brooks no refusal. Obey him. Do it.

My mouth waters. Heat curls low in my belly. I lower my mouth, close it around his finger.

Saint

I glance down at the back of her head. Her pink tongue swirls around my finger, then she takes me in, sucks on my digit. My cock jerks. Bloody hell. She isn't supposed to affect me on such an elemental level. This yearning need that boils up inside of me, that had compelled me to glance at her across the freshly-dug grave of her husband and think: mine. What the fuck is that about?

I don't do emotions.

Nor relationships.

Definitely never allow a woman to take control. Ever. I scowl as she takes my finger deeper into her mouth. She presses the length of her tongue to my digit, and heat radiates from the contact; blood rushes to my groin.

"Fucking fuck."

She sucks in her lips, mocking the motion of what she could do to my cock. A pulse flares to life behind my eyelids, at my wrist, even in my fucking balls. She leans back, releasing my finger with a wet plop.

"Is that enough?" she snaps.

"We haven't even begun."

"This is wrong." Her lips tighten. "Whatever the relationship between Adam and me... We just buried him. It's basic human decency, that we don't —"

"Fuck?" I tilt my head. "But we aren't."

"A technicality." she insists.

"Oh, believe me, when we screw, there will be nothing technical about it."

She trembles. The limo moves forward with a muted lurch. Silence a beat, then another.

"Don't do it." She murmurs.

"You mean this?" I reach down, swipe myself from base to head.

She gulps. The black of her pupils bleeds out, leaving only a circle of green around them.

This woman... Her response is the single most erotic thing I have ever seen.

Her gaze latches onto my motions as I pump myself back-forth-back.

"Why?" she asks. Her features twist. Her gaze, though, doesn't waver. She watches with a single-minded intensity that's as much of a turn on...more so...with the anticipation that builds between us.

Because there's a strange pleasure in denying myself access to what I could so easily have. One glance and she'd be on her back, opening her legs to me...but that would be too easy. Besides, I need her to come to me; to put herself at my mercy. Until then, this will have to do.

I increase the pace of my movements.

Her breathing grows ragged. Her chest rises and falls. I watch her watch me pleasure myself, and fuck, if that isn't the most erotic sensation ever.

The tension tightens at the base of my spine. Fuck, if I don't come right now. I squeeze the base of my cock to hold myself in.

"I absolve you of responsibility, Gigi," I snap.

She jerks her chin, "What do you mean?"

"You don't have to pretend. You want to do this, but your conscience doesn't permit you. Well, blame it on me. Use me as your excuse. When we get to the other side, you can resume your role in the real world, but for now, there's only me, you, and this orgasm that's pushing for release. Allow yourself to enjoy this, Gigi."

She draws in a sharp breath, her lips part, and it's as if it's a signal.

My orgasm roars out; my balls draw up. I position my dick and come all over her face, her chest, across her arms.

Her chest rises and falls; her shoulders snap back.

"Don't you dare come, Gigi."

"What?" she gasps.

"You heard me," I admonish.

She licks her lips, her shoulders heave.

I reach across and rub my cum into her face, her neck, into the creamy skin of her arms.

Then I reach for the tissue holder, snatch up some sheets and clean myself off. I tuck myself in, help her onto the seat, making sure to keep the length of the seat between us.

"You bastard," she snarls.

"You're frustrated. I understand." I smirk. This is a new low, even for me. Shit. Why eviscerate her ego completely? Is this the only way I am able to communicate? To hide behind the façade I have so carefully built to hide from the world?

She makes a noise deep in her throat.

I shake my head. "Don't do it."

"What?"

"Whatever bodily injury you were planning." I glance at her sideways. "I'm stronger than you."

"No shit." She tosses her head.

"You don't get it now, but it's for your own good."

"What?" She throws up her hands. "You coming all over me—"

"Which you enjoyed."

She opens her mouth—

I slash my palm across the air, "Don't deny it."

She flattens her lips, "—or that you didn't let me come?"

"Ah... Now that," I tap my fingers on my chest, "is easy to fix."

"I'm sure I don't want to know this."

"Oh, but you do. All you have to do is come to me and ask me for help."

"Help?"

"From whatever situation it is that you find yourself in." I turn, scan her features. "I have power, Gigi."

"And money," she says bitterly.

"More than you can imagine." I nod. "Whatever problem you have, I can resolve it for you."

"In return for what?"

I look her up and down, "I'll think of something."

"No doubt." She turns to glance outside, her profile bleak. Her chin wobbles. That same strange heat stabs at my chest, a reaction I seem to have when I hurt her.

Fuck. This...is unacceptable.

"Or not." I straighten.

The limo pulls up to the curb in front of her hotel.

She reaches for the door.

"There's one thing more."

She pauses.

"You won't come," I command.

"What?" She turns around to stare at me. "The hell do you mean?"

I lean back, place my arm across the back of the seat. "Your every orgasm belongs to me."

"No."

"Yes," I nod, waggle a finger in the air. "No cheating, darling. You will not come until I give you permission."

"Fuck you."

She pushes open the door, flounces off. The limo pulls away, turns the corner, then stops.

I push open my door, step around, and slide into the driver's seat.

"You better know what you're doing," Weston growls from the passenger seat.

I glance over him, laugh, "The uniform suits you."

"I didn't have to wear the hat." He tosses it down between the seats.

"Aww, women love men in uniform," I snicker.

"You're envious of how I look in scrubs," he retorts.

I shoot him a sideways glance. "Still can't understand why you chose to become a doctor."

"Same reason you wear those beat up cowboy boots."

"Sentimental value." I raise my shoulders.

"Keep telling yourself that," he mutters. "Besides, considering the amount of time I'm spending to help you with your affair, I may not be a doctor for much longer."

"Not an affair," I mutter, easing the car back in traffic.

"Yeah." He scratches his jaw, "Seriously, you could have allowed the woman a little time to recover from the funeral."

"It's all a bloody act." I spot a break in traffic, step on the gas, and the limo pulls forward.

"The private investigator come through with information?"

"Some." I frown. "Enough to confirm that she's not as innocent as she'd want me to believe."

"And her marriage?"

I draw in a breath, then pull out my pack of cigarettes. I depress the button for the lighter, then toss the pack over to Weston, "Light one for me, will you?"

"Thought you quit."

"Don't fucking nag me, man."

He shoots me a sideways glance, then pulls out a cigarette. He leans forward, grabs the lighter from the dash and lights it up. He blows out smoke, before placing it between my lips. I draw in a puff, then another.

"So, her marriage is—?" he prompts.

I blow out a breath. "Couldn't find any evidence of it being legal."

Weston turns to me, "You mean...?"

I hold up my hand, "I don't think it's genuine."

"Maybe it's wishful thinking?" He drums his fingers on his thigh. "You sure that you aren't splitting straws."

And isn't that the fucking truth? Why the hell can't I simply walk away from her?

"We'll find out soon enough." I draw in a breath. "For now the scene is set."

"Scene?" He glowers at me. "Don't push it, man. You're already w-a-a-y too involved with this woman."

"Involved?" I laugh. "You know how much I love riddles. It's been a long time since I've found one that challenged me."

"Be careful, Saint." He snickers, "Some puzzles are best left unsolved."

What is more useful when it is broken?

Answer: An egg

Three weeks later

Victoria

"Am I intruding?" I stare across the office of the executive level of 7A investments. This is it. I couldn't put it off anymore. I have nowhere else to go in this city. After Adam's death, I'd moved out of the hotel and into a studio in Hackney.

I am playing the role the Mafia has demanded of me, but the resources I have to rely on are meagre—what I have left over from the job I'd started after graduating from UCLA. A month into it, I got the call that Nina had been kidnapped, and my entire life had changed.

"You're already here." Saint glares back. "May as well come all the way in." He drags his gaze down to my chest. A flush blooms on my cheeks.

I haven't seen him since that encounter in the limo, but his every word, the expression on his face as he'd come, the way he'd massaged his cum into my skin, marking me as his... I remember every single detail. I had masturbated every night to the image of his orgasm; and I had not come. Damn him, but I couldn't let myself climax.

It wasn't for trying, honestly, but every time I came close to the edge, I lost courage, I couldn't see it through. I felt bereft. Rudderless. Needing, wanting, searching for something...someone to lead me. To take control. Damn the man, I don't need his permission to come. I don't.

His perusal shifts to my belly, my core. Moisture pools in my center. Sweat beads my palm. The invisible connection between us crackles, tightens further. My scalp tingles. The hair on my neck rises. Is the chemistry between us more potent than I remember?

My head spins.

"Victoria, are you okay?" Summer asks from across the room.

I open my mouth to answer when a sound reaches me. I glance down to find a puppy sniffing at my ankles. Huh? Why hadn't I noticed the little fella earlier? He whines, plonks himself down on his haunches and looks up at me with melting eyes. My heart squeezes. A pressure builds at my temples. Jesus, what is wrong with me?

I bend, pet him. He licks my fingers and warmth travels up my arm.

He turns, runs to his bed, and settles there with his chew toy.

He's so cute, just a baby. A heaviness grips my chest. If only I had someone to call my own. A pet? A child? The emptiness inside of me stutters, rolls into itself, grows larger, broader, swells inside, taking on a physical shape. The visceral need to procreate is a tangible thing that claws at me, shoves out at me, pushes me to draw in a sharp breath. Oh my god, what's happening to me?

Why is the sight of a dog affecting me so much? Is it because the meeting with Nina's kidnapper has shown me how quickly everything can shift? He'd told me that the plan had changed to accommodate Adam's death. No longer is it about reporting back on the activities of the Seven. My stomach ties itself in knots; I now have to win the trust of one of them.

Specifically, I have to retrieve a crucial piece of evidence that is in Saint's grasp, and get it back to them.

And I have to do this on my own. The hairs on the nape of my neck prickle.

Can I do that? Can I use the chemistry between us to win his confidence, only to betray him? My guts clench; my core melts. Why does the thought of staying close to him turn me on? Why does the fact that I would have to turn against him feel so wrong?

There is no other route to saving Nina. I have no choice but to go through with this.

My throat closes. Specks of black dot my vision.

"Victoria?" Worry threads Summer's voice. She steps forward, but the other man in the room, who I recognize as her husband, places a hand on her shoulder.

I glance between them. Guess they've worked out whatever issues they may have had? That's good. I am pleased for Summer. She deserves every happiness she can get after what she's been through. And me? What about me? I draw in a sharp breath. One step at a time. Don't panic. This is no time to have a breakdown. I straighten my spine. "Everything will be fine now." As I hear my words, a strange calm grips me.

I turn to Saint, "I've been looking for you."

He smirks, "About time."

Funny he should say that. I've spent the time since I last saw him researching him. Not that it had taken much effort to unearth his business success, or his weakness for beautiful women. A little more digging had unearthed his inclination for the darker kind of pleasures. The hair on my forearms rises. He doesn't believe in hiding his tastes; more likely he doesn't care who knows about it. Good. I can use the knowledge to my advantage.

I run my clammy palm down my dress; then take a step forward.

He watches me approach. That strength of his presence beckons. Tension vibrates off of him. The potency of his personality slams into my chest. I gasp and my guts twist. My belly seems to fold in on itself; I sway.

The ground comes up to meet me, but he's already there.

"Hey." He grips my shoulders, straightens me, "You okay?"

"Help me," I gasp.

His lips move. Is he speaking to me?

I frown, raise my hand. He catches my wrist. Those dark brows knit. A vein bulges at his temple. Is he angry? Why is he angry?

The world tilts; heat surrounds me, envelops me. The hard barrier of his chest digs into my cheek. That's when I realize that he's scooped me up in his arms. What the—? Had I almost fainted? Like the heroine of a Victorian novel. Finally conforming to my blasted name. I snicker.

"What's so funny?" he asks.

I glance up at the stubble on his chin. It's only noon. Did he not shaved today? Or is he one of those men who prefers that fashionably unshaven look?

"You sure you want to know?" I mutter.

"I want to find out everything about you."

I blink. Did he say that? What does he mean?

He moves toward the door of the room.

"I can walk," I protest.

"Clearly not." His voice is hard. Anger ebbs and flows around him, encompassing me in a thick fog of awareness that grates across my nerves; it swipes over my breasts, down my belly, headed for the obvious end goal that is my quivering center. I squeeze my thighs together.

His nostrils flare.

Hell, he can't smell my arousal, can he?

A chuckle rumbles up his chest.

Bastard. All of this is amusing to him.

He reaches the door, then pauses. "I am taking my business across to my space." He turns to survey the other two, "You guys cool with that?"

"Saint," Summer's voice is resolute, "don't hurt her."

Saint's muscles tense, then he tilts his head, "I won't do anything that Victoria doesn't want me to do."

He glances down at me, "We understand each other, don't we?"

The hell does he mean by that?

I open my mouth to ask, but he's already striding out and down the corridor.

"I am not your business," I protest.

He laughs, "So why are you here?"

Well, hell. He has me there. I am the one who stumbled in and collapsed at his feet. Which had not been part of the script, by the way. What the hell happened to me? I swear I am not a damsel in distress...though that's the part I've been told to assume. Lucky for me then, that my actions corroborate my persona, huh?

He walks past two offices, then shoulders open the door to the last one. He steps into one similar in size to the one we left behind. A bookcase lines one wall; on the opposite wall is a massive painting of a question mark.

A question mark? The outline is filled in with shades of blue—jeweled, hypnotic. The more I stare at it, the more I am pulled into it. My head swims and my vision fills with spots. Shit. I shake my head to clear it, then drag my fingers through my hair. This has to be Saint's office. I stiffen. Apparently, conforming to stereotypes of the weaker sex has its benefits. I'd found my way into Saint's inner sanctum. Can I accomplish my goal as quickly?

"Let me go," I huff.

"That's not what you were saying a few minutes ago." His shoulders heave. A chuckle rumbles up his chest.

"You're an asshole," I mutter.

"So, they say."

"And a condescending prat."

"At your service," he drawls.

And I turned to him for help? Not that I had a choice; but hell, if I stay silent, he'll walk all over me.

He'll take me for granted, use the force of his personality to subdue me, no doubt about that. Men such as him are so used to getting what they want. I'd become another of his conquests. He isn't known as the most eligible bachelor in London for his good behavior, that's for sure. No, I can't simply give in to him. I have to intrigue him, hold his interest long enough to win his confidence, to get close to him so I can get ahold of the information I need so badly; but damn, if I am pandering to his already swollen ego for that.

I tip up my chin. "Release me," I demand.

He yawns, continues walking toward the far end of the room. What the hell? He ignored me?

I begin to struggle in earnest, shove my elbow in his groin. He huffs, glances down at me and his gaze widens.

Good. That'll teach him to underestimate me.

"Let go of me you prick," I snarl.

His biceps flex. The muscles of his forearms ripple against my back.

The next moment I fall through the air.

Saint

She bounces on the couch, her glorious dark hair falling about her face. She shakes it back, scrambles up. I place my hand on her shoulder.

I should let her know exactly what I have in mind for her. How I plan to ensure it's a long time before I let her go again. Oh, I've been receiving minute by minute reports of her movements; but nothing compares to having her in my office, on my couch, under me, as I proceed to strip her of every shred of dignity. As I bring her to the edge of orgasm and never let her come. "So, you obeyed me, huh?"

"What?" She frowns.

I lean in and sniff her neck. The sugar sweet scent of her arousal, magnified, more complex than before, fills my nostrils. "Good girl." I grin down at her. "You haven't had an orgasm since we last met."

Her mouth opens and closes. "You have a nerve." She tries to sit up. I apply enough pressure on her shoulder so she sinks back into the cushions.

"Take your hands off of me."

"No."

She blinks. "You can't just...just..."

"Command you?"

"Stop me," she grinds out.

"I can. I have." I straighten and she stays where she is this time. Good. "Have you eaten?"

She scowls.

"I'll take that as a no." I stalk over to the massive table that takes up almost the entire length of one side of the room. I snatch up the phone. "Meredith?"

"Saint?" M replies, "She there with you?"

"Yeah," I mutter.

"Do you know what you're doing?"

"Don't you trust me?" I scowl.

Her voice softens, "Be careful, Saint."

"Always." I smile. "I was going to ask for—"

"I ordered you two a late lunch," she interrupts me. "It's on its way."

There's a knock on the door.

"I think it's here already. What would we do without you?"

She chuckles. "I'm immune to your charms, but I'll accept the compliment."

I drop the phone in the cradle, stalk to the door.

A girl stands there, carrying a tray of food. Another intern? How many of them do we employ here?

I scowl at her and she pales. Her arms tremble. "Uh, may I come in?"

"No."

She gapes.

I take the tray of food from her, then shut the door in her face.

"Treat them that way and no one will want to work for you," Victoria mutters.

I turn, march over to the couch. "Pay enough money and it's surprising how much they'll put up with."

She swings her legs over, places her bag on the floor next to her. "That your personal philosophy?"

"Sure." Whatever she wants to believe.

I place the food on the coffee table next to the couch and whip off the covering. The tangy scent of soup fills the air.

Her stomach grumbles. She glances from the food to me.

"It's lentil and quinoa soup." I add, "Vegetarian, as well as filled with complex carbs."

She frowns.

I pull up a chair and seat myself opposite her, then dip a spoon into the broth. I bring it to her lips, "Open."

Her pupils dilate. Is she remembering the last time I commanded her to do so? The blood rushes to my groin.

She opens her mouth and I feed her the soup. Watch as she licks her lips. My pulse begins to thud. I feed her a few more spoonful's.

A drop clings to the edge of her mouth.

I lean in, lick it off.

She draws in a sharp breath.

"Tastes good," I murmur.

She swallows.

"The soup, I mean."

She frowns.

"What's on your mind?" I ask.

"How did you find out that I was vegetarian—?" her words trail off. "Did you have me investigated?"

"You don't think I'd let you anywhere near me without doing that, do you?"

She pales.

"I'm sure you have nothing to be worried about. After all, you are ordinary, hmm?"

"Bastard," she bites out.

"Not to mention that you tend towards hypoglycemia," I mutter

She gapes at me. "You know that too?"

"Is that why you fainted?"

"Almost fainted," she scowls.

"When did you last eat? You need to keep your blood sugar levels steady."

"Why do you care?" she huffs.

"I don't." I raise my shoulders. "But I need you strong enough to answer my questions."

"Is that why you're feeding me?" Her chest heaves.

"I am doing it because it amuses me to see you lap up all the attention."

A snarl escapes her, then she raises her hand.

"Your penchant for using your palm..." I tilt my head, "I'll remind you of it, when my handprint graces your butt cheeks."

She shudders, "You won't." She curls her fingers into her fist.

I sigh, "Don't make this worse on yourself."

She hesitates, then lowers her hand into her lap.

"Good girl."

She flushes, then parts her lips for the next spoonful, and the sight of her tongue... That hunger in her eyes, fuck. I press my thumb into her mouth.

She sucks on it, and fuck, if I don't feel the tug all the way to the tip of my cock.

She lets go of my digit, then smacks her lips together, "Tastes good." She raises her chin.

"You upped the ante." I allow my lips to curve.

"You didn't think I'd simply allow you to take me for granted?"

"Trust me," I scoop up more of the soup, hold it out to her. "I much prefer a fight." I tip the spoon, the soup drips into the 'V' of her neckline.

"What the hell—?" She cries out, glances down at herself. "Did you just try to burn me?"

"If you can't stand the heat, then get out." I glare at her.

She pales.

"Well?" I replace the spoon in the bowl of soup. "What's it going to be?"

She glances from me to the door, then back at me, "What if I leave?"

My heart begins to race and sweat beads my palms. I wipe my fingers on the starched white napkin, put it aside. "You won't."

Her mouth opens and closes. She splutters, "Why you presumptuous, cocky—"

"Are you?" I frown. "Leaving?"

She purses her lips, twists her fingers together.

"Want me to take the choice out of your hands?"

She doesn't reply, peers into my face, then rubs her thighs together. My groin tightens. My muscles harden. I lean over, lick the trickle of broth that I spilled on her neck.

She freezes.

I follow the trail down to the valley between her breasts.

She shudders. "Oh, my god," she whispers.

"Want me to touch you?"

"What? No." She straightens, "Of course, not."

I rise to my feet, pivot and head for the door.

"Wait," she calls out.

I wipe the smile off of my face, turn.

She looks at me, then away.

I tap the toe of my boot against the floor.

"You're going to make me say it, aren't you?" she says bitterly.

I pull back my cuff, check the time on my watch. "My next appointment's waiting."

"Fine." She hunches her shoulders.

"Fine what?"

"Fine, I want you to touch me."

I cross the distance between us, fit my knuckles under her chin. She glances up at me, her green eyes shining with that inner turmoil I'm beginning to recognize.

"Not so hard now, is it?"

"This is not why I came," she whispers.

"Shh!" I press my thumb to her lips.

She gulps, opens her mouth again, and I shake my head. She subsides. All of the confusion and all of the emotions she's feeling are reflected in her eyes. So fucking vulnerable, this woman, yet so sassy.

"You're not as innocent as you seem," I say.

Her gaze widens.

"But that's okay." I frame her face with my hands. "I am going to enjoy unravelling your hidden agenda."

She sits up straighter. "Takes one to know one."

"Don't make the mistake of thinking you know me, Gigi."

"Don't flatter yourself," she mutters. "You're not so special. Just another spoiled billionaire a-hole, who thinks he can use his power and influence to get anything he wants."

"Gazillionaire." I grin, then slip my palm under the heavy curtain of her hair. "And you're sitting here, aren't you?"

Color flares on her cheeks. She tries to rise, but I wrap my fingers around her nape and hold her down.

Her shoulders jerk and the pulse at her neck flutters.

"Poor, Gigi. So confused. So out of your league."

"I'm more than a match for you, rich prick." She bares her teeth.

A shudder works its way down my spine. My balls throb. I haul her up by the scruff of her neck. She gasps and her breasts push up, the nipples beaded against the black cloth of her dress.

"Fucking hate that color," I grumble. I lower my head until I can make out the little creases between her eyebrows, the flecks of gold in those green irises beckoning me. Calling me. I rake my gaze down to her mouth. Her lips part. She flutters those thick eyelashes down. "Please," the whine bleeds from her lips.

"What do you need?"

"I... I don't know," she murmurs.

"You do."

I draw in a breath and her scent grows straight to my head. A hot sensation stabs in my chest. Fucking fuck. This woman, she is too potent. Weston was right, I am way too deep into this game already.

I release her so suddenly, her rear hits the couch with a thump. Turning, I stride to the door.

"You're a real piece of work you know that?" she yells after me.

I raise my hand in the air. "Rest up, Gigi. You have until I finish this next appointment to figure out why you came. After that, the choice is out of your hands."

*I am often mistaken for being true. What am I?
Answer: A lie*

Victoria

"Help me."

I snap my eyes open, jackknife up, heart racing, pulse pounding. I try to swallow and my throat hurts. Sweat slicks my palms, slides down my back. The blood thuds at my temples and my stomach twists.

After Adam's untimely death, I'd received another call. This time with instructions that I had to get close to Saint, and get hold of the evidence he has on the Mafia. The man on the phone had also played me a recording of Nina's voice crying for help. Then he'd warned me not to breathe a word about this to anyone else, before hanging up. I drag my fingers through my hair.

I've barely slept a wink the last few nights, nervous about this encounter with Saint.

Clearly, my subconscious associates that asshole with security. Enough that, for the first time in weeks, I'd fallen into a deep sleep in the middle of the day. On his couch, in his office, no less.

A sound reaches me through the door. I stiffen, swing my legs over and a jacket falls to the floor. Huh? It's light gray in color, different from the one he had loaned me. He hadn't been kidding when he'd said that he hates the color black on me.

Had he come in while I slept and decided not to wake me up? Had he watched me sleep, and covered me with the jacket? I blink.

At least I hadn't drooled. Small mercies. I pick up the jacket, then bury my nose in the luxurious fabric.

The scent of him laces my nostrils—masculine, complex, layers upon layers that sink into my skin. My cheeks flush. My thighs clench. Ridiculous. I can't have such a reaction to his scent. I drop the jacket on the couch, then spring up to my feet, and walk toward the desk.

Starlight streams in from the windows. Huh? It had been late afternoon when I'd arrived. How long did I sleep? I glance at the sleek wall clock on the far side of the room. What the—? It's late—almost 9pm. Why did he let me sleep away the evening?

I sink into the massive leather chair; the scent of him deepens. My belly flutters. My throat dries. Why the hell am I having such a strong reaction to the presence—? No. My lips twist. Technically, that would be his absence—of this man I barely know.

I touch the pad of the laptop in front of me and the screen lights up. It's fingerprint locked. I'd checked it as soon as Saint had left, of course. It wouldn't have been that easy, right? I have to get into his files to get what I need, which means—my shoulders slump—I have to get close to him. No choice.

I glance at the desk, spot the riding crop on it. "What the—?" Who keeps a riding crop on his work desk, in his office? Saint does; that's who. I shake my head, reach for the top drawer. It's locked. Well hell, of course it couldn't be that simple.

I open the drawer below; there's stationery, pens, excel sheets printed with rows of numbers. I wrench open the drawer at the bottom... my breath catches. A gun? Huh? He keeps a gun? Another noise reaches me through the door. Shit. Where the hell is Saint?

I snatch up the revolver. The weight is reassuring. Two months ago I'd never seen a gun in my life. Now? Well, I'll take every break I get.

The one thing my experience has taught me is never to be taken by surprise. I shut the drawer, then walk across the floor. Opening the door, I step into a corridor. Strain my ears... Nothing. Scratch that... Is that a sound from down the hall? I glance down the passageway, then the other way. Right. I march down the hallway to the set of double doors, and fling them open.

Pale blue eyes cut into me; his eyebrows slash down.

I take in the breadth of his shoulders ensconced in the same white dress shirt he had on earlier. Only now, the front is unbuttoned and pulled apart to reveal his cut torso. Black hair clings to the eight pack abs that ripple and flow down to meet the waistband of his pants... His unzipped pants where a woman bobs her head. So, this was his very important appointment?

She grips his powerful pant-clad thighs, which buck and flex under her touch. He parts his legs, then clasps the back of her head. The veins on his muscled forearm flex.

A moan bleeds through the air and I'm instantly wet. My mouth waters. My scalp tingles.

Omigod, why is that the most intensely erotic thing I have ever seen? I seriously can't be thinking that now. Get out of here, get out. My feet seem stuck to the ground, my legs too heavy to carry me out of there. I watch, riveted, as he brings up his other hand, the veins on his forearms popping.

His shirt sleeves are rolled up to his elbows; his biceps bulge as he swipes a finger across his lower lip.

"You want to share it when you have it, but when you want it you don't have it." He rumbles, "What is it?"

His tone rams through the jumbled quagmire of my mind, pulling me in, drowning me down, insisting that I focus my attention on that beautiful visage.

His lips curl. He is laughing at me.

He knows exactly the picture he presents.

So damn arrogant. So confident.

Did he orchestrate this entire tableau for my benefit? Nah, why should he? Bet he has a mile-long queue of women outside the door ready to suck his every appendage. I chuckle.

His glare intensifies. "You have one second to answer."

"I... I don't know." I swallow.

"A secret," he drawls. "That's the answer." His eyelids grow hooded. "What secrets are you hiding from me, I wonder?"

"None." I swallow.

"Everyone has secrets." He chuckles.

"Even you?"

"Especially me." His grin widens.

The wet sound of flesh hitting flesh fills the room. I drop my gaze to where the woman kneels between his thighs. His forearms flex, he spreads his legs, yanks her head closer, then begins to use her mouth in earnest. Back-forth-back; her entire body shakes.

A gagging noise splits the rhythmic effect.

My head spins. My core clenches and I chafe my thighs wanting... Needing more. So much more.

His chest seems to expand further and further; his shoulders swell. His pale blue eyes glow with a strange inner light.

He lowers his chin, raises an eyebrow, and a snarl rips up my throat.

A heavy sensation stabs in my chest; my vision tunnels. I am not jealous. I am not. I don't want him that way. Besides he had...left me there on the couch, while he'd indulged himself? What a complete jerk.

My heart begins to race; adrenaline laces my blood. I raise the gun, aim it at Saint.

He stares back. His shoulders stiffens.

The woman between his legs glances around. I level the gun at her. She pales.

I wiggle the gun and she rises to her feet, only to glance at him. What the —? I have a weapon trained on her and she looks to him as if seeking permission?

Saint's lips firm. "Leave."

My toes curl, my scalp prickles... and the hair on my forearms rises. Jesus, no man should have a voice like that. My arm shakes. The woman passes me, then bolts.

Silence descends. A beat, another.

I hold Saint's gaze, tip up my chin.

Two can play this game. I will not be intimidated. Will not be coerced into breaking the silence. I stare down the barrel of my pistol, at the rat's ass of a man in my cross hairs.

He relaxes into the chair. The soft material of his pants outlines the contours of his powerful thighs. Don't look there, don't. I glance at his crotch, which is unzipped. His dick arrows up. Is it thicker than what I remember it to be? Nah, that must be my imagination, surely—

"My face is up here," he drawls.

I jerk my chin up. His lips curl in a smirk, and moisture instantly pools at my core. Damn the man, he knows the effect he has on me. So what? I tighten my grip on the gun. I hold the weapon. So why does it feel like the one between his legs is more lethal? Jesus, cliché much?

"You do need to up your game, Gigi." He tilts his head.

Anger squeezes my chest.

He is toying with me. Asshole is having fun at my expense. I'll teach him what it means to sit on that lofty, privileged perch of his and sneer down his nose at those who have to fight for every bit of help, for every shred of kindness, for every soft word, tender touch...every gaze filled with love, tears, blood... "Shut up." My voice emerges—harsh, guttural. Nothing like the sophisticate I am trying to portray. I draw in a deep breath. My hand trembles.

Walk away, right now, while you can.

I can't. I won't. I have to face him down. I have to find a way to ensure that I come out of this with some small shred of my dignity intact.

He grips his gorgeous shaft, swipes it from root to tip.

My throat dries. Heat flushes my skin and sweat beads my palm.

"Stop that," I croak.

"Don't tell me what to do." His command lashes across my skin. My fingers slip. The stuffing from the chair next to his head explodes, but he's already moving.

I hear the thud of his boots on the carpet, see a blur of movement, then the gun is knocked from my hand.

I hit the ground, face down. His heavy weight presses into me. His hardness stabs into the curve of my waist. Those solid thighs grip mine on either side. I am surrounded by him. Heat from his massive body slams into me, pins me down. Moisture dribbles out between my legs. I strain and he places his cheek next to mine, his breath raising the hair on my forehead.

"You have my attention, little Gigi."

He licks the shell of my ear.

Goosebumps pop on my skin. My vision narrows; my toes curl. "I want more than that." I shiver.

There's a pause, then his chest vibrates. "What?" He growls.

"Take me as your sub."

*I am given with pleasure when taken by force. What am I?
Answer: A kiss*

Saint

"Do you have any idea what you're asking for?" I push back and flip her on her back.

Her green eyes deepen in color, glittering emeralds that cut through me, hurt me, scoop up every last drop of humanity left in me and render me incoherent.

"Well?" I glare at her.

"Y...yes." She stutters.

I rise to my feet and she pales.

"On your knees," I growl.

She hesitates.

I lower my voice to a hush, "Now." Her shoulders stiffen, then she pushes up to kneel at my feet. It puts her face at eyelevel with my crotch. My groin hardens.

I reach down, grab my cock. Her breath hitches. She drops her gaze, watches as I massage my dick.

She licks her lips and my muscles go solid. My shaft lengthens. Ah hell, hadn't meant for things to get out of hand so quickly...literally.

I widen my stance to accommodate my arousal and she makes a sound deep in her throat.

"That's not for you." I smirk. "Yet."

"What?" She peers up at me from under sooty eyelashes.

"You'll have to earn it first." I allow my smile to widen.

Her eyebrows draw down, she flicks out her tongue to touch her lower lip, and my cock instantly twitches. Hell. This response to her is interesting. Not what I expected. Best to put her in her place right away. I tuck myself in, then stalk forward to retrieve my gun.

"What are you doing?" Her squeak fills the space.

My lips twitch. I straighten, turn to her.

Her cheeks pale. "St...stop. Don't come closer."

"Why not?"

"This...this isn't what I want." Fear vibrates off of her, bleeds into the space between us... My dick instantly lengthens.

Do you blame me? She'd hit upon my weakness, then proceeded to lay her insecurities bare to me... Well, of course, I am going to take advantage.

"Let me be the judge of that." I stride forward.

She jerks her chin up, "Don't come closer."

"That's not what you said earlier."

"I... I didn't think—"

"What—?" I pause in front of her. "That I'd call your bluff?"

Her chin wobbles, "Are you. Will you...?"

I lean forward.

Her shoulders rise and her throat moves as she swallows.

"Rule number one, never question me."

"And if I do...?"

The next second, I press the gun to her temple. Her gaze narrows as her eyes blaze. Bloody hell, she has some strength, this woman. She raises her chin, and damn, if my dick doesn't follow suit. I don't need to look down to know that my cock's saluting her impudence.

"So, tell me, Gigi, why is it that you sought me out?"

"I told you it was to—"

"Ask me to be your Dom?"

She nods.

"You think I believe that?"

"Why else would I be here?" Her gaze narrows, "It isn't for your politeness or consideration, clearly."

My lips twitch before I wipe the smile from my face. I grip her hair and tug so her head falls back, "Tell me the truth."

"Couldn't it be because I saw the man behind the asshole face you show the world? Perhaps I want to get to know you better?"

"Do you?"

Her gaze skitters away.

A hot sensation coils in my stomach, "Thought not." I wrap my fingers around her neck and her gaze widens. "Perhaps I should take you at face value, after all."

"What do you mean—?"

"Shh!" I draw the barrel of the gun over her lips and her face pales. Fear radiates from her. My pulse begins to race. Finally. "Let's see what you're made of, shall we?"

I yank her up to her tiptoes, until she's level with my chest.

"Such a tiny little thing, you are. Not a hair out of place, even after spending hours on the couch in my office. What would it take to mess you up, huh?" I drag the barrel of the gun down her cheek—She swallows—past that lush lower lip, to the hollow at the base of her throat. Goosebumps pop on her skin.

"Not that courageous now, are you?"

She swallows, then tips up her chin and opens her mouth. I click my tongue.

Her gaze narrows, her eyes sparking with that familiar light of defiance. Oh, good. Now we're getting somewhere.

I drag the pistol down, hook the barrel into the dip of her neckline. She stills, the only movement, her chest rising and falling. Her nipples pebble against the fabric of her blouse. My vision narrows and I draw the gun over the nipple.

She shudders. My shaft lengthens.

"You enjoy that, hmm?"

She shakes her head.

I glare at her, "Don't lie."

"I'm not."

"Admit it. You are aroused.'

"No." She sets her lips.

"We'll see about that, shall we?"

I toss the gun to one side, then pull her forward.

She falls into me, "What the hell? You tossed a loaded gun, you—"

"Relax, I clicked the safety on." I squeeze my fingers around her nape, my fingers meeting in the front, that's how slender the length of her neck is. "The only gun you need to be worried about is the one in my pants."

She makes a gagging noise. "Ugh, that was terrible, even for you."

"And if you want to gag, there are other ways to bring that on too."

"Keep your cheap shots to yourself." She huffs, "Why do you keep a gun anyway, and in an unlocked drawer?"

"Why were you snooping in my office?" I retort.

"I..." She swallows, "You left me on my own in your space." She raises her shoulder. "It was fair game."

"Hmm." I lean into her, "And you... little Gigi, are in my space. Does that make you fair game too?"

I tighten my grasp on her, and she trembles. Her thighs quake.

Pressing her against me, I sense her every move, every breath she takes, the trembling of her eyelids. Her lips part, her hips wriggle, and damn it, but I can't stop myself. I lower my head, close my mouth over hers. I suck on her tongue, bite down on her lower lip, shove my free hand under her skirt, finding that melting core between her legs.

I slide my fingers in between her panties and skin, drag my knuckles across her clit.

A whine bubbles up her throat; I swallow it.

I thrust a finger inside her core, and hell... The melting softness is my undoing. I add a second finger, then another. Her spine curves and her neck arches. I hook my fingers inside of her, finding that hidden center of hers. Her entire body bucks.

I tear my mouth from hers, "Don't you dare come, Gigi."

She shudders, thrusts her pelvis forward.

I release my grip around her neck, yank my fingers from her pussy. I step back and her legs give way.

I catch her, push her into the door and pin her hips with mine. A pulse beats to life against my temples, on the backs of my eyelids, even in my balls. Jesus. Hell. This isn't how it's supposed to be.

I am supposed to get my women off, reduce them to globs of liquid need, make them crawl to me for release... And while I'd done all that to her... I'd never before been this aroused... This need to bury myself inside of her, scratch my name into her cells, her skin, tear into her and show her how it can be between us? No. No way, am I doing that. I release her and she sags against the barrier.

Back the fuck off, before she pulls you in with those beautiful eyes, that gorgeous visage, the innocence about her which is...all a façade. A trap. One way to ensure that I forget what this entire charade is about—to get to the bottom of whoever set her up to lure me in. If she thinks it is that easy to veer me off course, to distract me from the one thing that has kept me and the Seven focused all these years, then she has another trick coming.

"In which sport do winners move backward and losers move forward?" I let the words hang in the air between us.

She blinks, then asks, "Which...which one?"

"A fucking tug of war is what." I chuckle. Bloody hell. Why had I allowed those words to escape my lips? Why the hell am I showing her a glimmer of my vulnerability?

She makes me weak, is why. No way, am I allowing that to happen again. Not when I have a hell of a lot more at stake than some piece of pussy which doesn't mean anything to me. But she isn't just another anything... She is... Gigi. An enigma, a puzzle. A riddle I am going to solve, even if it means hurting myself in the process.

I turn, snatch up my gun and shove it into my waistband.

"Wait."

I shrug on my shirt, turn to her. She swallows.

"What about...?" Her voice trails off.

"About?" I growl.

"My proposition."

"Let me think." I drum my fingers on my chest, peruse her from head to toe.

Her cheeks flush. Her eyes glitter with that inner fight. Damn, but she has a hidden depth, a fierce perseverance that is both endearing and... Endearing? The hell? Since when have emotions ever featured in any relationship, huh? I take, I allow a select few to make me come...then walk away. That is it. No relationships. No entanglements. Nothing that can touch the part of me that I keep hidden away. Nothing to tempt me to cross the line that is forever etched in my memory... Until her. I crack my neck, yawn, then shake my head, "No."

"What?" She gapes.

"One touch and you were ready to throw yourself at my feet, bare yourself to me, and all but ask me to take you right there. I prefer..." I pretend to think, "...a bit more spirit, a bit more spine, a bit more oomph. Not to mention..."

I glance at her gorgeous breasts, her curvy hips, her delicate ankles. If I touch her again, I am a goner. If I look into her eyes, I'll never find myself again. No, this is the right thing to do. I have to walk away from her. "...I prefer my women to have more curves."

"You bastard."

The color leaches from her face and she sways. I take a step forward, then stop myself. Why do I care if she is hurting? That is the whole point, remember? Hurt her feelings enough that she'll never turn to me again.

"Want me to spell it out for you, Doll?" I reach her, then thrust my face into hers, "I don't want you."

*Why did the two lovers end up in prison?
Answer: Because they stole each other's hearts*

Victoria

I stare at my reflection in the shiny elevator door—hair mussed up, lips swollen and bare of lipstick. I look...like I was thoroughly kissed. He did more than that. He turned me down, he insulted me, and I stood there and took it. What choice did I have? I can't force him to take me as his sub, can I?

I stumble out of the office building of 7A investments, my hand bag at my side.

Was it only a few hours ago that I had torn into the building?

A gust of wind buffets me. I sway; the rain slicks my hair back, floods my sight. I step forward, my feet encounter thin air, and I pitch forward. A scream rips from my throat and I am hauled back.

"Hey, you okay?"

I turn around to encounter sharp gray eyes.

"Are you all right?" the woman asks again.

I swallow, nod. Open my mouth to thank her, but no words emerge. My heart is racing so hard that I am sure it's going to jump right out of my rib cage. She peruses my face, "Victoria?" She frowns.

I peer through the rain. She's as tall as me, wearing a raincoat cinched around her waist.

"Have me met?" I scan her features.

"You're Summer's stepmother, right?"

I wince. That is so not the identity I need to be riddled with... But yeah, no getting away from it. I nod and her face cracks into a wide grin. "I saw you at Sinclair and Summer's wedding..."

I glance at her features, then shake my head, "Sorry, I have a bad memory for names."

I glance up at her clear umbrella.

"Oh, shoot." She steps forward to hold her wide umbrella over me. The rain stops pounding my face.

"It's Amelie." She prompts.

"Amelie?"

"I'm Summer's friend?"

"Ah."

"I'm a pastry chef." She grins, all bright and happy. Christ, she makes me feel a hundred years old. Was I ever that hopeful about my future? Maybe before the Mafia had gotten to me? When I had been a student at UCLA? No, I'd always been a brooder, a thinker...some would say a dreamer, even. Look where that's gotten me. I bite my lower lip. She frowns, peers into my face,

"In fact, I was on my way to meeting her right now. Why don't you come along?"

I stare, then shake my head, "I honestly don't want to impose."

"Oh, you're not imposing, and Summer will be glad to see you."

I chew the inside of my cheek. Somehow, I don't think so.

"She's mentioned how much she wants to get to know you better."

"She has?" I tilt my head. Is she saying it to make me feel better? Or is she really trying to be friendly?

A man almost walks into us, then excuses himself to veer past us. I stare. "Did he apologize?"

She laughs. "That's London for you. It's very civilized, isn't it?"

"I'd forgotten."

"You're British, of course. I could tell from your accent. So how did you meet Summer's father?"

I tense, pull myself up straight, "I think I need to leave."

Her face crumples. "Oh, I'm sorry. I hadn't meant to be nosy. Sometimes my mouth doesn't grasp what my brain is trying to communicate. Often, I speak nonsense, and by the time I've realized what I've said, it's too late."

I draw in a breath. All that bubblyness is overwhelming.

"I said too much again, didn't I?" She grimaces, her gaze turning stricken.
"Please forgive me, please."

I jerk my chin. "Don't worry about it."

She locks her arm with mine, then begins to walk. I keep pace. "It's just us girls tonight. Sinclair's allowing Summer the evening off."

"Allowing her the evening off?"

"He's sooo possessive about her. Honestly, that man is 100% alpha... And of course, there's the rest of the Seven. Put them all in one room, and whoa." She makes a smacking sound with her lips, "I swear my ovaries can't take it."

"There's seven of them?"

She nods, "I haven't seen the seventh, of course."

"Oh? Why's that?" Perhaps she has her uses, after all? Maybe she can shed a little more light on the man I have to find a way to get close to?

"Baron, that's the guy who's not around. He's a kind of mystery figure," she adds obligingly.

"What does he do?"

She raises her shoulders. "Don't know... Anyway, the ones who are here are more than enough to keep a girl occupied, if you know what I mean."

Ah! "So you have your eye on one of them?"

"Maybe..." she giggles.

The sound is so infectious, I can't stop my lips from curving. Maybe she isn't bad company, after all.

We reach the entrance to the tube station and I hesitate.

She turns to me, "It's only a few stops on the train to get to Summer's place."

"Her house?" I swallow, uh, "I really don't think that's a good idea."

She grips my arm, "Nonsense, you're soaked."

"I'll dry."

"Surely, you don't want to be alone?"

I bite my lips.

"It's a good old-fashioned stay over, which we haven't done in a while, and that's important, you know? Female friendships are ah-may-z-i-n-g!" she sing-songs.

Not always, but...okay.

"We women, we need to have each other's backs..." She rocks forward on the balls of her feet, "...especially when you need a shoulder to lean on, ya know?"

I narrow my gaze.

"Not that you need anyone else..." She jostles the strap of her hand bag, "...but we'd love to have you. With Summer married...we need more single gals in our group to exchange notes about eligible men..."

I wince.

"Ouch." She hunches her shoulders, "Didn't want to remind you of your newly-single status."

I lower my chin.

"Jeez, didn't mean to imply that you had to start looking right away or anything, not so soon after your husband's death... I mean—" she makes a choking noise.

I draw myself up, pat her shoulder. "It's okay. Summer's father and I were married, but we weren't ever intimate."

Her lips open in an 'O.'

Shit, hadn't meant to reveal that to her. What the hell is wrong with me?
"That's our secret, huh?"

She grins, "You betcha. See, we're already getting along so well." She steps into the tube station. "You must come with me. Summer would never forgive me if I didn't bring you along."

I wrap my arms about my waist.

She turns, "Come on, you'll enjoy it. I promise."

I shuffle me feet.

"Jeez, I'm sorry." She glances past me, then breaks into a run. "Taxi," she calls out.

A black cab pulls up to the curb.

She wrenches open the door, tumbles in, then beckons, "Coming?"

Half an hour later we draw up in front of a gorgeous townhouse in Primrose Hill. I lean forward to pay off the driver. Amelie waves me off. She hands over a few notes, then opens the door and jumps out. I follow her across the sidewalk. She opens the gate, then bounds up the path to the front door.

The taxi drives off. I glance up and down the road. The trees are bathed in the fading sun, raindrops glittering on the leaves. The hair on the nape of my neck prickles. Is someone watching me? I stare through the fading light...but nothing stirs.

Voices reach me and I turn to find Amelie and Summer talking in front of the open door to the house. I hesitate. Do I want to be here? I should turn and go, but where? To the short let in Hackney, which is all I am able to afford? No, I am better off walking in, facing the women. Learning more about the Seven. Okay, about one of them, in particular. I was handed one last opportunity to find my way out of this mess and I am going to take it. I square my shoulders, then walk down the path.

When I reach the short flight of steps leading to the door, I look up. Summer smiles at me, holds out a hand. The breath rushes out of me. I take the steps, pause when I reach her. She closes the distance between us, hugs me. "Welcome home."

Tears knock at the backs of my eyes. Jesus, why am I getting this emotional? Summer steps back, then tugs on my arm, "You're soaked, let me get you some fresh clothes."

Half an hour later, after having showered and pulled on the clothes that Summer had left for me in the guest bedroom, I walk into the cozy room overlooking the back garden.

Summer had offered to wash and dry my clothes in the washing machine and I had agreed.

Amelie looks up, then jumps to her feet. She walks forward and takes my hand, "Come on, we're having Margaritas and ice cream."

Thunder cracks outside, then lightning illuminates the space in front of the room. I jump, my heartbeat ratcheting up.

Amelie's hand on mine tightens. "I don't like storms either," she whispers. In that moment, I want to hug her close. She tugs me forward and I follow her, sinking down on the large circular settee that faces the large window at the back of the room.

Summer walks over, a pitcher of margaritas in her hand.

"Umm. I'm not sure if I should," I mumble.

"You absolutely should." Summer laughs.

I hesitate.

"If you don't, our hostess will be most unhappy and you don't want that do you?" Amelia leans forward, holds out an empty glass.

Summer tops it off. Amelie hands it over and I wrap my fingers around it. "Could I get a bigger glass? I'll finish this in no time."

Amelie stares at the soup bowl-sized circumference, then cackles.

Summer laughs.

The fourth girl chuckles. She comes forward holding, her own glass. "I'm Isla, by the way." She raises her glass. "What are we drinking to?"

The three look at each other, then Summer turns to me, "To having family close."

I swallow.

"To friendship," Amelie clinks hers with Summer's.

"To... Orgasms?" Isla flutters her eyelashes.

I allow my lips to twitch. "To being fucked until I can't walk straight for days," I offer.

There's silence, then the girls burst out laughing. Summer sputters, "I'll drink to that."

"As if you need to?" Isla winks at Summer, "If the sparks between Sinclair and you are any indication, that's a normal state for you."

Summer makes the sign to zip her lips, "Not saying anything."

"You never share any details," Amelie pouts.

"Not one to kiss and tell." Summer raises her glass, "To guys who love us."

"To the losers who didn't deserve to keep us," Amelie tosses her head.

"The sexy bastards who are gonna be so lucky to meet us," Isla clinks her glass.

"To..." I chew on my lower lip, "TGIF."

The three stare at me.

"Thank God it's Friday?" Amelie furrows her eyebrows.

I glance at each of their faces, "Tongue Goes in First."

Amelie hoots, "I love your step-mama, Summer."

I wince, glance at Summer, who shakes her head. Her phone pings. She picks it up, checks the screen and smiles. "Sienna says she's bummed not to be here, but the pregnancy is exhausting her. She's going to stay in."

"Sienna?" I ask.

"Jace's wife." Summer sets the phone down. "He's a friend of the Seven. They moved here from LA because Sienna's pregnant and they want to bring up the child in Jace's home country."

"That sounds wonderful. It's beautiful that they can plan for the future, a life together." A ball of emotion clogs my throat.

Where has this...hankering for becoming part of an unit come from? To have someone to call my own. A family, kids. I had hoped that I'd have it all one day, until Nina's kidnapping had turned my world upside down. It could have easily been me. Hell, sometimes I wish it had been me. I'd have gladly traded places with her.

She and I? We're... Solid.

Until I met her, I was always a background friend. I never fit in with any particular circle of friends. All through high school, I'd find these cliques. They'd be close with each other and I'd sort of latch on, but I was never permanent with them.

They wouldn't have even noticed if I wasn't with them.

All of that changed when I met Nina. With her, I didn't feel left out. It was like I had found someone who got me. Someone who recognized a kindred soul, know what I mean? She had my back.

We promised to look out for each other, to be the sister we each had always wanted and never had. And then she was gone. My throat closes. No way, could I abandon her when she needs me. I'd do everything, and more, to help her.

I take a sip of my drink. The cold liquid slides down my throat. It hits my stomach and warmth instantly tingles up my spine. "Yum." I glance down at the cocktail. "This is good."

"Isn't it?" Summer licks her lips. She glances around, then sinks down into an overstuffed cushion. "I am surprised Saint allowed you leave the office on your own."

"Oh?" I sink back into the settee while the other two sprawl out next to me. "I didn't think he wanted me there a second longer."

"I don't know." Summer levels me with a stare. "He sure seemed keen to take care of you."

My cheeks heat. "It isn't what it seems." I cringe. Ugh, is that the oldest excuse in the book, or what?

Summer frowns, "Perhaps he doesn't quite know how to share what he feels for you?"

I choke on my drink. "What he feels for me?" I set my glass down with such force that some of the drink spills. I glance around. Summer hands me a box of tissues and I pull one out, mop up the drink from the table. "He left me in his room, for a so-called important appointment." I wad the tissue into a ball, "And when I find him, it's with his—" I clamp my lips shut. Damn, I want to confide in them, but can I trust them? Will I be able to trust anyone after the events of the last few months?

"Ooh." Amelie rubs her hands together. "Did you catch him with his pants down?"

Heat flushes my cheeks. I toss the balled-up tissue onto the table, "The details don't matter."

Summer looks thoughtful, but doesn't speak.

Amelie pouts. "Aww, and I thought you were going to be fun."

"Trust me, I am the most boring person you'll meet."

Amelie, looks me up and down. "It's the quiet ones who have a sting in the tail."

"Sure," I hold up my forefingers on either side of my forehead, "and these are my horns."

She giggles.

Summer tilts her head, "At any rate, he got the color back in your cheeks."

And how.

She pulls up her knees, rests her chin on them, "Did he at least kiss you?"

"Of course, not." I scowl.

"Did he make a move on you?"

I shuffle my feet.

"Are you attracted to him?" Amelie chimes in.

"Do you like him?" Isla asks in a breathless tone. "You do, don't you?"

"Hold on." I hold up my hands, scan their expectant faces. "Yes," I exhale.

"Yes, what?" Amelie bounces on the cushions.

Whoa, is she excitable or what? I let the silence draw out, then reply, "Yes to all of that."

"I knew it." She holds up a hand, and Isla high-five's her.

"Hold on." I frown. "Did you two have a bet going?"

Amelie peers at me from the other side of the settee, "You don't mind, do you?"

I raise my shoulders. "Not as long as you'll help me with what I have in mind."

"Ooh!" Amelie takes a hefty sip, then balances the glass on the arm of the sofa. "Give."

"It's all straightforward."

Not.

"Clearly there's chemistry between Saint and me, and I want to stay in London." I say, sticking to the barebones version of the convoluted reality of my life. "I don't want to return to the US."

Summer's shoulders stiffen. "So you want to get together with Saint?"

"I saw him first at your wedding." I nod toward Summer. "There was an instant connection between us. Of course, I was married to your father then —"

"But you had no feelings for him," she says.

I glance toward her. "It's not like that. I cared about him, but...Was it that obvious?" Clearly, I'm not as good an actress as I like to think, if both Saint and Summer had seen through my charade.

She scowls, "Only because I'd been trying to figure out why the hell a beautiful woman like you would want to be with him." Her features harden. "He was all wrong for you. Besides," she looks me up and down, "you'd be good for Saint."

"I... I would?" I blink.

She nods. "He needs someone who won't put up with all that alpha bullshit."

"Like you and Sinclair?"

She smiles and her eyes gleam. "I'll tell you a secret."

"Oh?"

She leans forward, as do the other women.

"These men," she tilts her head, "the trick to managing them is to let them show you their worst side; let them rage and rant. And then, when they think they have you cornered, you pull the rug out from under their feet."

I frown. O-k-a-y.

"You get what I'm saying?" She peers into my face.

No. Yes. "I...think so."

"Good." She grins. "I think you'll be fine."

"So, you don't mind that I'm hoping to get together with someone else, so soon after your father's death?"

She slashes the air with her hand. "It's unusual, but I wasn't close to Adam. He didn't deserve to die that early, and while I forgive him for abandoning me and Karma to the foster system in the UK... Well, I do believe that he had our best interests at heart and..." her lips firm, "that's what counts."

Right.

I peruse her features, then reach over and grasp her hand, "Thank you."

"For what?"

"For welcoming me into your home, into your circle... For not being..."

"A bitch?" She chuckles.

"Yeah." That too.

"I leave that up to my sister Karma." Her brow furrows, "Wish she was here today."

"Where is she?"

She taps her fingers on the carpet, "Off on holiday in Sicily with some hottie she hooked up with."

"Oh?" My heart begins to race. It's only a coincidence. It doesn't mean anything. Lots of people go to Sicily on holiday with a man... "So, it's new love, huh?"

Summer flips her hair over her shoulder, "That's the thing. I've never met him. It was all so sudden. One minute she was calling me to spend the night with her—which is not Karma at all either, by the way—the next she's texting me to say she's jetting off on an Italian holiday."

"Sicilian."

"That's what I said." Summer frowns.

"Not the same thing—" I bite my lips. Shit, shouldn't have said that. I widen my gaze, "I'm sure she's having a great time. Everyone deserves at least one dirty holiday with an alpha male of their dreams, huh?"

"Is that why you chose Saint?"

I wince. "

"But that's not the only reason, right?" Amelie inches closer. "You want the security that Saint's money can provide, and the chemistry between the two of you makes for an interesting starting point."

"I..."

She waves a hand in the air, "Hey, I'm the last to judge. I mean, relationships have been built on far less. Besides you're one of us, and Saint clearly needs you in his life."

"He does?" My head whirls.

She nods. "He just doesn't know it yet."

Oh, man, I can't keep up.

"You do realize that he's among the most twisted of the Seven?" Amelie's gaze narrows.

Interesting. Behind that overeager, always ready to please façade, is a sharp brain. And I should be the last to judge a woman by her looks.

"I am aware that he has certain hidden proclivities," I venture.

"He's a dominant?" Isla frowns.

"They all are." Summer waves her hand in the air.

Amelie turns on her, "Even Weston?"

I glance at her features. Her lips are parted, eyes slightly dilated. Is that how I looked when I walked in on Saint?

She jerks her head to me, and I glance back at Summer.

"All of the Seven will stop at nothing to get their own way." Summer holds my gaze. "These men are bloody arresting, right?"

None more so than Saint.

I want to tame him, while simultaneously throwing myself down at his feet and begging him to take me—is what I want to say. But I'd already pushed it with the TGIF comment, and I don't want these women to think I'm weird. Besides I need them on my side... fast. I nod my head. "You can say that again." I mumble.

Summer chuckles. Isla snorts.

"You thought he wouldn't be able to say no to you, that you'd make an offer he couldn't refuse?" Amelie cuts in.

I blink. Am I that transparent, or are these women unusually perceptive?

"You did, didn't you?" Amelie crawls close to me, her gaze wide. I glance at her. Her cheeks flush. "Go on, give." She scans my features, her expression expectant.

"Yep."

"Wait, what did I miss?" Summer glances between us.

"I believe step-mama here asked Saint to become her dominant."

Summer laughs. "No, you didn't."

"Yes." I tuck my hair behind my ears. "Though trust me, there's no," I make air quotes, "'asking' the man for anything. He wants, he takes," I mutter. "End of story."

"You're right about that. Bet that made for an interesting conversation, huh?" Isla nods.

"You have no idea." I reach for my drink.

"He turned you down?" Amelia wiggles her legs, her gaze arrested.

My shoulders sag.

"How dare he?" Summer grabs a cushion and punches it.

"Yeah." Isla sits up. "We need to teach him a lesson. You're beautiful...gorgeous. You're exactly the kind of challenge he needs."

"Bet he knows it too." Summer looks me up and down. "Maybe that's why he did an about-turn? He knew if he took you on, he risked getting involved."

I shake my head. "You should have seen him, when I walked in on him. He was..."

"Angry?"

"Turned on?"

"Ready to throw you down and shag you?"

I circle the rim of my glass with my forefinger, "Distracted."

"What?" Amelie frowns.

"He was busy," I reply.

"All an act." She huffs.

Summer raises an eyebrow, then nods. "I think I'm familiar with that act. He didn't want you to see how much you affect him." Her lips curve, "Trust me. I saw the way he was eating you up with his eyes at my wedding."

"Perhaps he was interested, but he sure as hell disguised it well," I mutter.

"Only one way to find out." Amelie taps her finger to her cheek.

I glance at her warily. "Why do I have the feeling you are the last one I should be taking advice from?"

"Aww... Come on, V," she pouts, "you don't mean that."

I draw in a breath, "I guess not. After all, I get by with a little help from my friends."

"Did you quote The Beatles?" Summer chuckles.

I redden, "Old habit."

"It's delightful. You're delightful. In fact," she scowls, "you are not what I expected."

"Oh?" I meet her gaze, "What did you think I was?"

"Cold," Isla interjects.

"Hard," Amelie adds.

Summer wriggles around and makes herself comfortable, "You know... You turned up unannounced at my wedding as my father's wife, someone I never knew existed. And you were perfectly turned out, designer clothes and all."

"I prefer to be well-dressed. What's wrong with that?" I scowl.

"Not a thing." Summer looks me up and down. "Bet, that's what turns Saint on. Bet he wants to mess you up."

I flush, "Maybe." I glance between them, "What are you guys thinking?"

"I think," Amelie sits up on her knees, "you're going about this all wrong."

"I am?"

"You went in and asked him outright. Guys don't respond well to that."

"And what do you know about that?" Isla teases. "You, who haven't had a steady boyfriend in forever."

Amelie doesn't miss a beat, "I am not the one in question here... Also, I've observed human behavior up close."

"You're a pastry chef," Isla snorts.

"Exactly." Amelie's lips curve. "I've seen humans naked and vulnerable. Not literally," she hastens to add, "but you ever observe people enjoying their dessert? They let their guards down, and tune in to their baser instincts. You can tell a lot about a man by the way he eats his pudding."

Isla makes a gagging sound. "PJ. PJ," she singsongs.

"PJ?" I frown.

"Poor joke," she clarifies.

Amelie reddens. "Uh, that's not what I mean."

Summer chuckles. "Sure, you did."

"Okay so it came out all wrong, but you get me, right?" Amelie waves a hand in the air.

I take in her scarlet features. A smile trembles on my lips.

"Anyway, don't mock it until you try it." Amelie turns to me, "As I was saying..."

"Yes?"

"I think you should make Saint jealous." Her eyes gleam, "Very jealous."

I am an odd number. Take away a letter and I become even. What number am I?

Answer: Seven

Saint

The music reverberates from the walls of the nightclub. The blonde leans in and shoves her ample bosom into my face.

I glance down her neckline, yawn.

She grabs a cushion from the next chair, slaps it to the floor between my legs, then drops to her knees. She lowers the zipper on my pants and my dick springs free.

I shove a hand into the pocket of my slacks. I could do with a fucking cigarette about now.

She bends and takes me into her mouth.

The blood thuds at my temples; my balls shrivel. Hell, I don't want her. I grip her hair, she moans—the sound too exaggerated, too theatrical... Nothing like the soft breathy cries, the whines, the keening groans from Gigi. Why am I thinking of her again?

I yank the blonde's head back. She glances up, a frown between her eyebrows.

"Leave."

She scowls.

Guess I owe her an explanation? Not. "It's not you..." I crack my neck,

"it's me."

Her lips turn down, then she stiffens, springs up. "You're a jerk, you know that?" She pivots, then flounces off toward the exit.

"What happened?" A male voice snickers. "No lead in the old pencil?"

"Shut the fuck up, Weston." I glance over to where he's sprawled on a settee—a woman between his legs. Her head bobs as she blows him.

Not a muscle moves in his face. His features are deadpan. He's not enjoying that so much as tolerating it. Yeah, when you hop from one blow job to the next, it happens. Things leave you bored. Flashing eyes, moist lips, the scent of her arousal in the air. My cock is instantly erect. The hell? Just thinking of her seems to have the most bizarre effect on my libido. Unacceptable. No-one, not even one of the Seven, are allowed to get close. So why is it that I can't get the images of our encounter out of my head? "Clearly, I don't like her."

No fucking riddle there to solve.

"Who are you talking to?" Weston peers past me.

The fuck? Did I say that aloud? I scowl, "None of your bloody business."

"The man doth protest too much."

"Focus on your own asinine problems."

"Of which, I'll have you know, I have none." He taps the head of the woman whose face is stuck to his groin. She obediently increases her pace, raising and lowering her head at double the speed. He glances at the one on his right and she thrusts out her chest, squeezes her breasts, moaning in what is clearly fake desire. He frowns, "Less noise, more action." The woman subsides, her entire body gyrating with the effort of her ministrations on herself.

"I don't know, from where I am, you seem..."

"Occupied?" He smirks.

"Stupefied."

"At least I am getting some satisfaction... You, however..." he looks me up and down, "...are a sorry state of affairs."

I tense. "Fuck off, douchebag."

"Oh, I intend to." He widens his stance. The blonde between his knees peers up, he frowns, and she goes back to the services she's providing him.

"So, it's come down to this, huh? Just two of the Seven trading insults." I tuck myself back in, then jump to my feet, begin to pace.

"Well, Sinner's too infatuated with his new wife, Edward's out... Priest and all that, Damian's off doing whatever it is that rock stars do, Arpad's island-hopping in the Baltics, and Baron..."

"Fucking Baron." I drum my fingers on my chest, "Bet he's laughing at us from whichever corner of the world he is in."

"Of all the Seven of us, he took the incident the worst."

I stiffen.

"Not that it hasn't affected all of us in different ways. It's a bit much for twelve-year-old boys to have been subjected to what we were—"

"Stop." I grimace.

Weston's shoulders tense. Then he grips the hair of the woman in between his thigh. He tugs and she moans. He yanks her head back and forth, using her mouth to get himself off. His mouth firms, then he pulls her off of him. He snaps his fingers and all three women in the room rise to their feet. Turning, they fade toward the exit.

"Well trained." I smirk.

He grabs hold of a napkin from the side table, wipes himself then tucks himself inside of his pants.

"Bet they didn't pose much of a challenge to you, hmm?" I ask.

"Is that what you are looking for?" He tosses the cloth aside, then fixes himself and stands to his feet.

Is it? I raise my shoulders. "I'm cool, ol' chap. Easy come, easy go."

"That's what Sinner used to say." He mutters, "Then look what happened to him..."

"Sinner's a fucking fool, letting his emotions getting entangled with a woman. Not that I have anything against Summer."

He chuckles, "Of course, not."

"I am not going to make the same mistake." I crack my neck.

"You trying to convince me or yourself?" He asks.

"Neither." I shuffle my feet. "Mind you, of all us, Jace and Sinner are the happiest right now."

"No doubt ensconced with their women." He shudders.

"Tying themselves to one woman for the rest of their lives." A hot feeling stabs at my chest. Whoa. I'm not jealous. I'm not. Burying myself in the same pussy every night, waking up with the scent of her in my nostrils, her moans echoing in my ears, the thrum of her cunt vibrating at my fingertips... Nah. My groin hardens; blood drains to my cock. Clearly, I need a diversion. I did the right thing, turning her down. I am never going to give in to the temptation her body affords me. Nope.

Shouts reach me from the theatre below. Turning, I prowl over to the floor-to-ceiling window that overlooks the stage.

Weston joins me.

I gaze down at where a woman hangs in a graceful split from the pole in the center. The shouting dies down. She stays motionless, a long statue of grace. Her leg muscles are coiled, her calves seem to be carved out of stone. Surely, her ankles are too delicate to bear the weight of her body? Then the strains of a familiar song crash over the space. Is it The Beatles?

Who the fuck strip teases to a song by the bloody Beatles?

She arches her arm at a right angle to her body. A ripple runs through the crowd. I freeze.

Victoria does, and damn, does she give the song a whole new meaning.

She leans into the move, her hip jutting out...the silvery strip of nothing digging into the crease between her legs, stretching to outline what would be pink, juicy, pussy lips. A shimmer of lust crawls up my spine. The hair on the back of my nape rises. The music pumps up...

I stare as she twirls around once, then again. Bends one leg, thrusts out the other, then lets go, to stay poised on one arm for a second—the crowd gasps—then she wraps her arm up and around her leg, thrusts out her breasts. Her nipples are outlined against the shimmery top...that hugs every curve of her body, baring her creamy shoulders. The arch of her neck, the sweat that beads that beautiful skin, clings to the regal arch of her brow, slides down her temples, across that soft curve of her cheek. She throws her head back, lips parted, spine arched in the simulation of the first throes of an orgasm.

The lyrics crescendo. She's dancing to Come Together by The Beatles. Jesus H Christ. Come together, indeed.

Her eyelids snap open. Familiar green eyes, stare up at me. Her eyes. I glare. Under the harsh spotlights, her skin glows—white, transparent, so fragile. All mine. A growl rips from me.

"How dare she?"

Victoria

His pale, blue eyes glitter, and even from across the space that separates us, they resemble chips of ice. Hard. Mean. His nostrils flare. Is he angry?

His jaw tics; his shoulders seem to grow in size.

No, he's not angry; he's livid. I gulp and all of my nerve-endings seem to flare. His chest heaves and the shirt stretches across the planes, outlining every single ripped muscle. No one should look that gorgeous, that lethal. My belly clenches.

I unfurl my body, coil my legs around the pole, twirl—once, twice, thrice—flatten out my body parallel to the floor in a flat line...

Stay... Stay... My biceps flex, my triceps stretch, all of my muscles coil, then I lower my legs until I'm parallel again, this time to the pole, lower my legs, until my toes touch the pole. Let go of the pole, to drop down to a crouch, then spring up, arch my back, my neck, snap out my head, search the window above. It's empty.

What the hell—? My stomach bottoms out. My arms and legs tremble.

The lyrics of my preferred song to dance to thump against my breast bone. So close, I had been so close. I could have sworn I'd caught his attention... I should have known better.

Just because he is interested in me—Oh, I'd caught the flicker of curiosity in his gaze from the moment he'd laid eyes on me—so what? He met many men and women, a billionaire like him who has the freakin' world at his feet. What does he know about being helpless, at the mercy of those who could change your life in an instant?

If I don't manage to intrigue him, I'll never be able to break Nina free of the Mafia's clutches.

Goddam him. I grab the pole with my arms, pull myself in, then scissor my legs wide apart, in a 'V' swirl, once, twice... It's thanks to Nina that I'd taken classes in pole dancing. She'd enjoyed it and had nagged me until I'd gone along with her. She thought it would help me gain confidence in myself, and help me come out of my shell. And truth is, I'd found it liberating.

On the pole I can let go of all of my inhibitions, forget I am a nerd who doesn't fit in anywhere. I can let the music get to me, allow the lyrics to twist my insides, slam against my temples, my chest, between my legs. I twirl around the pole, faster, faster—the world spins, lights flash behind my eyes. I loosen my grip, my body flies through the air, muscles loose, shoulders coiled, and I land on a roll. The audience gasps, I spring up to my knees, lower my head. Sweat drips down my temples, from my chin, splatters onto the floor.

The music rises to a crescendo, then switches off.

The cheering from the crowd smashes into me. I open my eyes, and notice the worn cowboy boots in my line of sight. The hair on the nape of my neck rises. I run my gaze up the tailor-made slacks that mold to powerful thighs and cup the bulge between the legs. I gulp. Snap my head back.

"Get up."

His lips move. I hear him above the hoots and whistles of the crowd.

I glide up to my feet, the audience cheers. "Victoria!"

"Victoria... Show your tits."

A snarl rolls up his chest. His biceps bulge. Anger strums off of him and my nerve endings spark. I've seen Saint laid back, bored, cruel intent writ in his every expression. But this...? Saint Livid, every muscle in his body taut, layer upon layer of muscle vibrating with surprised tension...? My thighs spasm and liquid heat curls in my belly.

"Victoria, take it all off..." Another scream from the audience rips between us.

He growls, takes a step forward, "Do it."

I blink.

"Take off your clothes."

"H...here?"

"Isn't that why you're here? To show off your assets? To cash in what you have for money? He shoves his hand into his pocket, pulls out his wallet. He holds up a credit card. The light flashes off of it, blinding me for a second. "This is what you want, right?"

I swallow, then tip up my chin. "Of course." A cold sensation stabs at my chest. My fingers and toes turn to ice. I fold all of my emotions into that tiny space deep inside. Raising one shoulder, I shrug off my scanty sparkly top, then shrug down the other side.

The fabric catches on my hard nipples, stays poised a second. One more breath and it will fall. Another hoot from the audience, "You're blocking the view, you asshole."

I wince.

Saint holds up a hand and the audience quietens.

He moves in closer, closer, until his chest brushes my half naked torso. Goosebumps flare on my skin. He swoops out his arm. I wince. He digs his fingers into my hair, tugs. I arch my head, bare the column of my neck for his perusal.

A bead of sweat runs down my temple. He drops his head and licks it up. I shudder. All of my pores pop.

"That was a terrible song to strip to, by the way."

I blink. Of all the insignificant things to say... "Not a Beatles fan, huh?"

"Hate them."

"Oh, goody." I flutter my eyelashes. "I'll make sure to strip to only them from now on."

His gaze narrows and his blue eyes lighten until they resemble water swirling under ice—deep, dangerous. He's lethal...a man who'll never let go once his interest is aroused. I gulp. My heart begins to race.

"Say that again..." His voice lowers to a hush.

"I'll make sure to..."

His hand swoops out, then he tears off the strip of cloth from over my middle. I am instantly wet. Damn him, why do I find this hot? It isn't. He wants to belt me, teach me a lesson for what I did. I'd dared to throw down the challenge and he had risen to it—I drop my gaze to where his arousal tents his crotch—in more ways than one.

"Do it." My voice trembles, and I... I hate that. I will not allow him to see how scared I am. Worried that my body will enjoy what he is going to do to me. Find that I want it, welcome it. Ask him to ravish me right here in front of everyone. "Lost your courage?" I tip up my chin and his features twist. He bends his knees, grabs me by my thighs, then pushes me down on the padded platform.

I stare up at him, raise my torso. He covers my body with his, plants his hips between my legs, his hardness stabbing at the hollow between my legs. His gaze bores into me. My heart begins to race, adrenaline lacing my blood. Fear claws in my gut. I raise my hand and my palm connects with his face. His head snaps back.

He straightens and my fingerprints are outlined on his cheek. Oh, dear! That's not good, is it?

I gulp and he bares his teeth.

I raise my hand again and he catches it, then brings up my other arm. He yanks my palms up and above my head, shackles my wrists with his fingers. Then thrusts his hand between us. I hear the click of his belt buckle, the rustle of his zipper, then his dick nudges my entrance.

"You want this, don't you? This is why you've been haunting me since I saw you. This is why you came to me for help. Admit it. You want what only I can give you."

I nod.

"Say it." He scowls, "I want to hear you.""

"You. Only you," I gasp. My insides twist and my core aches, even as moisture laces my cunt. "I need you."

Not like this.

Not like this.

"Like this," he hisses. "You want me on this stage. You want me to take you in front of everyone. You're an exhibitionist."

I freeze. How did he guess that?

"You want to be taken and broken, until you are set free. You want me to paint your insides with my cum, to rub my name into every pore of your body, say it..."

Yes.

Yes.

"You pushed me until I crossed the line, until there was no going back." His features twist. The blue in his eyes deepens until they seem almost black. "Say you want me to punish you, you want me to fuck your past right out of you," he snarls.

Goddam him for laying my soul bare in front of the world. My chin wobbles. My scalp itches. Why is this happening? Why did it have to turn out like this? I'm only doing what is needed to save myself and my friend... So why can't he get on with it?

"Do it."

My voice emerges as if from far away. I wrap my legs around his waist, thrust my hips up.

11

Saint

Her wet heat sears up my shaft; my groin hardens and my spine tingles. My thighs flex, grow rigid. "Jesus, fuck." The growl rips out of me. I balance my weight on my elbows, peer into her eyes.

Angry green sears through me. Emerald, jade and all the fucking precious jewels in the world couldn't compare to the brilliance in her eyes... And now what? I am waxing poetic?

"What are you waiting for?" Tears glitter in her eyes.

For me? For her? My heart squeezes. The hell? Why do I want to find out what's making her come onto me, haunt my every step, force herself on me.? Almost as if she is under duress. I stiffen, my shoulder muscles tensing. Is that what this is? Is she trying to trap me somehow? But why? It doesn't make any sense.

"This is what you want, right?" she seethes, her features a hard mask. "Me at your disposal. Well, here I am, so why don't you take what I am offering and be done with it? Why don't you—?"

I shake my head.

She blinks.

"Not like this." I pull back, everything in my body protesting. My pelvis jerks—wanting, needing to be inside of her. Not yet.

Her mouth opens and closes. "Wh...what are you doing?"

I lock my muscles, push up and off of her. "You can't top from the bottom, sweetheart."

She scowls, then glances away.
I pinch her chin. She peers up at me from under her eyelashes.
"Guess what the masochist told the sadist?" I scan her features.
"What?" She swallows.
"Hurt me."
Her pupils dilate and her breathing grows ragged.
I peel back my lips, "And what did the sadist reply with?" I ask.
She tilts her head, "I...I don't know."
"Exactly."
She frowns.
"He said 'No,' Sweetheart."
She pales.
"To everyone else, you may be a fragile beauty, but your façade doesn't fool me."
She swallows, then tosses her head, "I have no idea what you mean."
"I can see the cracks in your perfection, the need that eats away at you."
Her breath hitches, "You don't know what you're talking about."
"Don't you?" I allow my lips to curl, "I plan to break you, and when I am done with you, you'll regret ever having caught my interest."
Her lips part, and the scent of her—lilies with a dash of pepper—teases my nostrils. My dick twitches. My fingers tremble. They fucking tremble. I let go of her and she sags back.
I thrust out my chest, then tuck myself in my pants. "We do this my way."
I say.
"What's that?"
"Thirty days Victoria. If you can survive for thirty days without breaking, I'll take you as my sub."
She frowns. "That's...too long," she splutters.
"Twenty-four seven."
"What?" Her cheeks pale. She sits up. Her breasts jiggle and her nipples perking up to salute me... So does my dick. Fuck.
"You'll work with me and warm my bed...but you can't give in to me."
"The hell? Do you have any idea how twisted that sounds? It's impossible. How the hell am I supposed to put up with your arrogance?"
"Your choice. Take it or leave it."
She twists her fingers in front of her, "Saint."
"You don't get to call me that."

"But—"

"You don't question me either."

"How?"

I make a zipping motion with my fingers over my mouth.

She squeezes her lips shut.

Thank fuck. Another word from her and I'd have tossed that stupid fucking agreement that I pulled out of my ass into the horseshit pile where it belongs. "Yes or no?"

Footsteps head toward us and shouts slice through the fog in my head, "Saint."

I shove the noise away, focus on her. Her face pales, then she jerks her chin. I slide up to my feet. Rake a last glance across those creamy breasts, her concave stomach, the slit between her pussy lips. My cock jerks and my balls thrum. I squeeze my fists at my sides. Walk away before you do something you regret.

A new voice calls out, "Saint!"

I jerk my chin up. Weston glowers at me. Behind him, three other men—the bouncers from the club—stand shoulder to shoulder, forming a wall between him and the crowd that's busy turning the place upside down. Too fucking bad.

We own the joint. We can do what we want with it, and that includes the possessions in it... Except her... She belongs to me. Mine to do with as I chose.

I glance down and she opens her mouth.

"Nod for yes, shake your head for no."

She stares.

"You can do that, hmm?"

She glowers. I smirk.

"Well?"

I angle my body to leave and she brings her fingers to her mouth, bites her nails. Huh? Who'd have thought the perfectly turned out Victoria would turn out to be, not only an accomplished stripper—but also has the gross-as-fuck habit of biting her nails? She's nervous. Good. Time things fall into the form I prefer them to be.

I tilt my head.

She nods, a jerk of her chin. My muscles relax. Thank fuck. No, I hadn't been tense, or on edge... Of course, she was going to accept my proposal.

She had to. She'd dogged my footsteps, crawled into my gut... Time I show her who is the master of her. There can be only one man who commands her every waking moment, her every second at night, her dreams, her nightmares, her innermost fears, her deepest desires... All of it belongs to me... Temporarily. It buys me time to take her apart, piece by piece.

To figure out what the hell she wants from me...and why? And if I use that time to coax her into my model of a willing sub... Well, that is my prerogative. She tips up her head so her gaze collides with mine. I shrug out of my shirt, hand it to her.

"Get dressed." I turn to leave.

"Wait," she calls out.

I glare at her over my shoulder.

She pales, then shrugs into my shirt, which hits her mid-thigh. The sleeves cover her arms completely. I frown. She darts her fingers to the front and begins to thread the buttons through the holes. Good. She gets me. Finally.

"When..." she swallows. "...when do we start?"

"You'll find out soon enough." I turn back, take another step toward Weston. A man behind him breaks through the chain of bodyguards.

He barrels forward, tries to brush past me, his gaze set on Victoria.

I swing and my fist connects with his jaw. He crumples to the ground. Silence descends. The mob behind stills.

I scan their faces, "Anyone, else?"

*What did the baseball glove say to the ball?
Answer: Catch you later*

Victoria

"Why hasn't he called yet?" I chew on my fingernails. I haven't heard from the asshole in an entire seven days.

Well, except for the call from one of his assistants—not Meredith—directing me to a private clinic in Hampstead Heath. The doctor—a woman—had given me a complete physical and drawn enough blood for a series of blood tests. Jesus, the brute is thorough. He's probably having me tested for every STD under the sun.

The doc had wanted to administer the contraceptive injection, but I'd opted for birth control pills. I'd been surprised when she hadn't insisted otherwise.

The acrid taste of nail polish laces my tongue. I hold up my fingers and groan. Every one of my finger nails is bitten down to the quick. Ugh. This definitely doesn't go along with the sophisticated image I try to portray. I fist my fingers at my sides, glance around the tiny flat. Amelie had invited me to move in with her and I had agreed.

Truthfully, it had been a weight off my shoulders. No way, could I afford the rent at a studio. Hotels or long-term rentals were out of the question... Besides, I'm not planning on being broke that long. Just for a few days, until I get my feet under me. Until I manage to lure in one gazillionaire with the worst attitude ever. I have to get him to... what...fall in love with me?

Get me pregnant with his child? I shake my head. Not that, much as I want one. This is not the right time to bring a baby into this world. Really, I just need to get him to trust me enough so I can get close to him

I'd been stupid to think my charms, such as they are, would work...

I'd danced at that club, hoping to catch his attention. At least, it had worked. Maybe too well...? There had been a strange light in his eyes when he'd directed me on how exactly he wanted me to speak to him... Which is to say, hold my silence. A thrill tickles my spine... It had been hot. The way he'd taken charge, even as everything inside of me had insisted that I stand up to him—not give in, not yet. I had held my own...and that...had seemed to seal the deal... It had been a risk to coerce him to lose control. He'd taken the bait, come for me, and I'd been sure he was going to fuck me right there. The fact that it had taken place before the entire assembled audience... That had only turned me on even more. Damn him, but I'd wanted him to claim me then. Couldn't resist the strength of his body which had covered me, held me down, helpless in his hold.

I'd known he wouldn't let anything hurt me... No, he is saving that pleasure for himself. I thrust my forefinger into my mouth, chew on my fingernail... My teeth dig into the soft pad of my finger... "Ow." I shake it out.

"Have you tried coating your fingertips with salt?" Amelie flounces into the room... "Or better still, chilies." She holds a tray with two cups of steaming tea. In between them is a green chili.

I stare at it, then fold my arms behind my back. "No way, am I rubbing that on my fingertips. Knowing my luck, I'd probably touch it to my eyes instead."

She places the tray on the center table, then sinks into a sofa. "So...the plan didn't work?"

I purse my lips, shift my weight between my feet.

"It did work?"

"I... I'm not sure."

She frowns. "Explain."

I twist my fingers together in front of myself, "He, uh, asked me to wait for his message."

She sits up, "That's good, right?"

"He hasn't called."

"He will." She leans forward and picks up her Kindle.

"You sound sure," I huff.

She shoots me a glance. "You don't sound convinced."

I raise my shoulders.

She holds up her Kindle. "Trust me, I have firsthand knowledge of how to play a man and reel him in."

"Huh?"

"Romance novels, baby."

"Oh." I blink. "You...you're joking right?"

Her eyes gleam. "Haven't you read Fifty Shades of Grey?"

I shake my head.

Her mouth drops open. "No way."

I walk over, sink into the overstuffed armchair next to her.

"You could have fooled me." She studies me from toe to head.

"What?"

She waves her hand in the air, "You're so graceful... You practically ooze sex appeal."

"I do not." I fold my arms around my waist.

"Sure do. In fact," she scowls, "every movement of yours seems to be choreographed. Even wearing this outfit."

I glance down at my simple knee length sweaterdress; I'd bought it at a charity shop to keep me warm in the London weather.

"You're so well put together." She says.

I bite my lips. "My ma loved black and white movies from old Hollywood. I watched them all with her. I loved the old-world glamour, how beautiful and powerful the heroines seemed. I guess I internalized their mannerisms—how they walked, talked...flirted," I lower my gaze, "seduced."

"Ah, now that makes sense."

"It does?"

"You have an old-world allure about you." She places her Kindle on the settee next to her. "An air that suggests you are a challenge."

"Does it now?"

"Bet that's why Saint can't help but be intrigued."

"Enough to keep me waiting, huh?"

"He likes to play games... All the Seven do."

"And you know them well?"

"I've only met them a couple of times, thanks to Summer, but they are all men at the top of their game, and you've set your sights on the most intriguing of them."

I bite my lips. "Saint confuses me."

"How?"

"He saw me dancing, came barreling down from where he was. He marched up to me, and I swear, I thought he was going to go all caveman and drag me out of there."

"But he didn't?"

I shake my head, pull my feet up under me. "He seemed to change his mind, and decided to humiliate me right there...."

"Then?"

I swipe my hair back from my face. "Then he stepped back, almost as if he was recalibrating his strategy. He accepted my offer."

She blinks, then whoops, "So that's good right?"

"Maybe." I shift around in the chair, "I may have overdone things. He seemed to get all jealous. So much so that he beat up a man who charged up to me."

She sits up straight, "He did?"

I nod. "It was..."

"Dramatic?" She asks.

"A surprise." I shiver. "Guess I simply knew what to say to intrigue him."

She tilts her head, "He has a hidden side, huh?"

"I researched him before approaching him."

"You did?"

I nod, "There are enough pictures of him leaving well-known BDSM clubs."

"Are you worried that you're out of your depth?" She purses her lips. "You think you'll be able to handle the lifestyle?"

I shuffle my feet... "Um," I glance at her, then away. Shit, I revealed too much.

How many times does a person lie, before the lie becomes the truth?

Too many.

And now I am asking riddles and answering them, as if I learned the technique at the feet of the alphahole himself. Shit. Get a grip.

"I've, uh, always been drawn to it." I tip up my chin, "I've never practiced it before... I hadn't seriously thought of dipping my toes into it, until Saint." That much is true, at least.

"So, you chose him because you were curious? I mean, he's not the only one of the Seven who has a hankering for that stuff, you know?"

I twist a strand of hair around my fingers, "I chose him because..."

"Because?" She asks.

It's so tempting to spill my plan...the part that really matters. If I could get it off my chest to even one person, it would help me feel lighter... I open my mouth, then shake my head. I can't. This part of my plan? It's the part that counts. It's also the one thing I dare not speak openly about. Call me superstitious, but I don't want to spoil my chances by revealing too much... too soon... "Doesn't matter," I cut the air with my hand.

Her lips draw down, "Aww, and it was getting interesting, too."

"I'll let you know when there's something to talk about."

"Promise?"

"On the existence of a fifth Beatle." I hold up my hand.

She scowls. "There wasn't one."

"I know." A smile twists my lip.

"Not fair, V."

I chuckle, "Let's say, if he doesn't call me, I am—"

My phone pings. I glance at it and freeze. Amelie jumps to her feet, crosses the floor to me. "It's him, isn't it?"

I show her the text.

Alphahole: Come down.

Jesus, is there a shortage of words in his vocabulary, or what?

"Alphahole?" She chuckles. "Quite complimentary of you to call him that."

"Not me," I choke out. "That's the rat's ass of a jerk keying his phone and ID into my phone."

"He did that?"

I throw up my hands. "I know, stalkerish much?"

A horn sounds from below and she darts to the window. "There's a car there...all dark and shiny... OMG." She turns. "He's here, waiting by the car for you." Her voice is breathless, "This is exciting. This is what you wanted, right?"

My fingers tremble. I swallow. Is it? Is this what I'd been hoping for?

He's opened the door. I only have to step through now. I firm my lips, look up at her, "I never keyed in his name..." I purse my lips.

The only time my purse had been out of my sight was when I had fallen asleep in his office. Had he hacked into it then? I wouldn't put it past him. He's infringed on my privacy... Which, is a positive sign, right? It means he is interested. I force my fingers to un-clutch from around the phone.

Walking to the center table, I pick up my mug of tea, then sink into my arm chair. My phone pings again. I glance down.

Alphahole: Don't keep me waiting.

I set my jaw. The arrogance of the man. Of course, I'd had an inkling he'd want to get his own way, but this... Expecting me to drop everything and jump to his demands? No way.

My phone buzzes.

Alphahole: I know what you're doing and it won't work.

Alphahole: You sure you want to go down this path?

Alphahole: Don't make me come up there. You'll regret it.

My heart beat ratchets up. My pulse begins to race. Don't give in to him. Don't.

There's a banging on the door. I jump.

13

Saint

The door opens. I glance down, then past the blonde who stands there, to the dark-haired woman who's captured my imagination.

I tilt my head and she juts out her lower lip. Oh, I'd like to bite down on that glistening flesh and teach her who exactly calls the shots around here. I jerk my chin and she crosses arms.

"Saint."

I look down at the blonde haired woman, "How are you, Amelie?"

She looks me up and down, "you here for Victoria?"

I try to move past her, she plants an arm either side of the door frame. I pause, glance down at her, "Is there a problem?"

She frowns, "you tell me." She taps her foot on the floor, "Is there, Saint?"

Huh? "What do you mean?" I scowl.

"You treat her good." She lowers her voice. "You hear me?"

I meet her gaze, allow my features to take on an expression of sincerity. "Always." I raise my hand, "you can trust me to do what's right for her." I say honestly.

"Amelie." Victoria springs to her feet, then crosses the room. "You were leaving, weren't you?"

"Was I?" Amelie frowns, then turns around.

Victoria nods, "Yes, you were."

Amelia takes in a breath, Victoria's gaze widens, and Amelie tosses her head. "Fine, be like that, V, but you owe me."

Victoria's mouth curves in a smile. Her features light up. I blink. She's fucking beautiful. I want her to smile like that at me. The hell am I thinking? I draw myself up to my full height.

Her green eyes twinkle, "I promise I'll make it up to you." She says.

Amelie nods. She marches to the crowded table in the center of the room, and picks up a handbag. Turning, she moves toward me. "You better not hurt her."

"Amelie!" Victoria's mouth falls open.

I chuckle, "I won't do anything to her..."

Amelie frowns, then jerks her chin.

"I promise." I glance down at Amelie.

"I'll hold you to that." She scowls, then brushes past me.

I straighten, "Nothing that she doesn't want me to, that is."

Victoria stiffens. "What was that?"

I saunter inside, "Oh, you heard me all right, so don't pretend otherwise." The door closes behind me with a snick.

Victoria pales.

I prowl forward; she takes another step back.

I reach her and she stumbles to put space between us; her hip grazes the window sill. She stiffens.

"You afraid?"

She raises her head, "No."

I swoop down, grab her waist, and twirl her so she faces the window pane. She squeaks.

I lean in, slap my hands on either side of her, "I hate liars."

"I'm..." her breath hitches, "not lying."

I step back, so quickly she flinches. Then turn my body, so I am at right angles with her. "Last chance."

Her spine stiffens and she shoots me a glance. "Told you, I'm not."

My palm connects with her butt with such force that her body jolts forward and she braces herself on the window. Her cheeks turn fiery. "How...how dare you?"

"Don't challenge me."

She opens her mouth and I bring my hand down on her arse again. Her shoulders jerk; her breathing grows ragged.

My dick is instantly hard.

She turns around, bites her lips, then her gaze narrows with intensity. She makes a low sound deep in her throat. Her fingers flex. Every part of her tenses, until she's fairly vibrating with anger.

I chuckle.

"It's not funny."

"You're right." I draw my gaze from her hair messed about her shoulders, down to the turn of her dainty ankles. "What it is, is fucking arousing."

She pulls back her shoulders, "This is all a joke to you, isn't it?"

"On the contrary," I flex my fingers.

She swallows.

I crack my neck.

Her pupils dilate.

"I take disciplining you seriously."

She raises her nose, "Forget it, it's off, it's..."

"Turn around, face the window."

She scowls.

"Do it."

She firms her lips.

"Now."

She swivels to face forward.

I plant my feet between her legs, shove them apart. Her spine arches and her shoulders knot. I wait...wait... A gust of wind blows through the open window. Her hair flows about her face. She half turns. "Why the hell don't you—?"

I raise my hand and spank her arse. She huffs. And again. Her knuckles whiten and her face falls forward. "Stop."

"Shut up."

I slap her rounded flesh again and a low moan bleeds from her lips.

All the blood drains to my groin, my cock lengthens, and my balls grow heavy. Jesus, fuck. I've barely touched her, and I already want to be inside of her. I need to get ahold of myself. Need to stop her little cries from coiling in my belly, from affecting my presence of mind... Focus, focus, on her. Her needs. What she desires. Only her.

I spank her again and her entire body trembles.

Once more. Her legs buckle. She straightens, then draws herself up to her full height.

"Don't ever question me again."

She stays silent.

"Get me?"

She jerks her head.

"Say it."

"Yes."

"Yes what?"

"Yes... Sir."

"Good girl."

Her pupils dilate. Shit, she liked that. I hadn't meant to compliment her yet. She has to work for it. I have to make this challenging on her, else she'll see right through me.

"Let's get out of here."

I pivot, stalk to the door.

"Wait."

I keep walking.

"Wait, please... Sir."

I pause. "What is it?"

"You are aware that you need to get to know me first, right?"

I shoot her a glance. "What does that mean?"

She locks her fingers together, "As a Dom... You need to understand me as a person before you..."

"Before I start training you?"

She nods.

"Too bad, this is how I do it."

She frowns, tucks her elbows into her sides.

"You know you're acting like a selfish prick, don't you?"

"Took you this long to figure that out, Sweetheart?"

She brings her fingers up to her mouth, then tucks them behind her back, "So now what? I follow you?"

"Yes."

"What about my clothes, my things?"

"Leave them."

"What?"

I yawn, "Did you forget that you're mine for the next 30 days?"

"I don't get it, what do we do for this much time?"

I smirk.

She flushes.

"My, my, what a filthy mind you have, my little Gigi."

She draws herself up to her full height, "Don't call me that."

I plant my hands on my hips, "I'll call you what I want, when I want, and you'll answer to it."

She bites her lower lip and my gaze drops to the pulsing flesh. A growl rips from me, "Any more questions?"

She tips up her chin, "I'm not leaving without proper footwear."

Before I can say anything, she marches over to the shoe rack by the door, and exchanges her ballet pumps for stilettos. Images of taking her from behind when she's dressed in nothing but those heels fill my mind. Fuck.

She turns to me.

"Well?" I tilt my head.

She glances to the side, then back at me.

I draw in a breath. Patience, patience. "Out with it."

"My phone."

I follow her gaze to the device on the armrest of the only chair in the room. "What are you waiting for? Take it with you, will you?"

Half an hour later, I ease my car up to the curb in front of Selfridges.

"Wow, the place hasn't changed at all." She peers up through the window.

"Why should it? It's a hundred-year-old department store; tradition is what it's all about."

"Is that what you like?" She turns to me, "Tradition?"

"Money." I turn off the engine. "And everything it can buy. That's what I like."

"Can't fault your taste in vehicles." She runs her fingers over the dash and my cock instantly twitches.

Fuck, this reaction to her every move is crazy. I reach for the car door, "You like my chariot?"

"Chariot?" She shakes her head. "Whatever. Please don't answer that. And what's not to like?" She opens the car door on her side, "It's a macho car."

"I'm a macho man."

She blows out a breath. "I should have seen that coming." She steps out. I follow suit, zap the doors locked, then walk around to her.

"You prefer to drive yourself?" she asks.

"Always." I glance down at her. "I never trust another man with my possessions."

She brings her fingers up to her mouth, chews on a fingernail. The way her mouth sucks on her digit... Fuck me. The blood drains to my groin. How the hell do I get her to stop that, huh?

I swoop out my hand and grab her wrist. "Bad habit," I growl.

"So are you." She tosses her head.

I chuckle. "We agree on something there." I bring her hand to my lips, suck on the very same fingertip that she had placed inside her mouth.

She swallows, "Uh, can I have my hand back?"

"Never." I lower her hand, weave my fingers through hers because... Why the hell not? Then stalk into the department store.

Once inside, I release my hold on her, instantly missing how her small hand felt in mine. Soft, fragile; to be treasured and protected. Ridiculous. I prowl forward, leaving her to dawdle behind.

She glances around the aisles, the displays, then pauses. "Saint?"

I continue on.

"This is ridiculous," she mumbles.

"What did you say?" I growl.

"I meant... uh! Sir?"

My dick instantly twitches.

"You may speak."

"Where is everyone?"

"Gone."

I increase my pace.

Her footsteps speed up.

"What do you mean, gone? It's the weekend, not to mention the first week of December. The busiest time of the year for shoppers..."

"So?" I pause and she almost stumbles into my back. My fingers twitch to help her, so I tuck my arms in my sides. She scowls, then draws herself up to her full height.

"So where are the customers, the salespeople?"

"I told them I was coming."

"Ah!" Her gulp is audible. "So...so they cleared out the place?"

"Yep."

She stares, "What about the business they'll lose?"

"What about the business they'll gain from me and the rest of the Seven?"

"Right."

She marches ahead.

"Victoria."

She doesn't turn back.

"Gigi."

Her shoulders stiffen, and I can't stop my lips from quirking. So fucking prickly.

"Stop or you'll regret it."

She tosses her head, "I am regretting ever coming to you."

"Admit it. You're secretly looking forward to what I am going to do to you."

"Yeah, sure, I spend all my days and nights wondering only about that."

"I knew it."

She jerks her head around to stare at me, "Do you believe everything that feeds your ego?"

"Always."

Her gaze widens, "It's useless having a conversation with you."

I prowl toward her. "Poor Victoria, always so in control, always knows her mind and what she wants.... Or so she thinks."

She tips her head back, all the way back, "I don't think, I know."

"What you are, is too damn uptight."

She grits her teeth.

"See, that's what I mean." I whisper my knuckles over her jaw and her breath hitches. "You're too focused on containing all of that passion inside of you. You think you want to direct the course of your actions, when all along, you've been waiting for someone to come along who can force you to relinquish control."

"And I suppose you think that someone is you?"

"I don't think so." I drop my head until my lips are poised above hers. "I know so." I close my mouth over hers.

Victoria

Step away, turn away. Break this stupid sham of an arrangement or whatever the hell it is and run the hell away from him. His lips meet mine, fuse, clasp. I will not give in, will not open to him. He swipes his tongue across my mouth and goosebumps flare on my skin. He tilts his head, nibbles on my lower lip. Heat flashes low in my belly. The heat from his body swoops around me, curls into me, draws me closer, closer. He opens his mouth, sucking on mine, asking, demanding, insisting... A groan bleeds from me. I part my lips and he deepens the kiss. He simply takes. His tongue tangles with mine; he drinks from me. Fills my senses with his dark edgy scent, the hardness of his body a shield against the world. The dominance of his posture pushes down on my shoulders, holds me in place. A growl rumbles up his chest, and my nipples pebble into painful tips. My sex clenches; my toes curl. I raise my hands to his shoulders, dig my fingertips into those corded muscles—seeking, wanting. He tears his mouth from mine and steps back. Cool air assails my face, the flushed skin of my neck.

"So, I was right."

I lower my hands to my side, blink, sway. "What do you mean?"

"Your control will be mine, Victoria, " He brushes past me and I shake my head to clear it. By the time I turn around, he's striding away and toward the elevator. He stabs the button and the doors glide open. Of course, even the cage doors would obey him.

But I won't. Not if it's the last thing I do.

He steps inside, then turns, "Coming?"

As I approach him, the doors slide toward each other.

"What the hell?" My jaw drops open.

He jerks his chin up, "See you on the third floor. Don't keep me waiting."

The doors close, leaving me behind. Asshole shut the escalator doors in my face? I can't even... How dare he? Anger pulses in my veins and adrenaline laces my blood. I curl my fingers into fists... He did it. Purposely. To rile me. To get under my skin. I will not let him unnerve me. Will not allow him to break through the barriers I've put up against the world. Self-preservation. Holding onto what is mine. I won't let him in. Will never allow him to see the real me.

Oh, two can play this game. He can push. And I can pretend...to give in to him. Enough to get what I want from him: Nina's freedom, and mine. And a little bit more. A piece of myself that only belongs to me. That I'll never share with him. Yes, that is only right.

I intend to walk away from this mess with a tangible result; one that I can stake a claim on. One which no-one else—not the Mafia, not Saint—can take away from me. That is the way out. The ultimate control over my future and his, and I'll own it.

I'll have the last laugh.

I pivot, walk toward the escalators. When I reach the third floor, the same eerie emptiness greets me. Beautiful displays, mannequins with gorgeous dresses. The scent of expensive perfume lingers in the air. Jasmine, roses, and a more seductive note... Pinewood maybe? ...With a darker edge of... Chocolate? I glance around and realize that I have followed the scent up the corridor.

Counters on each side display designer clothes, sun wear, formal clothes. I reach a double door at the end, and when I touch one of the handles, the door slides open. My heart begins to race. I stop at the rack of dresses, drag my finger down the array: green, blue, pink... all colors except black. I reach the end, fingers poised over a vermillion sheath. I hesitate.

"Try it on."

I spin around and watch as the man I've come to resent steps through the door. It snicks shut behind him. The hair on my nape rises.

"Go on. It's all for you."

"For me?" My voice trembles. Hell, I hate that he has this effect on me. And after what he did earlier... Allowing the elevator doors to close in my face... I should simply leave. But what is the point? He'll simply track me down. No doubt about it. No, best not to show how much he upset me with that gesture, and I'm not sure why. It's not the worst thing he's done to me, but maybe I'd expected more from him? Maybe a more gentlemanly approach? Right. Saint may have been brought up in wealth. He may have gone to the best schools. But underneath that cultivated man-of-the-world façade, he is a rake, a man who doesn't care about worldly pretenses. He takes what he wants. No apologies. Is that what attracted me to him? Not only... It's the Mafia's mandate, of course, that I win him over. Although, I'm not sure that's going to be possible. But I can keep him occupied, take his mind off his work, his business interests, try to keep him close. And this uncomfortable friction between us can only help, right?

He crosses the floor to drop into an armchair positioned at the far end of the room.

"Don't keep me waiting, Gigi."

A shiver runs down my spine. It's the first time anyone has had a nickname for me. I've always been Victoria before this... Had insisted people call me by my full name. Saint... He'd smoothly transitioned to calling me by a completely different name and somehow it felt... Right? Doesn't matter. This is all temporary, until I have what I want. For now, I'll give the devil what he wants... Pretend; that's all you need to do.

He nods toward the space in front of him. I stiffen my spine. Head toward it.

"With the dress."

I draw in a breath, turn and snatch the beautiful material off the hangar. Soft, smooth, the dress whispers between my fingers. I dig my fingertips into the cloth, then pivot and march to the center.

I face the mirror, meet his gaze in the reflection.

His blue eyes flare. He leans back, folds one leg over the other.

"Strip."

"What?"

He grabs his ankle, holding his leg in place. "You heard me."

"You want me to take off my clothes?"

He glares at me and a frisson of anticipation grips me. He lowers his brows and my fingers tremble. I draw in a breath, hold his gaze.

"Unless you want me to..." He places his feet on the ground.

"No, I... I'll do it." I glance around for a space to put the dress.

"Drop it."

I let the fabric whisper from between my fingers. It pools in shimmering layers of crimson at my feet. I straighten. He's seen most of you already, so what does this matter? That was...in front of a crowd. This... Alone with him in a room... It feels...more intimate. Like I am putting on a show for him, which I am. Which is daunting, and damn him, also more arousing... Which is what he intended me to feel, no doubt. Asshole. He probably knows exactly how it will make me feel. Doing one more thing out of my comfort zone. One step closer to the edge... Closer to the deep darkness that laps at my mind, calls to me, pulls at me, tugs on me.

"Don't keep me waiting." His voice lowers to a hush and my nerve-endings pop. I reach for the button on the back of the dress, undo it. Tug at the zipper, which slithers down, baring the skin between the two halves.

Goosebumps flare on my skin. I sense his gaze following my gestures, as I tug one sleeve down my shoulder, then the other. The dress slithers down to pool around my ankles. I kick it out of the way.

Don't look up, don't. I glance up at the mirror and our gazes clash. His eyes are darker, deeper, like pools of desire locked in droplets of ice. His nostrils flare; his chest rises and falls. Ah! So, he isn't as impervious as I'd thought him to be either.

Holding his gaze, I reach for the straps of my bra, undo them. They whisper down my breasts, catch on my nipples. I draw in a breath and my breasts heave. The nylon slides down my arms, baring my torso completely. His fingers clench around his ankle. His jaw tics.

He jerks his chin toward my panties.

What the—! I don't need to remove them to try on the dress.

He glares at me and I shiver.

He tilts his head, I dip my fingers into the waistband of my panties, watch as his shoulders tense.

I lower the scrap of fabric down my thighs, to my ankles.

The blue in his eyes deepens until it seems black. Color flushes his skin. "Stay there."

I freeze, watch him in the mirror as he rises to his feet, approaches me. He pauses behind me. His gaze holds mine in the mirror. His big body dwarfs mine—me bent over, fingers entangled in my panties.

"Hold your ankles."

I swallow and my breathing deepens. He hasn't touched me, but he peruses my position—open, bare, my most intimate parts on display.

One side of his lips curls, "You do not want to challenge me, not now." Damn the man, and his ability to reduce me to a quivering mess.

"Do it, Gigi."

His voice slips into my skin, warms my blood, coils in those deepest, most secret places of mine, where I've never allowed anyone else. Not him either. Never. I steel my spine, curve my fingers around my ankles.

He drags a knuckle down my spine and I shudder. My knees almost give way. I must have moaned or made some incoherent cry, for he stills.

"Shh." He grips my hip to steady me. "You're doing so well, don't spoil it."

A fire lights somewhere inside of me. He praised me and insulted me in the same breath. Only Saint could do that. Simultaneous push-me and pull-me, irritate me and pleasure me.

I tip up my chin, open my mouth to speak. He dips a finger in my pussy.

I gasp. What the—? "You could have warned me, you—"

He slides his finger inside my channel. I huff. He adds two more digits. Too much, too full, he has to stop, he can't do this, he...he twists his fingers, hitting that spot deep inside. My toes curl; my scalp tingles. My entire body seems to lengthen, my hips arching up, enveloping even more of his wicked fingers.

He pulls out, only to stuff his fingers back in. A groan bubbles up my throat. I lower my head, my hair falls around my face, and I tighten my grip around my ankles. I cannot give in, cannot. He rubs his thumb on my clit and a trembling zips up my legs.

"Please..." I mumble. What am I begging for? Why am I asking him for more? Keep quiet, don't show him how much this is affecting you. How could he have found his way right through to the secret core of me? "Saint, please."

"How many?" His voice shoves through the noise in my head.

"What?"

"How many men have you had?"

I crack open my heavy eyelids, try to peer through the heavy blanket of my hair.

"Tell me, Victoria. How many have fucked you here?"

Anger flares inside, then crashes with the desire. "What's it to you?"

His muscles stiffen, tension shimmers off of his frame. "Everything about you is my business. Tell me, or so help me, I am going to pull out my fingers and—leave you aching and wanting."

I hesitate.

His fingers leave me.

My pussy spasms, needing, hurting. Empty, so empty. I cry out. "Three... you bastard. Three. Is that enough?"

"Including your husband?"

Tears prick the backs of my eyes. Fucking Saint. He had to ask that question, didn't he?

"Answer me."

"What do you think?"

"I think Adam Rhodes didn't give a bloody fuck about you," he growls.

A chuckle trembles from my lips.

"So, I'm right?" he asks.

I nod.

His gaze intensifies, "But he fucked you?"

"He...did his husbandly duties, if that's what you're asking."

His fingers tighten on my waist.

"Did you love him?" His voice is impersonal as if he's interrogating a business prospect. Cut. Dry.

Everything is so fucking black and white for him. If he only knew the choices I'd had to face.

"Did you?"

"No."

I hear him release a breath. Why should it matter to him if I'd wanted someone before him? Not that I want him either. Of course, not.

"Thank you for sharing that."

What the—? Is he being polite?

"I gave you what you wanted." The words tumble from my lips. "Are you satisfied?"

"Not yet." He brushes his knuckles past my slit.

Pinpricks of pleasure dart up my spine.

Damn him and his touch. Why is my body so damned responsive to him? Why did it have to be him who could elicit this reaction from me when no one else can?

He teases his finger into my back hole and everything inside of me tenses.

No.

No.

"Yes," he growls. "Here... How many have had you here, my impudent little wannabe sub?"

"Ah!" I stutter.

"Tell me, or I swear I'm leaving." The heat from his body recedes again.

I gasp. "Stop. I'll tell you." I sense him still.

Wait.

Wait.

I swallow. My fingers spasm. My thigh muscles bunch. If I do this, I am giving away one more part of myself. Another secret that will no longer belong to me.

Another thing he can hold over me.

Another weapon he can use against me.

"Now, Victoria."

I gulp, then squeeze my eyes shut. "No one," I whisper. "You... You'll be the first."

15

Saint

The first. The only? The fuck am I thinking? Why does it mean so much to me to mark her in a way that no one has before? I've had my share of women, certainly never expected any one of my partners to come to me untouched... So why am I asking something of her that seems so out of character? It's her. She is shattering my control. I told her that I would break her down; I hadn't counted on the impact she'd have on me. I have to get back in the lead, have to wrest back my hard-earned self-restraint. Only one way to do it.

I drop to my knees. Her entire body freezes. I lick her from her swollen nub all the way up to her star-shaped opening.

Her shoulders shake. She moans and her knees seem to give way. I swoop down, wrap my fingers around her thighs. "Hold on."

I drag my tongue up her clit, retrace the path to her back hole. A whine spills from her lips and it's my undoing. I thrust my tongue inside her channel, lick her, flick my tongue in and out of her.

Her entire body shudders and her breathing grows ragged. A trembling grips her, swoops up her legs. I don't stop. I angle my head, haul her even closer until she's riding my face. Her body tenses, her pussy clenches, and moisture beads her cunt. So fucking sweet, so soft. My dick lengthens; my groin hardens. I need to be inside her. I must. I fondle the curve of her hip, insert a thumb into her back hole.

She shudders, her thigh muscles spasm, and I recognize the giveaway sigh. She's close. So close. I curl my tongue inside her and a low keening cry emerges from her lips. My vision tunnels and my muscles bunch. Close, I am so close. I drag my mouth from her, scramble up to my feet. Pivoting, I stalk away.

"What the fuck?" Her startled exclamation follows me.

I reach the exit, shove open the door.

"Where are you going, you asshole?"

I pause, "I think it's your asshole that's pushing you to speak now."

"You filthy, horrible, monster."

The hair on my horrible neck bristles. I swerve and a wind disturbs my suit sleeve as a vase sails by. It crashes onto the floor, shatters.

I turn, sweep a wary gaze over the disheveled woman, who's walking toward me. She's managed to pull up her panties in double-quick time—impressive. Other than that, she's naked. Her tits bounce, her hips wiggle, and her dark hair flies around her face. She holds up the twin of the vase that she'd thrown earlier. I duck again...but am not that quick. The heavy artifact grazes my shoulder, before crashing to the ground.

I stumble, then right myself. I brush my sleeve. "Are you quite done?" I drawl.

She clenches her tiny fingers into fists. "I am going to kill you."

"Join the queue. You'll have a long wait, by the way."

She bares her teeth and a snarl emerges from the controlled, always put together sophisticate she'd once been. This side of Gigi... I frown... It's innervating, energizing... It's fucking sexy.

"Wanna fight?" My lips curl.

"Fuck you, Saint."

I can't stop the grin that splits my face.

She snarls.

I raise my hand, "Now, now, Tory, we can work this out."

"I hate being called Tory, fucking hate it."

O-k-a-y. "Victoria."

"I loathe my name. Stupid, prissy, old-fashioned." She walks forward, fists in front. "Are you aware of the number of stupid Posh Spice references I have had to endure?"

I blink, glance around the room. What can I use as a shield? The table... Too heavy. Besides, it would hurt her if I held it up. Come to think of it... better not move from here, best to hold my stance, look her in the eyes. Her pupils are so black they seem to have expanded, until only a circle of stormy green remains.

"It doesn't help that I look like this."

I risk a quick glance down to her perky breasts, the tiny waist, the flare of her hips and that juicy, sexy, core of hers. The pink cleft between her lower lips would be glistening, from her cum. Fuck.

My cock thickens, my belly coils... Fuck, fuck, fuck, look up, look away, before you reveal how much her presence affects you.

I squeeze the bridge of my nose, and she snarls, "You can't stand to look at me, can you?"

I snap my eyelids open, "Now, that's not what this is about."

"You fucking hate my body," she huffs.

I tilt my head, "Not true."

"My tits are too big.

My fingers clench. "They're gorgeous," I growl.

"My waist is too tiny." She pouts.

"It's fucking beautiful." I furrow my brow.

"My hips are too large," she wails.

I pretend to study her curves, then scratch my chin, "Now that you mention it..."

She opens and shuts her jaw, then charges at me, "Why you jackass, you rotten excuse for a man...you."

She flings herself at me, and I take the full impact of her weight. She throws her fists, catches me in the side, against my rib cage. She peppers me with her blows. I don't react. I brace myself, allow her to hit me. "I hate you." Slam. "Bloody loathe you." She snaps her forehead into my chest. I wince... on her behalf. That had to hurt. She raises her arm again, then drops it to her side. "You're dreadful. How could you do that to me? How could you...?" Her shoulders shudder and her tiny body sways. Wetness blots my shirt. I glance down at the back of her head.

"Gigi?"

She shakes her head, her crying intensifying. A hot sensation stabs at my chest. I scoop her up, cuddle her against my body. She's so fucking light, so perfectly formed. Why the fuck hadn't I noticed that before? Because I'd been too focused on myself. On what I wanted from her, on trying to figure out why the hell she'd come to me with that crazy proposition of hers... And I will find out... But meanwhile, I am going to hold her, until this storm she's found herself in blows over.

Her sobs increase in strength.

Shit, the fuck am I supposed to do now?

I've had women cry out in passion, weep when I've brought them to orgasm, wail when I've fucked the hell out of them. But this...weeping woman... One I've begun to appreciate more than any other female in my life... Holdonabloodys second. I've barely spent any time with her, so why does she affect me so much?

Do I understand her better than anyone else outside of the Seven?

Yes.

Fuck, what does that mean?

Nothing. I can have girlfriends... No, not like that... I mean, girls who are my friends. Yeah... No, she isn't a friend. She is... Something... Somebody I am going to take on as a sub, remember? Yeah, got it. I cuddle her close and she wraps her arm around me. I stalk over to the chair I'd vacated earlier. Sit down with her in my lap.

I rock her and pat her hair, but her crying only seems to grow louder.

Shit, shit, shit.

The band around my heart squeezes. Gotta do something. What does one do to quieten someone who's crying? I rock her back and forth, back and forth. She digs her fingers into my shirt, her nails digging through, into my skin. She's still weeping...but it's not as intense as earlier, right?

I continue to rock her, hum under my breath. She snuffles. Her crying lessens. I hum again...then croon the song.

She hiccups, then falls silent.

"Your pitch is off-key, by the way." She snuffles.

"I'm tone deaf," I reply cheerfully. But at least she's stopped the waterworks. Man, that was close.

She peers up at me from under her eyelashes, "Did you sing—"

"While my Guitar Gently Weeps by The Beatles?" I crack my neck. "Seems that way."

"Why?" She asks.

"It worked, didn't it?" I scowl, "Couldn't stand by and watch you have a bloody meltdown."

She huffs, "I meant, why The Beatles?"

"Why not The Beatles?"

"You hate The Beatles."

"I hate tears even more, besides, when a naked woman—"

"—Almost-naked," she protests.

I chuckle, "Almost naked woman throws herself at me... I had to catch you. I couldn't have you hurting yourself."

Her gaze flickers.

I fit my knuckles under her chin, so she has no choice but to glance at me.

"Only I am allowed to do that, Gigi."

She swallows.

"No one else can hurt you, except me," I lower my chin, "you feel me?"

Her pupils dilate. Her chest heaves, then she nods. "I understand... Sir."

My dick hardens at that. Shit, what am I doing, cuddling her? I fucking hummed a song for her? Bloody-fucking-hell!

I lean forward and she presses a hand into her chest, "It's okay, Saint, I won't tell."

I frown.

"I won't tell the Seven or anyone else. It's our secret."

"What the fuck you talking about?"

She darts me a look from under those sooty eyelashes, "That you secretly have a thing for The Beatles."

"I don't have a 'thing' for those knobheads."

"Yet you knew the words to their song."

"Who doesn't?"

She stares at me.

"What?" I scowl.

"Not everyone knows the correct words to that particular song."

Shit, is it getting hot in here?

"Admit it." She sits up in my lap.

"No."

"You secretly like them... You think it's 'uncool'—" she makes air quotes with her fingers. "—to say so."

I set my jaw, "I don't."

"It won't take away from your macho, hotter-than-hell image."

I lean back in the seat. "You think I'm macho?"

"Umm." She shuffles her feet.

"Answer me."

"Maybe..." She chews on her lower lip and my gaze traces the action. Bare lips with all the lipstick bitten off. Mascara trails down her cheeks, her eyelashes are spiky from the tears she'd shed, she's not wearing clothes...

And yet, she's trying to coerce me into revealing something more about myself. It's not a big deal...but...if it means so much to her, hell if I'm going to give it to her so easily....

"Yes or no, Gigi?"

She throws up her hands. "Fine, yes, you're macho as hell, fucking sexy, the most virile man I've ever met."

"Don't forget overpoweringly charismatic."

She draws in a breath.

"And an asshole."

"You mean, alphahole?" I smirk.

She tosses her head.

"And dominant."

"Your ego is so large that—"

"It's bigger than Beatlemania at its height?" I smirk.

She blinks, "See?" She stabs a finger in my chest. "So, you admit they were a phenomenon?"

"So were The Stones, and they had a fuck-ton more attitude."

She raises her shoulders, "Too rebellious."

"Too conformist." I lower my chin. "Goody-goody on the outside and bitchy, on the inside."

"Over the top, bad boys, too much sex, too much fast living, too much everything."

"Exactly what you secretly covet."

She scoffs.

"Admit it. What you need to loosen up, is a whole lotta fucking." I raise an eyebrow.

"Speak for yourself." She gathers her hair to one side. Her tits jiggle again, and my dick instantly perks up. Shit, is there a direct connection between her sensual actions and a particular part of my anatomy?

I adjust her position so she's straddling me. "Tell me what you feel for me," I say, "and if I'm satisfied, I might let on what I think about that old-fashioned, overrated, ridiculous boy band."

"Boy band?" She splutters. "You called them a boy band?"

"I changed my mind." I stab my tongue in my cheek, "They were a bunch of dicks who hated each other..."

Her shoulders stiffen.

"Oh, and Lennon was especially a douche-dick."

She clutches her fingers at her sides as twin spots of color appear on her cheeks.

Hell, this is more fun than sitting in a business meeting negotiating the crap out of my opposing party.

"And The Beatles copied The Stones."

"The Beatles copied them? The Beatles?" She sputters, "Your timelines are all warped."

I lean in close enough for our breaths to mingle, "Are you aware that you get this cute little line between your eyebrows when you go all maniac?"

"I'm not bloody Flashdance," she huffs.

I laugh.

"Nice one, Rhodes."

"That's not my surname." She slaps a palm over her mouth.

I frown, "What's that supposed to mean?"

"N...nothing." She tries to scramble off my lap, and I grab her shoulders to hold her in place.

"Explain."

"There's nothing to explain."

"Yes, there is, what you said—"

"Was a slip of the tongue." She tips up her chin.

"You're a bad liar."

"Not lying."

"You've been heaping on the bullshit from the moment we met."

"What?" She frowns, "What do you mean?"

"You went out of your way to catch my attention, you led me on, capitalized on the chemistry between us. You made me an offer you knew would pique my interest."

"Not my fault you found me a challenge," she huffs.

"You're more than that for me."

She freezes.

Shit, shit, shit, hadn't meant to say that. Talk about a slip of the tongue, huh?

She swallows, lowers her head, "You're not making sense."

"It's simple. You wanted to become my submissive, but I've changed my mind."

She pales... "B...but we had an arrangement."

"Consider that void."

"You can't."

"I can."

"So what...does that mean?" She glances around her, "All this, bringing me on a shopping trip and stuff... Wh...why did you do it?"

"Felt like the thing."

"You wanted to catch me off balance?"

I peruse her features. She's quick, all right. Not that I had expected anything less... Not after the way she'd maneuvered herself under my skin in such a short period of time.

She wriggles around on my lap. My cock jerks in my pants.

Her breath catches. Her pupils dilate.

I smirk. "No denying that our bodies communicate with each other on a completely different level."

"That's the cause of all this...this mess." She holds herself rigid, not moving an inch. Her shoulders knot; her eyebrows twist together. "I think it's time to put an end to this...stupid arrangement. Don't you think?"

"I agree."

She opens and shuts her mouth. "You...you do?"

I nod, "I have a completely different arrangement in mind."

I peel back my lips.

She pales. Her throat moves as she swallows.

"What?" Her voice quakes... "What is it?"

"Marry me."

What did the female giraffe ask the handsome male giraffe?

Answer: Wanna neck with me?

Victoria

After that pronouncement he'd shoved me off his lap... Literally. I'd fallen on my arse again. It was getting to be a habit around him, that. When he wasn't spanking me, I seemed to be constantly swept off of my feet—pun intended. I can't remember the last time I'd gotten this physical so many times in a day and I'm not talking about down and dirty sex... Not that I'd had any of that either.

He'd brought me to the edge again, so close, so near to exploding all over that wicked tongue of his, and then he'd pulled back. He'd denied me the orgasm. He'd left me angry, frustrated, horny as hell... and I'd lost it. I'd wanted him like a bitch in heat... An addict who craved one last teeny tiny hit... He'd known exactly how to throw me off kilter. I'd lost my equilibrium. I had stumbled and made a mistake and he had pounced.

Marriage?

I'd assumed he'd meant a fake marriage...but he'd clarified it would be real, all right. I'd be tied to him, unable to escape him. Bound to him. I couldn't divorce him...not for a year. And during that time...he'd train me as his sub. At his convenience. "Of course," I snort. Everything is about him. About what he wants. How he decided to change the tone of our relationship with a flick of those thick, elegant fingers. I huff. Straighten my shirtdress down my hips.

It's crumpled, but hell, not like there is anyone in this entire godforsaken building to notice.

I could refuse him, of course. I haven't accepted his proposal yet. I could turn him down. You won't. You can't.

This entire arrangement suits my needs even more. It is a bondage from hell. I squeeze my fingers at my sides. Don't have a choice, but to go through with it. Besides... I want it. I want to be a real wife. I want to belong to someone, to have someone to call mine... Soon...very soon, I'll have the real thing. Until then... If I have to make do with Saint... Face it, it isn't a hardship, the things he does to me. The response he elicits from every pore of my traitorous body...is everything. It is what I have always hoped to have one day... If I can get even a small portion of this crazy, weird chemistry that traps us and turns everything about us to ashes? So be it. I will burn.

But I'll ensure he shatters too.

I may be going down, but I'll be taking Saint with me.

He changed the rules completely, but if he thinks I am going to back off now? He has another think coming.

He doesn't know me.

I swipe the hair back from my face, survey my flushed features. Hell, I don't know myself anymore.

I am losing perspective. Everything I had fought for, what I had thought I'd held dear to me, all of it gone... Thanks to one overbearing, over-the-top, Beatles-hating, complete wanker of an alpha male. My insides clench and sweat beads my forehead. What am I going to do? What can I do? My heart begins to race. I need to get out of here and into the open air. I march to the door, out into the corridor. My footsteps echo. I glance around at the brightly lit aisles, the racks of clothes, the displays. All bloody creepy, without the sales people.

The asshole didn't even wait for me. He'd merely told me to take my time to adjust my appearance and he'd left. That's it... No word, no explanation about when we'll meet next. Nothing.

I walk up the corridor toward the escalators. The hair on my forearms rises. I am alone, aren't I?

I glance around. Nothing...except the bright lights, the rows upon rows of designer wear. I hurry my pace. Footsteps sound nearby. What the—? I break into a run, reach the escalator, race down it. My heart begins to thud.

Adrenaline laces my blood. Who could it be? I have time to deliver on my part of the deal. I am doing everything I can about it. I reach the second floor, the first. By the time I reach the ground floor, sweat beads my forehead. I clutch my bag close, reach for my phone and pull it out... Who should I call? Amelie? Summer...? Saint... No...not him. He'd simply gloat about how helpless I am. I am just scaring myself; it happens. Especially after everything I've been through over the last few weeks.

I reach the exit doors, push them and burst onto the sidewalk. A man passing by eyes me curiously. I glance away, stagger toward the bench on the sidewalk. I need to catch my breath, consider my options. I sink down onto the platform, hunch my shoulders. Think, think. I can deliver my end of the bargain. By marrying Saint, I'll be even closer to my target. All I have to do is go through it, pretend... No... No pretense here. I feel something for him... I have from the moment I'd first seen him. Something primal, something that makes me feel alive. And I want more of it. I want to luxuriate in it. I wanted to rip out my soul, fill myself with him... Use him for my own selfish needs, before the inevitable happens, and I have to walk away from him. I sigh. I have no choice in that... I simply have to make the most of the cards I've been dealt.

I straighten my shoulders. Pluck my compact out of my purse, snap it open. That's it, Victoria... Calm, composed. A survivor. You can do this. You can. I pull out a tube of my favorite lipstick, twist, and raise it to my lips.

A hand touches my shoulder. I jerk and the lipstick smears. I glance to the side, "Wha—?"

"Victoria?" The elderly woman smiles at me. Her greying hair is pulled back in a sleek chignon; creases fan out from the sides of her eyes. "Are you okay, my dear?"

"What? Yes." I frown, "Do I know you?"

"I'm Meredith, I'm..."

"Assistant to the Seven?"

Her features light up. "Indeed. We met when you came to the 7A offices?"

"Of course. I remember you now." I glance past her at the pedestrians. Pinpricks of awareness dot my neck. "What are you doing here?"

"I was passing by and saw you."

"Right." I glance back at my reflection in the compact mirror, then scrounge around in my bag.

"Here." She offers me a tissue.

"Thanks." I use it to fix my face, then snap the compact shut.

"So, you happened to be here the same time as me?"

"Coincidences." She raises her shoulder. "People think London is a big city, but really, it's a village."

"Hmm." I slip my compact into my bag. "I'm afraid I need to be somewhere else."

"I'm afraid I can't let you leave yet, Victoria." She smiles, her eyes twinkling up at me.

I frown. "Why is it that all of you seem to speak in such riddles?"

"Us?"

"Saint, and everyone connected with him."

"Perhaps you're finding hidden meanings because you're playing in them yourself?"

I pale and the world tilts around me.

"Victoria, what's wrong?"

Her voice seems to come from far away. There's a roaring in my ears. My vision tunnels. Games. Playing. Hidden meanings. Not what it seems.

"Victoria?" A hand grips my fingers. "My dear, you're freezing."

My teeth chatter. "It's just... The weather... It's gone cold suddenly."

"That's London for you, my dear. Still, I like it best when it's raining." She rubs my freezing hand between her warmer ones. Her flesh is smooth, unmarked. No calluses. Such well-preserved skin. Wonder what hand cream she uses. A chuckle rolls up my throat. Am I getting hysterical? I bite the inside of my cheek, swallow down the bile that laces my tongue.

"Better?" She peers into my face.

"Y...yes." I meet her gaze. "Thank you."

"Come on, let's get some food into you. Have you had lunch?"

"N...no."

"There's a lovely spot around the corner, that serves the best afternoon tea.

"But."

"No buts. Saint would never forgive me, if I left you here, on your own."

I twist my lips. "Oh, I don't think Saint would care either way."

"I think you'd be surprised, my dear." Her eyes gleam.

I frown, "What are you not telling me?"

She laughs. "I'm not hiding anything from you, I promise."

Where have I heard that before?

"You're right to be this cautious, but I am not the enemy. In fact," she rises to her feet, "I am on your side."

"You are?"

She holds out her hand, I take it and she pulls me up. "Most definitely." She begins to walk. I keep pace.

"Anyone who'll bring Saint to heel gets my vote... And when it happens to be the right kind of woman who can stand up to him, then trust me, I'll do anything in my power to ensure that the two of you are happy."

I stumble over a crack in the pavement.

She grabs my arm, "You all right?"

"Of course." I glance up at her, "But you have the wrong idea here."

"Do I?"

I nod, "Most definitely."

We take the zebra crossing across Oxford Street, then turn right.

"It's not like that between me and Saint."

"Then how is it?"

I peer sideways at her. Is she making fun of me? Maybe having a laugh at my expense. She meets my gaze, her own clear. Her features are composed into an expression which seems to portray... Curiosity...? A slight concern, perhaps. Can I trust her? I raise my shoulders. Does it matter? I have nothing to lose... I have come this far... I only have to see things through, and if she can help me, well, then why not?

"He asked me to marry him."

Her gaze doesn't falter. No surprise on her face.

"You knew?"

She turns her head, navigates us around a couple loaded with shopping bags. "I had hoped, though I have to admit, I hadn't thought Saint would have the balls to pop the question."

I choke.

She chuckles. "I'm a plain talking kind of gal."

"I can see that."

"Get it from my mama. She raised eight of us, and she suffered no fools."

"Right."

"Comes in handy when you have to herd the Seven and their friends along in the right direction. Know what I mean?"

I snort, "I am getting an idea who actually wears the pants in 7A."

She leans in close, "Let's keep that to ourselves, huh? Our secret."

A warmth spreads in my chest. "You bet."

"So, back to you and Saint," she pauses, then turns right and away from the bustling High Street. "You were saying?"

I wasn't...but fine...if she wants to know what my answer was. "I haven't said yes...yet."

"Are you going to?"

"Should I?"

"Are you asking my opinion?"

I turn to her, "I am."

"I think you should take your time about it."

I jerk my head toward her, "You mean...?"

She nods, "He needs you more than you realize."

"He doesn't depend on anyone." I bite the inside of my cheek.

"He wants you in his life."

"His asking me to marry him...? It's a trap," I insist.

She pauses, turns to me, "Is he trapping you or himself?"

"I don't know."

"Saint doesn't do anything unless he's completely sure of it."

"He's doing this to get revenge."

"For what?"

"For..." Should I tell her? Should I? "For crawling under his skin, for distracting him... I don't know." I rake my fingers through my hair. "He wants to punish me."

"And would that be so bad?"

I blink. "Are you implying what I think you are?"

"Don't let my age and gray hair distract you."

My mouth opens and closes... "You mean...you are...into the same lifestyle as the Seven?"

"I've known them since they were boys. They've been through a lot, each of them... They've each found their ways to cope. And while I don't necessarily condone it... I realize it's one way of coming to terms, to find balance in their lives."

"That doesn't answer my question."

"Which was?"

"Uh... Are you into the S&M stuff as well?"

"Maybe I am..." She raises her shoulder. "Maybe I am not. What difference does it make? After all, it's not me who has a marriage proposal from someone who means more to me than I am letting on."

She strolls forward.

I turn, follow in her wake. Jeez... What the hell was that all about? What does she even mean? Is she that privy to the private lives of the Seven...and their friends? Does she know their associates? Business partners...? Their enemies? I swallow and my heart begins to race. Was I wrong to confide her? Maybe Saint didn't want me to tell anyone about his proposal. But then, he hadn't mentioned otherwise. Why would he even want to marry me? What does he get out of it? A willing slave...yes...but there are so many other women out there who would be more than happy to oblige. Why me?

She comes to a stop in front of a beautiful heritage building. I glance up to find the elegant lettering that states, Claridge's.

She walks up it, "You coming?"

"This is what you meant by an elegant little spot?" I blink. It's only one of the most iconic hotels in the world.

"Oh, they have the best tea and sandwiches, and after the morning you've had, it's only fair I treat you, right?"

I follow her up and into the plush reception area. The liveried man by the door does a double take. "Meredith!"

"Dorian, how are you?"

Dorian walks forward, takes Meredith's hand and kisses her knuckles.

"Fit as a fiddle, my dear. And who is this charming young woman?" the built-like-a-tank man asks. Doorman, my foot. Clearly, he's there to take care of any trouble that erupts. Is there going to be trouble? My heart begins to race.

"This is Victoria."

Dorian tilts his head. "Ah! Good to meet you." He shakes my hand, with a half bow, then I am treated to the hand-kissing as well. He steps back, beckons us to proceed. "Your guests are waiting, Meredith. Best seat in the house for you ladies."

I trail after Meredith, "Guests? Did he say guests?"

She waves a hand in the air, "It was time to call in the reinforcements. Such devious planning to take on one of the Seven needs strong English Breakfast Tea, girlfriends, and of course, cake. Lots of cake."

Half an hour later, I lean back, "I'm stuffed." I pat my lips with my napkin.

Amelie pushes the tiered cake stand toward me. "But you haven't had the scones yet."

I stare at the shortcake-like baked goodies. A groan wells up my throat, "But—"

"You must." Summer plops one of the rectangular delights onto my plate.

"I can't."

"You can do this." Amelia's lips quirk.

Jace's wife, Sienna leans forward, pats me on the shoulder. "It's good for you."

I glance around at the faces of the women I've come to count as family. I've known them for only a few weeks, and yet, each of them has gone out of her way to make me feel welcome here. They had accepted me into their little circle...no questions asked. How rare is that?

"If you insist..."

"We do." Meredith nods.

"If Karma were here, she'd say 'if you incest.'" Amelie snickers.

Summer chuckles, "That girl has a sense of humor that would be more in keeping with the sensibilities of a teenage boy."

"Such non-sequiturs." Amelie tosses her head. "Honestly, she is going to get into trouble for it someday."

Summer's features firm, "What the hell is she doing in Sicily anyway? Why can't she come back? I can't help but get the feeling that she's not telling the entire truth."

My pulse thuds at my temples. "But she is fine, right?" I pat some clotted cream and strawberry jam onto my plate.

Summer's forehead furrows. "She's been messaging me, but..."

"But?"

"The messages are not like her. I mean, she tells me that she's okay, and that, in itself is weird. No jokes, no puns, no sarcasm." She looks around the table. "Have you ever known Karma to speak without resorting to some underhanded acerbic quote?"

The others shake their head.

"Maybe... Uh, it's the man she's with?" I slice the scone, then lather some of the cream onto the flaky surface, followed by a dab of jam. "Perhaps he's changing her?" I bite into the scone.

Amelie quirks her eyebrow, "Is Saint changing you?"

The bite of scone goes down the wrong way. I cough.

Summer hands me a glass of water and I down it.

"So, what's the latest between the two of you?" Isla pipes up.

I place the glass back on the table, then reach for the rest of the scone.

"These are good."

"Don't change the topic," Amelie pouts.

"Let the girl have some tea." Meredith pours me a cup. "Milk?"

"I like it black."

She hands me the cup. I sip from it and the slightly acrid, bitter yet sensual taste of tea fills my senses. Almost as potent as his scent. The man who has turned my world upside down. I glance up, to find five faces turned in my direction. "What?"

"You're falling for him, huh?" Summer's brow furrows.

"No." I place the high-grade china carefully back in the saucer. Then survey the features of my friends. "I am already in love with him."

"Oh," Amelie's jaw slackens. Then she snaps her mouth shut, leans forward. "He'll hurt you, girl."

My shoulders slump. Correction. He's already wounded me in a way he'll never know. Just not as much as I am going to hurt him. But I have no choice. I peer up at her. Should I tell her? I take in the assembled women.

"You can trust us with anything. You know that, right?" Meredith's soft voice interrupts my thoughts.

I glance at her, then look away.

I scan their faces, "Why is it that all of you are so welcoming? You don't even know me."

"Oh, but I do." Summer's lips kick up in a smile. "It wasn't long ago that I was in your position. You see me and Sinclair and you think it was all roses and shit from day one?"

I shuffle my feet, "Guess not. I mean when I saw the two of you at the wedding, the tension between the two of you was palpable. But then you both seemed to have worked things out."

"We did." She chuckles. "It wasn't easy."

"I'm sure."

"I was lucky I had the support of these wonderful women." She looks around at the group. "It's tough doing this on your own. You haven't had it easy, V."

Tell me about it.

"I want to extend our support to you... If you'll take it." She touches my shoulder.

"We'd love to help you." Amelie takes my hand.

"You bet," Isla adds.

"We have a vested interest in this. There can be no better woman than you to deliver Saint his comeuppance," Meredith says.

A lump of emotion blocks my throat. Tell them, tell them everything. Come clean. This could be your last chance.

It'll put your life in danger.

It could save Saint from ruin.

I open my mouth, but I'm stopped by a familiar voice, "Why, Victoria, what a surprise to see you here."

I turn. My face pales. "You?" I swallow down the bile that laces my throat.

The tall man comes to a stop on the other side of the group. His gaze bores into me, in his eyes a warning.

"Who're you?" Amelie glowers at him.

He tilts his head, "Hello Tory." He smiles.

Fuck, fuck, fuck. My vision narrows, the band around my chest tightening. This can't be happening. Not here, not now. Not when I had been so close to finding a way out.

I shake my head, try to speak, but the words die.

"Victoria, you okay?" Summer whispers.

Meredith glances at the man, then back at me. My breathing catches while my hands and legs seem to grow numb. I can't move, can't say anything.

Can't do anything but watch as she rises to her feet. "You must be a friend of Victoria's..."

"Indeed." Antonio's smile widens. "You don't mind if I borrow her for a second do you?"

*Look in my face, I am somebody; Look at my back, I am nobody. What am I?
Answer: A mirror*

Saint

"Hit me, motherfucker." I swing with my gloved fist. Arpad ducks. I stumble. Straighten, then pivot and rush toward him. He sidesteps me. I rush forward, slamming into the ropes that demarcate the boxing ring. Using the elasticity to brace myself, I turn, shake my head.

"Wanker," I growl.

Arpad snickers. "Speak for yourself."

He slams one gloved fist into the other. "Tired already? Heard you had trouble with your performance with some woman the other day. You losing your touch, motherfucker?"

I bare my lips. First, that slip of a woman had made me lose control completely. Now, this tosser actually thinks he can defeat me? "I've never lost a fight with you before."

"Always a first time." He hunches his shoulders, takes his stance. "You going to attack or are you going to yammer all day like a pussy?"

"The fuck?" Anger claws my insides. It's not at my douchebag of a friend, who's grinning like the joke's on me...which it is... I mean, I am not that far up my own arse that I don't see the signs. Coming undone around a woman while trying to figure out what the hell her game is and drawing a blank every single time? Not advisable. Especially when, clearly, she doesn't share the same feelings I have for her... Hold on. Hold... The fuck... On...

Feelings?

Who the fuck talks about feelings?

There is none of that here. This is pure and simple, a challenge I took on... And purely because she intrigues me. And yeah, she had belonged to the motherfucker who had ruined our lives... And he is dead... But so what? Doesn't mean I can't make him pay by owning the woman who had been his wife. Possession is 9/10ths of the law, or what-fucking-ever that means. There. I have admitted it to myself. It's a chance to get some retribution for what was done to me and the rest of the Seven. That is the only reason I had embarked on this crazy mission. That's all.

"You okay, Saint?" Arpad frowns.

"The fuck you going on about, dickhead?"

"Just," he rolls his shoulders, "you were mumbling to yourself."

"I wasn't."

"Yep." He nods, "So, it's true then."

"Do I even want to know what you are yodeling on about?"

"You tell me."

"Nothing to confess... And PS, the last time I checked, you weren't the priest among us."

"But I am the best to forgive your sins, considering nothing you say or do could ever shock me." He leans forward on the balls of his feet. "After all, with Jace and Sinclair out of the picture, you and I head up the list of most-wanted felons of the carnal kind."

"When it comes to pleasures of the flesh, I'm ahead of both of you," a new voice chimes in.

I jerk my head as Weston enters the room.

"Too bad you don't fight," I rub the back of my neck, "else it would have been satisfying taking you both on at the same time."

"You know I can't get in the ring. Have to save my fingers," he flexes his digits, "for important procedures."

I smirk, "Is that the operation theater or the theater of operations you're talking about?"

"Both," he chuckles. "So you have some of your faculties left about you?"

I throw up my hands, "What the hell are you two nattering on like gossiping women about? I—"

My neck snaps back. "Fuck." I reel back from Arpad's blow. The world tilts. I glance up from my prone position on the floor of the ring, to meet Arpad's snickering expression.

I spit out blood, "Fucker."

"My pleasure." He holds out his arm and when I take it, he hauls me to my feet. My ears ring; pain fills the cavity behind my eyes. I shake my head to clear it. "Asshole." I train my gaze between the two grinning idiots.

"Now that we have that out of the way..." Arpad uses his teeth to undo the straps on the gloves.

"So..." He turns to me, "What's gotten your knickers in such a twist, that you went down in the first round?"

"None of your business." I strip off my own gloves, drop them to my feet.

"Oh, but it is." Weston steps into the ring.

I glance up as they close in on me.

"What's this?" I scowl, "An intervention?"

"You bet." Damian hangs over the ropes.

"The fuck you doing here, rockstar?"

"Heard you were having a moment." He grins.

I crack my neck. "So what, you flew in to gloat?"

"Of course." The light glints off Damian's golden blonde hair. "I was between concerts. What better way to use my down time, than to be around to witness another epic fall?" He waggles his eyebrows.

I roll my shoulders, "Sorry to disappoint, ol' chap, but you were misinformed."

"Oh?"

"You mean you didn't shut down all of Selfridges to pick out the wardrobe for your woman."

I choke.

"Personally," Damian snickers.

"By the way, while you were at it, did you choose a ring?" Weston trains a glance in my direction, his countenance all serious-like.

"Do you guys have nothing better to do than trade gossip?"

"When it comes to you," Sinclair prowls forward, "there's nothing better."

I scowl at him. "The fuck are you doing here?"

"Edward's been delayed," Sinclair drawls. "The Father had to tend to an emergency with his flock, but he's here in spirit."

"Shit, that's a terrible pun, Sin."

He laughs, "It's the environment." He glances around the space, "Why you can't use the gym at one of your fancy hotels, I don't understand. For a man who loves rare £400,000 smoke sticks, your choice of venue to get the shit beaten out of you, sucks."

"What's wrong with it?" I glance around the shabby-chic environment.

Jace had bought the building next to the Claridge's, then left the run-down gym as-is.

I like it because, well... Occasionally, it's an interesting experience to slum it. Also, it's the one place I can count on finding someone who can hold their own against me. Men who have their own devils to defeat.

"It has character, you gotta admit," Arpad grins. "Besides, it's growing on me."

"Don't laugh too soon, dipshit. It's a fluke that you won today."

"The first of many, no doubt."

"Wanna go another round?"

"Only after Saint confesses." Weston claps me on the shoulder, "Come on, man. I have too much invested in this."

"The fuck you talking about?"

"We may have bet a million," he chuckles.

"Or two." Arpad folds his arms over his chest. "You did it then? You took her on as your sub?"

"Nope." I glance around at their faces. "I asked her to marry me."

Silence, then Sinner doubles over in laughter. "And you made fun of me for doing the same?" He chuckles, then laughs louder.

Weston holds out a hand.

Arpad glowers, "Don't have a check book, nor a pen..."

"You don't need either." Weston pulls out his phone from his pocket, swipes the screen, then hands it over to Arpad. "Key in your password, ol'chap."

Arpad punches in his numbers.

"Jesus F'ing Christ. I can't believe this shit." I stalk over to the opposite side of the ring. "That's it, I am outta here."

"Hold on, Saint," Arpad smirks.

"Don't leave us hanging now," Sinner chortles.

"Can't believe you're being such a pussy," Weston's voice stops me. "I mean, if you're afraid of the woman..."

I turn.

Weston raises his hands, "If you're in love or some shit, you can tell us."

I scowl, "Back the fuck up."

"Enlighten us then?" Weston grins.

"You remember when Sin here decided to fake a marriage with Summer?"

Sinclair scowls, "That was to lure her father out into the open."

I motion with my hand.

"The father who had a connection to the Mafia..." Weston rubs the back of his neck. "After whose death... Sinclair realized his true feelings."

"He married Summer, they lived happily after." Arpad drawls, as he removes his boxing gloves. "The fucking end."

"And blah-fucking-blah, yes; but what about the Mafia?" I undo the Velcro strip on one boxing glove, and take it off, then the other.

"We're tracking them down." Weston leans forward, "The only clue we have is the name Adam Rhodes offered before he died."

"Which we aren't sure is a lead or the mumblings of a man doped out on painkillers." Arpad rocks back on his heels.

"He was on his deathbed, so one would think there was some significance to what he said," Sinclair muses, stroking his chin.

"He mentioned a Byron and a Capo," Damian glances around the group.

I grunt, "Then, Sinclair and I got messages from an anonymous source who knew our phone numbers, and quoted Byron. There's something else."

Sinclair stiffens. Weston drums his fingers on his chest.

"I received a USB with a video. It was dropped off in an unsigned envelope to my office."

All of them turn to me.

"When?" Weston scowls.

"Right after Sterling's wedding." I rub the back of my neck.

"Why didn't you tell us about this before?" Sinner growls.

"I am telling you now," I grunt.

"And?" Damian asks, "What did it contain?"

I step through the ropes, snatch up my phone, then straighten.

The guys crowd around and I play the video I'd downloaded from the USB.

Arpad swears, "That's the first evidence we have of that bastard."

"Considering we were blindfolded all through the incident—" Weston's voice tails off.

"Fucking, fuck." Damian growls.

I stare at the back of the man—the one whose voice has haunted my nightmares for so long. My pulse rate ratchets up.

"This is... significant." Weston drums his fingers on his chest. "It could help us make real headway in tracking down those bastards."

"Which is why I engaged a private detective to run with it." I widen my stance.

"The same one who's checking up on Victoria?" Weston straightens.

"About that..." I roll my shoulders. "There's a connection between her and the Mafia."

"No." Arpad frowns.

"Yep," A headache drums at my temples. "She was sent with Rhodes for the explicit purpose getting close to us."

"And...?" Weston growls.

"And," I glance around the men, "that's all I know so far."

Sinclair swears. Damian lowers his chin.

Weston and Arpad watch me with varying expressions of incredulity.

"Clearly, you need a better investigator," Arpad growls.

"You happen to know her, by the way." I tilt my head.

Arpad stiffens, "Is it...? It can't be..."

"Karina," I nod. "Weston recommended her, and she's a trusted friend of Jace's."

He swears under his breath, "A bloody nuisance is what she is."

I lower my chin, "She's trustworthy. That's what matters."

"You're evading the issue at hand again." Weston moves toward me. "If I didn't know better, I'd think you're worried that you are in over your head."

I toss my phone at Sinner who snatches it up from the air.

I turn to Weston, "Pick up the gloves if you dare, Doc." I beckon at him. "Happy to go another round."

"You know I don't fight with my hands," Weston frowns. "I need to protect them."

"Maybe you're afraid I'd beat you?" I step back into the ring.

"I'm a surgeon, man." He blinks. "It's not a bloody excuse. And I can whip your arse with my hands tied behind my back."

"Oh?" I bounce on the balls of my feet, "Less talking, more fighting."

"Oh, I'll be doing more than that, you bloody twit." Weston steps into the ring, "I'm going to dislocate your jaw, finish what Arpad started." He folds his arms behind his back. "And without using my fists."

"Living dangerously, Doc?" I smirk.

He bends his head and rushes me.

I duck, then sweep his legs out from under him. He goes down, rolls, then springs up and rushes me. I evade him, dance over to the other side. "Come on, Doc. Show me what you've got."

Weston growls, takes a step forward, when a whistle pierces the air.

I jerk my head around. "Edward?"

The Father crosses the floor to the ring, then jumps up onto the platform. "Getting a little tired of refereeing the brawls between you boys." He frowns. "What are you guys, ten?"

"Hold on." I crack my neck, "Not my fault the wanker here decided to challenge me."

"Bet you were the one to push him into throwing the first hit, when you know that, as a surgeon, he holds back from getting involved in fights of any kind," Edward retorts.

"Yeah," I blow out a breath.

"And Weston, you should know better than indulging this spoilt brat here."

"Spoilt brat...?" I scowl. "Hold on there."

Edward glares at me and I firm my lips.

Of the Seven of us, Edward is the one who'd gone all the way to the dark side...then found light... Hell, if he turns any more pious, I'll hear angels singing whenever he walks in, which isn't to say I don't see the halo around his head right now. My point being... Oh, yeah, when the Father speaks, all of us Seven, and many of our friends and associates, listen.

"Sorry," I hold up a hand.

"Not me you should be apologizing to."

"Right." I turn to Weston, "Apologies and all that, no offense meant."

Weston drags his fingers through his hair, "None taken, you piece of shit."

"Twat," I smirk.

"Jerkhole," he grins.

"Get a room, you two," Arpad spreads his arms along the ropes.

"Nah," Weston lowers his chin, "What would Victoria say to that?"

"None of your business," I turn on him.

"Shit, you were right, Arpad." He shakes his head, "The boy's in love."

"I'm not, you twerps." I crack my neck, "I am going to say this only once, so you all had better listen up.

"Of course, it had to happen to Saint next," Sinclair teases.

I glower at him.

He raises his hands, "Go on, Saint, what's your plan then?"

I scan the faces of the others. My friends...as close as I'll get to having brothers...not that there's any blood connection between us... Well, if you don't count the blood that was spilt during the time we'd been kidnapped and held together. The longest days of my life... And when you go through an experience like that together... Well, it changes you. It unites you in ways you don't need to always elaborate with words.

It is for my friends—the dipshits I often love to hate—and also for myself, that I need to go through with the fake wedding.

Also, I need an excuse to keep the woman, who has unearthed feelings I'd thought dead since the incident, near me.

"My plan's simple. Keep her close, and the Mafia will follow."

Weston tilts his head, "You don't need to marry her for that."

"It's simpler that way."

"How?"

"It's foolproof in the short term. Victoria, I happen to find out, is old-fashioned enough that she'll respect the wedding vows."

"That's why she'd marry you so quickly after burying her first husband?"

I growl.

Weston doesn't back down, "Go on, tell us your reasoning, Saint Killian."

"Don't use that bloody name"

"It is your middle name, isn't it?"

"Among others."

"Well, then?"

"I should be able to coerce her into tying the knot sooner than not."

"Meanwhile, you get information about the Mafia from her?"

"Exactly," I prop my hands on my hips.

Weston smirks, "And during this time, of course, you make full use of your marital privileges?"

"Hey," I frown, "don't go there."

Weston blinks, "Wow, possessive about her too."

"What's it to you?" I lower my chin.

He turns to Sinclair, "Sound familiar to you?"

Sinclair chuckles, "All too much, and you know the funniest part of this?"

"No, tell me," Weston jokes.

"He has no idea that he's already well and truly fucked."

"Hook, line and sinker," Weston rubs his hands together.

"Hey, I'm here, you wankers," I growl.

"Barely," Arpad snickers. "Your mind has been elsewhere all this time."

"Yeah, I've been focused on how to take down the bastards who fucked up our lives."

"Is that what this is about? This elaborate plan of yours to keep her close?" Weston asks.

"What else can it be?" I glower.

"Clearly, you can't see what's right there in front of you." He scratches his jaw.

"Which is—?"

"Saint?" Sinner holds up my phone. "Call for you." He reaches over the ropes, "It's Meredith. She says it's urgent."

Shit! My heart begins to race. It can't be about her, can it? I did ask Meredith to check in on her after I'd left her in Selfridges. She has to be fine. Has to be.

I close the distance between us, then grab the phone from him.

"Meredith, is she okay?"

Anger twists my guts as I listen to her reply.

"I'm coming."

18

Victoria

"What do you want?" I tuck my elbows into my sides. Don't lose it, not now. You're in a public place, there's nothing that he can do to you. You're safe. Safe? Ha, when was the last time I'd gone to bed without waking up in the throes of a nightmare? When had I last walked down a street without looking nervously over my shoulder? Just because I am in the middle of a hotel, next to a crowded room packed with people, doesn't mean I am safe from the man who'd kidnapped Nina. I will not let him scare me – for Nina's sake.

I tip up my chin, hold his gaze. "Well?" I ask.

"You're taking too long." Antonio stares at me with those dark eyes, so lifeless.

The first and only time I'd met him was when he'd informed me about Nina's situation. It had been the singular, most scary event of my life. I'd stared into the face of darkness and realized how lucky I was not to be in his grasp. Unlike Nina. Shit. "Is she okay?"

His forehead crinkles. Those dark eyes seem to reflect some kind of inner turmoil. Before I can process what I think I've seen, he schools his features into a mask. "Do you have what I need?"

A chill runs down my back. "I'm trying my best," I reply.

"It's not good enough."

"He's a billionaire." I clench my fists at my side. "Are you aware how many women seek him out? I can't throw myself at him; that would be counterproductive—"

"You're playing too hard to get." He frowns.

"I'm being true to character."

"We are running out of time." His jaw hardens. "You've lost a month already."

"I... I had no choice. Adam's death—"

"Was unfortunate." He lowers his eyebrows. "I should have known better than to entrust such an important mission to him. He was weak. It's not a surprise that his heart gave out, at the most inopportune time."

"How can you talk badly about someone who is dead?"

He widens his stance. "If you don't deliver what I need, it will be Nina's turn."

"Please," I beg him, "don't hurt her."

His eyes shift away from mine. Then, he straightens his shoulders, "Two weeks. I'll give you two more weeks to get me the information."

"You can't be serious," I cry out. "I'm not a miracle worker, I need at least another month to win his trust, enough for him to give me access to his confidential information, I—"

"Three." He widens his stance. "Three weeks. Not a second more."

"That's very little time." I wring my fingers.

"Time you put your body to good use, hmm?"

The color fades from my cheeks.

He scrutinizes my features, "You didn't expect to get away from this without fucking him, now did you?"

I swallow. "No...but..."

"What is it? Tell me quickly." He looks at the expensive watch on his wrist. "I'm running out of time, Victoria."

"I... I..." I am not stupid. Of course, I knew I'd have to go to bed with Saint... But that was before... I'd realized how much he affects me. Perhaps a part of me had hoped that I'd somehow manage to get away without being hurt. Who am I kidding? I had taken on this role knowing I'm likely to lose everything.

"It's fine," I pull myself up to my full height, "I'll find a way to do it."

He jerks his chin, "Good."

"And Nina?"

I can't interpret the look that comes into his eyes. "You don't need to worry about her." He rolls his shoulders. "Stay focused on your task. The faster you get the USB from him, the sooner you can go free."

He looks past me, "In fact, I'll help you along in this charade."

His arm snakes out and he grips my shoulder.

"What... What are you doing?"

The hair on the nape of my neck prickles and an electric current runs up my spine. Oh! God, no. It can't be. Saint's here; he's watching. "Let me go."

Antonio yanks me to him with such force that I stumble into him. He lowers his head and his breath mingles with mine.

The next moment he's yanked away from me. Antonio's body arches through the air. He hits the ground with a thud.

I open my mouth to scream, then clap a hand over it. I take a step forward.

"Leave, Victoria," Saint's hard voice whips through my mind.

"But..."

He jerks his head around, and his blue eyes lighten until they resemble chips of ice. Did he overhear any of that conversation? No, he couldn't have. I have to hope for that, at least. So why is he staring at me as if he wants to wrap his fingers around my neck and choke me...as he fucks me? As he buries himself inside of me, covers my body with his, merges his scent with mine, his lips over mine, those hard pecs cutting into the soft curves of my breasts as he fucks me, takes me, paints his essence on me and wipes out everything I have seen and heard and experienced—"Victoria."

I flinch.

"Go," he jerks his chin.

My gaze darts around him to Antonio, who jumps up to his feet.

Saint turns around, deflects a blow from Antonio, who steps back, knees slightly bent, fists balled. A trickle of blood drips from his nose.

"Not bad for a spoilt playboy," he snickers.

Saint steps forward, until his chest slams into Antonio' "If I see you anywhere near her again... I'll—"

"You'll?"

"I'll beat the fuck out of you."

Antonio chuckles. "I'll have to take you up on your challenge one of these days, knowing fully well that you won't be able to win."

Saint snarls. He raises his arm. I jump forward and grab his shoulder, "Let him go," I pant. "He's baiting you. Can't you see that?"

Saint shrugs off my hold, "I gave you a simple command. If you don't obey it—"

"What are you going to do?"

His jaw tics, a nerve throbs at his temple, and his entire body goes rigid. Anger thrums off of him, mixed with...an intensity that had not been there before. If I'd thought Saint had been upset earlier...that was nothing... Nothing compared to how every muscle in his body is wound up, tightened, coiled into a mass of lethal fury that could plough down anything that gets in his way. He could kill Antonio; I have no doubt about it. There is no way I am going to let him do it. I won't let him get into trouble because of me... And yet, you are going to sell him out. I don't have a choice about that. I have too much at stake. But I could buy him a little more time...a few more days of freedom. For myself...for him.

"Tell me what you'll do to me if I don't follow your orders, Saint."

His gaze flicks to me, "I'll make you regret this."

"Without giving me a chance to say 'yes'?"

"What did you say?"

"I said 'yes.'"

Saint frowns.

Antonio steps back, "I'm sorry."

Saint turns to him, as if I hadn't accepted his proposal. Maybe he doesn't understand what I am alluding to? Perhaps he already regrets asking me to marry him? Either way, this lack of surprise or any kind of response from him is...strange, to say the least.

"Didn't realize the lady was taken," Antonio raises his hands. "I never meant to trespass on what's yours."

The two men exchange a glance.

Saint wraps his arm around me and pulls me close. The heat of his body slams into me, his big frame dwarfing me. I melt into him, and for a second pretend that I am his. That he belongs to me, that I am a woman who agreed to marry a man who in a few short days had stripped back the layers I've shown to the world. Who'd known how to arouse me with a look, a touch, a spanking across my backside. My nerve endings crackle and my scalp tingles. I swallow, force myself to stay where I am.

"No hard feelings, ol'chap?" Antonio holds out his hand.

Saint sets his jaw, "Leave before I have you thrown out."

Antonio chuckles. "It won't come to that." He glances down at me, and Saint's hold tightens, until I can barely breathe.

"Good luck, my dear, though by the looks of it, it will be your man who'll be needing it."

He brushes past us.

Saint stiffens. I peer up at him to find the pulse racing at the hollow of his neck. I lift my fingers to touch the skin, and he releases me. My knees threaten to give way. I put out a hand and brace myself against him.

"Who was he?" Saint asks.

"No one." I retract my arm, press my elbows into my side. "He was no one."

"He didn't seem like nobody. You guys seemed to be engaged in intimate conversation when I arrived."

"How did you find us?" I ask.

"Meredith called me."

"Right," I shuffle my feet. "Did you hear what I said earlier?"

He frowns.

"About my saying 'yes,' I mean."

"Your agreeing to marry me?"

I nod.

"I didn't expect otherwise."

I glower, "Very sure of yourself."

"Always." He widens his stance. "Unlike you."

"What's that supposed to mean?"

"You can't lie to save yourself... Tory."

"Don't call me that. I told you I don't like it."

"So I can't, but he can?"

The blood rushes from my face. "How...how much did you hear?"

"Enough."

"It...it's not what it seems, Saint."

He chuckles, "You can do better than that."

"No, really," I grip his arm.

He shakes it off, "Don't come near me."

My heart begins to thud and sweat beads my palms. This is not good. I can't afford to have Saint angry with me. Can't have him put distance between us—not when I am so close to getting everything I want.

"I'll do it, Saint."

He regards me from under those thick eyelashes.

"I'll do anything you want."

"What does that mean, exactly?"

"I'll marry you. I'll obey you. I'll give you anything you need from me."

He drums his fingers on his chest, "You'll agree to everything I ask?"

I nod.

He walks a slow circle around me. I stare ahead. Allow him to take his measure of my body, my curves, welcome his heated gaze that flows over my waist, down the cleft between my arsecheeks, around my thighs to the front, where he pauses, his gaze fixed on the triangle between my legs.

"You'll strip for me?"

"Of course."

"Let me slap your pussy?" His voice lowers to a hush.

I shudder. Squeeze my thighs together.

"Answer me."

"Yes," I snap out.

He tilts his head to the left, then the right.

"I'll take your arse, of course," he assures me.

My sex clenches and my heart begins to race.

"Of course," I tip up my chin.

His lips curl. "Wasn't asking you for your permission."

I draw in a sharp breath.

"In fact, I won't be giving you much of a heads-up on anything I have in mind. Suffice to say, Gigi, by the time I'm done with you, you won't be able to remember your name, let alone how you deceived me."

"D...deceived you?"

He doesn't know. No way. He can't know the true reason for my having approached him in the first place. "Wh...what do you mean?" I whisper.

He jerks his chin to the side, "Why him... Your former lover, who you invited here to meet you publicly, and all because you wanted to make me jealous, hmm?"

I blink. Is that what he thinks this is? That I am cheating on him? If only it were that simple. I chuckle.

"What's so funny?"

"N...nothing." A giggle bubbles up, I try to swallow it, choke. I press my lips together, can't stop the cough that breaks free. "Excuse me." I bring my hands up to cover my mouth, end up snorting. Tears roll down my cheeks. I sway. Shit, am I having some kind of a nervous breakdown? Is this a bout of hysteria? Didn't Freud cure hysteria by orgasms? Is that what I need? I wheeze, draw in a breath, then double over, my shoulders shaking.

"Victoria, what the fuck?"

Saint's boots appear in my line of sight—those same cowboy boots he's been wearing since the day I met him. For someone who's a gazillionaire, his taste in footwear is definitely eccentric.

I resist the urge to shuffle my feet, to squeeze my thighs together. It is a test, all a test. It won't be as bad as he's implying it's going to be. It can't be. He's just trying to intimidate me. I can take anything Saint throws at me and rise above it. I can.

"I...I'm sorry," I gasp, then straighten and drag the back of my hand across my face. "It's just you... I..." Another bout of giggles bubbles up. I hunch my shoulders, try to tamp down on the laughter. More tears spill down my cheeks. "Saint... I..." The words catch in my throat. I try to get them out, but end up snorting again. What the hell is wrong with me? I am making a bloody spectacle of myself in front of this man who I am supposed to seduce. I am supposed to take on an unapproachable persona; as close to my Posh Spice alter ego as possible. Instead, I am having a complete breakdown, Kardashian style.

I laugh so hard that my knees sway. Saint grabs my shoulders, steadies me.

"Look at me."

I shake my head, glance to the right, the left, anywhere else but at him. If I do, I'll... I'll lose what little composure I own right now. Correction, I have zero self-possession left. I am drained, empty, alone... Always alone. I had Nina, but even that was taken away from me. This feels so hopeless.

"Saint," my voice seems to come from far away.

"Victoria, the fuck is wrong with you?"

I raise my head, glance up into those blue eyes. Burning bright. Sparks flare in their depths. Hot, he is so hot. Alive. Vital. Everything I am not.

"You're so beautiful." I raise my hand and he catches my wrist. His fingers dig into my skin. Real. Reassuring. Solid. He'll protect me. He'll hurt me. He'll ground me, show me how to stay in the present. "Saint, please..." My lips grow numb. I can't feel my arms and legs anymore.

"Don't you fucking faint on me."

I chuckle, "I never faint."

"Liar."

He's right, of course.

The world tilts and darkness pulls me under.

19

Saint

I pace back and forth in front of the bed... My bed. She is here, in my room, in my suite. Wrapped up in my sheets... My heart begins to thud. I've never brought any woman here. Prefer to restrict my liaisons to an impersonal hotel room that is permanently booked for me a few floors below in the hotel.

So why her? Why is she the first woman I've brought to this suite?

Maybe it's because she's going to be my wife.

Or maybe it is because of how pale she'd gone right before she'd crumpled. Her legs had gone out from under her and she'd collapsed. A dead weight. If I hadn't been there to catch her, she'd have hurt herself. And I can't have that. Not while I still have so much to unravel about this woman who'd appeared out of nowhere and entranced me. It's only because I don't know much about her...except for what I have uncovered, which has only fueled my fascination with her.

Thankfully she'd woken up enough for me to get some juice and crackers smeared with peanut butter into her. She'd refused everything else, preferring instead to sleep.

When was the last time I had taken care of anyone like this? Never. That's the answer. I ball my fingers into fists.

"What the hell are you doing to me, Gigi?" I hear my words and realize I spoke them out loud. That's what she's reduced me to. I am mumbling to myself as I fret about the health of a woman I don't give two fucks about. I don't... I don't have any emotions for her; no feelings. Nothing that could expose the person I once was...before... the kidnapping, before my mother died. Fuck. I shove my hand into my pocket.

Why did the submissive cross the road?

Because her master asked her to.

My heartbeat slows.

It runs and runs but can never flee... What is it? I snap my fingers. You know the answer, you know it.

Time. That's it.

Present in the sun, but not in rain.

Doing no harm, and feeling no pain.

What is it?

My breathing evens out.

A shadow.

I had been a shadow of my former self... Until I met her.

I'm not going to let her get away, not until I have resolved the puzzle that she is. I walk closer and stand over her.

Sweat beads her forehead. She thrashes her head from side to side; her chest heaves. Her fingers dig into the sheets at her side. She moans and my heart squeezes. I cup her cheek and her eyes snap open. "No," she wheezes. "Don't do it."

"Do what?" I frown.

She knocks my hand away, rolls over, then scuttles up against the head board.

"Gigi?"

She swallows. "Don't...don't come near me."

"Victoria?"

Her chin wobbles.

I switch on the lamp and light floods the room. She blinks at me. "Who... who are you?"

"Victoria, it's me, Saint."

She draws in a breath. "Saint?"

I nod, walk around to stand at the foot of the bed.

She stares at me, her eyes wide in her face. Her cheeks are too fucking pale. I stalk around to where she huddles and she freezes. Her muscles seem to lock, then she hunches into herself, making herself smaller.

I reach for the bottle of water on the bed-stand and she winces.

"Easy," I keep my tone firm, pour a glass of water and offer it to her.

She eyes it warily.

"Take it."

She hesitates. I take a sip from it. "See?" I tilt my head, "It's safe to drink."

She takes the glass from me, brings it to her lips, and drains it. Some of the liquid runs down her chin. I reach out, wipe away the wetness with my thumb.

She stays silent. I drag my finger across her lower lip. Her mouth opens. I slide my digit inside and she sucks on it. She sinks her teeth in, and fuck me, but I feel the tug all the way to the tip of my dick.

I reach for the now empty glass, pry it from her fingers. She swallows. I place the glass on the nightstand. The slight thump breaks the silence.

She shudders.

I push down with my thumb and she opens her mouth wider. I slide in my forefinger, my middle finger. She swipes her tongue across them. My shaft lengthens in my pants; the blood thuds at my temples. I pull away from her and she stiffens, watches me from under hooded eyes as I take a step back.

"What are you not telling me?" I scowl down at her.

"What do you mean?" She frowns back at me.

"Why did you have that nightmare?"

"Th...that?" She shoves her hair back from her face. "It was...nothing."

"I came in to find you thrashing on the bed, begging someone not to come near you," I growl.

"So?"

"Did he hurt you?"

"Who?"

"Don't pretend you don't know who I mean."

She tilts up her chin. "N...no." She swallows.

"Lying to me again?"

"Of course, not."

I bend down, peer into her eyes, "Tell me. What's got you terrified, Gigi?" I search her pale features. "Why are you trembling so much that you can barely sit upright?"

"Maybe it's your nearness?" Her lips twist.

"Is it?" I scowl.

"Or maybe it's the thought that you are going to own your dominance and show me what you are made of?" She looks me up and down. Her chin wobbles.

Something hot stabs at my chest.

Fuck, is this an act she's putting on? When she's hurting and unsure, and yet she's taunting me to get the better of my control.

"What are you hiding from me?" I rub the back of my neck. "Why can't you tell me what's got you so fearful that you had to come to me with a proposition that is so unlike your personality?"

"You mean someone as proper as me? Someone who seems so conservative? I couldn't know my tastes, could I?"

"Do you?" I lower my hands to my sides, "Do you know what you're asking of me? Are you ready for everything I am going to demand from you?"

Her chest rises and falls, she firms her lips. "I could ask you the same thing." She reaches forward.

"Gigi... No..."

She grabs my crotch, squeezes my erection.

A groan rips out of me. The blood thuds at my temples. "What are you doing?"

"What does it seem like?" She brings up her other hand to massage my balls and my vision tunnels. "Gigi," I warn her.

"Saint." She peers up at me from under her sooty eyelashes. "I've seen enough porn online to know what turns me on. I've spent my life trying to fit in, trying to be something I am not. I need you to set me free, want you to let me embrace my fantasies, I want this Saint, I—"

"Take your hands off of me," I snap.

She blinks.

"Now."

She pulls back, her face, pale. "I... I'm sorry."

"Show me."

"What?" She drops her hands in her lap.

"Show me you understand what you're asking for."

"But I... I meant it." She blinks rapidly. "I...do want you."

"You don't get to set the pace." I prop my hands on my hips. "You feel me?"

"B...but." She wrings her hands together. "I—"

"On your knees."

She draws in a breath.

"Now."

She scrambles to the floor, fingers twisted in front, head bowed, her dark hair flowing about her shoulders.

"Beautiful."

A visible shiver runs up her spine.

I unhook my belt, lower my zipper, a moan bleeds from her, and fuck me, but I can't wait any more.

I wrap her hair around my palm, yank. Her head falls back, her gaze wide. Color flushes her cheeks.

"Open," I demand.

Her lips part.

Fuck, the way she looks right now? My heart begins to race.

"I'm going to fuck your mouth, now."

Her gaze widens and she draws in a breath as if to say something. I don't wait. I thrust my dick between her lips.

Warmth, heat. Goosebumps explode on my skin. "Fuck," I grit my teeth and sweat beads my forehead. "Fuck, Gigi."

She swallows, and the suction sweeps up my spine. My groin hardens and my thigh muscles spasm. I tighten my grip on her hair.

"Do you have any idea what you do to my control?"

Her nostrils flare, she tips her chin up, and her eyes dart green fire.

"I'm going to use your mouth and you're going to take it, and when I come, you are going to swallow every last drop."

Her chest rises and falls; the pulse races at the base of her neck. The sweet scent of her arousal envelops me and my balls tighten. My vision narrows, my chest hurts, and fuck her, but I can't hold back any more.

I pull her forward; my dick slides down her throat. I yank her back and her teeth graze the soft skin of my shaft. Tendrils of fire race up my spine.

I use her mouth, repeat the motion, again and again, then once more. Spit gathers at the corner of her lips, overflows down her chin.

She sucks in her cheeks and my balls draw up. "Jesus, fuck, I'm coming."

I wrap the fingers of my other hand around her neck, then drag her forward. The sight of my dick disappearing in between her wet swollen lips, combined with the vibration of my cock down her throat... Bloody hell, it's the most erotic thing ever.

My scalp tingles, my knees tremble, and the coiled tension from my groin explodes out. I come, shooting my spunk down her throat.

"Swallow it," I snarl, "Do it, Gigi."

Her throat moves and tears roll down her cheeks, as I keep coming. She swallows down my cum. The sticky liquid spills over the edges of her mouth. Her breathing roughens, her fingers curled into fists at her sides.

I pull out, and the white streams of cum spray across her face, her clothes.

She licks her lips, back straight, shoulders squared. Her hair sticks to her forehead. I grab her under her arms, yank her to her tiptoes, and close my mouth over hers.

The taste of myself combined with her sweet breath, the honeyed taste of her lips, the complex notes of our joined-up essences... All of it sinks into me. Something stirs in my chest. No, no. I will not be drawn to her. Will not allow myself to feel for her. Will not allow her to reach though the carefully cultivated layers to find the part of me I have guarded for so long. I tear my lips from hers, scan her flushed features.

I tilt my head, "I hate you."

Victoria

With those few words he shatters the peace that I'd found in his arms. When I'd opened up to him, and asked him to set me free... I'd meant it. Until that moment I hadn't realized how much I'd wanted to let go of my inhibitions, to not worry about what the world thought of me, to revel in what turned me on and own it... if this was the chance to do it, then I was going to embrace it. Then he'd gone and said those three words.

"What?" I tilt my head, "Why would you say that?"

"Because... I can?" He lets go of me so quickly, that I stumble.

The backs of my knees hit the bed and I sit down with a thump. "I... I don't understand."

He zips up his pants, then yanks off the belt. The leather whips through the air and I eye it warily. If he thinks I am going to be afraid of his implied threat, he has another think coming.

"Is this another one of your games, Saint?"

He bares his teeth, "Is that what you think it is, Victoria?"

I squeeze my melting pussy together, "I... I don't know what to think."

"Good." He folds the strip of leather, then jerks his chin towards the settee in the room.

"What?" I frown.

"Lean over it."

"You must be joking."

He glares at me and the blood rushes from my cheeks. Guess not. I rise to my feet. Move. Do it. I force myself to take a step toward it, then stop, "Give me one reason I should agree to your stupid ideas?"

The belt whips out, catches me across my breasts. I cry out, stare at him. My nipples harden. He glances at my chest, and his lips twitch. "That's what I thought. You like it, don't you?" He reaches out and pinches one of my rigid nipples.

I yell, "Jesus."

He laughs.

"Your ego is so big that I wonder you haven't been crushed by the weight of it yet," I snarl.

"That's what I think every time I look at my—" He looks down at his crotch.

"Seriously?"

He jerks his chin toward the settee, "Go on."

I swallow. He raises his belt; I head toward the blasted settee.

I hear the whine through the air a second before pain grips my backside. I stutter, speed up my pace. When I reach the settee, I pause.

I hear his footsteps behind me. Shit. I fall forward until I am draped over the arm. Butt in the air.

Bloody hell, what have I gotten myself into? Had I known he had this streak of meanness running through him from the beginning? Had I sensed it? Wanted it, even? Wanted him to strip me of all dignity, to tear down the pretense I had clung to, that I was in control? Because I'm not. I haven't been. Not since the day Nina disappeared. I didn't know what had happened to her and I allowed my mind to go to all of the usual places, picturing her lying in a ditch somewhere next to an overturned car, crying for help. I allowed my fears to create a story that couldn't possibly be true. Only to find out the truth was much worse than I could have ever imagined.

They'd taken her. And then...because I just wouldn't give up and kept looking for her, insisting the police do their job...they took me. My entire life had unraveled around me. And I had watched, helpless, unable to save her or myself. A part of me had fought back and clung to something indistinct, had wanted to hope that I was still there, hidden inside. The girl who was a fighter, who had never backed down from a challenge.

The part I cling to now when he jerks my skirt up my legs. Air hits my exposed back side.

A beat. Another. He hasn't moved from his position behind me. I sense his presence though. Hard. Heavy. Throbbing. That immovable dominance that vibrates off of him and pins me in place. Waiting...waiting. I squeeze my thighs together, hear the whine of the belt as he snaps it.

I cringe, clench my buttcheeks. He laughs, "Fooled you, hmm?"

"Asshole."

"What was that?"

"Nothing," I mutter.

"So much sass, Gigi?"

Hate the name... No, I lie. It does strange things to me when he calls me that. I've always been Victoria. I'd hated being called Tory, especially by them. And no one bothered to find a nickname for me...before him.

I sense his gaze on my back, down the crease between my buttcheeks where my panties are bunched up. I reach behind to pull it out and he clicks his tongue.

I redden. Shit, I hate that. Hate it when he demeans me. Treats me like I am his toy, his slut. His. I squeeze my eyes shut. Where did that thought come from? My sex clenches; my belly quivers. Why do I find that a turn on? I am sick in the head, no doubt about it. Is that why I am here, doing what he wants...waiting... Waiting for him to take the next step. To do something... anything...whatever he wants to me.

I swallow, "Saint."

"Shh!"

His whisper comes from somewhere above me. I turn my head to find him staring at my butt. "You're fucking beautiful, you know that?" His voice is contemplative. There's an intensity to it that sends a shudder down my spine. My stomach flip flops and goosebumps rise on my skin.

"Saint..." I clear my throat. "Please..."

"Hmm." He rolls his neck and his joints pop. I wince. It's like a declaration of what is to come. The calm before the storm. The silence before the tsunami hits the shore. Do it, do it. Don't delay.

"I know what you want, Gigi."

"You do?"

He nods, "And I'll give it to you. Every single experience that you ache for, I promise you'll have it... And some you don't dare even think about, though in your heart you want it. Know what I mean?"

I open my mouth to speak, but the words dry up. My entire body braces... My muscles wind up, toes digging into the carpet. My clit pulses and my pussy squeezes down, wanting...needing him. His cock. His fingers. His thick thighs between mine as he tears into me with his cock. Moisture flows from between my legs and I can't stop the whine that spills from me.

"Good girl," he growls.

I shudder.

"I promise you'll get what you deserve...but first..."

I swallow.

"First, answer this riddle."

I snarl at the back of my throat. Enough with the stupid riddles already.

"Did you say something, pet?"

I shake my head, bite down on my lower lip and turn away. Fuck him, and his ability to reduce me to a trembling mass of need. My skin feels too tight for the rest of my body. My scalp feels like it's on fire. I rub my thighs together and he laughs, "Look at you. So impatient, hmm?"

Get on with it already.

"About that riddle."

Fuck off.

"Soon, but first tell me... The more you take, the more you leave behind. What is it?"

I frown. Of course, my mind goes straight to that one thing. Could it be? Is it?

"You dirty girl," he chuckles. "I know what you're thinking, but it's not that. It's so easy, Gigi. Go on, take a shot."

"Um," I try to form the word, but my throat is too dry. It is, is it...?

"Footsteps, of course."

I sag onto the couch. Jerk.

"One more, one more." He comes around, brushes aside my hair. "You ready, Gigi?"

I glare at him. He smirks, "Oh, but you're getting there, aren't you?"

I shoot him a glance meant to convey exactly where he can take his dick and stuff it... Up my arse. Hell. I squeeze my eyes shut. Why, why is it that I am empty and hollow and aching inside, even as every part of me wants to slap his stupid, handsome face? Right before I throw myself at his feet and ask him to lick me up, eat me up, slap my cunt, drink from it... "Ohhh."

I hear my whine, so pathetic.

"You're gorgeous, sweet thing."

I crack my eyelids open. Beseech him with my gaze. Please, please.

He straightens, "Not yet."

I can't stop the snarl that rips from me then.

"My god," I hear him breathe from above me. "So much spirit, so much beauty, so much everything you are, Gigi. You'll be the death of me."

I swallow. Is he aware of the likely truth in his words? No one's ever focused their complete attention on me, made me the cynosure of their ministrations in this manner before.

A tear squeezes out of the corner of my eye. He bends down, scoops it up. He sucks on his finger and my heart stutters. Why is that so damn intimate?

"About that riddle, then."

I blow out a breath.

"It's easy, I promise."

Famous last words... Whatever. Can you get over it already?

"I am what you saw, but not what you see. What am I?" He asks.

A shadow. A mirage. An emotion from the end of time. It's you, Saint, you.

He nods, "A memory, Gigi." His features twist. "And I am going to leave you with so many that it will drown out everything and everyone that came before me, I promise."

I hear him move, sense him bend, the heat of his body intensifying a second before he tears off my panties.

What the—?

I hear the whip of the belt, then the fire explodes across my butt, up my spine. I cry out. He doesn't stop. He goes at it—one butt cheek, the other, back to the first—I scream again. The next—I shriek.

Each time he hits me, my body jolts forward. My sex clenches. A trembling builds from my toes. He spans me so hard that my body pushes up to my tip toes. My clit rubs against the hard edge of the settee, and omigod! A quivering sweeps up from my toes. It can't be. There's no way he has brought me to the verge of orgasm so quickly, right? He leans back and the cool air grazes my butt. He dips his fingers into my exposed pussy. I shudder.

"You're fucking wet for me."

I ball my fingers into fists.

"You want my dick inside you. Don't you, you little slut?"

I shudder. How dare he call me that? My sex clenches around his finger. Why do I like it so much?

He adds a second finger inside and my trembling intensifies.

"Say it, Gigi."

"No."

He adds a third, a fourth, the emptiness at my core growing bigger, wider. I want more. I want his fat cock inside of me. I do. A sob wells up.

"Admit you want to be taken in every way possible. You want me to debase you, to show you exactly what it means for a woman to be open and vulnerable and completely broken down by her man."

Is he my man? Is he?

"Tell me, Gigi. Tell me you need this, to be split wide open for all of your hurts to pour out, for your insecurities to be drawn out of you, for your every nightmare to be exposed, your spirit broken and yearning...for me."

No.

"Tell me you want me to remove every evidence of other men and replace it with pain, and more pain; to gouge out every thought, every emotion, every feeling you've ever carried for anyone else but me. Tell me you want me to fuck your past out of you."

"No."

"Liar."

The heat at my back escalates. He stabs his tongue in between my arsecheeks and the climax propels up my thighs. My vision narrows and my heart stutters. No, how can he? Why is he doing this? Why is he insisting on barreling into my deepest, darkest, most intimate of spaces? He laves my most forbidden place and I throw back my head. The orgasm coils in my belly; my thighs clench.

He pulls away and it recedes.

What the—? My eyelids—which I hadn't realized I'd shut—fly open. I turn around to find him tugging on his shirt sleeves. He flicks a spot of invisible dust from his shoulders, and a hot molten wave of anger explodes inside me.

"How dare you...?" I sputter.

He licks his lower lip and heat sweeps up my front from throat to hair line. Is he recalling my taste? Showing me what I could have, and withholding it from me purposely for... What? To put me in my place? To show me what I can't have?

The anger thrums close to my heart and my chest tightens. "Why?" I snarl "Why are you doing this?"

"You don't get to ask the questions."

"I am tired of your treating me like...like..."

He angles his head. "Go on, complete that statement."

I open my mouth and he raises a finger, "But remember, one wrong word and I'll walk away. And we both know you can't afford that."

My heart begins to race. What does he know? How much has he guessed? Why does he always remind me of everything I have to lose if this arrangement goes wrong? I stare at him and he chuckles, "Wise choice, little Gigi."

"I hate that name."

"Lying again?" He clicks his tongue.

"What are you going to do?" I jut out my chin.

His nostrils flare as he rakes his gaze over my semi-naked body. A flush heats my skin, but I refuse to move. I will not give him the benefit of discovering how much he's unnerving me. I grit my teeth. Stay, stay.

He cracks his knuckles and my belly clenches.

He takes a step forward. Everything in me waits...waits. Close the distance, you bastard. Do it... Do it, now.

He raises his hand. The buzzing of a cellphone cuts through the thick silence. My nerve endings pop.

He slides his phone out of the pocket of his slacks. "This had better be important." His eyebrows furrow as he listens. He drags his gaze down to my bare butt cheeks. His pupils darken. Does he want me that much? If I'm so affected by his presence, surely, he is too. Isn't that why he's strung me along so far? He hasn't allowed me to get close, but he hasn't pushed me away either. He's toying with me. Not that it surprises me at all. I didn't expect more from this...this beast. But why is he putting himself through the same kind of torture that I am experiencing? Why can't he take me and be done with it? Why drag this out until neither of us can bear it?

He raises his hand, and I am sure he's going to palm my butt, to resume where he left off.

"They did what?" he snaps into the phone.

Color pops on his cheeks. His jaw tics. What the—? What could it be that has gotten that kind of reaction— hell, any kind of reaction—from him?

He straightens so quickly that I wince. "I'm coming..."

I splutter.

He slides the phone into his pocket, pivots, turns to go, and I jump to my feet, "You can't do this."

He takes another step forward.

My heart hammers so fast, I am sure it's going to jump out of my ribcage. I race around him, plant myself in his path, "You can't leave me like this."

He surveys me from head to toe, then bends.

I stumble back.

He straightens, tosses a scrap of fabric in my direction. My panties flop against my chest. "You'll come when I let you, and not before."

He saunters past me to the door.

Bastard.

He reaches the door and my pulse rate ratchets up. Surely, he is not going to walk away, while I am hungry and aching and wanting...wanting. My skin feels too tight for the rest of my body. His massive shoulders fill the doorway. I take in his narrow waist, the tight fit of his pants cross his gorgeous arse... My sex clenches. I inch my fingers toward my clit. He raises his hand over his shoulder, "Don't you dare, Gigi."

"What?"

"You will not bring yourself to orgasm. Have you forgotten about that?"

"The hell?"

"Hell is when I bring you to the edge of coming a few more times, when you walk around throbbing for my dick to fill you up, for my lips on you, my fingers inside your arsehole, for every part of me teasing you up the slope only to..."

"To," I breathe.

"To leave you unfulfilled, of course."

He shoulders open the door. I walk my fingers toward my center once more.

"If you disobey me... I'll..."

I swallow. "What? What will you do?"

"I'll punish you and the spankings you've received so far will seem like I've been teasing you all along."

"As if you'd know," I scoff.

He turns to survey me, "Oh, trust me, I will. Your every orgasm belongs to me from now on. Do you understand?"

Saint

"Fuck, fuck, fuck." I swear as I swipe myself from root to head. My dick lengthens and my balls throb. I slap my other hand against the wall of the restroom on the ground floor of the hotel. Pathetic.

I'd walked out of my suite, commanding her not to come. The call could not be put off; so I had made it out, completed my errand, and returned to the hotel, in record time.

But damn if I am heading back to my room. I do not need her. I am not dependent on her. No way am I going to allow her to see how vulnerable I am with her.

Which means I'm left me with balls the size of all the number one hits of The Beatles put together... Fuck, had I thought that? The woman's affliction for those losers is getting to me.

I have to fuck her out of my system... Or at least, jerk her out, to get relief.

So, I'd walked into the men's restroom and locked the door behind me. I blow out a breath, then scan my reflection in the mirror—dilated pupils, irregular breathing, a sheen of sweat dampening my brow... Fuck. What a dumb idea it had been to think I could get through this unscathed. I'd thought I was in control... How wrong I had been. I'd thought I could keep her close, so I could steer the proceedings, slow the pace when needed.

Fuck, fucking fuck. I squeeze my cock and pain grips my groin. I massage myself once again. The blood thrums through my veins and my pulse rate ratchets up. The scent of her—sweet and sexy, warm and giving, and opening to me—clings to my nostrils, percolates into my skin, winds its way down to coil in my groin. My thighs spasm and my balls draw up. Her green eyes—beseeching, half-drugged with lust, stormy with anger. The sound of wet flesh closing around my fingers. Her mouth around my dick, sucking on me, dragging her teeth up the underside of my swollen shaft. Her slickness, her little moans, her head thrown back as she'd verged on the edge of climax.

The tension in my belly twists in on itself. I squeeze the base of my cock harder. Fuck me, but I am going to come, I am going to—

A banging on the door filters into my consciousness. I ignore it, focus on my own pleasure—how I am going to thrust forward into her sweet cunt, rip into her melting pussy and— "Saint, open up this second, you asshole."

I whip my head around, stare at the closed door, "Fuck off."

"If you don't open it, I am going to kick this door down."

"It's an antique door, you tosser." Not that I fucking care about the money. I could replace it, of course, but damn, if I don't have a soft spot for history and heritage...and all that emo shit... And beautiful women who hurt from the inside out, who pretend to be strong when they are already broken. Since when had I given in to the urge to collect wounded things to my collection?

There's another bang and the entire door frame shudders. "I swear, I'll take it out of your share of the profits, wanker."

"You're the wanker, beating yourself in there into your hand like a pathetic pussy."

"Bitch," I swear aloud.

"I heard that, you tosser."

Fucking Weston. I tuck my erect dick inside my pants and zip myself up. Then stalk over to the door and fling it open.

Weston brushes past me and glides inside, looking for all the world like he's stepped out of a fucking photo shoot. "Jesus, do you have to deck yourself out like a peacock every time you step out?"

He leans a hip against one of the basin's, "Unlike you," he glances down pointedly at my worn-in boots, "I prefer to be prepared."

"I happen to have interesting taste."

"Including in women?"

"Don't talk about her," I snarl.

He smirks, "That why you're diddling yourself in secret?"

The back of my neck heats, "I wasn't." Fucking fuck, now I sound—what?—about fifteen? When I had to beat myself off to sleep most nights.

Weston chuckles, then sniffs the air, "I don't know... Smells like sex in here...the self-gratifying kind, I mean." He makes a rude gesture with his hand. "Didn't know you had to resort to that to get some these days."

I glower at him, "I told you I wasn't."

"So why did you lock the door?"

"Because..." I pull myself up to my full height, "the last I checked, I own this hotel."

"Which you're going to run into the ground by the looks of it," a new voice sounds. I groan. I don't need to turn to know it's Arpad who's walked in.

"The hell are you doing here?"

Arpad saunters in, "Weston seemed to think he'd need back-up."

"And that's you?" I smirk.

"No, that's us," Damian moseys in.

I scowl. "Why'd you have to bring him along?"

I jerk my chin toward Edward, who strolls in. He kicks the door shut, then leans his shoulder against him.

"What?" I take in their faces, then fold my arms over my chest. "Whatever it is, the answer is 'no.'"

"I didn't ask a question," Arpad grins. "Any of you hear a question?"

The others chime in.

"Nope."

"Nah."

"Naw."

I tap the toes of my boot on the ground. "Well? Say your piece, you dickheads. I have an appointment to keep."

"Correction, you ran out of the earlier meeting before we could discuss FOK Media, so we decided to move the venue," Edward says.

"To a restroom... And here I thought this was an intervention."

"Nothing like a public toilet to remind us of the kind of shit we've faced since the fuckers changed our lives in the incident and..." Weston stalks over to one of the urinals, "we're not done with the intervention." He lowers his zipper, then the tinkle of piss hitting porcelain fills the room.

"Jesus Fucking Christ," I growl.

"Don't take the Lord's name in conjunction with a profanity," Edward admonishes.

"Sorry, Father. How many Hail Mary's should I say to repent?"

"None, this time," Edward looks down his nose at me, "but you can tell us what's got you all aflutter."

"Aflutter?" I choke.

Damian laughs. The others snicker.

Weston flushes the urinal, then walks over to wash his hands, "How else do you explain your running out on us earlier, only to surface locked up in a restroom, jerking off?"

The room explodes in laughter.

"You walked in on this wanker wanking himself off?" Arpad chortles.

"Fuck, that's funny." Damian smirks.

"You caught him diddling?" Weston chuckles.

"Stop. Shut your fucking traps!" I roar.

Silence descends.

Then Edward snorts, "Ever seen Saint lose his shit?"

"Shut up, Father, before I tell them how I saved you from humiliation in a public loo on the wrong side of the tracks."

Edward pales.

The others fall quiet.

"You never did know your limits did you, Saint?" Weston growls.

"Shit, I'm sorry." I dig my fingers into my hair and tug on it. "I didn't mean for it to come out that way. Can you guys forget I blurted that out?"

"No need to apologize," Edward squares his shoulders, his stance rigid. "No big secret. After the incident, I went through a phase of trying to rediscover my sexuality. Let's just say, I didn't make the smartest of choices and Saint here, saved my arse."

"It's nothing." I roll my shoulders, "Yeah, I found him in a compromising position, but hell, we've all been there. We were all in some fucked-up space after the incident, and hell, if we each didn't make mistakes in trying to figure out our shit."

"Is that what she is? Your mistake?" Weston's voice is calm.

I squeeze the bridge of my nose, "No." I lower my arm, then scan over the faces of the men who are my brothers by dint of the blood we'd spilt together. "And therein lies the problem."

"What's the problem?" Damian drums his finger on his chest, "You like the chick? You keep her."

"I can't."

"And I thought I had problems," Edward snickers. The priest, the one among us who is the kindest, who'd never stoop to the level of the others, takes a dig at me.

"I deserve that," I rub the back of my neck, then begin to pace.

"I thought the fake marriage was the way to keep tabs on her whereabouts, except..."

"Except?"

"The danger is closer than I expected. I ran into her with a man whose reputation is bad news, to say the least."

"That was the emergency?" Weston asks.

I nod.

"Who was he?"

"I had my PI run a check on him and guess what...?"

"He drew a blank?" Arpad fills in.

I nod, "So I called in a favor with a buddy of mine at Scotland Yard and..."

"He's a wanted criminal?"

"Worse, he's suspected of being the member of an international crime organization."

"Fuck," Edward swears.

"Yeah."

It's serious enough for the Father to swear, and worrying enough for none of the others to rib him about it.

I begin to pace, "So you see, I don't think it's right to put off marrying her."

"How is marriage going to protect her?" Arpad scowls.

"I can keep her close to me. It will make it clear to the world that she's under my protection."

"And that will stop the Mafia?" Edward places the tips of his fingers together.

"Maybe not...but it'll make sure I am there to stop them if they try to hurt her."

Arpad scans my features, "You're serious about this, huh?"

"What have I been trying to tell you all this time?" I scowl

"So, do it now," Weston interjects.

"Now?" I frown.

Weston straightens, "Sure, Father here will marry you two, while I make some calls and have the paperwork rushed through for you guys."

"Hold on, hold on! I should marry her right away?"

"Today. In the next," he glances at his watch, "hour or so, tops."

"Ah," I run a finger around my collar, "a bit too soon, isn't it?"

"You've proposed to her. Explain you can't wait."

"Don't preach to me about how to handle a woman—Sorry," I jerk my chin toward Edward, "Didn't mean it that way."

"Hey, you can insult me any way you want. It will be worth it to see you tie the knot." Edward tilts his head.

He seems too calm. "I'd, uh, hoped for something quick at the town hall."

"— which I plan to preside over to ensure it's all done in the right way." Edward's lips kick up in a smile.

"You're getting back at me, is that it?" I mutter bitterly.

"You know your earlier faux pas of blurting out how you saved my ass?"

I glower at Edward.

"This is how you can make up for it," he says.

"By tying the bloody knot?"

"By getting chained up for real."

"I'll be divorcing her soon anyway. It's all a fucking farce, until I get to the bottom of this entire situation."

"You sure?" Weston scowls, "I mean, there's something between you two, isn't there?"

"All a farce," I snicker. "I know how to be convincing enough that she bought it completely. She's not my type. Besides, I don't plan to shackle myself to anyone for the rest of my life."

"Thought it was kids you're against," Damian pipes in.

"That too. Marriage, children, the whole shebang." I cut the air with my hand. "Not for me, and definitely not with her."

There's a noise at the doorway. I stiffen. Glance past Edward, who's already stepping away from the door. He wrenches it open.

The scent of lily and pepper tickles my nose. "Shit." I spot the back of a woman running, her red handbag clutched to her side. It's her. Fucking fuck.

I race past Edward, who grabs my arm. "Get her back, Saint," he urges.

"I plan to."

"Apologize to her."

"Fuck," I clench my fingers.

He scowls, "Don't be an asshole."

"Right."

"We'll be waiting for you in the ballroom." He releases me.

"Fuck, bloody fuck." I race out the door and after her.

Why was the broom late?

Answer: It overswept

Victoria

Fuck him. Fuck him. I hate him. Tears stream down my face as I race for the exit of the hotel. I should have stayed in the suite and licked my wounds, but truthfully? I had been horny for him. I had positioned my fingers over my clit and wanted to rub myself, wanted to shove my fingers inside of my pussy and bring myself to orgasm... Except, it wouldn't have helped. I would have been empty and aching... Okay, emptier than before. Now that I know what it feels like to have his fingers inside of me, his lips on me, his tongue stabbing into my deepest most intimate of spaces... Fuck! Besides he'd told me not to come...and... Fuck me, but I couldn't defy him. I had obeyed him. Like an idiot. I had paced the floor of the suite, until I had driven myself crazy with the thoughts whirling around in my head. Where could he have gone? Why had he left me so suddenly?

Was there someone else?

Why not, though? He asked me to marry him. Doesn't mean he is going to be exclusive. Of course, not. He has some—make that many—women lined up and waiting for him...this entire time. It's not like he is going to stop that when we are married. Married? Ha. The entire thing is a bloody charade. A stupid game to please his ego... He'd chosen me because he could. Clearly, that's the answer I'd get if I asked him, so why bother? And from what I had overheard...? Fuck the man. Did he have to declare the status of our relationship out loud to his friends? Is nothing about our relationship a secret from the rest of the world? There is so much he isn't telling me...so much unsaid stuff between us. What a pitiful turn of events this is.

I race toward the main doors of the hotel.

"Stop her!" his voice growls from somewhere behind me. I increase my pace. The doorman steps in my path.

"Get out of my way."

"I'm sorry, I can't."

I race around him, reach the doors, and another liveried man plants his body between me and my exit.

Fuck, fuck, fuck.

"I have to get out of here."

"Sorry Ma'am," he shifts his weight from foot to foot but doesn't move.

I feint right, but he moves with me. I brush past, make to step out from under his arm. Another man steps up from outside.

Fuck, I have no way out.

I grit my teeth, "Get out of my way."

He looks up, and past me. His throat moves as he swallows, "Please accept my apologies, but he pays my wages, you understand."

"Of course, he does," I swallow down angry tears, pull out my cell phone, "and if you don't let me through, I'm calling the police."

"You're not."

His voice sounds so near, so close. If I turn, I'll find him at my heels, behind me, close enough for me to lean back and allow my head to fall back against his shoulder...for him to lower his cheek next to mine, wrap his arm around my waist, pull me up against him and—I raise the phone, begin to punch in the numbers. He snatches it from me.

"Hey," I pivot around, and he holds it up and out of my reach.

"Give that back," I scowl.

"Take it, if you can reach it."

I stand up on my tiptoes, swoop up my arms. My fingertips reach halfway up his biceps.

"You'll have to do better than that," he chuckles.

I twist my lips together. Ridiculous. I am not indulging in this kind of childish behavior. All of this may be a laugh for him, but for me, it is the veritable end of the bloody line. I fold my arms over my chest, draw myself up to my full height. "Don't toy with me, Saint."

"Oh?" He tosses the phone to his other hand. "Come and get it."

I frown. The only way to get my phone is if I find a way to climb him.

He smirks.

Oh, no, I am not falling for that. "You want my phone? Fine, keep it then."

I turn and march toward the exit.

This time, no one stops me. I stalk out of the hotel and the cold air assails me. Goosebumps pop on my skin. I hunch my shoulders against the wind, walk up the sidewalk. Where am I going? What am I going to do? That jerk was my last hope, and surely, I have blown any chance of having any kind of relationship with him. Why did I have to eavesdrop on that conversation of his? More worryingly, why did it hurt to hear him dismiss me? So, he doesn't want marriage or kids, and definitely not with me. Tears push at the backs of my eyes. I will not cry, will not. I knew all of this... Nothing is a surprise. Not after how he'd treated me—

He'd treated my body with scant regard, he'd used me for his pleasure, then he'd brought me to the edge, over and over again...until every part of me yearns for his touch. For the rough caress of his fingers between my thighs, inside my cunt, pinching, tugging on my sensitive nipples. I shudder, and it's not from the cold. My belly aches, and it's not only because I can't remember when I last ate. My sex clenches and it's because... I hate him, I do; and yet, every time he treats me like I am nothing, each time he shows me how little I mean to him...it turns me on. How sick is that? Why do I have to be this attracted to him? Why is it that the more he ignores me...the more I want to throw myself at his feet and ask him to take me...to not give me a choice? Bloody hell. I squeeze my fingers at my sides. Tears fill my eyes, blocking out my sight again. The heel of my stilettos catches on the pavement. I trip forward. The stony surface races up to meet me...then halts.

I'm pulled back and around.

Heat slams into my chest and my nipples are flattened against a hard surface—not the ground where I was headed... No, this is...much worse. I look up and into the burning blue eyes of the man who holds my life in his hands...and who isn't aware of it. "Saint," his name tumbles from my lips like a prayer... Or a plea for help. How strange.

How could one man be both my worst enemy and the only one I'd trust to have my back, literally?

"For a sophisticated woman of the world, you sure can't see where you're going," his voice sounds from above me.

"For a billionaire with many business interests, you sure spend too much time stalking me."

His jaw tics; his left eyelid throbs. He releases me so quickly that I stumble back. He shoves my phone into my chest. Before I can reach for it, he's withdrawn his hand. The device slides down my body; I snatch it up. "Asshole."

He chuckles, "I much prefer, alphahole."

Anger sears my chest and the band around my ribcage tightens. My vision narrows and something inside of me snaps. I hook my leg around his, tug. His gaze widens, then his body arcs back.

Saint

"Fuck." My back hits the sidewalk, my head connecting with the concrete.

Stars flash behind my eyes and spots of black crowd my vision. I lay there winded, stare up at the gray London skies. That, at least, is predictable. Shades of darkness envelop this city in wintertime. It's what I like best about it. Shrouded in mysterious light, it always appears in mourning or about to regret the actions of its past, exactly like my life. I blink and the thought dissipates. Fucking hell, the knock to my head clearly impacted more than my thinking process. It seems to have shaken loose emotions I hadn't realized I have.

Huge green eyes fill my line of sight, "Saint?"

I scan her gorgeous features—her pale cheeks, the bitten lips that only enhance her fragility. Except she isn't. It is all an act, this vulnerability that she wears around herself like a cloak, to mask the deviousness that lies inside.

"I know."

Only when I hear the words do I realize that I have spoken aloud.

"Wh...what do you mean?"

"I know why you asked to become my sub."

She purses her lips, adopts an expression of disinterest.

"Don't you want to know why, Gigi?"

She shakes her head.

"Come on, aren't you a little bit curious?"

She glances away, "I think you should get up from the ground." She looks around her, "It's dirty."

"But so are you..."

"What?" She whips her head around.

"Is that why I am attracted to you?" I glare at her.

She trembles. "You...you don't know what you're saying."

"Perhaps, for the first time, I do." I hold out my arm.

She stares at my proffered hand, "What...what are you doing?"

"You felled me, you can help me up, hmm?"

She swallows.

"Go on, Gigi, I don't bite." And I always speak the truth...not. "Don't keep me waiting."

Footsteps approach us.

She flinches.

"Do it before they get here and I'll forget this happened."

She looks up at my face, reaches for my hand.

I grab it, then pull back.

She loses her balance. The next second she falls onto me. "The hell?" She sputters, "You tricked me."

"No more than you're trying to trick me with the lies you're spinning around me, sweetheart." I bury my fingers in her hair, yank her close. "I am going to show you what happens when you poke the lion in its den."

"Saint, no—"

I smash my mouth to hers, thrust my tongue in between her lips. I devour her, suck on her with such force that our teeth clash. I hold her in place and consume her. Swipe my tongue across the roof of her mouth. I am going to punish her for what she's doing to me. For weaving a spell around me from the first time I'd met her. Enticing me, luring me into her trap. If she thinks I am going into this blindfolded, she is so fucking wrong. I am going to give her a taste of how it will be from now on. Me—the marauder, the destroyer... And she—she'll bloody well accept everything I give her, and more. I tighten my grip until my fingertips dig into her scalp, and I fucking mouth fuck her.

Her body slackens, then she kisses me back in earnest. She sucks on my tongue, pushes her lips into mine, opens her mouth completely, allowing me to take and take and... My chest lurches; my groin hardens. Blood drains to my cock so fast and so hard that my head spins. Fucking hell.

I tilt my head and she mirrors my action in the opposite way. The yin to my yang. The bloody darkness to everything that is wrong in me. The tempest to my storm. The turbulence to the raging intensity that roils in me, that shoves at my ribcage, that urges me to lean up, until her upper body is curved in sync with mine. We're not in resonance though. Nothing about us matches. Everything about this is wrong, which is why I must show her exactly how she is going to pay. I tear my mouth from hers, then push up to my feet, taking her with me.

I release her, and she stumbles, then rights herself.

Her features are frozen, her mouth slightly parted, those beautiful lips swollen and throbbing. Only when my breath raises the hair of her forehead, do I realize that I have leaned into her.

I jerk back. Then, pulling out the handkerchief from my breast pocket, I pat at my lips, "Your technique sucks, doll."

She whitens. The hollows under her cheeks throw her features into sharp relief.

"Jerk," she snarls.

I laugh, "I'm just getting started." I pocket the piece of linen, then yawn, "You'd better come in. You don't want to keep my friends waiting."

She blinks, "Friends? What do you mean?"

"Oh, didn't I tell you? We're getting married in..." I look at the watch on my wrist, "...precisely half an hour."

I turn to the hotel as my guards from the hotel arrive. "Are you okay, Sir?" one of them asks.

"I'm fine." I run my fingers through my hair.

The other guard walks past me, "You all right, Ma'am?" he asks Victoria.

She nods, takes a step forward and seems to lose her footing. He steadies her, and something inside of me explodes, "Get away from her!" The next second, I find my hands twisted in his collar. I plant myself between him and Gigi, "Don't you fucking touch her."

He raises his hands, "Uh, sorry, Sir, I was trying to help—"

"Well she doesn't need your help, so back the fuck off."

"Of course, Sir." He glances toward Victoria and my vision tunnels. I haul him by his collar and—

"Saint."

I raise my fist; she wraps her fingers around my bicep. "Saint, stop."

Her touch sinks in through the fabric of my tailormade suit. Her touch is more precious... The fuck am I thinking? I shake off her hand, release the man's collar. He lurches back, then squares his shoulders.

"Leave us," I snarl.

He pivots and walks back to the hotel.

I turn on Victoria, "Never stop me again in public, do you understand?"

She stiffens, then draws herself up to her full height, which puts her at eye level with my chest. Shit, she is tinier than the mental image I have of her. Perhaps it is her resilience, her feistiness, the layers of prickliness that cover her like a second skin, that contribute to her larger-than-life image, huh? And the fuck am I thinking, waxing lyrical about this woman, huh?

"Answer me," I growl.

She opens her mouth, when a voice interrupts us.

"Sometimes we are less unhappy in being deceived by those we love than in being undeceived by them..."

"The fuck?" I angle to the side, spot the owner of the voice, a man sprawled against the wall of the hotel.

He's dressed in a worn shirt and pants which have seen better days. His matted hair flows to his shoulders. He holds up a sign, that reads,

"And thou art dead, as young and fair..."

"Why didn't you complete the fucking poem?" I growl.

He appraises my features. The expression on his face is neither happy, nor sad. He's content. Yeah, fucking imagine that? Bloody blissful motherfucker. This is what not having money can buy you, huh? Peace. I laugh. Then unhook the bloody watch on my wrist. I drop it into his upturned hat.

A sharp inhalation of breath draws my attention. I glance over my shoulder to find Victoria's gaze fixed on the piece of jewelry I'd dropped.

"Why did you do that?"

"Why not?" I rub the back of my neck. "Why should I be the only one to suffer excesses?"

"That was what, £5000?"

"£30,000."

Her jaw drops open. "You didn't..."

"I can do anything I want, Victoria."

She wrings her fingers in front her, her gaze roaming over my face, then flicking back to Homeless Guy.

I turn to the man. "Fucking Byron, I hate him."

The man grins, his teeth bright against his lips. Huh? For someone who lives on the streets, he sure has perfect teeth.

"Have a cigarette, mate?" He glances between us.

I glare at him, then pull out the pack of cigarettes in my pocket and hand a cigarette over.

"You smoke?" She scowls. "I didn't know that."

"Lots you don't know about me."

She walks up to stand next to me, grabs the packet from my hand.

"Hey," I protest.

"These things will kill you," she scoffs, then drops the entire pack in his lap.

"You worried about me?" I frown

"Of course, not." Her face flushes.

Homeless guy looks between us. "Lighter?" he asks.

"Jesus, fuck. Get your own bloody light."

"Don't swear," she scolds me.

"I'll do whatever the bloody fuck I want." I dig out my lighter and hand it over to Homeless Guy, who promptly pulls out a cigarette and lights up.

Answer: Tulips*

Victoria

I did. I had said 'yes' to him. Oh, hell.

I stare at my reflection in the mirrored surface of the elevator doors. Saint towers next to me, his frame dwarfing mine, his shoulders taking up too much space, his presence drawing in all of the oxygen in the enclosed space. I take a breath and my nose fills with his scent—dark, edgy, packed with pheromones that find their way unerringly to the source of my emptiness... My empty core. Hell.

"Is that a 'No'?" he asks.

I should say the word. Tell him it's all off. That I don't care what he's found out, that I don't give a damn about the Mafia and their hold on me. I should escape from this trap that's closing in on me, leave everything and everyone behind... Take on a new name, move to another city, another country... But where could I go?

I don't have a passport. The Mafia took that from me after I reached England. Even the possessions I left behind in his suite belong to this character that I am playing.

If it were only me, I wouldn't hesitate to leave, but Nina's life is at stake. She is in their clutches. If I do anything wrong, she'll pay the price. How could I bear that? I can't let anything happen to her.

I have to find a way out of this... Have to do what is needed without giving away the last bit of my pride.

"No."

"Excuse me?"

I turn to him. "You heard me. The answer is 'No.'"

He stares at me, then spots of color burn on his face. His jaw tics. A nerve pops at his temple. "Say that again."

I angle my body, plant my feet firmly into the floor and face him. I look him in the eye and repeat, "I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man on this earth."

His eyes gleam and he peels back his lips. A dense cloud of anger rolls off of him. It slams me in the chest and I gasp, take a step back.

He lowers his chin. My nerve endings crackle.

Shit, shit, shit. What have I done? I am fighting something inevitable here... I mean, I only meant to show him I'm not a pushover. It's the only way to hold onto his respect... Not that he has much of that. Not for much of the world, and definitely not for me. The only person he seems to have an ounce of caring for...is the person who calls him at the most inopportune times, the one for whom he seems to drop everything and run. Is it a woman?

What do I care who it is? What matters is that he is here, trying to steamroll me into doing what he wants and... I am not going to be taken for granted. Not like this and not by him. So I need his help...but damn it, I hadn't imagined the attraction between us either. He wants me, if for no other reason than to fuck me... As long as I manage to foster a smidgeon of that interest, I'll be able to reel him in... I hope.

The strap of my bag slides off my shoulder before it thumps to the floor between us.

He kicks it aside.

"Hey, that's the only one I have."

"Fuck that, I'll buy you a shopful of bags," he leans in close, "and fuck you for what you do to me, Gigi."

He drops his head until his lips are positioned a millimeter from mine. Close enough that I can make out the lines radiating from the edges of his eyes. Close enough that I can see the little scar that nicked the edge of his left eyebrow—why hadn't I noticed that before? Close enough that—he swipes out his hand. I flinch. The next second the elevator lurches to a stop.

"What was that?"

"What do you think?"

I turn to find the stop button blinking. My eyes bug out... "You...you The hell did I say?.."

"Paused the elevator? The least I could do to convince my errant bride, hmm?"

"Not your bride."

"That's right." He twines a lock of my hair around his fingers, then brings it up to his nose to smell it. "But you will be."

"No."

"Yes."

"Make me."

Satisfaction is etched into every hard line of his face.

"I... I...didn't...mean..."

He raises one eyebrow, "Oh, I think you did mean..." I start to shake my head, but he places a finger across my mouth, "Shh." The warmth seeps into my skin, the scent of him crowds me, and his dominance pushes down on my shoulders, holds me in place.

I draw in a breath and my chest heaves.

He presses down on my lower lip. I open my mouth.

He eases his finger inside and I curl my tongue around the tip.

His blue eyes deepen into an aquamarine. Flecks of silver burst to life deep inside. An answering tremor coils in my belly. My toes curl. My scalp tingles. And all this when he isn't doing anything more than touching me with his fingertip.

"I know what you need," his hard voice chafes my skin. My sex clenches, the emptiness inside of me roaring to life.

I want to speak to tell him, this isn't fair. He can't simply overpower me without trying too hard.

"I..."

He shakes his head.

I frown, open my mouth. He clicks his tongue. Goosebumps dot my skin. Shit, he didn't do that, did he? Treat me like I am his property? Like all he has to do is say kneel and I'll...do it. Hell, I'd keep my mouth open and willing until he'd stuffed his fat cock inside, while he'd shoved his fingers inside my pussy and commanded me to come... And damn him, I'd do it too. That's how much power he has over me.

I clench my fingers at my sides, force myself to not move a muscle, not a breath, not a twitch of my eyelashes, nothing to show how completely, utterly defenseless I am in front of him.

He swipes his finger along the inside of my mouth, then pulls it out and sucks on it. I'm instantly wet. He lowers his palm between my legs and cups my pussy through my skirt.

A whine bleeds from my lips and I arch into his touch.

"You were saying?" he drawls.

"I... I..." He squeezes my tender core and a shot of lust spirals upward. I bang my head back against the elevator wall.

He grinds the heel of his palm into my pussy and my eyes roll back in my head. "Saint... Please."

"I know what you need, Gigi."

"You...you do?"

"Absolutely, sweet thing. You want to be treated like the traitor you are."

"What?" I jerk my gaze to him. "What...did you say?"

"You think I don't know the identity of the man you were with earlier?"

The blood drains from my face. My heart seems to stop beating. I can't feel my hands or legs. "You..." my voice cracks. I clear my throat, "You know?"

"Your identity?" His lips twist. "I've suspected it since I spotted you at Sinclair's wedding. Imagine my not-so-surprised face when it turned out that little Miss, or should I say Mrs., Standoff here is a spy for my enemy."

"It...isn't what it seems."

He chuckles, "At least try a new line."

"It's true, I—"

He pushes up into my center with such pressure that all my nerve-endings pop. More moisture pools between my legs and my thighs spasm. I grab his forearm and he shoves my hand aside. "You don't get to touch me."

"Saint, don't—"

"That's 'Sir' to you."

I swallow.

"Say it."

I shake my head. Not like this. I didn't want things to go so wrong between us. Can't stand the hatred that flares in his eyes. The narrowness of his gaze, the cold edge of his anger that slices into my heart, rips through my guts, freezes my blood until I can't breathe. Can't speak. Can't do anything but stare at him, with a silent plea in my eyes.

Sweat beads his forehead. He meets my gaze head on. The skin is drawn over his cheeks as if this entire proceeding is not easy for him either. No, I don't believe that. He holds all of the cards right now. Hell, he holds my cunt in his hand. One word and my entire world could come crashing down around me. What's left of it, that is. And poor Nina— She'll be lost to the murky depths of the world that Antonio has her trapped in. All because this asshole of a gazillionaire, with an ego bigger than the entire city of London put together, can't bear to lose.

"You know what your problem is?" I stare into his face, "You can't stand to be vulnerable."

He frowns. "What do you mean?"

"You were attracted to me. You wanted me. Hell, you were all set to bed me, no strings attached. Then you realized someone had beat you to it... No..." I shake my hair back from my face, "You realized that I, a woman, had run circles around you and your uppity friends and none of you had any idea." I widen my smile. "None."

"Oh?"

"Yeah," I nod. "In fact, if you hadn't seen me with Antonio—"

"Don't mention his fucking name."

"Ah! So that's it?"

"What?" His eyebrows knit.

"You're jealous."

"You're wrong." He leans forward until his nose brushes mine. His chest expands, then expands some more. His shoulders seem to grow even wider. His left eyelid twitches. Shit, that isn't a good sign at all, is it?

"You're missing something, little Victoria," he growls.

"What?"

"I am not the one with everything to lose. You are."

Anger sweeps up my spine. I draw back my shoulders, then squeeze my thighs together, locking his hand between my legs. "The only thing I have to lose here is the fact that you haven't fucked me, so why don't you, and be done with it, hmm? Then we can bury this chemistry and get on with our lives. In fact," I bring my hand up and grip the tent at his crotch, "I'll help you along. That's what you want, isn't it? To fuck me out of your system? To have me until you get tired of me? So why don't you do it and cast me aside? That way, we don't have to go through this sham of a wedding or the arrangement of you becoming my Dom. Why pretend there is any relationship possible between us, when really, we hate each other? Fuck me already, and we can call it quits."

Don't say yes. Don't. Don't let me walk away. Please don't.

He hauls me up by his grip on my pussy so I am perched on tip toe. His nostrils flare as he surveys my face, "No."

I blink. "No?"

He nods, "I have a better idea."

"What?"

"I'll quiz you about The Beatles. If you get every answer right, I'll let you leave. If you get even one wrong... I..." He massages my clit through my clothes. My sex shudders and a tingling emanates from his touch, sweeping aside the cold, heating my blood, leaving a fiery, tangled, throbbing need in its wake. Shit. Say it, damn it. Complete your sentence.

He twists his hand with the right torque that his heel slams into the swollen bud of my clit. A trembling sweeps up my legs, past my waist, and my nipples pebble until I can't stand it anymore. I am one yearning mass of need, waiting to be filled by him. His cock. His fingers. His tongue. "Please," the word bleeds from my lips.

A fierce satisfaction grips his features.

Then he releases me so quickly that I fall back against the wall.

The climax instantly ebbs. "No," I gasp. "Not again. You can't do this."

He lifts one eyebrow. "You bet I can."

He ambles back, until he's propped up against the opposite end of the cage. His big body takes up almost the entire breadth of the constricted space. Shit. I flatten my back into the barrier behind me.

"What now?"

"Now, I ask the questions. Remember Gigi, one wrong answer." His grin widens, "One mistake and you lose all say in what's going to happen to you."

"For...how long?"

"For as long as I deem necessary to tame you, of course."

"You're crazy."

"Are you ready?"

No.

No.

I square myself holders. "Fine. Go ahead."

He nods.

" John Lennon and Paul McCartney sang backing vocals on which Rolling Stones single??"

"It was called." I frown. "We Love You."

"Correct." He smirks. "Next question," he pins me with his gaze "The Beatles couldn't read music. True or false?"

"True," I reply.

"What's your favorite color?"

"Blue," I blink.

He clicks his tongue, "Don't lie to me. Tell me the truth and I won't catapult you off a cliff."

"You're a Monty Python fan as well?" I can't stop the smile that curves my lips.

"I ask the questions," he smirks, then waggles a finger at me, "and you haven't answered the last one."

I throw up my hands, "Fine, red. My favorite color is red." I stiffen, "And did you just trick me into revealing something personal about myself?"

"Only I get to ask the questions, remember?" He angles his head. "How long did it take The Beatles to record their first album?"

"24 hours." I wring my fingers together. What's he getting at? Why is he sneaking in questions about my personal preferences in between?

"What's the make of your favorite car?"

"Maserati." I scowl, "Not fair, why do you even care what—?"

"What was the name of the last album by The Beatles?"

"Abbey Road."

"Your favorite flower?"

"Lilies." I purse my lips, "Honestly, you could have asked, I'd have—"

"John Lennon changed his middle name from Winston to Ono after marrying Yoko Ono. True or false?"

"True."

"Not bad, I have one last question for you." He grins something fierce and it feels like a cold hand touches my heart. He's trying to throw me off kilter, trying to ruin my concentration. That's all it is. Focus Victoria. Don't let him get to you. Don't—

"When is Beatles Day celebrated?" He tilts his head.

"Umm.." I chew on the inside of my cheek, "It's celebrated on June 25th?"

"Ehhhhh!" He makes the irritating sound of a gameshow buzzer and says "Wrong."

"What?" My jaw drops.

"You got that wrong."

"Can't be." I stiffen.

"It is."

"You're messing with me," I snarl.

"I'm not."

"I don't believe you."

"Check the answer on your phone."

I bend, pull the phone from my bag, "I don't have a signal."

"I do." He hands me his phone, which I notice is logged into the hotel Wi-Fi. Why the hell hadn't I thought of that?

I pull up the search engine on his phone, then tap in my question. The screen fills with links. I open the first one, read it. Beatles Day is celebrated on 10th July, not to be confused with Global Beatles Day.

He grabs his phone from my hand, shoves it in his pocket.

My heart begins to thud. "No," I swallow. "It can't be."

"It's true, Gigi. You lost."

"Piss off," I snarl at him. My guts churn and my breathing goes shallow. This can't be happening. How could I have lost to him, and on a Beatles' quiz? "Hangonasecond," I frown. "How did you know all that?"

"All what?"

"Don't try to be obtuse; you know what I mean." I stab a finger in his direction, "How did you pick up all those facts about my favorite band?"

He blinks, then cuts the air with his hand. "Everyone knows the answers to those questions."

"No," I shake my head, "They don't."

"It's all there in the public domain."

"So you read up on them?"

He raises his shoulders.

My pulse begins to race. I take a step forward, "Admit it, you did."

"Nah."

"Don't lie to me, Saint."

"Okay..." He tugs at his collar, "Maybe a little."

"Ha!" I clap my hands, "I knew it."

"Only so I could use my knowledge at the appropriate time."

"When you could take me down?" I grimace.

"Exactly." He taps his foot on the ground, "Doesn't change the fact that you lost."

My stomach flutters. What does it mean? What's going to happen now that he's beat me at my own game? He has all the bloody cards, leaving me exposed. With nowhere to hide, I glance sideways at the alarm button.

"There's no need for that."

"No?"

He shakes his head, "We're done here."

"We are?" Shit, why am I echoing his words? This entire encounter has a bit of the surreal attached to it. I bend my knees, grab my purse. It feels solid, familiar; I slip the strap over my shoulder.

"What now?"

"Now? We get married."

25

Saint

I had revealed my hand. Shit! I hadn't meant to tell her I knew about her, had planned to keep that piece of information to myself. But when she'd almost completely shattered, when her gorgeous lips had parted, her pussy clamping down, reaching for the relief only I could provide, when her sugary scent had deepened, fuck, if the blood hadn't left my head permanently to park itself in my dick. Reaching down, I adjust myself, then snatch up my phone and shoot off a text message, before following her.

She walks ahead of me, thank fuck, so she can't see the evidence of exactly how she affected me in there. I'd trapped both of us in the elevator. Because, yeah, cliché much? Couldn't pass up the opportunity to try to subjugate her, let her know that I hold the power... I sure hadn't bloody intended to hand it over to her.

She pulls the rug from under my feet... When she isn't keeping me on my toes, that is. Does she know that?

She pauses at the end of the corridor, where the double doors open into the ball room. We're on the floor below my penthouse suite on the top floor of Claridge's. I couldn't have chosen the venue better; guess the Seven have their uses...sometimes. Allowing me to get married and afford a quick getaway after the ceremony with my—hold on there.

I halt so quickly that my heels dig into the plush carpet below.

Marriage.

Bride.

This isn't real. It's a quick ceremony to seal the deal. Like it's something I do every day—not. Treat it like a painful meeting, one in which you're surrounded by opponents looking to tear you down. I rub the back of my neck; right now, I'd take that over this mock wedding.

She turns to glance at me.

"Go on, open the door," I growl.

She frowns. "This really is unnecessary. You know that, right?"

"Is it now?" I draw up next to her. "I think it's the one thing that will bind you to me, prevent you from running away and spilling everything you've seen and heard to your handler."

She flinches. "It...it isn't like that."

"Oh?" I scrutinize her features. "Enlighten me, then."

She wrings her fingers together, "I... I can't tell you."

"Why not?"

She wraps her arms around her waist, glances away.

Anger shoots through my veins. Damn her, what is she hiding from me? Why did it have to be her to entrance me so? If only I could erase thoughts of her from my mind and return to my life as it had been. I wrap my fingers around her throat.

Her gaze widens. Her pupils dilate. I scan her flushed features, the way she's arched into my hold on the balls of her feet, handbag dangling at her shoulder, yet every part of her ready, in sync with my needs, her face upturned, her breathing ragged.

"Shit, you like it when I'm rough, don't you?"

She swallows.

"Is breath play your thing, Gigi? Does it get you off?"

She nods.

"Who else has touched you like this?"

"Nobody else," she whispers.

Could that be true?

"Am I your first dominant? Were you telling the truth when you said your arse is untouched? Tell me Gigi, tell me."

She opens her mouth. "Yes," she chokes out, "it's true."

"What is?"

"All of it. You're my first... Dom." She hiccups, "And no-one else has taken me there."

"Your arse belongs to me, Gigi."

She stares.

I tighten my grip. Color blooms on her skin and she rubs her thighs together, her gaze fixed on my face as she stalks my features, trying to read my intentions, what my next move is going to be. I pull her close enough that her breasts almost touch my chest. Almost. "Say it," I growl.

"Yours," she whispers.

"What is?"

"My arse is yours."

"And your pussy?" I bring down my other hand to cup the warmth between her legs, knowing she'll be wet. "Fuck, I can feel the stickiness of your cum through your clothes, you know that?"

She gulps; her chest rises and falls.

"Answer me, Gigi. Who does your cunt belong to?"

"You, Sir."

"And your breasts?" I release her core to pinch her nipple through her dress.

She moans.

"Tell me, Gigi."

"You, they belong to you."

"And your hungry gaze, with which you watch me as I come, who does that belong to?"

"You."

"Your hair, your skin, the nails on your toes, the eyelashes that frame those gorgeous eyes... Whose are they?"

"Yours."

"And you. Who do you belong to, Gigi?"

"You, Sir. I belong to you."

"Damn fucking right." My cock hardens impossibly and my balls tighten. The doors open. I yank her close, press my lips to hers. "Don't fucking let me down now," I whisper against her mouth. "You feel me, Gigi?"

She nods.

"Saint... Victoria, why is it that you two can't keep your hands off each other for the few minutes that's needed from you to seal this holy union?"

Victoria tries to pull away. I release her neck, only to wind my arm around her waist and pull her close. She resists, but I tug with enough force that she falls into me. I keep her there, pressed from thigh to hip, tuck her under my arm. Good. I have her where I can finally keep an eye—and other parts of my body—tuned into her.

I glance at Edward, "Perhaps because there isn't an unholy couple in history who've attempted to make a go at this bloody ceremony?"

"Saint," Edward admonishes me, "language."

"Fuck, Father. Seriously?"

Edward frowns, then steps back. We walk through, and come to a halt. I glance around the assembled faces.

"The fuck?" I glower. "What's this, a circus?"

"You're getting married, ol' chap, couldn't pass up the opportunity to invite our friends to witness your downfall," Weston ambles forward.

Amelie breaks away from his side and darts forward.

She embraces Victoria, "Oh my God!" she whisper-screams, "You're doing this? You're actually gonna go through with this, V?"

Victoria pats the woman on her shoulder as her eyes meet mine.

I glare at her. She swallows, something in her gaze pleading with me, beseeching me... For what? Reassurance? Asking me to tell her that it will all be okay? Perhaps a promise that all the bad stuff will go away and we'll live happily ever after? Not. She's not getting anything of the sort from me.

I turn away, crack my neck. "The fuck is it so hot in here?"

Weston blinks. He peers into my face, then chuckles. "You nervous, man?"

"Of course, not," I frown.

"You should be." He grins, "Not every day that one of the most confirmed bachelors in town decides to walk down the aisle."

"It's a fake wedding, dickwad," I growl.

He laughs, "You sure about that?"

"Of course, I am... I mean, it's real to begin, but I plan to walk away from her when—" I twist my lips.

"When?"

"When all of this is over, of course," I wave a hand in the air.

"What is over?" He folds his arms over his chest, "Explain it to me, Sherlock."

"When we've tracked down the members of the Mafia who did this to us, make sure they are locked away, or better still, six feet under. And when she is safe, when—" my voice tapers off. Shit, do I mean that? No. I don't mean that. Did I propose a marriage to tie her to me? Of course, I did, but only so I can keep my property safe. Because she is the key to unlocking the door, to leading us to those who turned our lives upside down.

"You gonna complete your sentence anytime soon?" Weston smirks.

"No," I growl, then drag my fingers through my hair. "You don't have to seem so pleased with yourself. You wait until it's your time."

"My time?" He cups his chin, "I'm not the one who proposed a wedding to get close to an asset."

"She's more than that," I frown.

"Of course, she is...to you." He slaps my shoulder. "It's what landed you in this mess."

"Fuck." My heart begins to race. Sweat beads my palms. "You're talking as if my life is over..."

"In a way, it is... Beginning of a journey, and all that bullshit..."

"Don't you have a procedure to attend to? You're supposed to be a hot-shot doctor—"

"Who wouldn't pass up the chance to be there for one of his closest friends."

"Ha," I snort. "What a crock of bull-fucking-shit. You're here to ensure I am tied up so you can capitalize on the assets of 7A Investments and FOK Media."

"Now would I do that?" He raises his hands. "After all, everything is spelled out in black and white. No way, can I go against the split of profits."

"There are other ways to go behind our backs and take what's not due to you."

"Especially when it's money that should have come to you." He nods, "Now, I am not saying it hadn't crossed my mind." He grins. "Not my fault if I pull it off either, given you and Sinner—" he jabs a thumb over his shoulder, "are occupied with matters of the heart, and all that."

"This isn't a matter of the heart," I growl.

"You're right, again." He slaps my shoulder. "It's your dick that's leading you on, man. You should've fucked her and gotten it out of your system—"

I redden.

"What?" He opens and closes his mouth, "No."

"Shut up," I mutter.

He takes me by my shoulders. "Look into my eyes, my child. Tell me it's not what I suspect it is."

"Back the fuck off, wanker."

He searches my features, "It is, isn't it?"

"What is?" a familiar voice sounds behind him.

I groan, "No, no, no. Enough of this asinine chitchat."

Arpad saunters up, "The man doth protest too much."

"Why the fuck aren't you on your watch already?"

"Because," he opens his arm wide, "I had to see you safely married first."

I glare at him, "You seem in a rare, fine mood, ass wipe."

"Temper, ol' chap. Gotta watch that old ticker, now that you're getting into a different phase of your life. You're going to have your hands full, as it is, dealing with the wife... The kids."

"What?" I gape. "No kids," I cut the air with my hand, "no way."

"No patter of little feet in your living room then?" Damian prowls over, his golden locks glinting in the light from the chandelier above. "You mean, you don't want the little devils waking you up early in the mornings?"

"Nope."

"But...but, you'll have so much fun teaching them to play Cricket. Oh, wait, the potty training comes before that. That could be fun; you'd be a natural at it."

I stare at him in growing horror, "Jesus, I have no idea what you're talking about. I will never have kids as long as I live, okay?" Why is my voice rising, making it sound like I'm panicking?.

Victoria glances across the room at me. I meet her gaze, my features rigid. Did she hear what I said? Well, best that she knows. Not that it matters. I don't intend to get into any situation where that is a likely problem between us.

"What do you have against children?" Weston frowns.

"Nothing, so long as they aren't mine."

How can I explain that I don't want my DNA to be propagated? Not after I'd realized exactly how out of control I could get. Not after the time I'd almost killed the man who'd tortured me, who'd hurt me like no one else ever had. The only way to forget those images was to lock them away deep inside, along with my ability to feel. If I can't feel, I won't feel that burning anguish that came from my body physically breaking down—when my mind couldn't steer my responses, when I had lost all ability to be in command. I'll never lose control again. Never.

I widen my stance. "I won't hear another word on this topic from any of you." I survey their faces. "Ever again."

"These guys getting to you, huh?" Sinclair ambles over. He seems rested, his suit impeccable, as always. Fucker looks about ready to walk the ramp, while I?

I raise my arm and sniff myself. "Shit! I think I forgot to shower after the gym."

"No time for that now," he grins.

"We can push this back by an hour..." I shuffle my feet, "Maybe two?"

"Now come on, you got us all here. Hell, I had to put off taking Summer Christmas shopping, so we could attend your nuptials. The least you could do is give me the satisfaction of going through with it."

"Because, of course, that's a good enough reason to get married, huh?" I glower.

"As good a reason as any, considering you aren't acknowledging the real reasons why you're doing it," Sinclair snorts.

"And you know that, how?"

"Because I was in your place."

"Don't listen to Sterling," Weston leans forward on the balls of his feet. "He's not in any position to give you advice, considering he's got the old ball and chain firmly attached to his ankle."

Sinclair bares his teeth, "Watch what you say, Kincaid."

"Not saying anything wrong."

"Maybe not, but it's not as bad as it's cut out to be either.'

"Isn't it?" Weston drums his fingers on his chest, "That's what the pussy-whipped ones always say."

"I'm not—"

"Sin, darling."

Sinclair whips his head around.

Summer waves at him from the corner, where she's huddled with her friends. "Come over, babe. You gotta hear this."

Sinclair's face lights up. He pivots, moves toward them.

"Pussy-whipped." Weston shakes his head, "The man who couldn't stand to be among people, now willingly allows himself to be drawn into the midst of a crowd." He makes a gagging sound.

"I heard you," Sinclair glowers at him over his shoulder. "I'll get back at you for this, tosser."

"Too fucking late," Weston mutters. "He's sinking, man, and he isn't even aware of it.'

I watch as Sinclair stalks over to Summer. He wraps his arm around the tiny woman, draws her into his side. She literally melts into him and he nuzzles her hair.

A waitress materializes next to Damian. "God help us. I need a drink." He takes the glass of champagne, glances at the hem of her skirt, which barely reaches mid-thigh.

"When do you get off?"

She bats her eyelids, "Anytime you want."

He downs his drink in one shot. Then hands the empty glass to me.

"The fuck?" I frown, "What are you up to?"

He takes the tray with the remaining drink glasses from her, and thrusts it at Weston, who grunts, "Don't make too much noise, will ya?"

Damian smirks at the girl, "You heard that. I am going to make you scream like you never have before."

Her chest heaves. "I can't wait," she breathes.

He jerks his chin, then stalks to the exit.

"The fuck is he going?"

"I think he's cutting his losses." Weston reaches for a flute.

I take it from him, replacing it with Damian's empty one. "Thanks." I toss it back. The champagne goes down smoothly. "I'll be billing you guys for the expenses of this rush job, of course."

"You're a real piece of shit, you know that?" Weston drawls. "The least you could do is pay for your own wedding."

"Wasn't my idea to have it here in this hotel, losing business for the time we have to shut it down for the ceremony."

His jaw drops. "You serious?"

"Of course." I grab another flute of Champagne from a passing waitress.

"There wasn't anything else scheduled for this room a couple of hours ago, you cheap (insert insult of your choice). Were you expecting a last-minute booking?"

I shrug, "Maybe."

He hands the half-filled tray over to the woman, then grabs two glasses for himself.

The waitress hesitates, then glances at me, "Congratulations, Sir."

"Fuck off," I growl.

She pales, then scurries off.

"Take it easy, man," Weston cautions.

"What-fucking-ever." I glance around the room, filled with the Seven who are in town...and Summer and her girlfriends.

Victoria glances up at me, her face pale. Her gaze flicks to the door, then she looks away. Fuck. I can see the hollows under her cheekbones. Has she eaten anything at all?

"Perhaps it's time to get this shit-show on the road, huh?"

"We're waiting for Jace and Sienna," Weston takes a sip of the champagne. "You stock good stuff, at least. I'll give you that."

"Enjoy it, asshole. You're paying for it, after all."

Weston makes a tscking sound, "Someone's nervous."

"Bitch!" I grumble, "I can't wait for it to be your turn. I'll fucking gloat."

"Sure. Considering I am not about to fall into the trap anytime soon."

A laugh peals out. He glowers across the room. I follow the direction of his gaze to where Amelie is talking with the other women. Amelie gesticulates excitedly, then props a hand on her hip. She tosses her hair, thrusts out a hand, in what I assume is a punchline in her joke. Summer and Isla laugh.

"That woman, she's bloody annoying."

"Who?" I ask, taking in Victoria's erect figure as she stands silent, her lips curved in the makings of a smile.

"Amelie," he snorts, "she talks too much, laughs too much, and have you noticed what she's wearing?"

"Huh?" I glance at her dress, "What's wrong with it?"

"Too much skin." He looks her up and down, "Her legs are too long for her dress. And her hair... Why is she wearing it up? And those fuck me heels? Seriously, you'd think she was trying to attract every male in the vicinity."

"You're attracted to her?"

He laughs, "Not bloody likely." He continues to watch her. "She's not my type."

Amelie turns her head, catches his eye. She draws herself up to her full height and flips him the bird, then turns her back on him.

"What the fuck—?" he sputters.

I laugh, "Yep, she's definitely not your type."

"What do you mean?"

"She has too much spirit for you."

"Hmm." He strokes his chin. "Maybe, maybe not."

Amelie whispers in Victoria's ear and Victoria's smile broadens. Her features light up. My breath catches. She's beautiful, the woman I'm about to marry.

I roll my shoulders.

Married? I am fucking getting married. Had it been a moment of insanity when I'd told her to get hitched to me? Or... I can't stop my gaze from wandering over her curves. At least, she's not wearing black. Red. That's her color. Her dress is conservatively cut, but it clings to her body, highlighting those high perky breasts, the swell of her hips, those long, long legs that I want wrapped around my waist...my head—No, not yet. First, I am going to bend her over and take her from behind as I've promised myself. Sheath myself in her virgin hole... Fuck. My dick lengthens. I've never cared before about being any woman's first in any way...but with Gigi... Something about her makes me want to claim every new experience of hers. She is mine to own. To break. To possess. To use in getting to my final goal.

I pull out my phone, cue it up, then hand it over to Weston.

"What's that?"

"Ask the staff to cue it up over the speakers in the room, will you?"

"Now?"

"Right away."

He snatches up the phone and walks off.

My heart begins to race. Sweat beads my temples. I curl my hands at my sides, then glance over again.

Victoria tips up her head. Our gazes clash—green, emerald seas, stormy with a hint of wariness, fortified with that strength I am coming to associate with her.

She swallows and her lips tremble. I take in her features—her flushed cheeks, the straight set of her shoulders, her stiff spine. She is ready to take on the world, to face anything. The woman has a resilience that belies her delicate build.

I hold out my hand. She draws in a breath. I hold her gaze, jerk my chin. She draws herself up to her full height, hesitates.

She twists her fingers in front of her. Under the skirt of her dress, her thighs move. Is she turned on? Can she sense the imprint of my fingers inside of her, my tongue licking her clit, my mouth biting down on her pussy as I take her to the edge, only to draw back, leaving her waiting, wanting, needing.

The opening notes of All You Need is Love by The Beatles fill the room.

The crowd quietens. Her gaze widens.

Come. I curl my fingers.

She takes a step toward me, and another.

I stay where I am, brace my feet against the plush carpets, hand outstretched, stalking her as she closes the distance between us.

When she reaches me, she pauses, glances down at my hand, then back at my face.

I allow a smirk to curl my lips. Make a dash for it. Try to escape. Do it.

She places her hand in mine.

I blink.

The warmth of her fingers bleeds into my skin. Her touch is soft, like the petals of a flower, waiting to be torn from its stem. Her palm trembles and she draws back, but I shackle her wrist with my fingers.

She shudders.

I draw her close, weave my fingers with hers. Stare down into her eyes, drinking from that glimmer of anticipation, of surprise, of...Something more I can't quite define. Her scent crowds my nostrils—subtle lilies, a dash of pepper, laced with that sweetness that tells me she's aroused. My groin hardens and my cock thickens. I squeeze her fingers.

"You chose a song from The Beatles," she whispers.

"This is your day." I nod toward the front of the room. "Ready, Gigi?"

*What did the hamburger buy his sweetheart?
Answer: An onion ring*

Victoria

No, I'm not ready. I'll never be ready. He walks forward and I follow. Not that I have a choice. Not that I am going to resist. It doesn't matter what transpired before this. I am here... With him now... Next to him, as he moves toward where Edward, the same minister who married Sinclair and Summer, waits for us.

"What about the paperwork for the wedding?" I whisper.

"It's taken care of."

"But how...?"

He angles an eyebrow, "Does it matter? I am the third richest man in the country. Do you think something like paperwork would get in the way of me from getting what I want?"

Right. Of course. Anything can be bought with money...except me. He probably thinks that's why I'm standing here in this sham of a ceremony, tying myself to him for as long as he intends to have me? I stiffen my shoulders. I've got this. I'll let him think what he wants. I can get through this. I've made it this far... I'm approaching the last mile. This will make it easier for me to keep an eye on him. Surely, the proximity will ensure I can wrangle my way into his affairs.

I lean into him, "What were the results of the blood tests?"

"You're clean. So am I." He angles his head, "Not that we needed to know in advance of tonight."

Huh? I furrow my brows. Does that mean...? He doesn't intend to fuck me on our wedding night? And it would be fucking, make no mistake. He's told me, in no uncertain terms, that he means to have me... Or perhaps he's not the bare back kind...? A hollowness grips my stomach.

"Funny," I whisper back, "I would have thought you'd be the kind who wouldn't let a rubber come between you and your wife."

"You're right," his lips twist.

"I am?"

He nods. "If you had been my wife, I'd have taken your cunt with nothing except our skin separating us. I'd have shagged you raw, until we melded into each other... But then... You're not my wife, are you...? Not really."

My heart twists. A pressure builds behind my eyes, "You're a piece of shit, you know that?"

"Takes one to know one, dear Gigi."

"I fucking hate you." I try to pull away.

His grip tightens and he holds me in place. "Hang onto that sentiment. You'll need it for what I have planned for us tonight."

The song dies away.

That he'd remembered to choose a song...for this event. What does it mean? Does he have feelings for me, despite his tendency to retreat into his douchebag extraordinaire persona?

My head spins.

My belly lurches and my pulse begins to thud. His cryptic comments are getting to me. Hell. What am I doing? Why am I here? Had I actually thought I'd get through this and find a way to rescue Nina?

I glance around the space. Amelie's gaze meets mine. She smiles, holds up crossed fingers, then pushes the tips against her forehead and mimics a gun firing off. A chuckle wells up, even as a tear trails down my cheek.

I will not cry. Will not. I swallow down the lump that blocks my throat. Just get through this. One step at a time. I can do this. I can.

Next to Amelie, Summer catches my eye. Her features are pinched. She looks from me to Saint, then back to me. Her forehead creases. I read the question on her face. How I wish I could confide in her. We aren't related by blood, but I'd trusted Summer on sight.

Just like I'd been attracted to Saint right away. And see where that got me? I force my lips to curve into a smile. Then lean into Saint. He stiffens. Then he brings my fingers up to his lips and kisses my knuckles.

Isla sighs.

Amelie's gaze widens.

Even Summer's features relax at that.

Of course, these women are Summer's friends, and she's married to Sinclair, one of the Seven and among Saint's closest friends. Clearly, they would believe him. They have no reason to doubt his tactics. I have no one here on my side. It is me against all of them. Me and my wits. We are well-acquainted with this situation. I turn forward as Saint comes to a stop.

He releases my hand.

The doors to the room open behind us. I hear whispers, then footsteps sound. Amelie appears next to me holding a posy of flowers.

She thrusts it at me, and I take it.

"How?"

She smiles, "Saint messaged me to get them from the flower shop in the lobby."

"He did?"

I glance at the bouquet of delicate blood red lilies. Is that why he'd asked me what my favorite flower was? My head whirls. This makes no sense. Though it's a relief to have something in my hands to hold onto, instead of wringing them in front of me.

Silence descends on the crowd. Edward looks between us. "In what is becoming a practice for quick weddings among the Seven, I am pleased to welcome all of you here today to celebrate the union of Saint Jordan Killian Caldwell with Victoria."

Behind me, I hear the sound of whispering, a small commotion. Edward looks over our heads, "Late but you're in time... Jace and Sienna."

"Sorry, Father... We rushed over as soon as we heard." Jace grins.

"You're forgiven, considering..." Edward nods at someone I can't see.

"We're here now," Sienna's voice interrupts. "Didn't mean to steal the attention from the bride."

I glance sideways in time to see Sienna walk up to take her place in one of the chairs. She places one hand on her belly, waves at me. "I'm sorry," she mouths.

I shake my head. My gaze slips back to her belly. I can't stop a smile from curving my features. How would it be to be pregnant? To swell with a child? Saint's child. A girl with his dark hair and blue eyes, that nervous energy coiled in her as she beams at boys and reduces them to mush.

Jace dips his head and places his hand over Sienna's. He kisses her forehead. They smile at each other in that secret way couples who love each other have. Something that I won't.

Tears prick the backs of my eyes again. Jesus, the hell is wrong with me?

More waterworks. Must be the prospect of getting married for the first time that is doing me in. It seems...to mean something. Despite the fact that it is meant to be a sham; standing next to Saint, facing the minister, seems to signify a start. A change of circumstances. Something important.

Saint shifts next to me. Heat from his body flows around me, warms my chilled skin. Goosebumps flare on my arms.

Edward turns to Saint, "Do you, Saint Jordan Killian Caldwell take Victoria..." He turns to me.

"Just Victoria," I mumble.

"Take Just Victoria," Edward smiles, "to be your lawfully-wedded wife?"

Behind me, a chuckle runs through the crowd.

This is happening, really happening. I swallow hard. My palms begin to sweat and the bouquet slips from my hands.

Saint swoops down so fast, I blink. He straightens, holding the bouquet, then turns and shoves it at Damian, who takes it from him. He glances past Damian, who's lips curve in a genuine smile.

Saint makes a noise in his throat. A warning? Nah, it can't be. He has no reason to be jealous anyway. When Saint is in the room, everyone else recedes into the background.

"Saint?" Edward prompts.

Saint squares his shoulders. I hear him take in a breath. Huh. Is he as nervous as I am? I peek a glance at his profile—patrician nose, square jaw, the hint of a cleft in his chin. His mouth tightens. His jaw tics... He is feeling something, all right. Perhaps this entire situation is as strange for him as it is for me? Of course, he's the one who proposed it, so why does he seem so unsure?

He shuffles his feet and his shoulders flex.

"Saint?" Edward asks, his brow furrowed.

"Ask me again," he growls.

Edward wipes all expression from his face. "Do you, Saint Jordan Killian Caldwell take Victoria to be your lawfully wedded wife, to have and to hold, to cherish and protect, 'til death do you part?"

Saint's throat moves as he swallows. The skin of his knuckles is stretched tight. He's...under pressure, all right. Nervous energy emanates from him. The force of his dominance pins me in place; it's mixed with something else—anger, frustration, the usual edginess, but multiplied.

He rakes his fingers through his hair. It's the first time I've seen Saint uncertain...unsure. My heart twists. A hot sensation stabs at my chest. I reach over and run my finger over the back of his palm.

He stiffens. Then catches my hand, threads his fingers with mine.

A murmur runs through his friends. Edward shoots them a glance. It dies down.

Saint straightens, grips my hand. He stares ahead. "I do." His voice is hard, confident. I swallow. If I closed my eyes and focused on his voice, I'd think he means it. If I bring my attention to where we are joined... Where his hand encloses mine, where he holds my hand firmly, his much bigger palm engulfing mine, I will have no doubt that he means every word of his promise.

I swallow. Heat flushes my skin. The blood thuds at my temples, my pulse pounding. This...this is so right... That surely, it is all wrong. This, whatever is between us, cannot survive. There is no space for it. We are two people colliding at the wrong place, wrong time... Nothing good can come of this... Unless I find a way to make this right. I have to hold on to the time I've been given with him, show him the real me. Love him, open myself up to him, and hope and pray that when I leave, he will not hate me. That he'll realize I had no choice but to do what I did.

I draw in a breath, focus on Edward's words.

"Do you Victoria take Saint Jordan Killian Caldwell, to be your lawfully wedded husband, to have and to hold, in sickness and in health, 'til death do you part?"

"I do." As soon as the words are out of my mouth, I know that I mean it. Something inside of me seems to settle. A calmness washes over me. It's as if my entire life, I've been headed in this direction. Everything I've done and experienced, all of it has brought me here, to stand next to Saint, holding his hand in mine as he turns to face me.

"I suppose it was too much of a rush to get rings so—"

"I have a ring," Saint replies.

"What?" I open and close my mouth.

A murmur runs through the assembled group.

"You do?" Edward frowns, then jerks his chin, "Okay, then."

Saint pats his breast pocket, his forehead crinkling. "Uh, maybe I forgot it..."

"Saint!" Edward admonishes him.

He releases my hand to feel his left pocket. "Oh, shit," he grimaces. "I can't believe I left it behind."

"Come on, Saint," Arpad calls out.

"Get with the program, you tosser," Damian smirks.

"You losing your touch, old sport?" Weston chuckles.

Edward holds his forefinger and thumb to his lips and blows. A piercing whistle echoes through the space.

The group settles.

"Right, now that you grownups, who prefer to behave like children, have settled down..." He trains a stern gaze on Saint. "Stop dicking around, will you?" Edward scolds him.

Laughter breaks out from the crowd.

Saint pats the right-hand pocket of his slacks, pulls out a ring. "Here it is."

He reaches for my left hand, slips it on my ring finger. An emerald, set in a simple platinum setting, gleams in the light from above.

"It belonged to my mother," he says.

I shoot him a surprised glance.

"Don't read anything into it." His features harden, "It happened to be at hand."

Right.

"You may kiss the bride," Edward grins at us.

"No, wait—" I begin to protest, but Saint hauls me close, bends me at the waist, then he kisses me. It's not hard, not punishing, nothing like his previous kisses. He nibbles on my lower lip, and when I open my mouth, he licks his tongue across my upper lip, tracing the curve of my cupid's bow. He wraps one arm around my shoulders, curls the other around my waist. He pulls me so close that his warmth surrounds me, his body shields me, and his shoulder blocks out the sight of everything else. I close my eyes, sink into the warm, trembling, buttery sensations that melt my insides. My toes curl and my scalp tingles. All the pores on my body pop. He tilts his head, deepens the kiss, tangles his tongue with mine. His taste is enticing, with that dark edge that calls to me, pulls me in, tugs me in, shudders down my spine, coils in the pit of my belly, slides warmth between my thighs. Liquid heat bleeds through my veins, turning me into a mass of quivering, burning, aching goo. An aching hollowness that wants, needs, demands— He breaks the kiss.

I open my eyes, gaze into those burning cerulean depths of his. His features wear an expression of shock...surprise...lust... His nostrils flare. His gaze drops to my mouth. "Gigi, I—"

A burst of applause rings out. I shudder. He firms his lips. A nerve throbs at his temple. He straightens, pulling me up with him.

The clapping intensifies.

He smiles down at me. The expression on his face is open, carefree. So damn happy. In that second, he's a man, I'm a woman. We have our lives together in front of us. United. Never alone. I have him. He is mine. For now. For this second. My lips curve. His smile widens, white teeth sparkling against his tanned skin. He winds his arm around my waist, pulls me into his side as he turns.

"Bravo."

"Beautiful."

"Congratulations."

"Well done!"

Confetti rains down on us. I blink, "Oh."

"Surprised?" he whispers.

"I wasn't expecting..." What? Nothing. Anything. I try to find the words to explain, but my brain cells have all turned to mush. "I... I don't know what to say."

"Enjoy it." He brings me in closer, and I can't stop myself from melting into his side. "Today is your day, Gigi."

He flattens his big hand over my hip. His grasp is warm, possessive. When he's like this... I can almost believe he means the tender words he's just said.

"You...you confuse me, Saint." I turn to him. "One moment, you're the most heartless bastard I've ever met... The next..." I shake my head.

"The next?" He prompts.

"You seem human, almost vulnerable." I search his features. "I think you hate yourself for not being able to conceal your feelings from me."

"Do you?" His gaze falters... Those blue eyes lighten, and for an instant I am sure I can see right through that façade he loves to wear like armor.

"You don't fool me," I declare.

"Good." His lips curve in a smile that's genuine, and predatory, and so... Saint. Filled with secrets, as if he senses what I am thinking, as if he knows what I want before I do... As if he can anticipate my every move before I make it.

"That will make the upcoming days more of a challenge."

"What?" I squint up at him.

"Enjoy it, dear wife," his features harden, "for things are about to change."

I stiffen, peer into his face.

He's wearing the same smile... But already, that hint of sensitivity that I'd spotted is gone. He jerks his chin, nods toward his friends, his expression still open, his handsome profile every bit as gorgeous, as genuine as he'd seemed a moment ago. But his eyes... Those blue eyes are dark...almost black. Was everything he'd done today an act? Had he been leading me on? And I'd wanted to believe him. For a few minutes there, I had dared to hope.

His lips curl.

He'd taken me to the edge, pretended to care, then he'd pushed me over and watched me fall.

"You bastard," I try to pull away.

His hand around my waist is solid though. He keeps me pinned to his side. He lowers his chin, nuzzles my temple, "Keep that smile, Gigi. You don't want them to know that something is wrong, do you?"

I swallow.

"Do you, pet?"

"No... No."

"Good." He kisses my temple, his breath hot like a lover's touch, "Store up the happy memories, for soon you'll wish that you never set eyes on me."

"Newsflash, asshole," I keep the smile plastered to my face, "I already wish I'd never met you, that I had never agreed to come to England, that I'd never posed as Adam's wife, that—" I stop to take a breath.

He grins down at me, "Go on, don't let me stop you."

I grit my teeth, hold his burning gaze. How had I thought there was passion in his eyes? It's a need to get even. To get revenge. That's all this is about. Retribution. I am a pawn caught between two opposing forces, and by the time this charade is over, there may be nothing left of me—nothing but this burning need to avenge myself. With Saint. With the Mafia. With Antonio... With everyone who has taken advantage of me. I've had enough of being backed into a corner, of being underestimated. I am going to make sure this brute realizes it too, by the time I am done.

I direct my next words at him with deadly intent, "I wish that I had asked someone else to be my Dom."

His gaze sharpens and his fingers dig into the curve of my hip.

"You dare say that to my face?" His nostrils flare. Color sears his cheeks, and damn it, but my sex clenches instantly. Goosebumps flare on my skin and a shiver runs down my back. This...this is what I want. Saint—angry, blinded with jealousy, coming for me, taking me with no quarter. This language I understand. This passion is what we have in common and I am going to make the most of it.

"Why, worried you won't measure up to Adam Rhodes?"

A vein pops at his temple. "You know how to push me over the edge, don't you?"

"Maybe I should have asked one of your friends." I glance past him to where Damian is watching us. He raises the bouquet of flowers. I smile, shake my head, "Yeah, who better than a rock star god to take my virgin ass?"

"You cunt," he bares his teeth, and a little thrill shudders down my spine. This is it. I've done it now. I've broken through his control. What is he going to do next?

Saint doesn't disappoint.

He bends his knees, peers into my eyes, "I think it's time we consummated this marriage, don't you?"

Saint

"Turn around and hug the post."

She tips up her head and glares at me.

I'd rushed her up here to my suite in the penthouse of the hotel, without bothering to say goodbye to my friends. If they thought I was in a hurry to get her alone in a room, well, that's too bad. I don't give a fuck what kind of impression I left behind. All that matters is getting her to obey. To bend her to my will, to lean her over the bed and teach her a lesson. But first— "Do it," I growl from my position near the doorway.

She hesitates, twists her fingers. The emerald of her ring catches the light from above and sparkles. Fucking hell. I'd given her the ring that had belonged to my mother. The one she had given to me before she'd left me and my father.

I'd held onto it, the last reminder of the only parent who had loved me. Why had I given it to her? Why had I carried it around with me since I'd met her? Had I subconsciously known that the occasion would present itself, and had wanted to be prepared? No matter. It is done. No going back now. Not that it means anything, of course. An empty gesture. It had been the most convenient solution to send a message to the Mafia that this is serious. They'll believe I've swallowed their bait. They'll see me as a sitting patsy, ready to be reeled in by them. Really, it's a way to lure them into reveal their next hand... Meanwhile I have more pressing matters. Namely, a wife who insists on baiting me, throwing her past in my face, daring me to do the one thing I swore I wouldn't—fuck her like I mean it.

Do I want to go through with it? Am I so taken in by her that I'll throw all caution to the wind and transform this into a real wedding night?

She draws herself up to her full height.

I jerk my chin in the direction of the massive four-poster bed. The best money can buy, of course. I had it flown in from Russia. It belonged to some fucking Czar or the other... The fuck I care? I'd seen it at Christie's and wanted it. The only piece of furniture in the entire suite that I had chosen. All with an eye for my relaxation, of course. I smirk.

The pillars are made of solid oak and wide enough for the purpose I have in mind.

I hadn't meant to sleep with her tonight, but she had eviscerated my carefully calculated control, something she is surprisingly skilled at doing. Too bad. She'll have to cope with the fall-out. She is going to need all that gutsiness she's shown so far to get her through the night.

"Don't keep me waiting," I snarl.

She pales, then marches across the room to the closest post.

"Lean in, Gigi. Wrap your arms around it."

She does.

I approach her and she stiffens.

I press my palm into the small of her back and her entire body trembles. I apply enough pressure for her breasts to flatten against the surface of the post.

"Stay there," I growl.

She stands motionless.

I step toward the walk-in closet, choose a couple of ties, then turn and stalk toward her.

"What are you doing?" She half turns.

"Don't," I command.

She pauses, then faces forward.

I cup the back of her head, turn her face, until her cheek is pressed into the wood.

"Like that. Don't want to hurt you now, do we?"

"You're concerned about me?"

"Only because you're my property. You serve a purpose."

"And what's that?"

"Haven't you figured it out, Gigi?"

I reach over her, twist one tie around her wrists. She stiffens. "Why are you—?"

"No questions," I snap.

She purses her lips together, gazes up at me as I test the knots. Good. There's enough leverage for her to move her wrists, so the blood circulation will not get cut off. At the same time, it's secure enough that she can't escape.

I step back, then twist the other around her eyes. "No, Saint—"

"Any more talking and I'll stuff your panties in your mouth."

She wheezes. "B...but."

"Take what's coming to you. Don't you want to show me how good a submissive you can be?"

"You're supposed to be taking care of my needs, you asshole."

I slap her butt.

"What the fuck—?" she howls.

"Language Gigi."

"What?"

"If you want to curse, I prefer alphahole, I've told you that. I won't repeat myself again. And taking care of your desires is exactly what I'm doing."

"Not," she huffs.

"Don't mock it 'til you try it, darling."

She firms her lips.

I step back, then survey my handiwork. Her back is stiff, her shoulders straight. Good. I want her to fight this. Need her to resist this. Hope she understands that this is the only way. For her? For me? Of course, I am being selfish. I get off on her pain, on how I'll feel when I have her broken and begging and trusting only me to take care of her needs. That there is no going back now. I am her salvation. Her only hope. She has to give up her secrets to me, has to tell me why she is here. That is the only way for me to accept her... And I want that. I drag my fingers through my hair. More than anything else.

Turning, I march to the desk by the window, rummage around in the drawer, until I find what I am looking for. Clasp the pair of scissors, I walk back to stand behind her.

"Wha...what are you going to do?"

"Shh," I lean forward and lick her lips. "Trust me."

"Why...why are you saying that?" She swallows.

"You'll see." I squat down, then take the scissors to the hem of her dress. I drag the blades upward, cutting through the fabric. I straighten, snipping away at the cloth and it parts all the way to the neckline. A final snip and the dress parts.

"If this is some warped way of punishing me—"

I laugh. "Punishing? I haven't even started, my lovely wife."

She swallows. "Don't...don't call me that."

"Why not?" I switch the scissors to my other hand, then drag my knuckles across her ring.

Her fingers tremble.

"We were just married."

"I was there, you...you brute."

"Finally, your vocabulary is expanding."

I step back, then cut through the sleeves. The dress pools around her feet. Another snip, and her bra drops off. I return the scissors to the drawer, then turn back to her. The long slender column of her back meets the flare of her hips. Her long, toned legs end in those fuck-me stilettos she so favors.

I move closer. "The first time I saw you, I swore I'd have you naked and begging for my touch."

"Fuck you."

"You bet, but first—" I reach down, tear off her panties.

She screams. Her entire body curves. Her butt trembles. Her thigh muscles coil. I kick her legs apart and she wheezes, "Untie me, you scoundrel."

I chuckle, "If those are the extent of your insults, I fear there's much I have to teach you."

"Bastard."

"Technically, I am not. Though my father would have wished otherwise."

"I don't want to hear your sob story."

"But I want your sobs, little Gigi." I drop to my haunches in between her parted thighs, lower my head and swipe my tongue up between her pussy lips.

She cries out.

My breath catches, "Fuck, you're soaking."

"I...it's a mistake."

"Tell that to your body. You want me, Gigi. You know how that makes me feel?"

I wrap my fingers around her thighs, then thrust my tongue inside her soaking channel.

"Oh, my god," she moans.

My dick lengthens. My groin hardens. I tilt my face, then thrust my tongue inside her cunt again and again. I lick up her pussy juice, swipe my tongue all the way up into the valley between her arsecheeks. I curl my tongue inside her puckered hole and she whines. "Oh, Saint, please..."

"Like that, Gigi," I mutter against the most forbidden part of her. "Tell me what you want."

"You..." she gasps. "I want you..."

I rise to my feet, unzip my pants; shove my hand down my boxers and take out my cock. My blood throbs at my temples, in my balls. "Where..." I clear my throat, "where do you want me?"

She bites on her lower lip.

"Where Gigi?"

"I ... I.." she stutters.

My vision tunnels. I swipe my throbbing cock across the valley between her arsecheeks. She shudders.

"Do you want me here?"

She nods.

"Say it aloud."

"Take me, Saint. Please."

Thank Fuck. I draw back, then insert my thumb inside her puckered hole. She groans. I ease my finger inside. She bangs her forehead against the pillar. With my remaining fingers I scoop up some more of the moisture from her pussy, then add a finger to my thumb.

"Oh." Her shoulders hunch. "It's... it's..."

What?"

"Different," she huffs.

"No shit." I set my jaw, "I am going to ensure you never forget our first time."

I dip my other palm between her thighs. I cup her pussy, shove three fingers inside her soaking channel, and her entire body bucks. She throws her head back, her hair rippling about her shoulders. "Ohmigod," she gasps. "Saint... I... I..." A trembling sweeps up her legs. Her breathing goes shallow. A whine spills from her lips. "I'm...going to come—" she gasps.

The doorbell sounds and I pull out my fingers.

"No!" Her body jerks as if she's unable to stop herself. She whips her head in my direction. "Don't you dare leave me—"

The bell sounds again.

"Sorry, sweetheart, no choice."

I take a step back, lose my footing and stumble. Shit. I'm as off balance as she is. Truth be told... If the doorbell hadn't rung—as I'd planned for it to—I'd have taken her right then, in the arse, then proceeded to tear into her pussy too. Good thing I don't trust myself around her anymore. Since when have I needed checks and balances around another person, huh?

Since I met her.

Since she'd flipped the entire situation by proposing the one thing I've wanted more than anything—to take her as mine, to make her submit, to bend her will to mine, have her shatter around me. Fuck. I drag my fingers through my hair. Who is breaking whom here? I'm no longer sure.

The bell rings again. She straightens, "Saint...?"

I don't reply. I pivot on my heels, push my dick back into my pants as I walk out of the bedroom, past the living room, and wrench the door open.

A room service attendant straightens. Her face pales. On the cart in front of her is a bottle of Champagne, a bowl of strawberries, and a variety of cheeses and dips.

"Should I wheel this in?" Her voice trembles.

"No," I growl.

"Ah...compliments of the—"

"Leave," I pull the cart into the room.

"The staff and the management wish you—"

"Fuck off—"

"But... Damian wanted me to tell you—"

I glower at her.

She pales, opens her mouth again.

"The fuck?" I jerk my chin over her head. "You tell that motherfucker to stay away from me and my wife and one more thing—"

"Wh...what?"

Sweat beads her upper lip. Good god, isn't there anyone who can talk to me without looking like they are about to have a coronary? Yeah, that's where the Seven come in. Fuckers can be counted on taking me down a notch at any time. And her, of course. She can go toe to toe with me. I frown. How dare she? She is going to be taught a lesson, all right.

"Uh... Mr. Caldwell," the waitress stutters.

"Make sure I'm not disturbed again."

I slam the door in her ashen face. Good, no one should be happy today. This wedding isn't a cause for celebration. It is...a fucking massacre. Mine... and hers. I am sinking into a maelstrom of emotions, caught in a quicksand that threatens to overwhelm me. Soon, I will be in over my head. Only thing? I am taking her down with me.

I shove the cart into the bedroom.

"Saint?" Victoria gasps, "Who...was that?"

"Not your concern."

"Why do you sound angry?" she scowls.

"I'm not angry."

"Are you hungry?"

"Are you?"

"So, you're hungry." She nods.

"I'm not, and I told you to keep your mouth shut, didn't I?"

"Definitely hangry."

"I'm not a fucking child," I scowl.

"You're acting like one." Her lips curve. The glistening flesh calls to me. I could forget all this. I could walk over, kiss her, untie her, throw her on the bed, climb on top of the bed and bury my aching cock inside her soft, gorgeous, heated pussy. I could—

"Saint."

"What?" I growl, shaking my head. Jesus, being this close to her is doing weird things to my head. Maybe she's right. Maybe I am hungry. Is that why I am feeling lightheaded?

She shuffles her feet, "Did you order us something to eat."

I sneer, "I ordered something all right."

28

Victoria

He prowls closer, his footsteps muffled by the carpet as he approaches. The creaking of wheels gets louder—he definitely ordered something. That is a food cart, isn't it? The clank of silverware, of plates being moved around, reaches me.

I sense him shift his weight. There's silence then a pop. I jump. "What the —?"

"Relax," he laughs. "Thought the occasion called for some bubbles, don't you think?"

I worry my lower lip. Should I agree? I swallow and my throat protests. Cold, bubbly champagne. I hadn't managed to nick a glass at the wedding—at my own wedding. I worry the ring on my left ring finger. The weight is already familiar. Damn, that's not good. I won't be wearing it for much longer, after all.

The sound of liquid hitting a glass reaches me. My tongue swells. I lick my lips.

"Want a sip, darlin'?"

It's fine. It won't hurt. Besides I could do with some Dutch courage about now. "Yes, please."

"You're forgetting something."

Am I? What... Oh! "Yes, please, Sir!"

"That's my girl."

I flush. Shit, why does that make me so happy? I'm not going to pander to the ego of this over-the-top, tyrannical, motherfucker of a guy who is...my husband. Bloody hell. "Can I get that champagne?" I whisper.

"Of course."

His footsteps grow closer. Something cool touches my lips. The cold liquid fills my mouth. Bubbles break on my tongue. Yum. I swallow it down, open my mouth again. More of the bubbles flow in, overflow my chin. Coldness hits my chest.

"Oops."

More liquid slides down my skin. I shiver.

"Sorry, babe."

"No, you're not." I lick the remaining liquid from my lower lip.

"Do that again and I won't be responsible for what happens next."

"Oh," I swallow.

"Not that either," he groans. "When you form your mouth into that shape, all I can think of is having it wrapped around my cock."

Wetness pools between my legs...and it's not from the champagne. My nipples pebble and my sex clenches. I chafe my thighs, try to hold in the ache. Shit, this is crazy. Perhaps it's the forced not-being-able-to-climax thing that has me wound so tightly. I am on the edge of the precipice. One more touch, one more caress of those fingers in the most intimate of my places, one more kiss, one more nip on my clit, a tug on my nipples and I'll shatter.

"Saint," I whine.

"I know."

A wetness curls around my nipple. I gasp, "What are you doing?"

"What does it feel like?" He licks the cold champagne off the curve of my breast.

I whimper.

He swipes his way down the underside of my breast. His large palms descend on either side of my hips. He holds me down as I mentally follow the progress of his tongue, down my belly, to my navel. He dips his tongue inside my belly button. My pussy seems to fold in on itself.

"Damn you," I huff.

He nips on the sensitive skin above my pussy. I jump.

"You're forgetting something again, babe."

Right.

He presses a kiss to the top of my aching, throbbing, trembling core.

"Say it. Go on."

"Damn you, Sir," I snarl.

"Good girl." He drags his chin across my clit. I shudder. Omigod. That was... That is... Oh! He rubs his whiskered skin straight down my lower lips. My thighs spasm and my scalp tingles. Goosebumps pop across my skin. "Please, Saint."

"You've got a choice now."

"I do?"

I sense him nod against my core. "You answer my questions correctly and I'll let you come. Get them wrong and... Well... You'll have to find out what happens then." He nips on my clit, I moan. Hell, this... This is torture. This is heaven. This, with his face between my thighs as he presses a soft kiss to my dripping cunt. As he licks up my cum from the inside of my thigh, then straightens to press his lips to mine. "Open."

I oblige, and he slides his tongue inside my mouth. The taste of me, of him, of the lingering tang of the champagne, goes straight to my head.

When he tears his mouth from mine, I sway toward him, seeking more, wanting more.

"Saint," I huff, "Please, Sir, please."

He laughs. "Do you hear yourself, little Gigi? You're too greedy."

"I'm not."

"Yep, you are." The heat of his body recedes and a cry escapes my lips. I strain against my restraints. Reach out with my leg, feeling for him, searching for him.

"Now. Now." He clicks his tongue. "I promised to take care of you, didn't I?"

I nod.

"I'll give you what you're aching for, but first you need to answer a few questions."

"What the fuck, Saint?" I cry out. "Another bloody riddle?"

"You know I can't live without them."

"I thought you weren't dependent on anything or anyone," I pout.

"Indulge me on this one."

"Like I have a choice?" I toss my head.

"You do. Of course, you do."

Not. He knows it. I know it. So why the bloody hell is he pretending otherwise?

"Ask your stupid questions," I mumble.

"You hungry?"

"Is that the question?"

"Yes."

I pause, tilt my head. "Is this a trick? So help me, Saint, if it is—"

He pops a cracker, topped with something savory, into my mouth. I crunch down. Flavors explode on my tongue. Yum. I crunch down the food. Then open my lips. "More."

"First tell me what that was."

"That's what you want to know?"

I sense him nod.

Silence stretches. I run my tongue over my teeth, suck down the taste, "That was...hummus?"

"Well done, Gigi."

His footsteps thump on the carpet. Then another cracker is placed on my tongue. This one is slathered with something pungent, sharp, salty. The taste overwhelms me. I gulp it down, then scrunch up my face, "Ugh..." I grimace.

"Was that...blue cheese?"

"You didn't like it?"

"I hate aged cheese. It tastes like old shoe."

"You've tasted old shoe?" I hear the smirk in his voice.

"It smells like old socks. They're similar in taste, right?"

"Don't know," he chuckles. "I've never tasted it myself. Open," he commands.

I part my lips and he places another cracker in my mouth. "And this?"

Complex textures—buttery, soft, creamy... I crunch down on the cracker and fresh taste envelops my taste buds. I swallow, smack my lips. "Burrata," I exclaim.

"You weren't kidding. You do prefer fresh cheeses, hmm?"

"I never lie when food is concerned," I sniff.

"No, only when it's real life."

My shoulders droop; my face heats. "Damn you, Saint."

"Yeah."

There's silence a beat, then another. I can't hear him. Where is he? What is he doing?

Something brushes against my lips; I open my mouth again, crunch down on what I assume is a cracker. Fire erupts on my tongue. "What the—?" I splutter. My eyes water. My mouth feels like it's been doused in flames.

"Here."

The cool edge of glass is placed against my mouth. He holds the back of my head in place. "Drink up."

I hesitate.

"It's water, Gigi. I am not completely insensitive."

Right. I chug down the icy liquid and the edge of the searing pain recedes.

"What was that?" I gasp.

"You tell me."

I shake my head, "I barely tasted the food, you jerk."

He chuckles. "Go on, bet you can take a guess."

I set my jaw.

He caresses my pussy, which instantly clenches. Hell, what am I doing? I hate him, yet I need him. I can't stop my body from leaning into his touch. Push my pelvis forward, so more of his skin connects with mine. Bloody. Hell. "Why are you doing this?" I snarl. "Why can't you simply fuck me and be done with it."

He leans in close enough for his nose to bump mine. "Because that's not what you want."

"And you know what I want?"

I sense him nod. "Of course. Why do you think I accepted your offer?"

"Because you want to humiliate me?"

"You mistake my intent." He clicks his tongue, "This was so you could find out more about your tastes."

"That's what you think this is?" I scoff. "You having my best interests at heart?"

"Not really." He pauses. "I'm using you to get back at the men who changed my life and those of the Seven."

"Has it occurred to you that they're using me too?"

Silence.

"What...what did they do to you Saint?"

He stiffens. Anger radiates off of him. I flinch.

What the hell am I doing? Why did I ask him that? Is it because my eyes are bound? Is it because I can't see him, that I am so tuned into him that I can discern the imperceptible edge of fear—helplessness even—that bleeds from him? Nah, that's my imagination. There is not an ounce of weakness about this man. Not only am I unable to see, but my remaining senses have been fooled by him as well.

"It's fine," I swallow. "Don't tell me. I don't want to know."

"You giving up so easily?" His hard voice whips through my head.

I straighten. "Giving up?" I allow a smile to curve my lips. "I haven't made it this far by losing hope. It's the only thing I have to cling to." And you? What about you? Why do I want to lean on you? What insanity is this, that even bound and blindfolded, knowing he can do anything to me, I trust him...to play with my body any which way he wants?

That's all this is—a carnal need for him to possess me, break me, show me how it can be between a woman and a man. So what, if there aren't any emotions involved? It'll make it easier for me to lure him to whatever... Whatever it is that the Mafia has planned for him. I don't care what happens after that. I don't. As long as they free my friend. That's all this is about. It doesn't matter that my heart will be shattered by the end. I'll find a way to go on. I always do. I tip up my chin, "Chili pepper."

"What?" He sounds surprised.

"That was a five-spice sauce."

"You're right."

He pauses, then tears the blindfold from my eyes. I blink. His face comes into focus. "So...you'll untie me now?"

He scratches his chin.

I frown. "The deal was, if I got the answers right you would—"

"I would...?"

An understanding sinks into my mind. "You... You..."

"I'll...?" he prompts.

"You'll let me come?" I train my gaze on his face. Please. Please say, yes. Please.

He shakes his head.

I stare.

"I changed my mind," he smirks.

"What?" That familiar anger thrums up my spine. My blood thuds at my temples and my heartbeat ratchets up.

He steps to the cart, scoops up some of that last spicy dip onto his cracker, then pops it in his mouth. Color sears his cheeks, then he reaches for more of the Champagne and washes it down. "Whew, you weren't kidding there. It is hot."

"You...you horrible man."

He chuckles.

"You can't do this to me."

He cuts off a slice of cheese—not the blue cheese, something else that looks like cheddar?—and bites into it. His jaws move. He tips the bottle of Champagne up, then chugs down more liquid. The strong column of his throat flexes as he swallows it down. Why the hell does he have to look sexy, doing something as simple as eating? He reaches for a strawberry, is about to pop it into his mouth then stops.

"Do you like strawberries, Gigi?"

"What?"

He frowns, "Answer the question."

Class-A wanker. That's what he is. A douchebag of the first order. A bloody, horrendous brute of a man who...hides a hurt that is eating away at him from the inside. I blink. Shit, I don't need flashes of insight about his character... That will only elicit empathy for him. Am I looking for a spark of redemption in this guy? No, that would only make what I have to do to him so much worse.

I purse my lips and he scowls, "Yes or No?"

Shit, nothing is simple with this guy, is it? He is so...so...complicated.

He glares at me and I shiver. My scalp tingles and my toes curl. Oh, shit, this...is not going to end well. Not at all. "Yes," I croak. "I... I love strawberries."

"So do I." His eyes twinkle, "Especially when they're soaked in your cum." He steps around, then drops to his knees between my still-parted legs.

29

Saint

I press the fruit into the opening of her pussy. She inhales. I drag the strawberry up her dripping cunt, then bring it to my mouth. I bite into the fruit and the tart, tangy, fruity taste bursts on my tongue. Laced with it, is the sugary sweet taste of her cum. My dick tents my pants and my vision tunnels. Fuck. I need more. Much more. More of this, more of her essence. I swallow the rest of the fruit, toss away the stem, then reach for another strawberry. They are now my favorite fruit ever. I fit the fruit in the opening of her channel. Her entire body shudders. "Saint," she breathes.

Yeah, I know exactly how she's feeling.

I scoop up more of her juices, bite off the entire fruit. The tastes fill my senses, go to my head. The world tilts. Fuck. What is she doing to me? Dropping the stem, I snatch up another of the berries. I slide it into her wet pussy.

She groans.

"How does it feel?" my voice cracks. I swallow. Shit, this entire experience is getting to me. I set out to show her I could have my way with her; turns out, I am the one at her mercy. Starved for her taste, addicted to her scent. Needing to wallow in her gorgeous essence, mark her with my cum. Stake my claim on her before this—whatever it is between us—comes to an end.

"Tell me, Gigi." I press the berry deeper into her sweet cunt.

"It... it," her voice shakes, "It makes me want more. So much more. I want to taste it." She gulps, "Please... Sir."

Her words sink into my blood, race straight to my belly and coil in my gut. Fuck this. I slip the strawberry out, then rise up to my feet and offer it to her, "Eat it."

She takes a bite, chews and swallows. Her gaze grows heavy. Her cheeks flush.

"Well?" I frown. "How does it taste?"

"Sexy." Her blush deepens. "I mean...it...tastes like nothing I've ever eaten before."

I crunch on the rest of the fruit, toss away the stem. "Want more?"

She nods.

I scoop up another. Reaching between us, I roll the fruit in the cum that trails down her inner thigh. I bite on it, offer her the rest. Take another strawberry, stroke it up her pussy.

Her legs buckle. I grip her shoulder to support her. Offer the fruit to her, then eat the rest. I repeat it with another berry, then another. My breathing deepens and sweat beads my spine. My mouth waters; my dick lengthens. I reach for the next berry, but when I press it to her cunt, she groans, "I can't... I want..." She arches her spine, pushes the back of her head into my chest.

She parts her lips and I pop the strawberry in. She tears off half of it. I bite down on the other half, chew and swallow, then go in for seconds. I press my lips to hers, lick up the tangy taste of the berry, the sweetness of her mouth, the complex notes of her cum. My dick throbs and a pulse beats to life on my eyelids, at my temples, even in my fucking balls. I toe off my shoes, then reach down, shove down my zipper, then my pants and my briefs; kick them aside. I grab my dick, position it between her arsecheeks. The head of my weeping cock, nudges against her back hole.

I bring my fingers around to the front, slip them inside her cunt. Her pussy clamps down on me. I groan, "Fuck, you're so ready for me. Can you feel that?"

"Saint." She turns her head, licks the side of my jaw. Another ripple of pleasure tears down my spine. A pressure builds in my groin. I push forward, until my dick is inside her puckered hole. A whine slips from her lips. "It's too much," she gasps.

"Not enough." I bring my other hand around, insert my thumb into her mouth. She bites down on my digit, and I feel the pull all the way down to my shaft.

"Gigi, fuck," I groan, "I need to be inside of you."

"Then do it." She nuzzles my cheek. "Take me. Come inside me."

"What?"

"Do it the right way," she whispers.

"It has to be this way." I growl.

"It doesn't have to be like this," she pleads.

"You worried that it will hurt?" My thighs spasm and my cock lengthens inside of her.

She gasps, a bead of sweat running down her temple, "Not me, but I think you're not ready to face whatever is between us."

I frown. "And what's that, exactly?"

"You pretend not to feel anything, but the fact is..." she peers up at me from under her sooty eyelashes, "...fact is that you sense the connection, how attracted you are to me, and it worries you."

"Me?" I snort. "Sweetheart, the only thing you should be worried about is how much of me you can take inside of you." I angle my hips and my shaft slips in through her tight ring.

She gasps. A growl rips from me. I grit my teeth, stay where I am. Stay. Stay. I set my jaw so hard, pain shoots up my face. "Fuck," I snarl. "You're fucking beautiful."

"And you're a fucking coward."

The drumming at my temple intensifies. A tightness pushes down on my ribcage. Sweat pours down my spine until my shirt sticks to my back. Fucking with her is primal, angry, visceral...a messy coalescence of our combined body fluids, of lust and caution, a need to subdue and suppress, a primal urge to own, to mate. To push myself and her to the edge where nothing else remains. Not our pasts, not her betrayal, not the way I have to use her for my own selfish ends. Not the sensual way she rubs against me, the curve of her hips pressed into the hard bones of my pelvis. Not how she strains against her restraints, her face buried into my neck as she licks the sweat that clings to my skin, as I pull out of her so suddenly that she whines.

"Fuck me, Saint, please."

"I am going to slap your pussy until you cry, spank your arse so my fingerprints are etched into your memory, choke you while you suck on my dick." I search her features, "Do you want that?"

She nods.

"I'll plug your mouth with my tongue, as my fingers cram your spasming back hole, and crush you under the weight of my intention. Then I'll screw you until you scream my name and ask me to let you come, and even then, I will not. Not until every part of you has been stamped with my essence, my name written on every cell of your body... until your breath is mine, your heartbeat mirroring my urgency as I thrust into you again and again... Until you beg for release."

Her breath hitches.

"And even then, I won't let you come... You willing to play this game with me, Gigi?"

She nods

"Good girl."

Reaching up, I untie her restraints. She pulls back her arms. I flip her around, hook my hands under her thighs, lift her up and into the pillar. She winds her long legs around my waist

I bend my knees, peer into her eyes. "You sure?" I growl.

"You having second thoughts?" she huffs.

I twist my lips, "You on birth control?"

"You think I'm lying?"

She meets my gaze, green eyes clear, the smooth, unfurled calm of the surface of a lake, just before I dive into the depths. Cool, peaceful, everything I've searched for. Every damn slice of heaven I've wanted. I am going to hell, and I am taking her with me.

Her pupils dilate until the black seems to bleed out, leaving only a circle of green at the edges.

"I dare you." She smiles, a beautiful curve of her lips that punches me straight in the gut.

"Fuck you, Gigi."

I piston my hips forward and drive inside her.

She screams, "No, no, no," and throws her head back against the pillar.

"What the actual fuck?" I look down to where we are connected.

Her pussy clenches down on my cock, even as she digs her fingernails into my shoulders. It can't be. Can it? The world ebbs and flows around me. My leg muscles spasm and my fingers grow numb. I glare at her face, "Tell me it's not fucking true, Victoria."

"I am...was a virgin," She swallows, her face pale, then tips up her chin. "So what? It was an inconvenience."

"You used me?" I begin to pull out.

She snarls, buries her heels into the backs of my hips. "Don't you dare!" she cries out.

"Don't tell me what to do," I glare at her.

She throws her arms around my shoulders, leans in close. "You're a coward," she whispers in my ears.

"It won't work," I laugh. "You're trying to goad me on, hoping to make me lose control, I—

She bites the side of my neck. Buries her teeth until she breaks skin. Goosebumps pop on my skin. The pain thrums across my nerve endings and my cock hardens even further inside her. "Jesus," I swear. "You're a hellion."

She pulls back, a drop of blood—my blood—glistening on her lips.

"And it turns you on." Her eyes gleam.

I snarl, grip her thighs so hard that she winces. But she doesn't back down. I'm marking her. She'll have marks where I held her—so? This is what I set out to do, didn't I? Claim her?

"Damn right, it does. You're going to regret this." I draw in a sharp breath, and the scent of her arousal—hot, pungent, with the lingering scent of strawberries, blurring with the faint hint of copper—fuck—it crowds in on me, pushes down on my chest. Shoves at me, urges me on... Further, further. "Fuck you, Gigi; and fuck me." Oh, wait. I'd been fucked since the day the Seven and I had had our lives irreversibly changed by the incident.

I plunge into her with such force, my balls slap against her skin. Lower my head kiss her. The taste of copper, mixed with strawberries and her inherent sweetness—all of it goes to my head. I pull back, then push into her, burying myself inside her to the hilt, impaling her with such force that the entire bed shakes. The headboard thuds against the wall; a crash sounds somewhere in the distance. Fuck that. A grown boils up her throat. I swallow it, then I begin to fuck her in earnest. I thrust into her again and again. Angle my hips, propel forward. I push into her. I want to tear into her pussy, mark her as mine. Mine. The word echoes in my ears, thrums in my veins. I tear my mouth from hers, peer into her face.

"Look at me," I snarl.

Her eyelids flutter.

I click my tongue, "Eyes on me, Gigi."

She snaps her eyelids open. Her gaze locks with mine—pupils blown, the darkness so wide, it overwhelms her eyes. I see myself in them—a frenzied, pushed-to-the-edge, out-of-control male whose only goal in life is to fuck this woman. To make her come. To ensure that her first time is so fucking mind-blowing, that she'll never glance at another man again.

"You're mine, Victoria."

Her breath hitches.

"Mine! You feel me?"

She nods

"Say it."

"I am yours."

"To take and to pleasure..."

She swallows.

"Repeat after me," I growl.

"To take and to pleasure." Her chin wobbles.

"To use..."

"To use."

"To rip apart."

She hiccups.

I glare at her.

She pales. "To rip apart." Her lips glisten.

"To piece back together." I scan her features.

A tear slides down her cheek, I lick it up. "Don't stop, Gigi."

"To piece back together," she whispers.

I lower my forehead to hers, "So help me, God."

"So help me..."

I thrust forward and she screams, "God!"

I close my mouth over hers, absorb the sound. I fuck her, with more intensity than I've done anything else before in my life. I pull her close enough that her breasts are flattened against my chest, her nipples hard enough to imprint themselves into my skin.

My balls draw up; the pressure builds at the base of my spine.

I pull back, gaze into her eyes. "Come for me, Gigi," I growl.

Her body bucks, her eyes roll back in her head, her spine arches, the trembling sweeps up her legs, her breasts thrust up, and her mouth opens. She shatters, and so do I. I come, shooting hot gusts of cum inside of her, watching her, matching her, taking her with me, over the edge. Sparks of white flash behind my eyes. My knees seem to buckle under me. I stagger back, still inside of her, holding her to me. Make it around to the bed and sink down on my back, pulling her to me.

Tension drains from my limbs. I cuddle her and she turns her head into my chest. I tuck her head under my chin. Her muscles twitch, her breathing evens out.

I let sleep pull me under, making sure to keep her plastered to me.

The images swamp me. I know I'm dreaming but I can't stop myself.

"Don't go, Mom."

My mother grips my arms, "I wanted to stay for you, but I can't. I can't do this, Saint. I'm sorry."

"So that's it?" Anger suffuses my chest, "You're leaving?" I take a step forward. At thirteen I already tower over her.

Her lips firm. "I tried, Saint, I really did. But it's too hard. You know what they say about ensuring you have your oxygen mask on before you fit it over your child, during turbulence on a flight—?"

"What's that got to do with anything?"

"This is my version of it, Saint." Her lips twist "I need to breathe. I need to make sure I survive, else I'll be of no use to anyone else."

She turns away, wheels her suitcase along as she heads for the door.

"Jasmine," my father calls after her, "if you leave, you'll never get another penny from me."

She pauses at the door. "You think I married you for your money, William? You are wrong. All I wanted was you, a home for us that I could fill with love. But that wasn't enough for you. You wanted more power, more money...more everything. It's why your son was kidnapped, and even then, you didn't have the time to negotiate for his release."

"I paid up, didn't I?"

She whirls around. "Open your eyes, William. Money doesn't buy everything."

My father prowls forward. "It bought his freedom," he nods at me.

"At what cost?" She asks.

"He's free, isn't he?" my father huffs.

"Is he?" Her eyebrows knit. "Look around yourself, William, you've created a space which suffocates me."

"And whose fault is that?" My father prowls forward. "You couldn't cope with the fallout of his kidnapping. You couldn't be strong enough for him. Don't push your shortcomings on me, woman."

"Oh, so you want to talk about my shortcomings, do you?" The skin around my mother's lips whitens. "And you think you're perfect, you—"

"Stop!" I bunch my fists at my side, "Both of you, shut up."

Silence, a beat. My mother flips her hair over her shoulder. "This is why I need to leave." She waves a hand in the air. "If I stay, it's only going to get worse, and that's not helping any of us."

Her fingers tighten on her suitcase. "I'm sorry, Killian. I truly am. But you are strong, you'll get through this."

I won't.

I love you, Ma. Please, don't leave me, is what I want to say. Instead I press my lips together, force myself to swallow the scream that bubbles up inside. My throat hurts, my head feels like it's going to burst. What's wrong with me? Couples divorced all the time, and it happens to be my turn to face the shitstorm. Big fucking deal.

So why the hell do I want to bawl my eyes out right now?

"Let her go." My father prowls forward.

I glare at him, "You could at least pretend to care."

"It's no use." He drags his fingers through his hair. "People fall out of love, Saint."

The band around my chest tightens. "That's a bloody lousy excuse and you know that."

My ma wipes the tear that's rolled down my cheek. "You're hurting, Saint, but this too shall pass."

"What-fucking-ever," I growl.

She frowns at me. Sure, rebuke me for my bad language. Like you actually care. If she did, she'd stay, wouldn't she? I fold my arms over my chest.

She scrutinizes my features.

"What gets broken without being held?" she asks.

What's the answer? What is it? I cast around in my mind...come up blank.

"Well?" She tilts her head.

My heart begins to race. "I... I don't know." I force the words out. Sweat beads my palm.

"A promise." Her lips twist. "Imagine you are in a dark room. How do you get out?" Her chin wobbles.

I swallow, my fingers tremble and I shove them into the pockets of my pants, "I...I don't know the answer to that either."

"Stop imagining." She draws in a breath, "You get to imagine your life anyway you want it to be, so stop imagining what you don't want. Get out of the dark room. Face your fears. You, and only you, have the power to save yourself. Remember that, Saint."

She grimaces, then pulls off her ring, hands it over to me.

I stare at it. The fuck am I going to do with that?

She grabs my hand, pries open my fingers and closes them around her ring. "This is for you, Saint."

She brushes past me, down the steps.

My father draws abreast. He places his hand on my shoulder; I shake it off.

"She knew what she was getting into when she married me." His voice is hard, "She knew my business would always come first. She wanted more, and that wasn't part of our bargain."

He meets my gaze, unflinching. His blue eyes, so like mine, are cold. Calculating. A shiver runs down my spine.

"So this was all a...transaction?"

"You could call it that." His jaw hardens.

"And what about me?" My heart begins to thud.

His expressions forms into a mask. "You were a mistake."

"A mistake; it's all a mistake." I snap open my eyes. It's that same familiar nightmare that has haunted me for so long. Why has it surfaced now? I glance around the room; it's empty.

30

Victoria

"Fuck, fuck, fuck."

I hunch into the corner of the shower stall. What did I do? Why did I do it? I'd taunted him, until he'd lost control. Oh, he'd called me out on that, all right. He'd known I was manipulating him. Well, to the extent that someone like Saint could be, that is. He hadn't reached his level of success without learning how to manage his impulses, how to gauge his opponents and move in for the kill when they least expected it.

Bet he hadn't been expecting the surprise I'd pulled on him.

My sobs well up, the tears flowing down my cheeks. I pull my knees into my naked body as the water pours over me. My hair sticks to my face, my shoulders. I fold my arms over my knees, drop my head onto them, and allow myself to cry. Shit. Why am I falling apart now? Why are my arms and legs shaking? Goosebumps flare on my skin. My heart slams against my ribcage. A ball of emotion chokes my throat. I try to breathe, but my lungs burn. The hell is happening? Am I having a nervous breakdown? And about what? Finally losing my virginity? It's not a big thing... Not a milestone. Why had it even hurt? Hadn't I read somewhere that the hymen has been bred out of us?

It was stupid of me to have held onto it so far. Not that I had tried too hard to lose it. I had been too busy working toward a scholarship, and in university I'd focused on my studies. Been too much of a bookworm, and far happier to spend my time with fictional characters than in the real world. If it hadn't been for Nina, her... I'd have never seen much outside of the class room, either.

I hope she's okay. She has to be... It's the only thing that makes all this worthwhile... Except, when he'd taken me with that ferocity, it had completely floored me.

When he'd stared into my eyes and made me repeat those words... My sobs intensify. It had felt... Real. Like I was truly wedded to him, joined to him. He'd marked me, the asshole. He'd fucked me with a determination that had cast aside everything else that had happened in my life. It felt like I was starting with a fresh slate...

I left Victoria behind. All that remains is Gigi. His Gigi. Hell, this is insane. The thoughts whirl around in my head and my arms and legs seem to go numb. What is wrong with me? I have to get out of here. Away from him. Before he realizes the extent to which he's already imprinted on my cells. I draw in a ragged breath, then lurch up to my feet. My legs prickle with pins and needles, then crumple. The ground comes up to meet me. Shit! I brace for impact, and hit something hard...solid...warm...vertical.

"Victoria."

His voice curls around me. His grip on my shoulders is reassuring, familiar... His slippery skin under my cheek...too inviting. I can't afford to be drawn to him, can't have him finding out what I am going to do to him. Can't allow him to realize how our entire encounter has affected me. I shove at his shoulders, "Let me go."

"Not a chance."

He wraps his big arms around me, pulls me into him. One big palm rubs across my back. "Cry as much as you want. I won't judge."

His voice is soft...so unlike how he's ever spoken to me before. A fresh burst of sobs wells up. Shit, it's like everything pent-up inside of me has been building up, waiting until I couldn't hold it in anymore. A spark to dry wood and it had flared out of control. The tears don't seem to stop. My cheeks heat, my eyes burn, and I try to pull away from him. He cups the back of my head, presses my face into his shoulder. Then he sinks down onto the bench in the shower stall and pulls me onto his lap, the water flowing over both of us.

Damn it, I don't want to lose it like this with him. It's exactly the kind of weakness he'll exploit to his advantage. I try to speak and hiccup instead. Try to pull away again. He tightens his grip even further.

He cuddles me close enough for his shoulders to block out most of the water. A safe haven in the center of a storm. A shield against the worst that life had thrown at me. Why do I want to believe that he can protect me from what is to come? Why do I want to sink into him, forget about everything that has happened to me and conspired to bring me here, in this shower, in his hotel suite, wrapped around him, crying my eyes out? It makes me sob harder...as if that were possible.

He holds me tightly. Vibrations rumble up his massive chest. I press my ear closer against his ribcage. I sense him move, rock me to and fro. I listen to the purr that thrums up his throat—a low humming, subvocal I recognize. I pick up the notes of a tune that had wafted up the stairs when my mother had played it at night, in our home in LA. I had often fallen asleep to it.

Now I focus on the words of Hey Jude, tune into it, use the familiar melody to ground me. I swallow down my tears. He continues to rock me, singing the words under his breath.

"This is getting to be a habit," my voice cracks. I swallow, "You singing to me."

I sense his lips curve against my hair.

"You seriously do suck at it though," I mumble.

He chuckles. "Should I stop?"

I shake my head, nuzzle into his chest, "It's curiously loveable..." I hesitate, "or maybe I should say loveably curious."

"That's a first," he laughs. "No one's ever called me either one of those. But then I've never acted so out of character as when I am with you."

Wait, what? Every time I want to hate him, he has to go and do something which destroys that resting dick face persona he's cultivated.

He runs his fingers down my arm. Goosebumps flare on my skin and I shiver.

"You're cold." He shifts his weight under me, and I shake my head.

"Don't go."

"I wasn't..." he hesitates. "I was going to run you a bath."

"A bath?" I swallow to clear the scratchiness in my throat.

"Thought that would help ease the soreness."

"Soreness?" Oh, he means... Right. My cheeks heat, which is stupid, considering everything he's done to my body already. I've never felt this naked, and not just in the physical sense.

I bury my face deeper into his chest.

He chuckles, "Don't go all shy on me now."

I shake my head. I will not speak. If I do, it will only reveal how, embarrassed I am by my outburst. He rises to his feet, steps out of the shower stall, and walks over to the sunken bath tub. He lowers me to the edge of the tub, keeps a hold of me. Then bends down to open the faucets. Water pours into the tub and steam rises, warm against my back. He wraps my arms around his waist and his thick dick nudges against my neck. If I turn my head, I can open my mouth and take him in, and— He cups my cheek, "There's time for that later."

Jesus. What? He can read my mind now? Heat flushes my cheeks again. This is not me...really—blushing, crying, collapsing at his feet like a complete idiot. God! The hell is wrong with me? I tip my chin up, "Don't think that you have broken me."

His lips curve, "Oh! Trust me, you will, and when you do." He kisses my forehead, "I'm going to enjoy building you up again."

I swallow. The warmth in his gaze, OMG... my heart stutters, my core pulses. All the pores on my skin seem to pop.

He whispers his knuckles across my jawline, "You're one heck of a woman. Has anyone told you that, Gigi?"

I flush even more. My cheeks must be scarlet by now. He has a habit of reducing me to a puddle of gooiness, a trembling mess who has no idea whether she is coming or going, or what the hell her life is all about. Before I met him, it had been easy. I mean, besides losing my best friend to the Mafia.

I had set out to save my friend and had landed directly in his grasp; one I am in no hurry to evade. Not yet. Just for a few hours, a few days, can't I pretend that all this is real? The way he regards me with tenderness in his eyes, how he scans my features as if to make sure that I am okay. How he rubs his thumb across my lower lip, then bends to kiss me. A brush of his lips—soft, barely there, a feather-light whisper of emotion that dances over my skin, sinks into my blood, warms the space around my heart, melting the barriers I'd built up against him, against the world, against anything that could hurt me. "Saint... I need to tell you something."

"Shh!" He deepens the kiss. Nips on my lower lip, swipes his tongue across my mouth with such intensity that I melt... I ooze into a puddle at his feet.

He leans back and I sway toward him.

"Later," he chuckles. Then leans past me to empty a bottle of something into the tub. The scent of roses, lavender, and something spicy fills the air. I sniff it.

"That's a very feminine bath product you have there."

"It's for you."

"Oh?" I squint up at him. "Were you that sure that I'd end up here in your suite?"

He hesitates, then reaches for my left hand. He twines his fingers with mine, rubs his thumb across the wedding ring...my wedding ring, the one he gave me. Which belonged to his mother. My heart stutters. A warmth coils against my rib cage. The pressure builds again behind my eyes and I snifle.

"Hey." He places his other knuckle under my chin. "Waterworks again?"

"No one's more surprised about this than me." I swallow down the lump that crowds my throat. "I've never once, not in the past many years, broken down like this."

Silence descends. I glance up, survey his features. His face is expressionless.

"You don't believe me?" I wipe the back of my hand over my nose.

"Oh, but I do." He frowns. "You have a strong will behind that fragile exterior. It's what attracted me to you from the beginning."

"Because I was a challenge?"

"Not only." He scans my flushed face, my hard nipples, down to the triangle between my legs. "You were a riddle I wanted to solve. Tough, yet hurting; sensitive, yet so prickly. Soft skin that hides a myriad of conflicting emotions." He places his hand over my heart. "That push-pull inside of you, Gigi, it's a fucking potent force. It makes me want to pull you apart, piece by fucking piece to find out everything about you... Taking my time over it as I tease multiple orgasms out of you, and have you trembling, shivering, pleading with me to stop, and even then I won't...not until you forget about everything except us; except for the lust that strums between us, the sensations that spark between us when we are together, the pull that ties us when we are apart—when—"

I place my hand on his mouth. "Stop," I whisper, "I can't...take more of this; it's...too soon, Saint."

He takes in my features, peers into my eyes, then nods.

"Later, then." He lowers his head and brushes his lips over my forehead. "For now, let's enjoy our bath, shall we?"

He holds out his hand, so gentlemanly, the gesture so different from how he's acted so far with me that I blink. And, hold on, had he kissed me earlier, on my forehead? A peck, with something resembling affection? My head spins. I grab at his hip.

"You okay?" He scoops me up in his arms again, bridal style. "Gigi?"
I blink, stare as his features fade in and out in front of my eyes.

"Victoria." His voice snaps through my head.

I jerk my chin. "I... I'm a little befuddled."

"Tell me about it," he chuckles. "It's not like me, to fall asleep so soon after making love."

"What do you mean?" I squeeze my eyebrows together.

He steps into the bath tub—still wearing his socks, huh?—then lowers himself into the massive tub that's big enough for five people. He settles me on his chest.

"I hadn't intended to black out that quickly after our love-making."

"That..." I stab a finger in his direction. "Why do you insist on using that phrase?"

"Which one."

"Don't pretend."

"No, really." He scoops up some water, pours it over my shoulders.
"Please do clarify what seems so wrong with what I said."

"You said love-making, not fucking, or shagging, or screwing or any of the other ways you could have expressed yourself."

He raises his shoulders and lets them drop. "Semantics, my lovely girl."
He pours out some shampoo and proceeds to work it through my tresses, "If you prefer it though, I could say fucking."

My belly flips-flops.

"Or shagging."

I wriggle my hips.

"Or screwing," his voice lowers to a hush.

My nerve endings spark. My sex clenches, the emptiness inside of me yawning, stretching and coming back to life. Why is it that the filthiest words from his mouth turn into weapons of seduction? Why does it sound so damn hot coming from him? On the other hand, it is a relief. This alphaholish behavior? That's the side of Saint that is familiar, the one I can handle.

"Not fair," I huff. "With that voice of yours, you could literally talk me into an orgasm."

His eyes gleam.

I wave my hand in the air, "Can't believe I said that. Like your ego needs any more stroking."

He pushes up his pelvis and his dick throbs against my hip.

"That's not what needs stroking."

"Oh, my God!" I push up, or try to—for he simply wraps his large arms around my waist, and holds me in place.

"Where do you think you're you going?"

"To get dressed."

"Not happening."

"Why...?"

"Why not?"

"I... I need some space."

"Not happening either."

I exhale a breath, then turn to scowl at him, "Saint, really, you are a confusing man. Has anyone told you that?"

"Me?" He leans back against the bath tub. His biceps bulge with the motion. Hard, thick, ropey...like other parts of him. Jeez, get your brain out of the gutter. You're accusing him of having a one-track mind?

"Is there anyone else here with us?" I ask.

"You tell me." His features form into that mask I am coming to hate. The one that says: gone is the warm, caring, easy-to-get-along-with man I'd briefly witnessed, leaving behind the one I hate... And lust after, since the moment I'd met him. No... Not true, I'd lust after him in any...and every form.

Goosebumps dot on my skin. I fold my arms around my waist. "What's that supposed to mean?" My words stay suspended between us for a second.

He holds my gaze, peruses my features, then runs a hand through his hair. "Adam Rhodes."

Of course. I glance away.

He reaches down, runs his big hand across the flesh of my upper arms. Warmth seeps into my blood instantly—insidious, seductive, pulling me, grounding me, anchoring me to him. Shit. I pull away. He releases me.

"You were married to him, but..." He seems to hesitate. Huh, Saint? Uncertain about something? I tilt my head.

"You want to know why I was a virgin?" I ask.

A nerve throbs at his temple. He doesn't reply. Doesn't say a word. Watches me intently. Waiting...waiting... The silence stretches for a beat. A bead of sweat crawls down my temple.

His jaw tics.

My nerves stretch, my belly trembles, and I firm my lips, "It wasn't a marriage at all, we were each playing a role."

"Clearly."

I wince at the bite in his voice.

"He...he wasn't a bad man," I say.

"And there was no sexual relationship between the two of you?"

"He... I... We agreed to keep it platonic. He needed a woman on his arm. I needed..." I bite my lip. I turn away.

This time he reaches out and pinches my chin, "Tell me. Don't hold back now." His jaw tics. A dense wave of anger spools off of him.

"Security. It was an arrangement, that's all." My nerve endings crackle. "You have nothing to be jealous of," I mumble. "We were only married for a month."

"You didn't love him, yet you married him. Makes me wonder what hold he had on you." His grip turns punishing.

I wince, but don't pull away. The pain he inflicts is a reminder that I am alive... So is he. There is hope for both of us... I just need to make it right by him...while figuring out how to also rescue Nina.

This is the perfect moment to tell him why you are here. Confess it. Win his trust... And what if he hates me for it?

Worse, what if the Mafia finds out?

There is no telling what they'd do to Nina if that happened. I bite the inside of my cheek. I can't betray her. I have to keep up the pretense. "No hold, Saint," I lie, "other than the kind a man with money has over a woman who needs security."

"Is that important to you, Gigi? Security?" He drags his hand down my arm, until his fingers brush the ring on my left hand.

I glance down at the emerald winking against the bubbles.

"Sure," I swallow. "You've always had money. You didn't have to scrimp and save for small treats, or watch your mother work two jobs to support you, or work your butt off to win a scholarship to college. You're not the one who was left alone when your mother died, then meeting the one person who became your best friend only to lose her; you aren't at the mercy of—" I twist my lips. Shit, what is wrong with me? Why does he always catch me unawares? I almost blurted out everything that happened to Nina...to me. Dammit.

"Mercy of...? he tilts his head.

"Mercy of fate, of course. We can plan all we want, but life takes us in directions we'd never intended to go."

He lifts his other hand in the air, twirls his finger, "You mean like this."

I glance around the massive bathroom that is three times the size of the room in which I had grown up. "Exactly." I turn to glance at him.

He lowers his arm, slides his hand between my legs, inserts two fingers inside of me.

I shudder.

He hooks his fingers, and I can't stop my internal muscles from clamping down on him. A shiver of lust crawls up my spine and my breathing goes ragged. I half close my eyes, take in his features. He watches me with curiosity, a hunger in his eyes, his lips pressed together as if intent on the task at hand. He twists my arm around my back, so my chest is pushed forward. My breath trembles and my nipples pucker to hard points. I wiggle, lean in, needing him to close his mouth around them. He holds me in place.

"You still sore?"

His voice fades in and out of my hearing. I focus on his fingers sliding in and out of me—soft, gentle. Christ, he doesn't have a tender bone in his entire body, yet there is no mistaking the barely imperceptible movements of his digits inside of me. I draw in a breath, and his scent, dark and edgy—now laced with roses, which only heightens the pheromone-laced impact of his essence—goes straight to my head. My head spins. My eyelids flutter shut.

"Victoria?" His voice seems to come from far away. "Gigi?" His breath whispers over my cheek.

"You okay?" His lips quirk.

I nod.

"Are you sore?"

I nod again. He ceases that beautiful friction, withdraws his hand.

"No." I force my eyelids open, "I mean, I am sore, but not tha-a-t sore."

"Ah," his lips twitch.

A flush creeps up my throat, but damn that. I want his fingers back inside of me. Want him to do all of those things he's been hinting at over the past few weeks.

"You asked what I needed, Saint?"

His gaze narrows. He looks down his patrician nose, the skin stretching tight over his cheekbones. He jerks his chin.

I raise my head, "I want you to fuck me like you don't care about me. Can you do that? Can you screw me without mercy?"

31

Saint

Fuck, bloody, fuck. She is hiding something from me. It's there in the curve of her cheek, the angle of her chin, in how she lowers her eyelids to stop me from reading the emotions that claw at her. In how she wraps her hand around my neck and leans in close enough for our eyelashes to tangle. In what she asks me to do, "Will you do this for me, Saint?"

"No." I reply.

She pales. Her chin wobbles. Then she firms her lips and retreats. I swoop out my hand, grab the back of her neck. "I am going to make love to you instead."

Her gaze widens. Her pupils dilate. She opens and closes her mouth, "I... I...don't think you should do that."

"Why not?"

"It could...uh...lead to complications."

"This is already far from simple." Her neck is so fragile that my fingers meet around the front of her neck.

"It's not what I want."

"You lying to me?"

She chews on the inside of her cheek. "I am not going to admit the truth to you."

"I'll get it out of you yet." I haul her close. Graze the heel of my palm over her pussy. Gently, gently. Don't want to hurt her more than I already have now. F-u-c-k. This entire emo mindset is going to take some getting used to.

She whines, and I can't stop my lips from curving.

"You like that, hmm?"

She opens and shuts her mouth, "Saint."

My name from her lips sounds like a whispered prayer. I close the distance between us, "You wanna come for me, Gigi?"

She nods. I swipe my thumb between her lower lips and her body shudders. Her hand on my shoulder spasms, she digs her fingers into my skin, attempts to pull herself closer, to impale herself on my fingers.

"First, answer this riddle."

"What?" she blinks.

"Would you rather have a hamster or a cat?"

"Is that a trick question?"

"Answer me, Gigi."

"A cat."

"What would you call him or her?"

"You're asking me this...now?"

"No better time to get to know you than when I have my fingers inside of you, hmm?" I press my thumb into the bud of her clit. She stutters.

"What's that?" I slide my finger in and out of her again; she groans.

"What's the name you'd choose?"

"Cats," she gasps. "I've always wanted to own two cats. I'd call them Salt and Pepper."

I frown, "Like that crazy cat-obsessed fucker Lennon did?"

She blinks. "How the hell do you know that? Have you been reading up on The Beatles?"

"You know what they say—nothing like knowing everything about your enemy to get the better of them. Knowledge is power, and all that."

"And you, have you ever had a pet?"

"You don't get to ask the questions."

She pouts, "That's not an answer."

"It's the only one you're getting." I twist my fingers inside of her and her entire body bucks. "Oh... Saint... Oh, I'm..."

"Come for me, Gigi."

She opens her mouth and a low wail keens from her.

I withdraw my fingers, bring my mouth to hers, "How do you feel?"

"Knackered," she whispers, then yawns.

"Good."

Keeping her in my arms, I rise up and step out of the bath tub. Walking over to where the towels are stacked on a shelf, I lower her to her feet. She winds her fingers around my waist as I pull out a large towel and dry her off first, then myself. I scoop her up and march over to the bed, lower her to the mattress. Sinking down next to her, I draw the sheets over us, before tucking her into my chest.

When was the last time I spooned someone this way? Never... Yeah, that's the honest answer. So why her? Why this woman who holds a piece of the puzzle of who was behind the incident that turned the lives of the seven of us upside down?

Why her?

Why me?

Why this strange obsession with her that is quickly turning out to be a fixation?

"Saint?" her husky voice reaches me.

"Hmm?"

"Can I ask you a riddle of my own?"

Nope. Never. I'd sworn never to allow another to question me. To trick me again. To trap me into revealing more than I should, to stepping into a situation which could lead to my demise. Perhaps it is the sex... Or the fact that she has crept under my skin, or that the fucking has completely undermined my barriers...but hell... Answering one question wouldn't matter, right? I mean, what do I have to lose, hmm? Maybe it is the false sense of security that having my wife in my arms seems to envelop me in, which allows me to comply with her wishes. This once.

"What do you want to know?"

She remains silent for so long, I am certain she's fallen sleep. Her breathing grows steady, her muscles relax, her body twitches as she settles into me.

I tuck her head under my chin, wrap my hand around her waist, my palm coming to rest over her pussy...my favorite place. Yeah, that's how much of a goner I am. Maybe there is something in this marriage thing, after all? Something like, announcing your intention to the world ensures that you follow through on your word...or...the fact that I had been her first. Her fucking first. I shouldn't care, but fuck... How could she have been a virgin? Surely, she would have had partners before me? Not that she was inexperienced either. She'd enjoyed the sex, hadn't shied away from it... So what is she hiding from me?

I wind my fingers across her now-drying hair, and smooth it about her shoulders.

"My question is..."

I pause.

"Would you rather have a baby of your own or would you baby-sit?"

My heartbeat ratchets up, "The fuck kind of question is that?"

"Forget it," she mumbles. "I have no idea what prompted that question anyway. It's not like it matters. Not like this...thing between us is real or anything. It's a means for you to get what you want, right?"

"The man who came to see you earlier... He wasn't your lover?"

"No," she shakes her head.

"So he was..."

"My contact with the Mafia... My handler."

I still my hand.

"The Mafia planted me to play the role of Adam's wife." She turns in my arms, her lips swollen from my kisses, her cheeks flushed from the hot bath. "But you knew that already."

I tilt my head. Should I reveal how much I know? Has she guessed how much I've already uncovered about her past? "Go on." I pull back my arm. She shivers and I pull the blanket up to her ears.

"They...they wanted me to keep an eye on him."

"Adam knew about it?"

She nods, "He had no choice, but to accept that I was reporting on his activities back to the Mafia."

"And you, Gigi? Did you have a choice?"

"It...it isn't that simple." She licks her lips, brings her hand up to chew on her nails. I weave my fingers with hers, pull it down between us.

"It really is. Tell me what they have on you and let me help you."

"Is saving damsels in distress your specialty?" she asks.

"I'm no fucking white knight, and you know it."

"You're also not as much of an asshole as you make yourself out to be," she muses.

"Each of us have the stories we tell ourselves, and the masks we put on to face the world," I answer.

"And you, Saint, what's the persona you've bought into?"

I allow my lips to kick up, "I am not the one with the agenda here." She pales, turns away from me. I tug on her hand so she has no choice but to stay facing me. "Don't push me away, Victoria. This is our chance to come clean so we can make a fresh start of it."

"Is that what you're offering?"

I hold up her hand with the emerald ring glittering on it. "Isn't this proof enough?"

"Is that why you gave me your mother's ring?"

"Not only." I run my thumb across the smooth surface. "It felt right. When my instinct points me in a particular direction, I follow it."

"What does your instinct say about me?" She lowers her chin, peers up at me from under her eyelashes. That green gaze of hers deepens, stormy emotions caught in their depths.

"My head says that I shouldn't trust you."

The remaining color leaches from her cheeks.

"Let me go." She yanks at her hand, but I don't release it. I use the leverage to haul her into my chest. "My instinct says to ignore what my logical mind is pointing out to me—that you are dangerous, that for both of our sakes, I should walk away from you, that if I were a betting man, I should cash in my chips and leave, that you are a riddle with more than one answer as a solution. Too bad, when it comes to you..." I search her features, take in the hollows under her eyes, the sharp jut of her cheeks, "I have no choice but to follow my heart, Gigi."

She bites on her lower lip, "I... I am not sure what that means."

"It means..." I cup her chin, "why don't we trade secrets, hmm? Hell, I'll even start with answering your question..." The fuck. Am I actually going to do this?

"What's your answer?" The skin around her eyes creases.

"That I want neither." I set my jaw. "I don't intend to have children, and hell, I'm definitely not qualified to be a babysitter."

She pales.

"Does that disappoint you?" I search her features.

Her lips turn down, then she tips up her chin. "It's what I expected. Besides, it was a hypothetical question."

"Good, then you won't mind if I ask you another."

Her eyebrows knit together, "What?"

"Why did you ask to become my sub? You could have approached me with another proposition. So why this?"

She draws in a breath, "I researched you, found out about your tastes, about some of the other women." She flushes.

Something hot blooms in my chest, "Does that make you jealous, Gigi, imagining me with another woman?"

She tips her chin up, "You know it does." She places her hand over my cock, "And if you dare look at any of them again, I'll..." She squeezes my balls.

I groan...then wince. Her jealousy is a fucking turn on. Does she realize that? Sweat beads my forehead. Heat swarms in a knotted coil at the base of my belly, "What else did you like about what you saw?"

"You ..." she swallows, "You had what I was looking for."

"What is that?"

"You are the kind of man who'd know what his woman needs when she doesn't. You wouldn't allow her pleas to get in the way and that... It's not easy."

"That's an awful lot you are supposing," I smirk.

"I followed my instincts." Her lips quirk.

The band around my chest tightens. This woman... She is fucking strong... That sassy side of her? Surely, it will be my downfall.

"And what do your instincts say now?" I tilt my head.

"That you know what's best for me." She squeezes her hand around my erect cock and blood rushes to my groin.

"The things you do to me when you say that." I groan. My heart begins to race. "But, you need to recover first."

She shakes her head. "Later. I need this Saint. I do."

I draw in a breath, "One more question, then."

"But..."

"You ask."

She rubs her cheek into the pillow, her fingers rubbing across the swollen head of my shaft.

"Gigi."

"Saint?"

"Ask your question."

"Why do you live in hotels? Why doesn't a man like you not have a mansion of your own?"

"You heard about that?"

"Summer may have mentioned it." She flushes but doesn't back down, "Will you answer that?"

I raise my shoulders, "It's too much of a commitment to have a place of my own. Besides, given the hotel chains I run, it seems like a waste not to use the facilities they afford me." I twist my lips. "Nothing like keeping the staff on their toes... Every time I stay in a hotel, I force the management to up their game."

Will she believe me? Can she look past the obvious to what I'm not saying?

She frowns, then jerks her chin, "Guess it makes sense."

My ribcage feels too tight. Can't she look past the front I am putting up? Fuck that. I had been happy this far, had figured out how to make the most of the cards I had been handed. Had even managed to find a balance of sorts, thanks to my more extreme tastes. Why did she have to come along and disturb that? Why does she make me yearn for more? Bloody hell. I shake my head.

One more chance. Give her one more chance to reveal the truth. Say it, Gigi. Tell me why you're really here. Confess it and I'll do what is needed to keep you safe. I'll do anything to extricate you from whatever situation you've found yourself in.

She twists her fingers around my cock.

I place my hand over hers, "My turn to ask a question."

"Right." She blinks, squares her shoulders.

"You ready, Gigi?"

She nods.

"Why did you agree to marry me?"

32

Victoria

"It's not like you gave me a choice?" I set my jaw.

"You could have left," he retorts. "It's not like I was holding you captive."

"Weren't you?" I massage his balls, squeeze the base of his cock at the same time.

"F-u-c-k." Color flushes his cheeks. His blue eyes deepen into the color of azure.

His fingers spasm over mine.

He wraps the fingers of his other hand around my neck in that possessive grasp I'm coming to recognize.

"Who's holding who captive here, hmm?" His gaze intensifies. He releases his grip on my hand, only to cup my pussy. "Tell me why you agreed to marry me."

I shake my head; he slips three fingers inside my cunt at the same time. Omigod! My eyes roll back in my head; my grasp on his cock tightens.

He circles his thumb around the swollen bud of my clit, and my entire body bucks. A trembling sweeps up from my toes, surges toward my womb.

He pulls out his fingers from my pussy and I whine, "No, goddam you, don't do this."

"Your answer, Gigi, why did you marry me?"

"Because I wanted to, you asshole." I tip up my chin, "Is that enough for your ego?"

"No."

My jaw falls open, "You can't be serious."

"Oh, but I am, my darling." His lips twist, "Tell me the real reason, and I promise I'll let you come."

"You're an unfeeling brute." Anger tunnels my vision.

"And you're a cunt."

My pussy instantly clenches. Hell, why do these filthy insults from him resonate with that secret part of me? "Fuck you, Saint," I snarl.

"With pleasure Gigi, but first, your answer."

I swallow; a flush steals up my throat. Goddam him for forcing me to bare the part I hate to him. "After we met, I began to fantasize about you." I glower at him, "Once I realized the kind of kink you indulged in...it became worse. My dreams became steamier. Then I stumbled across that woman giving you head in your office...and..."

His breathing heightens, "It turned you on?"

I nod. "When she blew you, and you threw your head back, the chords of your neck stood out in relief, your beautiful chest bathed in sweat, as you gripped her hair and held her in place. You fucked her face and all I could think was... I am going to kill that bitch," I swallow, then whisper, "and..."

"And?" His nostrils flare.

"And that I want that." I swallow.

His biceps bulge. This was turning him on even more, huh? I tilt my chin up, push my breasts into his chest.

"I knew then that I needed you. I yearned for you to break me, to make me forget about everything else, to force me to remember only the shape of your face, the fullness of your dick down my throat, the imprint of your fingers in my cunt as you made me come. The—"

He lowers his head, blots out the world, then closes his mouth over mine. He robs me of my breath, my words, my will to live without him. He simply takes it all from me. He fucking absorbs every last thought from me. In that moment, he makes me his. He flips me on my back, notches his dick at the entrance to my pussy, then cups the top of my head. Huh?

He plunges forward, burying himself to the hilt with such force that my entire body moves up. My head hits his palm— Huh. Even in the midst of passion, he remembers to stop me from hurting myself— That's so unlike what I've come to expect from this complex male.

He tangles his tongue with mine, brings his other hand down to grip my butt. He slides his thumb into my back hole, pulls out and thrusts back inside of me. His balls slap against my tender flesh as he fills me. He impales me, fills me up, joins me to him with such intensity that tears spring to my eyes. The pressure radiates out from my core, up my body, toward my extremities. Every inch of my skin seems to flare with a strange iridescent glow. My scalp tingles, my toes curl, and I arch my back, knowing I am going to—

He releases my mouth, glares into my face, "Come for me, wife." His command rips through me, hurtling me up, up, over the edge. The pressure in my chest explodes out; flashes of white blind me.

When I come to, he's poised in exactly the same position.

"Jesus," I croak.

"You do know that's also the name Lennon gave one of his cats, right?"

"What?"

"Face it," he rubs his nose with mine. "Your hero, John L, was a cat lady in disguise."

A giggle bubbles up my throat, "I can't believe you're telling me this... now...when..." I glance down, "when you're inside of me."

His dick lengthens, pushing against my inner walls. Another trembling spirals up from where he's sheathed inside of me. "What the—?"

"You keeping count this time?" He tilts his hips and the head of his dick brushes against my cervix.

"Saint!"

"Gigi," he leans down and licks my lips. "Are you keeping count?"

"Of what?"

He pulls back, then pounds into me, and ohmigod, the climax crashes over me. I throw back my head and a keening cry emerges from my lips. Another shudder rolls over me, I pull back my shoulders, thrust my pelvis up as liquid heat pools between my legs.

"How many was that Gigi?"

"What?"

"How many orgasms so far?"

"Two?"

He clicks his tongue. "Let's make that three."

His dick thickens inside of me. Holy shit, no way is he still erect. I force myself to focus on his face, his deepening gaze, the dark hair stuck to his forehead, the sheen of sweat that covers his shoulders. I dig my heels into the backs of his thighs, push myself up, and wind my arms around his neck.

His big body trembles, and he braces his weight on his elbow, then slides a second finger inside my back hole. The tension coiled in his muscles vibrates out, the heat from his body intensifies, and his heart beat ratchets up. I turn my head into the crook of his shoulder, bite down on his skin, and his cock jumps. A shudder grips his body and his hoarse cry fills my ears, "Fuck, Gigi." His entire body stiffens, then he comes, shooting hot streams of cum inside of me.

He collapses onto me, his weight pressing me down into the bed. I wind my limbs around him, lick the blood from the broken skin on his neck.

The muscles on his back ripple. He turns and brushes my lips with his, "You're full of surprises, Gigi."

He begins to pull out and I shake my head. "Stay," I whisper against his lips.

He hesitates, then flips us over, so I am once more on his chest, with him inside of me. I snuggle into him, the warmth of his body a contrast to the air hitting my back. I shiver.

"You cold?"

"A little." I rub my cheek against the fine hair that peppers his chest. He reaches out behind me, the muscles of his body rippling as he pulls the sheet over both of us.

He folds an arm around my back, tucks my head under his chin.

"I have another question for you," I venture.

He stills. "I hate answering questions."

"No shit," I slip out my tongue and lick his skin.

His cock instantly jumps inside of me. I chuckle, "Where do you get this stamina from?"

He folds an arm behind his head, "I learnt a long time ago, that I had better make the most of the moment at hand. You never know what's going to happen next, you get me?"

I press my chin into his chest, peer up at him. "Does this have to do with the incident?"

"The girls have been gossiping, huh?"

"Summer may have mentioned it in passing."

"What did she say?"

"That it was up to each of the Seven to talk about what happened to them."

His brow clears.

"What was your question?"

"You changing the topic?" I frown.

He draws the hair away from my face, "When it suits me."

I snicker, "Do you always get your way?"

He smirks, "Is that the question?"

"Did it matter to you so much that I was a virgin?"

"Why do you say that?" he asks.

"Because," I run my tongue over my teeth, "since you discovered that you were my first, you've forgotten to be as much of a douchebag to me."

He gazes off into the distance, "You're right." He scratches his chin. "I never expect any of the women I sleep with to be virgins... Certainly, never expected to marry one." He lowers his gaze to my face.

"So it was a big deal for you?"

He cups my cheek, "If you mean, does it appeal to the primal, chauvinistic man in me that no one has been inside of you before me, that I was the first to make love to you? Then, yes. I'd never thought it would be important...and it isn't... And it is."

I lower my brows, "What do you mean?" He runs his fingers through my hair. His fingertips drag across my scalp. Tendrils of heat ripple from the contact. I turn my head and lean into the touch. "You were saying...?" I prompt.

"That making love to you was more significant than I thought it would be. My being your first was a bonus, but even if I hadn't been, it wouldn't have mattered... But you were... And it makes me wonder, why the hell you didn't sleep with anyone before me?"

"Because I was saving myself for the right man...?"

"Who is probably not me."

"My," I blink, "what's prompting this soul searching?"

"Let's see... Was it the strawberries dipped in your cum which may have become my favorite food of all time? Or the mind-blowing sex after? Or the fact that you've been so receptive, so responsive to my touch?" He trails his hand down my spine.

I shiver.

He pinches my chin, tips my head up, presses his lips to mine and kisses me. Gently. Softly. Slowly. So bloody thoroughly. My heart begins to race all over again. Wetness pools between my legs.

"Being inside you is my favorite place in the entire world." His dick thickens, punctuating his words.

"Saint," I whisper.

"Let me, Gigi." He nibbles on my lower lip, and pushes up and into me. He makes love to me gently, barely a thrust in his every move, he propels his hips up with enough torque for his hardness to chafe the inside of my channel. He brings his other hand between us and cups my breast, the calluses on his fingers setting off pinpricks of pleasure that travel straight to the space between my legs.

He holds my head in place, then places his other big hand on my butt. "Hold on, sweetheart," his whisper curls around me, sinks into my blood, wafts over, encouraging me to give in, sink in, to open myself up completely, irrevocably to him. His gentleness is so firm, yet so demanding, it's a complete contrast to the sadistic part of him.

Both sides of his personality are the same, yet different. Both authoritative in their own way. He pistons his hips up and down again and again, hitting that space deep inside of me that he seems to always find with such precision—that sends pleasure shooting up my nerve endings to my extremities. My toes curl, I dig my fingers into his hair, and hold onto his shoulders. "Saint... I'm... I'm..."

"Come with me," his voice ripples across my skin and I shatter, my entire body trembling, melting, spiraling down a tunnel at the end of which is him. Only him. His hoarse cry threads through my subconscious mind, and he comes inside of me. Sleep tugs at the edges of my vision. My muscles relax. He pushes my head down into his chest. His heart beat thuds in my ears. Reassuring. Hypnotic.

"Sleep, Gigi, I'll keep you safe. "

Victoria

Over the next three weeks Saint is true to his word.

He takes care of my every need. He is attentive to me, from the moment we wake up in the morning, when he insists on ordering and eating breakfast with me, often joining me for a quick shower before he sets off for work. So we haven't had a honeymoon, not that I expected it, but this is close. He doesn't want me to worry about anything. He insists I stay in, make full use of the hotel's facilities—the pool, the sauna, the daily appointment with the masseuse, not to mention the access to the best beauticians in the city in the in-house salon.

I can't remember the last time I felt this pampered.

In the evenings, Saint frequently texts me from the office, commanding me to be naked and ready for him, usually arriving within twenty minutes of the message. And then he'll tease me, often spank me up against the post, arousing me before fucking me with that intensity and the hint of cruelty which characterizes his every move. A few times we've indulged in more of the games where he tests my taste in alcohol. I admit, I had more luck with that than with the food. What can I say? Clearly, I am a closet alcohol slut.

He's taken me on the bed, of course... And on the table by the window, on the carpet, in the walk-in closet, where we'd ended the night tangled up in clothes—his and mine.

One night, he'd met me in the restaurant downstairs as I had been finishing dinner. He'd had a drink, then waited until I'd finished dessert. After that, he'd been in such a hurry, he'd hustled me into the ladies' restroom and proceeded to fingerfuck me against the door. The fear of being caught had been enough to make me orgasm within the first five minutes. Then again, when he'd ripped off my panties and stuffed his dick inside of me. And a third time, when he'd thrust into me again and again with such force that my body had bucked into the door, and he'd commanded me to come in that authoritative voice—the one which has me rushing to obey him. I'd slumped against him after that. He'd stuffed my knickers into his pocket, scooped me up and carried me off to his private elevator, and then upstairs to his bed, where he'd proceeded to tie me spread-eagled to the bedposts, and then... Worshipped my body. There is really no other way to describe it.

He had touched every part of me, kissed every nook and cranny, massaged every curve, rubbed my breasts, nibbled on my nipples, my fingers, my toes—all with that same single-minded intensity, as if he had a point to prove... To himself? To me? He had wrung two more orgasms out of me that night...until I had begged him, pleaded with him, cajoled with him to take me and put an end to my agony... He had finally relented then—turned me around on my arms and knees and thrust into me with such force that the entire bed had jolted. Then he'd proceeded to take me again and again until he'd come deep inside of me. He'd touched a part of that I hadn't even known existed. Perhaps it had affected him too, for he'd been gone the next morning.

I'd spent most of the day recovering.

That was two days ago. He hasn't touched me since, which is strange... considering we've had sex every night for almost three weeks... He has an insatiable appetite, and enough stamina to make my knees go weak thinking about how he's marked me each time.

Tonight is the first time since we got married that he is running late at the office. A meeting of FOK Media with all the Seven—well, minus Baron, he'd said. I glance at the clock: midnight. Shit. Where is he? Is he really at work?

Why hasn't he called or texted me?

I sit up in the bed, where I have been tossing and turning over the last hour, trying to sleep. Damn it. I have no intention of keeping his bed warm, like a good little wife, waiting for him. And isn't that exactly what you've done over the last 3 weeks? Yeah. I haven't left the hotel, content to hide myself away here. Have turned down invitations to meet the girls, even an invitation to tea with Meredith.

Amelie had called me a few times, to check that I was okay. We'd chatted and I'd reassured her I was fine, just coming to terms with my newly married status. She'd made me promise that I'd call her if I needed anything; I hadn't, of course.

Fact is, I don't want to break this pattern of marital bliss we seem to be indulging in. It sure feels like marital bliss.

Or perhaps it's the calm before the storm? I shake off the hardness that coils in my chest. I need to keep busy...while I waited for my 'lord and master' to turn up.

Thankfully, he has stopped insisting I call him Sir, which is a relief. What caused him to change his mind? Not that it has stopped him from being as demanding in his needs toward me. All of which I have been happy to comply with.

Our time together is almost up. Was it wrong of me to not try to get the information needed before this? Had it been foolish of me to try to make the most of the time Antonio had granted me? He'd assured me he'd keep Nina safe during this time. Had I been mistaken in trusting him on that? He won't hurt Nina, I am sure of that. If anything, his expression had indicated that he has feelings for her, but that's my intuition. What if I'm wrong?

What if I had been stupid to allow Saint to lull me into a false sense of security? I haven't wanted to do anything to upset the balance of sorts that we seem to have established. Where the hell is he, anyway?

I shove the covers off of my body, then forgo my clothes in favor of a bathrobe. This late, there won't be many hotel guests around. I take the elevator down to the heated indoor swimming pool on the first level. Draping my bathrobe over a lounge chair, I dive in, begin to swim laps. The rhythmic ebb and flow of the water over me, the burn in my arms, the power of my body pitted against the resistance provided by my headlong rush—all of it sinks into my blood, calms me. I reach the far end of the pool for the fourth time, when an electric current runs up my spine. I thrust an arm out, push forward, raise my eyes and spot the figure at the head of the pool. My muscles bunch, I miss a stroke, go under, then come up gasping. My heart begins to thud, my pulse beating at my temples as adrenaline laces my blood. I propel through the water, toward the man who stands motionless. Waiting...waiting for me. I reach the edge of the pool, hold onto the rim.

Run my gaze up those beat up cowboy boots, the tailored slacks that outline those powerful legs, to the tent of fabric at his crotch. My throat dries. Of course, he's aroused. He hasn't had sex for...three nights now. Unless, he'd sought out someone else before coming here?

Ask him, damn it. And what? Sound like a nagging wife? I toss my head. No way. Besides, that would be a dead giveaway that that I've been thinking of him all day. And no way, am I giving away what little power I am clinging to in this relationship

I tip my chin up, meet that searing blue gaze.

"How did you find me?"

"Very little happens here without my being aware of it."

I glance up at the corners of the ceiling. "The cameras?"

He nods. "I switched them off, by the way." His lips kick up.

My throat closes. He reaches down, unbuckles his belt. The sound of leather against his buckle rasps across my sensitized nerve endings. He lowers his zipper and my pulse rate ratchets up. His thick shaft spills out. He widens his stance, grabs his cock and pumps himself hard once. A bead of precum appears at the tip of the angry head. My mouth dries.

I can't take my gaze off of his swollen dick as he proceeds to massage himself. His strokes are ferocious, punishing. His breathing grows shallow; my chest rises and falls in tandem. His shaft thickens, and even with the distance between us, I can see the veins along the underside pulsing, throbbing. My sex clenches, my nipples tighten, and goosebumps pop over my skin. I lick my lips, gulp down my anticipation. Don't move. Don't say anything. Wait... Wait. He massages himself once more, then stops.

What the—?

As I watch, he toes off his shoes. Letting go of his dick—which stands erect without any help from his hands, thank you very much—he shrugs off his expensive jacket, drops it to the chair, followed by his shirt. His tanned skin gleams in the warm ceiling lights; his eight pack abs flex as he proceeds to pull off his socks.

He shucks off his pants, along with his boxers, then poses in place for a second. Enough for me to take in the awesome sight of that naked expanse of 100% masculine alpha male who belongs to me. He is mine, from the moment I'd laid eyes on him. Why had I ever thought I'd be able to avoid his charisma, his power, the raw animal magnetism that emanates from his sexy-as-fuck presence?

I gulp, my hand slips, and I slide back into the pool, only he's already there. He dives into the water, arcing up to close his arms around me. His lips find mine and he plants his bulk between my thighs, so I have no choice but to part them. Then he thrusts inside me, instantly filling me as he impales me completely. All I can do is grab onto his shoulders and hold on, as he pushes forward, pins me against the side of the pool, and proceeds to fuck every thought out of my head.

He swipes his tongue across my lower lip, brings his hand down to cup my butt as he slides his finger inside my puckered back hole. My entire body bucks. He winds his fingers around my neck, holding me in place, before ripping his mouth from mine. He peers deeply into my eyes, holds my gaze, urging me with his expression to strain against him, push my pelvis forward, match his thrust for thrust. He kicks his hips forward one last time, bottoming out inside of me, then whispers, "Come."

The climax instantly crashes over me as he comes inside of me, his body spasming along with mine. I sag against him, all thoughts fucked out of me as I float in that strange after-space that comes from being completely and utterly spent.

The world tilts. I sense him tugging me along to the steps at the side of the pool. He scoops me up in his arms, then walks out of the water. He snatches up one of the towels piled by a lounge chair and dries me off, then himself. He picks up my bathrobe and places it around my shoulders. He helps me into the robe then ties it around me with great care. He fetches his pants and steps into them. Carrying me in his arms he takes the private elevator up to his suite. Once inside the room, he strips us both, then carries me into the shower.

He proceeds to shampoo my hair, then seats himself on the stone bench in the shower before washing every inch of my body. He begins to soap himself, and I catch his wrist.

"Let me," I clear my throat, realizing those are the first words I have spoken since I saw him at the pool.

He nods, then leans back, spreading his arms across the back of the bench. I reach around to shut off the shower, then pour out the liquid soap. I work it in across his biceps, down his corded chest, digging into the dips between his pecs. He makes a noise of satisfaction, then sinks back, widening his stance. I massage down his belly, to his thigh, then sink my knuckles into the tense backs of his calves. Sitting cross legged on the floor, I place his large foot on my lap, brush my fingers between his toes. Then hold up his foot to massage the underside and gasp, "Saint."

He instantly tugs on my grip. I let go of his foot and he stamps it flat onto the floor.

"What happened?" I ask.

His jaw tenses.

"Those scars, Saint..."

He sets his jaw, "What about them?"

"Did you get them when you were kidnapped?" I swallow, "Did they do this to you?"

"What's it to you?"

"Not all of the scars are old."

"What do you mean?" He lowers his arms to his lap, his movements deliberate, "What are you trying to say, Victoria?"

Shit. When he calls me by my full name, it's never a good sign.

"Just that, if you're trying to hurt yourself..."

He rises to his feet and my heart thuds in my chest. I have to look up, have to sweep my gaze up every ripped inch of him to meet his gaze.

His eyes blaze, then a shutter comes over his face. "I'm not." He steps around me and heads for the shower door.

"Saint," I jump to my feet, turn toward him, "you can talk to me."

"Oh?" He straightens. "And why would I do that?"

"I'm your wife."

He turns then and his lips curve in a smile that doesn't reach his eyes, "Fake wife, darling."

I wring my fingers together, "You don't mean it, you are simply lashing out at me because you are confused inside."

"We spent some time together; the sex was okay," he tilts his head, "sometimes."

Bastard.

"Don't go mistaking the last few days for some kind of intimacy between us." His lips twist, "It was a transaction, make no mistake."

I swallow. My throat hurts and my eyes burn. Was I wrong to imagine that the last few weeks had shifted the tone of the relationship between us? No, it can't be. I tip up my chin, "You're lying."

"And you..." He looks me up and down, "You are replaceable." Turning he grabs a towel, and leaves.

34

Saint

No one can replace her and that is the problem.

I dry myself with the towel, then toss it aside.

She has crawled under my skin, sunk into my blood and I can't get enough of her. I'd been heading to work the last three weeks every day—including weekends—because hell, I had to make a point to her, and to myself, that I'm not dependent on her. This entire sham of a relationship will be over soon enough. She is going to trip up and expose the real reason she propositioned me. I'll walk away from her then, and what... Find another? I ball my fists at my sides. What will happen to her once I find out her secret? Where will she go? If she thinks the Mafia will let her walk away, she is being awfully naïve. They'll kill her. My heart begins to thud and a cold sensation coils in my chest. I can't let that happen. I'll figure out a way to extricate her from whatever mess she is in...regardless of whether there is a chance for us together. Fuck. I pace the carpeted floor the water drying on my skin. What is wrong with me? Why can't I fight this need to... What? Take care of her?

I'd let down my guard enough to take off my socks today. That...has never happened before. Not when I'm in the dressing room of the gym, nor with any other woman. The socks stay on, always. I am not hiding the scars... It's more that I don't want to answer any questions about them.

Have I become so relaxed in her presence that I had not only taken off my socks, but also had allowed her to wash me? A first. No one had been given that privilege...before her. I had begun to look forward to coming home to her — Home? Did I call this hotel suite—which is a transient place to stay, at best—home? Is it home because she is here? Why do I enjoy waking up with her coiled into my side? What is Gigi doing to me? Whatever it is, it has to stop.

The bathroom door opens, a cloud of steam wafts out, and from it, she steps forward into the room.

I draw in a breath.

She's naked.

Not that I hadn't seen her without clothes earlier. But the sheer impudence with which she glides forward—head high, spine straight, perky breasts thrust up, breasts that tremble with every step she takes—that's different. She hasn't shown that fighting spirit of hers over the last few weeks. Perhaps I've been too busy taking what she offers, I haven't challenged her recently, and damn, if I haven't missed the thrust and parry between us. She walks around the bed to her side.

I twist my lips. Step forward. "Stop," I growl.

She ignores me, pulls back the covers, no doubt preparing to slide in and fall asleep. And leave me tossing and turning next to her? No way.

"Do as I say, or I swear, you'll regret it," I stalk to her.

She turns her back on me... Big mistake. I reach her, and she stiffens, pulls her shoulders back. I swoop down to grab her around the waist and she swerves to the side. What the hell?

I angle toward her; she brushes past me. I pivot, turn to face her as she backs away.

I lower my voice to a hush, "You don't want to do this."

She pales, then tips up her chin, "I am doing this. I'm not playing your games anymore"

"You'll regret this." The pulse thuds at my temple.

She tosses her head, "So, what's new?"

I take a step forward.

She skitters back, "Afraid you'll lose the chase?"

My heartbeat ratchets up.

"Is the big bad billionaire worried that his wife will be able to outrun him?"

My vision tunnels. The hair on the nape of my neck prickles. I drum my fingers on my chest. "Be careful what you wish for, sweetheart, for when I catch you this time, I won't show any mercy."

She throws back her head and laughs. She fucking laughs. "You're funny, Saint, you know that?" she wheezes. "I have news for you, asshole."

I growl.

"—Oh, you don't deserve the title of alphahole yet. All you've done so far is threaten me and use your wealth and so-called power to keep me under your control. Well, let me tell you, that's not gonna work anymore."

"Oh?" I bare my teeth.

She winces, then pulls herself up to her full height, "It's true. Anyone can be a bully... But to use your wealth to actually make a difference in the world? To use your power to help those less fortunate? To bare your heart and show your feelings? To make yourself vulnerable enough to be hurt? That's true strength."

I roll my shoulders. "You done?"

"No." Color suffuses her cheeks. She closes the distance between us, thrusts her finger into my chest. "I thought you were different, that behind that obnoxious persona is someone who—"

"Cares? Who feels? Who had fallen in love with you? Who would change his life for you? Who would reform for you and help you in whatever little plan you have going here?"

She pales.

"I have news for you, doll. Your cunt is no magic pussy, that one taste of it, and poof, I turn over a new leaf."

She swallows.

"You...you're hurting, Saint. That's why you are trying to hurt me."

I laugh, "What a crock." A bead of sweat slides down my back.

"You're afraid." She leans in and her scent envelops me.

My groin tightens; my gut churns.

"That's why you're lashing out at me. I understand, Saint. Let me help." She raises her hand toward my face, "You're—"

"Bored," I yawn, then step back. "Save your insights, my sweet fake wife, for I couldn't give a fuck about your thoughts."

A lone tear squeezes out of the corner of her eye.

A hot sensation stabs at my chest.

"Take a good look, sweetheart," I spread my arms, "cause I am not changing."

She searches my features with an intensity that borders on hate... Love?

Nah! Not that. Never that. Everything between us has been a charade... Well, except that she'd been a virgin. Fuck, what does it mean that she came to me untouched? Sweat beads my palms. Nothing. It means nothing. Another maneuver in this scheme of hers to catch me off kilter. If she'd intended to get close to me... Well, she has succeeded. And it stops here. Now.

"Get out," I jerk my chin toward the door.

"What?"

"Out of my bedroom," I growl.

"No."

I blink. "Excuse me?"

She ducks under my arm, then slides into the bed and pulls up the covers to her chin. "I am sleeping here. You take the couch."

35

Saint

"What the fuck?" I glance up at the ceiling.

My wife had thrown me out of our bedroom and I had taken it. The fuck had happened there? Had I actually dragged my sorry arse out of there and retreated to the living room...like a loser? My present condition certainly seems to indicate so.

I shift my frame on the couch in the living room, which had seemed comfortable enough on the face of it, but try squeezing a six-foot-four-inch frame onto the bloody thing for the night...and fuck, it isn't a laughing matter. How the hell had everything gone so tits up? How had I allowed that tiny woman to get the better of me? Had I actually agreed to turn the marital bed over to her for the night? And why hadn't I simply checked into another hotel room for the night? Why can't I bear to leave her alone, even for one night? Because she is my asset and I can't leave her unguarded. Bull-fucking-shit, what a crock that is. All the time I'd been away at the office, she'd been on her own. Okay not quite. I'd had my people tailing her, yes, even in the hotel. So what? It's the only way to find out what the hell her endgame is in all of this.

I fold my arm over my eyes, stretch myself, and my bloody legs hang over the side. Shit. Clearly, I am too large for this space. I turn over, punch the cushion under my head. How the hell had it come to this? I am in the most expensive suite, in an iconic hotel owned by me, in a city where I am—okay was—the most eligible bachelor—in a country where I am consistently among the top five richest men. And here I am, spending the night on a couch? Fuck. I turn over and slide off of the couch. Hit the floor on my arse. Insane. This is beyond ridiculous. This is a clear sign that I am pussywhipped.

If I told any of the Seven about this... Well, outside of Sinner—bet that fucker would empathize with what it is to be faced with an angry wife. Jesus, that's the second time in a row I've referred to her as my wife. She's your fake wife, you wanker. As you've reminded her over and over again. And broken her heart. You hurt her, you bloody reprobate.

I drag my fingers through my hair.

But hell, if her words hadn't hit home. She'd struck a nerve—more than a nerve. She'd pushed herself into my deepest darkest space, the place I'd vowed never to let anyone into. She'd insisting on unearthing my secrets, bared my insecurities and held up a mirror to my flaws. Of which I have many. I've never hidden them. And I'm not starting now. I've never denied that I am callous. What was it she called me? A brute. Yep, that's what I am. Someone who doesn't give a fuck about others. Who goes after what he wants and takes it, damn the consequences. So, what am I doing, skulking around in the dark, on my arse in my hotel suite? This space is mine. I push up to my feet. And she is mine—for the duration of this sham marriage. At least. And no one keeps me away from what I own, least of all my sassy, devious, spit-fire of a wife.

I stalk to the door of the bedroom—how dare she shut it on me?—and shove it open. I step into the semi-darkness. The curtains are pulled back and the brightness of the streetlights pours in through the window, illuminating the figure on the bed. I prowl over to her, rake my gaze over the figure tucked in, looking quite comfortable. Her fingers are tucked under her cheek, her lips slightly parted. Her chest rises and falls; her cheeks are flushed. No doubt she'd fallen asleep as soon as I had left, while I had tossed and turned in my make-shift bed.

I grab the sheets and pull them off.

"What the—?" She sits up with a little scream, breasts heaving, naked body glimmering in the moonlight. My throat closes. The blood rushes to my dick. Fuck. I don't have any clothes on either. Good. This should make it convenient.

"Move over," I snarl.

She blinks up at me. "Saint?"

"Who the fuck else?" I growl. Of course, it's me. Who had she expected? Her late-husband? That fucker, Antonio? I bunch my fists at my side.

She glances down, takes in my stance, then brings up her hands to cover her breasts. Anger thrums at my temples. I am her bloody husband. She doesn't get to hide her gorgeous body from me. And why the hell is she staring at me with fear in her eyes? I wouldn't hurt her. Well, not physically at least— Okay, well...only when it is required. Then, I'll do what's needed to her body, to give her the most pleasure I can. What is wrong with that? It is for her own good, isn't it?

And the way you hurt her with your words... Is that for her own good too? I bunch my shoulders, glare at her features.

"Wh...what's wrong?" she stutters.

Nothing. Everything. "You're on my side of the bed."

"Oh," she glances around, then scoots over.

"Not so fast." I swoop down. Another scream leaves her lips. I scoop her up, then plonk down on the bed, with her spread across my lap.

She wriggles. I lean my weight on the small of her back.

"Let me go."

"No."

"What are you doing?" she huffs.

"You were in the wrong."

"Why? Because I slept on your side?" Her tone is incredulous.

"Yes."

"That's preposterous," she tosses her head.

"No, that's cause for punishment."

Her entire body stills, then a shudder crawls up her spine.

"You like that, don't ya?" I palm her butt.

She bucks again and I lean more of my weight on her. I am using my superior strength to overpower her, exactly what she'd accused me of doing earlier. Well, good. I am confirming her already-low opinion of me, right? I snicker.

She turns to glare at me, "You're looking for an excuse to spank me."

"Oh?"

She nods, "Couldn't bear the idea that a woman had gotten the better of you."

I squeeze her butt cheek and she shudders.

"Go on," I bare my teeth, "why did you stop?"

"If you wanted to touch me, you only had to—"

I raise my hand and she winces.

"You were saying?" I ask.

"That...that...if you wanted to make love to me, you only had to ask—ow!"

My palm connects with her backside and she huffs.

I raise my hand, slap her other butt cheek.

She cries out, "It hurts, you oaf."

"Good." I spank her first butt cheek again and the other, and the first, then the other.

"Ow, ow," she screams again, aaaand my cock engorges. She wriggles her body, tries to pull away, and the friction against my shaft is so fucking sweet. A groan rips out of me. I increase the intensity of my spanking, alternating between her arse cheeks.

She grabs hold of my leg, grinds her clit into my thigh. The blood drains to my groin and all of my senses hone in on her.

"Fuck, Gigi, I want you."

I stop, and her entire body quivers. The redness of my palm prints stands out against the curve of her butt. I bend, kiss the wounded skin. She moans, and my heart stutters.

I stand up with her in my arms, then turn and lower her to her arms and knees onto the bed.

"Hold on."

36

Victoria

That's all the warning he gives me, before he lines up his dick against the entrance to my soaking wet channel.

"Saint."

He pistons his hips and slams his cock all the way inside of me.

His balls slaps against my tender flesh; pin pricks of pain dance up my spine. My thighs tremble; his grip on me tightens. Vibrations radiate from the point of contact. A melting sensation coils deep inside of me.

"Saint," I groan.

"I know." The words are strained. He stays there, with me impaled on his shaft. A second. Another. His cock throbs, stretching me, as my pussy adjusts to the intrusion.

"You ready, Gigi?"

Even before I can nod, he pulls out, then thrusts forward. My entire body jerks.

A tingling sensation sweeps up my legs. I curve my back, thrust back, trying to take more of him inside. More. I need more.

"P-please," I stutter.

"What?"

"Please take me, Saint."

A growl rips from him. He begins to fuck me in earnest, and I meet his every thrust, pushing back with my hips, digging my knees into the bed for purchase.

"You're so damn tight. Even after all these weeks, I can't get enough of you. You're a witch, Gigi. You've completely undone me."

His words send vibrations of heat swirling in my belly. Everything in me is focused on him, on how he's buried inside of me. On the pulsing, seething, aching hollow that he leaves inside of me each time he pulls back. "It's not enough," I gasp. "I want..."

"Tell me," he growls. "Tell me what you need."

"I need—" I widen my knees, then reach back between my legs and squeeze his balls.

His dick jumps inside me, lengthening even further. He groans, then pulls out completely.

I whine, "What are you doing—?"

He flips me over, plants himself between my thighs. The bed dips, as he plants one knee, then the other, on the bed.

I open my mouth to demand what he's doing, and squeak when he guides his cock to my trembling opening.

I glance down at the sight of his shaft poised to enter me... Holy shit! It's the hottest thing I have ever seen. I gasp, draw in a breath, then scream as he buries himself inside of me—full, complete. The trembling screeches up my spine. The blood drums in my temples, and my vision wavers. "Saint," I whisper, "I am going to come."

"Don't you dare, Gigi."

His voice is fierce.

He drags his hands up the backs of my thighs, loops my ankles over his shoulders.

He pulls back, then slams inside me again, and the sensation of his gorgeous thickness filling me, stretching me... My God! I'll never be the same after this. Fucking, love-making... Whatever name I may give it... It's a primal meeting of our flesh, our souls. Something knotted inside of me dissolves. The climax bubbles up, waves of tension ebbing, then flowing forward. "Saint," I choke, "I can't..."

"You can," he growls.

The fullness inside me pushes up, needing wanting, demanding that I give in to it.

"Saint," I whisper.

"Eyes on me," he snaps. I jerk my gaze up to his, and the force of those blue eyes pins me in place. My chest hurts and a pressure builds at the backs of my eyes.

His lips kick up, a fierce smile lighting up his face.

"You're beautiful," the words spill out of me.

His smile widens and his gaze intensifies. "And you're mine."

"Yours." I nod.

"Come with me." He thrust forward and my orgasm overpowers me. I arch my back, open my mouth, and hear the sound of someone wailing. That's me, I know, but I can't stop myself. Tears blur my vision and I collapse, as he comes inside of me. I hear his harsh groan from somewhere above me. He slips down to cover my shaking body with his, his face nestled against my breast.

We stay in that position for a few seconds...maybe minutes. He anchors me as my body quakes and tears stream down my cheeks. Finally, my breathing steadies, mirrors his. I sense his heart thudding against my chest. His weight on me grows heavy, my limbs protest, but I don't say anything. This...whatever this is...it's different.

Does he realize how things have subtly shifted between us?

He stirs, then moves onto his back, pulling me on top—and wow, he's still inside of me. I mean, that's not easy to achieve, I'm sure, but he pulls it off without missing a beat.

He drags his palm across my hair and his fingers snag on a knot.

I wince.

"Sorry." He plays with my hair, undoing the knot with the same intense precision that he seems to bring to so much in his life.

"I began self-harming not long after my mother died, " his voice rumbles against my ear. "So much was not in control, then. I had no idea how to cope with the anger inside of me, which was already building after the incident. And when she died, my world fell apart. She was the only one who understood the level of PTSD I had from the incident, the only one who indulged my compulsion to speak in riddles."

He pauses, his throat moving as he swallows.

"But the strain of it all became too much for my parents. They broke up. She left home. Right after she left, my father told me I was the reason for the change in their relationship. I was a mistake, you see? There was no space in their marriage for me. He blamed me for what had gone wrong."

"Oh my god." I stare at him horrified. Why the hell would his father say that? And his mother? How could she have left Saint, when he needed her the most?

His features tense. "A month later, she died in an accident. I'm afraid I didn't take it well."

"I'm so sorry," I whisper.

"You have a knack for getting to the truth, don't you?"

I glance up at him, "Only with you, Saint." I rub my cheek against his chest. "Only you."

He pulls me close, tucks my head under his chin. "Sleep." His voice is soft, but my body seems to obey his command on instinct. Darkness closes over me.

"What? When did it happen?"

Saint's voice filters into my sleep-addled brain.

I come awake slowly, tuning into his words.

"I can't come right now, I'm..." He stops speaking. Guess he's on the phone? Who is he talking to? The same person who'd called him the last few times when he'd left me?

I hear his footsteps thud as he walks away.

I crack my eyelids open, glance down to find I'm sprawled on my front... on Saint's side of the bed. I'd gone to sleep on him... Had he woken up to find me coiled into him? Had he thought me weak? Because I'd submitted to him? I'd trusted him. Had I been wrong to do so? I glance over my shoulder to the open doorway of the bedroom and spot Saint. He's naked... Of course, he is. The man doesn't have an unconfident bone in his body.

He holds his phone to his ear, bends his other arm and runs his fingers through his hair. His biceps bulge, the planes of his back undulating. My mouth dries. I swallow.

He glances back toward me. I clamp my eyelids shut.

His voice filters through to me, "Are you sure the information is accurate?"

He listens. "The pickup is going to take place in an hour?"

Footsteps approach the doorway.

"Right."

I crack my eyelids open, enough to watch him lean against the doorjamb.

"I'll make it."

What the fuck—? He's leaving me after what took place between us?

His gaze roves over my shoulders, across my body wreathed in his sheets.

Can he tell that I'm awake?

He glances away. I relax into the sheets. His scent is all around me; the heat of his body warms the bedclothes, tempting me to roll over and wallow in the remnants of his essence. Shit. I am getting addicted to him. Why does he have to be so...so...irresistible. So damn tempting. A 100% masculine hunk who has no idea how lethal his charm can be... And he isn't even trying.

"I know..." his tone lowers. "I am well aware that I got married three weeks ago, but this... What we do together is important."

Well, shit. Of course, whoever is on the other side of the phone takes precedence. My stomach churns and my breathing goes shallow.

Don't let him see how pissed off you are. And I have every right. That last time together, it went beyond the realm of fucking. Besides, isn't he the one who'd said he was making love to me on our wedding night? His actions of last night—especially the way he'd lashed out at my asking about the scars, only to return to our bed and confess that he self-harms—it backs up his words.

So who is he talking to now?

He widens his stance, giving me a full-frontal view of his cock.

I swallow.

"Got it," His voice dips, "I'll be at Mill Hill East Broadway in half an hour." He disconnects the call then crosses the floor toward the walk-in closet. I hear the sound of clothes rustling.

He's doing it then? He's leaving?

I sit up in bed. "Saint," I call out.

He steps into the room, dressed in sneakers, jeans and a sweatshirt that stretches across his chest. My breath catches. Saint in casual wear is even more potent than Saint in office clothes.

I clear my throat, tip up my chin, "Where are you going?"

His shoulders bunch.

"It's a business meeting." His glance flickers away then back to me.

My heart begins to race. He's lying; I know he is.

"In the middle of the night?" I ask. "And dressed like that?"

He raises his shoulders, then sighs, "It's a work emergency." He heads for the door.

"Don't leave."

He turns to look at me and his expressions softens, "I'll be back soon."

I straighten my shoulders and the sheet falls to my waist. "You're leaving me?" I pout.

His gaze falls to my breasts; his chest rises and falls. "Not of my own volition." His voice is husky.

He tears his gaze off of my body, "You keep the bed warm, babe. I'll be back before you know it."

He crosses the living room to the front door. I hear the sound of the main door to the suite snick shut.

I jump out of bed, then race to the front door. I press my ear to it, hear the sound of the elevator door closing.

Where the hell is he going so early in the morning?

I walk back into the bedroom, take in the messed-up sheets, a pillow thrown to the floor. There's a dent in the pillow on his side of the bed, where we'd both slept. A shiver works its way up my spine.

I'd thought...that he had feelings for me... Love? Nah, that's too strong a word. Possession. The marriage is a bullshit fake to end all fakes...but perhaps it had elicited some primal feeling in him? Something that made him want to exert his ownership over me...because in some way, he's made me his.

Am I his?

Is he mine?

Sure, he'd shared more of himself with me. That doesn't mean anything; not when he'd lied to me about the call and left. I chew on my fingernail. There must be a good reason for his actions; there has to be. So why couldn't he tell me?

For that matter, why haven't I revealed the reason I am here?

Why haven't I told him about the hold the Mafia has on me? I could use his help. The thought has crossed my mind. But... I chew on my lower lip... What if I told him and the Mafia found out about it? They'd hurt him...and Nina. Sure, Saint has resources at his disposal...but the Mafia... They're everywhere, and they are ruthless. I can't play with both of their lives; I can't take the risk of something happening to them.

I curl my fists into my sides. I can't endanger the lives of both of the people I've come to care about.

No, the only way to protect both Saint and Nina is to complete what I came to do. But first, I have to find out why he lied to me.

I need to catch up with him, and find out why or who he keeps rushing off to see.

Walking to the closet door, I wrench it open. Ignoring the clothes he bought me, I cross the floor to my bag on the far end. Strange. I can't find any of my underclothes in the bag. Well, I am not going to wear the lingerie that he bought for me, it doesn't seem right to do so, not when he could be cheating on me as we speak... shit, don't do that, don't make assumptions, not until you find out the truth for yourself.

I forgo the underwear and pull on my jeans and a top; then tug on ballet pumps.

My heart begins to race. Adrenaline fills my blood. I grab my handbag from where I'd dropped it on the table near the door, then race out.

I punch the button to the elevator and the doors slide open. I step in, take it to the ground floor. Moderating my pace, I reach the guard by the door. It's the same guy who'd come toward us the day Saint and I had had our altercation on the sidewalk.

"Ma'am." He touches his finger to his forehead, in a semi-salute, "Can I help you?"

I bite my lips, "Uh... Actually, yes." I tip up my chin, "Can you get me a rental car or a taxi, please?"

He frowns.

"Saint told me I should ask you for help if I need anything." I add.

He stills, then nods. "I won't be a minute, Ma'am, if you'd wait here?" He disappears out the front doors. I shift my weight from foot to foot. A group walks in, and I shuffle aside.

I wring my fingers together; sweat slides down my back. What am I doing? Will I be too late to catch him?

The doorman walks in. He extends his arm and I take the key fob from him.

"It's the red Maserati parked right in front."

"A Maserati?" I blink, "Oh, but I don't need anything that flashy—" Not to mention that it'd stand out on the road. "Isn't there any other car, a little less...uh... Expensive?"

"Mr. Caldwell specifically allocated this one for you."

"Right."

Had he remembered my tastes from our conversation a few weeks ago? That must be it. What does it mean that he did? And when had he indicated to the doorman to direct me to this, if I asked? Had he guessed that I might want to drive my own car at some point?

"Ma'am?" the doorman prompts me.

I curl my fingers around the key fob, then eye his name tag. "Thank you, Dorian."

He nods, "No problem." He holds the door open for me.

I walk down the steps, press down on the key fob to unlock the car doors. I slip into the driver's seat, then program the way to Mill Hill East on the GPS.

It takes me 30 minutes to get there on the highway. I ease into a parking lot on the main street, then walk up the sidewalk. I spot Saint's Jaguar almost immediately. It's parked outside a coffeeshop.

Is he meeting someone here? I peek in through the glass wall, but can't see him. I turn to go...then glance back. There, at the far end, are the unmistakable broad shoulders which could only belong to one guy. His dark hair curls at his collar. He's facing away, talking to someone. I try to peer past him. Damn it. I can't see who's in the seat opposite him. Show me your face. Go on. Do it.

As if she hears me, the woman in the seat rises to her feet. She's tiny, perfectly curved and wearing black skintight jeans. Her blonde hair flows to her waist. I can't make out the color of her eyes, but no doubt, they are as stunning as the rest of her. She blows out a breath, folds her arms over her waist.

She hauls her handbag over her shoulder, then throws her hands in the air. Her slim, tight-fitting shirt rides up, revealing a smooth flat stomach. I ball my fists at my sides. Of course, she's model perfect. Is she his ex-girlfriend? Ex-something? Or maybe...current?

Her gestures are heated as she talks to him.

He leans back, runs his fingers through his hair.

She stabs a finger at him. He squares his shoulders.

She turns to leave, takes a step away, only for him to jump to his feet. He grabs her wrist. His face is in profile, but there's no mistaking the anguish in his features. I've never seen him this...disturbed. Not in all the time that I've known him. Nothing I've said to him has ever made him this overcome with emotions... Well okay, almost. The only time I've seen him this overcome is when we made love—no, fucked. That's all it was. He'd fucked me, and that last time, I was sure I'd broken through to him, just as he had shattered all of my defenses. I'd been sure it was the beginning of... Trust? Love? Whatever.

Doesn't matter.

The woman he's talking to tries to pull away. His lips move, and her features crumple.

He pulls her to him and she buries her face in his shoulder.

He holds her close... My guts churn. Fuck you, Saint. Fuck you for making me want to...believe. Moisture streaks my cheek. I dash away the tears. I will not cry over this...two-timing, conniving jerk. I step away, retrace my steps back to my car. The red Maserati gleams in the dawn light.

Why did he have to remember my preferences and then go and do this? Damn it, I want to give him the benefit of doubt. But hell, if that scene didn't indicate there is a relationship between them.

I stomp over to the car, open it and throw myself inside. Smash the door closed with enough force that the entire vehicle shudders. I cringe. The car is new... And I am not jaded enough to not appreciate the power under my hands. I grip the steering wheel, press my forehead to it. "Bloody hell." Why did you have to do this, Saint?

I slap my hand against the steering wheel. Pain sweeps up my arm. It helps center me. I focus on the vibrating threads that sink into my nerves, follow them to where they disappear. Draw in a breath, allow the calm to steal over me. Somewhere along the line, I've become a masochist. When I inflict pain on myself, it helps me feel alive. It's something I can control. My response to it... To him. Why is it that I had felt compelled to hand that power over to him? Asking him to take me on as a sub had been...unplanned. It wasn't until I'd seen him that day, sprawled back in his chair, his glorious cock in his hand, as he'd looked me up and down with the smirk that had dared me to issue the challenge to him. I'd wanted to surprise him, wipe that satisfied smile off of his face. He thought he had me pegged? Well, he has no idea who he is dealing with.

He thinks he can take me for granted? He has another think coming. I am going to teach him not to mess with me. Over the last few weeks, a part of me had felt I was taking advantage of him.

Now, my conscience is clear. I can conclude my mission. I can complete the mission and save Nina. There is no more reason to hesitate. I wipe the tears off of my face, then reverse the car out of the parking lot.

Thirty-five minutes later I pull into the parking space reserved for Saint at the offices of 7A investments. I am his wife, right? What's his is mine, and all that. I can take what rightfully belongs to me. I slam the doors shut, reach the elevators meant for the penthouse where the Seven have their offices. I call for the elevator and it arrives in seconds. I step inside, press my thumb into the receptacle meant for identification. It lights up green. Of course, it does. Saint has already shared my identifying information with the entire security system.

I tuck my bag into my side, jab at the button for the top floor. The doors close. The numbers above the elevator door increase. They open onto the executive floor. I step out and stride confidently toward the last office on the floor, where this entire bloody saga had begun. Don't run. Don't hurry. Keep your pace. You are his wife. You have every right to be here, remember? At least, it's a floor only frequented by the 7 and those to whom they have given clearance. And it's too early for the employees to be around. Not that any of them could come to my aid, if Saint were to catch me. But why would he? He is with his... Girlfriend? Mistress? Whoever it is. I am safe...as safe as could be expected for a woman about to commit a crime—one that will free my friend. I wrench open the door to his office. There's that dark and edgy scent of his—pheromones and leather, laced with a woodsy scent that is uniquely Saint. My belly flip-flops. Hell, the scent of him is enough to turn me on. Get what you need and get out of here. Do it.

Rounding the table, I plop my bag on his table then drop into his chair and yank at the top drawer—it's unlocked. My breath catches. I ease it open. There, on top of the papers is...a USB drive? I stare at it. This is too convenient. Did he place it there for me to find it?

I snatch it up and insert it into the laptop.

I place my forefinger on the lock-pad and the screen springs to life.

I freeze. Did he really trust me enough to have my fingerprints recorded onto his every device? Can I access all of his secrets...so easily? The hair on my forearms rises. It's a trap. It has to be. I stare at the screen; but damn it, I have to take this opportunity. I can't not do it.

A window pops onto the screen, prompting me to access the files on the USB stick. There's one file so I click on it and a video begins to play. The image of a boy tied to a chair fills the screen. His face is streaked with dirt, hollows under his cheeks. He's wearing a school uniform, his white shirt streaked with mud...and blood? His breathing is ragged. There's a sound off-camera, then he stirs, looks up and straight into the camera. I gasp. He's blindfolded but that patrician nose... The slant of his jaw? It's Saint. My heart begins to race. A man moves into frame, his back to the camera, he slaps the boy. Saint's body jerks.

The man leaves; Saint slumps back in his chair, blood trickling from a cut in his lips.

My stomach lurches and bile laces my throat. Shit, I can't be sick, not now. I click out of the video, eject the flash drive, then shove it into my handbag.

I turn to leave, then hesitate. I mean, come on, I have access to his computer. Do I dare? I pause. Do I? Fuck it. I swivel to face the screen, open up his email folder and scan through the emails. What am I looking for? Any clue to the woman? Anything to indicate who she is? The subjects of the emails all seem boring...work related. Shit, this is getting me nowhere. I click out of the emails. What now? I open up the pictures folder... Peruse the images. There. I click open pictures of Saint with Sinner, Saint with Weston and the other guy from the Seven... Arpad? Yeah that's his name... Saint with... I pause. It's a picture of Saint with the girl I saw him with earlier. It's taken somewhere in the open, by a river...? The two of them are fishing. Saint's smiling at her—shit, he never smiles like that.

His features are relaxed, his clothes more weather-beaten than anything I've ever seen him wear. My fingers tighten on the mouse. Damn it, this was a mistake. What do I care what the relationship between them is?

I click out of the pictures, scan the names of the other folders...

Anything else? Anything. Come on. There's a folder called "Gigi."

I click it open... then open up the file called 'Beatles.' Beatles, huh? It has files...marked in the order of years. From 1963—the year the first Beatles album came out—to the current year. I open the first file... A page filled with facts... Every single detail of every hit, links to relevant events that happened to the Fab Four in that year—the tours, the albums released, girlfriends at that time, news headlines they made. Wow. Did he do all of this research? Nah! Probably had some minion pull it up for him... He is thorough, I have to give him that.

I scroll down to the file marked "Gigi." Gigi? I click it open...and it is filled with riddles. Questions about the Beatles... So this is how he prepared for his meetings with me, like I was some kind of acquisition. It's so very Saint. Being thorough, strategic... He'd been planning on how to converse with me...because he'd realized The Beatles were a pet obsession for me? But why? Why would he go about it in such a methodical fashion... Almost as if he—

"Victoria?"

I jump and the hair on the back of my neck prickles.

I look up to see his familiar features towering in front of me.

"Saint...?"

Saint

Her features freeze and her gaze widens. I step into my office.

She swallows.

I prowl forward and the color fades from her cheeks.

"What a surprise to find you here, wife."

She draws in a breath, then tips her chin in that gesture of defiance I am coming to recognize so well. My woman will never give me an inch; she'll make me fight for it. And fuck, if I don't love that about her.

Love? Fucking love.

There is that word again. A confusing emotion—one which muddles my instincts, clouds my intuition, and causes me to doubt my own judgment.

I reach my desk, pause in front of it with my legs spread wide apart. I prop my hands on my hips, "You have something to tell me?"

She swallows.

"Out with it, Gigi." I glance over the part of her that is visible above the monster hunk of a wood, which— Truth be told, I'd bought the desk in a fit of defiance. I'd wanted it to be the biggest desk among all the Seven. Don't judge. I'm entitled to spend my hard-earned money how I like it, right? Especially on her. I'll shower her with whatever she wants, and stuff she doesn't even know she needs. Hell, I'd trade in all of my riches for one more night of ecstasy with her—under me, in my bed, bent over my desk, ass in the air... Gigi crawling over to me across that wide surface, asking me to punish her for a crime she'd committed. I lower my voice to a hush, "Say the word, sweet thing." She pales. Her chest rises and falls. "Confess to your misdoings and I'll mete out your punishment."

She bites down on her lower lip. I jerk my gaze to that glistening flesh—pouty, full, pink and sensuous. Like the melting triangle of goodness between her legs. My dick lengthens and her gaze drops down to my crotch. I don't need to look down to know the crotch of my pants is tented right then.

"Do it," I growl.

She flinches. Her upper body moves, then she rises to her feet. She grabs the arms of my chair, swings her legs up, and hoists herself onto the chair.

"What the fuck?" I blink.

She's naked from her waist down.

No panties. Nothing except the curve of her hips silhouetted against the light pouring in from the wide windows behind her. Nothing except for the smooth expanse of her creamy thighs marked with reddened scratches. I'd done that, at some point during the last night, when I'd gone down on her. After she'd fallen asleep on my chest, her breathing had deepened. I'd stayed unmoving for an hour... Maybe two? Until I'd been sure I wouldn't wake her. Then I'd slid her onto her back, parted her thighs, settled in between her legs and feasted on her. I'd made sure not to wake her...had been gentle, soft, soothing, slow... I had licked and slurped and eaten her out, until she'd quietly come under me. Then I'd moved up to kiss her, to share our joined taste with her. She'd sucked on my tongue as I had eased into her; I'd finished myself off with a few thrusts. Hell, I'd been so turned on by the act of tonguing her cunt that... I hadn't been able to stop myself. I'd left my stamp on her. I'd claimed her over and over again. The phone call had woken me up and I'd left. Saying 'no' hadn't been an option. Some things are too important. Not even my feelings for her could prevent me from acting.

I'd wrapped up my meeting, checked up on her—yeah, I'd bugged her phone. So? Don't judge. Only I can keep her safe... And if that means I am stalking her? Well, it's for her own good, right?

"Gigi," I breathe. "What are you doing?"

"What does it look like?" She grabs the hem of her top and pulls it off. No bra... Fuck... Her pink nipples perk up, inviting me to come closer, closer. I bump into the desk... Shit, when had I bridged the distance between us?

"Victoria, have you forgotten the rules?"

"On the contrary, Saint." She climbs up onto the desk on all fours. "I'm submitting to you completely. This is what you want, right? Me...begging for you?" She crawls toward me, her breasts jiggling; her beautiful shoulders arch with each forward motion.

"You don't know what you are doing."

"Don't I?" Half-way over, she stops. Dropping down, she picks up a riding crop with her mouth.

She glances up, the strip of leather caught between her pearly white teeth. Fuck, fucking fuck. My groin hardens and a pulse flares to life at my temples, behind my eyelids, even in my fucking balls. "You're playing a dangerous game," I growl.

She glides forward, head held up, green gaze daring me to inch forward, to bend from my waist, to take the offered object of punishment from her. I shake out the modified whip. It whistles through the air. She flinches and a bead of sweat dots her upper lip.

"I know what you're doing, Gigi." She's trying to distract me. I drag the switch between my fingers. Her gaze drops to my hands. I slap the crop on my outstretched palm. Her shoulders shudder and her breathing grows erratic.

"You want this?"

She touches her tongue to her lips. My hand shakes. It fucking shakes as I hold it up.

"Say it."

"I...I..."

"Now."

"I want it, please. Saint. Use it on me. Make it hurt enough that I forget everything else that came before it. Own me, Saint. Hit me on my behind, then fuck me in the arse."

"Bloody fuck." My vision tunnels, and my cock insists on springing forward—ready, impatient to be done with all of the preliminaries. To simply bury my aching self inside her welcoming heat, to finally come home. "Jesus, Mary and Joseph," I snarl.

"Those... Those were the names of the three cats Lennon had at one point," she answers.

I laugh, "You're perfect, you know that? The answer to my twisted prayers." I push the tip of the crop under her chin.

She stills.

Drag the leather down her throat, between her breasts, down the concave of her stomach to where the bud of her clit peers out.

She shudders. "Saint..."

I withdraw the crop the same way, drag it under my nose, "Your scent, Gigi." I glare at her. "The sweetness of your arousal is more potent than honey." I swipe my tongue up the strip of hide.

A whine bleeds from her lips.

I swipe the crop through the air. "Turn around."

She instantly complies. The creamy mounds of her arse thrust out at me.

"Fucking gorgeous."

She swivels her head.

"Don't," I admonish her.

She faces forward.

I drag my crop across her buttocks and her entire body trembles.

"Which Beatles album spent the longest consecutive time at number one?"

"Their debut album... Please, Please Me."

"You bet." I bring the crop down on her arse.

She screams, "Bu...but I got the answer right."

"So?"

"Sadist."

I chuckle, "Now you recognize my true nature." I tilt my head, "Which song by the Beatles features only thirteen different words in the lyrics?"

"It's a love song recorded by John for Yoko," She bites her lower lip.

"Tell me Gigi." I prompt.

"I want you..." she huffs.

I bring the cane down on her backside.

She cries out, "I hate you."

"I don't." I slap the whip across her backside. She chokes. "In fact, I think I may even be falling in lust with you."

I lower the crop again and again. She cries out, wriggles her hips, throws her head back. The skin of her arse cheeks blooms red. The tracks stand out against the creaminess of her skin. "Fuck, Gigi. I need you now."

I loosen my grip and the switch slips from my hand. I drag my knuckles up her pussy. "You're soaking, babe."

"Saint, please," her voice is strangled.

"You ready for me?"

"I've been waiting for you since before I knew who you were," she whispers, "when all I had was a hope and a wish for someone to push away all the memories that hold me back."

"What's holding you back, Gigi?"

"I...I can't tell you."

"You will."

"I... I..." she huffs.

I lower my face, press my cheek to hers, "Say it... Say what's on your mind."

"They... The Mafia... They kidnapped my friend, Saint." Her voice trembles, "They're holding Nina hostage. They...forced me to play the role of Adam's wife."

"Why you?" I cup her pussy. Her thighs clench.

"Why did they contact you?"

"Nina was my roommate at UCLA." She swallows.

"You were close?" I strum her pussy lips.

"Very." She shudders. "My parents moved from London to LA when I was twelve. My father left us shortly afterward." Her lips twist. "My mother ended up having to work two, sometimes three, jobs to make ends meet. Her focus was to put me through college so I could find a good job and carve a better future for myself."

She blinks; her chin wobbles.

I drag the wetness from her cunt to her back hole. "You got a scholarship to UCLA," I prompt.

Shit, why had I said that? Me, the cold-hearted bastard who could string out an entire business discussion without showing mercy... The slightest hint of uncertainty from her and I can't stop myself from reaching out to help. This has got to stop.

I smear her wetness into the valley between her butt cheeks. She shudders. "That's where I met Nina," her voice quavers. "After my mother died, she was there for me; she pulled me out of the emotional hole I'd dug myself into. Clearly, the Mafia knew how close we were."

I dip a finger inside her back hole. Her butt clenches and her entire body jerks.

"Saint," she protests.

"Complete what you were saying," I instruct.

She swallows "There was no way I could abandon her." She tips up her chin, "But you know all this already, don't you?"

I grunt.

"Yet you married me?" she asks.

I tilt my head.

"Why?" Her chest rises and falls. "Why would you do that?"

"To keep you close..." I draw in a breath, "Not only that, though. It may have started out that way, but I fell for you somewhere along the way. You understand that, right?"

I slip another finger inside her back hole and she groans. I pause, giving her time to adjust to the intrusion.

"Oh, my god, Saint..." she mewls. "Please, it's not enough."

"Soon, darling." I pull out my fingers, then grip her hips to hold her in place. "What hold do they have on you, Gigi?"

"I... I told you everything already." Her shoulders stiffen, her spine ramrod straight.

Why is she not telling me everything?

"What have they asked of you?" I lean over, kiss the shell of her ear.

She moans.

"You have to tell me if you want me to help you."

I position my dick between her arsecheeks and she shivers.

"Let me take some of the burden off of you, Gigi. Tell me why you're running scared? You're my wife, sweetheart. I'll do anything for you. You know that, right?"

"Will you, Saint?" She thrusts out her hips and my dick nudges the opening of her puckered hole. Lust spirals up my spine and tension winds tight in my groin. I need to be inside of her. Need to take her again. "Anything," I force out the words through clenched teeth, "Anything for you."

"Then tell me who the phone calls are from? The woman for whom you'll leave your wife and go running? Who is she, Saint?"

I dig my fingertips into her hips and she winces. I loosen my grip, slightly. It'll leave marks on her there. Good. If this is the only way I can assert my ownership on her, then so be it.

"You...saw us?"

She nods. "I...followed you."

"That's why you came to the office?"

"I came here because... I couldn't bear to return to the bed we'd shared, after... You left to meet another woman."

"You have no idea what you're talking about," I growl.

"Then tell me, Saint." She turns to glance at me.

"I... I can't; not without putting you in danger."

"Me?" She blinks.

"It's the kind of thing you want no part of."

"Why can't you let me be the judge of that?" she scowls.

Fuck, fucking fuck. She has no idea what she's asking of me.

"Why can't you trust me to decide what's best for you?"

"Is it?" She swallows. "Or is this more convenient for you?"

"There you go, doubting me again." I blow out a breath. "Besides, I am sworn to secrecy. I made a promise to her."

She winces; her face pales. "What about the promise you made to me? You swore to take me as your wife, to cherish and to protect me."

"All of which I intend to do."

"Then start with this. If there's even a small chance for us to be together, then tell me what it is you're hiding?"

"I..." I lower my chin to my chest, "I can't, Gigi. It's not my secret to tell," I hold her gaze, "but I can show you how much I want you."

"It's not enough." She tosses her head, "You can take your dick and stuff it—"

"Oh, I am going to stuff it all right." I bare my teeth, "Inside you, where it belongs."

"No," she tries to pull away.

I hold her in place, "Yes."

"I don't want this."

I shove my hand around and between her legs, "You do." I slide my fingers inside her soaking cunt. "Whatever our differences may be, however divisive the secrets between us, there's one place where we can't hide from each other, and that's when we fuck."

"Fuck off."

"I intend to, only I am going to take you with me, sweetheart."

I shove my fingers in and out of her and she whines. I grind the heel of my palm into her clit; she throws back her head. She snaps back her shoulders, thrusts up her hips. My dick stabs into her backhole, and she groans.

"Damn you, Saint. Damn you for the responses you wring from my body."

"Good, the feeling's mutual then."

I pinch the swollen nub of her clit and she screams. Her body bucks and her knees part further. She lowers her cheek to the desk, shoves her trembling butt toward my face.

"Fuck, Gigi, I have to take you." I release her pussy, squeeze her arse cheeks, holding them apart. "Now." I kick my hips forward, and my dick slips inside her puckered hole.

38

Too much. Too full. Three weeks of Saint owning my body and I haven't adjusted to his size.

My knees shake and my nipples pucker. The flash of pain settles into a dull throb. Something inside of me gives, eases open, and he slips inside further. A groan rumbles from him. I open my mouth, wanting, needing to scream out my surprise. Of how it's strange and yet...real. How he's pinning me here, to the present, with his massive cock that throbs, lengthens, pushes at my boundaries.

"Saint," I choke out his name.

"Killian."

"What?"

"Call me Killian."

"You're fucking killing me with your cock." A giggle wells up my throat, "Your timing...is just..."

"Impeccable?" He chuckles.

"Ridiculous." I mumble.

"I prefer quirky. Admit it, Gigi, if nothing else, we're well matched. You, with your weird obsession with that ancient boy band..."

"And you, with your strange affliction for riddles," I choke out.

He stays still, his length embedded inside of me.

"Why do you like to ask questions?" I force myself to ask, to think about something. Anything other than how weirdly arousing it is to have Saint stick his cock inside the most forbidden part of me. A tremor spirals out from where we are connected. "Shit." I dig my palms into the smooth surface of the desk, force myself to breathe, "You going to share a little more, Saint, or is this off limits—?"

"It forces me to think rationally," he replies.

"Rationally?"

I sense him nod.

"Every time my emotions threaten to get the better of me, the questions help me find my balance."

"So, it's a coping device?"

His grip on my hips tightens. He bends forward and the heat of his body sears my back. The hard jut of his pubic bone digs into the curve of my butt.

"You trying to analyze me?"

"Uh...understand you," I stutter.

"What if I don't want you to?" He swipes my hair off of my neck, presses his lips to my nape. I can't stop the moan that tumbles from my lips. The intensity of his touch, the intimacy with which he handles my body...it's... mind boggling. He's crawling his way inside of me, imprinting himself into every hidden part of me... Soon, there'll be nothing left but to open myself completely, to offer up the last unseen parts of me... Soon. Not yet. I can't. Not if I want my friend to survive. That's why I am here, remember? To get the information from Saint and hand it over. I 'm so close...so damn close. "Saint," I whine.

"Easy, Gigi." He slides his palm between my legs and cups my pussy. "My beautiful..." he strums my pussy. "Responsive..." he pinches my clit. "Soaking wet..." he slides three fingers inside my melting core, brings his other hand around to grip my neck. He squeezes and a heat sears up my spine, the pressure at my temples growing. Spots of blackness weave in front of my eyes. I need, I want... I must have.

"I know."

He pulls out, only to push my legs apart. His dick nudges my pussy, then he pushes forward and impales me. His thick length slams home, filling me, stretching me, holding me in place—immovable, unshakeable. The only man who truly gets me.

He thrusts forward again and again. Tilts his hips and pushes into me. He bloody owns me. This man. He's imprinted himself on my soul.

He pushes his cheek into mine. "Come for me, wife." His possessive whisper sweeps through my mind. The trembling sweeps up my back. Pauses. Waits.

"You're mine, Gigi, you feel me?"

Was there ever any question?

He releases his hold on my neck and the climax smashes into me. I hear the sound of a distant screaming...recognize it as me. Flashes of white overwhelm me as he empties himself inside me. My knees give way, but he's there. He wraps his big arm around my waist, secures me to him. My head lolls, I allow my hands to flop by my side. I am one big oozing gooey mess. At his mercy. His to command. To hold and to piece together any which way he deems fit.

He pulls out of me and I can't stop the groan that leaves my lips. He pulls me up, cradles me close, then carries me in his arms bridal style. "Where..." I swallow, "Where are we going?"

"Shh, babe, let me take care of you."

He cuddles me and I allow myself to curl into his chest. Coil my fingers in his shirt. "You didn't get undressed."

"I was in a hurry," he chuckles. "Next time."

Will there be another time? I have what I came for. Once I hand it over... I'll be far away from here...from his friends...from the girl friends I made here... What then? Nina will be free and everything can return to the way it was.

Will it? My throat closes. Will anything be the same without him? What am I going to do when I can't see him, feel his skin on mine, his rough fingers between my legs, his presence, his dominance, him. How am I going to live without him?

I turn my face into his chest, inhale his dark scent.

"Did you sniff me?"

His voice sounds from above me.

"Don't tell me you don't smell me?" I huff.

"Roses and something tart."

"Huh?"

"That's your scent, Gigi."

He shoulders open the door of the ensuite, walks toward the counter next to the basin. He lowers me on my back.

I wince.

"Hurts, huh?"

"You don't have to sound so pleased."

He laughs, "I didn't spank you half as much as I wanted to."

I peer up at him from under my eyelashes. "Oh, please. You went for it, all right. I was counting.'

"Oh?" He snatches up a wash cloth, moistens it under the running water.

"What are you doing?" I frown. He rummages in the cabinet below the basin, pulls out a tube of what looks like ointment. "What's that?"

"You don't get to ask the questions, remember?" He picks me up in his arms again. "Can't you simply enjoy your man taking care of you?"

Is he my man?

Am I his?

What's next?

Shit, my mind's going into overdrive. All of my nerve endings seem to be firing at once. Far from being exhausted by the happenings of the past half hour... His spanking, and then his fucking, seems to have awakened me completely. I've never felt this alive, this... Open to him. It feels like we've turned a corner. I shake my head. I must be hallucinating from all of the hormones in my blood stream that his fucking must have released.

He approaches a chair I hadn't noticed in the corner of the spacious bathroom.

He places me over his lap, baring my arse to his gaze.

"I'm convinced you have a fetish for backsides," I grumble.

"Only yours." He presses the cool cloth to my hurting skin. I moan.

"Good?" he asks.

"Very."

He holds the fabric there a little longer, then drops it to the side. I sense him opening the tube he'd pulled out earlier, then coolness laces my burning backside. The hurt instantly recedes.

"Oh," I snuggle into his lap. "That feels amazing."

"Enjoy it, Gigi." He continues to lather on more of the—antiseptic I assume? Then caps the container and drops it to the floor at the side. He runs his fingers up my spine, to my nape, digs his fingertips into my scalp.

I arch into his touch, "That's so good."

"Hmm."

He leans over; I hear the tap run. He parts my legs, drags a wet cloth across my core.

I tremble. This...caring version of him? I know he has it hidden behind all that grumpy alpha-maleness, but it always takes me by surprise.

He flips me up, taking care not to abrade my backside, then carries me back into his office. He crosses the floor to a large armchair and sinks into it, holding me.

"Let me know if it hurts."

He lowers me into his lap.

I wince, then settle in.

"Okay?" He asks.

"Yeah." I coil into his chest.

He plays with my hair, strokes my shoulders, runs his fingers down the side of my arm. With long masterful strokes he massages my aching limbs, my thighs, my calves.

The tension drains from me. I yawn suddenly, then shake my head, "I think I'm falling asleep."

"You're coming down from the high."

"Right... The spanking?" I mumble. "But a few seconds ago, I was sure I had never felt more alive."

"You enjoyed it?"

"Of course." It's an admission of how only he can pleasure me. So what? It's not like I have anything more to hide from him. Well, nothing more than the biggest secret of all. I yawn again and tears streak my cheeks. "I think I need to take a nap."

"You do that." He strokes my hair. "It'll refresh you for the party tonight."

"Party?"

"Oh, yeah. Sorry I forgot to mention it to you." His fingers still, then he wraps them around my neck. His grip tightens. I grip his wrist and he releases me, only to cup my cheek. So possessive. So nice?

"One of the things that the Seven insisted upon." A whisper touches my forehead. Did he kiss me? "They took the last few weeks to organize a proper party to celebrate our wedding. Can't be helped. A man of my status needs to use this occasion to his advantage."

I frown. Status? Saint doesn't care about that. He makes his own status, as far I know. What is he not telling me? What is he hiding from me? I open my mouth to ask, but he pulls me in closer. "That okay by you?" His scent intensifies around me.

My head spins. "Sure, why not?" Everything is okay, so long as he keeps me wrapped up in him. I crack open one eye. "Will I need a dress?"

"It's taken care of." He chuckles, " You grab 40 winks, while I get us home."

I snuggle in, then mumble, "Don't forget my bag from your desk."

39

Saint

"What do you think?"

I glance up from where I'd been pacing in the living room of the suite. She stands framed in the doorway to the bedroom. The green gown clings to her breasts, seeming to be kept up by nothing except their perkiness. It cinches in at her impossibly tiny waist, only to flare around her hips, and flow down in straight lines, to her toes. She props a palm on her waist, thrusts out a leg through the slit that rides all the way up to the waist.

My hand tightens on the glass of whiskey I hold. "The fuck are you wearing?"

Her eyebrows lower, "Have you forgotten that you picked out this dress?"

So what? She has no business looking that beautiful, that over-the-top seductive in that outfit. When I'd seen it in the store...all I had thought of was how well it would match her eyes. I'd imagined her wearing the gown, and fuck, if I hadn't come right then. Of course, I had picked it out for her. Had wanted her to wear a dress that was revealing enough to make her uncomfortable. One of my crazy-ass ideas that had seemed brilliant at the time. Why does she have to look so delectable in that? Why the hell does it matter to me that men will eat her up with their eyes? I toss back the rest of the whiskey, place it on the counter of the bar I had been leaning against.

"Turn around."

"What?"

I circle the air with my finger.

She frowns.

I jerk my chin. She draws in a breath, then does a slow turn for me.

"The fuck?" The back of the dress is far, far worse. It dips in a V that plunges down all the way to the top of her arse crack. The shadowed cleavage between her ass cheeks mocks me. I was inside of her not a few hours ago.

I'd carried her into the private elevator at the office—it was too early for any of the other Seven to be around—then to the top floor, where I had directed my helicopter back to my hotel suite. That way, there had been no chance of anyone seeing her in her undressed state. I'd let her sleep in my bed, watching her as she'd not stirred... Not until I'd woken her up an hour ago to get dressed. I'd left the outfit for her, needing to see her wear my choice. It is perfect for her. It brings out all of her best attributes, the silver-tipped heels on her feet giving her a few added inches that accentuate the jut of her butt, the proud thrust of her cleavage.

I prowl toward her, place my palm flat in the middle of her bare back.

She shudders, "Saint."

"Get out of this dress."

"I will not." She turns to glare at me, "I put a lot of effort into looking good."

"Is that what you call this?" I step back, look her up and down,

My heart stutters; she so fucking beautiful. And yet... She still hasn't revealed the real reason she came to me.

I draw myself up to my full height. "Step out of it, Gigi, or I'll make you do it."

"Try me," she juts out her lower lip, then turns away.

I push her up against the wall, hook my finger in the 'V' of her dress and tug. The delicate fabric rips.

She gasps and the sound coils in my belly. I'm instantly hard.

She looks over her shoulder. "What are you doing?" her voice is breathless.

I yank at the cloth and it parts all the way down to the hem. I let go and it pools to the floor.

"Jesus," I take in the silver thong that rides the top of her butt.

"The fuck are you wearing?"

She wriggles her feet, tries to angle her body. I apply more pressure to her back. She arches up.

"Answer me," I growl.

"What does it look like?" The anger in her voice slices straight to my gut. My belly tightens. My cock tents my pants.

I run a finger down the silvery thread caught between her arse cheeks.

Her thigh muscles ripple.

"Saint," her voice hitches, "please."

"Please what, Gigi?" I plant my thigh between her legs, pushing them apart.

She shudders, "Why...why are you doing this?"

I dip a finger inside her pussy. The melting heat clings to my skin. "That's why," I growl. "Because I only have to glare at you, and your body instantly responds." I yank on the thin silver fabric and it snaps.

A small scream leaves her lips, "You...you don't want to do this."

I laugh, "Don't you realize? In no way, can you tell me what to do."

I unbuckle my belt, lower my zipper.

"Stop," she snarls.

I yank her butt toward me, position her right, shove her legs apart further, and—

"Don't—" her voice breaks.

I pull out my dick, position it at the opening of her melting pussy. Drag my hand up and around to cup her breast, "I want you," I growl.

"Not yet."

I squeeze her nipple, run my tongue up the curve of her ear, "Yes, yet."

"First answer my riddle."

"Huh?" I pause, "What did you say?"

"Answer my questions. If you get it right, you can have me... Else..."

"Else?"

"You have to wait until I am ready."

"You know I don't allow anyone else to question me."

"Why not?" She frowns at me, her cheek flat against the wall. "What are you afraid of Saint?"

"Nothing."

I roll her nipple between my fingers. Her mouth parts.

"See, your body can't deny me."

"That's true," she swallows, "but you relish challenges, Saint, and I'm challenging you to own my mind."

"What does that mean?"

"Answer my question...and I promise, I'll never stop you again."

The familiar fear bursts through my mind. My heart begins to race. Sweat beads my temple.

Fact is that I'd take her anyway I can get her...but... I also can't deny her. My dick nudges the soft opening of her pussy, and I force myself to stay there. Stay.

"What is always too late?" Her voice slices through the lust in my head.

Don't answer. Don't. Damn her, she is the only person I'll always answer. Fuck her for exploiting that, and fuck me for answering.

"Regret," I snarl.

She tips up her head, "Some try to hide, some try to cheat, but time will show, we always will meet."

I pause, my pulse rate ratchets up. "Death," I grind out.

"When I sneak up on you, you'll never be the same again." She smiles, "What am I?" A tear slides down her cheek.

I bend into her, lick it up. "Betrayal," I growl.

She swallows.

"You going to betray me, Gigi?"

"What do you think?" She tips up her chin, her gaze challenging. "The mighty Saint, who's never had the courage to lose his heart ever before... You think I have the guts to betray you?"

"I think," I grip her hips, position her just right, "that you already have." I propel my hips forward and enter her.

Her head falls back against my shoulder. She brings up her hand and I grab her palm, flatten it against the wall, pressing my fingers in between hers.

"My God, Gigi, you're..." My cock lengthens inside of her. She thrusts back, grinds her butt into the hard wall of my pelvis. "Please." The word spills from her lips.

A groan rips out of me. I grind my teeth so hard, pain rips up my jaw. I lower my head to the curve between her neck and shoulder, "Fuck you for getting to me. Fuck me for not being able to resist you. Fuck us both for what we are doing to each other." I bite down on her neck.

She screams.

Her pussy clamps down on my cock. I pull out, and the friction of my dick against the melting walls of her channel is too much. More blood rushes to my groin. I drag my fingers up to her breasts, squeeze her nipple.

Her body bucks. I rip my teeth from her shoulder, turn her head to mine. "Open your eyes," I growl.

Her eyelids flutter open, her pupils so big in her eyes, they seem to swallow up most of her iris, leaving only a ring of green at the circumference.

"Saint," she whispers.

"I fucking love you," I snarl.

Her face whitens. "You can't."

"Too late," I bare my teeth. "Congratulations, you got what you set out to do."

I propel my hips forward, bury myself inside her with such force that my balls slap against her skin.

Her mouth opens and her throat moves as she tries to speak. I shake my head, "Save it for later, babe, cause both you and I are going to pay for this." I pull out and thrust back in, impaling her again and again. Her body jerks and spasms grip her body, sweep up her hips, her breasts.

Her gaze widens, "Omigod," she gasps, "I'm going to..."

I pull out, and come on her back.

"What the—?" She blinks.

I step back, survey the white ribbons of my cum that crisscross her curves. Pulling out my handkerchief—monogrammed because, what the fuck? I gotta play the part of gazillionaire dickhead with no details spared—I throw it at her. "Clean yourself up."

I tuck myself back in, turn and stride to the lift.

"Oh, and Gigi," I glance at where she hasn't moved from against the wall, "don't be late."

40

Victoria

I pause outside the entrance to the ballroom of the Claridge's—the same one where, only a few weeks ago, I'd wed Saint. Wed him? Ha, that has to be a euphemism for... The most mind-blowing sex ever... Okay, so I don't have experience to compare it to; but hell, if that matters.

I've seen enough porn online, heard enough from friends in university, swapped enough secret fantasies with Nina to know... What I had with Saint was exceptional.

I shudder, nervously toy with the ring he gave me. The emerald warms against my skin. Stay strong, you can do this Victoria. You only have the next few hours to get through... And then what?

Escape? Get out of here, away from the Mafia... At what cost? You'll give up the man who'd professes to love you? He may as well hate me. That's what his tone had implied. No, Saint doesn't understand the meaning of the word love. He is obsessed...fixated, maybe... Sure, he finds me attractive, but he'll forget me. He'll move on quickly. To another hotel suite, another lay, another woman to take and conquer. My heart stutters. He'll forget about me soon enough...and I... I will be free.

Still tethered to the thought of him—his touch, his feel, the crude way he'd taken me earlier, how he'd torn off my gown, not caring for the fact that it was new and expensive. It shouldn't matter to me. That flaunting of his wealth had been a crude gesture... One meant to put me in my place. And I had found it hot. I had been instantly wet and throbbing and aching for him.

My nipples tighten against the short black sheath. I run my hands down the fabric that clings to my thighs.

This isn't one of Saint's purchases. It had been in the bag I'd packed before leaving Amelie's. No way, am I wearing anything else bought by him. Not after how he'd reacted to my wearing the previous one. What the hell had come over him? He'd been like a man possessed. He'd fucked me, then not allowed me to climax. Just like he'd refused to tell me who that woman is. There has to be a simple explanation to it... So why won't he reveal it? How can it be for my safety when it is tearing me apart from inside?

And all that, after he'd professed his love. Hell! I clutch my hands around the simple silver purse that dangles from my hand.

Why did he have to go and do that?

Almost as if he'd known that it was his last chance to tell me his true feelings. And he'd meant it. I squeeze my eyes shut. Deny it as much as you want...but there had been a hint of desperation in his tone, a dangerous glint in his eyes. And the way he'd fucked me...as if it was our last time.

He is no fool... He knows something is going to happen... So he'd played his last card. He'd...hit me where it hurts—hoping it would hold me back from what I have to do.

If he thinks his declaration is going to stop me... Well, he has misjudged me. He isn't the only one who plays with people's feelings, who can set their eyes on a goal and use anything and everything...and anyone, to get to it.

Sweat beads my palm; I wipe it on the silky fabric of my dress. My knees knock together and my throat dries.

"Victoria, honey, are you okay?"

Amelie grips my shoulder.

"Why don't you sit down?" She leads me to an armchair pushed up into an alcove of the hallway a few feet away.

I sink into it. She keeps her hand on mine, and takes the seat next to me.

I draw in a breath, then another.

She grabs a bottle of water from the antique table in front of us, unscrews the cap, and hands it to me. I take a grateful sip.

"Better?"

I nod, then lower the bottle. "Is my make-up okay?"

She surveys my face, "You're always perfect, V."

I shake my head. If she only knew.

I reach over, place the bottle on the table.

She squeezes my hand, "Now, tell me why you were having that panic attack."

"I wasn't."

She stares at me. "Is this to do with Saint?"

A giggle bubbles up, "What in my life isn't to do with him right now?"

"It's normal for newly-weds to feel overwhelmed."

Not like this, it's not. I squeeze my fingers together around the bag in my lap.

"When are you guys going on your honeymoon?"

"There's not going to be any honeymoon."

She frowns. "Of course, there is. Saint asked Meredith to book tickets to —" she snaps her mouth shut. "Ugh, sorry. Did I give away a secret?"

I toss my head, "Doesn't matter. Saint's good at putting on a show."

She peers up at me from under her eyelashes. "You know that's not true... I mean, all the Seven are consummate actors and jerks—"

"And a-holes of the first order."

She nods, "But you saw how hard Sin fell for Summer and see how devoted Jace is to Sienna. When they fall, they fall hard. They don't stop until they've swept their women off their feet."

I shift in my seat. "It's really, really not like that. All this..." I wave a hand in the air, "is an act."

"Saint said you'd say that," she nods.

"When did you talk to him?" I stare at her.

"Umm." She changes position, "I wasn't going to tell you, but—"

"But?"

"—seeing as how much of a tizzy you've got yourself into, you should know—"

"What?" Don't tell me, don't. Please. "What is it?" I scowl.

"Remember when I ran into you outside the 7A offices that night?"

"Yeah..." my voice trails off. Shit. I don't want to hear this, I don't. I grip the arm of my chair.

"What do you think I was doing there at that time of the evening?"

"I thought that..." my voice trails off, "...that you'd come to meet Weston?"

"That ridiculous, selfish, no-good reprobate?"

Uh, oh. "Strike that." I wave my hand in the air.

"Why would you even think I'd arrived for a rendezvous with Weston?"

she grumbles.

Nice, one. I've put my foot in my mouth now, haven't I? "Forget it," I mumble.

She glares at me.

"Honestly, Amelie," I lean forward, take her hand in mine, "I didn't mean to piss you off, but there's chemistry between you two..." And that's putting it mildly.

"I've barely had a single conversation with the man, and anyway," she sniffs, "this isn't about me and Weston."

"Right," I snatch up another bottle of water and hand it to her.

She uncaps it, drinks from it, then sighs, "So, as I was saying... I was there that night because Saint called me and asked me to come by. He thought you could do with some company."

"Hold on..." I reach for my bottle of water, press it to my aching temples. "He asked you run into me?"

She twists her mouth, "He told me to pretend it was a chance meeting."

After he'd told me he didn't want me and allowed me to assume that he wasn't accepting my proposition... My head spins. I squint at her, "You're not making any sense."

"You're telling me?" She chugs down more water. "He swore me to secrecy."

"And you agreed?"

She reddens, "Hey, I thought it was romantic. Besides, he told me that he'd—" she chews on her lower lip.

"What?" I peruse her features. "He made you a deal?"

"He said," her gaze flicks away, then back to my face, "that I'd get to make the wedding cake, and take credit for it. He said he'd ensure all the media would cover the event and my name would be mentioned."

"But the wedding ceremony was impromptu..."

"Not the one that's about to take place."

"Oh?" I frown, then stiffen, "Oh."

She nods and her features scrunch up, "He's been...uh... planning this for a few weeks. He—ah!—" She shuffles her feet. "He wanted to surprise you with a society wedding that'd get a lot of attention."

"Oh, he did, did he?" I growl. The nerve of the man. How dare he take me for granted? There's a bitterness to my voice that I can't disguise when I ask her, "Did he also pay you to friend me?"

"Of course, not." She sits up straight. "Look V, I swear, he only wanted to make it special for you."

I snort.

"Besides," she wriggles around trying to find a more comfortable position. "I could hardly turn him down."

"Of course, not," I echo her.

She stiffens, "It's not easy, trying to make it on your own."

"You bet, it isn't."

She scowls, "It's cut-throat out there." She waves her hand in the air, "Think of what this kind of exposure could do for my business."

I stare at her, "I'm thinking a lot of things, all right."

She reddens. "Please try to understand, V. I mean, if you guys were going to get married, then why not keep the catering for the wedding in the family, huh?"

"I suppose Isla's doing the wedding planning?" I ask.

She glances away, then back at me.

"Of course, she is," I scowl.

I suppose that makes sense too. I mean why look outside when the talent is in your circle of friends? So why does it feel like a bloody betrayal? I place the cap on the bottle, screw it back in place with deliberate precision. "So, the time when Meredith met me outside Selfridges..." I glance up at her, "She brought me here to meet all of you. Did Saint put her up to that as well?"

"You'll have to ask Meredith about that." She swipes the hair back from her face.

"Did he ask you to round up all the women so you all could keep an eye on me?"

"It...it wasn't like that." She leans forward to take my arm.

I shake it off, "All this time, I thought, perhaps, I had a support circle here, that perhaps I had a chance of finding a place where I belonged... I should have known that asshole would set me up. It was all about making sure that he was informed of my movements."

"He wanted to keep you safe."

"Bullshit," my voice echoes around the space.

A couple speaking at the far end of the corridor looks our way. Like I care? I glare at Amelie, "It was a way of controlling me, making sure he could monitor everything I did. He wanted to see if I'd give myself away."

"Give yourself away?" She frowns, "What are you talking about? Saint wanted to ensure that you didn't feel lonely, that's all."

"You believe that?"

She holds my gaze, "I do, Victoria. Saint's madly in love with you. I've never seen a man more besotted. Sure, he may be unorthodox in the way he shows it, but you have to admit, it's romantic that he's been so... Forceful."

I throw back my head and laugh.

The couple glances at me again, then move away, putting more distance between us. Good.

Too bad, Saint hadn't gotten the memo as well.

"Keep kidding yourself that way, girlfriend— Oh, I forgot, you're not really my friend, are you?" I rise to my feet.

"Please, V, don't be like that."

I turn to leave.

"I admit Saint prompted us to befriend you. Our friendship may have started out that way, but we've all grown to like you... Hell, you've become my BFF so damn quickly..."

I pause, then turn to glance at her, "BFF?" I chew on my lower lip.

"I swear." She holds up her hand.

"I want to believe you; I do." I shift my weight from foot to foot. "But imagine if you were in my place and you found that your... Uh... The man you're interested in goes behind your back and gets to the women you think are your friends. What would you think of it?"

"I..." she blinks rapidly, "I'd think he cares for me... A lot."

I scoff, "Wait until it's your turn and one of those alphaholes sets his sights on you. I'll be sure to ask you then, how it feels... Then again, I probably won't be around."

"Oh, pfft," she waves a hand in the air. "Of course, you'll be around. And I'm not the settling type. I intend to focus on myself. I've planned a retreat to rediscover myself," she beams.

I squint at her, "What do you mean?"

"I am going to take a few weeks off over Christmas. I'm going away to an isolated cabin in the countryside. It's owned by the Seven, and it's one of the things Saint promised me in return for..."

I throw up my hands, "Jesus, I can't believe you agreed to that."

"I knew I shouldn't have taken him up on that offer." She blinks, "I'll refuse him; I won't go to the cabin. In fact, I'll tell him I don't want any credit on the cakes and desserts I provided for the wedding party."

I scan her features.

She wrings her fingers together, "Shit, I'm sorry, V... I really didn't think it would upset you this much."

Maybe it's me. Maybe I am overreacting. Everything is running away from me, this entire sequence of events moving too fast for me. I hunch my shoulders. I feel so alone—so damn on my own. Nina has always been there for me. And she isn't here... and I have to go through with this sham of a fake wedding. It is the only way to keep on track, and complete what I came here to do. She'd be free and it would all have been worth it. It would, right?

"V," Isla approaches me. "I'm sorry."

I draw in a breath.

"Please tell me that you're not angry with us."

I sigh.

"Please... p-l-eee-ase," Amelie singsongs.

This woman! I may not have known her long, but her happy-go-lucky nature is a thing of beauty. She wears her heart on her sleeve, hadn't blinked an eye before inviting me into her home. If there is one thing I know, it's that when I need her most, Amelia will be there to help me, just like Nina had been.

"Fine," I mutter.

She whoops and throws her arms around me. "OMG! Thank you, V. Thank you. Everything is going to work out now. I promise you. Saint loves you. He really does."

Hell, he's fooled all of them; but I can see through him.

I pat her back, then straighten my shoulders. "Guess I'd better get this over with, huh?"

41

Saint

She had to do it, huh? She had to take the goddamn USB. I'd checked the drawer after she'd fallen asleep, when I'd gone to grab her purse, and it was gone. Then because, apparently, I have a hidden masochistic side, I had checked her purse...and spotted the fucking thing. Fuck. So this is how it feels to have your life go tits up.

I toss back the whiskey, then place the empty glass back on the bar counter. The bartender tops it off. I lift the glass to my lips, take a healthy sip.

"Living the dream, I see?" Weston slaps me on the back.

I chug down the rest of the amber liquid, slap the glass back on the bar.

"Easy, ol' chap." Weston leans his hip against the bar, watches as I reach across and grab the bottle from the bartender. I tilt the bottle of Macallan's Single Malt to my mouth, swig from it.

"As classy as your shoes," he clicks his tongue.

"What's fucking wrong with my shoes?"

"A bit worn out for the rest of your suit... How much did that set you back by? £10,000?"

"£20,000," I toss back more of the whiskey. It burns a path down my gullet, and sets off a burn in my stomach, "but who's counting?"

"Trouble in paradise, I take it?"

"Fuck off," I growl.

"It's only your goddamn wedding we're here to celebrate," he smirks.

"Fake wedding, douchebag."

"This is exactly how Sinner started out... Now look at him," he jerks his chin.

I follow his gaze to where the wanker stands in a corner, arms around Summer. The two are engaged in intense eye-fucking... The kind I indulged in with Gigi. No, that was real fucking... Fuck that... It was some intense shit. The harder I took her, the more she gave me. The more I pushed her, the deeper her resistance grew. Hell, I'd intended to punish her...maybe myself, when I'd taken her against the wall. Couldn't stop myself from tearing the dress off of her—the beautiful dress I'd imagined her in when I'd bought it.

I should have blown off this entire fucking party and simply stayed in my suite with her. Hell, she deserves more than this impersonal hotel space. She deserves a home... A real one, with furniture and curtains that she's picked out, and all that shit that women seem to thrive on. Not that Gigi is like other females. She is fucking stronger than she seems. A sultry seductress whose call I can't resist. One glance at her and I lose myself. She only has to be in my vicinity for my dick to take notice...and other parts of me...especially that offending feeling in my chest that has assailed me since the first time I'd kissed her, "Fuck."

I raise the bottle to my lips and glug down some more of the liquid.

"That's the economy of a third world country you're drinking down, by the way."

I wipe the back of my hand over my lips, "I am not going to apologize for being born into wealth." I slap the bottle back on the corner, "Not that it helped when we were kidnapped."

"Money's overrated," he rubs the back of his neck.

"But it's a necessary evil," I counter.

"Sometimes I do wonder what would have happened if I'd stayed with Doctors without Borders... Would I have been less of a douche then?"

"No," I shake my head.

"Touché." He frowns, "And your glowering Romeo mood is catching."

"Not glowering," I growl, "not a Romeo." The hair at the nape of my neck rises; electricity flickers across my nerves. She's here.

"Here comes your Juliet," Weston confirms.

I brace my shoulders. Since when have I needed Dutch courage to face a woman? Since when have I made a habit of drinking enough to layer on a veneer of indifference before facing a room full of people? Since that bloody beautiful, dark-haired witch had gotten under my skin.

"She still in mourning?" Weston frowns.

"What? Of course, not," I shake my head. "That piece of shit husband of hers was one only in name."

"Sure doesn't look that way, given what she's wearing."

"She didn't..." I pivot, take in her slender figure poised at the entrance. She's draped in black. The dress clings to her curves, covers every inch of her torso, and ends above her knees. It is far from the seductive gown she'd worn earlier... Just the opposite.

The high collar grazes the tip of her chin—not a sliver of skin on show. The full-length sleeves drape over her wrists to cover her palms, leaving only her fingertips exposed. She's wearing high, over-the-knee boots that come to mid-thigh.

The six—or is that eight?—inch heels boost her legs so they seemed to go on and on. Slender yet muscled, perfect to coil around my waist. She takes a step forward and a slim band of skin peeks out between her dress and boots. I'm instantly hard—Okay, harder. By any standards, her dress is more than demure... And that's the issue, because the flash of skin is almost obscene, given every other inch of her is covered in black. She raises a hand to flip down the veil attached to the jaunty hair accessory attached to her sleek hair. The thick strands are caught up and tied at the nape of her neck in a demure bun—that screams for a man's hands to rip out the pins and drape the waterfall of dark desire about her shoulders. The slash of red across her lips highlights her full, pouty lips. The overall effect is part widow-part slut.

"Fuck," I squeeze my fingers into fists.

Next to me, Weston grimaces, "She's doing it on purpose, to get a response out of you."

"No shit," I growl.

"She wants you to lose your shit in front of all of the guests," he warns.

"The fuck I care?"

"She's baiting you, Saint."

"She fucking succeeded." I take a step toward her.

"You don't want to do this," he grips my shoulder.

I shake him off, "Oh, but I do." I pause, shoot him a sideways glance, "Can you ensure that all the paparazzi have their cameras on us?"

He frowns, "You sure about this?"

"A hundred fucking percent." I stalk toward her.

A guest steps in my path. "Fuck off," I growl at the man clad in an illfitted suit.

He pales, then draws himself up, "I didn't come here to be insulted."

"Too fucking bad, you just were."

"You'll pay for this." He holds up his phone, snaps what is, no doubt, a shot that's going to be all over the internet.

"Knock yourself out, tosser." He's confirmed that it had been the right decision to invite every piece of shit news reporter and key influencer in town.

I walk toward her as men and women step aside, their gazes tracking my progress. Good. She takes a few steps forward, her gaze fixed on me.

I thrust out my chest.

She tips up her chin.

I look her up and down. She props a palm on her hip, angles her body. She strikes a pose, ensuring I take in every detail of how the fabric clings to the slope of her shoulders, the thrust of her breasts, the tiny waist ensconced in lace. She leans her weight to the side and the dress pulls tightly on her thigh. My cock twitches. I hasten my pace.

She stays rooted, her chest visibly rising and falling. I near her and the color from her already pale cheeks leeches out.

"You going to faint?" I curl my lips, "Not had your orange juice or whatever it is you need to stave of the shakes?"

She firms her jaw, "Your concern is touching." She pretends to flick a tear from her cheek, "Went straight to my heart."

My lips twitch, "And I wasn't even trying." I come to a halt so close that she has to tilt her head right back to keep her gaze locked with mine. A single strand escapes from the hairdo and floats across her cheek.

"You've made your choice, hmm?" I raise a hand.

She flinches.

I twine the hair around my finger, then tuck it back behind her ear.

She swallows, "It seems that way, doesn't it?" Her voice is firm, "You do you, Saint."

She bites down on her lower lip and my gaze drops there.

"Oh, I plan to do you first, darling wife." I swoop out my arm, wind it around her waist, and haul her to me with such force, she crashes into me—from breasts to waist to hips, she's plastered to me.

Her gaze widens and fear trembles off of her.

"Don't disappoint me now, my love. This is what you wanted—an open spectacle in front of the world, with every eye on us. A signal to those you work for that you've accomplished what you set out to do."

Her throat moves; she wets her lips and lowers her gaze to my mouth. "Yes..." she whispers. "It's what I need. I want you to hate me, Saint. Everything I've done is so you abhor me—so you forget me when I leave."

"Where are you going?"

"Somewhere you won't be able to find me," her smile twists. A single tear rolls down her cheek.

"Save the fucking histrionics," I snarl. "I love you, doesn't mean I am going to let you get away with this."

She stares, then chuckles, and a giggle spills from her. She begins to laugh.

"The fuck is wrong with you?"

She glances past me, pales.

"What is it?" I frown.

"Kiss me."

"What?"

She throws her arms around my neck, raises her chin, presses her lips to mine.

"Don't—"

She bites on my lips, digs her fingertips into my hair and drags them across my scalp. My groin hardens and my vision tunnels. A groan tears out of me. Fucking fuck, I can't refuse her, I can't resist her. Fuck her for rendering me so helpless.

I drag her up to tiptoe, deepen the kiss.

She sucks on my tongue, kisses me back with a fervor that borders on desperation. The hair on my nape rises. My heart twists in my chest.

This entire sequence of events, starting with her walking into that office and asking me for help... Was any of it real? A hollow sensation roils in my stomach. A bead of sweat slides down my back. I tear my mouth from hers.

"The fuck is happening?"

She swallows, peers into my eyes.

"Tell me, Gigi, I can help you." I scan her anguished features.

"I can't let you," she whispers.

"No," my pulse begins to race, "don't do this."

She cups my cheek. "Promise me, you'll put this behind you, and move on."

"The fuck you talking about, woman. If you think I am going to let you put yourself in danger, you've got another think coming. I won't allow it, Gigi, I—"

"You ready to leave, Victoria?" a new voice booms.

My heart slams into my chest. I swing around to face a familiar face.

"You?" I snarl, "The fuck you doing here?"

Victoria

"Hello, Antonio."

He comes forward, arm outstretched.

Beside me, Saint stiffens, "Get the fuck away from her."

"Afraid it doesn't work quite that way, old sport." Antonio turns to me, "You going to tell your new husband, or should I?"

I tip up my chin, "I need a second."

"You've run out of time." Antonio smiles, white teeth flashing against tanned skin. He prowls toward me.

I shudder, take a step back. Saint's warmth envelopes me; he wraps an arm around my waist. "You don't have to do this," he whispers in my ear.

I do. I don't have a choice. If I don't do as he says, he'll kill the friend who's meant more to me than any family. No, I have to do this, with no help from anyone else.

I yank at Saint's arm. His muscles flex, "I am not letting you go."

"I was never yours to begin with."

"The fuck?" he explodes.

I elbow him in the waist. He huffs and his grip loosens enough for me to pull away. I turn on him, "I'm leaving you."

"What?" He frowns, scans my features then chuckles, "You're getting back at me for my asshole attitude, huh?" He lowers his voice, "You know that's because I can't help myself. It's in my blood, I'm a born wanker." He raises his shoulders, "but for you, Gigi... For you, I'd change."

I swallow, then shake my head. "You...won't." I don't want you to. "Your uncompromising meanness is too much a part of you. Besides...this entire arrangement between us was a farce."

"Not for me." He takes a step forward, "It may have started off that way, but I developed feelings for you."

"Like I care?"

"Of course, you do," he growls. "You love me, Gigi."

"No," I back away from him.

"Yes. You do. You're too frightened to admit it." He glares past me. "What does he have on you?"

"Nothing." I retreat another step.

Antonio's heat assails me. My skin crawls. My fingers jerk. Don't shrink back; don't show how afraid you are right now. His massive hand descends on my shoulder. The blood drains from my face.

"Don't fucking touch her," Saint's feet don't seem to touch the ground as he crosses the distance between us.

"Don't come closer," I swallow.

"Stop right there," Antonio snaps.

Saint's jaw tics. A vein throbs at his temple. He folds his fingers into fists, and his entire body tenses.

A woman screams. People scramble back.

I glance sideways and freeze. Antonio holds a gun, its barrel trained on Saint. My heart jackknives in my chest. "You promised," I whisper. "You said you wouldn't hurt him. You promised that if I gave you what you needed, you'd release my friend."

"Maybe I lied," Antonio smiles, his thin upper lip a slash across his face, "maybe I didn't. It's up to you how this plays out."

I swallow.

"Tell him to stand back."

"Stop hiding behind her, you coward," Saint growls. "Let her go and fight me."

Shit, shit, shit. The hell is he doing? "Shut up, Saint," I huff.

He glares at me, the skin around his eyes crinkling.

"Don't tell me what to do," he pulls back his shoulders.

"This once, will you listen to me?" I whisper-shout.

"She has a point," Weston walks forward.

Antonio points the gun at him, but he raises his hands, "Easy there."

Antonio turns back to Saint. "For someone who was kidnapped and tortured, you turned out well."

"Tortured?" I blink.

Saint's jaw hardens, "Let her go, and you and I can talk this out."

"Oh?"

Saint nods. "What do you want? Money? Fame?" He glances around at the assembled paparazzi. "Though why you'd want every single camera in the country on your back—"

"Not mine. Yours."

"What?"

Antonio turns to me, "Hand it over."

"What's he talking about?" Saint growls.

I nudge my fingers into my purse, pull out the flash drive.

"I believe this is what you are looking for," I hold it out to him.

He turns the gun on me. "Don't attempt anything funny."

There's an indrawn breath from Saint. Tension screams off of him. Does he recognize it? Does he realize it's the USB from his desk? Will he ever forgive me?

"No, tricks." I raise the device, "Take it. Everything you want is on that."

He holds out his palm and I drop the device onto it. He pockets it, then grabs me and holds the gun to my temple. Sweat beads my upper lip.

My heart races so fast, I am sure it's going to break out of my ribcage. My knees buckle and the world tilts around me. Antonio tightens his hold on my waist, yanking me closer. I flinch, hunch my shoulders.

"Let go of my wife," Saint growls.

"Wife?" Antonio laughs, "Is that what you call this relationship?"

Saint's shoulders bunch, "Shut the fuck up."

"Have you told her what they did to you when you were kidnapped?"

I half angle my body, glance from Saint to Antonio. "Of course, I know about the incident," I force my voice to stay steady.

"Oh?" Antonio begins to inch back. "Has he told you what they did to him in that cell? How they tortured him and his friends? How they systematically broke him?"

Saint growls low in his throat. The fine hair on the nape of my neck rise. "Of course, he did. We...we have no secrets."

Shit, what am I saying? What does it matter that Antonio is trying to push Saint until he loses control? Why can I not allow that? I straighten my shoulders. I need to deflect Antonio's attention for as long as I can.

"You told him your secrets, Victoria?"

I pale. "I... Have none."

Antonio grins, "You'll have to do better than that." He jerks his chin toward Saint, "Even your husband doesn't believe you."

Don't look, don't. I swing my head in Saint's direction. He's glaring at me, his features contorted. His blue eyes blaze with... Anger? Hate?

My pulse rate kicks up. Shit, why does his opinion of me matter? "I never withheld anything from you." I glance away, "Not out of choice, at least."

"I believe you."

I whip my gaze to his face, "You do?"

"Of course. All of your actions have a reason."

"Oh!" My heart stutters and warmth coils in my chest. "You believe me?"

"Always." Saint's lips twist, "Even your lies tell me a story."

"Saint, I—" I step forward.

Antonio pulls me back.

I cry out.

Saint jumps forward.

"Stop right there," Antonio aims his pistol at my husband.

"I... I'm fine," I choke out. "Don't come close."

Saint's throat moves as he swallows. "Get away from her," he growls.

"Get back." Antonio, waves his gun and the crowd scrambles away. "The rest of you too."

I survey the room and find Sinclair—with Summer behind him—Weston, Damian and Edward standing in a semicircle.

Amelie and the girls are clustered in a corner away from the action.

Antonio jerks his chin, "I won't warn you again."

"Get back, you guys," Saint growls.

Weston hesitates. Damian and Edward stay unmoving. Sinclair balls his fists at his sides.

"She's my wife," Saint's shoulders bunch, "I take the risks."

"Fuck that," Weston scowls. "We have each other's backs."

"So what if we don't always like each other," Sinclair mutters.

"Except Baron." Damian glowers. "He prefers to keep his shit separate."

"Fucking Baron," Edward agrees.

Antonio glances between them, "You guys are insane."

"Am I late...?" Arpad walks in with a blonde on his arm. She screams.

There's a soft pop. I blink at the gun in Saint's hand. Where the hell had he kept it hidden?

Antonio staggers. "Fuck," he swears aloud, takes another step back.

"Let her go," Saint growls.

Antonio retreats toward the door, keeping me between him and Saint.

"Ask your husband to put down his weapon, or you're going to be widowed twice over," Antonio growls.

"No, don't hurt him." My pulse rate goes through the roof. "Saint," I swallow, "do as he says. Please."

Saint doesn't move. His gaze is fixed on my face. His features are hard, his eyes glaring pools of blue. Is he angry at me?

Why is he angry at me?

Antonio reaches the door. "Say goodbye."

"No," I snarl, helplessness filling me. "You can't do this. I did everything you asked me to do."

"Too bad I never keep my word." Antonio raises his gun toward me. Flashes light up around me, then everything goes dark.

43

Saint

"Fuck, fuck, fuck." I pace the floor in the waiting room in the hospital. "I am her husband. I should be in there with her."

Damian watches me from the chair he's sprawled in. "You did a good enough job convincing the doctor in charge to allow Weston to be present."

"He's a doctor, isn't he?"

"A surgeon... A heart surgeon, no less." Arpad straightens from the window, where'd he'd taken up position since we'd arrived at the hospital.

"So? He's the only medical professional I'll trust her with."

"Saint, you're being unreasonable." Damian frowns, "This is the best hospital in the city, and the doctor you have attending is a specialist."

"Fuck that. Can't trust anyone, and you know that."

Damian draws in a breath, "Can't say I disagree with you, but has it occurred to you that you're not helping things with your crazy, possessive streak."

I turn on him. "Wait until you fall in love and it's your wife in there fighting for her life—"

He raises a hand, "Shit's not for me. You and Sinner, collapsing one after the other... Nah, seeing what you two went through is more than enough to put me off any kind of relationship, let alone marriage."

"Famous last words," Sinner walks in, his arm around Summer.

Summer breaks away and stops in front of me. "How is she?"

I drag my fingers through my hair, try to speak but the words stick in my throat. I turn and begin to pace again.

Damian replies, "She's in surgery; Weston is in with her."

"The doctor allowed him in?" Sinclair frowns.

"Romeo here didn't give him a choice," Damian mutters.

"He nearly decked the paramedic who asked him to release her into their care," Arpad grimaces.

"Asshole dared to ask me to stand back from her," I growl.

"Only because they needed to check her vitals. You understand that, don't you?" Damian straightens. "Honestly, you needed to take a chill pill, and let the professionals get on with their work. You were only getting in their way."

I take a step toward him. Arpad and Sinclair both step in front of me.

Edward ignores the proceedings, his face buried in a book, in the chair he's occupied since we'd arrived here.

"Hold on," Sinclair reaches for me.

I sidestep him, "Don't fucking touch me, man."

"Sure," Sinclair rocks back on his heels, "It's understandable you're feeling on edge and all. I get it."

"Oh, do you now?" I smirk. "Just because you're married and all that shit, you think you understand how it feels to have the woman you wronged take a fucking bullet for you?"

"Jesus, Saint, you're living up to your name."

"The fuck you mean?"

"You're taking the sins of the entire world on yourself. See what I did there?" Sin raises an eyebrow and smirks.

"You douche, this is not the time to indulge in fucking word play."

"Says the man who has a riddle to suit every occasion," Arpad mutters.

"Not this one." I dig my fingers through my hair, tug on the strands. "My mind's a fucking blank." Also, not true. All I can think of is her pale face, her limp figure crumpling to the floor. I'd raced toward her and caught her before she had hurt herself further, thank fuck. I'd carried her out and to the ambulance, I'd refused to let go of her hand on the ride here.

I flex my fingers. Blood stains my palm; I stare at it. My heart begins to race. The scars on my soles itch. Whack-whack-whack. I flinch.

"Answer this, boy, and you go free."

It's a trick, always a trick. He asks me questions to which I never have the answers. This is how he plays with me. Traps me in my mind, trying to crack the puzzles. I've never gotten an answer right so far. Goddamn him. It's a sure way to mess with my head. He'll never let me go free, not even if I get it right. Damn him, he's screwing with me. If I get out of here alive, I'll never be caught unaware.

"Saint."

I'll read up until I know the answer to every fucking question ever. No one will ever ask me a riddle again. I'll be the one in control. Always.

"Saint!"

There's a touch on my shoulder, I pivot around, fists raised in front.

"Easy," Sinner steps back, putting distance between us.

Damian and Arpad freeze.

Edward slaps his book shut, "The answer's a minute at a time."

"What?" I frown.

He places his book on the seat next to him, then leans forward, "The answer to the question that's on your mind."

"You a mind reader now, along with being a priest?" I glower.

"If the occasion demands." Edward places his elbows on his knees, "You're wondering how you're going to get through the time she's in there?"

"Fuck off."

Edward winces, "I'll let that pass, this time." He raises his hand. "Your turn to ask a riddle."

I glare at him, "Fuck that."

"Fine, I'll go then." He smiles, "A prison you feel safe in, yet never quite happy. Whenever you try to leave, it only grows bigger."

He glances around the space, "Anyone get it?"

"Comfort Zone?" Arpad ventures.

Edward nods, "Very good."

"Here's another." He taps his fingers together, "If you break me, I do not stop working; if you touch me, I may be snared; if you lose me, nothing will matter. What am I?"

"Your heart?" Damian asks, then stares at Edward, "Shit, there's a parable hidden somewhere in that, isn't there?"

"Of course, there is," I growl. "Edward here, is a cheeky bugger. He leverages his status as a priest to get away with sin."

Edward loses some of his color. He straightens, then shakes his finger, "Not gonna distract me there, Saint."

I snarl.

His grin widens. He lowers his hands, "The more you carry it with you, the heavier a burden it becomes. What is it?"

Silence.

He scans the faces of the group assembled, "No one?"

"Go on, Father, tell us," Arpad drums his fingers on his chest.

"A guilty conscience." Edward's lips kick up in a smile.

"Enough," I snarl. "Spit out whatever it is you are trying to say."

"Do you have one?" Edward asks me.

"Mine's bigger than yours, Father."

"Not getting into that argument with you." Edward's grin widens, "I mean, do you have a guilty conscience?"

I run a finger under my collar. "Of course, not."

"You could have fooled me," Edward's eyes twinkle.

"Okay... So I owe her an apology." Fucking more than an apology, actually. "I owe her my life." I rake my fingers through my hair. "I was careless; I panicked when that fucker restrained her. He touched her and I couldn't do anything about it." I crack my neck from side to side, "I won't let that bastard live."

"He let her live." Weston enters the room, wearing his surgical garb.

"What?" I turn around, "What do you mean? How is she...?"

He watches me with a considering gaze.

My throat closes. "Is she?" my voice cracks. Jesus, fuck. I curl my fingers into fists, "Tell me Weston, or so help me I'll—"

"He could have shot her in the chest or in the head, but he didn't." Weston rubs the back of his neck.

"He shot her," I growl. "She was bleeding."

"It was a flesh wound."

I blink.

"What?" Damian straightens.

Edward rises to his feet.

Arpad, Sinclair and Summer move in closer.

"So... She's fine...?"

"The doc stitched her up, but she's okay."

"Right." The knot in my chest eases. I head for the entrance when a nurse enters. "The patient is asking for—"

"Me," I step forward, "I'm her husband."

She glances past me, "Dr Weston, she wants to see you."

"There's a mistake." I frown, "She must have asked for me. Saint? She's my wife."

The nurse's features taken on an expression of pity. I stiffen. I hate that look, have seen enough of it.

"Let me through," I growl.

I brush past her and she touches my arm, "I'm sorry, but she doesn't want to see you."

Victoria

I dig my fingers into the hospital bed. My shoulder throbs. The pain from the gunshot wound matches the throbbing sensation in my chest. At least they pulse in synchrony. That has to count for something, huh? A giggle bubbles up my throat.

Hell, don't lose your shit now. Deep breath, stay calm. You've come this far; you can see it through to the end.

I shut my eyes and see Saint's face—his concern, the way he'd seemed to appear from out of nowhere and catch me as I fell. The last thing I remember is the fear in his eyes, the paleness of his beautiful features, the vein throbbing at his temple. Then his arms had closed around me, he'd cradled me to his chest, and I had felt safe... Safe, despite the fact that I'd been shot.

I'd known then that he'd do anything to protect me. He really did mean what he'd said. He cared for me... As for love? Perhaps he does love me, but will he accept this child...? Will he want to participate in bringing up this child, when he'd told me in no uncertain terms that he doesn't want children.

Weston walks into the hospital room, "You okay?"

I nod, try to swallow, but my throat is dry. I glance toward the side table. He walks to it, pours out some water and hands me a glass. I accept it and take a few sips.

"He wants to see you."

My fingers tremble. The glass tips and water splashes onto my hospital gown.

My heart hammers in my chest. "I don't... I can't..."

He leans forward, rescues the glass and places it back on the table.

"Does he know?" Weston pulls up a chair and drops into it.

"No," I twist my fingers together. "Did you tell him?"

He shakes his head, "But Saint has a right to know."

I tip up my chin, "That's for me to decide. He won't want it."

"Whatever is between the two of you, that's your business." He leans forward, "But I am his friend, and I owe it to him to let him know."

"I'm his wife." I set my jaw, "It's my decision when I decide to share this with him."

"So you will tell him?" He frowns.

I twist my fingers together, "When it's the right time."

His jaw tics, "You want this child?"

I nod, "More than anything else in the world."

"How long have you known?"

"I... I guessed...when my period didn't arrive on time." I raise my shoulders. "But I put it down to the stress of the last few weeks."

"Did you plan this?" He frowns.

"No," I swallow.

He sets his jaw.

"Really." I hasten to add, "I understood how precarious my situation with Saint was... I even started taking the pill. No way, would I have been this irresponsible."

Yet here I am, pregnant.

Weston raises an eyebrow. "When you say you 'even started taking the pill,' do you mean you just started when you and Saint got together?"

I nod.

He shakes his head, "Victoria, it can take up to seven days for birth control to become effective."

My mouth drops open.

"The doctor must have told you..."

"Oh, my god," I whisper, "I must not have heard her."

Had I planned this subconsciously? I've always wanted a child of my own... No, I wanted Saint's child. I admit it, but I didn't consciously plan for it to turn out like this. I hunch my shoulders.

"I... I wouldn't hurt Saint." I swallow, "Not on purpose."

He changes position, surveys me for another beat. "I believe you," he says, then places the tips of his fingers together. "As your doctor and your friend, I'd advise that you allow him to share the load. This is when you need him the most."

"I don't need anyone."

He scowls, "Victoria."

"Swear it," I sit up and hold out my hand, "Swear you will not tell him yet, that you'll give me the chance to break the news to him."

"Fuck." He jumps up. "This is why I steer clear of all entanglements. It's a bloody minefield. I don't want to get dragged into this."

"Promise me, " I plead.

"I can't not tell him. However," he turns to me, "I'll delay it on one condition."

"Of course," I huff. "You Seven know how to haggle. Everything is a negotiation for you guys."

"Maybe," he raises his shoulders, "if it gets me what I want..."

"What?" I meet his gaze, "What do you want from me?"

"Meet him, once."

I shake my head, "No, no, that's not happening."

There's a commotion at the door, then Saint stalks in.

"Don't think he's leaving you a choice." Weston's face softens, "Let him help you, Victoria."

"Keep your promise," I implore him. "That's all I want."

Saint draws abreast with Weston, "What are the two of you talking about?"

"The Doctor was just leaving," I look pointedly at Weston.

He turns to go.

"You should join him," I turn my head to the side, study the view from the window—a road, a building across the street. Rain patters down the window pane. Bleak. Miserable. Just like my life is going to be without him. Shit. Stop it. This is the right thing to do...for him...for me...for the child I'm carrying. Saint isn't ready to have children and I'd never force that on him.

His father had called him an intrusion... A mistake. And mine? Well, mine had checked out, leaving us to cope on our own. The track record for fathers being present and engaged in both of our lives is not reassuring, to say the least. I bite the inside of my cheek. I won't let my child go through the same experience. It would be better for my child to never know a father, than to be rejected by one. If that means giving up the man who's come to mean so much to me, then so be it.

"Gigi."

I bite my lips. "Don't call me that, please."

He hesitates, then lowers himself into the chair. "How are you?" he asks.

"I'll be better once you're gone."

He makes a low noise in his throat, "If anything had happened to you—"

"I'm fine."

"He shot you."

"Antonio didn't intend to hurt me."

"Except he did," his voice cracks.

I turn to face him, and flinch. His hair is mussed, his face unshaven. Redness rims his eyes... And his gaze. Oh my God! His blue gaze burns into me with an intensity that makes my heart lurch. "Saint," I say his name before I can stop myself.

"I have my guys on him. He's revealed himself and I am not letting him go until I take him and everyone associated with him down.

"You can't," I bite the inside of my cheek.

"What? Why not?"

"If you do, he'll kill my best friend. The deal was for me to win your trust, to find the evidence you had on the Mafia and return it, in exchange for —"

"Your friend's life?" He snarls. "And what about your life, Gigi, your safety is my priority. You, are my priority. Nothing is more important than you. And that fucker dare pull out a fucking gun and threaten you, in front of me?" His nostrils flare. His biceps bulge, his shoulders seem to grow in size. Hell, Saint in full blown protective alpha mode is... bloody hot. I am going to miss that... so bloody much.

"I won't let him get away with it." He glares at me.

"I hadn't expected him to pull that stunt, Saint. Honestly. If I'd known he was going to hijack your event and ruin your reputation..."

"Fuck that," he swears.

"But...but he made you look like a loser." I protest.

"You're still here, aren't you?" He scowls.

"I can't stay, Saint."

His jaw tics, "If you think I am going to let you walk, with that man loose out there..."

"If he'd wanted to kill me, he'd already have done it. He wanted to cause a diversion to escape. He won't reveal himself again. His face is too well known. Besides, I am of no use to him anymore."

He frowns, "So stay with me. I thought I was in control, but all along, it was you who was leading me on. You were always one step ahead, Gigi—"

"Victoria," I correct him.

"Fuck that," he growls. He widens his stance, and damn him, but my gaze drops right to the tented fabric between his legs. Surely not. He can't be aroused. Is that Saint's resting position? It has to be. That's how big, how thick... How bloody massive his larger-than-average dick is. I'd felt it inside of me, curled my fingers around it and squeezed him, massaged him and made him come, had taken him down my throat and swallowed his cum, had shattered all over his fingers, ridden his dick as he'd brought me to climax. My thighs clench. My stomach flutters, I press my hand to my belly.

"What's wrong?" He frowns.

"Nothing." I bite the inside of my cheek.

"Stop lying."

"Fine," I glower at him. "You want to hear why I don't want anything to do with you? Why I know there's no future for us?"

"Tell me," he leans forward, his fists balled between his knees. "Tell me why you want to leave me."

I stare into his face and my heart begins to pump hard enough to pound in my throat. My palms begin to sweat. Do it; tell him. I brace my shoulders, "I don't want you."

Saint

"What?" I blink.

"I hate what you do to me."

"You don't." I scan her features.

"I loathe that we can't be honest with each other." She meets my gaze unblinking, "I despise how you bring out the part of me that I have hidden from for so long."

She pulls off my ring from her finger; holds it up. The stone glistens in her palm. I stare at it, my heart pounding erratically.

"Take the ring, Saint."

I hold out my hand and she drops the piece of jewelry into it.

"What gets broken without being held?" I close my fingers around it.

She blinks, chews on her lower lip, "Is it...a promise?"

My lips twist.

Her face pales further.

"Imagine you are in a dark room..." I peer into her face, "How do you get out?"

She curls her fingers at her sides, "Stop imagining," she whispers.

"When my mother asked me the same questions, I didn't have an answer for her. For a long time I was convinced that it's why she left me."

"Oh, Saint," her features twist. She half sits up, reaches for me.

I pull away, "I don't want your pity."

She half smiles, "Pity is the last thing on my mind where you are concerned."

I straighten.

She lowers her brows, "How old were you when she left?"

"Thirteen." I shuffle my feet. "A year after the incident."

"When you and the Seven were kidnapped?"

I nod. Shit, it never gets easier to talk about this. I square my shoulders. "They held up the car I was in, knocked my driver unconscious, and abducted me on the way home from football practice."

"Is that why you prefer to drive yourself around?"

I nod, "And why I keep a gun on hand." I raise my shoulders, "No way, will I be so vulnerable again."

"And the riddles?"

"What about them?"

"What got you so dependent on them?"

I lean forward, squeezing the ring in my palm with such force that the emerald cuts into my skin. The soles of my feet burn; I press my heels into the ground. "I can't talk about that," I straighten.

"Can't or won't?"

I rise to my feet, "Does it matter?"

"And the woman?" She asks.

I scowl. "It's not what you think it is." I stare into her face.

She scoffs. "You expect me to believe that?"

"Believe it..." I raise my shoulders, "or not."

She stiffens, "Is she your sister? Your cousin? Hell a blood relation of some kind?"

I shake my head.

"So who is she?" Her eyebrows knit.

"She's a... friend."

"A friend?" She glowers at me.

"Also a business associate." I crack my neck. "There's uh! Nothing between us."

"Fine, say I believe you." She wrings her fingers together, "What were you talking about with her?" She sets her jaw. "Why do you go running every time she calls?"

Shit, I'd done no wrong so why the hell am I feeling defensive?

I draw in a breath, "I can't tell you. I told you, I won't put you in danger."

She throws up her hands. "And you want me to stay? When there are so many secrets between us?"

"When I make a promise, I keep it, Gigi. Unlike you."

She pales.

"Shit." I drag my fingers through my hair, "I didn't mean it."

"Sure you did."

We glare at each other. She's right. She brings out the worst in me. She makes me feel things I never have... She makes me hurt. Fuck! Why is this thing between us so complicated? Sweat trickles down my back. "You're right." I glance away. "Whatever was between us, it's over."

I turn to leave.

"And you say you love me?" she huffs.

I walk toward the exit.

"I can be a game, but there are no winners, what am I?" her voice stops me.

I pause, then because I can't fucking resist, I answer, "Blame."

"What's another name for Saint?" she asks.

I grip the door frame, "Don't do this, Gigi."

"Answer me," she snarls.

I step through the doorway.

"Coward," her voice follows me out.

I freeze.

"You heard me," she huffs, "You don't have the courage to face up to what's between us."

"And you do?"

"Yes." She presses her hand to her belly, "Everything I am doing is out of love."

"For whom, Gigi? Everything you're doing is to punish me."

"There are some things bigger than you and me."

"Like what? Lies? Betrayal? Your affliction for that...man who shot you? He's taking advantage of you. He's using you Gigi."

"So be it."

"He'll never let your friend go."

"He will."

"It was all a farce. If you leave here, you'll never be safe."

"We'll see, shall we?" She sets her jaw.

I glare at her, "Why do you have to be so stubborn?"

"Why do you have to be so...blinded by your own ego?"

"It's the only thing that's kept me alive so far."

"What kind of living is it, if you can't even come clean to your own wife?"

"Oh, so now you are my wife?" I thrust out my chest.

She throws up her hands, "Just leave Saint, please."

"I intend to." I turn to go, when the phone in my pocket vibrates. I slide it out of my pocket, see the message from an unknown number. I swipe open the screen, play the message. A video flickers to life.

A woman speaks into the screen, "This message is for Victoria." She swallows, "V? This is Nina. I am fine." She glances at someone off-screen. "Antonio has promised not to hurt me as long as no one comes after him." She firms her lips, stares at the screen, "I am fine V, really. Call off whoever is shadowing Antonio. He'll take care of me." A smile curls her lips. "I believe him, V." She pauses, then adds, "Take care of yourself." The message switches off.

"What is it?"

I walk over to her, hand her the phone.

She glances at me, then back at the screen. I play the message for her. She pales, replays the message once again, then hands the phone back to me.

"You believe her?"

She nods. "No reason for Nina to lie."

"Yet, you kept the truth from me. Why didn't you tell me what the Mafia wanted from you?"

She pales.

"Why, Gigi?"

"Because...I had to protect you Saint. I couldn't...risk the Mafia finding out. What if they did something to you? I could have never lived with myself," she draws in a breath.

"You wanted to protect me?" I scowl.

"Why not?" She sets her jaw, "Is that so difficult to understand?"

"Yes," I growl, "because you don't get to put yourself in danger for me... You never get to endanger yourself for anyone else—especially not for me. I can take care of myself, you feel me, Gigi?"

"Oh, spare me the macho bullshit," she mutters.

The fuck is she talking about? Of course, I am macho. I was born this way... No excuses there. I can't stop myself from taking care of her, any more than I could stop myself from breathing. I glare at her; she glowers back.

Stubborn woman.

Why can't she understand that if something were to happen to her I'd never survive it? Fuck. I rake my fingers through my hair. "You make me a little crazy, Gigi, you know that? You make me do things that I can't explain. You fucking tie me up in knots, and that makes me desperate. It makes me miss things I didn't know I wanted in the first place."

"Like?" She stares at me, "Like what?"

"Like, being married to you, for one. I had no idea that I needed you—your touch, a glance, the whisper of your voice to infiltrate the recesses of my mind."

"What else?" she whispers.

"I want you, isn't that enough?"

"I want more." She swallows, "Can you give me that, I wonder?"

My heart begins to race. "What is it?" I ask. "What more do you want?"
Do I want to hear it? Do I?

"Will you answer my riddle?" A small smile curves her lips.

"You know I only ask, but never answer," I scowl.

"Just this once, Saint." She squares her shoulders, tips up her chin and holds my gaze, "Please."

My pulse thunders at my temples; my palms grow cold. Shit, why am I nervous about agreeing to this? Don't do it, don't. I jerk my chin, "Fine then."

Her lips twist. "What's easy to make, but impossible to keep forever?"

I peruse her features. What is it? What could it be? A glimmer of a thought brushes against the edges of my mind. Nah, it can't be. Not that. I glance around the room, drag my fingers through my hair, "I...can't guess what it is."

"I'll give you a clue." Her chest rises and falls. "You'll see me soon but you can't see me yet."

I frown; my heart begins to race. What the hell is she hinting at? "I..." I swallow. "That sounds implausible."

Her lips curve in a small smile, "Here's another hint." She leans forward, "The more you give up, the more it gives back to you."

My pulse rate ratchets up. She isn't saying what I think she is, is she? Nah. Not possible... I widen my stance. "That defies the laws of physics," I say. "I don't think I like the sound of it," I laugh, the sound nervous. Bloody hell! What's wrong with me? My palms begin to sweat. The ring slips from between my fingers, clatters to the floor, rolls toward the bed. I swoop down and grab it.

Her gaze falls to my hand, "You can guess it."

"I can't." I rise to my feet, clutching at the ring like it's a bloody lifeline. "Besides, whatever it is," my voice cracks; I clear my throat, "I don't think there's space in my life for it."

I pivot, head for the door.

"So, this is it then?"

Her voice brings me up short.

I pause, slide the ring into my pocket.

"How can you say you love me, when you don't want to fight for us?" she cries out.

"There is no us. Not anymore." I stalk forward. "You were right. There are too many secrets between us, Gigi. That's no way to start a relationship."

I reach the exit.

"Saint?"

I don't turn around. "Goodbye, Victoria."

What did the cat say to her Valentine?

Answer: You are purr-fect for me

Victoria

I tear open the envelope, pull out the papers. "No." They slide from my fingers, hit the floor in a cloud of white and black. Like my life. I thought it would get easier with time, but every passing minute of every hour of every day, the hollowness in my chest grows bigger, more turbulent, louder, pressing outward, making my heart race, filling me with panic, telling me I was wrong. I should have given him a chance. A choice. Another opportunity to rip me apart, tear out my heart and trample it to pieces under his size 13, dusty cowboy boots.

Yeah, I know his shoe size.

No thanks to that weird-as-shit, eccentric taste in shoes he has. Who remembers the shoe size of a man who broke her heart? Correction: Okay, I left him, so technically I broke my own heart. I've been numb since I left the hotel, my life an endless cycle of days and nights.

The nights... They are the worst. The darkness taunts me. The cold sheets wind around my limbs, weighing me down, pulling me into a restless sleep filled with images of him, our time together, how he'd kissed me, how he'd wrenched orgasms from me. How he'd run his fingers over my skin, thrust them into my pussy, taken me, curled me into him, spooned me as we'd fallen asleep. Hell. The only way to escape is to wake up, make myself chamomile tea, and watch mindless television. Shit. I am turning into a hermit, never leaving the house, except for the checkup at the hospital, that had confirmed that my pregnancy is progressing well.

I massage my stomach—my child... Saint's child. Had I subconsciously planned this all along?

Is that why I'd asked for contraceptive pills instead of the injection?

Had I hoped that I would fall pregnant?

Had I wanted it all along?

I had been on a mission for the Mafia, for hell's sake. And my subconscious thought was that this was the time to bring a child into the world? How irresponsible could I be? Am I such a dreamer that I'd hoped, somehow, everything would work out? That I'd get together with him and we'd live happily ever after? The band around my chest tightens. I'd been incredibly stupid... And lucky that, somehow, I'd managed to avoid being hurt so far. If you don't count the emotional hurt, of course.

I stare at the fallen sheafs of papers. Lucky, huh? I burst into tears. Damn hormones. And damn Saint, for allowing me to fool myself into hoping for a more permanent relationship.

I stumble over to the settee in the tiny living room and bury my face in my hands. I had spoilt my life...and his or hers—this little one who will never know a father. The bloody asinine man has haunted my every waking thought, has crawled into my dreams, has me second-guessing myself every time I am at the supermarket, sure that I'll see him in the next aisle. As if he would be shopping in the supermarket. Shit. I am losing it, I am.

The sound of a light knock at the door has me wiping my tears. By the time I open it, I've composed myself.

"Victoria?" Amelie frowns, "Have you been crying again?"

"Moi?" I press a hand to my chest. "Why would I?"

"Don't lie." She steps forward and her foot brushes the papers on the floor. "What's this?" She bends to pick them up.

The pressure builds behind my eyes. I will not cry, will not.

"Divorce papers?" She glances up at me.

"Read it." I bite on my lower lip, "The asshole is making sure I have nothing to do with him."

"That's what you said you want, right?" She walks across to the coffee table and places the papers there. Then straightens, "It is, isn't it?"

"Yeah." I bring up my legs, to sit cross-legged on the sofa. Somehow this is the only position that feels comfortable nowadays. Don't ask.

"You don't sound convinced."

"What do you want me to say?" I shove a cushion behind me.

"That you want him to come after you, discover that you are pregnant, and then fall to his knees and apologize for being a bloody idiot."

"Right," I laugh. "You obviously don't know Saint."

"Not as well as you." She glances pointedly at my belly, "What are you going to do about it?"

I swallow, then place my palms over my belly. "I want this child. It's just, I'd thought, I'd hoped..." My face crumples. "It's hard, Amelie. I knew it wasn't going to be easy to do this on my own...but I hadn't realized how daunting it would be."

"Oh, V." She rounds the table, sinks down next to me and pulls me close. I bury my face in her shoulder and allow the tears to come.

She pats my head, holds me close, "Let it out, V. You've been through so bloody much. I don't know of anyone who could have come out of it still standing."

"And pregnant," I mutter through my tears. "Not that I'm complaining. I mean, it's the one good thing to have come from all this mess." I wipe my tears, and sit back, "Do I look terrible?"

She looks me up and down, "Yes."

I chuckle, "Gee, thanks. I can always count on you sugar-coating reality, huh?"

"That's my specialty. Comes with being an expert pastry chef."

I snicker, "That's a terrible joke."

"You smiled, didn't you?" She leans across, and snatches up the tissue box. "What are you wearing anyway?"

I pull out a few of the tissues, blow my nose. "An old shirt I'd forgotten I own." It's one of Saint's. I packed it by mistake. Okay, so it wasn't a mistake. I wad the tissues in my hand and hunch my shoulders. "What the hell am I going to do, Amelie?"

I stare at the advertisement on the television screen, showing a family sitting down to Christmas dinner.

"If there's anyone who can cope with this, it's you." She rubs circles on my back.

I snort, "I'm not feeling capable of much at the moment, I can tell you that."

Another image flashes on screen, this time showing the opening credits of "The Grinch Who Stole Christmas."

"Bloody depressing." She picks up the remote control and switches off the TV.

I chuckle, "I thought you like Christmas."

"I do." She links her fingers together, "But I've been overworked filling up orders for Christmas parties since—" she reddens. "Sorry didn't mean to bring up the... Uh! ...wedding party."

"It's fine." I pick up a cushion and hug it, "I 'm glad at least you and Isla benefitted from all that publicity."

"More like notoriety," she snorts. "But really, it seems whoever said that all PR is good PR, has it right. Isla's booked up into late next year and I have more orders than I can fulfill for the foreseeable future. "

The paparazzi had blown up the internet with accounts of how a mystery man had held the wedding celebration hostage, then escaped without taking anything. People had taken to calling it a prank pulled by one of the Seven.

Saint had encouraged it by releasing a short statement to the media clarifying that no one had been hurt by the escapade. He hadn't answered any further questions from the media—who had speculated for days, before one journalist had concluded that it had been a giant waste of time—except for the desserts served at the party, which had been incredible. One thing had led to another, and the internet had blown up with people wanting to find out who had planned the wedding and what the guests had been enjoying; so Isla's wedding planning venture and Amelie's catering business had boomed in its wake.

All's well that ends well... Everyone got what they wanted, including Antonio. A shiver runs down my spine. He seems to be sticking to his promise of leaving me alone...so far. If he'd wanted to kill me, he could have when he'd shot at me. He seemed to have purposely missed at that close range. Well, I guess that means he is letting me get on with my life... Such as it is.

"What are you going to do for Christmas?" Amelie asks.

"I haven't given it much thought." I glance around the flat. "Maybe I'll stay in here, get some rest," I say.

"You mean stay in and get depressed?"

"I won't." I hunch my shoulders, negating my own claim, "I'm trying, Amelie." I stare at the blank television screen.

"Why don't you come up to the cabin with me?"

"Cabin?" I frown.

"The one that Saint said I could borrow for the holidays?" She flushes, "Shit, I can't say anything without putting my foot in my mouth."

"It's okay." I force out a laugh, "It's not like I can go through life being upset every time his name is mentioned."

"I... I won't go, if that helps. I can stay here and keep you company?"

"Nonsense." I frown, "You deserve this time to rest and rejuvenate."

She turns to me, "I don't want you to be on your own."

"I've survived the last few weeks, haven't I?"

"Have you?" She looks me up and down.

I flush, "Do I look that bad?"

"Worse."

I yank my hair back from my face, "I...haven't felt motivated."

"It's understandable. It's why I'd rather you not stay on your own through the holiday season."

"And I'm not coming with you, to the cabin."

"Why don't you stay with Summer and Sinclair—?" she asks.

"And risk running into him?" I straighten my shoulders, "Okay, I know that's being a coward, but right now, I'd rather stay as far away from him as possible.'

"You mean cooped up inside here, drowning in your own thoughts?"

"What would you have me do?"

"Let me help you," she glares at me.

"You have." I sag against the sofa, "You know, I couldn't have come this far without you. It's thanks to you that I found this apartment to house-sit for the next year... and within walking distance of the hospital too.

She shuffles her feet, "Seriously, it's not a big deal." She waves a hand in the air, "I wish you could tell Saint about the child."

"You haven't heard him speak about how much he hates kids."

"That's only until he realizes you are about to have his." She plonks her palms on her hips. "A man like him will do anything to protect his own flesh and blood."

"He sure did a slap-up job of taking care of me."

"Only because you hid things from him."

"What about the secrets he held back from me?"

"Did you ask him about it?"

"I did," I swallow. "He didn't want to reveal them to me. We have no common meeting ground."

"Except one," she, once more, looks down at my belly.

I redden, "Seriously?"

"Marriages have been built on less, and the sexual chemistry between the two of you is clearly off the charts. I mean, you're pregnant with his child."

"No kidding."

"So, you're going to give up on the two of you?"

"He's the one who gave up on me."

"Give him one last chance?"

"No."

She throws her hands up in the air, "You're so stubborn."

"Guess that's how I've gotten through the shit life has thrown at me, huh?"

"You sure you won't let me come to the hospital with you?"

I shake my head. "It's a routine check-up, I'll be fine."

Saint

"You're a dickhead."

Weston's voice comes through loud and clear over the phone.

"Why you had to break up with her and then send her divorce papers, without trying to at least make up with her one last time..."

"Look who's giving me relationship advice," I snicker. "The man who can't hold down a single woman for more than week."

"Out of choice, bitch. The more the merrier, as they say," Weston retorts. "More than what I can say for you. Did you manage to, at least, get to the office today?"

I take a sip of the whiskey, then wince at the taste. Shit, not even good old Macallan fine malt seems the same. Face it, nothing compares to the taste of her cunt, her mouth, her lips... Fuck, fucking fuck?

"You okay, ol' chap?"

"Why the fuck are you calling me anyway?"

"Why do you think?"

"I think I am going to hang up, dickwad—"

"Hold on, I'm getting another call."

"Don't you fucking put me on hold, Weston—"

The call goes silent. Then classical music drifts over the line. "The fuck?" He has Mozart playing while he puts me on hold? I hang up, then begin to pace. Is he right, should I have tried harder? But this is what she wants, right? A clean break. Neither of us needs to look back. I had made sure she came out of the entire incident with her identity concealed. It had cost me thousands to track down every single paparazzi in that room, and pay them off enough that they would leave out all mention of her. I may have had to lean on one or two of the errant ones to ensure they destroyed all evidence of that day. But it had been worth it. The event had faded away from public memory. The next scandal had surfaced and we were yesterdays' news.

Like me and her—

Fuck. I rub the ache in my chest. —Except for the emptiness that crawls in my guts and the thoughts that crowd my mind. Not to mention the nightmares that seem to be never too far away when I sleep—the voice asking me questions, demanding that I answer them. Fuck. I rub at my temples. This is insane.

I had let her get under my skin... That's the only reason I am beginning to unravel this way.

Once she signs the divorce papers, I can walk away, and have nothing more to do with her.

So, we are no closer to finding out who was behind our kidnappings. Antonio? Well, the man had disappeared. I'd had my PI on his tail and Antonio had given her the slip. He hadn't been seen or heard of in the last three weeks since the party...

And that message. Why doesn't that reassure me in the least? The hair on the nape of my neck rises. Shit, I am simply imagining things. The man is long gone. He'd gotten what he wanted—the USB which had been sent to me.

He can keep it, for all I care.

If it leaks on the internet... Well, it would only lead to more speculation—not that I care—but it would be easy enough to suppress it.

If it were to happen, which it won't. Clearly, the man had wanted to get his hands on it. For what, though? Why was it so important to get a hold of it?

The phone buzzes in my hand. Fucking Weston. I silence it. It rings again, I switch it off. The phone on my desk rings. I walk to it and snatch it up, "What?"

"It's Weston."

"Tell him to fuck off."

"He says it's urgent." Meredith's voice is patient, "I think you should take this call."

"Fine," I glower at the receiver.

"Asswipe," Weston drawls back.

"Jesus, can't you fucking go away to a place where there are no phones—preferably no means of communication—so I don't have to hear from you?"

"Same to you, with knobs on," he snickers. "Listen," his voice turns serious, "I called you because I've gotta come clean to you about something."

"What?"

"Promise you won't go all apeshit when I tell you."

"Shit." My heart begins to thud, "Just say it."

"I don't know, I promised her I wouldn't."

"Who?"

"Victoria."

"You and she spoke?"

"At the hospital that day, and I'd been hoping for the two of you to come to your senses. Hell, I'd hoped she would tell you herself. Not that I should be breaking doctor-patient confidentiality... But I warned her."

"Fuck that. If you don't tell me right now—"

The sound of honking reaches me over the line.

"Bloody cunt," he swears.

"What?"

"Not you. This fucker who's trying to overtake me—what the hell—?" he swears aloud again. There's more honking, the sound of brakes screeching.

"Weston, what the fuck—?"

The sound of metal scraping against metal, then Weston's voice comes on the phone again, "Shit, Saint, this is not over not by a long shot. She's preg—"

The line goes dead.

"The fuck?"

I glare at the receiver. My fingers tremble and my knuckles are white. How strange. I place the phone back in the cradle. Then reach for my phone. She's what? She's...fine. She has to be. And Weston? Shit, my heart begins to race. The noise in my head clears. He was in an accident. I need to get to him. I reach for the phone and dial my operative.

Half an hour later, I race up the corridor of the Whittington hospital. My investigator had tracked down Weston with a speed that had impressed even me. Well, I owe her a small fortune—but she'd delivered. This time, I barrel into the private room, and swerve. A jug of water misses me narrowly and crashes to the floor behind me.

"The fuck?"

I glance at Weston, sprawled on the hospital bed. His arm is in a sling, cuts and bruises mar his face, and his shirt is torn... Other than that, he seems fine. Which is more than I can say about the white-faced nurse who turns to me.

She throws up her hands, "Are you family?"

"A friend."

"Fine. Then," she thrusts a small plastic cap filled with pills at me, "you make him take those."

She brushes past me.

"Hold on, is he okay?"

"He won't be able to use his arm for a little while." She raises her shoulders.

"The fuck?" He snarls, "I am a surgeon. I need to use my hands."

She winces, then turns and scurries from the room.

I turn to face my friend. Sweat beads his forehead and dirt smudges his face.

"You okay?"

He sets his jaw, "Totally."

I glance at the pills.

"You're not going to make me take those," he growls.

"Nah, man." I set them down on the table next to the bed, "I am not your nurse. Besides, you're funny about painkillers, right?"

"Yeah," he scowls at his injured arm. "The fuckers say I need to rest my hand," he growls.

"What happened?" I ask.

His face reddens, "I fractured my finger, apparently."

"Finger?" I clear my throat, "Don't tell me... It's..."

"My fucking middle finger." He holds up his hand with the sling, showing me the bird... Or rather, his middle finger in a splint.

He winces, then lowers his hand. "Hurts like a bitch, too," he grumbles.

A chuckle bubbles up; I change it to a snort.

"You think this is a joke, Caldwell?"

"Of course, not." I keep the grin on my face though. "You're a doctor. Can't you make them change the diagnosis?"

He glowers back, "Funny. Should I laugh at that?"

"Don't care, ol' chap, just don't cry on my shoulder."
He pushes into the bed, "Why are you here, you dickhead?"
I stop laughing. "What happened?" I lean forward.
"This car came out of nowhere and forced me off the road."
"You sure?" I steeple my fingers together.
"Do I look like I am kidding?"
"No," I drag my fingers through my hair. "Well, the good news is, it's only a fracture."
"To my hand. My right hand. My fucking dominant hand. You know what this means, right?"
I straighten, "You'll be out of commission for a little time?"
"I am a surgeon, asshole. If the arm doesn't mend properly, I'll never be able to operate again."
"Shit," I pale. "I'm sorry man."
"Fuck." He bangs his head back against the headboard, "Fucking, fuck."
"Easy." I frown down at my friend, "At least, you're alive."
"They weren't trying to kill me, just put me out of commission."
"By causing you to fracture your middle finger?"
He scoffs, "It wasn't an accident, man, I'll tell you that."
"So, you think this was done on purpose?" I frown.
"Sure seems that way to me?"
"Why would anyone want you out of commission?"
"Beats the hell out of me." He straightens his shoulders, "One thing is for sure, we need to double the security on all of the Seven and those who matter to us."
A frisson runs down my spine, "Before the accident, you said something, before you got cut off..."
"That I was being forced off the road?" His forehead crinkles.
"No at the end, you said Victoria was..."
"Pregnant."
"Shit." The world sways around me. I sink into the chair, "That's what she was trying to tell me."
"She told you and you let her go?" he snaps.
"Not exactly..." I stab the heel of my shoe into the floor. "She asked me a riddle, which I couldn't solve—"
"Hold on." He leans forward, "She asked you a riddle."
"Yeah."

His gaze widens, "You never allow anyone to challenge you."

"I let her, okay?" I squeeze my eyes shut. "Only her," I swallow. "It's complicated."

"No shit."

I hear the smile in his voice, crack my eyelids open. "Don't feed me a line about sentimentalism and all that shit."

"You're doing that, all by yourself."

I sink back in my chair, massage my chest, "I think I'm going to have a cardiac."

"Handy I'm right here, then, isn't it?"

"Har, har," I snarl. "You're fucking annoying, man. "

"Speak for yourself."

"Fuck this shit." I dig my fingers into my hair and pull at it, "Why couldn't she tell me?"

"It sounds like she did," he says. "You simply didn't want to answer the riddle."

"She could have simply told me, you know?"

"And then what? Would you have accepted her and the child?"

"Maybe. I don't know." I lower my chin to my chest, mumble, "This is bloody complicated."

"Tell me about it."

I glance up to find him staring at the sling.

"I'm sorry about your finger."

He sighs, "Me too." He grabs another pillow and props it behind his shoulder, "What are you going to do now—?"

My phone buzzes.

I pull it out. It's a message from an unknown number. Huh? I swipe open the message.

Come and get her. She's in East London. You know where to look.

I pale.

"What's wrong?" Weston frowns.

"You were right; this is not over yet." I jump to my feet, race for the door.

"Where are you going?"

"To rescue my family."

Victoria

I had been stupid, so stupid. I try to swallow and my throat hurts. A drumming sensation presses in at my temples.

I yank at the ropes that tie my wrists behind my back. I try to open my eyes, but the darkness presses down against my eyelids. Shit, had he also blindfolded me? I feel along the floor with my feet... At least, I still have my boots on. Good thing I'd opted for them over ballet pumps. I'd been half way to the hospital, crossing the garden that bordered the side of the building, when someone had grabbed me from behind. I'd opened my mouth to scream and a soft cloth had been thrust into my face. I'd drawn in a whiff of a sweet, cloying scent, and had begun to black out. I'd been drugged, there was no doubt about that.

My guts churn and bile rushes up my throat. The baby... My heartbeat ratchets up. This can't be good for the baby, surely? I draw in a breath, another. Take it easy. It's going to be fine. I swallow down the nervousness that clogs my throat. Who could have done this? Antonio? What does he want now? Where am I?

Footsteps sound; I freeze. Who can it be? Will they hurt me?

Silence for a few moments. I hunch my shoulders, hold my breath. Go away, please don't come close. There's a sound of shuffling so close. A bead of sweat runs down my spine. Who is out there? My captor? What is he going to do next?

I hear a click and the hair on the back of my neck rise.

"Come out of there." A familiar voice rips through the silence, "I know you're in there. I'm giving you five seconds to reveal yourself before I start shooting.

"No," I try to say the word out loud but my voice is muffled. "Saint, it's me," my words are garbled. I can barely speak through the gag in my mouth. I shuffle forward, my feet thumping against a barrier.

"Who's there?" His voice is tense. The sense of danger ratchets up. Shit, he can't shoot. I won't let him hurt me... Us. Worse than what might happen to me and the baby, it would destroy him. I wriggle forward, kick out again and slam into a barrier.

The next instant, there's a creak of a door being opened and the air shifts. The darkness lightens by several shades. Had I been thrust into a closet? An electric current runs up my spine. It's Saint. He's here. I try to speak again, my voice muffled.

"Victoria." My blindfold is pulled off. I blink against the brightness. Arms wind around me. He scoops me up, restraints and all, and places me on the ground.

He pulls off the gag; the bindings around my wrists loosen. I crack open my eyelids to find him kneeling over me. There's a flash of steel, then the ropes around my ankles give away. I collapse into him. "Saint," my throat hurts and a headache pounds at my temples.

"Jesus, Gigi." He pulls me into his lap and cradles me.

I press my ear to his chest, listen to the thundering of his heart. He rocks me back and forth. "You're safe," he mumbles into my hair. His grip tightens around me and pain shivers up my arm. I whimper.

"Are you hurt?"

He pulls back to peer at my arm. I look down to find the sleeve ripped. A thin trickle of blood stains the cloth. A growl rips from him.

I shudder, "I... I'm fine."

"You're bleeding."

"It's a scratch," I insist.

"Who hurt you?" He pinches my chin, so I have to peer up at him, "Did you catch a glimpse of who it was?"

"No," I swallow, "I was walking to the hospital."

"Hospital?"

"For the check-up."

"Check-up—?" His voice trails off. A strange look comes into his eyes.

Fear? Anger? Then his features close. "Is everything okay? Are you—?"

"I'm fine." My chest hurts; the back of my throat burns. Shit, why should it matter to me that he doesn't want kids? This entire thing had gone wrong. He was supposed to have guessed my riddle, then embraced me, kissed me, and taken me home. To his hotel room, I mean, because of course, the man doesn't have a place to call his own. He prefers the transience that being in a hotel room gives him. The freedom from relationships, from someone like me.

I push at his chest.

His grip tightens. "Victoria."

"Saint."

We speak at the same time.

"I..."

"You..." I swallow, "you were saying?"

A dull thud echoes around the space. I stare at him and his gaze widens. "We need to get out of here." He rises, carrying me.

"I can walk," I protest.

He ignores me and heads for the doorway. For the first time, I glance around, taking in the space. It's an empty room with a closet in the corner, the one I had been locked in. I shudder.

He holds me closer, "You're safe."

His voice rumbles in his chest. I shouldn't feel the need to lean on him, to thrust my nose into the strip of flesh that peeks out from between his lapels, and inhale his scent. My lungs fill with his essence and my heart rate stabilizes. Shit, why do I feel so secure, so protected when I'm with him? For so long, I had depended on myself—my instincts, my ability to withstand anything thrown my way. And how had that worked out, huh? I'd done a slap-up job of it—negotiating Nina's release, and my continued freedom, by agreeing to play a role in Saint's downfall.

Tears prick at the backs of my eyes. Even my bloody hormones are no longer on my side.

"I'm sorry," I whisper.

"For what?" He prowls down the steps, reaching a landing that opens into another vacant room.

"For everything."

"I should be the one apologizing for being so hardheaded."

"No arguments there," I snicker through the ball of emotion in my throat.

"Guess that's one more thing we agree on."

He walks out onto the landing, glances around, then continues down the dilapidated steps toward his Jaguar, parked outside.

A couple of boys in hoodies mill around nearby. I take in the house next door—paint peeling, garbage cans over-filled, with trash on the pavement outside. Across from us, there's a boarded-up store. The other houses on the street seem as deserted. The electronic lock beeps, then he opens the door on the passenger side and places me in it. "Buckle up."

He leans back, shuts the door, and walks around. One of the boys stops him. They speak, then he pulls out his wallet, pulls out a few notes, and hands them over. He reaches into another pocket to pull out a card. He slips that to the second boy and they fist bump. In seconds, he's in the driver's seat, and starts the car.

"What was that about?" I ask, as he eases the cars from the curb. The boys step back, watch us as we pull away.

"Told them to call me if they see anyone coming in or out of the house."

"How did you find me?"

He pulls out his phone and hands it to me, then focuses on the road ahead. I read the text. "Who sent it, you think?"

"Antonio?" he growls.

"Perhaps." I lean my head back into the seat. "It's confusing. Why would he ask you to call off those following him, then kidnap me, only to send you my whereabouts? And how did you know exactly where to look?"

His jaw tics. "When we were abducted, that's the house where we were held. I should have bought it and torn it down a long time ago. Guess none of us wanted anything to do with it. After that incident, we simply wanted to put it behind us and move on." His knuckles turn white.

"Saint," I turn to him, "Why...would he send you to the same place?"

"A warning about what would happen if I screwed with the Mafia?" He growls, "He has no idea how personal he's made this. No way, am I letting him go without having my vengeance. He dared touch you, Gigi. He's going to pay for it."

His harsh tone slices down my spine, my nipples bead, and lust curls in my belly. Hell, hearing him all worked up on my behalf is way too much of a turn on to resist.

The phone in my hand—his phone—pings again. I stiffen and my heart begins to thud. I glance down at the screen.

"What does it say?"

I wet my lips. Read, and re-read the message.

"Aloud, Gigi."

Maybe it's the fact that he uses my nickname, or the way his voice stretches with tension, or the command in his tone that whips across my skin and makes my pussy clench. Shit, I want every dirty thing he can do to me again. Is this any way for a pregnant woman to be thinking? Is it the hormones? The fact that I am carrying his baby, that's making me so aware of his nearness.

His voice lowers to a hush, "Don't keep me waiting." That dominant edge of his intent slices through my barriers, reducing me to a trembling mess inside.

I swallow, then scan the words again, "You found her. Don't let her go."

"What?" he snaps.

"That's it." I dig my heels into the floor, "That's all it says."

He stops at a traffic light, then snatches the phone from me. He scans the screen again, then swears under his breath, "The hell does that mean?"

I twist my fingers in my lap, "Apparently, Antonio has a conscience after all."

"What do you mean?" The signal turns green, he presses down on the accelerator, and the car leaps forward. My breath catches; my heart thuds in my chest.

"Sorry," he mutters. "It's just— I don't get it. Did he stage this, to get us to speak again?"

"Seems that way," I huff. "He was never an easy man to comprehend."

"Don't talk about him."

A warm sensation blooms my chest, "You jealous?"

He laughs, the sound bitter, "My wife has a history with another man, a past I don't know anything about. What do you think?"

"I was a virgin."

His knuckles on the wheel tighten. "There are other ways to have a relationship, other than a physical one."

"And you think that's what I had with Antonio?"

"You tell me."

"He was my contact with the Mafia. He's the one who negotiated a deal with them to ensure Nina's release—in return for getting him the USB with the video clip of you being held in that room."

He makes a noise deep in his throat.

I glance sideways at him, "I'm sorry, Saint."

"For what?"

"For giving the media a chance to tear down your reputation."

"I don't give a fuck about that."

"And your company, the losses it suffered because of the ensuing media uproar?"

"I managed to shut down most of the journalists who were there that day."

"How?" I turn to him, "Of course, you paid them to stay quiet."

"Just when you think money doesn't buy everything... It surprises you with how much it does help."

"So, I guess you survived that unscathed then."

"Except for the fact that my wife betrayed me, and handed over the most important piece of evidence of what had turned my life upside down."

I wince, bunching fingers into fists.

"You could have simply asked me. I'd have given the USB to you."

I swing around to face him, "You would have done that?"

"Maybe," he raises a shoulder. "Of course, I'd have extracted my punishment for it."

My toes curl.

"And you'd have loved every minute of it."

His lips twist in that smirk that's hot and mean, and seems to promise more of all the filthy things that he'd ever done to me.

I fold my hands in my lap, "I'm not coming to your hotel."

"I'm not allowing you to return to that apartment."

"You know where...?" I straighten, "Of course, you do. I'm surprised you don't own the entire building."

He stays silent.

I turn sideways in my seat, "You do, don't you? You own the building."

He stays focused on the road.

"What did you offer Amelie this time?"

"Nothing. She refused to help me. I..." he flicks a quick glance, "I used my resources."

"It was too much to hope you'd simply let me leave and get on with my life?"

"What about the life you carry inside of you?"

I pale. "You...you guessed?"

"Weston told me," his features harden.

I stare straight ahead. "You couldn't crack my riddle that day. Imagine that? You, who are able to solve almost any puzzle. You couldn't guess the answer."

"Even I have my shortcomings, it seems," he retorts.

"Or maybe you didn't want to find out what I meant?" I tip up my chin, "Admit it, you don't want this child."

49

Saint

"I want to take care of you, Victoria." I keep my gaze focused on the road. "Since the first time I saw you, it's all I've wanted to do. I can't share you with anyone else."

"Not even our child?"

"I didn't say that." I tighten my jaw.

"What are you saying then?"

Her voice sounds tired, defeated. I glance sideways to find her hunched back into her seat. Dark circles surround her eyes. There are hollows below her cheekbones. Her beautiful hair is disheveled. She looks fragile, exhausted by everything she's faced. I tighten my fingers on the steering wheel. I had failed in my duties as her husband. I had promised to protect her, shield her from the world. I had let my fears, the bad things I'd imagined could happen, get in the way.

Oh, a part of me had guessed what she was trying to say that day.

My subconscious had clocked the way she had placed her palm on her belly, how she'd glanced at me with hope and trepidation. How she'd straightened her shoulders, ready to take on anyone, even me—the man who was hers. I slam my hand against the steering wheel.

She stiffens.

"Sorry," I mutter under my breath. Fuck, for someone who always knows what he wants, I sure am unable to interpret the signals that my brain is trying to send me. "Come back with me, Gigi. Give me a chance to show you how it could be between us."

"You mean, hurt me again? Trample all over my feelings and refuse to acknowledge what's between us?"

"I love you. I've told you that already. Hell, I married you."

"And served me divorce papers."

"I thought that's what you wanted."

Her lips turn down. She glances away.

Anger laces my blood. Frustration twists my guts. "Let's talk about this later, shall we?"

She nods.

That worries me more. Gigi's always been a fighter, feisty to the core, challenging me at every turn. Fuck, that's what had attracted me to her—that core of unshakeable steel inviting me to push her, control her, try to manipulate her to get a response from her. Perhaps the entire ordeal had finally caught up with her. That fucker, Antonio, had accomplished what I hadn't been able to do during the course of our time together. No way, am I letting him get away with this latest attempt at trying to kidnap her. If he thinks simply getting some woman to record a video asking me to keep away was going to cut it, then he is wrong, so wrong.

I pull up at the curb of Claridge's. Jumping out of the car, I walk around to open the door. She steps out. I grab her hand, entangle our fingers, and lead her up the sidewalk.

A gust of wind blows, knocking over the sign the homeless man holds. It falls right in my path. I pause, glance down.

"How should I greet thee?

With silence and tears."

I swear aloud; she stiffens.

"What's wrong?" she asks.

"Nothing..." I step over the hardboard sign, head for the door of the hotel.

"Thanks for dinner," Homeless guy calls out.

I pause, half turn, to find he's packing up his shit. He places his hat on his head, then rises to his feet.

"You ain't as much of a tosser as you seem," he chuckles.

I blink, watch as he plonks the sign over his shoulder, then marches up the road.

"Is that fucking odd or what?" I pivot, stalk toward the hotel.

"Why did he thank you for dinner?" she queries.

"He probably eats every night at the hotel," I mutter.

"He does?"

I nod, "All of the leftovers of the day are donated every night, in a makeshift soup kitchen we set up in the back."

Her forehead furrows, "You do that?"

"It's economical." Heat suffuses my face, "Don't go making me out to be empathetic or some such shit, because I'm not."

"Of course, not." Her lips curve slightly.

The wind blows again and she shivers. I pull her close, steer her up the steps and through the open door. Bypassing the main elevators in the lobby, I head for the one at the far end of the floor. The doors open almost immediately, and I step inside with her.

I frown, "Did you see his face? The guy who took you?"

She shakes her head, "I only heard him a couple of times through the closed door of my room."

She curls her finger into my shirt and I cuddle her even closer. "You're safe with me, Gigi."

"So you keep saying," she sniffs.

"I mean it."

She peers up at me, "I know."

"I won't let Antonio or anyone else get to you."

"Antonio won't hurt—"

"That's all I am going to say on the topic," I growl.

She purses her lips. For a second, I am sure she's going to counter me, then she draws in a breath and nods. "Truce?"

"For now."

"Jesus," she huffs, "can't you ever let me have the last word?"

"Never," I allow my lips to curl.

She frowns. The doors open, I step onto the penthouse floor, then guide her to my hotel suite. Once inside, I pull her with me, through the living room, into the bedroom, then the ensuite.

"What are you doing?"

I don't answer. If I do, no doubt, my words will hurt her further. I reach the tub and turn on the water. Steam instantly rises in the air. I lift her onto the counter, then undo her buttons.

She tries to pull her shirt off. I catch her hands in mine, "Let me, Gigi, please."

She tips up her chin, searching my features. What is she looking for?

Her green eyes darken and her lips part. Her fingers tremble in mine. I move in closer. She parts her legs and I step into the space between them. "Gigi," my voice comes out harsh.

"I love it when you call me that."

I allow my lips to curl, "Thought you hated my nickname for you."

"I lied," she whispers.

"I know," I lower my head, until our eyelashes tangle.

"I'm sorry," her lips tremble and a tear slides down her cheek. I bend down and lick it up. A sob catches in her throat.

I place my forehead against hers, "Don't cry, Gigi." I swallow down the lump that blocks my throat. Fuck, what is it about this woman that guts me so completely?

"Didn't mean to," her chin wobbles.

"I'd fucking slay anything that causes you misery. I'll drown out the entire fucking world, set fire to the monsters that lurk in the dark around you. I... I'll rip open my chest and show you what it means to be near you."

"Would you accept this child as yours?"

My eyes fly open. "I'll never shirk my responsibilities when it came to the two of you."

"That's not what I asked."

I step back, reach above her to pull out the antiseptic and cotton wads. "It's all I can give you right now."

"It won't be enough."

"Can we take this one day at a time? I am trying Victoria, I promise I am." I place the medicines on the counter next to her, then reach for her shirt. This time she allows me to undo the buttons, help her out of the shirt.

I take in the mark on her shoulder. A growl rips out of me, "Fuck." I reach out to touch the fading scar. She flinches.

"Does it hurt?"

"Not anymore."

"Fuck, this was my fault."

"Stop trying to take responsibility for everything." She squares her shoulders. "I am the one who played ball with the Mafia... Things were bound to get a little crazy. I mean, it's not like they'd have let me walk away without paying a price."

I grit my teeth so hard, my jaw hurts. "I'll ensure they never get to you again."

"I know." She smiles a little, "I always knew you would be my knight in shining armor."

"More like the villain."

"I have a thing for bad guys."

"I noticed." I chuckle, "So long as it's me you're talking about and not that bastard..."

"You really don't have to worry about Antonio."

"How can you be so confident?"

"Nina, the woman in the video?"

I nod.

"He...has a thing for her. It's the only reason I agreed to take on this entire mission, knowing he'd never let anything happen to her. It's why he'll take the evidence I gave him to the Mafia and ensure that they stick to their word."

"I hate it," I growl. "No way, am I going to put your future in the hands of that motherfucker, I am going to track him down and when I do—"

"What?" A new voice rings out. "What will you do?"

I swivel around, ensuring my body is between her and whoever's walked in.

"What the fuck are you doing here?"

Victoria

"Antonio," I try to scramble off the counter, only Saint steps back, imprisoning me.

"What game are you trying to play, Victoria?" Antonio's hard voice fills the space.

I shove against Saint; he doesn't move. He may as well have turned into a concrete wall. "I need to talk to him," I mutter, keeping my voice to a whisper.

Saint's shoulders bunch.

"You can talk from where you are."

Right. I glance down at myself, then do up my buttons. I give his back another shove; he still doesn't move. I huff, then peek around him, "What are you doing here?" I scowl at Antonio. "I thought you'd be on your way back to Sicily by now?"

"Sicily?" Saint exclaims.

"Shit." I clap my palm over my mouth.

"The hell?" Antonio looks between us, then folds his arms over his chest. "You bugged the USB drive?" He glowers at me, "You thought I wouldn't find out?"

"Bugged?" I blink, "I didn't."

"That was me," Saint says.

"What?" I exclaim.

Antonio swears under his breath, "I should have trusted my instincts and left when I had a chance."

"That, you should have," says another voice.

Antonio swings around.

Weston stands there, arm in a sling.

Antonio reaches for his gun, but Sinclair steps inside the bathroom door, gun aimed at Antonio, "Don't even think about it."

Antonio freezes.

Sinclair jerks his chin and Antonio walks forward. Weston steps aside, allowing Antonio to walk through.

Sinclair follows.

Weston glances at Saint, "You guys okay?"

Saint nods, "Thanks, man. I owe you."

A look passes between them, then Weston retreats, "We'll be in the living room. Don't take too long; we need to figure out what to do with this mofo."

The door closes.

Saint swings around to face me. "You okay?" he grips my shoulders.

A trembling grips me as adrenaline drains from my blood. "You...you knew that I was going to hand over the evidence to him?"

"You didn't mention that he had connections to Sicily?" He retorts.

"He's part of the Mafia... of course they're connected to Sicily." I mutter, then throw my hands up. "I didn't think it was important okay? I peer up at him, "Guess we still have secrets from each other?"

He peruses my futures, then exhales a breath. "Why the hell can't we trust each other?"

"I'm trying." I mutter.

"Yeah." He rubs the back of his neck. "So am I." His lips quirk, "and to answer your question, I suspected that you might do so."

Oh.

I raise my fingers to my lips, he grabs my wrist. "No biting your fingernails." He admonishes me.

O-k-a-y. I peer up into his face, "So, all this time, when you pretended you wanted nothing to do with me, you—"

He nods. "I had my men follow you. I tracked your movements."

"Even in the apartment?"

He frowns.

"Please don't hold back, Saint."

"There are cameras at the apartment," he finally concedes.

"You spied on me?"

"Not...always."

"But you did."

"On occasion..." He draws himself up to his full height, "I watched you bring yourself to orgasm every night, and wished I was there. It should have been my hands on you, my cock buried inside you, it should have been me wringing those moans from you instead of an inanimate object."

My cheeks burn, "Shit, you saw all that?" It should be creepy and awfully stalkerish, so why do I find it strangely reassuring that he'd had his eye on me all this time?

He tilts his head, "How else do you think I survived the last few weeks?"

I frown, "Yet you didn't guess I was pregnant until Weston told you."

His chest rises and falls, straining against the shirt he wears. "I am a dick. What can I say? The mind recognizes what it wants to."

I chuckle, "Well, we make a fine pair, don't we?" The hair on my forearms rises. "We're so bloody wrong for each other."

"On the contrary, I can't think of anything more right. You bring out the worst...and the best in me. You drive me insane, Gigi. You tie me up in knots, and every time I think I've figured you out, you throw me a surprise."

"Is that good or bad?"

"It's good...and bad." He leans down and licks my lips, "And it's definitely a bloody turn on. Thing is, there is no one for me but you."

"Even though I am pregnant with your child."

"Especially because you are pregnant with my child," his blue eyes deepen with some emotion I can't quite place.

"I don't want you to feel like you have to do the right thing by me."

"I only want to do all the wrong things to you," he smirks.

"You know that's not what I mean."

He pulls away and the cold air swoops over me. Damn it, why do I miss his presence already?

"I swore never to bring any child into the world—to allow myself to become that vulnerable, to imagine what could happen if he or she was kidnapped and kept hostage..." His entire body tightens, "If any child of mine had to go through what I did, I swear, I'd kill anyone and everyone who'd harm a hair on their head."

I stiffen, sweep my gaze over his face, "Is that what you're afraid of? Being vulnerable?"

"Not being able to protect my child from the world. That's my worst nightmare."

"You protected me, didn't you?"

"I allowed you to get kidnapped on my watch." He scowls.

"You found me didn't you?" I half smile. "I bet you watched me every hour of the day and night to ensure I was safe."

"And still, he managed to get his hands on you."

He doesn't deny it then. I am not sure how that makes me feel. Cared for? Creeped out? Both? And turned on? To be the focus of someone's attention to the exclusion of anything else... Is there any other feeling in the world that can equal that absolute single-minded intensity of his gaze?

"You saved me." I grab his hand and press it to my belly, "You saved both of us."

He squeezes his eyes shut, "Stop trying to make me into some kind of hero. I'm the kind of monster you should stay away from!"

"Oh?" I bite the inside of my cheek, "Who would you rather see me with, Saint?"

He growls.

"Who's the man for me? Who do you think can protect me the way you can? Who'd watch over me like my own protective guardian angel, and ensure he was there each and every turn so nothing ever touched me?"

His nostrils flare.

"Tell me, Saint."

"Me," he growls, "Only I can do this. I trust myself for this job, no one else."

I chuckle.

He glowers, "Don't think you've won this argument."

"No?" I tip up my chin.

He shakes his head, "We're just getting started, Gigi."

He grabs up the cotton ball, then helps me out of my shirt and dabs antiseptic on the scratch on my arm. I hiss and he bends his head and blows on the wound.

Goosebumps rise on my skin.

"Cold?"

"No." I watch as he straightens, then tosses the cotton into the dustbin. He rips open a bandage, and sticks it over the wound. "It's the best I can do, until I can get a doctor to come in and check you out."

"I'm fine."

He drops the sticky paper from the bandage into the waste basket then straightens, "Humor me."

"But—"

"If not me, for the baby."

Right. "Fine," I swallow, "but don't think you can always use the baby as an excuse."

"If it gets you to do what I want..."

I frown, "Honestly, Saint, you could at least pretend you aren't trying to get your own way."

"What fun would that be, huh?" he shrugs out of his shirt, then drapes it over my shoulder.

"What are you doing?" I frown.

"Wear this."

I glance at my shirt, which is ripped and dirty. Not that I want to wear it again. It reminds me too much of what had transpired—that feeling of helplessness, of sitting in the dark and waiting for the worst— No. I shake my head. Never again. I don't want to be in that position ever again.

Saint snatches up my soiled shirt. "I'll get rid of it."

I peer up at him, "Thanks." I pull on his shirt and his scent of dark masculinity instantly cocoons me. My heart skitters and my pussy clenches. Shit, not the time to think about sex. Not. I button up the shirt, then fold up the sleeves.

He drops the shirt into the bath tub, "I'll get housekeeping on it."

I nod. Of course, he'd have servants at his beck and call. Where the hell do I fit in with all of this?

"Hey," he hooks his knuckles under my chin so I have no choice but to meet his gaze, "everything will be okay, I promise."

A slight pain catches at my lower belly. I rub at it.

"You okay?" he asks.

I nod, then push off the counter, "Let's get this over with."

What is mine but only you can have?

Answer: My heart

Saint

I stalk into the living room, making sure to keep myself between her and the guys. Right now, I don't trust any other male around her—definitely, not that bastard Antonio. Is it the fact that she is pregnant? Pregnant. My heart begins to thud. Shit, what am I going to do about that? How will it feel to have a child...a fragile life dependent on me? Will I be able to do justice in my role as their father?

Am I good enough for this? Will I be able to fulfill my responsibilities? What if I can't? What if I fail?

Just as I had all that time ago?

When he'd asked me the riddles.

And I hadn't known the answers.

And he'd hurt me. I hadn't been able to defend myself.

Will I be able to protect my family? My palms begin to sweat. The soles of my feet burn. I stumble and someone grasps my elbow. Warm fingers entangle with mine. I glance down to find Gigi holding my hand.

"You okay?" she whispers.

I glance into those green eyes, "Now, I am."

Her lips curve in a slight smile.

"I love you," I keep my voice low enough that the others can't hear me.

She blinks, as if surprised, then her cheeks flush, and she glances away. A hot sensation stabs my chest. Does she have any feelings for me? Will she forgive me for what I did—that I hadn't been able to accept the fact that she was having my child? My flesh and blood. Mine. I tighten my grasp on her hand, then step forward. I urge her to sink into an armchair and stand next to her.

Antonio looks up from the settee across the room. Weston is seated in a chair on his left. Sinclair leans a hip against the wall, his gun trained on Antonio.

"Have you explained our plan to him?" I ask.

Weston nods.

I turn to Antonio. "You agree then?"

He lowers his chin, "You mean turn against my people, and lead you to the person responsible for what happened to the Seven of you?" He glances up, "What do I get in return?"

"You get to walk away from this alive."

"And if I don't?"

I lean forward on the balls of my feet, "We'll hand you over to the authorities, and trust me, you'll never get to be a free man again."

He sits up straight, his massive frame taking up a big portion of the settee, "I'm not exactly a free man now."

"You'll have a chance to rescue Nina—"

His jaw hardens.

Ah! Interesting. This is his weak spot. Clearly, the man isn't as smart as I'd given him credit for. If he were, he would never have revealed it to me.

"You'll have the means to leave the Mafia, start a new life with her, if that's what you want..."

The skin around his lips whitens. He squeezes his fingers together, and the skin of his knuckles stretches white.

This is a calculated move, of course. Dangling everything he wants in front of his eyes, only to rip it all away. Unless he cooperates, of course.

I prod him, "What do you say?"

Antonio glances at Gigi.

"Don't look at her, you asshole," I growl, then clamp my lips shut. Apparently, Antonio isn't the only one unable to control himself. This woman has come to mean more than anything in the world to me.

He tilts his head, "You love her?"

I frown, "What's that got to do with anything?"

He levels an intense stare, daring me to answer him.

"Of course, I do, you piece of shit."

"You'll take care of Victoria?" he asks.

I take a step forward and Gigi grabs my hand. I glance down and she shakes her head. Shit, I'm letting him provoke me. Again.

"Better than myself," I reply.

"You're aware there's nothing remotely romantic between us, right?" he uncurls his fists.

"The hell are you trying to say?" I growl.

"Nina was my ward, so to speak. I was responsible for her wellbeing. Human relations... They can be complicated, you know?" He drums his fingers on his thigh, "At some point, my feelings for her got more intense. I got personally involved. She'd never forgive me if something were to happen to her friend."

I drag my fingers through my hair, "So why did you shoot at Victoria?"

"It was a flesh wound. It got your attention, made you realize how much you need her in your life."

"You kidnapped her," I thrust out my chest.

"And sent you to her," he tilts his head, "because you still allowed her to walk away, after almost losing her once."

He's right.

"And here you are confronting us again, instead of escaping?" I frown. "Why didn't you ask Victoria about the bug when you took her?"

His jaw hardens, all expression wiped off from his face.

"Well?" I lean forward on the balls of my feet, "What's your play?"

Antonio glances around the room, then turns his gaze back on me.

"There's no play."

I straighten, "You're lying."

"I discovered the bug, after you rescueded her." He grits his teeth.

"You believe this asshole?" Weston mutters.

"Nah, do you?" I tilt my head.

Antonio's lips quirk, "The one time in my life I do something unselfish..." He shakes his head.

"What the fuck are you talking about?"

He sighs, "You had your head so far up your ass, you couldn't see how important she was to you. I wanted to push you along, make you come to your senses and own up to your feelings." He cups his chin in his hand. "It's what Nina would have wanted."

"That doesn't explain why you came storming into the hotel," I retort.

His features stay impassive.

"Well?" I growl. "Now is your chance to come clean, you bastard."

"When I discovered the bug, I got pissed off. By putting me at risk, you put Nina in danger and that sent me off the deep end." He draws in a breath. "I wasn't thinking clearly... I charged back to challenge Victoria on it," he says. "By the time I came to my senses, I was already here in your hotel..." His voice tapers off. "I knew it could be a mistake, but I thought I might be able to turn the situation to my advantage."

"You wanted to be found out by us?" I scowl before another thought occurs to me, "You hoped we'd make you an offer to work with us?"

"That's what I had calculated," he nods.

"You took a risk." I rub the back of my neck. Should I believe him? Is he telling the truth? "You willingly put yourself in danger. Why?"

"It seemed like my best shot," Antonio says simply.

I glare at him, "That's not the only reason, is it?"

He hesitates.

"I am calling the cops," I threaten.

"You wouldn't," Antonio growls. For the first time, he seems shaken. Good.

"Try me," I drawl.

He glances at Gigi, then back at me.

Anger crowds my mind. "That's it," I snap, reach for my phone.

"Wait," he mutters.

I keep my fingers poised over the keypad.

He sits up straight, places the fingertips of his hands together. "Nina," he says, his voice shorn of all emotion, "I did it for her."

"For Nina?" I frown, "Explain."

"I promised Nina that her friend would be taken care of, and I thought you would do that, but you're an idiot—"

I growl.

He holds up his hands in supplication, "The point is, you weren't taking care of her, and I needed to make sure that you did. That's what triggered the idea of Victoria's kidnapping..." He shrugs, "You went through a similar experience," he meets my gaze—the fucker actually looks me in the eye—and says, "and you needed something drastic to—I don't know—make you realize that you were fucking things up."

My vision tunnels; the blood pounds in my temples. Only when my fist connects with the side of his face do I realize that I have closed the distance between us. His head snaps back and blood erupts from his mouth.

"That's for putting Victoria's life in danger, you bastard."

He chuckles, wipes the blood from his face and looks around the room, a satisfied gleam in his eyes.

The fuck? I raise my fist again.

Weston grabs my shoulder. "Let him be."

"No," I growl. "You heard what he said. Asshole's fucking with me."

"He's illustrating how emotions can make you lose your cool to the point that they trip you up," Weston cautions.

"Weston's right," Sinner adds.

"The fuck I care about that?" I snarl.

"Fucker's methods are unconventional," Weston agrees, "but damn , if it didn't work, right?"

Gigi makes a sound somewhere between a cry and a laugh. "He got through to you, Saint. I was never in any danger, and besides," she steps forward, "he did it for Nina."

I straighten, make to swing at Antonio again, but Gigi grabs my arm. "Please, Saint, he put his life at risk for Nina, and that has to mean something."

Fuck, if that negates how he'd threatened Gigi's life, but if she says... Well, then... I draw in a breath. "This Nina," I say, trying to piece things together, "she's important to you?"

"I already told you she is." His dark gaze grows inscrutable. "It's why I'll take this deal with you."

"So, you're agreeing to spy on the Mafia and help us track down who was responsible for the kidnapping when we were kids?"

He nods, "It won't be easy, but I have some ideas."

"Life's not easy," I glower.

"If something goes wrong..." he glances at the other two, then at me, "If they discover I've turned on them, I need you to promise get Nina out."

Victoria squeezes my hand.

"For my wife," I growl, "I'll do it for her."

He jerks his chin, "Guess we have an agreement then."

"What about the USB you appropriated?"

"The Mafia wants it back." He tucks his elbows into his side.

"The fuck would they want that for?" I rub the back of my neck.

He raises his shoulders, "My guess is that the USB is marked in some form that can help them trace it back to its owner. They want it to help track down the snitch who sent it to you." He cracks his neck. "I'm only the messenger in this. Suffice to say, it's my ticket to get back in with them."

I scowl.

Antonio continues, "As for Victoria..."

I growl.

He raises his hands, "I let her go—doesn't mean the Mafia won't change their mind and come after her."

"You focus on your mission," I lean forward on the balls of my feet, "I'll take care of what's mine."

Victoria tugs on my sleeve.

I turn to her. Her face is pale.

"You okay?"

She presses a hand to her belly; sweat beads her upper lip,

"Victoria!" My heart begins to thud, "What's wrong?"

"I...I'm not sure." She pitches forward.

Saint

"It's my fault." I drag my fingers through my hair, "I didn't get to her in time, and now she's in there struggling for her life."

I dig the heels of my boots into the carpet, survey the bland surroundings of the waiting room in the hospital—the same hospital where Weston had been admitted earlier.

"Now, let's not jump to conclusions," Sinclair squeezes my shoulder. "Let's wait for the doc's verdict." He continues, "By the way, in case you were wondering, I cleared things up with Antonio—"

"I wasn't."

"Nevertheless, I removed the bug on the USB and sent him on his way."

I ignore him, "What's taking them so long in there?"

"Uh, the fact that you insisted Weston be present as they examine her?"

"They should be used to it by now," I mutter. "Besides, it's Weston's hospital, isn't it? And he was already with us. They can damn well do as he says...and me, for that matter."

"Not that I don't understand the sentiment," Sinclair sprawls in his seat, his suit none the worse for wear. "But...even I know better than to get in the way of doctors and such fine professionals who are specialists in their field."

"Easy for you to say." I squeeze my fingers into my sides, "If that had been Summer in there..."

His jaw flexes. "Fine," he purses his lips, "what's your point?"

"My point is..." I draw a blank. Run my finger around the sleeve of my shirt. "It's...shit..." I squeeze the bridge of my nose. "I don't know, what it is." What's wrong with me? My wife had collapsed, and this time I hadn't acted quickly enough. I had watched, rooted to the spot, as she had slumped forward, collapsed to the floor. I'd rushed to her, pulled her into my arms, watched as her body had bucked in my arms. Her eyes had rolled back in her head, and all color had leached from her face.

My hands and feet had gone numb, I could barely move, and couldn't string two thoughts together. Me, the man who always has an answer to every question. I couldn't do anything but hold her in my arms... And pray.

Fuck! I've never been religious, never been to a church in my life. But if there is a power larger than all of us, then I had appealed to it for help. I had sworn that if she was okay, I'd contribute a good chunk of my assets to FOK Media—that's short for Full of Kindness, nope I kid you not—the non-profit that the Seven of us had founded. I'll use the money to do good... In my own way.

I'd held her hand all the way to the hospital in the ambulance. She'd regained consciousness en route and had cried. She'd been out of her head with panic that she was losing the baby—our baby, fuck! The little being whose presence was only beginning to take shape in my life... Had it been snatched away before it had materialized?

I hadn't wanted the baby... But if anything happens to either of them, I'll never forgive myself... My heart begins to race and a hollow sensation roils in the pit of my stomach. Bile laces my tongue and I swallow it back. No, I am not going to lose her or the child. I want both of them. I need them in my life—to anchor me, to love, and to be loved. Is this what it means to love and to be loved? To rip out my guts, expose myself to the world, to share my deepest weaknesses and invite the possibility that I'll never recover from the sucker punch?

I jump up from the chair and begin to pace. One foot in front of the other, don't lose it. You owe it to her to keep it together. You need to be strong.

But if I had been better at taking care of her, she wouldn't have landed here in the first place.

If I hadn't taken her up on the offer in the beginning, it would have never come to this. I ball my fingers at my sides. I couldn't have resisted her. No way, would I have turned her away. The thought of her with any other man...having anyone else's child? I dig my fingernails into the palms of my hands with such force that pain shoots up my arm. She is mine. This child is mine. Everything I want is in that room, waiting for me to acknowledge it, to accept it. Am I too late? Have I missed what was right in front of me all along? I want this child, need her in my life more than anything else in this world.

If something were to happen to her or to the child, I'd... I drag in a sharp breath.

Footsteps sound.

I swivel around as Weston walks in the door. He pauses inside, leans his shoulder against the door frame. Whiskers darken his cheeks and his eyes are bloodshot.

He hadn't been in there long...maybe an hour or less. Had he given up hope so quickly? Was there nothing that could be done?

His gaze meets mine; he shakes his head.

"No," my knees buckle.

Sinclair grips my shoulder, "Steady, ol' chap." He turns to Weston, "Stop dicking around, you prick. What's the prognosis?"

Weston looks me up and down, "Now you understand how it feels."

"What... ?" my voice cracks. My vision tunnels as specks of black pull at my subconscious mind.

He tilts his head, "Do you see how it could be if you lost her?"

"You...you bastard." I stalk forward, covering the distance between us. "How dare you play with my feelings?" I roar.

"Thought you didn't have any..."

"Shut your trap, motherfucker. Tell me how she is."

"You sure you want to know?"

I grab my wanker of a friend by his collar, yank him to his toes.

"Hey," he winces, "I'm already wounded."

"Your hand won't be the only thing you can't use, if you don't answer my question."

"They are fine." He breaks into a wide grin, "Mother and baby are doing fine."

Adrenaline laces my blood. A pulse pound at my temples. I pull back my fist and let it fly at him.

Victoria

"It may only be given, not taken or bought. It's what the sinner desires, but the saint does not. What is it?" Saint pauses inside the doorway of the room.

I peer up at him from the bed.

He prowls inside, drops into the chair next to me, then takes my hand, "That was the question I was asked, by my kidnapper."

"The one you couldn't answer?"

He nods, weaves his fingers with mine. "I'd answered each of his riddles until then, but this one... It evaded me. Perhaps it was because I was exhausted by then. Maybe I had given up hope somewhere inside. Each time he took me out of the room where I was being held with the other boys, I was sure I would never return.

Each time, he would hang me upside down and throw questions at me. Anytime I couldn't answer, I was flogged on my feet until I managed to come up with the right answer. That day, I knew I was close to my breaking point. My brain was fogged. I had used up all of my reserves of energy. When he asked me the question, I barely heard it." His throat moves as he swallows.

"What happened then?"

"He whipped my feet. Every time he stopped and asked me if I knew the answer, I couldn't form the words. The blood flowed down my legs, along with it my life. The beating went on longer than any time before. Until I couldn't feel my feet anymore. Until the fire from the wounds ran down my legs, down my spine, slammed into the back of my head. Until some of the capillaries in my eyes broke, and blood ran down my cheeks. Darkness crowded in on me. I thought I was going to die... I never did guess the answer that day. He left me hanging there for hours... Days... Who knows?" He shrugs, "That's how the cops found me when they rescued me. I woke up in a hospital, wondering what the answer was. I couldn't guess it all this time... Then the answer came to me as I paced the floor of the waiting room outside, appealing to whichever higher power might hear me that you'd be okay."

"Oh," I swallow and a hot sensation grips my chest. "What was the answer?"

"Forgiveness," he peers into my face.

"That was the solution to the riddle?" My heart begins to race.

He nods, "Will you forgive me for everything I put you through, Victoria?"

I try to pull my hand away, but he holds on.

"Why?" I purse my lips.

He frowns.

"Why should I forgive you, Saint?" I ask. "You refused to accept our child."

"The one you didn't tell me about?" he retorts.

"I all but revealed it to you in the form of a puzzle."

"You could have come outright and told me," he scolds.

"To you? The master riddler?" I throw up my hands. "You who can crack almost any puzzle?"

His jaw tics. He shuffles his feet.

"You tested me again and again with your games. Yet the one time I asked you the one question, the answer to which mattered so much to me, you pretended not to know the answer."

He squeezes the bridge of his nose, "I think I knew what you were trying tell me. I guessed it, my subconscious alerted me it, but I didn't want to accept it." He winces. "I made a mistake."

"Wow," I blink, "You're actually acknowledging that you're not perfect."

"Seems today is a day of many firsts." He rubs his thumb over the pulse on my wrist, "Including my telling you that I want you, Gigi." He leans over and cups my belly.

A shiver runs up my spine.

"And I want this child more than anything in the world. If anything had happened to the two of you, I wouldn't have been able to live with myself."

He whispers his knuckles across my jaw, "Promise you'll never scare me like that again."

"I scared myself." Tears prick my eyes.

"Hey, don't." He wipes away the moisture that trickles down my cheek, "I am here, and I'm not going anywhere."

"Never?"

"I plan to be by your side. Through sickness and through health. Through ups and downs. Even when the children we have together are grown up and have left home, I'll be there taking care of you, protecting you, providing for you."

"Saint," I whisper. A ball of emotions chokes my throat. Is he saying what I think he is? My heart stutters and a warmth fills my chest.

"It's true," he nods. "I was too afraid to acknowledge what the thought of becoming a father does to me."

"What is that?"

"It makes me feel as vulnerable, as out of control, as I had been all that time ago when I was kidnapped and held captive. When I had no idea if it was day or night, where I was, whether I would survive to the next hour. I swore then, I'd never allow myself to lose control."

"And having a child is exactly that." I bring my other hand up to cup his face, "To cede power. Children bring their own brand of energy, and will create their own futures. You'll never be able to completely control the circumstances around them."

"I am going to try my damndest," he growls.

"And I am going to call you out when you get too overbearing," I trace my thumb over his pouty lower lip.

"I can't change." He glowers, "It's what I am."

"Won't stop me from chipping away at your grumpy-pants ego." I set my jaw.

"Won't stop me from trying to fuck the sass out of you." He smirks, and damn him, but I'm instantly wet.

"You can try," I pout.

"I love that you can stand up to me." His features soften, "I might even let you get your way."

I blink.

"Sometimes," his lips curl.

"Well thank you so much," I grouse.

"If you behave."

I resist the urge to roll my eyes.

"There's one more thing."

Of course, there is.

He slides his hand into his pocket, pulls out the ring, then slips it onto my finger, "Never take it off again."

Two days later

Victoria

I glance through the window of the townhouse on Primrose Hill. The beautiful back garden rolls down from the residence at a gentle slope. There's an infinity pool in the middle of the garden and beyond that the view of the city stretches out.

Heat sears my back, a tingle runs up my spine, then Saint steps up, boxing me in with his arms on either side.

"Like it?"

"The view, you mean?"

"Also, the view." He chuckles, "You love the house, admit it."

I turn in the circle of his arms, "Cocky much?"

"That's my middle name, baby," he smirks.

"Will I never learn not to feed your massive ego?" I huff.

He leans in close enough for his hardness to brush against my waist, "Not the only thing that's massive."

I laugh, "Not that I am complaining, but I think we should wait."

His face pales, "Shit, are you feeling okay? No pain or anything... Should I call the air ambulance?" He reaches for his phone, swipes the screen and presses a number.

I grab his wrist. "I'm fine, really. I meant, wait until we return to the bedroom."

"Oh," he breathes out a sigh of relief, then hangs up.

Then I frown, "Hold on a minute, did you say, air ambulance?"

He reddens. "I didn't want to be caught unawares again. And no way, can my heart survive another ambulance ride to the hospital, so..." He cracks his neck, looks past me, "Uh, the infinity pool is wicked, huh?"

"Don't change the topic."

"Would I dare?" He glances down at me.

"Yes, you very much would dare." I frown, "What have you done Saint?"

"Nothing," he purses his lips, looking for all the world like an errant child. Why do I get the feeling my hands are going to be full with not one but two kids? The man in front of me often acts like one.

"Tell me," I scowl. "Remember what you said: no secrets."

He blows out a breath, "Why the hell did I promise you that, remind me?"

"Because you love me?"

He squares his shoulders. "Exactly. Which is why I had to do it."

"Do what?"

He tilts his head, "Don't freak out when you find out."

"What?" My heart begins to thud. "Out with it, Saint."

He rubs the back of his neck, a sure sign that whatever he's done is going to freak me out.

"It's only an air-ambulance," he mutters.

There's a whomp-whomp sound behind us and a breeze blows in through the open window.

I turn, and my jaw drops, "No."

He moves in, places his chin on my head, "I had to, babe."

I stare as an honest-to-goodness helicopter rises up beyond the infinity pool. I spot the sign of a red cross on the side that indicates it's used for medical purposes. It whirs over us, followed by a slight thump as vibrations roll down the walls. Did it land on the terrace of the townhouse? "Oh, my God," I turn to face him, "I can't believe you have a helicopter on stand-by."

"Maybe I can't control everything, but hell if I can't try to bring down the risk. This way, if there's an emergency, we can get to the closest hospital in under five minutes."

"I... I..." I open and close my mouth, "Only you'd do something so audacious."

"You're worth it, babe."

"You sound like a cheesy commercial."

He blinks, then chuckles, "I do, huh?" He lowers his forehead to mine, "That's what you do to me, darling. You've turned me into a blubbering shell of my former self."

"Hey," I swipe at his shoulder, "don't blame me for that. It's been barely twenty-four hours since you accepted your role as a father-to-be, and I can't believe you've already... Done all this."

"What?"

I wave my hand in the air, "You bought this townhouse on Primrose Hill —"

"I've had my eye on it."

"You had it furnished enough that we could move in right away."

He leans back, "Feel free to change anything you want."

"That's not the point."

"Then what is?"

"It's you." The waterworks threaten again. Shit, is it the hormones? Or is it the fact that, with Saint there to lean on, I finally feel secure enough to let go of all of my fears? In its place, there's a vulnerability that is new, that threatens to overwhelm me. That seduces me to simply melt into him and let him make all of the decisions. Hell! Is this what it means to be a real submissive? To have the onus of decision-making taken away from me? And why do I like that so much?

"Hey," he tips my chin up, "what is it?"

"You're overwhelming me, Saint."

"Ah," his lips quirk. He wipes away my tears, "And?"

"I like it."

"So?"

"I'm not sure if I want to."

"But you do," he smirks.

"I do?" I frown.

"Of course, my lovely Gigi. If you'd allow yourself to relax into the moment, you'd see that this is exactly what you need."

"B...but."

"Trust me, babe."

I peer up into his eyes. Do I dare put my faith in this alphahole of a dominant male, the father of my unborn child, who's changed his entire life for me overnight?

"I do," I whisper.

"Excuse me?" he frowns.

"I do trust you, more than myself. I believe in you so much that it hurts," my voice cracks.

His nostrils flare, "Do you have any idea what it does to me to hear that from you?"

He bends in close enough for our breaths to mingle, "You're mine, Gigi." He touches his lips to mine.

His touch sinks into my blood, coils in my belly.

"Promise me one more thing?" I whisper.

"Anything." He kisses me again.

"Promise you'll see a psychologist for the flashbacks and for the...scars?"

"You mean for my self-harming?" his voice is wry.

I peer up into his face. Hope blooms in my chest. The fact that he had called it by that term... That is the first step to recovery. It won't be easy, but as long as we are together, we can overcome any challenge.

"Will you?" I prompt him.

"For you," he searches my face, "if it makes you happy."

My heart does a little lurch, "It does." I smile up at him.

"And you make me happy, Gigi. Very happy." He crashes his lips to mine. I gasp and he swipes his tongue inside of my mouth—owning me, dominating me. I shiver, and his grasp tightens. He nibbles on my lower lip, and heat suffuses my skin. He rains kisses down my chin, my throat, down to the hollow between my breasts, on each nipple.

My scalp tingles and my toes curl. He drops to his knees in front of me, places a soft kiss on my belly. "Mine," he growls. A melting sensation pulls at my core. He drags his hard fingers down my thighs, coaxing them apart. My knees weaken; he grips my hips, holding me up. Then, through my dress, he nuzzles the triangle between my legs.

"Oh." Goosebumps dot my skin.

He inhales deeply and the sound is so erotic, so right, blood rushes to my lower belly. My pussy trembles. I dig my fingers into his hair and tug.

A low growl rumbles up his throat. The vibrations sink through the fabric of my outfit and warm my blood. I shiver, "Saint."

He presses his face into my pussy and a throbbing flares to life—hot, aching. My bones seem to melt all at once.

"Saint," I plead.

He slips his fingers under my dress, traces the backs of my knees.

Sensations radiate from his touch. Every part of me that he touches seems to turn into an erotic zone.

"Saint!" I whine.

I sense his lips curve against my melting core. He slides both of his palms up the backs of my thighs, leaving pinpricks of pure lust in their wake. He cups my butt cheeks, squeezes gently. I draw in a sharp breath, grab the back of his head and urge him closer, closer.

He slides those wicked fingers under my panties, grazes the crevasse between my arse cheeks.

I shudder. Memories of how he'd taken me there swamp me. "Please," I gasp out.

"You like that, hmm?"

I nod.

He pushes aside the fabric of my dress, then buries his face in between my legs. The hot, aching tension inside of me winds up tighter—begging, needing more, so much more. I thrust my pelvis forward, but his grip stops me. He peers up at me from under those thick eyelashes; I take in the sight of his handsome face framed between my thighs and moisture pools between my legs. "Saint," I pant, "don't stop."

"You aren't completely recovered from your episode," he replies.

"Fuck that." I toss my head.

He chuckles, "I am proving to be a bad influence on you."

"Oh, please," I frown, "I was swearing long before I met you."

"Oh?" He tilts his head and his eyes gleam. "And this?" He slips his finger up to brush my pussy.

A moan spills from my lips.

"Were you doing this as well?"

"You know I wasn't. You are well aware that you're my first."

"And your only." His gaze intensifies, "I plan to keep you so happy, so satisfied, that you'll never want for anything..."

My panties grow damper. Damn it, how can he bring me so close to the edge with simply a glance?

"Except for your orgasms, of course." His lips twist in that sneer-smirk that is so very Saint.

"Stop that," I huff.

He chuckles, "What's life without a few games between us, hmm?" He rubs his nose up my pussy lips, and even through the double layers of fabrics, his hot breath sears my delicate skin.

"Oh," I gasp, "please come inside me. I need you inside of me."

He pauses, leans back on his haunches, "I don't want to hurt you."

"What happened was a fluke," I reassure him.

"I don't want it to happen again. If something goes wrong, I swear..."

"That's why you have a helicopter stationed above, ready to rush me to a hospital, huh?" I jerk my chin upwards.

He frowns, rolls his shoulders, "Still."

"No," I shake my head. "No excuses. Please, can you make love to me?"

His blue eyes turn that dark turquoise I am beginning to recognize as the first sign when he is out of control. He firms his jaw, "You sure?"

I scowl, then release him, to shove my fingers under my dress and drag down my panties. They catch on his hands as I tug, and he releases his grip on me. I angle sideways, then shimmy the fabric down to my ankles, straighten and kick it off.

"That clear enough for you?" I ask.

A low chuckle rolls from his lips. He rises to his feet, scoops me up in his arms. Turning, he walks out of the living room and up the steps. "I never did give you the grand tour," he rasps.

"I've seen enough to know the house is beautiful."

He takes the steps two at a time. When we reach the landing, he turns into a hallway, heads toward the double doors at the end. He carries me into a large room, with a familiar four poster bed mounted on a platform.

To the right, a bank of floor to ceiling windows open out onto the sprawling slope of Primrose Hill.

"Wow," I take in the room, "You had the bed moved from the suite?"

He shuffles his feet, "It's where we first made love. I couldn't leave it behind, could I?"

OMG! That is...hot and romantic and sentimental. This man is a teddy bear inside. "I thought it came with the hotel room?"

He scrutinizes my features, "I ordered it the day after I met you at Sterling's wedding."

"Oh?" My heart stutters, "You were so confident that you were going to have me?"

"You bet," his lips curl.

And that arrogance of his? Honestly, I can't make up my mind whether to slap him or kiss him. "Guess I don't get a say in whether we're keeping it?" I pout.

"Nope." He heads for the bed, steps up on the platform, "And not in how I take you once we are in it either."

He lowers me onto the mattress—slowly, gently, his every move such a contrast to the fierceness of how we'd fucked before that I can't stop the moan that escapes me.

"Shh," he places his finger on my lips, "let me take care of you."

He steps back, unties the sash on my wraparound dress. It parts in the front. He eases it off of one shoulder, then the other. Pulls me up into sitting position, to take it off of me completely then unhooks my bra and pulls that off.

I shiver.

"You cold?"

"No... It's how you look at me...like...like..."

He steps back, rakes his gaze down my chest, to the hollow between my legs. "Like?" he prompts.

"Like you want to own me."

Color smears his cheeks, "I thought that's what I wanted too, but I was wrong."

"I don't understand."

"I want to imprint myself into every part of you, sink into you, until it's impossible to tell where you begin and where I end. I want you to think of me even when you're not aware of it. Turn to me before you have a rational thought, coil into my memories as you drift off to sleep, dream of me when you are awake..." He frowns, "I want you to be me. That makes no sense, does it?"

My lips tremble, "I think I understand."

"You do?" His eyebrows knit.

I nod, "You want to love me like you've never loved anyone before?"

"More than I love myself." He brings his lips to mine, kisses me sweetly—a touch, a nibble, a deep drinking from my lips that sets my head reeling. The world tilts.

I look up to find he's stepped back.

He strips off his shirt and my throat closes. The light pours in through the open windows, highlighting the dips and hollows between that eight pack. My belly quivers and my sex clenches. I'll never get enough of his gorgeous body...or the raging intensity of the feelings he manages to cloak so well with it.

He toes off those ancient cowboy boots, shoves down his pants and his boxers, along with his socks. He straightens and his dick springs out—thick, heavy, the head swollen and weeping with need. I hold out my arms. He sinks down to join me. I wrap my legs around his waist, loving the feel of his hard planes biting into my flesh, his thick thighs a heavy comfort between mine. I trace the planes of his back and his muscles coil—so vital, so real, and all mine. His shoulders blot out the world and his face fills my line of sight. He lowers his head so our noses bump. A giggle tumbles from my lips.

"You're gorgeous, Gigi."

Heat sears my cheeks.

His lips kick up. Then he bends his head and captures my lips with his. His touch sinks all the way to my bones; heat tugs low in my belly and my pussy clenches. I tip up my chin, meeting his tongue with mine. A groan rips from him. He drags his palm down my side, settles it on my hip in a gesture that's possessive and intimate.

His cock nudges my opening. I tilt my hips up. "Please," I mumble in my throat.

He slides his dick into my melting pussy. So good, so full, so heavy, and so right. A groan rips from him, or was that me? He stills as I adjust to his size. I dig my heels into his back, wrap my arms around his breadth, and urge him on. He slides in further, his shoulders bunching, the muscles in his back flexing with tension. He's holding back, not allowing himself to give in completely. A smile curves my lips. I drag my fingers down the length of his spine, tracing each contour, each dip and crevasse. He shivers. Oh, this is different. A rush of power engulfs me. I reach his taut butt, dig my fingertips into the tight flesh. His entire body shudders. "I don't want to hurt you," he whispers against my lips.

"You're hurting me now."

He pulls back, "What?"

I smirk, "Unless you complete what you set out to do."

His lips twist. He eases himself inside of me—gently, slowly, his weight stretching my super-sensitive channel. Every ridge of his shaft slides, chafes against my flesh, sending pulsing, coiling, roiling sensations up my back, toward my extremities. The climax builds almost instantly, swelling from the point where we are joined.

He tilts his hips and his cock dips inside further, until he bottoms out.

"You're my other half, Gigi," he whispers. "You're the better half of my conscience, the edge to my sense of humor, the lightbulb in my creativity, you're my heart," he whispers.

I swallow down the lump in my throat. Hell, I'd been wrong. He could simply tell me what was on his mind and I'd come with the intensity of his true self.

"Saint?" I clear my throat.

"Hmm?"

"I love you too, but... Would you please just shut up and fuck me now."

He chuckles, then rocks his pelvis again and again, each thrust sending waves of pleasure shooting out from the contact. The orgasm whips up my spine. I strain up and into him, plastering my breasts against him. He holds my gaze with his, scrutinizes my every response, searches my features with an intensity that pierces my heart. My pussy clamps down on his dick and his cock pulses. The climax swells and pauses, waits. I open my mouth and the cry sticks in my throat. I swallow, moan, plead with him silently.

His gaze intensifies; those blue eyes sparkle, glow with that cold heat that calls to me, beckons to me. "Come," he whispers.

I splinter into little pieces. He closes his mouth over mine—soft, searching—drawing another moan from somewhere deep inside of me that he swallows. Another low groan from him, his shoulders shudder, and he comes, filling all of the empty places inside of me. His muscles bunch, then he flips me over and onto him, without pulling out.

I coil into his broad chest, wrapping my fingers around his biceps, or trying to—considering their width.

He draws his warm palm across my back, from nape to arse and back again. There's a whisper against my hair.

I turn my head, place my chin on his chest, "You're a hidden romantic, Saint Jordan Killian Caldwell."

"I actually did miss one," he drawls.

"What?"

"When we first met, you asked if I'd missed a name." He flexes his shoulders, "Turns out, I did."

"What is it?" I rest my chin on his chest. "No, let me guess."

He raises his eyebrow, "Do I want to know?"

I snicker, "Is it, insensitive wart?"

He smirks.

"Giant squid?"

He chuckles, "It is giant, though I'd rather liken it to an octopus than a squid."

I choke, "You're a mugglepuff, you know that?"

He blinks, "I have no idea what you're talking about."

"You don't?" I sit up.

"Nope."

I gape, "You've never read Harry Potter?"

"What does that have to do with anything?" he glowers.

"You hate The Beatles..." I count off on my fingers, "You've never read a Harry Potter novel," I shake my head. "Next you'll tell me you've never seen, When Harry met Sally."

He reddens.

I throw up my hands, "What the hell am I doing with you?"

"Does it help that the missing name is Harry?" he drawls.

I pout, "You're kidding me."

"Believe it," he raises his shoulders, "or not."

I peer into his face, "That's such a typical Saint-Douchebag-Caldwell retort."

"And it turns you on," his lips curl.

"Now hold on a second—"

His phone buzzes.

I freeze.

His jaw tics.

It buzzes again.

"Let it go," I whisper.

He searches my features and swallows, "I can't."

He sets me aside on the bed, then straightens. He reaches for the phone from his pants pocket, checks the message and silences it, then proceeds to get dressed.

I watch the play of muscles on his back, the coil of power in his thighs as he stalks to the door.

A hollow sensation smolders in the pit of my stomach. He dare walk out on me again? I stiffen, curl my fingers into fists.

This time I won't let him leave. This time I am going to fight for what's mine.

"Saint," I yell after him. "Where the hell are you going?"

He pauses, turns around. "Aren't you coming with me?"

Answer: Hello, Honey!

Victoria

An hour later, I watch as Saint eases his Jeep into the deserted parking lot.

I'd dressed quickly and followed him out earlier. He'd led me to the garage in the basement, which had been a surprise, considering I'd never seen him drive anything but the Jaguar. I'd been shocked to find that, in addition, he has a Jeep, a Harley—of course he has a Harley. What billionaire doesn't huh? More surprising, had been the SUV—a Mercedes SUV.

I'd paused in front of it and he'd simply tilted his head in that manner which is meant to convey, Of course, I have a car which can be fitted with a baby seat.

I'd stared at it and he'd said, if I didn't like it, he could get me another. I'd simply shaken my head, too bemused to say anything. I'd followed him into his Jeep, stared around at the simple interior. With his jeans, black sweatshirt and beat up cowboy boots, this vehicle feels more like him than anything else. Is the obnoxious billionaire persona an act then? I frown. Will my alphahole ever stop surprising me?

"You okay?" his voice slithers down my spine, coils in my gut. Now that smoky, sensuous burr of his tone... I'll never get used to that.

"I'm good."

"So why are you biting your nails?"

Oh. I pull my hand back, then shove it under my thigh, for good measure.
"Something on your mind, babe?"

Hell, why does he have to be so intuitive when it came to me, huh? I flip my hair back, then mutter, "You taking me to meet that woman?"

He nods.

'Is she like, your ex?' is what I want to ask, but he'd denied anything between them, and damn him, but I want to believe him. Besides, I am not going to turn into a nagging shrew, not when he's taking me to meet her. I'll find out soon enough, what this is all about, huh?

His gaze stays focused on the road.

I glance sideways at him, and my stomach does that little flip-flop at the sight of his patrician nose, that mean upper lip, the pouty lower lip—moisture beads my core. Shit, I am pregnant and he'd made love to me—in the sweetest way possible—just before we left the house, so why am I already turned on by taking in the profile of his face?

I turn to stare ahead as he veers off of the main road. The narrow road he's turned onto winds its way through a heavily-shaded strip of trees. He takes another turn, then pulls into a driveway.

He switches off the ignition and silence descends.

I peer through the windshield at the field in front of us, "Are we still in London?"

"We're in Zone 4 of the city, so on the outskirts."

He reaches to the dash, pockets a small paper bag, then opens his door. I open my door and step out. He comes around the vehicle, holds out his hand. I take it. He weaves his fingers with mine, "Ready?"

No, I'm not. I take in a breath and nod. He leads me toward the small two-floor cottage. I sniff the air, assailed by the scent of dried hay and huh, is that the manure I smell? The pounding of hooves splits the air. I glance up as a horse gallops over from the edge of the field to the wooden stile.

His dark black coat glints in the sunlight. He tosses his head, snorts.

Saint, lowers the zipper of his sweatshirt, then pulls out the packet and empties out a couple of sugar lumps.

"Is that for the horse?"

He smiles, walks toward the fence, "Devil here, is a pure-bred Arabian. I couldn't pass up the opportunity to sneak him a treat, could I?"

He holds out his palm and the horse moseys over and licks up the cubes. Devil snorts again. Saint reaches up to run his fingers over his long nose. The horse, whines, stamps his feet. The horse lowers his head and Saint scratches him behind his ears until a rumbling sound emerges from him.

What the—? I blink.

"He sometimes behaves more like a dog than a horse," a voice explains.

I whip around to see a woman walking toward us. She's the one Saint met the other day. Tiny, exquisitely curved, her legs are enclosed in boots and slim jeans. Her plaid shirt is tucked into her hourglass waist. Her hair flows around her shoulders. Behind her, the door to the house stands open. Guess I'd missed that, entranced by the ease with which Saint had petted the horse.

She walks up and holds out her hand, "I'm Tink."

"Tink?" I frown.

She sighs, "Yeah, I was named Tinkerbelle. I do prefer Tink, though."

"Don't blame you," I mutter. "I'm Victoria." I take her hand.

"Your name suits you." She looks me up and down, "You do bear a resemblance to Posh—"

"Don't say it, please. I don't know her, have never met her. She is no relation to me..."

"—Spice," she completes her statement. "Sorry, bet you've heard that a million times and hate it as much as I do my name."

"Hate to say it, but yours suits you, too," I bite my lips.

"Well, guess we are kindred, huh?" She drops my hand, turns to Saint.

"You made it," she jerks her chin.

"It sounded urgent."

"Sorry, but I think you need to see this one," she replies.

Saint pulls away from the horse, dusts his palms on his jeans, then reaches for mine, "Shall we?"

Tink leads the way inside, past a small living room, to another room that's furnished like an office. A bank of computer screens fills most of one wall. There are more screens sitting on the desk, each showing different images, two of them have maps with dots blinking on them. Whoa, someone loves their technology.

She slips into the chair, pulls up surveillance footage.

The screen shows a group of girls in a room which looks like a dormitory. Some of them are lying down, some sitting. One of them paces back and forth. She pauses, glances round the room, looks straight at the camera. Her desperate eyes seem to fill the screen, as she begins to weep.

The other women in the room sit up. One of them gets out of her bed to approach her... One of the others gestures to her. She hesitates, then falls back.

Tink shuts it off. "Sorry," she apologizes, "it's hard to watch."

Saint wraps his arm around me and pulls me into his side. I rub my cheek against his sleeve.

He kisses the top of my head, "Shouldn't have allowed you to see that... But I wanted you to meet Tink and find out about the work we do together."

I look up at him, "So, you and she..."

"She runs an initiative that helps rescue those kidnapped or those who go missing." His lips stiffen. "No one should go through what I went through; nor the kind of mental trauma..." he peruses my features, "inflicted on Nina, and then on you."

What I'd been through couldn't begin to compare with his experience; but we'd both survived the challenges thrown at us.

Is that why we're attracted to each other, because we are survivors? No, it's more than that. We could have met anywhere, in other circumstances, and yet, the connection between us would have been there.

"This is why you respond so quickly every time she calls?"

He nods, "It normally means she's tracked down the whereabouts of a victim or victims," he nods toward the screen "and needs my help."

"Saint finances the efforts." Tink glances between us, "I'm sorry if I've called him at inopportune times. Sometimes I've needed backup, and since the operations are kept secret, I can't risk calling in anyone else."

I tighten my grip around Saint's waist. "So this is what you were doing?" My cheeks heat.

"You didn't think..." Tink glances up at Saint, then makes a face.

"Ugh, I wouldn't date him. He's way too up his own arse." She laughs, "Besides, he's more like a brother to me."

Saint tugs on her hair, in a decidedly sibling-like gesture.

"When did you two decide to start this?" I ask.

Saint shuffles his feet, "I've already told you that I took my mother's death hard." He rubs the back of his neck, "Let's just say, I was out of control for a while."

"That's putting things mildly," Tink snorts. "He opened fire in his house when his father was away."

"O-k-a-y." I peer up at Saint, "Did you hurt anyone?"

He shakes his head, "But I destroyed the place. My father packed me off to go work with his friend."

"That's my father," Tink clarifies.

"He was an urban Cowboy, you could say." Saint rolls his shoulders, "He and his friends ran the adjacent farms. They trained and sold horses, and ran a riding school specializing in equine therapy."

"In the middle of London?"

"Zone 4; it's on the outskirts," he reminds me. "But yeah, they are technically in London."

"Wow," I glance around the space, "This place is something..."

Tink nods, "After my father died, Saint became my defacto guardian."

"The stint with Tink and her father saved me. Her father was more a parent to me than my own. If it were not for Tink's dad... I would have ended up shooting myself."

I glance down at the faded Cowboy boots.

"Those are—"

"My father's," Tink completes the sentence.

"I borrowed them from him," Saint says, "when I lived here on the ranch. It's where I was reborn a second time, in a way. Since then—"

"You wear them because they help you remember to stay sane?"

He nods.

Tears prick my eyes. I turn my face into Saint's arm. "I'm sorry that I doubted you," I whisper.

Saint wraps his arm even closer around me, "You couldn't have known, and I should have told you about this earlier."

I shake my head. "It would have been too dangerous."

Tink smiles, "She's a keeper, Killian."

He drums his fingers on his chest, "I have good taste, huh?"

I swipe at his shoulder, "So that's why you had the riding crop on your desk?"

"Want me to use it again on you?" he smirks.

"Ugh," Tink grimaces, "TMI, you guys."

"Sorry," he snickers, "couldn't resist."

His phone pings. He slides it out of his pocket and his lips curl.

"What are you up to?" I huff.

"Weston's on his way to the cabin in the countryside to get some alone time over Christmas." He pockets his phone.

There's silence for a minute.

"Hold on a second." I scowl, "Isn't Amelie headed there as well?"

"Is she?" His lips twitch.

"Saint Jordan Killian Harry Caldwell," I grumble.

"Uh-oh," he drawls, "am I in trouble?"

"You set this up?"

"Me?" His gaze widens.

I stare, "You sent them both up there?"

"Oops." He smirks.

-From Amelie's diary

Amelie

"Aww, they clearly like each other," the radio show host exclaims.

"They hated each other, couldn't stop trading insults—" the male announcer interrupts her.

"Only it was all build-up, OMG..." the first announcer cuts in. "The feels, the emotions.. They wanted to stab each other, but turned out, it was a different kind of stabby that they had for each other."

"Is that what they're calling it these days, Ivy?" The man snickers, "Good thing this is a late-night chat show."

"I can always count on you to keep me in line, Wolfgang," Ivy quips.

"Call me Wolf," the male announcer drawls.

"Right, well," Ivy clears her throat. " For everyone listening on this blustery night in the lead up to Christmas..." She pauses to take a breath, "The question I'd like to pose is, is it rude to interrupt someone mid-sentence by uh! distracting them? Email us, text us, call in and tell us after the break. This is Smile FM..."

I snort aloud, then switch off the radio tuned into the local radio station. The talk show hosts seem to be living in la-la land, or is it the Christmas spirit that's affecting them? More likely, it's the chemistry, between them, which not even the airwaves could disguise. Must be nice, to have that kind of sizzling attraction, huh?

The kind that makes you want to slap the man, punch him in the nuts, maybe; right before you jump on him, wrap your legs around him, and—

That...had been the kind of no-holds-barred romance I'd hoped for when I had met my ex. He'd done everything right, hadn't attempted to kiss me until our third date. In short, he'd been a gentleman...of the double-crossing kind.

Bastard had dumped me after three weeks.

He'd seen my name connected to all the notoriety that had followed my friend Victoria and her now-husband Saint's wedding... His mother hadn't been happy about it, and as he'd rushed to inform me, he couldn't go against his mama's word... So, I'd been dropped.

On the other hand, my fledgling pastry business had taken off.

Everyone wanted the desserts that had been featured prominently in the publicity accompanying the marriage... I had more orders than I could fulfill. I had worked around the clock in the lead up to Christmas. I'd fulfilled my last booking this morning and handed over the reins of the company to my assistant—yep, I made enough money in the last month to finally hire the intern who had worked with me since I'd started the business.

I can trust her to keep the business going, while I take some time off over Christmas and New Year's. A few days of no work, no waking up in the early hours to bake... Not unless I want to do it for pleasure; and damn, if I am not going to bake the hell out of some new recipes that I want to try out.

I am going to use the next week to unwind, to reconnect with the girl I'd once been—carefree, happy, with hope in her eyes and a spring in her step—before business worries had taken over my life. I hunch my shoulders. At twenty-five, I am not that old... Except for the fact that I've never met a man with whom I've managed to hold a relationship down for more than uh—three months.

Well, to hell with that.

I am going to make the most of what I have. To start, I'll rejuvenate over the festive season, then bounce back into London all bright-eyed and ready to take the New Year by storm. Yeah! I turn off the highway, down the narrow road that leads me deeper into the countryside. My sturdy Volkswagen eats up the miles, until I get to a turn-off. I glance at the GPS... Yup, this is the road. Well, what the hell? I turn down the unpaved path. I'd wanted solitude. Guess I am getting it, one way or the other. I drive another mile, turn another corner...and drive up to massive gates.

I roll down my window, pull up the security app I'd installed on my phone, then reach out and wave my phone over the keypad in the wall.

The gates swing open. Awesome, and on the first try!

I continue down the driveway to a single-story bungalow, with a porch running around it, then park the car. I switch off the engine and listen. There... I can hear it... The silence. I can't stop the smile that lifts my cheeks. Most people don't like to be alone... Me? I thrive on it. As long as I can bake during the day, then curl up with my book-boyfriend in the evenings, with a glass of my favorite bubbly—champagne only, I'm strict like that—and surrounded by bubbles in a bathtub... Oh yeah, that would be a bonus. I push the door open, then walk around to retrieve my two suitcases. Don't judge. I like to have the comforts of home with me when I travel. So, what if I am only a few hours away from home? I need my favorite set of PJs, my bath bombs, my wine...and this. I walk around to the front of the car, open the door to the passenger side, and retrieve my most prized possession, the tools of my trade—my pastry chef bag, without which, I never go anywhere.

Sliding the strap of my baking toolkit across my chest, my handbag over one shoulder, I begin to drag one of the suitcases...which promptly gets stuck in the muddy ground. I haul at it, there's a cracking sound, then the valise dips to one side. Shit, did I break it already? To be fair, it had been a surprisingly cheap buy from the charity shop. I should have known better than to buy it, even though it had been marked down by about 70%. I wipe the sweat from my forehead. I straighten, take a step back, and instantly lose my footing. I hit the ground on my butt.

Bloody hell, this is all going tits over arse. A whistling sound emerges from the trees.

Goosebumps flare on my skin. Shit, is there someone...or something out there? It's all well and good to want to be alone... But in the countryside? I hadn't considered how...spooky it could all be. A low humming sounds in the distance. Is that a bird? A plane? Crap, there is no Superman around here to rescue me. I am on my own. Better get your arse in gear, woman. I jump up to my feet. Best get indoors, turn on some lights, then I can come back for my luggage.

A breeze blows and I hunch my shoulders. Damn it, how can I be warm and cold at the same time?

I take another step, trip over some rocks. Hell, I need lights, and fast.

Okay, hold on, I've got this.

I grab my phone from my handbag, switch on the flashlight. A beam of light illuminates the way. I walk toward the patio, take the steps up to the front door, shove my hand into my handbag and scrounge around for the key. Where is it? Where the hell is it? There! I pull out the key and insert it into the lock. The door unlocks. Woo!

I push against the door, walk into a spacious living room. Switching off the light, I drop the phone into my handbag. Then I take stock.

There's an unlit fireplace in the center, a settee beyond that, facing the door, complete with a rug in front of it. To my right are big French windows, to my left is a bookcase, with floor to ceiling shelves, filled with books. Yay, that's another point for this place. Next to it is a small table with liquor bottles.

I walk to it, place my handbag on the bar counter, next to a wall clock that's turned face down. I turn it face up; realize it's stopped. Huh? Guess it ran out of batteries. I replace it on the counter, turn around. That's when I hear the low sound of whistling again. I gulp. Guess I hadn't imagined it then?

It's a whistling, and of the human variety. This is not from an animal or a bird. The hell? I glance around the comfortable space. Everything looks undisturbed, though how would I know? I hear the sound of something sloshing from the direction of the back door... What the—? Did the intruder decide to take a bath?

Is there a hot tub of some kind on the patio at the back?

I take a step forward, then stop. I need a weapon. I am not going out there alone. Shit, why had I thought it was a good idea to come here on my own, remind me again? I hadn't been running away, I hadn't... Yeah, right. I'd needed to take myself away from all of those shiny, happy, faces celebrating bloody Christmas, which honestly, I do love... I do... Just not this year. This year, I need to catch a break... And hell, if I haven't caught something, alright. A burglar, more like it. I unclasp my satchel of baking tools, reach in and remove a—spatula? The humming sound increases in pitch, then a full-blown song reaches me. The hell? I squeeze my fingers around my weapon... Don't laugh; a spatula can do plenty of damage when it connects with someone's balls.

I lower my chef's satchel to the ground, then unbutton my coat and shrug it off. I stalk toward the door at the far end.

The sounds of water splashing reaches me through the patio door. Huh? Maybe there is a hot tub out there...

Then a male voice breaks into a rendition of Nothing Else Matters by Metallica. What the—? There's someone out there, all right, and the singing's not bad, actually. My thief, has a thing for classic rock, and can carry a tune. I hum the lyrics in sync with him... The hell? I pause, draw in another breath. Now or never. Do it, Amelie. Go for it. Whoever it is, he has no right to be here. Shit, should I have called the cops?

The singing stops abruptly. What the—? Did he hear me approaching?

I half angle my body, turn to leave; the door to the patio flies open.

I pivot around, raise my weapon, and find I am confronted with a wall of muscle. Naked chest, water running in rivulets down those sculpted abs that narrow into a concave belly which points to his thick, long—

"My face is up here," he drawls.

Heat flushes my cheeks; I jerk my gaze up. Grey eyes clash with mine—stormy clouds that boil in a sky which hints at oncoming snow. Sleet. Hail. An uncompromising will to get his way, no matter what. A shiver runs down my spine and moisture pools between my legs.

The skin between his eyebrows crinkles and his nostrils flare. No way. He can't smell my arousal, can he?

That mean upper lip thins further. His pouty lower lip juts out above a chin that wears days' old growth of beard. Thick dark hair covers his jaw. How would it feel to have him draw those rough whiskers across my inner thighs? Right before he dips his head, darts out his tongue, and licks my innermost secret place. Goosebumps dot my skin. Shit, what's wrong with me? Why did my mind go there? You know why... Because this handsome piece of 100% male goodness is, quite simply, the most wickedly delicious piece of dessert I've ever laid my eyes on. My throat dries. Also, I happen to know him.

"You?" my voice comes out breathless.

"What are you doing here?" he snaps at the same time.

"What are you doing here?" I retort. "And in a hot tub, on the patio of this house, no less?"

"I am not in the habit of answering queries posited by women who look like they've been dragged in from a storm."

"What?" My jaw drops. I am gaping, and it's not only because the words complete the image of the man I've loathed from the moment I first saw him at the wedding of one of my best friends. "Dr. f'ing Weston," I snarl.

"That's Doc Kincaid to you." He yawns.

Of course, his surname would have to have the word kink in it in some form. "And are you?" I scowl.

"What?"

"A real doctor?"

He raises his hand, stabs the air with a cigar I only now realize he holds between his fingers. "Do you want to find out?" He looks me up and down, waggles his eyebrows. "I could give you a thorough examination." His gaze settles on my breasts, slides down to my core. "Make sure everything is in working order." He snickers.

Heat fizzes low in my belly. Hell, with that kind of hotness, this man could clearly get my cake batter to rise in seconds... Wait, did I just think that?

I make a gagging noise in my throat, "Does that line actually work?"

"You'd be surprised." His lips curl.

Oh, that smirk. My stomach seems to bottom out... Or maybe that's because I haven't eaten since breakfast.

He draws on his cigar, cheeks hollowing for an instant, before he puffs out smoke. Cherries, cloves...cinnamon. Yum. My mouth waters, "How would it be to bake a cigar dessert?"

"What?" He frowns.

Shit, did I just say that aloud?

"Nothing," I mumble, "and you haven't answered my question."

His voice lowers to a hush, "I'll answer yours if you answer mine." Another shiver ladders up my spine. How did he manage to make that seem like an innuendo?

"Is everything a trade to you?"

"You should try it." He smiles, a full-blown grin that highlights the laughter lines that stretch from the corners of his eyes. I mean, could this guy be any more perfect? I allow my gaze to take in the breadth of his shoulders, that gorgeous neck, the swell of those hard biceps, the smattering of hair on those forearms—No, do not look lower; don't do it—to the splint that he sports around middle finger of his right hand.

"What happened to you?" I scowl.

"This?" He raises his middle finger to show me the bird by default, "I fractured my middle finger in a car accident."

"How convenient," I scoff. "You can announce your jerk-face nature without speaking a word."

He chuckles, "You always this nice to injured men?"

"You always go around flashing women?"

"You enjoyed the view." He raises that goddam cigar again to his mouth, wraps those beautiful lips around the smoke stick.

And I'd love to get my mouth around his fat, juicy cigar too.

No, no. Enough with the terrible metaphors. But, hello, can you blame me? I am only a woman standing in front of a man—a naked, gorgeous-as-hell, stud muffin of a male who pulls the cigar from his mouth, and blows out a cloud of fragrant smoke from between pursed lips.

Moisture melts my core. My toes curl.

Jesus, there should be a law against him using his mouth like that. Of course, I could find other uses for that mouth of his too... No, no no. Why are you insisting on going back down that route?

"Nothing I haven't seen," I toss my head.

"Unlikely." He lowers his right hand—the one with the splint and the default flip-me-off-bird to his crotch.

What the—? Don't look there, bitch— Don't bloody watch him grasp himself and squeeze.

I gulp, the sound audible in the small space. And damn him, but I can't take my gaze off of that gorgeous part of his anatomy.

He moves his arm to his side, "I rest my case."

Hell, but a certain part of him is far from being in resting position. Gulp. Did I just word play on his dick play? Clearly, his proximity is rubbing off if all I can think of are these poor jokes.

"By the way," his tone is conversational, "you planning on defending yourself with that?" He jerks his chin.

I tighten my grasp around the spatula and raise it. "This has been known to strike fear in the heart of burglars and those who've tried to break in on me before," I snap.

"You were burgled?" His jaw hardens.

"None of your business."

"Answer the bloody question." He takes a step forward. I scoot back. My leg brushes something warm and furry, which moves.

"Whoa!" I struggle to find my balance then, for the second time in ten minutes, the world tilts, and I find myself falling... Falling.

The spatula slips from my grasp. I squeeze my eyes shut, waiting for my butt to connect with the hard ground, only I'm yanked upright. Heat envelops me and my breasts flatten against something unyielding. I don't need to open my eyelids to know it's his chest, the one with the cut planes, the eight-pack abs. I slap my palm against that wall of muscles which coil, move, and writhe under my fingertips. I gulp and my legs threaten to give way under me, but his hold around my shoulders tightens. I spot the smoldering smoke stick of his on the ground.

"Your...cigar," I stutter.

"You noticed," he quips.

I grimace, then nod my head toward the floor. "I meant that one."

"Forget that." His breath feathers over my hair and liquid lust shoots through my veins. The scent of pine and cloves mixes with that edgy darkness that is purely Weston. Speaking of—something hard stabs into my waist—the aforementioned "cigar." A groan boils up my throat. Not fair—this crazy attraction to someone I've barely met a couple of times. Why does he have to smell so delicious? Bet if I licked his chest, he'd taste more decadent than the chocolate mud pie cake recipe I've been wanting to bake. I'll lick the frosting off his cupcake any time. Nooooo. Not again. Enough with comparing his unmentionables with my favorite stuffed goodies. OMG, how would it feel to have him stuff his goodies in my cannoli? Wait, did that even make sense?

His voice dips, "You haven't answered my question."

"What?" I blink.

"Someone broke in on you?" He enunciates his words at a slow pace as if I am slow of mind... Which, I admit, at the moment, I seem to be. His larger-than-life charisma has turned my brain cells to mush. "Tell me," he coaxes. Is he using the same tone he'd use with the puppy to make him obey? Well, hell, if it isn't working on me as well.

"Y...yes." My stomach clenches. "But I fought off the thief...." I force out the words.

His muscles coil; tension radiates off of his body. "You confronted the man?" he snaps.

"Yeah," I hunch my shoulders, "It happened a week ago... No biggie." I swallow as my heart begins to race. It hadn't been pleasant, that almost encounter. I had been alone in the kitchen of my bakery at 4 am... Hell, it had been horrible, actually. The guy had thrown a fright into me and I had thrown this spatula at him. "I chased him off. Yay. See? I'm fine, still alive." And bloody shaken, but I'm not going to tell him that.

His grip tightens, "Did he hurt you?" His jaw tics.

I stare up into his tight features. You'd think Mr. Jerkass here is all concerned about my safety.

"Did he?" his voice snaps through the noise in my head.

"N...no," I shake my head.

"No, what?"

No, I will not give in to this insane chemistry between us. I didn't come all this way to run slap-bang into a man who is, surely, far worse than the one who recently broke my heart. "No, he didn't do any harm. He ran off before I could use the spatula on him." I tip up my chin. "Though I can't promise the same to you."

He chuckles, "I love a good fight, don't you?"

Jackass.

A whine sounds behind me.

I shoot a sideways glance to spot a puppy plant his behind on the ground...exactly the kind of position I'd have been in, if 'Mr. Overbearing Brute' here hadn't grabbed me first. Oh, so that's what I'd brushed against earlier and almost fallen over.

"Max," Weston talks to the dog, "you hungry, buddy?"

The puppy whines again.

"I'll be right there, little fella." His voice takes on a cajoling tone, and damn him, but my ovaries seem to spasm. The hell is he doing to me? Before this, I've never thought about kids... Hell, I've barely managed to embark on a halfway decent career, and I've never thought of myself as someone who'd want a family. But Weston, with his smoldering glare, his hard face, his harder—um—body, and that coaxing manner with which he talks to Max... I can see him with a child tucked under one arm, and me under his other... Heck, I can see me under him, period. My mouth waters. My panties dampen further. Get your mind out of the gutter, you slut.

"Isn't he Sinclair and Summer's pet?" I frown. My friend Summer had married Sinclair Sterling, one of the seven billionaire co-owners of 7A investments. The media had labelled them the Seven and, Dr Douche here is one of them.

"Summer and Sinclair are away on an extended honeymoon," Weston grunts.

"Aww. So you decided to puppy-sit?" A warm glowing ball lights up inside of me.

He glowers, "Don't gush any sweet icky stuff now—uh, what's your name again?"

Poof—that warm feeling I mentioned? Forget about it. The hell is wrong with this man? "You know my name all right, you ass." I stab my finger in his chest, "So why are you pretending otherwise?"

"Me?" He blinks, "Do I?" He tilts his head, pretending to think, "Is it Lily?"

A slow burn starts up my spine.

"No... No." He cracks his neck, "It will come to me, it will... It's Malia, right?"

Anger laces the edges of my vision. I draw in a breath, then another. Stay calm, he can only get so much more obnoxious, right?

"Wait, let me try, one more time..." He pats his temple with the palm of his injured hand. "It's...something French, isn't it? Like... Valerie, Malory, maybe? No, I have it." He snaps his fingers, "It's Celine. I got that right, didn't I?" He chuckles.

I clench my fists, then raise my hand toward his face.

He catches my wrist. "Tsk, tsk," he clicks his tongue. "What a temper you have, little one."

"Don't 'little one' me... You... You wanker."

"Finally," his eyes gleam, "here kitty, kitty, show me your claws."

"I'll do better than that," I hiss, "I'll show you how it is to see the sun at night time."

I bring up my knee, aim for his groin.

Weston

What the hell? I know what she intends to do, a second before she moves. I step aside and her knee grazes the outside of my thigh. I release her shoulders only to grab the nape of her neck. "Stop that," I scold her, "or you'll hurt yourself."

"The only one who's gonna be hurt here, buster, is you." She swings out with her fist.

As if this tiny thing could do anything to injure me? Oh wait, I'd done that on my own, when someone had run my car off the road a few days ago.

I angle my body, but I'm not fast enough. Her fist grazes my side; a burn of heat trickles down my spine. She didn't hurt me. Instead, my body is responding to her in a manner that leaves no doubt of the fact that certain parts of me would very much prefer to be in more intimate contact with her.

"Stop," I growl.

She makes a noise deep in her throat, "You uncouth, obnoxious, horrible, man." She swings with her other hand, the shot too wide to do any harm. But it causes her to lose her balance, and she topples over, crashing into me.

Softness, curves, the weight of her breasts, even through the layers she is wearing, is a thing of beauty against my chest. I release her nape, only to wrap my hand about her shoulders and haul her close.

"Let me go," she chokes.

"No." I say all casual-like, hoping she'll take the bait. Whaddya know? The little thing hits out with her fist again, this time catching me on the wrist of my injured hand. Pain flashes up my arm and sparks of brightness dot my vision. Shit, she hadn't been kidding about her threat.

I grit out the words through clenched teeth, "Stop it before I do something I regret."

"Ha," she scoffs. "I am not scared of bullies like you."

I draw in a deep breath. "Don't threaten me."

"Don't underestimate me." She raises her fists.

Ooh, I am so scared. I stifle the chuckle that crowds my throat. Max whines again, I glare at him from over her shoulder. He wags his tail, mouth open, tongue lolling. Of course, I could get my staff in the hospital to behave with that look, but it has little effect on the little rascal. I frown at Max. He pants back, then turns and runs off in the direction of the kitchen. That buys me, maybe, a minute before he'll be back. Best make full use of it. I train my glare on the handful of woman who glowers up at me. She barely comes to chest level... And that hair? Is she actually sporting streaks of purple? And there is so much of it... Her hair, I mean. It flows like spun gold around her shoulders, catching the light that filters in from the patio behind her.

"Hey," she snaps her fingers, "what are you staring at?"

"Your hair." I reach out with my bandaged hand to touch the shining strands. I bring it up to my nose and sniff it.

She stiffens. "What are you doing?"

"What's that smell?"

"What?" She tips up her perky little nose, sniffs the air.

"That." I grasp a handful of her hair, bury my nose in it, and draw in a deep breath. "Vanilla, sugar, apples...butter." The mix of scents go straight to my head. "Why the hell do you smell of dessert?" I frown.

"Ah, maybe because I'm a pastry chef?" She scowls. "What the hell do you think you're doing anyway?"

"Speaking of." I let the hair slide out from between my fingers-...Why do I miss its softness already? "I'm not letting you stay here. You do realize that?"

"What?" She blinks. "What did you say?"

"I was here first."

"Excuse me?"

The light in her blue eyes intensifies and little creases appear on her forehead. Oh, this is going to be good. "Here, at the cabin." I smirk. "I am staying here until New Year's."

"I'm staying here until New Year's," she says through clenched teeth.

"Nope," I emphasize the word with a popping sound, and practically see the smoke pour out of her tiny ears. Beautiful, shell shaped ears, that I'd like to curl my tongue around, suck on those pretty earlobes before easing it into that hole. My groin hardens. Hell... there are other parts of her which I'd like to push into as well... Lick her up, suck on the melting flesh between her thighs, nip on her lower lips, before I thrust my tongue inside her soaking channel and bring her to the edge.

"I am too." She props her hands on her hips, her curvy, deliciously rounded hips, which is one of the first things I'd noticed about her too. She's so different from the women I normally encounter... Hell, she's not my type at all. Soft, sassy, perfectly shaped for my hands. My fingers tingle. I will not touch her, will not. I tilt my head. "From where I am, you are...on your way out."

"What?" She blinks. "I am standing right here."

"That can be easily changed."

I take a step forward, and honestly, I'd totally expected her to retreat. To shuffle back, maybe even turn and run out of the house... I should have known better, after how she'd threatened me with that spatula earlier, for she doesn't move. She stands her ground, so my feet bump hers. I lean into her; she tips her chin up.

I lower my face toward hers, closer, closer. "You can't win this, Buttercup."

"Buttercup?" She scrunches up her forehead. "Why the hell are you calling me after the Princess Bride?"

"It was after a Powerpuff Girl, actually," I chuckle.

"Powerpuff?" She grimaces.

I nod, "You're small, annoying, and too headstrong for your own good."

"How do you even know about those cartoons?"

"I may have watched them with my little niece."

"Awww." Her gaze widens; her eyes go all sparkly as fuck. Ah, hell!

My neck heats. "Don't make it out to be anything more than what it is," I grunt.

"Which is?"

"That I babysit on occasion," I mutter.

"You also babysit?" Her features take on the expression I have seen on the faces of the women who have fallen for some of my friends. Specifically, Jace, Sinner and that mofo Saint. All of them ended up married, and shackled, and buying townhouses, and planning extended honeymoons, and baby showers... Argh! A shiver of trepidation runs up my spine. Shit, no, no, no, I am not going there. These kinds of entanglements, and all the bloody relationship fuck-ups that come with it? Not for me. So not my tumbler of whiskey—you didn't think I'd say cup of tea, now, would you?

Besides, what the hell am I doing, sharing that piece of information about myself? She'd gotten past my guard, obviously. It's the only reason I'd let that slip. More to the point, why the hell are we still talking, here in the house I co-own?

The hair on my nape prickles.

"How the hell did you get here?" I frown.

"I drove, of course." She sniffs, "What about you?"

"I was driven here by my chauffeur," I grumble.

"That's why there's no car parked outside." She nods. "How do you plan to get around for the time you are here?"

"I don't."

"Guess you can't drive with that finger, huh?"

"I can bloody drive, if I want." I scowl, "I choose not to; besides, every time I want to head out, I'll message my driver."

She opens and shuts her mouth, "Let me get this right. Every time you want to go out, you'll message your chauffeur who'll come in from where? London?"

I glare at her, "Don't be daft. He's staying in the nearest town. It takes him, maybe, 45 minutes to get here."

"To take you back into the village, and return."

"Umm, yeah." I raise my shoulders, "That's why he's called a driver. He drives me around," I snicker.

"I could do that."

"What?"

"Drive you around."

"Why should I want that?"

"Since we are going to be sharing this house—"

"Nope, we're not. I own this place with the rest of the Seven."

"Saint offered it to me for the duration of the holidays." She scowls, "Pretty sure he loaned the space to me first."

"I am one of the Seven. I take precedence," I declare.

She gapes at me and... Damn... Every time she opens her mouth, I want to shut her up with my tongue, or other parts of me that would very happily nestle into that warmth. Why the fuck does she turn me on, when she's the type of complication I can do without?

"Out," I snarl.

"What the hell is wrong with you?" She sniffs, "Why can't we work this out like adults?"

"Like adults, huh?" I smirk. "Trust me, the kind of things I want to do with you right now would definitely be classified as 'adult.'"

She reddens. "Can't you speak a sentence without coming across all lecherous?"

"I haven't even started," I smirk, "and PS, it's you who can't take a hint. Do you want me to spell it out for you?"

"You're a jerk, you know that?"

I yawn. "Get out of the house or I'll throw you out bodily."

"You wouldn't."

"Try me."

She raises her fist and I move. I grab her around the waist, haul her over my shoulder.

She yelps, "Let go of me, you oaf."

"You sure about that, Buttercup?"

"Stop calling me that."

"Not gonna oblige you. Next?"

She makes a huffing sound and the warmth of her breath sears my back. She wriggles her body, tries to scramble off. I place my arm across the back of her thighs.

She brings her fists down on my back, rains blows. How cute. As if that's gonna make a difference. From where I am, it's more like a massage. Don't tell her that, though. I stalk forward, and Max chooses that time to dart out.

Blame it on the fact I was distracted by her wriggling arse positioned so close to my face. Or the fact that I was having too much fun. Or that a part of me was bloody angry with that turd Saint, for having put me in this situation.

Clearly, he'd double booked me and this little puff pastry of a woman... whatever the fuck he'd been thinking, he is mistaken. I have no interest in her; none whatsoever... especially when she's proving to be such a distraction that I barely manage to sidestep Max.

My bare feet slip from under me. The world tilts.

The woman across my shoulder shrieks. I tighten my grip on her, as the ceiling recedes further. I manage to find my balance, lurch back a couple of steps, through the door. I must have spilled something earlier. My legs slip out from under me a second time.

I arc back through the air...and still holding her, hit the hot tub and tumble into the water.

"Woman," I growl, "you're going to rupture my eardrums."

"I'll do more than that, you...you horrible man. You...you Fruit Salad."

I blink, "Did you compare me to a dessert?"

"I'm not done you...you Carrot Cake." She rears up so quickly, I loosen my grip. She pulls away, and over...smashes straight into my injured finger. Bright lights flash behind my eyes... Jesus F... She hadn't been kidding when she'd said she'd show me the sun in the night time... Hold on. What the hell am I thinking? My brain seems to freeze, then pain ratchets up my spine, through my skull... A growl rips from me, "The hell are you doing?"

"You started this." She lurches up to her feet, stands over me, with my torso in between her legs.

Her wet blouse stretches across her chest, highlighting every gorgeous curve of that magnificent bust.

My cock twitches; my mouth dries. I can only stare at the nipples that salute me, the water that drips down the fabric outlining her flat stomach, the indentation of her bellybutton, down to the valley between her thighs, where her jeans have ridden up to kiss the cleft between her lower lips. What I wouldn't give to be able to place my lips there... I swallow. My dick lengthens.

Shit, bet if she looks down, she'll see exactly which parts of me are excited by this little rough play... Which it isn't... Foreplay, that is. It is an accident, that's all.

"Why the hell couldn't you watch where you were going?" She glowers.

"Me...?" I scowl. "I am as steady on my feet as I am with my fingers... Speaking of," I raise my throbbing hand, and glare at the offending digit, "You probably fractured it again, thanks to your clumsiness."

"It was already broken, you idiot."

"Heard about multiple fractures?" I growl. "And don't call me an idiot."

"Oh, pfft. I'll call you anything I want, you reprobate."

"Mind your tongue, Buttercup."

"Oh, stuff it." She swings one leg over. "And for the record, I'm the one who's staying, not you."

"Oh, no, you're not." I grab for her leg. She squeaks, evades me and jumps up and out of the tub. There's a howl... "Max." I turn to find her squatting down. She rubs the puppy's head. "Oooh, little fellow, did I hurt you? I didn't, did I?" Max whines again.

"Oh, I'm sorry, I'm sorry," she coos, makes kissing noises at the mutt, who whines. No wonder he's making the most of having her attention.

She plops onto her butt, cross-legged, pulls the puppy into her lap. The dog, lifts his head, licks her face, her mouth. Hmm. He whines again, she strokes him, and lifts him to her chest. The little bugger cuddles against her breasts. What the—? I glower. How does he get to do that and not me? Wait, hold on? Am I seriously jealous of a canine? I shake my head.

"Enough of this nonsense," my voice rings around the space.

The puppy shivers, snuggles his body tighter against her chest.

"Put him aside," I scowl.

She peers up at me, "Shh."

"What?"

"You're scaring the baby," she admonishes me.

"Baby?" I growl.

Max moans... No, really. That dog has definitely been taking acting classes, for he bleats out another piteous little whine that has her cuddling him, rocking him side to side. "There, there, little fella. Did Daddy's heavy voice make your heart go pitter-patter?" She lifts him up, and the dog plays along. He licks her lips...right on the mouth.

"Hey!" I growl.

I push up to standing in the hot tub, water flowing from me like I turned on the shower. The water splashes out onto the dog and the woman, who bows her head to shield him. "Stop that, you're making him wet." She huffs.

"Oh, yeah?" I scowl down at her bent head, the way she croons to the pet, hair flowing in a blonde waterfall about her shoulders, her dripping clothes that outline the curve of her shoulder...and that... The sight of the perfectly turned swell of a what should not be a seductive part of anyone's body... But on Buttercup... It's a bloody turn on. The blood rushes to my groin and my head spins. Must be the fact that I hit my hand. That's why I am feeling lightheaded. No other reason. It's why I step up and out of the sunken hot tub, to loom over her.

More water pours over her, drenching both woman and dog. He yelps, cowers into her further.

"What are you doing?" She tries to protect him with her body. "You're an insensitive dog parent."

"I'm not a parent, this is not a child, and you...are completely insane."

She peers up at me, from under her spiky eyelashes. Her gaze runs up my thighs, my crotch, getting an eyeful of my rather spectacular appendage—yeah, I'm well hung, deal with it—up my impressive eight pack—it is eight, I know, I've seen myself in the mirror—to my mouth. She gulps; her cheeks turn a fiery red. "You... you..." She swallows, "Why are you flashing the little mite?" She props her palm over Max's eyes. "You could have stunted his growth, with that exhibition," she huffs. "I mean just because you are ... Uh, massive... You don't need to go around shocking little doggies with your penchant for running around naked."

And that's when something inside of me snaps. My vision tunnels and the blood thunders at my temples—anger...and frustration...and jealousy... Yeah, bloody hell, I am living with rage that she's giving all of her attention to that...that... Usurper... I am going to teach her a lesson about ignoring me—one she won't forget in a hurry. I bend over, grab the nape of her neck with my unhurt hand, and haul her up to her feet, with just enough force for her gaze to widen.

"What did you say?"

"Th...that you're scaring him."

"After that."

"That you're running around naked."

"Before that."

She blinks rapidly, the dog wriggles in her hold. "M...max," she stutters.

I click my tongue, "Not the word that you are looking for."

"M...massive?" she wheezes.

"You noticed, huh?"

"Kinda....h...hard not to..." she swallows, tips up her chin, "considering..."

"Considering." I drop my head, thrust my face into hers. "Considering?" I lower my voice. "Complete the sentence, Buttercup."

She gulps, "Considering you've been waving that in my face since—"

I lower my head, close my mouth over hers.

Amelie

Finally, finally, finally he's kissing me... He's... Oh! Warmth, heat, the taste of him pours through my veins, fills my senses. Hot, lush, complex and fiery, notes of ginger, cardamom, bitter orange and sumptuous creamy champagne. Oh, my...he tastes like my very personal favorite dessert... If I had to bottle this taste, make it into a dessert, it would be called... Kinky Banana Split? No, Kinky Pavlova, maybe... Kinky Almond and Chocolate cookies with pomegranate seeds and a splash of brandy... Oh, my, my. I'd totally dive into that concoction headfirst; after I'd scooped up the cream from the dark surface, licked it up, and my fingers... Then rub the mixture all over that delicious torso, down to his impressive bon-bons and— Wait, did I just call his balls bon-bons? Does that make his very impressive dick a...rhubarb and chocolate cock pop?

A giggle boils up my throat. Above me, he freezes, leans back until his mouth is poised just above mine. "What's so funny?" he rasps.

"N...nothing." I'd lick his shaft like a penis cake—I choke.

"Are you laughing at me?"

"N...no," I gasp.

"What are you thinking?" He frowns down at me. An expression of genuine frustration on his face. My stomach flutters. Jesus, if that isn't the hottest thing I have seen... This alpha male, all flummoxed... Not to mention, still wet and naked, and holding my nape like I am a kitten.

Max whines in my arms. I glance down. "I think he's cold; I need to get him inside the house."

"He can wait."

"You'd allow a baby to freeze?" I scowl.

"He's a dog..."

"A pet."

"A mutt."

"A child." I frown.

"Fine."

"Fine what?"

"We'll take him to the other room, but first, 'fess up."

"What?" I blink rapidly.

"What made you chuckle earlier?"

"Nothing."

"It's something." He glares at me and a shiver runs down my spine.

"Maybe," I finally say.

"So, you were lying to me?"

"No," I stutter.

"I hate liars."

"Trust me, you don't want to hear this," I mumble.

"Trust me," he lowers his thick brows, "I do."

"You won't like it."

"Let me decide that."

Like hell, I will. I snicker to myself. If you think I am going to tell you my X-rated thoughts, you have another think coming.

"Fine," I grumble just as Max whines again, "Can I set him down first?"

He peers into my face, then nods.

"Let go of me," I demand.

"No."

I stare, "You serious?"

"Always."

Tell me about it. This grumpy-pants a-hole needs to be shown how to laugh a little more, in life.

"Fine," I mutter, then bend down. He bends with me, not taking his palm off of the nape of my neck. Don't look at his crotch, don't. I stare at his turgid cock that springs from a nest of dark hair as I lower myself, place the puppy on the ground. Max shoots off toward the kitchen.

He hauls me up. "Tell me now," he threatens, his voice hard.

"But... I need to go with him and—"

He glowers at me, and that familiar melting sensation crawls in my gut.

"P...penis-shaped cake," I blurt out.

"What?" His glare intensifies.

"It...it's a thing..." I assure him. "There's this town in Portugal where penis-shaped cakes are gifted to women as fertility charms." Not that I need any such help with this man. Just being this close to him is enough for me to get pregnant... Eeeugh! What am I thinking? I pull back, but his large hand on my nape tightens.

"And you know this, how?"

"It...it's ah, based on research I came across."

"Research, huh?" He bends his knees, so his face is more at eye-level with mine. "Why do I have this sneaking suspicion that is not true?"

"It is..." I lie, casting about in my head for something...anything to tell him. "Uh, I am writing a book."

"A book?"

"A cook...cookbook...for desserts that are aphrodisiacs..."

"And this... Uh, cock cake—" He frowns.

"A chocolate cock pop," I correct him.

"Chocolate cock pop...is an aphrodisiac, hmm?" His lips twitch.

"Don't mock it till you try it," I mumble.

"Hmm." He tilts his head, "You have a point there." He applies pressure on my neck—not enough to hurt, just sufficient for my knees to tremble.

"Wh...what are you doing?"

"What do you think?"

He peels back his lips and his teeth flash against his tanned skin. He eases me down and I drop to my knees.

Hell, he handles my body like I am made of room-temperature butter... Would he lick me like I am a toffee-topped crumpet too? That large rough tongue of his would lave my flesh, dig into the nooks and crannies of my sensitive core, strum on my pussy lips, nibble on my cream and sugar... No.. No... No. "No," I shake my head.

"Don't mock it till you try it," he growls.

I'm eye level with that part of him that has taunted me since I walked into this house. No, even before that... Since I first saw him, across a crowded room at my friend Summer's wedding, when he'd prowled toward the bar, leaned against the barrier, stance wide, reached for a tumbler for whiskey and

I'd seen the tendons of his throat stretch as he'd swallowed it down.

"Open," he growls.

I tip up my chin. "You're no dessert," I huff.

"No, I'm better."

He releases me, only to grab his dick and—what the—? I stare. I can't help it. I mean, I shouldn't. I should look away, spring to my feet and follow Max into the kitchen, then keep going until I reach my car and get out of here. I could do it, too. He's not holding me back. I should get away from him; away from this insane start to what was supposed to have been a quiet time, of reflection, and experimentation, of coming up with ideas for new desserts that I could use to differentiate my business from the rest... Which is exactly what I have been doing since I walked in here.

Hold on a second... Is being with him sparking off brainwaves of the culinary, and face it, the lustful kind? And hell, if the two don't go together. Desserts and orgasms, puddings and sex, cupcakes and clit stimulators...

Whoa. Hold on. Back up there. That idea I'd pulled out of my arse earlier, of writing a book about desserts that are stimulants... Well, it's not a bad idea at all... In fact, it could inspire an entire range of recipes...that I could use for my occasions-themed menu—valentines, anniversaries, birthdays, weddings... Hmm. I chew on my lower lip, watch as he squeezes himself from root to swollen head of his fat dick. My mouth waters and my belly clenches... Hell, what am I thinking? I'm not seriously considering...

He squeezes his cock, so it stands straight out, staring at me in the face, with precum oozing from the slit, and hell... I'm only a woman kneeling in front of a beautiful dick, wanting to lick it.

"Do it," he insists. "Open up, Buttercup."

"Did you just rhyme your words with my so-called pet name—?"

He shoves his dick in between my lips... He's not tender or gentle, by any means... He takes it like it's his right, to have his shaft in my mouth, filling me, bumping up over my tongue. "Swallow," he growls.

What the hell? How dare he think he can command me and I'll obey? How can he take me for granted...? Because I haven't left yet, have followed his directions so far, allowed him to maneuver me into this place of supplication, where I peer up at him, watch the sweat bead his forehead,

"Now." He glares at me, and heat flares in my belly; a shudder runs down my spine and my thighs spasm, I resist the urge to squeeze them together. I will not show him that his dominance is turning me on, that his complete arrogance in assuming I'll do what he asks is...a bloody turnoff.

"Amelie." His voice lowers to a hush.

So, he remembers my name, huh?

His jaw tics, "Take me down your throat."

And his tone brooks no argument. I tip my chin up, open my mouth further—wide enough for his cock to slip in, ease down my gullet. I cough and tears squeeze out of my eyes. I swallow and a groan rips out of him. His massive thighs on either side of my face ripple as if unseen currents grip him, the same ones that writhe down my legs, to my toes. My fingers tingle and my scalp itches. I raise my hands, grip the outside of each of his legs.

"Fuck," he rasps, "you have no idea what you're doing to me."

Oh, trust me, I do. Question is, why the hell am I still here?

"You want to leave?" His voice cuts through my mind. Huh? Has he been reading my thoughts? "Do you, Buttercup?" he asks.

Is it the fact that his nickname is growing on me—because it belonged to my childhood heroine...the one I'd wanted to be when I grew up? Or because the strain in his tone is evident? Because he doesn't touch me anywhere... Well, except for the most intimate part of him in one of my orifices. I swipe my tongue up the bottom of his cock over the throbbing vein, to the rim of his swollen head. I circle it, and another growl rips out of him. The heat pours off of him, and down on me. The strength of his dominance seems to grow, coiling around me, pinning me in place. Moisture pools between my thighs. Hell, what is he doing to me? What am I going to do to ensure that he doesn't take me for granted again? That he doesn't simply put me down as another of the women who've succumbed to his charms... Okay, so I am as guilty, but hell, if I am going to walk away from this encounter without making an impression. Yeah, did I mention I am bloody competitive by nature? It's been my downfall... The reason I'm here, about to spend Christmas on my own... I should take him up on the out he's extended to me and scam... I should.

"You scared you won't be able to finish what you started?"

He snickers. The bastard snickers—with his dick in my mouth. Sheesh, men! They can be so naïve. So full of their own ego, they can't see the truth when it stares them in the face. That I am going to make him regret every little insult he's thrown my way since I walked in there.

"You make up your mind yet, Buttercup? Either get out so I can complete this on my own or—"

I cup his balls and squeeze.

His big body freezes. I bring up my other palm, begin to knead that gorgeous well-hung part of him. His dick thickens and the muscles under his belly coil, ripple like there's some kind of internal struggle that holds his guts hostage.

"Are you sure, you want to do this?" His voice is so low, so harsh, a tremor courses through my veins and my toes curl. I lean in just a millimeter more, enough for his shaft to slip further down my throat. A growl rips out of him, "Last chance, Amelie." His voice is strained.

I peer up into his features. His jaw tics; a vein pops at his temple. The pulse between my legs beats in tandem. I lean back on my haunches, so his shaft slides out to the edge of my mouth. Then wrap my lips around his head, squeeze his balls at the same time.

"Jesus, fuck," he swears.

A thrill runs down my spine.

I knead his balls and the muscles in his stomach jump.

"You've done it now." He digs the fingers of his uninjured hand into my hair, and tugs. Pinpricks of pleasure race across my scalp. "I am going to fuck your face."

Weston

The hell am I doing? I'd meant to haul her to her feet and throw her out of the house, so I could get on with the quiet time I'd hoped to have over the holidays. Instead, I can't stop myself from tugging down on her hair. She flinches, raises her head, and the sight of those pink lips wrapped around my cock—bloody fuck—lust spirals through my veins hot and hard. Fuck. "I am going to do this my way, Buttercup. You understand that, hmm?"

She stares up at me, pupils blown, the green of her irises a slim circle around the black. Bloody hell, she's aroused, and so hot. I ease her head forward, and my dick disappears inside her mouth. My vision narrows and my scalp tightens, "Bloody fuck, I can't stop." I tighten my fingers in her hair; she winces. Lust spirals down my spine. The thought of bringing her to the edge, of hurting her just enough to give her the kind of pain which will heighten her pleasure...hell. My breathing grows ragged and my chest heaves. "Nod if you understand," I snarl.

Her eyebrows knit and her tiny hands massage my balls.

Pinpricks of heat race up my back. "Amelie," I warn her.

Her gaze widens and her movements become more frantic.

She leans into me until her elbows are positioned on my thighs, her head tipped up, her entire body tiny enough to fit exactly between my legs. She releases me, only to whisper her fingers up the back of my butt, into the crease between my arse cheeks...and that's when I snap. I drag her back a few inches...enough for her to pull back her hand. She draws in a breath, her cheeks hollow, and fuck, if I don't feel the suction all the way to my head. This woman, where did she learn to blow me like this? If I give her free rein, she'll suck my brains through my dick. A chuckle flicks up my throat, and anger...a slow burn of an emotion that's very much like jealousy. What the —? Am I jealous of whoever she was with before me? I've never had a problem with that before. All of my partners have been seasoned, experienced enough... Jaded and cynical. Happy to fuck and walk away... And her... I am going to fuck her, all right... And then what? I'll have to let her go. My guts twist. Why the hell is that an issue? This entire encounter has had the touch of surreal to it from the moment I'd opened the door of the hot tub area and seen this pixie of a woman.

Fuck her mouth, show her I'll take no quarter, make sure she understands that all of those dreams she carries around in her head—babies and puppies and all things nice? That's not what she's going to get from me. What she can expect is a man who knows what he wants, who goes after it and claims it... who takes no prisoners, as I am about to show her. "I need to see you nod your assent," I reiterate.

She pauses...a beat, another, then she jerks her chin.

Thank fuck. I haul her forward and my dick slides down her throat. Hot, moist, so fucking good that I almost come on the spot. I bring my other hand to the base of my cock, squeeze it to stop myself. Then I begin to use her mouth. I pull her back and forward, and again. Each time, my cock slips in between her gorgeous lips. Once more and her teeth graze the skin of my shaft. Ripples of pleasure flood my skin, my balls harden, my groin tightens, and I can't remember the last time I came this close, this quickly. I haul her close; this time her lips fasten around the girth of my cock, and when I pull her back, she curls her tongue around my swollen head. Goosebumps pop on my skin, my thigh muscles bunch, and the tension in my belly grows, becomes enormous. Fuck. "I am going to come."

She stares up, holds my gaze.

"You're going to take all of me, you understand?"

She nods.

"Every single last drop."

She brings her hand back up to cup my balls again and I explode. Hot gusts of cum pour out of me, and she swallows, not breaking eye contact, and damn her, but it's the hottest, most erotic thing I have seen ever. Liquid spills down her chin, onto her top, but she doesn't pause. She continues to suck on me, swallowing until I swear there's nothing left in me to come. I step back; my cock drops from her lips with a wet plop. The hair on the back of my nape rises. I haul her to her feet, peer into her features. "You're something else, you know that?"

She opens her mouth, and damn her, but I don't want to hear her speak. No explanations. No need to dissect what just happened. So I do the only thing I can, considering the circumstances. I drop my head, place my lips over hers.

Mistake... Mistake... All of my senses jangle. A shudder of electricity screams up my spine and my dick instantly perks up... The fuck? I just came. It's a record, even for me. Why the hell is she having this effect on me? I pull back, but she rises on tip toe, throws her arms around me... Or as much of me as she can reach which, considering she comes to chest level, means she winds herself about my upper arms. She tilts her head, follows me. She parts her lips, swings her leg about my thigh. Only when my palm cups her butt, do I realize I've hoisted her up. She locks her ankles around my waist, licks my mouth. Heat flushes my cheeks; blood thunders at my temples. A growl rips from me, and I tighten my hold under her butt.

The scent of her, that sweet pastry essence, fills my senses, goes to my head. I can't stop myself; I kiss her back. Then yank her close enough for her breasts to flatten against my chest; for me to feel the hard buds of her nipples bite into my flesh.

A moan whines from her. She loops her fingers around my neck, digs her fingers into my hair and strains in my hold. Her melting core cocoons my hardness. My dick nestles against the crotch of her jeans, which I am happy to report is soaked right through. She wriggles around, trying to get closer. A chuckle rips from me. So impatient, this little thing is. I drag a hand up her spine, to lock my palm about her nape. She stills; a sigh trembles from her lips.

Hmm, she likes a firm hand, huh? Happy to oblige. I swipe my tongue over her teeth, down the seam of her lower lip. She groans; her body trembles. She pushes her core into my cock, which happily nestles into her. Fuck. This willing, quivering mass of woman is too enticing, too seductive... too much everything. If I continue to kiss her, I'll have to take her, and one time won't be enough. I'll have to fuck whatever it is between us out of my system, which could take...days... Hell, weeks... Probably all of the time that I'd allowed myself here... And how is that going to work out, hmm?

I lessen the intensity of the kiss. She whines, coils herself into me, as if she wants to crawl under my skin... Fuck, if she hasn't already, in some way. Which is not too bad, hmm? What the—what am I thinking? I don't want a woman in my life. Not now. Not when I'm trying to heal myself. I need to rest up, ensure my mind and body are rested and ready to go. It is my career at stake, if I don't mend. As a surgeon, the operations I perform demand that my faculties be more than a 100% when I perform procedures. It's the one thing that makes my life worthwhile—being able to save others. Perhaps because when I am in surgery, I am in control. It is in my hands to take charge, to see the operation through, ensure I do my best, snatch people back from the jaws of death and restore them back to their lives.

Something I could only hope for during the time I had been kidnapped and held hostage. Is that why I like to play God? Or as close to it as it gets, when I hold someone's heart in my palms...like she held my balls in hers. Her touch, her kisses, the flow of her hair about her shoulders, the pulse of her blood at the base of her neck, at her chest, between her thighs... Why do I want to acquaint myself with every goddam nook and crevasse of her body? I tear my mouth from hers.

Her chin wobbles, she blinks, and a whine spills from her lips. "Weston," she mumbles.

My name from her mouth, her tongue drawing out the vowels, her every part reaching, aching, wanting me... Fuck... I can't do this. Can't allow myself to feel whatever it is that connects us. I am not ready for this... Will never be ready for whatever it is that she wants from me—the kind of commitment not spoken, but voiced with her actions, her reactions to me, since she had entered.

"Weston?" She peers up at me, "Hey..." She cups my cheek, and her touch sinks into my blood. My pulse rate ratchets up and my cock—that needy part of me—instantly stands to attention. Fucking fuck, I gotta get out of here. Max chooses that moment to come tearing back into the space. Thank fuck. He parks his little body next to my leg, then paws at my ankle.

"The puppy," I say, "he needs to be fed."

She swallows; the brightness dulls in her eyes. My heart stutters. It fucking stutters at that. Why the hell is she affecting me like this? I can't let her get to me. Not now. Not ever.

"So you know, I am not sorry."

"Huh?" Her eyebrows knit, "What are you talking about—?" Her gaze widens as I grip her under her armpits and hold her away from my body. The cold instantly infiltrates my chest. Fuck... Now I am getting melodramatic, or perhaps, I've simply been standing around without clothes for too long.

"Don't you dare, Wes—"

I release her.

She plops into the hot tub and water splashes over the sides.

"You asshole," she splutters. "How dare you?"

"Oh, I dare, alright. In fact, I'm just getting started. I am taking over the house for the holidays. You'll have to find yourself other accommodations."

"Weston— You motherfucker," her screech follows me. "Come back right now, or else..."

I pause, glance at her over my shoulder, "Or else?"

"Or else...you'll never find out about the proposal I have in mind for you."

Amelie

"Proposal, huh?" He arches an eyebrow.

"Yeah." I nod. What the hell am I doing? And after I'd blown him... Willingly, I might add... What the hell was that all about?

Not that I have anything against giving a blowjob, but honestly, it's not something I've done before with a man I don't know well... And that is the problem. With Weston, there had been this instant reaction to him, from the time I'd first seen him. I'd wanted to slap that smirk off his face, then hit him in the dick, right before I pulled him close and smooched the hell out of him. Shit, this...push-pull reaction I am having to him is insane. From the time he'd walked through the patio door, he'd been mean to me. He'd been pushing my buttons, all right, trying to get a reaction out of me. And you know what? I am not going to let him win this David and Goliath game we have going on here. I'd been promised I could have this space over the holidays and I intend to make sure I do.

If it means sharing with this a-hole of a man... This hot and sexy, ripped, 100% macho maleness of a billionaire, doctor... Gulp. Then so be it. I am not going to let him crowd me into corner, or overpower me with his status.... Okay, so maybe I am a little overwhelmed by his uh, larger than life assets... but come on, who wouldn't be? And that kiss at the end? When I'd flung myself at him...because, well, I am a slut... Fine, fine, so berate me, but I swear, there had been something about the power I'd been able to wield over him, when I had taken him in my mouth, and his body had responded to mine.

Whatever his issues with me... Physically, the signals he's been broadcasting are clear—he wants me. And let me tell you, there's something very satisfying in that, in knowing that this powerful man is helpless in the face of whatever it is that our bodies are communicating with each other. And face it...sharing a space with him would be no...hardship... Except for that horrible attitude of his, of course. I'm willing to give him a chance though... Who wouldn't? Not when he'd kissed me back... He had. He had pulled me to him, closed that big sexy mouth of his over mine and kissed the hell out of me... Enough for my knees to go weak, for my pussy to clench, and my panties to dampen all over again, like I'd just run into the Thames. Okay, so maybe not the last comparison, considering the Thames is grimy as hell, but you get what I mean, huh?

"I... I am not leaving," I say.

"Yes, you are," he reiterates.

"Nope."

"Yes."

He leans a hip against the door, and damn him, couldn't he have, at least, put on some clothes? I mean, this entire encounter? He's been butt-naked, and it's a mighty fine butt, and massively corded thighs, and that eight pack...and... Hell, not going down that path right now.

"You'll want me to stay, I promise you."

"Huh?" He folds his arms over his chest. Those biceps bulge, his shoulders fill the doorway, and it's not because its narrow. The entrance, I mean.

"I'll be your housekeeper—cook your food, clean..." I wave a hand in the air, "Considering you're laid up with that...uh, injury, you'll need someone to take care of your needs."

"Needs, huh?"

Shit, I hadn't meant to word it that way, but whatever, at least he's listening to me.

"You bet." I swing one leg up over the lip of the hot tub, then scramble up and straighten. "You hadn't thought about how you were going to manage over the holidays without being able to use your hand."

"Hmm." He raises his injured palm, then scratches at his jaw. "You offering to help?"

"Do you want me to help?"

"You want to keep house for me?" He smirks.

I frown. Asshole, of course he'd twist my words around to suit his needs.

"I'd cook and clean the house..." I mutter, " You'd have to pick up after yourself. I am not picking up your dirty laundry."

"What else?"

"What do you mean?" I frown.

"What else can you do for me?" he drawls.

"I could...uh, drive you around, like I already said."

"And?" His lips curl and his eyes gleam.

Oh, no, no, he's not getting at that. "Whatever it is you're thinking, you can forget about it," I huff.

"How do you know what I am thinking?"

"A man like you has only one thing on your mind."

"As opposed to a woman like you?"

"I'm not the one walking around naked."

"Does it bother you?"

"Of course, it bothers me." I swipe my hair over my shoulders. "How would it feel if I were to walk around without clothes?"

"Are you offering?" He smirks.

I throw up my hands, "Oh, forget I said anything. Clearly, this entire discussion is going nowhere... Meanwhile—" A whine sounds from beyond him, "Don't keep Max waiting. Feed the poor thing, will you?"

He scowls, "Don't tell me what to do."

"Oh, my God." I plant my hands on my hips, grimace when that dislodges more water from my clothes. "You're bloody impossible."

"And you're staying out here."

He walks inside, slams the door behind him. The hell? I race forward, try the door. It's locked. Of course, it is. I bang on it. "Weston, you asshole, let me in."

No answer, not that I expected one... But how dare he simply...lock me out? I kick at the door. Pain shoots up my leg. I groan, then glance around the patio. There are heaters out here around the hot tub, so I'm not cold. The wind blows, and I shiver... Okay, scratch that. I won't freeze, but damn, if I am standing around here waiting for that bastard to come back and get me.

I stalk past the tub, jump down onto the grass. I walk around the side. Ha, he's going to keep me out the house, is he? Not if I can help it. I break into a sprint, jog up the field surrounding the house, around to the front. Reaching the door, I find it...closed. Bugger. I try the door handle, and it's locked. I throw up my fists, ready to punch my way through...? As if that would help... Think... Think... What can I do...? I walk down the steps, get back into the car...search for my phone. Shit. My handbag—I left it inside the bloody house, along with my chef's satchel. Argh!

I slam my palm on the steering wheel, and the horn blares. Hell. I press down on the horn a little longer. I'd left the keys in the ignition... So, at least, I am mobile, but without my phone and my wallet... Hell, even if I went out into the village... which is a 45-minute drive away, I couldn't do much. Damn it, I can't even call anyone for help.

Ugh! I grip the steering wheel, take a deep breath, then another. Don't lose it. You can think it through. He isn't going to leave me out... Nah! He wouldn't...would he? Damn it. It would be just like that reprobate who has chocolate tarts for brains to do something exactly so...assholish. Argh! Anger ladders up my spine. I swipe my wet hair out of my eyes... Great. Here I am, soaking wet, with no dry clothes in sight... Uhm, no, I do have my suitcase where I left it outside. There's a distinct boom, then drops of water drizzle down. Shit. That doesn't help. No way am I going to get soaked all over again. I snatch up the keys, step out of the car and lock it. Then run over to my suitcase... I drag it up the steps to the front entryway, and place it against the wall.

Then retrace my path down the steps, then around to the back porch.

The wind blows. I shiver and step closer to the warmth emanating from the tub. Hmm. Should I? I glance around for the controls, spot a switch. When I throw it, the bubbles begin to churn in the tub. I dip my hand, and yep, the water's warm. I turn the dial further toward the red. With the rain smattering outside and the floor patio heaters going full force... Well, it is not too bad. But that doesn't get me inside the cabin. I hear scratching at the door—Max trying to get out again.

Okay, I'm not going to stand around here, as if waiting for him... I am going to... I grab the hem of my blouse, pull it off. I hear Weston talking to Max, then the sound of the door being unlocked. I strip out of my jeans. The door begins to open. I race toward the tub, jump inside, unhooking my bra at the same time.

Weston

What the—? What the hell is she up to now?

I walk out of the door and onto the patio in time to watch her sink into the hot tub. There's a flash of pink, then she holds up her bra... something slinky and made of scraps of nylon. My jaw drops and my belly hardens. She can't be doing what I think she is. She can't be undressed...and turning the tables on me...can she?

I'd fed the mutt...then proceeded to take a cold shower...before pulling out clothes. When I could delay no longer, I'd walked out. Okay, also because I was curious. The last thing I'd expected was for her to reverse engineer the scene I'd played out for her earlier.

I stalk forward and my foot brushes something wet. I glance down to find her abandoned blouse...then her jeans... I follow a trail of clothes strewn across the patio that leads me to stand over her.

"What are you up to?"

"What do you think?" She tosses her bra at me and I catch it. Damn her, but I want to smell it. Would it have her scent...of sugar and spices and everything nice? Argh! I really have to stop reading to Birdie, my niece. Now I am thinking in nursery rhymes? Or is it simply her nearness going to my head?

She scoops up some of the hot water, pours it over her shoulders. The bubbles cover her up to the swell of her breasts, but she's naked below it... Is she? Did she take off her panties? I glance around, can't see the abandoned lingerie...so she must have it on... Would the cloth be transparent enough for me to see through it to that melting center of her, that I desperately want to get my hands on? My cock throbs and blood thunders at my temples. "Get out of there."

"No."

"If you don't step out..."

"What? You'll step in?"

Oh, I'm tempted to, but considering I spent the last few hours in there already, I'll pass. Doesn't mean I am going to let her get away with this little tease-filled antic, either.

I toss her bra aside then reach over to grab her shoulder. She twists her body and water splashes onto my shirt. "Oops." She giggles in a voice that seems to imply she's not sorry at all.

"Why you little—" I scowl, then straighten. "Stand up," I snarl.

"Make me."

"You don't want me coming in there. Trust me."

"Oh?" She tilts her head, "We'll see, shall we?" She slaps the water; more of it splashes onto me. What the—? I fold my arms over my chest, lower my voice to a hush, "Up." I growl.

She swallows.

"Do it."

"You sure?" she asks.

"I won't repeat myself."

"Fine." She juts out her chin.

"Fine?" I frown. Why is she agreeing so readily? She's up to no good, for sure, she— She rises to her feet. Water pours from her slim frame down the jut of her hips, in between her legs...and fuck, I was wrong. She doesn't have her panties on.

The water slides down her flat stomach, down to the triangle between her legs. And I can only watch as a drop clings to her pussy lips, begging me to go closer, closer. My knees bump into the side of the hot water tub. I blink.

"My face is up here," she drawls.

I can't stop the chuckle that rumbles up my throat. "Very good." I tilt my head. "Clearly, you've been paying attention to our conversation, and PS," I make air quotes with my fingers, "you ain't got nothin' that I haven't seen already."

She blinks, then gapes at me, "I was wrong about you."

"Oh?"

"You're not just an asshole, but a bloody, egoistical brute with no manners."

A grin threatens to split my face. I swallow it with a cough. "I'll give you one thing though; you got my attention."

"Hallelujah." She raises her arms skyward and tilts her head back. Her tits jiggle with the action. My cock instantly springs to attention. Fuck. It's not like I haven't seen better-looking women—certainly, those with bigger tits, slimmer waists...curvier hips... But the complete package of the woman who stands knee-deep in bubbles, with her hair sticking to her forehead...the flushed cheeks, the pink lips... Yeah, the ones between her legs as well... All of it comes together in an amalgamation that is uniquely her... Something I want to get to know better... To own and to understand, to pull apart and piece together until she makes more sense... Until I get her out of my system, that's all. Perhaps that's reason to keep her around a little longer?

I jerk my chin, "Come on."

"Huh?" She frowns.

"Out of there. Chop, chop." I clap my hand. "You've got a lot of work to do."

Turning, I head for the doorway leading back to the house.

"Wait," she calls out.

I reach the door, step inside.

"Does this mean you accept my proposition?"

"It means," I turn to glance at her, "you'd better get inside before I change my mind."

She stares back, spine straight, shoulders hitched back. She props a hand on her hip, breasts thrust up, nipples pebbled— Hell, if she isn't as aroused as I am feeling. This is going to be interesting. I start to close the door. She springs into action, clambers over the side of the tub. "Wait," she screeches.

My lips twitch as I try to keep the smile off of my face. "You have one minute to get your arse in here," I drawl.

"Bastard," she huffs.

I yawn, "You're getting repetitive, Buttercup."

"Aargh." She makes a sound deep in her throat, "I hate that ridiculous name."

"Prefer Blossom? Or Bubbles, maybe?"

"No," she scoffs, "all three of the Powerpuff girls are dumb."

"Hey," I lower my chin, "you did not just say that."

"Yes, I did." She grabs her blouse, pulls it on and it falls to mid-thigh.

My gaze, of course, goes there, to the curved flesh that jiggles as she moves. The women I've dated before have been emaciated, by comparison. None of them had that lustrous skin that I itch to mark, the delicate turn of ankles that invites me to run my tongue up the hollow, scooping the water droplets that are sure to be nestled there, up her calf and her inner leg, to that object of my obsession—her beautiful gorgeous core. Fuck.

"Just for that, your first punishment is watching the cartoon characters on loop."

"Punishment?" She grabs her boots and her socks; one of her shoes slips from her hold and hits the ground. "Crummy apple crumble," she swears,

"Did you use a dessert as a swear word?" I chuckle.

She rescues her footwear. "You could help, instead of ogling my body," she grumbles.

"Oh, if I were ogling, you'd know it, sweet thing."

She straightens, her cheeks rosier than they had been a few moments ago, "You're a chauvinist."

"You're a submissive."

She stiffens, "How dare you say that?"

"You want to be taken without being given a choice. Somewhere deep inside, you want to be dominated. At your core, you prefer to have all options taken from you, so you can relax into your true self."

She scoffs, "The hell you mean?"

"Right now, as we speak, you want me to bend you over the nearest chair, then part your legs, strum your clit, finger your pussy and make you come, right before I sink my hard, throbbing...aching...length into your melting center."

She draws in a breath, stares at me. Even through the darkness, her blue irises shine... The light in my darkness, the silvery fucking lining to my black cloud of a bloody life... And I am waxing poetic, all right, and all because this woman here has crawled under my skin. I want to grab her and pull her close and kiss her... Right after I turn her over my lap and spank all that impudence out of her. Speaking of... "Okay, I'm shutting the door." I let the barrier swing.

"W-a-i-t!" She scampers forward, then slips through the crack between the door and the frame. The door snicks shut. Silence, a beat, then another.

This close, the scent of her—that vanilla and apples essence of her, laced with that sugary-tart sweetness that lingers on my tongue like a memory of that smell...when you go to the mall and you walk past the candy shop and smell the sugar? That smell intensifies. My mouth waters as my cock lengthens. I curl my fingers at my sides.

"Go on," I jerk my chin, temporarily capable of little more than monosyllabic words and spastic movements.

She scowls, "So you can stare at my arse?"

"If you'd rather ogle my butt instead..." I shrug, which has the added benefit of relieving some of the tension I'm feeling.

She snatches up her satchel, wears it across her chest, then bends to pick up her coat. Her toolkit jostles forward and smacks the back of her head. "Ow." She straightens, and her coat slips down to trail on the floor. "Shit," she swears aloud, "I am a mess."

"And I'd love to mess up my bed with you in it," I cough.

"What did you say?" she sputters as she scoops up her coat again.

"Just that you are pretty in your disarray."

She stares. "Somehow, I don't believe you."

"Somehow, I don't think I care."

"Is this some kind of NLP technique?" She frowns.

"No idea what you are talking about." I turn away.

"This entire mirroring my words thing you have happening."

"The only mirroring I want to do is of the 69 kind," I snicker.

"That's it," she snarls, "I've changed my mind."

"Hmm."

"I thought we could find a way to get through the holiday season, but clearly, if I spend any time with you, it's going to drive me insane."

"Goes both ways, sugar," I retort. The patter of paws on the wooden floor announces the arrival of Max. He jumps up, places his paws on my legs, as if he hasn't seen me in years, instead of minutes ago when I'd fed him. "Hey Buddy, whatcha doin', hmm?" I scratch at his head behind his ears and he makes a low, rumbling sound in his throat. He attempts to jump up again, but this time I oblige. I snatch him up, cuddle him, turn to watch her watching me.

I tilt my head, "What?"

"Every time I think you're a horrible monster, Max saves the day."

"Should I be thankful?" I smirk, digging my fingertips into Max's skin.

He makes a deep groaning sound.

"Did he just...?" She blinks.

"Max is every bit as expressive as you," I snicker.

"Thanks." She tosses her head, "Doesn't get you off the hook. I'm still leaving." She marches past me, snatches up her handbag from where she'd placed it on the bar counter.

She heads for the door, then pauses, to rifle around in her purse.

Wait for it.

Wait for it.

Wait for—

"You asshole." She turns on me.

"Alphahole." I correct her.

"You took my phone."

I lower Max to the floor and he darts off toward the kitchen. I follow him, shut the door that leads from the living room, then lean against it.

"You did, didn't you?" she grumbles.

"If you mean that piece of shit technology that went out of date..."

"Hey, don't insult Hedwig."

"Hedwig?"

"My phone, you idiot."

"Who gives a phone a name? Wait, you named your phone after the owl in Harry Potter?"

"Wow." She swallows, "You placed that?"

She stares at me, her gaze taking on that familiar googly-eyed look.

I hold my hands out in front of me. "Don't go reading anything into it. And for the record, owl post wouldn't work, in real life," I mutter.

"What do you mean?"

"It's a scientifically-proven fact that owls can't stay in flight while carrying packages."

"Just because it isn't supported by science, doesn't mean it doesn't work."

"What do you mean?" I frown.

"Magic, remember?"

"Which is what you believe in, of course? Stars and unicorns and all that girlie shit."

Her face heats, "You could do with believing in a little of that yourself."

"When you're kidnapped and starved for days, and tortured to within an inch of your life, you lose faith in all that stupid stuff very quickly," I snap.

Her features scrunch up, "I'm so sorry for what happened to you and the Seven."

"I'm not. If it weren't for that incident, I'd still be naive—"

"Like me, you mean?"

"You said it." I let my lips curl.

She frowns, "Why am I debating this with you?" She holds out her hand, "Give Hedwig back to me."

"Sorry, I can't."

"What do you mean?"

"I can't remember where I put it." I grimace.

"What?"

"If you find it, you can keep it." I raise my shoulders.

"He belonged to me in the first place."

"He..." I shake my head, "It...the phone's mine now."

"No, it's not."

"Alas, poor Hedwig, he's going to have to spend Christmas without you, I'm afraid."

Her features contort, and I am sure she's going to stamp her foot and rage, and have a full-on tantrum. This should be interesting. I head to the armchair by the fireplace, drop into it, then pick up my novel.

"The hell are you doing?" she squawks.

"Reading."

She makes a snarling sound at the back of her throat. I hear the thump of her toolkit satchel hitting the floor, then a softer crash—that's her handbag—followed by the soft sound of her wet clothes hitting the wooden floor. Good. Footsteps approach; the next second she grabs the book from my hand.

"Hey, you only had to ask."

"I did, for my phone. Remember?"

"I mean the book." I lean back in the chair, fold one leg over the other.

She peruses the cover of the book, then blinks. "Harry Potter? You're reading Harry Potter?"

She glances at me, with...stars in her eyes, once more.

Oh, no, no, damn it. "Why do you think I recognized your reference, which I can tell you, is way too obvious. You need to up your game, Buttercup."

Her features tighten.

Bloody fuck, I shouldn't have insulted her...but what the hell? I need to live up to my reputation as someone who doesn't give a damn about anyone else... Besides, that strange gooey expression of hers... It scares the shit out of me. Har, har. Ask me to perform a complicated bypass, I am there. Ask me to try to figure out why I have this strange push-pull reaction to her, and hell, if it doesn't flummox me. Time to set this right and lay down the rules. We'll see then, how she copes. Fuck that hint of hopefulness I've spotted on her face throughout the evening. It is time to show her what I am actually made of.

"Don't let the fact that I am reading the Potter fool you."

"God forbid," she mutters.

"It's only so I can keep up with my older niece."

"How many nieces do you have?"

"Two...and I am not answering any more questions."

"Like I care."

"I think you do, actually. And I have to warn you right now."

"What?"

"Don't fall in love with me, Buttercup. You'll only have your heart broken."

Amelie

My jaw drops. Again. The arrogance of the man. "I wouldn't fall for you, if you were the last man on earth.

"I'll hold you to that."

"What is that supposed to mean?" My heart begins to race.

"You know," he replies, his tone hard.

Sweat beads my palms, and it's not because the inside of the room is warmer than it was before... When had he lit the fireplace? Probably when I was outside. The light from the flames flickers over his face, throwing his features into relief, deepening the shadows under his cheekbones, hollowing out the spaces under his eyes. His dark hair appears almost blue, and those grey eyes seem almost colorless. Deep and fathomless. What would I find if I looked into those depths? A soul that would take, a male who'd possess, who'd pleasure me in the way no one else ever has. A dominant man who'd push aside all of my doubts and teach me how it is to be claimed. A shiver runs down my spine. Is that what I want? Is that why I haven't left? Hell, it could be just the two of us in this house—a faint scratching comes from the direction of the kitchen—and the puppy. Not another living soul for miles around; no business demands on either of us. He'd come to heal and I had come to find...something... That spark inside of me that had vanished...and which I had been hoping to recapture. That leap of faith that had pushed me to start my own business... That makes me take a step forward...close the distance between us.

He watches me as I move closer. He lowers his feet to the floor, parts his thighs. I step in between them. He tips his chin up. It feels...different this way. Me looking down on him. The angle intensifies that brooding edge that coils under the surface. I want to find out what makes him tick. Why he blows hot and cold; why he'd decided to spend the holidays alone...when he could have been with any woman... Instead, he's gotten me. I frown.

He shakes his head.

I scowl.

"You have no idea what you're letting yourself in for," he mutters, half to himself.

"And you do?"

"I've been around the block many more times than you."

"You sure?"

"Have you?" he shoots back.

"Maybe not as much as you," I concede, "but I've had my share of boyfriends."

"How many?"

"What's it to you?" I snap.

"If we're going to get through our time together, then there are some ground rules you need to follow."

"You?" I scowl.

He tilts his head.

"You meant we need to follow, surely?" I elaborate.

He stares at me with those almost-colorless eyes and another shiver of electricity runs up my spine. Shit, he doesn't even need to speak to me and I know what he means. Is it because I am that tuned into him? More likely, I know exactly the kind of obnoxious, merciless man he is. My toes curl. Why the hell does that turn me on? It shouldn't be so appealing. I shouldn't be this attracted to him... It's precisely the fact that he wouldn't care about my needs, that he'd simply take what he wants from me, that I find...refreshing. There would be no pretensions with this man. It would be all give... At least, there would be no surprises, huh? So, I won't be disappointed. Is that how low my expectations have fallen?

"You shouldn't overanalyze everything," he remarks.

"You shouldn't take everyone around you for granted."

"Now you're doing that NLP shit..." he points out.

I half laugh, "You going to explain exactly what this is about?"

"This?" He looks perplexed.

I point to the space between us, "This."

"Ah." He steeples his fingers together. "It's simple. I am willing to let you stay here for the holiday season."

I frown.

"But?"

"Did I say a 'but'?"

"There's always a 'but' with people like you."

"People like me?"

"Overindulgent, spoilt, rich pricks who think they own the world."

"That's because I do."

I snort; I can't help it. "Why am I not surprised that you said that?"

He raises his shoulders, "It's a fact."

"Whatever," I mutter.

"What was that?"

"I said, 'What-fucking-ever,'" I say, with more aggression than I am feeling.

"Hmm, you have spirit. That's good."

"Oh, stop talking in riddles."

"That's Saint," he chuckles.

"What?"

"Doesn't matter." He draws in a breath, then straightens his shoulders, "Enough beating around the bush. It's six days to Christmas. We spend it together. You do everything I ask of you in that time."

"What does that mean?" I stare.

"Exactly what it sounds like. Nothing hidden."

"Does it mean...uh...?"

"What?"

"You know."

"No, I don't." He smirks.

Oh, spit it out already, why the hell am I being coy? "Sexual favors," I burst out.

"Only if you want it to," he replies.

I blink. "You mean..."

He nods.

"So, if I decided I didn't want to blow you again..."

"You'd be missing out," he rolls his shoulders, "but your call."

"You sure?"

"Would I lie?"

"Wouldn't you?"

He grins. "I love this little sparring thing we have going on..."

I purse my lips together, "It's not 'little' anything."

"That's true," he chuckles.

"Oh, my God!" I throw up my hands. "We get on each other's nerves. That's all it is."

"Hmm," he scratches his jaw, "you may be right there. We'll have to tone it down though, when we're seen in public."

"Public?"

He nods, "I have to go to visit my family sometime before Christmas and you'll come along, of course."

I stare at him. Has he gone mad? Why is he jumping around topics like that? "Wh...what do you mean?"

"You'll come with me, as my date, to visit with my family in the lead up to Christmas." He speaks slower this time, as if I didn't understand him the first time around. I still don't.

"No, I won't."

"Yes, you will."

I blink. He's so bloody confident, it borders on delusional. I hadn't mistakenly agreed to this earlier, had I? No, of course not. "Why the hell would I do that?" I scoff.

"Because you wanted a place to spend the holiday season, and this is the only space available."

"No, it isn't." I shuffle my feet.

"Ever tried finding a place to stay over the holiday season? It's either sold out, or so expensive, it would be out of your price range."

"How do you know what my price range is?"

"Whatever it is, I can afford it." He smirks.

My jaw drops. Again. Shit, I've been doing a lot of that since I got here... But this...this...wanker... He's got his head up his arse. No doubt, he thinks the sun shines out of it too. I snicker.

He frowns. "Also, you can't do that while you are here," he drawls.

"What?"

"Think impertinent thoughts."

I blink, then laugh, "Man, you're something else, you know?"

"As you are going to find out."

I open and shut my mouth, I mean... Why am I standing here arguing with him? I should just march out of here, figure out alternate arrangements across the new year.

"Giving up so soon?" he drawls.

"What do you mean?"

"Guess you know that you can't last the next six days without falling for my charms."

"What charms?" I look him and down, "You're a douchebag, is all."

"Exactly what you find so attractive, hmm?"

"You have no idea what I like, or not."

"Oh, trust me," He sits forward in the chair, "I have a very good idea what you...want.... Question is," he lowers his voice to that hushed tone that sinks into my skin. My blood heats; moisture laces my core. How the hell does he draw that reaction from me without trying too hard?

"Do you, Buttercup?"

I swallow, "I have no idea what you're talking about."

"We'll have to work on that too."

"What?"

"This entire self-denial thing you have going on... It's cute..." he tilts his head, "but it can get wearying after a while, for both of us."

I stare, trying to keep pace with his thoughts.

"It is?"

He nods, "And we don't want that."

My head spins; my skin heats further. Why the hell is it so warm inside?

"I... I think I need to go."

I turn to leave, reach the door, when he calls out.

"A million pounds."

I pause, then turn, "Excuse me?"

He's standing in front of the chair. "You heard me." He props his palms on his hips. "I know how much in debt you are."

"My business is doing well." My heart begins to race; sweat dampens my palms. Dammit, why the hell does this guy make me nervous? "In fact, that's why I am here, to recuperate from the stress —"

"No doubt, caused by the college loans you carry. Not to mention, the ones you took out to finance your fledgling little business."

Argh, did he just call my thriving enterprise 'little,' which it is, but what the hell gives him the right to come across all condescending like that? "And you know all this...how?"

"Do you deny it?" he asks.

Do it. Don't give him the satisfaction of finding out how right he is. I open my mouth, shut it again. Damn it, but I can't tell a white lie. Not even to save my arse. Which might be more literal than I realize. A giggle bubbles up.

He frowns. "If you did make a success of your business—"

I open my mouth to protest.

He holds up his hand to stop me, "—which is dependent on your business acumen as much as on your ability to be a cook—"

"I'm a pastry chef, you knob."

"Cook." He closes the distance between us, "Even then, you'll be paying off your loans for the next twenty years."

My pulse rate ratchets up. Shit, those numbers... Not that I wasn't aware of them. I prefer not to think about it, that's all. I mean, sure, I could look on the negative and the fact that I'll be paying off the loans forever... But I've been confident I could turn the corner at some point. What's the other option? Not take risks, work a nine-to-five... Nothing wrong with that. It's not for me, that's all.

"So?" I sniff.

"So, you'll work back-breaking, long hours, behind a stove—"

"An oven, you prick."

"If you keep alluding to that part of me, I'll have to assume you've been thinking of it."

"No, I haven't."

He grins. Bastard. My cheeks heat. So, fine, I've been thinking about that particular attribute of his nonstop since I sucked on him, like my own private lollypop. Gah! So? Hey, it was a bloody good blowjob too, thank you very much.

"As I was saying," he drums his fingers on his chest, "you'll waste away your best years, working non-stop, trying to pay off the loans. Before you know it, you'll be forty and single, not having had the time to find a man—"

"I don't need one," I snarl.

He laughs, "Meanwhile, the debt is going to stop you from expanding your business further... And that, you do want, hmm?"

I scowl. He's got me there. I have plans. I want to grow my business to set up a store front... Then a chain, not only in England, but abroad. And while I'm sure I won't let debt stop me, not with the help of expert advice on how to structure my business holdings... Still, nothing like cash in hand to inspire confidence, especially from future creditors.

"One million, huh?"

His eyes gleam.

I frown. Damn it, have I walked into a trap? I shouldn't have shown interest in his offer, but I'm human, okay? I mean... No, I won't sell my principles for money... But this is an awful lot of money. Not something to sneer at, get me? Besides, what principles is he really trying to pay me to betray? It's not like he's offering to pay me for sex. I chew on my lower lip; his gaze drops there. The tendons of his throat move as he swallows. Huh? He's affected by me as well? I mean, I know he wants me... That entire blowjob thing between us... It had confirmed he wants to get in my pants... But this... His hooded eyelids, the way he watches me with single-minded focus... My scalp tingles. A bead of sweat trickles down my spine.

I clear my throat.

He jerks his chin up, "Per day."

"What the—?" I gape. "You didn't... Why would you—?" I rake my fingers through my hair. "This entire thing is bizarre."

"It's a little out of your comfort zone, I understand." He shoves his hand in the pocket of his jeans, "But opportunities like this don't come often."

"You're telling me," I laugh. The sound comes out weak. Shit, I sound uncertain. And I am not. Not about my answer... Just his intention. "Why?" I frown. "Why are you so keen on ensuring that I stay?"

"You said it." He tilts his head, "I am not much use with this—" He holds up his finger in the splint. "Until you pointed it out, I hadn't realized it." He nods.

Nice one. Blame it on me that he'd come up with this insane idea, huh.?

"You could get a housekeeper...or something."

"Not over the holiday season. Besides, why would I look for a stranger when I want you?"

"Umm, because you don't know me well either?"

His gaze drops to my mouth.

"That...that was a one off." I redden. "It doesn't mean you know me as a person."

He raises his shoulders, "You're a friend of Summer and Victoria's, women who are trusted by the Seven."

"Right," I draw in a breath.

"So?" He tilts his head.

"So?" I shuffle my weight from foot to foot. What do I say? I twist my fingers together. "One million for every day makes it..."

"Six million pounds." He nods.

"S... six?" I squeak.

"It'll set you up for any kind of expansion you want to finance for your business."

I narrow my gaze. How could he have intuited my plans? "How do you know that?"

"You're ambitious, I get it." He stares back, "Not that much of a stretch, to know that you'd be planning to grow your enterprise.

"Right." I scowl at him. "I guess that makes sense. I mean, you weren't stalking me or anything, before I came here to find out this information, were you? Although, it does beg the question, how did you know about my debt?"

He chuckles, "Don't flatter yourself, babe. We check into anyone who enters our orbit. Can't be too careful, you know?"

"Hmm." I fold my arms around my waist. "It's what Sinclair and then Saint did before they proposed to my friends," I say, referring to the now-husbands of Summer and Victoria, respectively.

His lips quirk, "You think that's what this is about? My sneaky way of trying to form some kind of fake marriage proposal with you?"

Hmm, when he puts it like that, it sounds pretty far-fetched, but still, "You did ask me to accompany you to see your family."

"Just a way to get them off my back," he grumbles. "You're going to be hanging about here. I may as well as put your time to good use."

"Jeez, you have a foolproof way of charming women," I mutter.

"Right?" His smile broadens and his features light up. He is taking the piss, isn't he? I mean, no one could mistake his attitude to be anything but self-satisfying, egoistical, narcissistic—gah—I'm running out of adjectives.

"Well then, you'd best get your luggage in..."

"Hold on, hold on." I blow out a breath, "Nothing's settled."

"Of course, it is."

Gah! I almost cross my eyes at the sheer lunacy of this situation. Six days with an egomaniac, who is going to make every moment a living hell. Would it be worth the money? Six million freakin' quid! Ohmigod! That's what's at stake here. How many zeros are there in that number anyway? I pout, "You sure...uh...this isn't another way to—"

"Get in your knickers?" He raises an eyebrow, scans my features. "Face it, Buttercup. If I wanted," his voice lowers to that seductive hush, "I could take you now, and you wouldn't say 'no.'" His lips curl in that hotter-than-bubbling-custard-sauce smirk. OMG, how could I compare him to one of the food dishes that I am famous for?

He closes the remaining distance between us and that scent of his—pine and cloves and an edgy depth that coils around me—pins me in place. I can't move, can't think, can only watch as he looks down on me from his superior height.

"N...no," I stutter.

He pauses inches in front of me, "Did I ask a question?" His lips twitch. What a stupid idea this was. Damn...but six million. Six freakin' million pounds. Hell, I'd do anything for that. Even put up with his alphaholiness for a limited period of time. I mean, this is only for a short period of time, right? It has an end, after all, this time with him.

"Fine," I mutter and my stomach flip-flops. Shit, what am I getting myself into?

"The arrangement is dependent on one thing."

Knew it. I scowl, "Now what?"

"You can't sleep with me during our time together."

I blink. "So, you'll pay me a million pounds a day, to be your glorified housekeeper, and sex is not part of the bargain?" I pause. "And if I sleep with you?"

"Then the deal is off."

Huh? I peruse his features. Is he for real? Is this...weird-ass bargain as good as it sounds?

"So..." I try to give voice to my thoughts, "Everything but sex?"

"Not gonna repeat myself." His lips quirk.

What's the catch, huh? What is it?

I stare at him; a low smoldering burn begins to curl in my belly, "So..." I gulp. "Wh...what's not off limits, then?" Why is my voice shaking?

"You sure you want to know?"

No.

No.

"Yes." I clear my throat, "I need to know before I sign on the dotted line,

right?"

"Hmm." His eyes gleam. He bends his knees, thrusts his face into mine, "What's not off limits includes, but is not limited to, squeezing, fondling, strumming, stuffing, kneading, massaging, pinching, spanking, hurting you, tying you up, making you scream, cry, beg, plead, howl—"

"Stop," I gasp.

He nods. "That's another thing you need to learn—to not tell me to stop when you don't mean it."

"Of course, I do."

His lips curl. He swoops out his hand to cup my pussy through the blouse that covers me to mid-thigh.

I squeak, grab at his wrist. He digs the heel of his palm into my core, and the strength of his touch, presses up through the soft fabric of my blouse into my clit. Sparks of heat, of lust, and streaks of emptiness slam into my gut. I shudder, "Oh, my God."

He rotates his palm in circles. Pinpricks of need swirl up my spine, my thighs spasm, my toes curl, my scalp tingles, and damn him, but he's barely touched me. How could my body betray me like this? Is this what I want?

He releases me, retracts his palm, and I jerk my pelvis forward. What the hell?

He tilts his head, brings his palm to his nose and sniffs, "That's what I thought. You are so aroused, if I had continued my ministrations, you'd have come."

"Not," I sniff.

"Fine then." He smirks, straightens, turns to leave.

"Stop," I burst out.

He keeps going. Asshole.

"Don't," I call out, then bite on the inside of my cheek. "Please," I mumble.

"What was that?" he asks.

"Please," I half snarl, "don't go."

He pauses, then shoots me a glance over his shoulders "Admit it first."

"What?"

"That you want me."

I swallow.

He glares at me.

All of my nerve endings pop; a delicious edge of anticipation crackles up my legs, my back. I nod.

"Say it." He lowers his chin, "Tell me you wanted me to caress your pussy, shove my fingers into your cunt, make you wet, drag the moisture around your slit, and bring you to the edge."

My breathing grows shallow and my chest heaves.

"Well?"

"Yes," I sputter. "Yes." Jesus, now I sound like I am about to orgasm and he isn't even touching me. And everything he'd said... It was filthy, and erotic, and no holds barred...and I want it. Gah! Maybe that last breakup had gone to my head? On the flip side, I haven't thought about my ex since I got here, huh? Perhaps that's what I need—a firm hand to keep me under control, a jerk-ass to occupy my thoughts and keep them off of my past, and his dick... Admit it. Since seeing that gorgeous cock... All you can think of is how it would feel inside of you—pulling, stretching, filling, bumping up against your innermost walls, driving you higher, higher. My knees seem to buckle. I push my heels into the floor to steady myself.

"You're right," I manage to force out the words. "What you said turned me on."

"That's a start." He draws himself up to his full height, walks back toward me. "Believe me, it's good for you to speak what's on your mind."

"Oh?"

"You have no idea what it does to keep your innermost desires bottled up inside."

"Is that your prognosis?" I mumble.

"That's my advice, as your doctor." His eyes gleam. "Don't hide your needs. Bring them out. Live them, revel in them. It's good for your mind, and of course, your heart." He leans forward places his palm over the skin above my left breast, "Let go of your inhibitions. Put yourself in my hands for this interval of time. I promise, I'll take care of you, Princess Buttercup."

I stare at him. He meets my gaze, unblinking. His features are composed, even sincere. And my soufflé rises every time I make it. Not.

I shuffle my feet. "Well..." I blink rapidly. It seems too good to be true. Is there a catch? There has to be a catch. An egomaniac like this wouldn't suggest this unless there was something in it to trip me up. But the money, OMG, what I couldn't do with it.

"You'll stick to your part of the bargain?" I scowl.

His eyes gleam. He holds out his hand, "You have my word."

I glance down at his palm, then back at his face, "Hmm."

"Go on," he cajoles, "I promise, I'll keep my end of the agreement."

"Will you?"

"Try me." His lips curl. Bastard. He's challenging me. Bet he thinks I'll turn tail and run out screaming about now. Which I should, but I won't. Because... Yeah I'm stubborn that way. I haven't come this far by backing down at the first sign of trouble, and no dominant, macho, sexy as fuck, obnoxious prat is going to deprive me of my much-needed holiday, not to mention the opportunity to get a head start on my career...my life. My bloody future beckons. All I have to do is embrace it.

"Fine." I place my hand in his.

His wide palm engulfs mine, warmth from his skin sizzles up my arm. Electricity zings up my spine. Whoa. The hell was that? I try to pull back my hand, he holds on.

"You good, Princess?"

No.

No.

"Of course," I stutter. "Why would you think otherwise?"

He surveys my features, "You seem pale."

My guts twist. Bloody hell, this is happening. This is really, really happening. My stomach flips and my heart thumps in my chest. Damn... What the hell am I doing?

"You not going to faint or anything, are you?" he asks.

I stiffen; my head instantly clears. "Of course not," I huff.

He nods, "Also...you're welcome."

I blink. No, no, don't react. Don't say anything to this obnoxious bonehead. He pauses a few inches from me. Sweat breaks out on my forehead. "For what?" I force out the words, knowing I shouldn't, but wanting to know what twisted notion his very clever mind has thought up.

"For accepting my invitation to the most exclusive private New Year's Eve party in London."

I open my mouth to refuse, but he shakes his head, "Think before you say anything. Trust me, you want to be there. The kind of contacts you'll make there will give you a lead over your nearest competitor."

I firm my lips together, mind racing.

"The list of guests is a who's who of the well-connected from around the world. It's perfect to build contacts, invaluable for a fledgling business like yours."

I peer into his face. Is he making fun of me? Trying to undermine my efforts as a business person? But his features take on a sincere expression. Hmph. Not that I am buying it, but he has a point. It won't hurt to be there. Invitations to those kinds of events...are like gold dust. Of course, I could work hard...but being at the right place, at the right time... Well, that's when things get interesting.

"I...guess...that makes sense," I venture.

He nods. "If we last until then." He smirks.

"Is that a challenge?"

"No, it's a fact. Do you think you can get through our time together without walking out in a huff?"

5 mins later

Weston

"OMG, you're such an ass."

She marches out of the house, slamming the door behind her. The crash reverberates through the living room. Max whines and runs to the exit. He scratches at the door, then barks and jumps up onto it.

"Hey buddy." I amble toward the puppy and scoop him up. He stares up at me with soulful eyes; a small whine catches in his throat.

"What?" I growl. "Why are you making those moony faces at me?"

What the—? Am I talking in some kind of puppy lingo with him? I mean, seriously. I scowl at him. "Don't go thinking you can soften my heart or anything." I frown.

He blinks at me.

I angle my head.

He tips up his head and licks my face, my mouth...

"Hey—" I arch my neck, but am no match for the little guy's persistent slobbering. A chuckle rumbles up my throat. Who'd have thought I'd be giving in to a mutt, of all things?

"You want me to go get her, huh?"

He licks his chops, and I swear, he jerks his little head.

"What the—?" I frown, "You can't understand me, can you?"

He pops his head on my shoulder, gazes at me with those soulful brown eyes, pleading, asking... Something hot stabs at my chest. That...is probably my ego having a cardiac. The fuck am I thinking? And I am supposed to be a heart surgeon. Duh. If anyone knows the ins and outs of that particular organ, it's me, and here I am, imagining all kinds of ridiculous things. Blame it on the pup. Blame it on that sassy, little Buttercup, who had taken one look at the bedroom...and the queen-sized bed in there, and had thrown up her hands in disgust. She'd marched right out—still holding onto her handbag and that infernal satchel-like bag over her back, and banged the door shut.

"It's not my fault. You know that, right?" I address the puppy. "She should have asked if there was a second bedroom. Hell, she could have asked to inspect the premises before agreeing." I frown. "Why hadn't she?" I muse. "Why had she agreed so easily to the arrangement? I mean, sure, six mil is a lot..." I glower at the little dog, who stares back, unblinking. Had I wanted her to turn it down? Show me that she was different from the other women I'd dated so far? And what? I'd expected her to throw it in my face and walk out? I raise my shoulders.

Well, my conscience is clear, at least. I am more than compensating her for her time... Which begs the question, "What the hell had I been thinking when I'd asked her to stay? And accompany me for the Christmas visit to my family...?" I ask the mutt. It had seemed like a brilliant idea—two birds, one stone, and all that. And the little fact that we'd have to share the bed? Hell, I hadn't thought of it until she'd walked into the room, but it's going to make things entertaining, for sure, huh?

The puppy yawns.

"Thanks." My lips twist. "You sure know how to handle me, little bugger, huh?"

He licks my mouth again.

I wince. "Okay, not sure how I feel about that."

He whines again, wriggles in my hold. I put him down and he runs to the exit. I follow him, shove open the door, and he races down the steps to the parked car. He leaps on the door. She opens it, careful not to hurt him... He jumps inside. Through the darkness, I make out the two of them in the front seat.

I watch for a second longer. Is she wearing her coat? I don't think she took it with her. So that means she is wearing that skimpy blouse...in the biting cold. At least, she had her boots back on.

I march inside, shrug into my coat, grab hers, then stalk to the car. I reach the passenger side, try the handle. it's unlocked. The hell? I slip inside, drop the coat on the space between the seats, "You forgot this." I glare at her.

She pales, holds the puppy closer.

Max snuggles into her breasts, and stares at me.

His expression implies he's got something I don't. I scowl at him and he pants, tongue lolling. Is the damn mutt laughing at me? And now I'm jealous of a bloody puppy? The hell? Do I still have my balls?

I glare at her profile. "Why didn't you lock the bloody door?" my voice booms out in the space.

Max whines.

She frowns. "Do you have a thing for scaring helpless puppies?"

"Not as much as for ensuring that sassy women don't get themselves kidnapped."

"Who's going to kidnap me here?" She waves a hand in the air.

"Things are not as safe as they seem."

She huffs, "You're acting too dramatic."

"No, that's you."

She strokes Max's head and addresses him, "What are you doing here?"

"If you're going to stay in the car, you may as well turn on the heater."

"It's my car—"

"No mistaking that." I glance around the cramped space. My knees are almost doubled up in front of me. I lean down, grab the lever to push the seat back.

"What are you doing—?"

The grip comes off in my hand. I stare at it.

"Yeah... I was going to warn you..." Her voice trails off.

"Does this thing even start up?" I reach for the car keys, but she grabs them first.

"Stop insulting KITT."

I stare. "You named your car after—"

"Knight Rider." She nods, then brightens. "You know about the series?"

"This isn't anything like that KITT," I growl.

"Shh," she pats the dash, "you'll upset her."

"Of course, your car had to be female." A headache begins to drum behind my eyes.

"Why not? KITT isn't the prerogative for a male name."

"What-fucking-ever." I massage my temples.

"You're a sore loser."

"The only thing getting sore here are my knees."

"I know you're getting along in your years...but maybe you need to get that looked at."

I scowl.

Her lips kick up and her entire face brightens. Damn, when she smiles, her features resemble those of an angel... No. What? Hello, bloody Christmas spirit must be getting to me.

"I'm not old."

"You're older than me."

"You're what, twenty-five?" I snicker.

"If you wanted to know my age, you only had to ask."

"Like I bloody care?"

She purses her lips, "Don't swear in front of the baby."

That's when something inside of me snaps. Of all the annoying, getting-on-my-nerve, blonde-haired bombshells in the world... This...tiny, pint-sized, sassy-as-fuck, with the sexiest tits-that-I-want-to-suck-on-like-cotton-candy woman walks into my house... Yeah, my place... Mine. Hold on. The fuck am I calling mine? Her? The cabin ... Yeah, that's what I'm referring to. That's all it is. It's not about her... Not at all. Naw. Hold on... Did I compare her breasts to a treat...? Cotton candy? What the fuck? I reach forward, grab her shoulder.

She squeaks.

Max growls in his throat.

I shoot him a dirty look. Fucker changed camps, deserted me so easily... Wait until he comes looking for treats. Guess who wears the pants around here, you mutt!

Max whines.

"Hey," she hunches her shoulders over the puppy, "back off, you big bully."

"Not happening." I firm my grip on her. She winces but doesn't back down. Hmm. This woman has a backbone, all right. I am going to take so much pleasure in breaking her down. "Get out of the car," I growl.

"No." She firms her lips.

"You have until I count to five."

"Whatever." She continues to pat the puppy's head.

"Four." I set my jaw.

"Count faster." She rubs behind Max's ears and the mutt makes a contented sound. Hell. How dare she ignore me...for a...a dog? She is fucking with my head, all right.

"Three." I lower my chin.

"Guess he knows his numbers, huh?" she sing-songs to the puppy.

My pulse begins to race.

"Two." I move in closer.

"I am soo scared," she simpers

Adrenaline spikes my blood. My pulse thuds at my temples, behind my eyelids, even in my fucking balls. "Don't say I didn't warn you," I lower my voice to a hush. She pales, a visible shudder running up her spine. Good.

"One." I apply just enough pressure so she turns to me.

"What are you doin—?" Her gaze widens.

I yank her toward me, puppy and all, lower my lips to her taunting mouth.

"I could give up chocolate, but I am not a quitter."

-From Amelie's diary

Amelie

Warmth, heat, the hardness of his chest digging into my breasts... But his lips...his lips... They're soft and coaxing...and completely not what I expected. Not after how he'd grasped my shoulder... Certainly not, after how he'd kissed me that first time...all demanding and dominating... Oh, he's still ruthless, hellbent on taking from me... But with his mouth, he seduces me. He nibbles on my lower lip and I part them. He swipes his tongue across the seam of my mouth, and a moan trembles up my throat. He releases my shoulder, only to cup my cheek. His warm breath mixes with mine and I draw of his in greedy gulps. I want to bottle that essence of his, roll around in it, absorb in it, bathe in it, let it tease my core, slink up my channel... Argh! Everything in me wants him to lick me down there with as much finesse as he's demonstrating with his very able mouth. "Wes," I hear myself plead with him... Did I say that aloud or was I simply thinking it in my mind? He tilts his head, easing his tongue over mine. A ripple of pleasure darts up my spine. All thoughts drain from my head. I move in closer, strain against his chest. Bring my arms around his—a whine cuts through the air.

I pull away, but he holds me in place. "Ignore him."

"But..."

"The pooch will survive."

"He's getting restless," I insist. "Did you take him out earlier?"

"Open the door and let him out."

"No." I stare at him. "Out here?"

"It's a gated property," he replies.

I turn down my lips and he glares at me. A frisson of something—nervousness, fear, something I can't quite identify—quivers in my stomach. I lick my lips and his gaze drops there. Those colorless eyes seem to turn into mirrors—cold, hard. He could cut me, and hurt me, rip me apart, and I'd enjoy it all. I gulp, the sound audible. He jerks his chin up, then draws in a breath. "Fuck," he growls, "you owe me."

"What—?"

He reaches across me and I shudder, then almost cry out when he straightens. He cuddles the puppy against his chest, "Stay," he growls.

Is he talking to me? Before I can respond, he's shoved open the door, and stalked toward the house. What the hell is he up to?

He pushes open the door, squats down to lower the puppy to the floor, then pats him. Even now, when he's angry with me, he can't resist making sure the puppy is comfortable, huh? The man may disagree, but it's clear to me that he has a soft spot for the pet... Which, surely, shows that he isn't all that alphasolish as he makes himself out to be, huh?

He rises to his feet.

Which doesn't mean I am going to stay out here and wait for him to come back. And what? Finish what he started? The way he'd kissed me earlier... Softly, gently, revealing that part of him I'd sensed under those layers of brutishness... If he did it again, I know I'd give in to him... And hell, if I am going to let that happen. At the very least, I am not going to give in to him that easily.

He turns.

I shove open my car door and race out.

"Hey," his voice follows me.

I pick up speed.

"Stop. Where are you going?"

Good question. If I'd wanted to get away, all I'd have had to do was turn the keys, start the car, and drive away; I'd have had to wait while the gates opened, but I'd have managed to leave. Which I hadn't.

And it's not like I can leave the property, considering I have no way of opening the gates now.

So, what is this? A dash for freedom, to show him that I don't mean to obey him? Do I want him to chase me? Either way, I'm not going to give in so easily.

"Amelie," his voice whips through the still night... My name from his lips...? Ohmigod! A thrill runs down my spine. Moisture laces my core. I increase my pace.

If he wants me, he has to come and get me.

I pound down the driveway.

"Princess." He's so close. Adrenaline laces my blood; a giggle catches in my throat. What the hell am I doing? What's wrong with me? Am I toying with him? With myself? Doesn't matter. This is one race I plan to win. I plan to... Something—someone—his big arms catch me around my waist. I scream as the ground comes up to meet me. The next second, I am hauled up and around, and against that firm chest. Heat from his body surrounds me, envelops me; my thighs clench; my scalp tingles. A burst of excitement ignites in my veins. "Let me go," I squeak.

"No."

He drops my coat—he'd picked it up from the car?—and yanks me up to my toes, thrusts his face into mine, "Where the hell do you think you are going?"

"Somewhere... Anywhere... To get away from you."

"What if I don't let you leave?"

"Do you want me to stay?" I jut my chin, daring him. Say it, do it. Just one word... Anything to show you're as affected with this...chemistry between us.

He looks me up and down, "I don't care either way."

Jerk. My insides twist; anger sputters up my spine. He releases me so suddenly, that I stumble. Then right myself. Goddamn him.

I stand there and watch that snickerdoodle of a man bend to pick my coat.

He straightens and his shoulders once more block my line of sight. I take in how his waist tapers down to meet his powerful thighs. My mouth waters. My fingers itch. I want to reach out and trace the cut abs outlined by his shirt.

His lips kick up. Heat flushes my cheeks. Of course he is well aware of the effect of his nearness on me.

He tilts his head, "Have you decided?"

I peer up into his face, rake my gaze across his strong features, that mean upper lip, his broad jaw. My nipples pucker and my toes curl. What would happen if I stayed? And if I leave? Will I always wonder how it would have been to spend a few days with him?

"Amelie?" His voice is impatient.

"I... I...am not sure," I stutter.

He peruses my features. "Turn around," he orders.

I do. I sense him close the distance between us, then he drops the coat over my shoulders. I shove my hands through the sleeves, and he pivots me to face him. I stare at that broad chest that's going to haunt my dreams for a long time. Hell.

He places his knuckles under my chin, applies pressure so I have to tilt my head up. I meet his gaze.

"You can leave now," his voice is harsh, "or you can come into the warmth."

"Come into the parlor, said the spider to the fly," I mumble.

"Oh, you're no fly, Buttercup." He grunts, "More of an annoying, pesky mosquito."

"And you're what...an octopus?"

"I can certainly wrap my arms and legs around you in a similar fashion." He chuckles. "To keep you warm, of course."

"Of course." I draw in a breath, "Fine, I'll stay."

"Good."

"On one condition."

"You don't make the rules, babe." His voice is soft, almost playful. His eyes take on that flinty look I'm coming to anticipate, and hate. My toes curl.

"But I'll let you have your say," he adds, "this time."

"You...you'll sleep on the couch," I state.

"No."

"Fine, I'll sleep on the couch." I tip up my chin.

"You think I'd let you do that?"

"Why not?" I scowl.

"A deal is a deal." His grin widens, "Six days—same house, same bed. You'll cook and clean and do everything I ask of you. Every day you complete, I deposit one million pounds in your account."

I gulp. OMG, I'm going to do this. I am. I can't turn this down. I tried. I went so far as trying to run away, but who am I kidding?

I can never turn down a challenge; and I admit, a tiny part of me is curious about whether I can actually resist him. I have to, of course.

Otherwise, I'll lose any measure of self-confidence I have in myself.

I pull back; his hands drop away. I tug the coat closed, then turn and walk around him toward the house. I reach the porch steps, then turn around, "Coming?"

He scowls. My insides knot. Guess he's not happy I took the lead. Too bad. I don't care that he's pissed-off. That seems to be his perpetual state of mind. But why does he have to be so hot when he glowers at me? I reach the door, then turn again. "Would you bring in my remaining luggage, while you're at it?" I suppress a giggle as I walk into the cabin.

"What the fuck do you have in them, stones?" I'd hauled her bag over the threshold of the house, and into the bedroom.

"Did you pack for a month?" I glower.

"I believe in traveling with everything I need."

"Clearly," I mutter.

Grabbing a bottle of beer from the kitchen, I return and prop myself on the bed.

"What are you doing?" She drags her second suitcase into the bedroom.

"What does it look like?"

She dumps the bag in the middle of the floor of the room, "Why don't you drink in the living room?"

"My house."

"It's not yours," she huffs. "You co-own it with the Seven."

"Semantics," I grumble. "It's more mine than yours, at any rate."

She opens her mouth.

I shake my head. "What made you decide to become a pastry chef?"

She blinks. "Why do you want to know?"

Good question. Why the hell do I care? Except I am intrigued... Fine, I want to understand what makes this bundle of energy tick.

"I don't care either way," I take a healthy swig of the beer, "but it's the kind of conversation you women seem to love."

She opens and shuts her mouth, then straightens, "So this is your idea of being polite?"

"Nope," I finish off the beer, place the bottle on the sideboard, "but this is." I yank my shirt over my head, toss it aside.

"What are you doing?" she squeaks.

"What do you think?" I rise to my feet, drop my pants, along with my boxers.

Her indrawn breath fills the space. I don't stop the grin that tugs at my lips. Buttercup can deny it all she wants, but the attraction between us is alive and kicking. It's making this entire exercise a hell of a lot more interesting. It's definitely the reason I'm allowing her to stay. If nothing else, to see how far I can go before I stop resisting her. I get back into bed, pull the covers up to my waist, then switch off the lamp on my side, leaving the room in darkness.

Silence for a beat, then another.

"How is this polite?" her voice cracks. She clears her throat, "Seriously, can you enlighten me here?"

"I'm sleeping on my side of the bed, aren't I?"

"Gah." She makes a sound deep in her throat.

A chuckle rumbles up my throat. I swallow it. "You're welcome."

I hear her moving around, then, "Why is this clock not working?"

I glance up to find her holding the digital timepiece in her hands. She turns it over, fiddles with the little compartment at the back, "Huh, it has no batteries." She turns to me, "Did you do that?" She frowns.

My heartbeat begins to race. "I don't know what you're talking about." I sink back into my pillow, close my eyes.

"The clock in the living room, too, had been dismantled."

What the hell does she want to know? Why can't she leave it alone already?

"Do you have something against clocks or something? Maybe you don't like the idea of time running out?" She chuckles.

I turn my back on her.

I hear her open the drawers, "Okay I found the batteries. I am going to—"

"Put it back." I snap.

"What?"

"Put the bloody clock back where you found it."

There's a pause.

"If you don't do it, I swear I'll come there and make you do it."

She huffs. There's a click as she places the timepiece back on the table.

"I've returned the batteries to the drawer," she mutters. "So don't get your dander up about it."

The breath I'd not been aware of holding rushes out.

Shit, the hell is wrong with me? Why the hell am I getting worked up over this little thing? It is a clock—a functioning clock. Doesn't mean anything. Why the hell can't I bear the thought of it counting down the time as I sleep?

The numbers mounting, the hands moving, the tick-tock-tick-tock of the countdown as he'd watched me closely, peered into my face, searched for a reaction, anything to show I was afraid, that I'd give in and break, ask for help. Ask it, do it. My heart thunders in my chest. Close your eyes. Count down the time.

Twelve o'clock.

Eleven o'clock—

I hear the sound of something connecting with that massive suitcase. Then a howl, "Bloody hell!"

I switch on the light. "What are you doing?"

She sits on the ground, nursing one booted foot. "Taking out my frustration, you oaf." Her hair flows about her shoulders. Her cheeks are pink. From anger? From embarrassment at seeing me naked? Considering she's already had her mouth on my dick... Well, isn't that cute.

"There are better ways of dealing with it." I lower my gaze to her heaving breasts.

"Aargh, stop that." She yanks off one boot, then the other. "Turn away."

"Why?"

"I want to undress, you... you neanderthal."

I laugh, "Running out of insults?"

"Oh, I have plenty where that came from." She pulls off her other boot, then rises to her feet. "Some privacy please?"

"Not happening." I lean back against the headboard, fold an arm behind my neck. Her gaze darts to my biceps; she swallows. I scratch my chest and her breasts heave. A glimmer of sweat gleams over her upper lip. "Is it too hot in here for you?" I grin.

She huffs, then undoes the button of her coat and pushes it off her shoulder. She glances around, then walks to the closet and pulls it open. She surveys the contents, then hangs it up. "You didn't bring too many clothes, did you?" she grumbles.

"Worried about me?" I smirk.

She throws up her hands, then steps back and slams the closet doors shut, "It's pointless making any conversation with you."

"You were the one who declined to answer my question."

"Whatever." She pulls off her jeans, giving me a flash of pink underwear. My groin instantly tightens. Fuck. She is more modestly dressed than women wearing skimpy bikinis on the beach... So why does she seem so much more alluring, so attractive...? So fucking gorgeous, as she folds her jeans then places them on the chair near the bed. She lifts a corner of the cover, then slips inside. She stays on the far end... Right at the end. "Any further and you'll slip off."

"I'll manage."

"I won't bite."

"Ha," she snorts, "famous last words."

"Unless you want me to?"

She stills. Tension pours off of her to fill the space between us on the bed. I switch off the light, then fold my arms over my chest. "If you stay that stiff, I'll have to tickle you."

"Wh...what?" she squeaks.

"Not good for your muscles to be so bunched up. You'll have a headache when you wake up."

"Like you care?"

"A deal is a deal, Buttercup."

"I wish you wouldn't call me that."

"I wish you'd relax a little."

If anything, she tenses further. I turn away from her, close my eyes. The stress that rolls off of her slams into my back. My shoulders bunch, My muscles coil, ready to spring... Fuck. I turn back to her, scoot over.

Her gaze widens, "What are you—?"

"Hush." I pull her to me, so her back is pressed into my chest, then I spoon her.

She makes a noise of alarm.

I tighten my arm around her waist. "Raise your head."

"What?"

"Do it, woman," I snap.

She does as I ask. Fuck, finally. I slip my arm under her neck, throw my leg over hers.

She doesn't say a word. Nothing. Her entire body goes stiff... As hard as my dick, which instantly lengthens. It nestles against the curve of her hip. Well, someone's happy, at least. I tuck her head under my chin.

"Weston," she whispers.

I sigh, "Now what?"

"What is it with you and clocks? Do you have a phobia or something?"

Or something. Not that I am going to tell her about it. I'd already given away enough with that half-arsed fit I'd thrown. Shit, do I have my balls about me or what?

"Weston—"

"Goodnight, Princess."

She huffs, but stay's silent.

Thank fuck.

I close my eyes, count back the time on the hands of a clock. Restart the stopwatch.

Twelve o'clock.

Eleven o'clock.

Her shoulder muscles relax.

Ten o'clock.

Nine o'clock.

Her breathing grows more uniform.

Eight o'clock.

Seven o'clock.

She wriggles her butt. The blood rushes to my groin.

Six o'clock.

She thrusts her feet in between my legs. The coldness from her toes shivers over my skin. I swear aloud, "Did you dip your feet in ice?"

"Sorry," she mutters.

Five o'clock.

Four o'clock.

She pushes her body into mine. My cock lengthens, stabs into the valley between her butt cheeks.

Three o'clock.

She rubs her cheek against the pillow. Then digs her toes into my calf. "The hell are you doing?" I grouse.

"Can't sleep," she mumbles.

I turn her over to face me. Mistake. The moonlight floods in from the open window, highlighting her baby blues. Her hair clings to her forehead; her nose turns up above those gorgeous pink lips. My heart stutters. It fucking stutters. The fuck? "What is it?" I grumble.

"I forgot the chocolate."

"Chocolate?"

"And I need fresh eggs, cinnamon, butter—"

"You've lost me."

"To make breakfast."

I shudder and mime throwing up in my mouth. "Who has chocolate for breakfast?"

She laughs. "Chocolate pancakes, dummy." Then she adds, "What do you like to eat in the morning?"

"Anything but chocolate." I grumble.

"Wh-a-a-t?" Her eyes go all round, "You don't like chocolate?"

"Why settle for chocolate, when," I drag my gaze down her body, "there are other things that make for a tastier breakfast."

She gapes, "Do you only think of sex?"

"Do you only think of desserts?"

"What else is there?" her voice cracks.

I scan her pink-tinged features. "Are you blushing?"

"Of course, not." Her face grows fiery.

"What are you thinking?"

"Nothing."

Oh, it was something all right. "Go on, you can tell me."

She shakes her head.

I glare at her, lower my voice to a hush, "Say it."

She trembles. "I... I was thinking how much I'd like for you to eat me out."

Amelie

What the hell am I doing? Why did I blurt that out? I'd honestly not realized that it was what I had in mind, until he'd commanded me to speak... And hell, when he assumes that voice, that hushed tone which whips through my mind, I can't stop myself. I have to obey him. But did I have to tell him the truth? Couldn't I have deflected?

His nostrils flare and his grip on my waist tightens. "Say that again," he rasps.

"I... I..." My throat closes. How can I repeat what had come out in a moment of utter lunacy?

"Complete your sentence," his hot breath sears my lips. My panties instantly dampen. My thighs clench and I can't stop the small whine that spills from my mouth.

"Ask...and you shall receive." His lips curl. An answering quiver thrums at my center. OMFG! I can't even... This man... How can I refuse him anything? Why the hell had I agreed to stay...? Is that why I hadn't wanted to leave? I blink; all thoughts empty from my mind.

"Please," I breathe out. "Eat me."

Even before the words are out of my mouth, he's flipped me on my back, "With pleasure, Alice." He smirks from above me.

"A...are you my white rabbit?"

"You'll have to let me know."

I blink, then heat sears my cheeks. Is he alluding to my favorite vibrator? "That's not what I—" My breath hitches as he slides down my body.

His hard chest presses down on my breasts, my belly, then his head is between my thighs. He shoulders apart my legs, places one of my hands on his ear, then the other on the other side. "Hold on." His eyes glitter.

"What the—"?" I gasp, then tighten my fingers around his ears, for he's buried his face in my pussy.

He nuzzles my flesh.

I whimper.

He blows on my throbbing core, and hell, but I almost come right then.

"Not yet, Buttercup." I sense his lips curve against my center.

"Don't...don't stop," I gasp.

"Hmm," he makes an appreciative sound deep in his throat.

All of my nerve endings seem to explode.

"Which dessert should I sample first, you think?"

"Wait," I gasp.

He peers up at me.

"The arrangement."

"What of it?"

"You said no sex."

"So?"

"Does this count as sex?"

"I thought we already covered this, Buttercup."

"As long as you don't...uh...you don't—"

"Sink my dick into your pussy?"

My cheeks flush, "Yeah, no penetration, in the traditional fashion, equals no sex, right?"

"Sure, if that's how you want to see it."

"I..."

He drags his fingers up my pussy lips.

I huff.

"So?" He smirks.

"Yes..." I force out the word.

He stares back.

"Yes, that's the definition, for the...uh, the arrangement." I clarify, "As long as you don't uh, penetrate my puss—eee" The word comes out on a whine for he's replaced his finger with his mouth. OMG. OMG. A moan trembles from my lips.

"My, my, Buttercup," he mutters against my core, "is this how greedy you are when you bake?"

What the—? I blink. Why is he still talking? Didn't his mom teach him not to talk when his mouth is full? Why can't he—?

He raises his head. Cool air envelops the heated, melting triangle between my legs, right before he slaps my pussy. Right on it, across my swollen core, which erupts in a miasma of sparks, that travels out from the contact, up my spine, and explodes behind my eyes. The room tilts. Ohmigod. Sweat beads my brow. The pain fades, leaving behind an ache that swallows me up from the center. "What was that for?" I shudder.

"Answer the question, doll."

"Wh...which one?"

"Should I taste you here?" He dips his head, slips his tongue inside my backhole.

My entire body snaps to attention. All of my pores pop. My chest rises and falls.

"Or here?" He drags his wicked tongue up my slit.

I moan.

"Maybe I should be as greedy as you and not wait?" He fixes that instrument of torture-pleasure, aka his mouth, around my throbbing bud, and I shoot up from the bed.

"Wes!" I howl.

He releases my pussy. "You still haven't answered the question," he rumbles.

"Wh...what?"

"Last chance, babe."

He leans back, and I thrust up with my pelvis, trying to recapture that earlier feeling, honing in on his tongue.

"Well?" he asks. "You need to ask for what you want, darlin'."

Maybe it's that endearment that makes me crack my eyes open. "All of it," I gasp. "Please lick me, suck on me, thrust your tongue inside my—" I huff, for he's done just that.

He twists his tongue inside of me and goosebumps flare on my skin. He slides his big arms under my legs, pushes up my knees on either side of my body, then he swipes his tongue in and out of me, and again. He slurps his way down to my backhole and up to my cunt again and again. I cry out, but he doesn't stop. He slips his tongue in between my pussy lips, samples me like I am the tastiest puff pastry. He bites down on my clit and I scream, dig my fingers into the space behind his ears and yank.

A growl rumbles up his chest and the vibrations swell my core, pour over me like the sound waves from a fucking dinner gong— Wait, why am I thinking with this bizarre metaphor? Except, hell, if I am not ready, I'm going to...

"Come," he growls into my hot, melting core, and I explode.

My climax crashes over me, shoves me up...up...up. Maybe I black out. I force myself to open my eyelids, look down to where he's still between my legs, my knees splayed out. "Wow," I breathe.

He doesn't smile back. He stares at me. His gaze unwavering.

"What?" I croak.

"You ready, yet?"

"Huh?"

He drops his mouth, nuzzles my pussy.

I moan, "I can't."

"I haven't even started, babe."

"No...no."

He licks my lower lips and pleasure radiates out from my core.

"Oh, my God."

"Hold on," he says.

"What?"

He rises up, grabs my wrists and holds them over my head. He wraps my fingers around the wooden bars of the headboard. "Stay," he commands.

I stare at him. As if I could move.

One side of his lips kicks up; he presses a firm kiss to my lips, then slides down to position his face over my pussy. He grabs my knees, pries them further apart so I am splayed wide for him. I should blush or feel shy, for heaven's sake. Those are my most intimate parts, served up to him for display; but all I can think is, please... please... please.

"Lick or suck?" he asks.

"Anything, either... Both," I gasp out.

He glares at me.

I shiver... "Anything you want."

"Right answer."

He drops his head and thrust his tongue back inside my melting channel.

"Oh, my God," I whine. "More, please, don't stop...don't..." I push myself up and into his face, not caring what he thinks of me. Any restraint holding me back is gone. Poof. All he has to do is touch me and I'll do anything for him. Damn it, I should have known that... But I'm not sleeping with him.. Yet. I mean, technically this doesn't count. Like the blowjob... Anything other than full penetration... Yep, that's it; anything else is fine. It is. "Fuck me with your mouth, please," I plead.

He laughs, "One fuck-me-with-your-mouth, coming up." He releases my knees, only to grip my arsecheeks. He squeezes down and I whine. He pries them apart. What the—? He hauls me up, slips his tongue down and inside my arsehole. Oh, my f'ing god. It's like nothing I have experienced before. No one...has touched me there, and this man? He slides his tongue into that forbidden part of me... As if, as if... We are lovers. No, fuckbuddies... Not... Anything-but-fucking-buddies, that's what we are. A giggle wells up, turns into a scream, when he begins to fuck my backhole with his tongue. He thrusts in and out, in and out, brings his hand up to grind his heel against my clit, and that tightness inside of me snaps out, expands... "Wes..." I moan. "Weston..."

He doesn't answer. He can't, because his mouth is full of me.

"Wes. Wes. Wes," I chant. Aloud, or in my mind? No matter, if food is a religious experience for me, then his tongue-fucking me has to count as a close second. The orgasm screeches up my legs, up my spine.

He slides his tongue out, replaces it with his finger, another, then shoves his tongue inside my pussy.

"Weston," I scream.

He releases my other knee and grabs my breast, squeezes my nipple so hard, stars burst behind my eyes.

"Oh, my God, I am going to...going to..."

He slips his thumb inside my mouth, at the same time that he crooks his fingers inside my backhole, then tears his mouth from my pussy and growls, "Come."

Weston

Her body bucks, her spine curves, she opens her mouth, but no sound emerges. Her eyes roll back in her head as she shatters. I tilt my head, lick up the cum from between her pussy lips. So fucking sweet. Is she made of the sugar that she likes to bake with? Her climax seems to go on and on. Her shoulders jerk, her head thrown back, and the arch of her throat beckons.

I crawl up her body, fit my mouth to hers. I slide my fingers inside her pussy, she moans, and I swallow it up. I swipe my tongue over hers, tasting our joined-up essences. I drag my other hand up the curve of her waist. She shivers. I cup her cheek, lean back and peer into her features, "Look at me."

Her eyelids flutter. Those blue eyes peek up at me, pupils blown, still high on the orgasm. Something hot stabs at my chest. I flip over on the bed, pulling her with me. I coil her over my chest. Another spasm runs up her spine. I tug her closer, wrap her up in my arms.

Fuck, fuck, fuck, what am I doing? I hadn't meant for it to get this... intense, this complicated. Keep things light, stay away from all entanglements, has always been my motto. And I've succeeded so far, haven't I? I had asked her to stay...because I'd thought it would be entertaining. Okay so that's not the full truth. The last time I'd spoken to my mother, she'd asked me if I'd met anyone yet. It is the one thing—the only thing—she wants from me. For me, I guess. It had been a flash of instinct that had had me stipulating she come along to the Christmas dinner. My family... They'd pulled me out of the depression I had fallen into after the 'incident' when I had been kidnapped along with the rest of the Seven. They'd reassured me, never allowing me to falter.

The incident had turned everything upside down. The only people who had seemed to get me after that were the rest of the Seven, and not only because they were, each of them, mean motherfuckers, as unfeeling as me... It was the shared experience of the days that had changed our lives, scarred each of us in similar, yet unique, ways.

Still, my parents had been encouraging, supportive, taken me to therapy, tolerated my outbursts at them as I'd struggled to come to terms with what had happened. They had been stellar in their roles and duties toward me. It's not their fault I've turned out to be an asshole. Blame that on me... Maybe it's the way I was born.

So, it had been a spur of the moment decision that she accompany me to see my family for Christmas. The hell had I been thinking?

This pint-sized woman with the sassy attitude, honeyed mouth, and a cunt that tastes like all the forbidden delights she specializes in baking—has clearly addled my thought processes.

I drag my fingers down the waterfall of her golden hair. Softer than cookie dough— What the fuck? I do not think in food metaphors. Her proximity is definitely affecting me. I stay still, watch her eyeballs move behind her now-closed eyelids. She snuggles into me; her breathing deepens. I stay still until her body twitches. She's definitely out cold. Apparently, I tired her out. Too bad I can't say the same about me. My muscles coil and bunch, my mind racing. I need to figure out what the hell to do with her. My proposal stands, but the boundaries are blurring... Hell, I am still here, holding her, caressing her, watching her as she sleeps. The fuck is up with that? I ease her down onto the bed. She doesn't stir. Good.

I slide out of bed, pull the duvet over her. Turning, I crash into her suitcase, which plops over. I glance over to find she's still sleeping. I shake my head. What I wouldn't give to be able to switch off like that, huh? Since the incident... I've never slept for more than three, maybe four hours a night. Useful when you're at medical school and need to study before exams... A bitch at any other time. I pull on my jeans, a sweatshirt over my long-sleeved T, socks and boots.

Grabbing my phone from the side table, I walk through the living room, Max stirs from his rug near the fireplace, lifting his head. I go over, pat him on his flank. He licks my hand, then burrows into the special cushion I'd ordered for him. Hey, don't go all gooey-eyed. It was simply to ensure he'd be comfortable enough to not want to share my bed, okay?

I slip out onto the back porch. Early dawn lights up the horizon as I head toward the shed at the back of the property. I open the door and walk in, then head for the work bench. I switch on the desk lamp, and when my phone buzzes, I slide it out of my pocket, swipe the screen.

"Hey, motherfucker," Damian's image fills the space.

"Same to you, dickwad," I mutter.

"What's gotten into you?" He peers into the screen as if he's there in real life with me.

"What's gotten into you?" I growl. Now I'm doing the fucking NLP mirroring shit Buttercup had talked about. Why the hell am I thinking about her, huh? Didn't I come here to get away from her? Huh? Had she actually pushed me out of my own space? I scratch my jaw. Now, that would be the first.

"Uh-oh." Damian clicks his tongue, "I've seen that look before."

"What bloody look?" I frown.

"The one that says you're about to fall."

"Fall?"

"For her."

"Who?"

"The woman who's there in the country manor—"

"Cabin," I correct him.

"Whatever." He grins, "Admit it. You're attracted to her."

"What shit are you talking about?" I grumble.

"You denying you hooked up with a woman in a difficult-to-reach place?"

"It's four hours away from London."

"My point exactly," he smirks.

"You city fox."

"So are you," he replies, "which is why, when Saint mentioned that you were going to be there, and not alone..."

"Hold on." I rub my temple, "Saint told you I was going to be here with a woman?"

"Aren't you?"

"That's not the point." I tilt my head, "How did he know that I was here... ah!" I stiffen. "That cunt," I growl. "He fucking played me, didn't he?"

"Hold on, I'm adding Arpad to the call," Damian says.

"What? No," I protest.

Too late. The screen blinks, then Arpad appears in another window. "Hey, bitches, you're chin-wagging like old ladies, I see."

"Hey, fuckface," I growl, "why aren't you in a boat in the middle of somewhere with no reception?"

"I have my own satellite, dickwad."

"Of course, you do." I rake my fingers through my hair. "Why are you guys calling me, anyway?"

"Checking in, ol' chap." Damian chuckles, "Making sure you're still alive after that face-off."

What face-off?

"You and Amelie...?" Damian prompts.

"What is it with you guys?" I crack my jaw from side to side, "Can't you give a man space?"

"Space?" Arpad cackles, "Did he just say what I think he did?"

"Aww, cho chweet," Damian makes kissing sounds.

Arpad cracks up laughing.

My face reddens. "That's it; I'm hanging up now."

"Hold on." Damian pretends to wipe the tears from his face, "You haven't told us what you intend to do with her?"

"What's it to you?" I growl, "And don't talk about her."

"So, it's like that, huh?" Arpad snickers. "You seeing what I'm seeing, Rockstar?" he asks Damian.

Damian stares at me, then shakes his head, "My, my, the doctor who had his arse splashed all over the internet for making a sex tape has met his match, huh?"

"It's a damn fine arse," I grumble, "and if you don't have a sex tape to your credit, you technically are persona non grata in the online world."

"But does she know about it?" Damian asks.

My neck heats and my heart begins to thud. "Why would it matter to her?"

"It would matter if you didn't tell her," Arpad points out, "Hold on, I'm adding the Father to our chinwag, so he doesn't feel left out."

"What the fuck?" I growl as Edward's face appears in another window on the screen.

"Hey Doc, how's it going?" Edward asks.

"It was going all fine and dandy until you lot decided to intrude."

"Sorry to cut in on your alone time with your lady—"

"Not my lady," I grumble.

Damian snickers.

Arpad chortles.

"What the fuck are you jokers laughing at?"

"You, arsehole, and how you've been played."

I scowl, "Fucking Saint."

Damian nods.

"He double-booked me with her. Wait until I get my hands on the dickwad; I'm going to throttle his neck.

"Victoria won't like you getting your hands on her husband."

"Man," I rub the back of my neck, "not that I begrudge them their happiness, not after everything they've been through... But he could have not intruded in my life," I grouse.

"Jace, then Sinner, and Saint," Damian drawls. "You'd think it was catching...all that happiness."

"Bull-fucking-shit." I sink into my chair, tip it back. "I'm not falling for whatever madness possessed those knobs to get hitched."

"Just make sure you give me enough notice," Edward pipes in.

"Notice?" I crack my neck, "The hell you going on about Father?"

"If you plan on getting hitched—"

The two front legs of the chair land on the ground with a thump, "Hitched? What the fuck are you talking about?"

"Your last-minute plan that you don't know about yet." Edward stabs a finger at me, "If you're planning on doing it, I need a little notice. I have a life too, you know. I can't always drop everything and put in an appearance to marry you guys, you know—?"

"Wait, what?" I run a finger under the collar of my shirt. "You lost me there."

"A million?" Arpad asks Damian.

"Money is beginning to lose its appeal," Damian grumbles.

"You wankers," I growl, "the fuck are you all betting on?"

"We need to up the odds," Arpad replies, as if he didn't hear me. What a tosser.

I grip my phone with such force that my fingers hurt. "Shut the fuck up, you bitches."

"It's happening, all right. You see how he's losing his shit, huh?" Arpad continues.

"What do you suggest?" Damian talks over me, "Wanna play with something a little more personal?"

"What do you have in mind?" Arpad rubs his jaw. "Property? Shares..." He snaps his fingers, "I have it."

"What you thinking of, dipshit?" Damian drawls.

"If he gets married, accept the gift I send you."

"Ooh, thanks darling, for thinking of me," Damian deadpans.

Arpad grimaces, "Cut that shit out. You won't be laughing when you see what is it."

"A woman?" He waggles his eyebrows, "A hot honey, no doubt. Why would I refuse it, huh?"

"You on then?" Arpad asks.

"And if he doesn't?" Damian jerks his chin at me.

"I'm here, you bitches."

"Oh, he will." Arpad smirks, "I present to you exhibit A... Also known as, the man who has no idea that he's counting his last few days of freedom."

"Newsflash, you toffs, I ain't planning on giving up my bachelor status anytime soon, and PS," I growl, "you can't go around placing bets involving the lives of others."

Damian's gaze widens, "Since when has Mr. Obnoxious here, developed a conscience?"

"Since he's the one about whom such bets are being placed?" Edward offers.

"Since he decided to shack up with her?" Arpad replies.

"I am not shacking up with her, you reprobates," I snarl.

"The two of you...in a cabin...in the middle of nowhere..." Arpad waggles his eyebrows.

"It's four hours from London," I remind them again.

"Wait until it snows," Edward chimes in... "I am not marrying you in a remote ceremony."

"For the final time," I jump up from my chair so fast, it crashes back, "I'm not getting married. She just happens to be here, and I'm putting the time with her to good use."

"No doubt," Damian says with a straight face. "If that's the story you're going with."

"I am taking her home to meet my family."

Silence, then Damian addresses Arpad, "Shit, can I take back that bet I agreed to?"

"Too late, old sport." Arpad chuckles, "Told ya, he won't last the holidays, but wow." He scowls at me, "You've only been with her since yesterday. Isn't that a little too soon...?"

"What are you talking about?" Clearly I am being slow on the uptake here. "And how do all of you know about her—?" Realization dawns. "That fucker—Saint." Anger sweeps my blood, "He let you all in on his dumbass plan?" I roll my shoulders, "Don't you have anything better to do than trade gossip?"

"Aw, he's no longer any more fun," Arpad shakes his head.

"Wankers gone for a toss." Damian grins, "Does that make him a tossing wanker or a wanking tosser?"

"Guys, go easy on him." Edward grins, "He's one dropkick away from having his heart broken."

I raise my phone and bring it down, intent on smashing it, then stop myself. Fuck, if I don't need the bloody device right now. Not that I can't replace it, but if what the Father said is true and snow is on its way... Then hell, all the money in the world couldn't deliver me an alternative mode of communication. Maybe I should have insisted on having the helicopter parked on the helipad in the field. Damn, missed opportunity.

"For the last time, there's nothing between us," I growl. Why the fuck am I even explaining it to these douchebags, huh? Maybe it's because they are the closest I have to non-blood family; though right now, I'm not sure if they are my friends or my enemies.

"You don't have to convince us," Arpad nods.

"Right, I don't care about your personal uh—relations. Of course, I care about your state of mind, which at the moment, seems rather frayed at the edges," Edward points out.

"As I was saying," I draw in a breath, "she happens to be here; so am I. We've come to an agreement, and that includes taking her home to get my mother off my back."

"Right, you keep fooling yourself, ol' sport." Damian grins. "Not that I'm not rooting for you. I mean, I want you to get through the holiday season without getting hitched." He scratches his chin, "Although, if you did get married, I'd still win, in a matter of speaking, so—"

"Fuck you, motherfuckers." I hang up. What the fuck was that all about?

The hair on the back of my neck rises and I hear a sound behind me. All of my senses go on alert; I pivot, fists raised.

12

Amelie

"It's me; it's only me," I squeak.

His chest heaves, his color pale. He glares at me as if he's seen a ghost.

"Weston?" I prompt.

His gaze fixes on my face. His jaw tics. The tendons of his throat move. The skin across his knuckles stretches tight. If his control had been less than perfect, I have no doubt, I'd be on the ground, with his fist buried in my face. Hell, I wouldn't mind other parts of him buried inside of me, given what had transpired between us earlier. It's clear that we are as compatible as cheese and biscuits. WTF? Enough with the cheesy comparisons... Nooooo, now I am punning on my own poor jokes? Gah!

"Wes?" I take a step forward; he watches me. I raise a hand; his gaze stays on mine. I reach up on tip toe and cup his cheek. "You okay?"

He blinks, lowers his fists.

A breath I hadn't realized I was holding whooshes out. At the same time, he draws his in.

"Wes?" I step close enough for my boots to kiss his. His gaze intensifies. Those colorless eyes seem to mirror every emotion, every confusion, every screwed-up, mixed-up thought that I feel inside.

"Everything okay?" I ask.

"Why wouldn't it be?" He steps back from me and the heat of his big body recedes.

A hollow feeling coils low in my belly. What had I been expecting? That after the way he'd made me orgasm earlier, he'd...be more tender toward me? Maybe throw me down and decide to forget about our 'arrangement' and make love to me? Hell, I want him to fuck me... There, I've said it out loud. Well, not really out loud, thank God. I'd settle for him having me any which way—frontways, sideways, bent over, with my arse up in the air for him... My cheeks heat. Jesus H, something about this man brings out the filthy girl hidden inside of me. The one who wanted to hold onto more than his ears as I rode him off into the sunset. Huh? That picture... It's hot... And all wrong.

"What are you doing here?" He frowns.

"I, uh, woke up and you were gone—"

He looks me up and down, "Is that a... What are you wearing?"

I glance down at my pullover. "What?"

"Is that a reindeer with glitter on his nose?"

"Oh, you mean my Christmas jumper?"

His features take on an expression best described as loathing.

"Let me guess." I push a finger into my cheek, "You hate Christmas-themed sweaters."

He grunts, "And reindeer, and Christmas carols, and mulled wine..."

"What?" I stare at him. "You're joking."

"Nope." He rolls his shoulders, "Can do without that shit, and anything to do with the festive season."

"But it's the silly season." I stare at him, horrified. I mean, Mr. Grumpy McDick here is surely just trying his best to scare me off. "It's not working."

"Huh?"

"This entire, alphaholish, man-about-town, who sacrifices baby goats to the devil and screams at little kids—"

"And kicks kittens," he adds, "don't forget that."

"That's what I mean," I slap my palms on my hips. "You'd never do that."

"Because you've seen me tolerate Max?"

"More than tolerate." I scowl, "Why are you so intent on putting yourself down?"

"Why are you so intent on believing I am something I am not?"

"And what are you? Billionaire—"

"Gazillionaire."

"Doctor."

"Surgeon," he corrects me.

"Someone who's hiding away from the world because he has some deep-rooted hurt."

He laughs—a fake, hard noise that prickles over my skin. My stomach clenches. Shit, this is not the man who had pulled me on top of him and stroked my hair until I'd fallen asleep. This is not the generous lover, who'd dived into my pussy and eaten it out like it was creme brûlée.

"What happened?" I frown. "Why are you like a chef with a hangover?"

"Maybe because I don't like the look of your face this morning?"

My heart cracks a little; it fucking splinters. Asshole, jerk, clod. I glare at him, "Oh, you seemed to like me well enough last night."

"I was proving a point."

"What?" My heart begins to race and sweat beads my palms. It can't be... He can't be this...arrogant and mean, this ready to hurt me... Not after how he'd kissed me and touched me like I belonged to him. Does he do this to every woman he takes to bed? Does he make them all feel that special? Maybe, whichever female he's with for the moment is made to feel like the center of his universe. "What point?" I insist, "Tell me."

"That you won't get through the holiday period without sleeping with me. That all I have to do is look at you and you'll open your legs for me. That you're so needy, you'll do anything for a touch, a kiss, little bit of attention, to make you feel special—you—"

My hand connects with his cheek before the thought has time to form in my brain. Pain shoots up my arm and my palm stings. I lower my arm, my breath coming in pants like I've run a mile to get here... When I'd walked over to the shed in search of him, and overheard the last of the conversation... I don't mean anything to him. Fine. I'm a transaction. That's all right too. But this... Insulting me just out of spite... No, this is unacceptable.

I step back, "The deal's off, you horrible man. All the money in the world isn't worth putting up with the lies that pour out of your mouth."

He tilts his head as the outline of my fingerprints blooms on his cheek. "Leave then," he drawls.

"You think I can't?"

"Do it. See if I stop you." His features close; those colorless eyes seem to grow darker. Is he hurt? Why should he be hurt? He provoked me. What did he expect? That I'd simply take it...because...of this attraction to him...that I'd hope would deepen into something else? Ha! How stupid could I be. Or maybe, he thought I'd stay because of the money. Think again, asshole.

I pivot to walk away, and that's when the world seems to explode. I slap my hands to my ears as a clanging sound overpowers the space. What the hell? What is that? All of my brain cells seem to knock together at once. I turn... "What's happening—?" That's when I notice the wall... No walls, plural, of clocks. Every single available space across the walls of the room is chockablock with clocks. Old clocks, antiques, made of steel, of wood, newer models made of glass and chrome... And every single one of them is mechanical. Their alarms clang out in different tones to indicate it's nine in the morning. I blink...turn around in a circle, taking in the sheer variety of time-keeping devices. "Wow." I turn to face him as the last of the sound dies away. "Holy shit," I breathe. "What is this...place?"

"It's mine," he says simply.

"But the cabin... I mean, that palatial house which you guys refer to as the cabin." I mutter, "It belongs to Saint?"

"It belongs to all of the Seven."

"Oh."

"The last person who had access to it was Saint. When I injured my finger, I told them I needed to borrow it for the duration of the season."

"Right, so he sent me here..."

"Knowing I was here already."

"Why would he do that?"

"To fuck with me?" His lips twist.

"But this place..." I glance around the walls again, "This is yours?"

"I built it in the backyard."

"You constructed it by yourself?"

"I employed an architect. And a builder."

"Of course." I walk up to a clock on my left. In the center is a horse, hind legs reared up in the air, its white mane caught as if in mid-jump. "And these clocks?"

"I collect them."

"Are they valuable...?"

"What do you think?"

I hear the humor in his voice, turn around to find him seated at the desk pushed up against the wall. I walk over, lean over his shoulder to find him looking through a magnifying glass at the guts of a clock.

"You repair them?"

He picks up what seems to be forceps, and which seem too delicate for his thick fingers to hold, and begins to tinker with the parts of the clock.

"You're an uh, horologist?"

"I like to repair clocks. It's a way to unwind."

I snicker, "Ha, you can be funny sometimes."

"Yeah, that's me—a hoot," he says in a voice that signifies something to the contrary.

I stare at his bent head. His dark hair falls to about his shoulders, and is mussed on top. Has he been running his fingers through them? The locks had been surprisingly silky to touch yesterday when I'd held onto those ears and... I shift my weight from foot to foot.

"But you disabled the clocks in the cabin."

"They came with the house. I hadn't acquired them."

"So, because you found—" I wave my hand in the air, "all these, and fixed them, you're fine with them?"

"I put them together; I know what they are made of. I can trust them to be accurate."

"Unlike the ones back there."

"Yep."

"So, you are fine surrounded by these..." I turn a circle, "time pieces on the wall, just not the ones you didn't acquire yourself."

"Sounds about right."

"You know how weird you sound?"

He shoots me a glance, "Says the woman who calls her phone Hedwig, and who uses the names of desserts as swearwords."

"So, what's wrong with that?" I frown.

He snickers, "My point exactly." He focusses on his work.

I shuffle my feet, wind a strand of hair through my fingers.

"I haven't forgiven you yet," I mutter.

"You can leave at any time."

But I don't want to, and therein lies the problem. What the hell is keeping me here? Him? This chemistry between us that I have to explore? What happens if I do explore it further? Will I survive the time we spend together?

And what if I did walk away?

Would I forever wonder how it could have been between us? What if he was...the one? Ha, me and my romantic notions. But this is Christmas; I'm allowed to indulge myself, right?

I lean around him and stare at the contents of the clock's insides on the table.

He continues tinkering away...or whatever it is he's doing there.

The pieces of the machinery seem to be disjointed, yet they come together to form a certain symmetry, to dance together and make music. Like us.

If he were to only give us a chance. Do I want to give him a chance?
"Weston, you're not a douche, you know."

He grunts.

I resist the urge to roll my eyes. "Why do you have to be this macho?"

"Why are you still here?" he growls.

"Because I cooked bloody breakfast and came here to call you. Then, you had to go and pull that..."

He straightens, "What?"

"That..." I wave a hand in the air. "That...obnoxious McFuck act of yours."

He swivels around to face me, "What was that? What did you call me?"

"Obnoxious?"

"After that."

"Mc...McFuck?"

"What does it mean?"

I raise my shoulders, "Dunno, it just, uh, seemed appropriate."

He chuckles, "You're a funny one, Buttercup."

I groan, "I am not sure I like that name yet."

"I am not sure I like you either." He looks me up and down, his tone serious, "But hell, if I don't want you to stay."

"Is that an apology?"

"For what?" He glares.

"For being horrible to me."

"Was I?"

I huff, "Fine. Whatever. And," I tuck my elbows into my sides, "I'm sorry too."

"For what."

I jerk my chin toward the reddened skin of his cheek.

"I deserved it," he replies.

I open and shut my mouth, "You...you did?"

"You should know though, that it turns me on when you get physical with me."

I squeeze my eyes shut. Do not lose it; do not. I draw in a breath, "I'll ignore that."

Turning, I stalk to the door.

"Where are you going?"

"I made breakfast." I pause, then turn to scowl at him, "Aren't you coming?"

Fifteen minutes later he pushes back the plate with a sigh. I'd made chocolate pancakes for me, regular ones for him. Why had I bothered...? Good question. Perhaps because, as much as I hate him, I hate seeing him starve. Food is sacred. It's how we nourish not just our bodies, but our souls, and if there is a soul that needs some sustenance... It is this alphahole's. A slurping sound fills the space. I glance sideways as Max licks the bottom of his bowl. He raises his head, then patters over to push his nose into my lap. "Hey boy, you still hungry?"

"Don't feed him more," Weston warns.

I frown, "I wasn't going to."

"Yes, you were too." He grins, "When you twitch your nose, it means you're thinking something sappy in your head."

"Am not." I set my jaw.

"Yep, you were." He chuckles, "And PS, you're welcome."

I frown up at him, "For what?"

"For the compliment I'm about to give you."

I shake my head. Jeez, this man... I mean, he can't be real. He can't be this incorrigible, can he? He stares at me; I meet his gaze.

His lips curl, and of course, my heart does that little flip-flop it always does when he goes all bad boy on me. "Fine. I give in." I huff, "What compliment?"

"You're not a bad cook." He smirks.

I open and close my mouth. "That was a delicious breakfast," I half-snarl.

"My, but you like your own cooking, huh?"

My lips turn down, "You can tell, huh?"

His brow furrows. "What's that supposed to mean?"

"I know I'm not svelte and long-limbed, like some of the women you date."

He frowns, then looks me up and down, "Firstly, let's get something straight. You look incredible."

Wait, was that a compliment? It was a compliment. Wasn't it?

"And secondly," his eyes gleam, "have you been keeping tabs on me?"

"Of course not." I huff.

"You've been keeping tabs," he concludes, looking way too self-satisfied.

"Hardly."

"It's okay, you can admit it." He smirks, "It's only natural to want to follow what I have been up to. Some of us have the kind of irresistible charisma that attracts attention."

Oh, that compliment thing I said earlier, forget it.

"You're so full of yourself," I scoff. "Seriously, how can someone say what you do and keep a straight face?"

He stares at me.

I fidget in my seat opposite him. "And yeah, maybe I tracked your exploits in the media, a little." I admit.

He arches an eyebrow.

I throw up my hands. "Oh, all right, so I did read up about you."

His grin widens.

"I was curious how you looked in your scrubs, okay?" My cheeks flush.

He blinks, "In my scrubs?"

I nod, "I have a thing for men in uniform."

His grey eyes grow stormy, "I could wear them for you, if you ask nicely."

I gulp, chafe my thighs together to relieve that gnawing emptiness that's been building since I woke up this morning. Then he had to go and spoil it all with his rudeness.

His features tighten. "I'm sorry," he offers.

I stare. "For which part?" I ask. "For being horrible to me from the moment I walked in here or is it for a specific insult?"

He tips back his chair until it rests on the back legs, "On second thought..." He scratches his chin, "What can I say? That's me. It's not my fault."

"No?" I frown.

"It's the way I was born."

"That's your excuse, huh?"

"At least, I don't lie. My life is an open book." He winces as he says it.

"What?" I ask.

"Maybe too open, on occasion."

"What do you mean?"

He rolls his shoulders, a dead giveaway that he's uncomfortable. Less than 48 hours with him, and I'm interpreting his actions. What is that about anyway?

"Tell me."

He folds his arms over his chest, "For the record, I like your curves."

Heat sears my cheeks. "You're kidding me."

He shakes his head, "I like that you have a healthy appetite. There's something sexy about a woman who enjoys cooking and eating."

"Thank you, and it's baking."

"You cooked breakfast," he points out.

"Yeah." I shift in my seat. Hell, I'm terrible with taking compliments. "And you are deflecting."

He barks out a laugh, "You caught me there."

"What is it?" I ask, genuinely curious. What could make this confident, dominant man, this uncomfortable?

"I may have a...uh, sex video to my name."

"Sex video." I blink.

"My ex—" He raises his shoulders, "She got hissy when I dumped her. Took it out by leaking a video."

"Oh," I swallow. My guts twist and something bubbles up my throat—something hot and angry and twisted. Something like jealous. Holy shit, why the hell do I care who he slept with? Except, I do, for some reason. Not like I have a claim on him or anything, but hell, for some reason, I've been trying to not think of the women in his past. I mean, if I don't acknowledge them, then they don't exist, right?

"A sex video, huh?" I clear my throat, "Is it uh—explicit?"

He glares at me.

Right. "Of course, it is," I mutter. Something hot presses down at my temples. Shit, okay. This isn't good. What does it matter to me what he did? He's paying me. It's the only reason I'm here, right? Not. I stare back at him, and therein lies the issue. I've been falling for this obnoxious, alphahole from the time I'd first laid eyes on him. A ripple of something claws down my spine. Don't fall in love with him; don't. He'd warned me about that already. Apparently, he knows me better than I know myself. I push away from the table so fast that Max yelps. "Sorry, buddy," I mutter, then walk past the table.

"Where are you going?" he asks

"None of your concern."

"You haven't finished your breakfast."

"So?"

"So, you'll need your strength."

"Oh, to hell with you. Don't pretend to care about me when you clearly don't, and—" He swoops out his arm, snags my wrist.

"Let go," I say through clenched teeth.

He doesn't answer. Instead, he tugs on me, with just enough force that I am pulled toward him. He turns his chair, then lifts me up by my waist and props me on his lap.

"What are you doing?" I mumble. My cheeks heat. Not that his lap isn't comfortable, and hell, if the entire maneuver wasn't hot. I mean, he'd handled my body like I'm made of candy floss. Do I taste as sweet to him? "Let me go." I dig my elbow into his chest.

He huffs, "Stop wriggling." There's a hint of a smile in his voice.

"And if I don't?" I twist around to face him. The curve of my waist bumps against the hard length of him in his pants. "Oh."

He grins. "See what you do to me?"

"Did you say that to Ms. Sex Video woman?"

His features shudder. Damn it, why did I have to go there?

"Sorry, none of my business."

"I didn't." His tone is clipped, "I never told her that. Nor did I ever seat her in my lap like this or..." he leans around me, grabs my plate and pulls it over, "...feed her breakfast." He scoops up some of my chocolate pancake, then holds the fork up to my lips.

"Open," his voice is husky.

A shiver runs down my spine. He's only giving me food, so why does it have to feel this...erotic?

"I'll eat it if you do," I whisper.

"Hmm." He glances from me to the piece of food on the fork, then back at me. "I have a better idea."

He brings the fork to his mouth, closes his lips around the chocolate crepe. He chews, swallows, then leans in and places his lips on mine. I gasp, and he darts his tongue inside my mouth. The taste of chocolate, of dark edginess and hot sex...the unique flavor that is Weston-fucking-Kincaid fills my mouth, coats my tongue, overwhelms my senses. My head spins. My toes curl. He pulls away and I lean forward. I hear a sound of protest. Hell, is that me?

I crack open my eyelids—when had I shut them?—to find he's scooping up another forkful of the breakfast that I will always associate with him. Gah! I did not think that, did not allow myself to indulge in such utter sentimental crap.

"Did you like that?" I whisper.

"Let's say that I may have underestimated the merits of dessert for breakfast."

"Are we talking about the same thing?" I frown.

"I was talking about your chocolate pancake," he snickers, "which you should eat." He raises the fork, "You need your nourishment."

I part my lips and he slides the food into my mouth.

I chew then lick my lips.

His gaze drops to my mouth, "My, my, what beautiful lips you have, little Red." His eyes gleam.

"All the better to kiss you with," I murmur.

His gaze intensifies. The heat from his body seems to deepen. A bead of sweat slides down my spine.

He picks up another forkful of the crepe, holds it up. "Finish it," his voice lowers to a hush, and I'm instantly wet. My nerve endings pop; my brain cells seem to melt all at once.

I close my mouth around the fork, wipe the tines clean, chew, then swallow.

"What a gorgeous throat you have, little Red," his voice is hard. As is the evidence of his arousal that stabs into the valley between my butt cheeks.

"All the better to take you in my mouth," the words tumble from my lips. What am I doing? Indulging this man's love for nursery rhymes and children's fairy tales is one thing, but taking it to the extent where the story of Little Red Riding Hood comes to mean something else completely? Not to mention, what was that thing with the rabbit? Had he actually compared himself to my favorite vibrator?

He scoops up the last morsel of food from the plate, holds it up to my lips. "You have a choice," he says.

"I do?" Do I even want to know?

He nods, "You can have your last bite before, or after."

"After?" I gulp, "After what?"

"After Christmas shopping."

Weston

I watch as she peruses the range of baking produce on the shelf in the only grocery store in the nearest village.

A woman walks behind me, "Excuse me," she says stiffly. I move aside. Hell, the aisles of this place are so narrow I have to flatten my back against the shelf to ensure I am not blocking the route. And the ride in the car over here? Why the hell had I agreed to that torture? Probably because, by the time I'd realized that the only means of transportation available to get to the village was in her dinky car—a bloody Volkswagen—it was too late. When was the last time I'd been a passenger in anything other than my chauffeur driven car...? I don't even remember.

So why had I done it now?

Why had I told her that I'd take her out shopping?

When what I'd wanted to do was eat her out right there on the dining table...for breakfast; and if I had my way, for lunch and dinner too. One taste of her sweet cunt had not been enough. The blood rushes to my groin.

Is that why I'd brought her here...? Because I'd wanted to get away from the cabin and the intimate atmosphere that seemed to be building between us. I lean a hip against the shelf. My shoulder brushes the stocked cans; one falls off of the top shelf, bumps me on the head. I throw my arm out, catch the can before it hits the ground, even as stars flash behind my eyes.

The fuck? From the time I'd met her I seem to be getting rather well acquainted with heavenly bodies, especially hers... Jesus, what's wrong with me? Next, I'll be spouting poetry, comparing her to a summer's day... No, not Shakespeare now. I'd loved poetry in school, had not hidden my love for the Bard, even acted in school plays. Then the incident had taken place. I'd been enroute home from a rehearsal for a play. And that had changed my proclivity to take part in extracurricular activities. Other than hanging out with the Seven... Not that we'd spoken much. We'd preferred to take our frustrations out on each other... You could say we'd spent a lot of that post-incident time beating each other up. It had been our own personal coping mechanism.

I wonder, have I channeled my love for the spoken word into the nursery rhymes I recite with my nieces? Is that why the fairy tales I read to them have etched themselves into my subconscious mind?

It had been hot though... That entire series of events at the breakfast table... I'd wanted to take her right then. Tempt her into spreading her legs open for me, so I could bury myself inside her sweet cunt. Would she have resisted me? Was the money so important to her that she'd continue to deny herself the release that came from only the most intimate act, of my cock enveloped within her wet channel? Is that why I can't stop myself from tempting her to cross the line? Is that why I'd set such an impossible-to-uphold term to the agreement?

Does she really think she is going to get through the next six days without giving in to me? And if I want her to fail, why hadn't I moved in when I had her ready and willing this morning? Fuck. I drag my fingers through my hair. She is not the only one getting in too deep. The difference is, I know how to turn the tide so it won't drown me. Hopefully.

I stare at the can—it's chocolate. Figures. The one thing in the world I hate more than the thought of losing her. Hold on... Hold on... I meant losing to her. Yep, that's what it is. Bloody fuck. I rub at the rapidly forming bump on my head. Did the run-in with the can knock my brains out of whack too?

I prowl up the aisle to where she stands in front of a display of frozen treats.

"How much longer will you take?" I growl

She squeaks, then shoots me a sideways glance. "You startled me," she mutters, then turns her attention back to the display. I follow her gaze to the Sticky Toffee Pudding she's salivating over. I reach for it, but she grabs my arm. "What are you doing?" she scolds.

"You want this?"

"Of course, not."

"Why do you deny yourself?"

"I'm going to be baking enough, as it is. If I also buy these goodies, I'll turn into a Christmas butter ball," she mutters.

"Don't you mean buttercup ball?" I chuckle.

She shoots me a sideways glance. "Knew I could count on you," she snarls, then turns and pushes her loaded shopping cart forward.

"Hold on."

She doesn't stop. No matter. I catch up with her, drop the tin of chocolate onto the heap of shopping. "You sure you have enough there?"

She frowns. "You mind your own business."

"But you are my business."

"Whatever." She speeds up, turns the corner and crashes her cart into a man. Some of the items fall out.

"Oh, I'm sorry." She bends at the same time that the man she'd run into says, "Excuse me." The stranger grabs a can of chocolate—motherfucker, it's the same can I'd placed there earlier. I scowl. He snatches up a few of the other items, then straightens at the same time as her. Their heads bump. Something explodes inside of my chest. My vision narrows. I stalk forward.

He places the items in her shopping cart. "I'm Hunter," he holds out his hand.

"I'm Amelie." She raises her arm, and I plant myself between them.

"And she was just leaving." I thrust my hand in his, squeeze the motherfucker's palm.

The expression on his face doesn't change; he doesn't flinch. I scowl at him.

He glances from me to Amelie. "Uh, a pleasure to meet you," he says.

"Can't say the same," I grunt.

Amelie huffs, "Don't mind him." She grumbles, "He was born with a lemon in his mouth."

I frown, "What does that mean?"

"It means that you have a terrible attitude and you are the most impolite person I know."

"Good," I mutter. "You done here?"

Hunter chuckles, "How long you guys been together?"

"We're not—" Amelie starts.

"Long enough." I thrust out my chin at Hunter. "What kind of a bloody name is that anyway?"

His expression hardens, then he barks out a laugh. "You're refreshingly candid."

"That's not all I'll be if you don't get out of my face," I shoot back.

He holds up his hands, "Not intruding on your patch, buddy." He glances around me, "Bye Amelie."

"Bye," she choruses back.

The man squeezes past me; my shoulder bumps his. He shoots me a narrowed gaze over his shoulder.

I glare back at him.

He frowns.

I glower.

His shoulders tense, then he jerks his chin.

Good, he got the message.

He pivots, walks away.

"What the hell was that?" Amelie huffs.

"None of your bloody business."

"Why are you so angry?"

"Why were you talking to him?" I snap.

She gapes, "What do you mean? He helped me pick up the groceries. What did you expect me to do? Ignore him?"

"Yes."

She shakes her head, "You've lost it." She pushes the cart forward, muttering, "Of all the crazy, asinine things you could do, this one takes the cake."

I stare after her. The hell is wrong with me? So maybe I did overreact, but hell, when he'd bumped into her, all I could think was, mine. She's mine... For the next few days, at least.

She struggles with the shopping cart, and I stalk forward, grab at it. "Gimme that."

"Fine." She raises her hands. "For being such a crazy-ass jealous man—"

"I'm not jealous."

She rolls her eyes, then snorts, "No, I forget that's your CRGPF."

I frown. "Excuse me?"

"Your chronic resting grumpy pants face," she clarifies.

Only when I'm around you. She does something to me. Yeah, she confuses me... I blow out a breath. Jesus, now I am going all googly-eyed over some chick who'd dropped in on my life and turned it upside down. You can't let her get to you; no way.

I jerk my chin.

She frowns.

I glare at her.

She pales, then juts out her chin and walks forward and out of the shop. I join the queue. When it's my turn, the woman at the checkout counter opens her mouth.

"Don't—" I growl.

"But, Sir—"

Bloody fuck, is the entire population of this village out to get me? I pull out my wallet, then separate a large stack of bills...and prop them on the counter. "Keep the change."

Her gaze widens, then she proceeds to check out the items.

Thank fuck. So, this is how it is to shop for yourself? What a nightmare. I pull out my phone, depress the buttons on the keypad. When my driver comes on the line I tell him, "I need a few things delivered to the cabin." I give him the list.

Arms full of shopping bags—I had to leave the shopping cart behind at the store—I step out and stalk toward the Volkswagen. Of course, she's nowhere to be seen. Where the fuck is she?

I place the bags next to the car, look around. A familiar figure in tight jeans, coat buttoned to show off those curves, catches my eye. She's talking to the man from the store—Hunter. What the fuck! My feet eat up the distance between us.

She reaches up, pats him on the shoulder, and a hot sensation stabs in my chest. I lengthen my strides, reach them. "Get away from her."

Hunter looks between us and frowns. "I didn't mean any harm."

"Of course, you didn't," she interjects.

I glare at her.

She pales.

"Go to the car."

She frowns.

"Now."

"But," she pouts, "I was only..."

I bend my knees, thrust my face into hers. "Do it," I command.

She opens her mouth, then seems to change her mind. Turning, she stalks off.

Thank fuck.

Can't let her out of my sight; got to keep her safe from anything untoward, and that includes strange men sniffing about her.

Hunter glances after her, "Everything okay?" He frowns.

"Shut the fuck up." I growl at him.

He turns to me, "You're Weston?"

I stiffen.

"Dr Weston Kincaid, I presume?"

"How the fuck do you know my name?"

"I'm a friend of Damian's."

"Hmph," I glare at him. "And you know him, how?"

"Our fathers are good friends."

"What are you doing here?"

"The same thing as you, I assume."

I frown.

He chuckles, "I am home for the holidays. I am also the MP for the area."

"Right." I roll my shoulders, "That why you were here? Campaigning?"

"Among other things." He smiles, "Anything you need." He holds out his hand, I ignore it.

"Stay away from her."

"You got it." He keeps his hand extended, "Take it, you never know when you might need help."

I ignore his hand while I stare at his face and something clicks, "You're Hunter Whittington?"

He tilts his head.

"You're standing for the upcoming elections."

A genuine smile splits his face, "Whew." He mock mops his brow. "My PR isn't that bad then."

I jerk my chin. So, he's a well-known politician, albeit one who's being tipped to be the next Prime Minister. We'll see.

I turn to leave.

"Make sure you stock up for the next few days."

"Why's that?" I ask.

"The weather," he says. "There's a cold spell coming on."

14

Amelie

"Cold spell, is that what they're calling it? More like, the Beast from the East," I grumble.

The wind whistles through the gaps in the shutters. I shiver, pull the shawl around my shoulders tighter. I'm sprawled out on a cushion, near the fireplace. Sir Grumpy Dickface here, had hauled in wood from the woodshed... Yep, this place has a freakin' designated space where the wood blocks are stocked. All chopped by minions before the onset of winter. To my surprise, Alphahole here, had hauled enough wood in on his own—broken finger notwithstanding—and without protest. Okay, so maybe that's unfair.

He'd helped me with my luggage, hadn't balked about carrying the bags of groceries to the car and then to the house... He'd even ridden, without complaint, in the cramped passenger seat. Unlike the journey through the grocery shop, which had been interesting. In fact, I'd been half-expecting that he'd have called his own driver to ferry us to the village, but he hadn't. Huh?

I shoot a sideways glance at the stony-faced man reading Harry Potter, Max at his feet. His hair is tousled—a perpetual just-rolled-out-of-bed look, which suits him too bloody well. He'd changed into a Henley and jeans, with soft moccasins on his feet, when we'd gotten home. Dinner had been... without incident... Actually, he hadn't said a word. And that had been...a relief...or not. Maybe I prefer his alphaholish behavior...to this lack of communication which...seems uncharacteristic.

I clear my throat, then glance toward him. His head is bent over the book.

He raises his cigar to take a puff. The scent of cloves and pinewood deepens.

I'd wanted to buy a Christmas Tree but I hadn't raised it with him... Well, given how he'd blown his fuse at my talking with Hunter... It had been cute, actually, that fit of jealousy he'd exhibited. Not that he'd admit to it. He had nothing to be jealous of, of course, but it had been refreshing to see him show some semblance of human emotion, after that rather brutish start to our relationship. Relationship? Are we in a relationship? Nah.

He blows out another puff of cigar smoke, that almost-Christmassy scent deepening. My mouth waters and I rise to my feet. "Do you have another?"

"What?" He replies without looking up. Huh?

I pause in front of him. His eyes stay glued to the page.

So, Mr. Potter is worthy of a lot of attention, but darn it, this once, I wish he'd prioritize me over the adventures of the boy wizard.

He raises the damned cigar to his lips and this time I snatch it from him.

He frowns.

I raise my shoulders, "I asked."

He watches as I lift the smoke stick, purse my mouth around the end wet from his. A shiver runs down my spine. It seems intimate to do this. I draw on the cigar, choke a little. A slight burn races down my throat. I blow out the smoke. My head spins. "Whoa," I giggle, "This is good."

"Don't inhale," he cautions me.

"I know how to smoke a cigar."

"How to puff a cigar," he corrects me.

"That's what I said." I scowl down at the smoke stick, then raise it to my lips, I take a long drag. The smoke swirls down my throat, fills my lungs. I blow it out without coughing. A buzz works its way down my limbs. My fingers tingle; my toes curl. "Hmm." I stare at the cigar, "Why is it that smoking a cigar kissed by you is almost as good as kissing you?"

"You sure about that?" His voice is tinged with humor.

I glance up, "Oh, what?"

"You want to test out that theory?"

I blink, then heat sears my cheeks. "Damn." I drag my fingers through my hair. "I didn't just say that aloud, did I?"

"You sure did." He sets the book aside on the side table, then leans back in his chair. The firelight glows off of his beautiful face, highlighting the shadows under his cheekbones. The dark blonde strands of his days-old beard glint. He resembles a pirate, an old-world marauder, someone who'd swoop in and take and ravish. A melting sensation flares to life between my legs. Oh, hell... This man, he's bloody potent.

His eyelids grow hooded; he watches me as I take a final puff from the cigar. The smoke lingers between us, framing those gleaming colorless eyes that survey me with more than a modicum of interest, and questions. Damn, he has so many questions in his eyes. As do I.

"Why did you tell me about the sex tape?" I blurt out.

The expression on his face doesn't change. He doesn't speak immediately. The silence grows, a beat, another. At his feet Max sighs. He springs up to his feet, looks at me, then at Weston, before pattering away toward the kitchen.

I glance back at Weston to find he's staring at my face.

"What?" I tilt my head. "Shouldn't I have asked that?"

He shakes his head, "Truth is, I am not sure why I mentioned it."

He rolls his shoulders, then settles deeper into the chair, "It felt like it was best to be upfront with you, considering—"

"Considering?" I prompt.

"You're coming home to meet my family, and if it did come up in conversation, I didn't want you to be surprised."

"Your family knows about it?"

He stares back.

"My mother is aware, yes..."

"Oh." I swallow, "And your father?"

"He died when I was sixteen."

Right.

"Heart attack."

My throat closes. Why is he sharing his past with me? What does it mean? Nothing. It means nothing at all. We're having a conversation, that's all it is. "Is that why you became a heart-surgeon?"

"Among other things." His features close.

Right. That sharing part? Guess I spoke too soon.

"My parents are retired and in Spain." I shuffle my feet. "I'd visit them more often, but they are happy in each other's company. They had me late, you see. I don't think they were prepared for how a child would turn their lives upside down. I mean, they never shirked their duties. Just... I think they were happy when I left home."

He scowls, "You miss them?"

"Sometimes." I raise my shoulders.

"You don't want to spend Christmas with them?"

"They uh, don't care either way, and this year... Well, I wanted some downtime, know what I mean?" I peer up into his face.

"You're spending Christmas with my family, so you won't be alone," he declares.

I frown. Am I that transparent that he'd guessed that I didn't particularly want to be alone through Christmas?

"Careful," I warn him, "or I'll begin to think that you are being nice to me."

"And what? Is it Christmas?" He smirks.

I stare, "You made a joke? Wow!" I clutch my chest, "It's a Christmas miracle."

"Don't get your hopes up." He firms his lips, "My family isn't the easiest to get along with."

"What family is?" I pull my hair over my shoulder.

"Now who's being nice?" He chuckles.

"Not me." I tip up my chin.

"Liar." His gaze grows intense.

I swallow, glance away. Shit, this is...getting... Uh, more emotional than I'd expected. "Your family," I prompt. "What did they say when they found out about your, uh, escapades?" No, I don't want to talk about his sex tape, but damn if I don't want to know more about him.

He frowns, then rolls his shoulders, "They were...disappointed."

"No!" I blink. "You Mr. Billionaire, money bags, surgeon of all he surveys."

"Yeah," he blows out a breath. "Impressing the world is so much easier than impressing your own blood."

"Tell me about it." I glance around for an ashtray to drop the cigar in, then spot it on the side table.

I lean toward it, when he reaches for the stub, "Don't."

"Don't what?"

"Don't snub it out." He takes the stub from my fingers, lays it to rest on the ashtray. "If you do, the cigar oils flow out and burn, and it causes an unpleasant smell."

"So cigars are another of your passions huh?"

"It's a thing that unites us Seven."

"All of you smoke? I mean," I make air quotes, "puff?"

"I like to occasionally indulge."

"Is it bad for you?"

"You mean because I am a surgeon?"

I nod.

"Most things that you have a weakness for are bad for you." He looks me up and down.

"And you?" I meet his gaze, "What about you?"

"I am the worst, of course."

I take a step forward. He widens his stance, and I step in the 'V' between his legs. What am I doing? Why can't I stay away from him? As long as I don't sleep with him, it's fine, right? The arrangement still stands.

"The papers?" I lower my chin. "From your lawyers, I mean. When will they arrive?"

"I'll have them for you by tomorrow."

His phone vibrates from the side table, "In fact, that must be it."

He makes no move no reach for it.

"So..." I swallow.

"So?" He runs a finger up the side of my arm. Goosebumps flare in the wake of his touch. A slow burn begins to hum, creeping, swirling up toward my heart. It would be so easy to lose myself in his presence, to forget the outside world exists. Just him and me, locked away in this cabin and—the lights blink off just then. "Oh." I glance up toward the bulbs set in the rustic settings in the ceiling.

"The wind must have gotten to the power supply."

Right. I glance down to find him watching me from under hooded eyes. If he'd been handsome before, lit by the firelight and nothing else, he's devastating now. My throat dries, my belly twists, and moisture laces the secret area between my legs.

"Weston." I whisper, "I—"

Barking sounds from outside.

15

Weston

"Did you hear that?" I stiffen.

She freezes and her gaze widens. "Was that—?"

"Max." I'm already moving. I grab her by the waist, lift her and set her aside.

She squeaks. I jump to my feet, race toward the back door. I grab the handle and the door swings open. "I swear I shut it."

Footsteps sound behind me. I turn. "Stay inside," I stab my finger at her.

"Like hell, I am." She pauses, chest heaving. Her beautiful tits rise and fall. I glance at them and my belly hardens. Shit, not the time to get distracted.

"Get back in," I growl.

"No way." She folds her arms over her chest.

More barking, this time farther away. "Fuck." I pivot, race down the steps. She follows. "Stay behind me," I growl at her over my shoulder.

Amelie juts out her chin, then nods. Thank Fuck. If she'd tried to disobey me, I'd have bodily hauled her inside and tied her up. I shake my head, dislodging the image. Hell, if she doesn't bring out the caveman in me. I turn, then bolt across the back garden. The light from the patio streams out. I race toward the shed, the direction from which I'd heard the barking. It's silent now. Fuck, fuck, fuck. My heart begins to race and my pulse rate ratchets up. I slow down as I near the shed. I hear movement behind me, then she pulls abreast. "Is there someone in the shed?" she whispers.

I train my gaze on the darkened shed. The hair on the back of my neck prickles. The knot in my stomach grows. I reach the side of the shed, press myself against the wall. Amelie follows my lead. I turn, place a finger to my lips. She swallows. I hold up my hand. Don't move, I mouth the words.

She bites the inside of her cheek, then nods. I point to myself then at the door of the shed; she jerks her chin. I turn back toward the door. Shit, wish I had some kind of weapon. I bite back a laugh as I think of her spatula. I bunch my left fist at my side. Of course, the finger on my right hand is hurt, so I won't be much use if there is, indeed, someone inside. A whine sounds from inside the shed so I move toward it. Wait, wait. There's no other sound inside. If there's someone in there... Well, I'll have to deal with it. I slip in through the crack between the door and the frame. There's a shuffling sound, then a low bark. "Max." I feel my way across the wall, hit the switch. The lights blaze in the space. I glance around, draw in a breath.

"Oh, my God," Amelie breathes next to me.

"I told you to stay outside," I remind her.

She ignores me, takes a step forward. "Wes... Your... your clocks."

My stomach knots and a hardness winds itself around my chest. "Fuck, bloody, fuck." Almost every clock in the place has been smashed. I move forward and my loafers crunch on the glass. Shit, should have changed into my boots before I rushed out, but fuck that. I stalk forward to my table. A shuffling sounds from underneath it. I pull back the chair and a growl rips out of me.

"What happened? Where's Max?" Amelia rushes forward. I plant my body in between her and the dog, but she's already there. "Oh, no," she cries out, "Max."

I sink down to my haunches, reach for Max. He whines, shrinks away. Fuck. "Something—more likely, someone—scared him."

The poor pup is shaking. My gut tightens and my pulse pounds behind my eyes. "I am not going to let him get away with this," I swear.

"Who? Who could do this?" Amelie's voice is low.

"I don't know, but you can bet your ass, I am going to find out." I lean forward, lay my hand on the side of Max's head, "Shh, it's okay, little guy. I'm here now. We'll take care of you, hmm?"

Max whines, folds further into himself.

"Fuck," I swear aloud and he flinches.

"You're frightening him."

"Don't be silly," I growl.

Amelie squats down next to me, loses her balance and grabs at my thigh to right herself. Pinpricks of heat vibrate out from her touch. I glance at her hand, which seems too delicate, too fragile against the broadness of my leg. She leans forward, on her knees, holds out her hand. "You okay, baby?" she croons.

Max blinks up at her, then whines. Is he playing it up for her? No, he's hurt, but why the hell did he back away from me? And why is he shuffling forward toward her? She caresses the side of his face, rubs her palm over his flank. He whimpers, then crawls toward her. She lifts him up, carefully, and cradles him. "You poor thing, are you hurt? Don't worry, we'll take care of you now." She turns to me, "We need to take him to the vet."

I place my hand in front of the mutt's mouth. He blinks, then licks my fingers. "Let's go." I rise to my feet. She follows, cuddling the dog close to her chest. His little body trembles. Why the hell didn't he want to come to me? I frown, looking from the dog to the tiny woman who rocks him, making soothing noises in her throat. A strange feeling coils in my chest. Jealousy? A little... That the dog preferred her over me... Not that I blame him. Given a choice I'd have laid my head on her breast...and done more than just cuddle, of course. Enough, motherfucker. Best get them both out of the shed, at least. I step over the glass. "Watch out," I caution her. She glances down at the glass, places a foot between the shards. "You're in your socks?" I swear.

"Yeah... I didn't have time to get my shoes."

More glass shards crunch under her feet. I growl, "Fuck that." I turn and sweep up both woman and dog into my arms. She squeaks, "Put...me down." Max continues to shake.

"Not a chance"

"But you're hurt."

"And you'll be hurting on parts other than the soles of your feet if you don't shut up."

"Oh," she draws in a breath. "I can walk," she mumbles.

"You're not wearing shoes." I stalk forward. "How could you be stupid enough to come out without your shoes?"

"Excuse me for caring enough about little Max," she huffs.

"You should have stayed inside, like I told you to."

"Why the hell are you angry now?" She frowns.

"You don't want to know." I stalk toward the cabin. "It's enough that I have to take care of the mutt, add you to the mix and—"

"You don't have to take care of me."

"Right," I mutter. "Tell that to the thief who decided to break in."

"Not my fault that the lock to the cabin was weak."

"There's a security system for both the cabin and the shed... And one that runs around the perimeter of the property that—"

"The cabin," we both say in unison.

I jerk my gaze down to hers.

Her face whitens. "You don't think he went to the—"

"Only one way to find out."

I tighten my arms around her, "You should stay here while I go check out the cabin."

The lights flicker then go out.

"Oh, no," Amelie squeaks. "Do you think the intruder had anything to do with this?"

I frown, not wanting to answer her.

She draws in a sharp breath, coils in closer to my chest. Hmm... this is not too bad, huh?

"Are we safe here?" She gulps, "Maybe you should call your driver and we should leave here?"

What, and miss this opportunity to find out how much more she can take before I break her? No fucking way.

"Relax." I infuse a tone of reassurance into my voice. "It's probably the incoming storm."

"You... you sure?" She peers up at me.

"Positive." I glance down at her upturned face. The starlight brings out the silver in her blue eyes, turns the blonde hair about her shoulders to spun gold. Spun gold? What the fuck? Clearly, I've been reading too many fairytales to my younger niece. Jesus, do I still have my balls or what?

"Oh, look." She raises her chin.

I glance up as the first flakes of snow hit my nose. "That's all we need," I grumble. "Fucking snow."

"It's beautiful, isn't it?" Her voice is dreamy.

I glance down to find her sticking out her tongue to catch a flake.

"It's polluted water," I warn her.

She scowls, "No one can accuse you of being a romantic."

"No one can accuse you of being practical."

"If I were, I never would have left home at eighteen to go to culinary school, against my parents' wishes."

"Where did you study?"

"At Le Cordon Bleu, Paris."

"Funny, I can't see you at a snooty French course like that."

She frowns up at me. "You're right," she replies, "I hated it. The course taught me a lot, gave me the basics, but... I couldn't wait to get out of there and into the real world."

"You don't like rules, huh?"

"I like to be free."

"Do you?" I allow my lips to twist.

"Of course." She scowls, "Why do you ask?"

"I think you'd like to be tied down. In fact, I am positive you'd love to test your limits; to find out how much you could take before you break down and beg for your release."

She gulps; her pupils dilate.

"You... You're wrong." She whispers.

"Are you sure?"

16

Amelie

"Of course, I am." I squeeze my thighs together. Damn it, stop imagining the scene he's laid out.

He doesn't know me or my needs or my likes. He has no idea how close he came to hitting on a certain forbidden dream I've harbored... One that I won't give in to, no matter that it is being laid out by the meanest, sexiest toad-in-the-hole ever. And that would be an insult to toad-in-the-hole's everywhere. I blow out a breath. I totally have to stop with these weird food-related metaphors that I seem to come up with when I am around him.

"How do you know if you haven't tried it?" He lowers his voice and studies me, "Have you tried it?"

I bite down on my lower lip. Damn it, why can't I lie to him? Say it; do it. "Uh... Not really," I venture.

His eyes gleam, "I think you might be surprised."

"The only surprise would be if there isn't an intruder in the cabin," I mutter.

He walks up the patio, past the now-silent hot tub. He stops at the entrance. "I need to go in and check the place first," he grumbles.

"I'm coming with you."

"It's safer here."

"It's colder." The snowflakes intensify, more of the white, powdery stuff sticking to my lips. I lick them off. His nostrils flare. Did that turn him on? Why is he so attuned to me? Is that why he'd laid out that stupid condition that I can't sleep with him if I want the money? Maybe it was to give me a way out of having sex with him... Except damn it, now I want to shag him. OMG!

Do I want the money so badly that I'll do everything but allow him to fuck me? Okay, don't answer that. It isn't fair, putting this big ol' hunk of chocolate slab on one side and my future on the other. Would you give up his spotted dick for the chance at realizing your dreams? Not that his dick is spotted...but it has a certain rhyme to it, know what I mean?

He bends as if to lower me to the floor.

"No, no, please no." I pout, "Don't do this. Don't leave me out here alone." Max whines to punctuate my words. Good boy.

He glares at me. His shoulders seem to swell. The full force of his dominance seems to weigh down on my shoulders.

I gulp, "We...Weston?" Crap, why is my voice trembling?

"You owe me, Buttercup." His voice is low, hushed.

"Can... can we go in?" I shiver.

He frowns, then jerks his gaze away and in front. Whew. The breath shudders out of me. I glance forward as he steps inside the house. He walks into the living room. It's silent, the space lit by the flames from the fire.

He glances around the space, his muscles tensed. I look up at the jut of his jaw. The hair covering his face seems thicker. Jeez. Do his whiskers multiply by the hour or something? Isn't that a sign of virility? At this rate, he's gonna have a Santa Claus beard by the time it's Christmas Day. And he can take me across his knee anytime. I snicker, and he looks down at me, catching me off guard. Heat sears my cheeks.

"What were you thinking?" he growls.

"N...nothing."

"Don't try that. I know exactly when your thoughts turn X-rated."

"Huh?"

Max grumbles in his throat.

"I think you can put us down now," I manage to say.

He stares at me a second longer, then stalks over to the cushion in front of the fire. He lowers me down to it. Max wriggles in my hold. I place him on the floor and he stretches, yawns, then patters off toward the kitchen.

"Well, he seems okay." I clear my throat, the adrenaline fades away and my limbs tremble.

"Hmm."

"Should we take him to the vet?"

Weston straightens. "Let's watch him tonight, and if he shows any signs of trauma tomorrow, we can take him then. I think he just had a fright."

"That's a plan." I yawn so hard, my jaw cracks. My eyelids seem heavy all of a sudden. "Sorry," I mumble. "It hit me all at once, I think."

He peels off the socks from my feet. His fingers brush my ankle. I shiver. He runs his fingers up the heels of one foot, then the other. Goosebumps pop on my skin. "What are you doing?" I say, breathless.

"Making sure you didn't cut yourself."

"I'm not hurt," I insist. I tug on my foot and he releases me.

"You should take off your loafers." I say.

"Excuse me?"

I glance down at his feet, "Uh, you're dragging in the snow from outside, not to mention the glass pieces from the shed."

He frowns, then retraces his steps to the door, toes off his shoes. I stare at his beautiful feet... beautiful naked large feet. My throat closes. My belly flutters.

I had no idea I had a foot fetish, until I met Dr Grumpy Pants Kincaid. Hell I had no idea I had a fetish for other male parts either... Not all male parts... Only his male parts. My belly flutters. My throat closes. Bloody hell. Clearly, I am obsessed.

"Why don't you wait here?" His voice cuts through my thoughts.

I tip my head up to meet his gaze, and warmth laces my cheeks.

"You okay?" He frowns.

No, of course not.

"Of course I am." I fold my hands in my lap.

He looks at me intently until I nod, then straightens. "I'll check the cabin and lockup, to ensure we're safe. Then we can go to bed." He grabs a log and heads toward the bedroom.

My eyes widen, but before I can worry too much, that dumb voice inside of my head chimes in. We. Gah! He used the 'We' word. I stare up in his direction. Doesn't signify anything, bitch. Wait, does he mean go to bed to sleep or go to bed for something else? And omigosh, isn't that all cozy? So domestic. Would it be like this if we were together...? Maybe married, with kids... What the f—?

"Bedroom's clear," he says as he stalks toward the other end of the house.

I shake my head, push myself up to my feet. Clearly, I am delusional, or the Christmas season is affecting me, or the way he'd swept me up in his arms like I didn't weigh anything at all, and proceeded to carry me in here had made a huge impact on me. No one had ever done that before. No one. Shit. I am this...close to doing something stupid. Gah! Like giving up the money and giving in to him. No, no, no. I need advice. Need to talk with someone.

I march to the bedroom, which is illuminated by the moonlight coming in from the window, then reach for my handbag; my fingers brush my phone. Huh?

So he decided to return it to me? When had he put it back? Why would he do that? Is this his way of making up for the douche he's been thus far? My head spins. Talk about being complex. The alphahole is certainly the most complicated man I've ever met; and the most intriguing... Don't forget gorgeous. Why does he have to be this difficult though? It sure makes this entire relationship hard work... And unique... No wonder I can't stop thinking of him. And no... Our relationship is strictly professional. Yea, keep telling yourself that, bitch. Regardless, I am going to take every break I get... Like this phone. He returned it; now I can use it.

I grab the phone, glance around.

Where can I speak without him hearing me? I walk into the ensuite bathroom, lock the door behind me. Shit, it's dark. I switch on the light on my phone, walk over to the bath candle at the head of the tub. I grab it, rummage around in the drawers under the sink, until I find a lighter. I light the candle, place it on the counter next to the sink.

Then, for good measure, I crawl into the bathtub.

I swipe the phone screen, notice a text message. It's from Julia, one of my oldest friends. She'd left high school, gone to Australia for her gap year and stayed on as a nanny for a family there. Last I heard, she'd planned to stay on for another year. I peruse her text:

Hey Amelie, change of plans. I'm returning to London. Should be there just after Christmas. Can I stay with you until I find a place of my own?

Oh, yay!

It's going to be awesome to have her back, especially considering Summer is on her honeymoon. Victoria is still in that early stars and sunshine phase in her relationship with Saint. Karma... Well, she seems to have forgotten about us, since discovering her hottie on her extended Sicilian sojourn—a hottie she is still hiding from us. So that leaves me and Isla—the only other single woman in our clique, and Julia, when she returns.

I text her back:

Awesome news.

Can't wait to see you! Of course you can stay with me. Come over when you land.

I press send, then call Isla. She picks up on the third ring.

"Hey," her voice is breathless.

"Did I disturb you?" I keep my voice low.

"Nope. Just me and my Hitachi getting all cuddly." She snickers. "If I were to fall pregnant now, I'd give birth to batteries."

"What the—?" I snort, then swallow down the wrong way and start coughing. "That was such a bad joke, it was good." I clear my throat. "At least someone's having fun." I bite down on my lower lip.

The silence stretches, then, "Amelie?"

"Yeah."

"You okay?"

"Of course."

"Why are you whispering?"

"Because I don't want to be heard?"

"Aren't you at the cabin?"

"Yep."

"So why the secrecy thing?"

"What secrecy thing?"

"You're still whispering, babe."

"Right."

"Amelie?" she asks, worry in her voice. "Everything okay there?"

"There was a break-in at the cabin."

"What?" I hear the sheets rustle, then the click of a lamp, "Are you okay? What happened."

The line buzzes and I glance at the screen. She's asking for access to video mode. I decline.

"What the hell?" She demands. "Why aren't you on video?"

"Uh, because, I'm hiding in the bath tub."

"What the—?" Her voice sharpens, "Why are you hiding? Did the intruder hurt you—"

"I'm fine," I mumble.

Why'd I have to go and blurt that out to her? Maybe I needed someone to empathize with me, huh? Not that Weston hadn't. He had taken care of me, even if it was grudgingly... Still, I needed to hear a familiar voice, someone unthreatening with whom I don't need to pretend.

"Then why are you still whispering?" Her voice sharpens, "Is the intruder still there?"

"No, no. I think Wes scared him off."

"Weston?"

"Yeah."

"He's there with you?"

I draw in a breath. "I walked in on him, completely naked, as he was wrapping up his hot tub session."

Silence, then she chuckles, "You found him naked?"

"Yeah."

"In the hot tub?"

"He'd just been in...yeah, and he didn't have a stitch of clothing on and he had a cigar."

"Hot damn." She laughs, "Talk about phallic symbols, hmm?"

That's true. He'd been all but sending me subconscious signals... Okay, seeing his massive dick upfront? Not that subtle...but you have to give the man full marks for making an impression.

"That's not all," I add.

"You mean there's something to top off that picture?" She chuckles.

I frown, "Wipe that image from your mind, please."

Silence again. "Did you just ask me to refrain from imagining the hot doctor naked?"

"Yeah." Shit, I know how that sounds... But I really don't want her going there... Nowhere near that very male, very gorgeous naked ass...or dick, of said doctor...because...well I am...

"Are you jealous?"

Of course, I am. "No, no, nothing like that..." I bite my lips.

"It's fine; I understand." I can hear the grin in her voice.

"Nothing to understand."

"You're holed up with him over the festive season, huh? Planning a hot and dirty week, eh?"

"No, no," I hasten to clarify, "nothing like that."

"Oh?" Her voice is credulous.

"No, seriously, uh... He wants me to meet his family over Christmas."

The silence stretches this time. A beat, another.

"Family? Christmas?" Her voice sounds strangled. "Isn't that uh, premature?"

"It's part of the deal."

"The deal...? What deal? Amelie, what the hell is happening there?"

The phone vibrates again; I glance at the screen. She's asking for access to my video again. I huff out a breath, then agree.

Isla's face fills the screen. Her eyes are wide, concern writ across her features.

"Finally," she huffs. "The hell have you gotten yourself into?"

"Me?" I frown, "Why are you yelling at me, when it's that asshole's fault that I am here in this bath tub?"

"Where is the doctor?"

"He's shutting down the house for the night."

She raises an eyebrow.

"What?"

She makes the motion of zipping her lips, "Nothing."

I scowl, "Out with it, bitch."

"It sounds like you two are playing house up there."

"Yeah, and Max is our child," I say, only half-joking.

"Sinclair and Summer's puppy?"

"Yeah, Weston's dog-sitting."

"He can't be that much of an asshole if he's dog sitting."

"He knows how to fool people, huh?" I mutter.

She peers up at me through the screen. "The deal," she prompts. "What's that all about?"

"He's paying me a million pounds a day for my time."

"A million?" she splutters. "You sure?"

"Yeah, we shook on it."

"Hmph." She purses her lips, "He's filthy rich. No doubt, he can afford it." Her forehead furrows, "And what does he want from you in return?"

"Uh, I'm going to have to housekeep for him, until we leave here."

She bursts out laughing. "You? Housekeeping?" Isla has been to my place.

"Shut up," I say, before giggling along with her.

She snickers, "So, what does that mean? Housekeeping." She emphasizes the word, as if it has a hidden meaning.

My cheeks heat. "Well, uh..." I shift my body. Why can't I get comfortable? "It means I have to do everything he wants."

"Ooh," she perks up, "you mean kinky games?"

"Sort of..." I look up at the ceiling before continuing, "except, I'm not supposed to sleep with him."

"Excuse me?"

I hurry to explain. "As long as I don't have sex with him, I get the money."

She blinks rapidly. "That..." she frowns, "that makes no sense."

"Right?" Glad I'm not the only one who thinks so.

"I mean, shagging him would be almost as good as getting the money in your account."

I squeeze the bridge of my nose, "This entire thing is gonna go tits-up on me."

"So, he'll come through with the money. You're confident of that, right?"

"Right."

"And all you have to do is get through the next few days... Break bread with his fam..."

"Yeah," I nod.

"So, what's the problem?"

I stare at her.

"Oh." She tilts her head, "OHHHHH."

I turn down my lips, "Now you see?"

"You want to ride him horizontally?"

"Don't be crude." I laugh.

"You want to fuck him, get it on with him, shag him until you can't walk straight, until you're enveloped in a sex haze...?"

"Gee thanks," I mutter. "Thanks for laying it all out there."

"So, do it." She raises her shoulders.

"What?"

"You want him; take him. He won't say no. Shag him; live out your wildest dreams with the dirty doctor."

"And then?"

"Then go back to your life."

"My indebted-to-hell life," I complain.

"That does suck..." she taps a finger to her forehead, "unless."

"Uh-oh!" Do I want to hear this?

"You, change the terms of the deal."

"You think I could?"

"Sure. Revise it to include money and sex."

"Ah...But..."

"What?"

"Doesn't that make me a slut...in his eyes?"

"Aren't you already one?"

"N...no." I mean... "Maybe."

"Is it him or yourself you're worried about?"

"I don't understand."

"You want to keep your conscience clean—keep your skirts clean, so to speak. Do what he wants, on his terms, take the money, and run."

"Yeah."

"Think you can keep it that simple?"

"I..." I hang my head, "I'm not sure."

"So, call off the deal. Forget about the money. Go for the man."

"But... but, I need the cash."

"Then do as he says."

"I don't want to." I pout.

She throws up her hands, "Gah, you're making my head hurt."

"Tell me about it." I press my fingers to the bridge of my nose.

"So..." she scans my features, "What are you going to do?"

"I don't know."

There's a knock on the door. "Amelie?" Weston's voice reaches me.

"You okay in there?"

"Shit, I gotta go."

"Let me know what you decide."

"Thanks, Iz."

"Bye, babe."

Weston bangs on the door again and raises his voice, "Amelie? Is everything okay?"

"Yes, coming." I walk over to the commode and flush it. Then check my appearance in the mirror over the sink. My hair is all over the place, skin flushed, no makeup, lips wiped bare. Ugh. And is that...? I lean in closer. Yep, there's dog hair on my sweater. "Damn it." I take off my sweater, glance around, then toss it into the laundry basket. My blouse is crumpled, but it'll have to do.

"Amelie?" Weston sounds pissed. "You coming out or do I need to come in there?"

"Hold onto your britches," I yell back, slide my phone into my pocket, then turn toward the mirror. I mean, it's not even a question anymore, is it? No sex. That's fine. I can still stick to that plan, but it would be nice to have a bit more fun with him at least, no? I grab the bottom of my blouse and whip it off.

"Amelie." Weston juggles the knob, "I'm coming in."

"Wait!" I toss aside the blouse and scamper for the door.

17

Weston

She opens the door, and I stare. Her tits... Her beautiful...gorgeous breasts, ensconced in her bra salute me. I glare at her chest, then at her face.

"Just," she swallows, "getting ready for bed."

I frown down at her. She walks forward. I don't move.

"Uh, excuse me?" She squeezes through the space between me and the door jamb.

She saunters over to the bed, walks past her suitcases propped up against the wall, to her side of the bed. She unzips her jeans, shoves them down, bends to take them off. Her heart shaped butt juts out. I clench the fingers of my right hand, wince when my injured finger protests. "Fuck," I growl.

"You, okay?" She tilts her head, shoots me a glance from her bent over stance.

I glare at her and she pales. Then straightens and kicks her jeans to the side.

I take a step forward.

She scrambles over to the bed, "Uh, I think I'll go to sleep." She slides in between the sheets, pulls the comforter up to her chin. She turns over on her side.

I'd lit candles on the side tables, and their light flickers across her delicate shoulder blades. Her creamy skin is perfectly smooth, perfectly soft, perfect to be marked by my fingerprints. I take a step toward her, then clench my fist at my side. What the fuck? Is she playing with me? And I'd started this goddamn game. What a bloody mistake. Why the hell had I put the money between us? Why hadn't I flipped the agreement the other way? Asked her to sleep with me in exchange for the money? Fuck. I reach the bed, stand over her.

Her shoulders quiver. So, she's aware I am here? Hmm.

Her fingers clench at the covering that flows over her shoulder. I reach for the fabric, tug. She shudders, then releases her grip on it. I draw the sheet down the curve of her waist, down the jut of her beautiful arse, until it pools about her ankles.

The swell of her butt catches the candlelight—gorgeous, beautiful, curved at just the right circumference, it'd fit so right into my palms.

My fingertips twitch. I sink to my knees by the bed, press a kiss to that point where her waist meets the swell of her hips.

She shudders. "Weston," she whispers.

"Shh." I nibble my way to the swell of the enticing flesh to the valley between her butt cheeks.

"Oh, my God." Her entire body quivers.

I am not a religious person—well, not unless you count the time I'd been kidnapped and had prayed to every power that might be to help me... And now, faced with the sheer gorgeousness, the beauty that is this woman unclothed— Yeah, I send up a prayer of thanks to that power that I am here. Is this why the cops had found me, still and lifeless, ready to give up? I had been hanging on by a thread, reaching for something in the distance, not within reach...a belief that I'd get through it. Can I get through these days with her? When, with every moment, she is sinking into my blood, wrapping herself up around my heart... Heart? What? Fuck that. I am not ready for that kind of entanglement.

Nothing and no one will undermine the lifestyle I've worked so hard to build. I'll never let another in... I fuck them and leave them. That's what I am good at. I'll never allow myself to lose control. Never put myself in a position where I am vulnerable.

I slip my tongue into the space between her arsecheeks. Her entire body jerks. "Wes," she moans, and my groin hardens.

"Do you want me, Princess?"

"Ah," she gulps, "I... You know I do."

I squeeze her arse, part the cheeks then nudge my tongue into her backhole.

"Jesus, Wes," she groans. "What are you...doing?"

"What do you think?"

"Why do you always answer my question with a question?"

"Because it's my prerogative to ask and yours to submit."

She huffs, "Where is that written?"

"In Doc Kincaid's manual of '100 ways to torture—I mean—pleasure a woman,'" I chuckle.

She stills, "Bet you have it written down too." She grumbles, "Methodical and detailed grumpy pants that you are."

"You think you know me, huh?" I nibble my way down to the apex between her legs, slip my tongue in to the sweet hollow of her pussy.

"OMG," she hisses, tries to pull her legs up.

I grip her thigh. "Don't move," I growl.

"But," she whines, "this is not fair."

"Good." Time she felt a little bit of the agony she's been putting me through. I lick the entrance to her channel and her entire body bucks. I slide my hand around to cup her pussy, slide my tongue in and out of her wet, melting core.

She groans, throws out her hand to clutch at a pillow.

I bring my other hand up to squeeze her breast and she cries out, "Why are you doing this?"

"Because... I can?" I murmur against her center. "Because you won't stop me?"

"Does this... Uh, count as—?"

"Breaking the arrangement?"

She nods.

"No," I slurp the moisture that trickles from her center, "but all you have to do is say the word and I'll put you out of your misery."

"Fuck," she hisses.

"Yeah, exactly." I allow my lips to curve into a smile, then press little kisses to the back of her thigh. I suck on the soft skin, and the taste of her goes to my head. I bite down on the tender flesh and she moans.

"Please, please, please," she pants.

"You know I can't." I smirk. "But say the word, and I can take you—" I drag my tongue up her thigh, retrace my way to her backhole, "here."

"Oh," she gasps. "I... I...am not sure about that."

I raise my head, slip a finger back inside her puckered hole. "You mean

this?"

She groans, "I... I think I hate you."

I twist my finger inside her, then slide two fingers inside her pussy.

Her body jerks, goosebumps pop on her skin, a quiver works its way up her legs, her thighs, she clenches her butt around my intrusion, and her pussy clamps down on my finger.

"Oh, my God, Weston, I am going to—"

I pull my finger out from her asshole, from her channel, then rise to my feet.

She stills, "What the fuck?"

She turns on her back, then springs up.

"What are you doing?"

I yawn, "I'm tired."

She gapes, tracks my progress around the bed to my side. I grab my sweatshirt and peel it off, along with the vest I have on underneath. I reach for my pants.

She squeaks, "You're undressing?"

"It happens." I smirk, "I have been known to do so when I want to get into bed."

I shove down my pants and boxers. I kick them aside and straighten. I turn to face her. Her gaze widens as she takes in my full-frontal nudity, rakes her gaze down my stomach to where my dick stands to attention. I'm aroused—of course, I am. And that's too fucking bad. I don't intend to do anything about it. Guess I am going to suffer along with her... Uh, who am I punishing here? Her or me? Both of us. Right, whose idea had this entire fucked-up arrangement been?

I climb between the covers, then fold my hands behind my head.

Next to me, she stays perfectly still, muscles vibrating with tension. The nervous energy vibrates off of her, reaches out to me. My shoulders bunch. I close my eyes, begin to count down.

Twelve o'clock.

Eleven o'clock.

Ten o'clock.

She shifts position.

Nine o'clock.

Eight o'clock.

She turns over on her side, facing away from me.

Seven o'clock.

She mutters under her breath.

Six o—

She sighs aloud.

That's it. "What's wrong?" I snap.

Silence from her.

I close my eyes again.

Six o—

She jerks on the cover, pulls it off of me.

"What the fuck?" I turn to her, "What's wrong?"

"I'm...c...cold." Her teeth chatter.

I frown. The temperature had dropped and the heating hasn't come on yet.

She shivers again.

I turn, scoot over, then drag her to me.

She squeaks, "What are you doing?"

"Making the fuck sure that I can get some shut-eye."

I tuck her head under my chin, lock my arm around her waist, and pull her close enough for my dick to nestle between her arsecheeks.

She wriggles her hips, "You're... Uh, you're hard."

"Deal the fuck with it," I growl.

"But, I can't—"

I close my palm over her mouth, "Sleep, Princess."

She draws in a breath, another, then licks my palm. My cock instantly lengthens. "Don't do that, not unless you want to be brought to the edge of climax again...and left unfulfilled."

"You won't," her voice is muffled against my hand.

"Try me." I snuggle her closer, throw my leg over her thigh. She stills, muscles wound up. I close my eyes, start my countdown.

Six o-clock.

Five o'clock.

Her chest rises and falls.

Four o'clock.

Her breathing deepens.

Three o'clock.

Her shoulder muscles loosen; her body twitches.

Two o'clock.

I lower my palm to cup her breast. Not intentionally, of course. It's a logical resting place. Besides, the shape is a perfect fit for my palm. Sleep overcomes me.

Something cold nudges my face, a wet tongue licks my mouth, "Seriously, Buttercup, we need to talk about your morning breath." I crack open my eyelids. Max gazes soulfully at me. I am on my back; Max rides my chest. He flicks out his tongue, I turn my head to the side, then stiffen. The bed is empty. Where the hell is she?

I set Max aside, swing my legs over the side, and head out of the room. A crash reaches me from the kitchen, then a scream. The fuck? "Princess?" I race toward the commotion.

Amelie

"Aw... Hell... Butterfingers." I glance down at the mixing bowl I had overturned. I'd woken up early, determined to try a new recipe for chocolate banana muffins...and managed to drop the bowl.

No wonder he calls me Buttercup. But I admit, I prefer Princess. There's a thud of footsteps, the sound of barking. I glance up as Weston barrels through the door and into the room, Max on his heels.

"What's wrong?" He stalks into the room, "I heard you—"

His shoulders block out the rest of the room. The planes of his chest are hard. I rake my gaze down his concave stomach, to where his cock juts out between those powerful legs and those gorgeous feet that he's currently about to place in a puddle of chocolate sauce.

"Watch out—"

His feet slip on the gooey streak on the floor and his big body tilts back. Shit, I leap forward, reach for him... I mean, what the hell am I trying to do? It's not like I could stop him from falling, and hello, he isn't wearing any clothes, so I couldn't exactly grab onto anything, except...Well... You know. A-n-d nope, I don't want to risk hurting that part of him. I stumble aside.

Too late, I realize I am about to step on a banana peel. Yes, really, a banana peel. Can my life get any more cartoonish? I twist my body, lose my balance anyway, and pitch forward. "Oh, no, no, no," I wail, throw up my hands, squeeze my eyes shut and connect nose first with a hard barrier. Shock waves ricochet through my head, down my spine. The breath whooshes out of me. "Ugh!" I flail around, and my arms are caught and twisted behind me.

"The hell is wrong with you?"

His voice rumbles below my ear and that's when I realize I am sprawled over his body. His very naked body. My cheek is smooshed against that delectable chest, my breasts flattened against that eight pack, my pelvis positioned right over that hard, gorgeous part of him that stabs into the cleft between my pussy lips.

Max dances around us, barking near my ear. "Max, stop," I pant, then try to pull back from the annoying man I am currently draped over.

He scissors his legs around mine, "Stop struggling."

I tip my chin-up, "What are you trying to do?" I scowl.

The light shining through the window brings out the gold flecks in his eyes. Huh? So his eyes aren't completely grey? Imagine that.

"I heard you scream." He glowers up at me, "I was convinced there was an intruder in here."

"No, it's just me," I huff. Gosh, he's grumpy first thing in the morning, huh? Is it because he hasn't had his way with me yet? Would stabbing his dick inside of me put him in a better mood? My thighs clench. My nipples tighten.

He tilts his head, his lips taking on that curl that I hate... And love. Oh, my God, stop acting like a sex-crazed slut—but hello, can you blame me? That mussed up hair, that broad chest, over which I am sprawled. That warmth of his that rises up from his big body, to coil around me, sink into my blood, and travel straight to that emptiness in my center. Gah, stop that.

I push back; his grasp tightens. That hard length of his pushes up and into my very eager center. I gulp. Okay, don't panic; don't. Pretend it's normal. Just a conversation, that's all this is. I tip up my chin. "I, uh, had a little accident," I mutter.

"I can see that." He pushes back my hair that's come loose from its bun on top of my head, then rubs at a spot on my cheek. He brings it to his mouth, sucks on his digit. "Chocolate." He grimaces, "Of course, it's chocolate."

"Is there any other kind of ingredient worth waking up early for?"

"There are other reasons worth losing sleep over," he smirks.

I scoff, push at his chest, "Let me go."

"No."

Max shoves his face between us, aims his tongue at Weston's mouth. Wes groans, turns his face the other way.

Max barks, wags his tail, turns to me instead. I crane my head away, "Chocolate isn't good for you, Max," I scold.

Max pants, then shoves his nose into my throat. "Ooh, it's cold." I giggle. He licks my throat, then proceeds to place his paw on my breast.

"Hey," Weston releases my arm, grabs Max by the scruff of his neck and places him aside. Max barks. The moment Wes lets him go, he jumps forward toward me, shoves his nose down my blouse.

I laugh, "Max, no, that tickles."

"Bloody hell," Weston swears. He releases both of my arms, then grabs Max. I roll away from him. Weston jumps to his feet, stalks across the kitchen and places Max in the hallway. He points a finger at the puppy. "Chocolate on the floor, buddy. I don't want you getting into that." Max groans.

I swear, that dog can speak.

The mutt blinks up at Weston who shakes his head. "Nice try little fella, but you can't come in here right now." He closes the door.

I spring up to my feet, and slip again, on the gooey dough this time, slide forward, tilt back, grab hold of a chair which tips over. Gah! The world tilts again; I squeak, throw out a hand, which is grasped. I am pulled upright.

"Steady." There's amusement in his voice.

"Thank you." I tug on my palm, but his grip tightens around my wrist. He tugs, I careen forward, and he grabs me and swings me up. I wind my legs around his waist.

"Hello, there." He waggles his eyebrows.

"What are you doing?" My voice is breathless. Bloody hell. His dark, edgy, masculine scent entwines with the chocolate-banana notes of the muffin mixture. My mouth waters and it's not for the muffins. My head spins and I dig my fingers into his shoulders.

He walks to the other side of the table, then plops me on it. He keeps his fingers on my hips. "That's better."

"For...for what?" I clear my throat.

"For breakfast, of course." He grins, then steps back. He leans around me, grabs the chocolate sauce we bought.

I frown, "I was going to use that to cook."

"I have a better idea." He holds it upside down, squirts. I glance down to find it dripping into the valley between my breasts.

"Wh...what are you doing?" I gulp.

His lips curl, he drops his head, and licks the sauce from the top of my cleavage toward the hollow of my throat.

"Oh," I stutter.

He sucks on the delicate skin at the base of my neck and I feel the tug all the way down to my core. My pussy spasms and my thighs clench. "W... Weston," I plead.

He pauses, "Do you want me to stop?" He leans back, "Should I leave?" He takes a step back.

I throw out a hand and grab his hip, "Wait."

He tilts his head, "What do you want?"

I want you inside me; I want you to fuck me right here. I blink, "I... I want to complete the recipe I set out to cook."

He frowns, "You want to make breakfast?"

"Y...yeah," I nod, "it's a new recipe I'm trying out for—"

He scratches his chest and my gaze drops to those cut abs. Not that I hadn't noticed them before... I mean, I'd managed to look away though, so he wouldn't catch me staring, but now that he's drawing attention to it, well... I can't help but stare. "For a doctor you sure have a great physique."

"For a chef, you sure haven't figured out the obvious."

I frown. "What do you mean?"

"You were making... What was it you were going to create?"

"Muffins." I frown, "Banana chocolate muffins."

"The oven," he jerks his chin over my shoulder, "the electricity's not back."

"Oh!"

"And the refrigerator isn't working either," he adds. "Or didn't you notice?"

"I... I didn't," I confess, and I had opened the refrigerator to pull out the ingredients I needed. Hell! I drag my fingers through my hair. "How can I be such a ditz?"

"Maybe your mind was otherwise occupied?" He chuckles.

"How do you mean?"

"Want me to spell it out?" He takes a step forward.

I shake my head, "No, no, it's fine. You're right, I was, uh, thinking of other things."

"Oh?" He smirks, "Did it involve me in anyway?"

"Ah, your family actually. When, uh, when do we set off to see them?"

"In four days."

"Four days." I gulp, glance around the room. Four days, during which I still have to resist him. How the hell am I going to get through this?

"What should I do about breakfast?" I pout.

"I have an idea." His grin widens, "Why don't I make my special instead?"

Twenty minutes, later I sit across the table from him. He'd, thankfully, changed into sweats and a long sleeved T-shirt, which damn, it only set off his broad shoulders even more. I mean, the only thing to beat the sight of this man unclothed is him sitting across the table, with Max at his feet. I'd cleaned up the kitchen by the time Weston had returned with the little guy in tow. I'd topped off Max's bowl, which he'd wolfed down in minutes, before taking up his position by the table.

Now, he watches as Weston pours the cereal into the bowls. He tops his off with milk, offers it to me. I refuse. Yeah, for a chef, I don't like milk. Not in my tea, nor in anything else.

"This?" I mutter, "This is your idea of cooking?"

"Hey, don't mock it until you've tried it."

He uses his uninjured hand to dip his spoon into his bowl, and begins to eat.

"It's not chocolate," I whine.

"Precisely." He scoops up more of the stuff.

I frown, "How the hell am I going to get through the days without cooking?"

"You could clean."

"Yeah, well." I shuffle in my seat. I absolutely hate household chores. Yeah, a tiny detail I'd left out. I know.

I glance down at my bowl, begin to scoop up the mixture. I eye it, then force some of it into my mouth. The flavors explode on my tongue. I crunch down, swallow it, reach for more.

"Not bad, huh?"

I raise a shoulder, "It's all right." I eat some more. "I couldn't use firewood to fire up the oven, could I?"

He stares across the table, "Probably not."

"Can I call someone to come and take a look?"

"I already called for service, but they won't come until the storm blows over."

I frown, glance out the window. Snow comes down in heavy flakes. It does look bad, and if people are being careful before venturing out... "Maybe the roads will be blocked and we won't be able to get there?"

"The storm's supposed to blow itself out in 48 hours."

Right.

"Maybe the roads will be too slippery?"

"I've asked my driver to come by to take us there."

"Your driver?"

"He's on standby in the village."

Of course. My shoulders droop. And I'd been hoping to put the time to good use by trying out new recipes, huh?

"Perhaps," he rolls his neck, "I could take a look at the generator."

"You would do that?" I cry.

"Hmm." He looks me up and down, "How badly do you want it?"

I frown, "What is that supposed to mean?"

He leans forward, "I mean, how far would you go to get the generator working, I wonder?"

I swallow, wriggle around in my seat, "How far do you want me to go?"

"I want you to beg."

"Excuse me?"

"Beg me to do it."

"No," I scowl.

"Fine then." He pushes back from the table, pivots to leave.

I frown, watch him as he prowls toward the door. I train my gaze back on the man, or rather on that fine piece of ass of his, those power thighs that undulate as he puts more distance between me... And the muffins I so very much want to bake. Is there not one thing in your life that you can complete? Not a relationship? Just about hold onto a business that if you don't comply with his wishes... You'll lose the money to ensure that it survives. Ugh, why do I always find myself stuck between a rock and a hard place? And no, I am not talking about certain parts of his anatomy that would give granite a run for its money.

He steps out of the kitchen and I call out, "Wait." I spring up and my chair careens back. "I beg you," I call out, "please fix the generator."

He shoots me a look over his shoulder, "Get on your knees, and ask like you mean it"

"Wh...what?"

"You heard me."

I scowl. If he thinks I am getting down on the floor—I confess, I didn't do a great job of cleaning up earlier and there are crumbs everywhere. Ugh! Note to self: make sure to be more detailed in all parts of your life, so it doesn't come to bite you in the arse—or in the pussy— My thighs tremble.

"Do it," he tilts his head, "or our deal is off."

"Fine, fine, whatever," I huff, then swing my leg onto the table.

Weston

"What are you up to?" I frown as she scrambles up onto the table, on her knees.

She looks at me with wide eyes, "What? I'm doing what you ordered me to do."

I growl.

"You didn't specify where." She flutters her eyelashes at me.

I scowl. Of course, I didn't, but then, I hadn't expected her to kneel on the table either. This woman... Every time I think I have her pegged, she throws me a surprise. Goddam it. I pause at the door. Max whines, and I bend down to pat him. He pushes his nose into my hand, then drops back on his hind legs.

"Stay there." I growl, then straighten, and shut the door in his face.

"Why...why did you do that?" she squeaks, her tone so close to panting that a chuckle grips my throat. I swallow it down, then turn and crack my knuckles. "Why do you think?" I growl.

She gulps. Fear and excitement wafts off of her. Fuck! My dick thickens. She watches me as I prowl toward her, closer, closer. I pause in front of her; her spine straightens.

I roll my neck; she winces.

I glare at her and color fades from her face. "What...what are you going to do?" she whispers, all wide eyed, and my groin tightens.

I put my finger to my lips.

She swallows. Her eyebrows knit as I circle around the table to stand behind her.

"You misinterpreted what I said," I chide.

"What?"

"I told you to kneel."

"I'm kneeling."

True. I scratch my chin, "Sassy and impertinent. You don't know how to follow orders, huh?"

"I'm not one of your patients," she scoffs.

"No, our relationship could never be that...professional." I place my palms on either side of her body, bend toward her, forcing her upper body forward until she puts her palms on the table.

She shivers. Does she feel the heat from my body? Does she realize how much I want her right now?

"Weston," her breath hitches, "what are you doing?"

I palm her butt. The silence stretches a beat, another.

She shudders. "You... Are you..." She arches her back, and I flatten my palm onto the center.

"Am I?" I prompt her.

"Are you going to punish me?" her voice cracks.

"Should I?" My lips curl. I apply pressure and she curves her spine, juts out her arse.

I release her, step back. Hmm, perfect. I raise my left hand, "Beg for it." I take aim.

"For what?" She turns to glance at me over her shoulder, her gaze wide, lips parted.

Blood rushes to my groin. Hell, I haven't started, and already, I am so close to losing control. One glance at her upturned nose, that sweet mouth, and all my promises to myself go out of the window.

"Eyes forward," I growl.

She gulps, then obliges, turns her face to look ahead. Thank fuck. Any more sass from her, and I swear I'd have turned her over my knee... And that would have been too easy...for her...for me... Yeah, this is more arousing—the anticipation, the build-up, the sweet ache as she waits...waits.

"Say it," I snap.

"Please," the words tumble from her lips, "slap me, spank me, treat me like I'm your..."

"My—?"

"Your property, your uh—Christmas present."

"That the best you can do, Princess?"

"Like you're Santa and I'm a naughty child." She swallows.

"And have you been a bad girl?" I lower my voice to a hush, "Tell me, Princess."

"Yes," she breathes, "I have been terrible. I disobeyed you. I willfully misinterpreted your directive, I—"

My palm connects with her butt.

"Ow," she howls, "What are you—?"

I raise my hand, bring it down on her arse with enough force that her entire body jolts.

"Ah!" she cries out.

Crack, crack, crack. I slap her on alternate arse cheeks.

"Argh." She throws her head back, her shoulders shudder, she squirms, and tries to pull away.

I grip her hip. "Stay," I command.

A ripple shivers up her spine. She tenses, clenches her thighs together.

"Or you can go."

She draws in a breath.

So do I.

Will she go? Will she take this opportunity I am giving her to get away?

"Nothing standing in your way, Princess," I remind her. "You can leave right now. Walk away, and I won't stop you."

"The money," her voice is low, but I hear her. Of course, it comes down to that.

"I'll pay you for the two nights you spent here."

"You...you would?" She half turns, then changes her mind and positions her head to stare forward. "You'd do that?"

"Of course," I mutter. "I'm a jerk, not a cheat."

"And I'm not leaving."

"Say that again."

She gulps, the sound loud in the silence of the room.

"I... I want to stay."

"You want to see this through?"

She nods.

"Why?"

"You're not the only one who wants to fulfill your side of the bargain."

"Good." I slap her arse.

"Hey," she snarls, "I told you I wasn't leaving."

"And I am not letting up."

She lowers her chin, "And when you're done, you'll take a look at the generator?"

"You bet."

"Fine," she tosses her head, "have at it—"

I step back, walk around her to drop into my seat, and resume eating.

"What are you doing?"

I crunch down more cereal.

"I'm talking to you," she scowls.

"I'm not."

She stares at me as I shovel more of the disgusting stuff into my mouth. Cold breakfasts have never been my thing. And since when have I wanted to taste chocolate-laced savories in the morning, huh? Come to think of it, when had I begun to stop hating chocolate? Bloody hell, this woman is changing me and she isn't even trying.

I push back, stand, "I'll check out the generator now."

I turn to leave and there's a sound behind me. I hold up my hand. "What do you think you're doing?" I ask without turning around.

"Uh, I'm going to finish my cereal?"

"No."

"What?"

I pivot to glare at her over my shoulder, "You stay right there, Princess."

"Bu...but," she blinks rapidly, "you're leaving."

"And I haven't given you permission to move."

She gapes, "So you want me to stay right here, on the table, on all fours?"

"You can get naked if you want," I chuckle, "or not. Up to you."

"You're a prick," she mumbles, "a sadistic, jerk-face, wanker."

"And you're going to obey me," I inform her.

She glowers at me, "I hate you."

"And I love that wrinkle you get between your eyebrows when you're angry." I blink. Did I just say that? I didn't say that. And the worst thing? It's the truth. I frown at her.

She stares back.

"Stay." I stab a finger in her direction, because well, I need to reinforce my rich prick status. Then turn and leave.

I make a detour to collect my phone from the bedroom, then step out, past the silent hot tub. At some point in the night the snow had turned to rain. Now as I stalk across the lawns they glisten from the overnight storms.

When I reach the shed at the back, I hesitate, draw in a breath, and walk in. The glass from the broken clocks glitters on the floor. I stare at it, my life's work—a fortune in antique clocks that I'd bought and fixed myself. I walk to the nearest one, pick it up. Its face is cracked, but the mechanism works. I could piece it together once more. I glance around the space... Hell, I am going to reassemble every single one of these pieces. That's not the problem, though. I stalk forward, toward the table at the far end. Fact is, someone was here... They intruded on my privacy... Which I don't give a fuck about... But her... She was here. So was Max. They'd frightened the dog and it could have easily been her. They could have hurt her... My belly knots. Fuck, if I am going to let that happen again. And it's only because I am responsible for her, until Christmas... Perhaps until the New Year, if I have my way. I cannot put her at risk again. Whoever targeted me, won't hesitate to come for her either.

I have to find a way to protect her...for as long as she is here... And later? I cannot allow them to get to her.

I pull out my phone. My first call is to the company that manages the services to the cabin and the shed.

I give them the go-ahead to switch on the electricity to the kitchen, and only to the kitchen. With the fancy bucks we pay to the private supplier, anything is possible. As for the water supply? I ask them to ensure there's only enough for two days—nothing like water running out to test the mettle of a person, huh? As for the power cut? I orchestrated that too. Just a test, a way to exert complete control over the situation, and on her. Only I hadn't counted on a goddam intruder, violating my personal space. If something had happened to her—! My shoulders bunch. Goddam it, I have to find out who was behind the break-in.

Then I dial Damian's number.

"What?" he grumbles.

"Did I disturb you?" I ask.

"Yes." He yawns. "You woke me up, you knob."

"Good." I roll my shoulders, "We have a problem."

"Not we," he mutters, "you." He yawns again, so loudly, I hear the sound of his jaw cracking over the phone. "Don't pull me into your personal shitstorm, motherfucker," he warns.

"The shed was broken into last night."

There's silence, then, "What do you mean 'broken into'?"

"Exactly that." I begin to pace. "Someone got in, then got to my collection of clocks."

There's a pause. "Didn't know you still collect and repair them."

"I never stopped."

I also don't talk about this affliction of mine with the Seven.

"I had Karina check on the security for both the cabin and the shed, so whoever managed to break in—"

"Was no ordinary burglar," he completes my thought.

I stay quiet and the silence extends.

"The Mafia." I blow out a breath. "They were behind this," I growl. "I should have known that they wouldn't stop coming after those close to us."

"And is she?" Damian asks.

"What?"

"Is she close to you?"

"We are sharing the same cabin," I snap.

"That's not what I meant."

"That's all you're getting," I retort.

Damian doesn't respond.

"If the Mafia thinks this is going to scare us off, they are wrong." I snarl.

"We won't stop until we find out who among the Mafia was behind our kidnapping," Damian agrees.

"If they're breaking in and entering now, they must be getting desperate," I mutter.

"We must be getting close to a breakthrough." Damian grunts, "Have you heard anything from Saint or Sinner about the latest on the investigations?"

"Not since they found their lady loves," I gripe. "Not that I begrudge them their happiness, but clearly, it's time we take things into our own hands."

"The New Year's eve party," Damian replies. "We'll all be there."

"Everyone except Baron." I say, referring to one of the Seven who prefers to stay clear of us and conduct his business remotely.

"Except fucking Baron," Damian agrees. "The rest of us will be there. We are bound to get an update then."

"Right." I pinch the bridge of my nose, "Meanwhile, I need to up the security here at the cabin."

"You going to ask Karina for help, again?" Damian asks.

"Why wouldn't I?"

"You know how upset Arpad's going to be about that?" he replies.

"Whatever is between her and Arpad is not my problem," I bite out. "Her investigative and security services are the best in the business and—"

"You can't trust anyone else when it concerns the safety of those you care about?"

"Right," I nod.

He chuckles.

I frown, then straighten. "I mean, no," I growl. "I mean, yes, I can't trust anyone else with securing the space and no, I don't care about her."

"Man, you're delusional," he scoffs.

"What is that supposed to mean, you piece of shit?"

He laughs, "When you get repetitive in your insults, I know you're not thinking straight."

"Fuck that." I frown, "Are you helping me or not?"

"Do I have a choice?" he replies.

"Nope," I bark, then move the phone to my right hand. "I'm stuck here with this bloody broken finger, with my woman..."

"Did you say your woman?"

"A slip of the tongue." I grunt, "I'm here with her and Max, and it's my responsibility to keep them both safe."

"That's all this is about, huh?"

"Of course, what else would it be?"

"You tell me." I hear the grin in his voice.

"Once you're done indulging your asinine sense of humor—maybe you could sober enough to hear me out?"

"Aren't you forgetting to say something?" he drawls.

I stay silent.

"A word beginning with 'p'?" he prompts.

"Piss off." I oblige him.

He chuckles, "Good to know you have some game left in you yet."

"That was me being polite, you tosser," I growl. "If you don't help me out, I'm going to release the video I have of you making out with your harem."

"Harem?" his voice is cautious.

"You don't think that what takes place in Vegas actually stays in Vegas."

"You recorded me?" his tone is flat

"Don't pretend you didn't do the same." It was a trip the two of us had taken, a few years ago. The rest of the Seven hadn't been available that year over the Christmas break and I had flown into LA to join Damian. We'd taken his private jet to Las Vegas... And the rest, well...as they say, it's recorded for posterity. His, not mine.

"What do you take me for?" Damian laughs, "Of course, I have a stockpile of pics and videos on each of the Seven, including you." His voice is pleasant. "Perhaps I should upload the video of you..." his voice trails off.

"Yeah," I quip, "I jerked off to you and your three women, which face it, is nowhere as interesting as what I have on you. Not that it doesn't make you look good... I mean, they were all over you, and your face can only be seen in one frame." Which would be more than enough for him to capture the headlines of the media that day. "It's slow over Christmas, and you have a big single coming out. No doubt, it would ensure that happy families everywhere would want to look you up to find out what the fuss is all about." Not. It would effectively cost him his reputation... Oh, he'd recover from it all right, but not before the Christmas single tanked... Probably.

"Whose idea was it to release a Christmas song anyway, huh?" I snicker. "Isn't that what reality show winners and washed-up rock stars go for... Oh, wait." I laugh, "That's what you are, someone who's yesterdays' news."

"Fuck off," he growls.

"With pleasure, after you've promised to help me."

"After that incredible selling job, how can I refuse?"

"Aww," I coo, "did I hurt your itty-bitty wittle feewings, Mr. Rock Star?"

"Sometimes I am not sure why the Seven of us keep in touch," he grumbles. "It's not like there's much love lost between us."

"Maybe it's something deeper," I muse, "a shared moment—a few days in time that changed the course of our future."

"There is that." He sighs, "I could, of course, release your video anyway and see how it plays with your little girlfriend, huh?"

"Not my girlfriend, and PS, I told her about the sex tape already, so—"

"You told her?" He coughs. "Isn't that unusual for you?"

"What?" I frown, "Just making sure she understood that she can't underestimate my sex god status." I brush an imaginary speck from my sweater, as if he can see me.

"You being upfront with a woman?" I sense him shake his head. "So, it's that serious, huh?"

"Of course, not."

"Just for that, I'll do this for you."

"For what?" I crack my neck.

"To see you fall. Fuck, it must be something in the air..." He continues, "It started with Sinner, then Saint, and now you."

I move the phone away from my ear, and stare at it before switching to speakerphone, "I have no idea what you're talking about." I frown.

"Of course, not." His voice is calm, "You have no idea, do you?"

I grit my teeth, "You're getting on my balls, Savage." I growl, "One click and your video gets uploaded."

"No, you won't do it," he retorts.

"Wanna test me?"

There's silence, then he sighs, "The fuck do you want from me?"

"Listen," I speak into the phone.

"There is no we in chocolate."

-From Amelie's diary

Amelie

The overhead light flickers and comes on. I blink. Guess the alphahole kept his word. He managed to fix the power supply to the kitchen, which means I can bake. Yay. I bite down on the inside of my cheek, glance around the space. Why does everything seem so bright? The place is bigger than I realized. The candles I had lit earlier appear weak. Too bad the attraction I feel for him shows no similar signs of waning. Dark or light, morning or night... It's a constant source of irritation that gnaws at my gut, forces me to act out of character. Like now. Why am I still on my hands and knees, on the bloody kitchen table, waiting for him?

I had said that I would obey him, but surely, this is out of bounds, even for someone like him. I mean, leaving me stationed here like I am his...possession? Am I his? Do I belong to him...? What hold does he have on me that I'd rushed to do his bidding? What would have happened if I'd gone against his decree? Hello... What am I thinking? Decree, huh? I snort. Like he is the master of all he surveys and I am his... Don't think it; don't think it. Slave!

Noooo, I can't allow myself to think that.

I can't allow him to have this hold on me.

But the money...the bloody millions that he holds over me? Well, he said he'd deposit the money for the nights I've already spent here...and Weston wouldn't go back on his word. Well neither would I, and I am still here, right? I'm not leaving.

I am simply, a woman standing in front of the most dominant, hot-as-fuck, alpha male she's ever met, wanting to ask him to fuck her.

There you have it—the story of my life. That ol' perception-reality thingummy... The one I can't hide from when I face the mirror.

Guess there had been more comfort in the gloom of the morning light. Everything had seemed so much more intimate. Now—I glance down at myself—I see myself through his eyes. A stupid woman, who'd allowed this obnoxious, mean-ass to manipulate me... To use his money to seduce me, to coerce me to do his bidding. Where's your pride, Amelie? Where's that strength of character, that streak of obstinacy, that blind confidence in yourself that had you taking risks...and loans...and putting everything you have into this venture? Turning your passion into a livelihood? My bloody foot. What a pipe dream. I'd sailed along blissfully in my little boat, even though I was fighting against the current... Until Weston bloody Kincaid had unleashed a storm that threatened to engulf my teacup. He can dip his teabag in my hot water anytime. I giggle, then shake my head. That's it. I am losing it, completely.

I straighten, scramble back, then off the table. My knees creak and my thighs spasm. Jesus, am I out of shape or what? I stalk over to the shelves by the oven, lean down and rummage around. There! I snatch up another large bowl—not a mixing bowl, but it could work. Thank God, we bought enough flour and chocolate and bananas to last me another round. I grab my provisions, measure out the flour on the old-fashioned scale. Seriously, it has weights and everything, I snort again. Lifestyles of the rich and famous, huh? They have all the time in the world... No, they have servants; that's what it is.

I pour the flour into the mixing bowl, break the eggs, then begin to beat it together. When it's smooth enough, I reach for the ripe bananas, peel the remaining three and drop them in. I mix them in too, then pour in the milk.

I hum to myself, shimmy my hips, taste some of the concoction. Yum.

Footsteps sound behind me, "What are you doing, Princess?"

His voice is all casual, nothing threatening about it, and that makes it worse. I straighten, reach for the pack of chocolate chips.

"You're only making it worse by not answering."

His voice is right behind and above me. I yelp, lose my grip on the packet and the entire thing tips in. "Gah!" I place the half-empty pack to the side, then whirl on him, "Look what you made me do."

"I give you one thing to do." He holds a finger right in front of my face, "One, and you disobey."

"You were gone a long time."

"Less than half an hour."

I throw up my hands, "Exactly. How long did you think I'd stay in that ridiculous position for you?"

He bends his knees, then peers into my face, "Until I gave you permission to move."

I toss my hair back from my face, "I couldn't wait, I wanted to get back to the baking."

"Is that right?" His voice lowers to a hush and my nerve endings spark, "So eager to make your crumpets—"

"Muffins." I correct him.

"Same thing." He shrugs.

"It's not." I gape at him, "Why do you constantly try to get on my nerves?"

"Because I can?" He looks me up and down and my belly quivers. He raises his gaze to my face, "Because you are mine for the next four days—mine to command, to order about, to play with as I see fit."

"I'm not your...fuck toy."

His eyes gleam, "Don't bet on it."

I purse my lips, then tilt my chin up, "You're beginning to annoy me. You're illogical as hell, full of yourself, totally obnoxious, and cannot decide what you want."

"Oh?" He peels back his lips and his teeth shine against his tanned skin.

"If it wasn't for your...your...broken finger...I'd..."

"You'd..."

"Teach you a lesson."

"Go on," he drawls, "try me."

"Don't say I didn't warn you," I mumble.

"I'm soooo afraid." He holds up his hands, as if to ward off an attack. "Princess Buttercup and her idle threats. Has no one warned you not to play with the big bad wolf?"

"Your references are all mixed up," I snarl.

"And that disgusting mixture in that bowl... Is that the best you can do for breakfast?"

That's it, I am letting him have it. He can say anything about me, but my cooking? No fucking way. I am bloody good at what I do, and no one, definitely not a neanderthal, alpha billionaire can take that away from me. I make a noise deep in my throat.

His features brighten, "Ooh, did I hurt your feelings? Does the princess want to be saved from herself, yet?"

"Newsflash, alphahole." I shove my hand behind me, search for the mixing bowl. "This Princess can save herself."

My fingers brush the smooth surface, I snatch the vessel, fling its contents at him.

21

Weston

"Oops." Her lips quiver and her chin wobbles. She drops her gaze to my chest.

I glance down to find splotches of the brown gooey mixture sticking to my pullover. "That item of clothing costs £7000," my voice is calm. No hint of the anger that bubbles up inside... Along with something else—frustration. 48 hours... I've tried to teach her to obey. I've ordered her to obey me, told her to follow my directions. I've walked naked in front of her, slept with my body coiled around hers. I've raced toward her when I thought she was in danger... Been on the phone making sure I could find a way to protect her... And what does she do? She greets me with this...this goop? A low growl rumbles up my chest.

She blinks, "Did you just...did you?"

"What?"

"You, ah, sounded like Max when he's frustrated."

I glower, "Did you compare me to a bloody mutt?"

A snort spills from her throat.

The fuck? "Are you laughing at me?"

"Me?" She bites down on her lower lip. Her cheeks redden. She lowers the bowl—her hand trembles... Is it from my proximity or from the weight of the vessel? Maybe it's fear of how I'll react. Good. The blasted container dips. I grab hold of it.

"Ah, thanks," her voice is strangled.

"Don't thank me." I reach past her, lower the bowl to the counter.

"Wait," she bursts out.

"What?" I frown.

She angles her body, scoops up some of the mixture. She glances from it to me, "It, uh, has chocolate."

"So?"

"I missed a spot."

"Excuse me?" I glare at her.

She bites her lips and her eyes gleam.

"Don't you fucking dare, Princess, I—"

She tosses the stuff at my face. It hits my cheek, and some of it drips down my chin, onto my chest.

"There," she angles her head to the side, "much better."

"That's it," I growl, "you're going to pay for that."

She squeaks, tries to duck around me. I plant my injured hand on the other side of her, caging her in.

"Apologize," I growl.

"No."

"Say you're sorry."

She sticks out her tongue, "You can go and dunk your swollen head in that stupid hot tub."

"I have a better idea." I reach for the mixture in the bowl, scoop up a palmful.

"No, no, no." She angles her body, takes in what I am doing. "You won't," she breathes.

"Oh, you bet I will." I smash the gooey stuff in her face.

She screams, wriggles around. I thrust my hips into her, to hold her in place, then rub the mix into her face, down her neck, across her chest... over the fabric of her blouse that encloses her breasts, and draw circles around her erect nipples. The blood rushes to my groin. My dick lengthens, nestles happily into the valley between her legs.

"Wes... Weston," she gulps.

"Shh!"

I glare at those peaked delights. I reach behind her to gather more of the goop and trail it over one breast, then the other. The mixture dribbles down from each mound. "Beautiful." I lower my head, close my mouth around one.

"Ah," a moan leaves her mouth. "Wes... Please."

I glare up at her. "Stay still," I command. "Don't say a word."

She purses her lips, draws down her eyebrows. She opens her mouth.

I click my tongue. "Don't," I growl, "Nothing; nada."

"But—"

"Another word and I'll stuff this mix in your mouth, and I promise you, that would be a waste, cause I plan to use every drop of your muffin mix to draw out your pleasure."

She swallows, then presses her lips together.

"Excellent."

She stares at me.

"Should I reward you for that little bit of compliance, hmm?"

She nods.

"All right then." I reach behind her, snatch up some of the mix. I hold my fingers to her lips, "Open."

"But—"

I plop my fingers inside her mouth. She bites down with her teeth and I feel the tug all the way to the tip of my dick. My cock thickens, pushes up into her.

Her gaze widens.

"Feel that, Buttercup?"

I bring my other hand to massage her breast, then press my hips forward with enough pressure that her pelvis cradles every throbbing inch of my very aroused shaft.

She swallows, and the suction on my fingers, sends a shudder of heat racing down my spine.

"Fuck." My breathing grows shallow. I ease my finger out from between her lips, and bring it to my own. I lick my glistening fingertips.

She moans, "Jesus." She gulps.

"Nothing to do with the man above," I mutter, "but if I don't have you right now, the one between my legs is going to hate me for a long time."

She chuckles. "You're so corny." She grins up at me, her features alight, with so much mischief, so much life, that fuck, my cock thickens even more.

I frown. "Silence," I snap.

She winces, then pouts.

Fucking adorable. I shake my head. The fuck am I doing, thinking about her in those cutesy adjectives? And cutesy—? What the fuck? How did that even get in my vocabulary. I frown down at her and she stares back.

"I'm corny, hmm?" I reach behind her, grab the bowl with both hands, then upturn it over her head.

She gasps.

The mixture flows down her face, her neck, her chest, down to where our bodies are joined. "That's better." I place it down behind her, then straighten. I step back, rub the mix down her front, across her stomach, to the valley between her thighs.

Her breath hitches.

I pat the mix into the apex of her thighs, onto her jeans.

"Ah," she trembles. I sink down to my knees, then thrust my face into her sweet, core. I bite down on the fabric that covers the crotch of her jeans and her entire body bucks. She grabs at my hair and tugs. The pain rams straight down my spine, to my cock. I grip her thighs, pry them apart, then dig my teeth into the now-damp cloth that stretches across her pussy.

She screams. "Oh, my God, ohmigod...oh...my..."

I rise to my feet, bringing her up with me, and hoist her onto the counter and straight onto the bowl I'd placed behind her, which tips sending more of the gooey mess to pool around her. She shivers, tips her chin up.

"I need to be inside of you."

She nods. She opens and closes her mouth, her gaze pleading with me. But she doesn't speak. About time. "You worried about our arrangement?"

She jerks her chin.

"So maybe I should..." I step back.

She scissors her legs around my waist.

"Don't want me to go, huh?" I study her face. "Want me to fuck you?"

She frowns back.

"Where?"

She purses her lips.

"In your mouth?"

She shakes her head.

"Your pussy?"

She nods.

"I have a better idea." I lean in until our breaths mingle, "How about I take your arse?"

She swallows; her pupils dilate.

"You want that, huh?"

She bites down on her lower lip and her little teeth worry the tender skin.

I rub my thumb over the swollen skin and she gulps. "Maybe I'll save that for later, huh?"

Her shoulders rise and fall.

"Maybe I shove my fingers in your arse, while I tear into your pussy with my dick, while I stick my tongue down your throat?"

She nods, then shakes her head, then throws her hands up.

I know the feeling. "Decisions, decisions." I chuckle.

She digs her thighs into my hips, uses it to leverage herself up, then smashes her lips to mine.

Amelie

I press my mouth to his, fold my arms about his shoulders, and proceed to climb him, like he's a massive tree... Or hell, like he's Santa fucking Claus, come to grant me all of my wishes. Is it Christmas yet? Gah! Almost... though it sure seems like all of my dreams have come true. This man... He drives me mad, he makes me want to slap him and kiss him. Love him and hate him... Throw myself at his feet and beg him to put an end to this growing, yearning, emptiness inside. I cling to his big frame, bite down on that full, pouty lower lip of his that's hypnotized me since the first time I saw him. I slip my tongue inside his mouth, suck on him, pour all of myself into that kiss. My head spins, my pussy clenches, and my nipples hurt. I lose my hold and begin to slip down, the muffin mixture sloshing and giving with each contact of my clothes against his. Shit, I scramble to hold on, and he places his broad palm against the seat of my butt.

Heat instantly flushes up my spine. I shudder.

He wraps his other palm around the back of my neck, and holds me there.

I release his lips, lean back—well, put as much distance between us as his firm grip allows, which is about uh—an inch...maybe a little more. Our noses bump; his long eyelashes graze my forehead. Hell, how can a man have such feminine lashes?

"So greedy," he mutters, "so damn sexy. Such a tiny package, but so much potency packed into those curves."

Shut up and fuck me already, is what I want to say. Instead, I hold his gaze, look deeply into those grey eyes, past the colorless, mirror-like surface, to that darkness that pools inside, the flecks of gold that intersperse their depths. Contradictions, such complexity he holds within himself.

"You can trust me." I whisper.

He blinks and his features open with the surprise.

"I won't hurt you," I add.

Where is this coming from? If anything, he's the one who can break me. His dominance could crush me, his strength could render me powerless, as his lips tease me, taunt me, his fingers dig into the curve of my hips, and his dick throbs against my aching center... "Please," I mumble. What do I want from him? Why is it that this push-pull between us makes it so difficult to bare myself to him? I cup his cheek, "Take me. Use me. Fill me up with your cum, bury yourself inside of me, and fuck your past out of me."

Wait, did that even make sense...? "I mean—"

"Shh..." He rubs his nose against mine, the gesture tender and gentle and so unlike any other emotion he's shown toward me. A pressure builds behind my eyes. Shit. A little bit of affection, and I'm ready to bawl my eyes out.

He rakes his gaze down my features, then he brushes his lips across mine, once, twice. He lowers me back onto the countertop. "You on birth control?"

I blink.

"Are you?" He frowns.

I nod. "Yes," I clear my throat, "I'm just coming off a relationship so..."

He glares at me and I feel the blood drain to my core. How the hell does my body recognize his intentions before my mind has fully digested what he wants from me?

The sound of a zipper being lowered reaches me. Air hits my swollen center. "Up," he growls.

I wind my arms about his shoulder, raise my butt. He shoves down at my jeans which move an inch, then get stuck around my hips. "Umm."

He shakes his head and I stop talking. He glances around, notices my chef's satchel on the table. He hauls me up by the waist, turns and takes a step, then plants me on the table. I'm not light, I have curves—Hey, don't begrudge me my chocolate—and of course, he's a powerhouse of muscles, but the way he maneuvers my body... Well... My knees turn to jelly. Bloody hell, this guy is machismo personified, and I am putty in his hands. And now—he whips out a pair of kitchen scissors. Then steps back, holds up my leg and proceeds to cut the fabric up one side.

What the—?

He does the same for the fabric on my other leg and it falls away, then cuts my blouse at each shoulder.

"Weston—"

He shakes his head.

"You can trust me," his lips quirk as he repeats my words back at me.

Can I though?

I frown.

He locks his gaze with mine, then raises the scissors. He glances down, then I feel the give of my bra straps. My breasts spring free. His nostrils flare. He bends, licks a nipple, before sucking on it.

Goosebumps flare on my skin.

"So fucking sweet, you're one melting mass of chocolate, Buttercup."

Jeez, he makes me sound like a dessert...which is flattering, I suppose.

He pulls back, I hear the snap of the blades cutting through the fabric of my blouse. The garment falls off. Air hits my skin, goosebumps pop along my forearms, and my nipples harden.

He straightens, places the tip of the scissors to the center of my chest, without cutting the skin. I shiver. He drags the blade up over the mound of one breasts, circles the nipple, which instantly pebbles further. Down to my belly button. I swallow. He glances down and his breathing grows labored, "Fuck me," he growls. "I can't hold out any longer."

He tosses the scissors aside, reaches for his zipper and lowers it. His cock springs forward—big, throbbing. I've seen it before...but somehow, he seems bigger. More aroused. The swollen tip is almost purple with need, and drops of precum bead the slit. Saliva pools in my mouth; my chest rises and falls.

I reach for him, but he grabs my wrist. "If you touch me, I won't last," he growls.

I frown, implore him with my eyes.

His gaze intensifies, then his lips quirk. "Later," he promises. "For now, I am going to take your cunt." He swoops down, grabs my thighs under my knees, pulls my legs up and apart so they're at my ears and I fall back to my elbows. He glares down directly at my sex.

OMFG! My head spins. I am open and displayed for him, my arousal so strong I can smell myself. Is that gross? His nostrils flare... Uh, guess he can scent me too?

"Look at yourself." His grip tightens, "You're so wet, so ready. You want me, Princess?"

Gah, is that even a question? "I..." I open my mouth and his lips curl.

Trick question, huh? I pout again, thrust my pelvis up and against his hold.

His smile widens. "Hold yourself open for me," he commands.

I blink. He can't be serious.

"Do it," he snaps.

I don't even realize I've rushed to obey him until I feel my fingers brush my cunt. Damn him, is there anything this man can't get me to do? I pry open my pussy lips, and his gaze intensifies. "Fuck me," he mutters, "I am going to drink from you."

Yes. Yes.

"Scoop up your cum and offer it to me."

Wh-a-a-t? My vision narrows. Black spots dot my line of sight. My heart begins to pound so hard, I am sure it's going to break out of my chest.

"Now."

His hard voice whips through my head, erasing every other thought. I am a vessel, an empty canvas which he'll paint with his cum. No, what? Don't think. Don't react. Do what he asks. I slip one finger, then a second into my channel. My chest heaves. His throat moves as he swallows. He's as affected by this connection... This, whatever it is that he's doing to me, is arousing him just as much. I curl my fingers inside of myself and a moan rises up. It's nowhere close to what I need, but the way he watches me... How he follows my movements with his heavy-lidded gaze...is as erotic as looking on while he fucks me... Okay, I lie... Not the same... But it is hot nevertheless. Know what I mean? I hold up my glistening fingers, and he closes his mouth around my digits, drags his tongue over the skin. My sex clenches and more moisture pools in my core.

"How the hell do you taste so sweet?" He licks his lips, "Of chocolate and the most tempting honey."

"You hate chocolate," I mutter.

"That's true." He tilts his head, "But, it tastes different on you."

"It does?"

He nods. "It tastes like sin when I lick it off your lips."

"Oh." My belly quivers. That was almost poetic. Gah! Who'd have thought the brute could actually string words together until they sound erotic.

"In fact," he peers into my features, "I am convinced you have desserts for all three meals." He stares at me, "You do, don't you?"

"What do you think?"

"I bet you sneak that black gold in between, too." He lowers his gaze back to the triangle between my thighs, "Makes me wonder if you taste as incredible there as you did the last time..."

Why don't you try it for yourself; why don't you—? I gasp as he does just that—drops his head, licks me from asshole to cunt, and again. He stabs his tongue inside my channel, and begins to drink from me. He slurps on me, licks my swollen nub, lavishes attention on it, then bites on it. Goosebumps flare on my skin; I arch my back off the table, push myself up and into his face. More, more. My fingers tingle. I itch to take my hands off my pussy, to grab hold of his hair and tug him to me, to force him to fuck me with his tongue until I come.

"Don't you dare."

I blink, to find him leaning above me.

"I'm not done yet."

What's he talking about? I'm done, more than done. I'm on the verge of exploding like a pie that's been left too long in the oven. Ugh, these comparisons are terrible, and my brain cells have turned to mush.

"Eyes on me," he commands.

I watch him as he lowers his chin, his unshaven whisker-edged visage, and rubs it up my pussy.

"Ah!" My entire body bucks. I writhe under his touch, thrash my head from side to side, "Oh, my God, oh, my God." He does it again and I see stars. The climax rushes up from my toes, screams up my spine, and threatens to explode. I can't stop, I can't.

The next second he straightens over me, positions his dick at my entrance. "Condom," he growls, then reaches into the back pocket of his pants, pulls out a wrapper.

Does he walk around with one all the time? Was he that confident that he was going to fuck me...? When the agreement was for us to do everything but? Will this change things between us? What will become of the money? Could I allow him to pay me after this...? Wouldn't that reduce everything between us to something it wasn't? What is it anyway, what—?

"Stop."

He frowns down into my face.

I draw in a breath. Am I that transparent? Or is he that perceptive? Does he have a sixth sense that he can focus on simultaneously wrapping his dick and reading my expression? What the hell am I thinking? Why am I tying myself up in such knots? I glance around... What the hell am I doing here, with him, holding my pussy open to him like a sex-crazed pervert? I withdraw my fingers from my cunt, open my mouth to speak. He leans in and presses his lips to mine. He swipes his tongue inside my mouth, across my teeth, draws from me, shares my breath so absolutely. I stutter.

He pulls back, peers into my face, "Do you want me to stop?"

Do I?

"Once I take you, there's no going back."

Uhhh?

"If you want to leave, I won't stop you."

Won't he?

"But if you stay..." he glares at me, "if you stay, you're mine."

Weston

"Mine to protect. Mine to possess and break. Mine to fuck so hard you won't walk straight for days, and when you do, you'll sense my cock in your deepest most intimate of places. I plan to not stop, not until we've fucked whatever is between us into the open, until my skin fuses with yours and I have invaded your secrets, gleaned your fears, and infused your innermost thoughts with my presence."

Her pupils dilate, and her face pales.

This is it then; she's going to refuse me. I've bared myself to her, told her what I am thinking about and she'll decide it's not for her. She's going to turn away from me, tell me she doesn't want me or my money. She's going to — She reaches out her hand, tugs at the condom I hold. She rips open the wrapper, then reaches down between us. She eases the condom over the swollen head of my cock, struggles with it. The condom slides over the rim and she smooths it down. I glance up to find her forehead furrowed in concentration. That line between her eyebrows crinkles. I lean down and press my lips to it. She positions my shaft at the entrance to her pussy.

"I want you," I mutter against her forehead. I press my lips to her eyelids, one after the other, to the tip of her nose, then press my mouth to hers, " I want to kiss you until your mouth can't ask for more." I nip on her chin. "Every part of you tastes of a different dessert."

She giggles and the sound is so light, so beautiful. My throat closes. I pull back enough to take in her features, watch her gaze widen as I kick my hips forward and impale her. Her mouth parts, a soundless scream that only I can hear. I wait for her pussy to adjust to my girth, for her channel to grip my dick, flow, melt, tug on my shaft. The tension builds at the base of my spine. Shit, I've never been so close to coming, so quickly before. The taste of her swirls on my tongue; the scent of her envelops my senses. I grip the backs of her thighs, drag my hand up one, then the other, urge her legs over my shoulders. "Hold on."

She nods, locks her ankles around my neck. I press my elbows to the table on either side of her head, then push in further. Her entire body seems to thrum; her eyelids flicker. She brings a hand up to my face. I turn my head and kiss her palm, then grip her wrist and twist her hand over her head. Her gaze widens and her breathing grows ragged. Fuck, if my little show of dominance didn't turn her on even more. I bring her other hand up, shackle both of her wrists with my uninjured hand.

I pull back, then thrust into her with enough force that the entire table jostles. Something—one of the plates, or both—crashes to the floor. I begin to fuck her in earnest. Pull back, push forward, back, forward again. With every plunge, her body moves up the table. I wrap my fingers around her neck, lean some of my weight on her to hold her in place. Her pupils dilate further, the blue so light, the color of her eyes seems to mirror mine. I see my reflection in them, sense the climax building inside of her. I squeeze my fingers around her neck, and she gasps. Her chest heaves. She digs her heels into my back, tugs her hands in my grasp. I pull back, all the way back to the edge of her channel, then tilt my hips and impale her with such force that her eyelids flutter, she throws her head back, arches her spine, and the trembling shudders up her body, her chest. "Come." I loosen my grasp and she shatters. Her pussy clamps around my dick and moisture bathes my shaft. Her orgasm seems to go on and on, and when her shoulders slump, sweat beads her forehead, her upper lip. I bend down, lick it off. She stirs.

"Eyes on me," I demand.

She cracks her eyelids open, locks her gaze with mine, and I begin to move again, thrust into her, angle my hips and sink deep inside of her. Bury myself in her sweet melting cunt again and again. She reaches up, locks her lips with mine, her eyes still on mine. Something hot stabs at my chest, my balls draw up, the tension in my groin snaps and I come inside her.

Her eyelids flutter; her body twitches. I pull back, just enough for our breaths to mingle, then stay there and watch as her muscles uncoil, one by one. I watch her as her breathing deepens. A flush creeps up her cheeks. When I pull out of her, she stirs. "Don't move," I whisper. Her lips curve. I pull off the condom, tie it up, then leave it on the table. I'll have to come back for it later.

I scoop her up in my arms, kick the door to the kitchen closed behind me, and carry her to the ensuite in the bedroom. I lower her to the floor near the tub, take in her curves. "You're gorgeous." I lean in to kiss her, before placing her in the shower stall.

"Your splint," she murmurs, "you'll get it wet."

"It's waterproof." I reassure her.

She wraps her arms around me, presses her nose into the skin bared by the 'V' of my shirt collar. "You smell like chocolate." She giggles.

I lower my chin and kiss her head, "And you smell of me."

"Mmm." She nuzzles against me and my heart begins to race. A tightness coils in my chest. Shit... This... Tenderness... This whatever connection is there between us... It is the beginning of the end. If I continue down this path, it leads to a slippery slope. One I have no intention of traversing. Not for a long time. If ever.

I pry her arms from round me, and step back.

She frowns.

"Gonna look in on Max," I say. "Why don't you shower first, huh?"

She peers up into my face, then nods.

I pivot, shrug out of my sodden pullover and pants and dump the clothes in the laundry basket on the way out.

Once in the kitchen, I dispose of the used condom, along with the remnants of her clothes. I clean up any chocolate within reach of his short, little legs, then top off the food and water bowls for Max, who scrabbles in and attacks the food like he's been starving. Speaking of, I need more of her. Fuck, this is ridiculous. I drag my fingers through my hair.

I've been away from her for a few minutes, and already, I miss her.

That sensation when I was inside her...? Fuck. It was...different, yet familiar. Like coming home. Home? What the fuck? I shake my head. So, the sex had been intense—more intense than any experience I've ever had before—it means we're compatible in bed. So, I'll fuck her, give her pleasure, make her orgasm more than she has ever before. I'll ensure her time with me is the single most incredible experience of her life, that it spoils her for any man after.

The band around my chest tightens. Of course, there'll be men after me... She isn't mine...except for the length of this time that I've bargained from her. For the days that are left, I can make good on my promise. I can protect her, take care of her every need, treat her like the princess she is. And when we are done... I'll walk away without a second thought.

I clench my fist at my side. Why the hell does it matter to me what she does after that, huh? I'll use her for my needs, then leave. It's what I do best. No commitments. Nothing holding me back. It will be a great break. I glance down at my hand with the splint... And the sex will, surely, only help the healing, huh? My heart hammers in my chest. So why the fuck am I standing here in the middle of the kitchen, still naked?

I straighten, march toward the door, when a scream sounds from the direction of the bedroom. I race forward.

Amelie

I stare at the spider that crawls across the floor. My skin feels too tight, my stomach twists in knots.

Shit, I can face grown chefs having a tantrum, or irate clients. Hell, I'd even face an alphahole who wanted to force me to submit. But the creepy, crawly, eight-legged species...? Gross. I could do without them. My pulse races, my heart hammers, and adrenaline fills my blood. I glance around, then spot the towel and snatch it up. I hold it out in front of me, sidle toward the exit, when footsteps sound and Weston's massive figure fills the doorway.

"What's wrong?" His chest heaves, his gaze alert. He has the fingers of his uninjured hand curled into a fist. Huh?

"The hell?" He stalks inside.

I glance down and scream again.

He flinches, "Jesus, woman, why are you having a breakdown?" He pauses mid-step.

"That..." I point my towel at the floor in front of him.

He glances down, then lowers his foot...missing the spider by an inch. A breath whooshes out of me.

"It's... it's..." I gulp.

"A spider?"

"Eek." I sidle back from both of them... "Please, can you get rid of it?"

He glances down at the bug, which scuttles toward me.

I scream, then dance around it in a wide circle that places me directly in front of Weston. "I hate those things," I whine.

"All that sass and spirit... I thought you were a spitfire, then along came a spider and frightened little Miss Muffet away."

I blink a little. "Did you just compare me to another nursery rhyme?"

"Can't seem to make up my mind about you, huh?" His warm palms descend on my hips. He lifts me up—like literally snatches me up from the floor—and plants me at his side.

My belly and other parts of me flutter. Shucks, every time I try to hate him...he disarms me...shows a part of him that unnerves me.

He grabs a tissue, scoops up the insect then heads for the doorway.

"Wh...where are you going?"

"To get Miss Muffet's spider outside."

"Oh." My cheeks heat. "Won't you be, ah...?" I look his gorgeous, unclothed figure up and down, and all thoughts leave my mind. OMFG, he's...hot. I mean, I knew he was and yep, he's had his cock and tongue and fingers inside of me... But when he flaunts his eight pack and those powerful thighs and the—uh!—all of him in full-frontal, then... Well...Uh, what am I trying to say? I blink.

"I'm beginning to think you prefer the sight of my dick to my face."

I jerk my chin up, "Nothing like that... I mean," I wave my palm in front of me, "yeah, I do... I mean, I like both... I mean..."

His chuckles at my blathering response. "Get in the shower," he orders. "I'll be back."

I shiver. He turns and stalks off, and I admit, I watch that tight, glorious arse of his until he's out of sight. Hell, I'm in a sex haze. And I admit, it's almost as good as the endorphins brought on by a chocolate binge... Okay, better... Surely, it must be the most pleasurable way of losing calories. At this rate, by New Year's, hopefully, I'll have lost some weight. I snort... Likely story. I only have to look at desserts for the pounds to kiss my thighs... Not that he'd complained...

I turn and survey my figure in the mirror—flushed face, reddened patches on my neck and chest... My breasts seem almost too big for my narrow waist and my hips.

But hey, at least, I look like I sample my desserts. I mean, imagine if I were reed-thin. And a dessert chef? I toss my head. That would send out the wrong signal, completely. I love my curves, okay... Normally... When I'm not having sudden bouts of self-doubt. Doesn't everyone have them?

I hear him talking to Max in the kitchen.

Shit, better get into the shower as alphahole had commanded. I head in that direction, then stop. The hell am I doing? Because he'd ordered me to... Would I give in and do what he'd asked? So, we had an arrangement... But won't that be null and void, considering we've slept together? I blow out a breath...

Well, then... Guess I'd better kiss the money goodbye, huh? My guts twist. Okay, so it means I am back where I started—debts to pay off, a business to run... Correction—a business I have nurtured with sweat and passion... and chocolate. I chuckle. A business which I've enjoyed building up. So what, if sometimes, when I'm bone-weary tired, I've wished I had someone by my side to share the load?

I am good at what I do. I don't need some bloody man to help shoulder the burden. Certainly, not a mean-as-hell, epitome of masculinity whose bearded chin is a potent weapon that can rub me to orgasm like Alladin's lamp. I snort out a half-laugh. Those stupid fairy tales and nursery rhymes that he often speaks in... It's getting to me. It's as bad as my pudding fetish.

I hear his footstep thudding down the hallway, and head for the bathtub instead. It's a small act of defiance, but hey, it's the best I can do. I reach over, plug the drain, then flip on the taps.

I am about to step in, then pause. I race to the sink, rummage around in the cabinet underneath... Aha! Bath bombs, and chocolate-flavored, at that... OMG... Yes! Half running back to the tub, I drop them in.

"What are you—?"

I hear his voice taper off as I climb into the tub and stretch out.

The hair on my forearms rises and I tip up my chin to find him watching me through hooded eyes.

I cup my breasts and squeeze; his nostrils flare.

I drag my palms down my waist, to the space between my thighs.

He shakes his head.

I pause, "What?"

"Who does your pussy belong to?"

I swallow.

"Tell me, Princess." He lowers his voice to a hush. My nerve endings pop. "Say it," he insists. "Who owns your sweet cunt?"

"You," I swallow, "you do."

"Damn right." His lips curl and he jerks his chin.

I lean back in the tub.

"Spread your legs," he commands.

I am instantly wet, and it's not from the bath water, I assure you. Hell, he could ask me to eat strawberries instead of chocolate and I would... No... Not that. Anything but that. Honestly, I don't have anything against those fruits, but nothing comes between me and my chocolate, except... I peer up at him from under my eyelashes, "Why is it that only you get to tell me what to do?"

"Because, I can," he growls. "Because you promised to do everything I asked of you," he adds.

"And what about the fact that we already slept together?" I ask. "Doesn't that mean the agreement is void?"

"Fuck the agreement. I propose something new."

"You... you do?"

He nods.

"I'll pay you what I promised, as long as you let me fuck you."

25

Weston

Shut up, shut up. What the fuck are you saying? Why did you have to take everything that happened between the two of you and make it into something twisted?

Because I can? I tense my shoulders.

Because that last time I'd taken her, the way I had kissed her had been... different. It had meant something... Don't ask me what... I have to figure that shit out, but holy fuck, that had gone beyond fucking... It's the kind of experience you don't forget, which is why I am back here, watching as her gaze narrows. As she tightens her lips, as the color fades from her cheeks. As she swallows, then folds her arms around herself. "Excuse me?" Her voice is low but firm, "What did you say?"

"You heard me." I fold my arms over my chest, mirroring her... Because she's right, that NLP shit works... Why the hell am I echoing her words? I widen my stance, glance down at her, "I'll pay for the remaining time I bought from you, as long as I can—"

"Fuck me?"

I tilt my head. "I am not going to repeat myself."

She swallows, "So, this is it?" She hunches into herself, "That's all this is to you? A transaction?"

"I told you from the beginning, that's all it was." I lower my chin. "Wrong place, wrong time... Although, perhaps it was the right occasion for you, huh?" I drag my gaze down her body, pausing at her breasts, then at the gorgeous flesh between her legs. My dick throbs and my balls harden. Of course, I still want her. That hasn't changed. I'll have to do my best to get her out my system; there is no other way out. "Well?" I roll my shoulders, "What do you say?"

"Why are you doing this?" She stares. "Why are you suddenly conforming to your alphahole persona?"

"This is who I am." I raise my shoulders. "Deal with it."

"I don't believe it." The water rises up to over her breasts. "What happened in the last few seconds that you went from...?"

"Dominant?"

"With a heart...to an unfeeling brute who reduces everything to a transaction."

"If you thought everything that happened between us was anything but, you're wrong."

"I'm not." She brings up her knees, covering the sight of both her pussy and her breasts.

My fingertips tingle. Lean over, pry those long thighs apart. Get in there with her, bury your face against her sweet cunt and bring her to orgasm. Make her forget everything that you said since you walked back in here. I lock my thighs, dig my feet into the floor.

"What's different between how it was to what it is now?" I frown. "I was going to pay you. I am still paying you... Only now there's sex—the penetrative kind— thrown in for good measure." I shrug, like it means nothing to me.

She doesn't react. Shit, that's not a good sign. I'm not that blind; I know exactly how I affect her when I curl my lips and command her.

"Well?" I tap my toes, "You in or out?"

She swallows. "Don't do this," she whispers. "Don't reduce what we had into something it's not."

"You're the one who's making it out to be something different." I glare down at her. "Take it or leave it."

She pushes her forehead into her knees. "I... I can't do it."

My heart begins to thump. Sweat beads my forehead. Shit, don't make her choose, you wanker. The hell are you doing pushing her away? You had it all...for a few seconds. You could have handled this differently, shown her exactly how much you care. You could have, for once in your fucked-up life, done the right thing. Instead... I'd decided to go all billionaire alphahole on her... Because...face it, that's what I am. That's how I intend to stay, and no sassy, curvy, chocolate-scented, gorgeous woman like her is going to reveal the feelings that churn under the surface.

"Fine, then." I turn and stalk to the door, then pause. "I'll pay you for the two days you spent with me, and we leave tomorrow."

I pivot, move forward.

Wait for it. Wait for it.

"Hey," she calls out. "What did you mean? Where are we going?"

I turn, glance over my shoulder, "To meet my family of course."

"It's not yet Christmas." She rises to her feet and the water flows from her shoulders down her waist, to splash onto the almost-filled bath tub. Her blonde hair curls over her forehead, sticks to her shoulders. The scent of... chocolate—of course, what else—laced with something honeyed and spicy swirls through the air.

"It's almost Christmas." I raise a shoulder.

"It's not the same," she scowls.

"It is now," I curl my lips, "because I say so."

She swallows, "And if I say no?"

"Are you saying no?" I glare at her.

She pales, opens her mouth.

I shake my head.

She purses her lips shut.

"Well?" I snap.

"No," she replies.

"What?" I growl.

"No, I'm not saying no." She winces, "I mean, yes, I'll come with you to meet your family. But that New Year's Eve thing? You can forget that."

I glower at her.

She juts out her chin, snaps back her shoulders, and doesn't blink.

Bloody hell, that sass of hers is back, thank fuck. Damn, if I don't hate it when her spirit is cowed.

"Fine."

"Fine." She tosses her head.

I turn.

She calls out again, "But the roads, the storm..."

I can't stop the grin that splits my face.

I wipe it off of my face, turn, "What storm?"

"Uh, the one that caused the roads to close and the electricity—"

The overhead lights come on and she blinks. The brightness pours over us, envelops us, cuts the space between us as if it's a barrier. How strange. Apparently, this time, the darkness had been kinder.

"Oh, and Princess?"

She angles her head.

"Shut off the tap, will you?"

"Life is uncertain; eat dessert first."

-From Amelie's diary

Amelie

I stare through the window from the backseat of the luxurious SUV. We'd left early this morning, heading toward the outskirts of Durham, where Weston's family home is.

Max whines from the back. I turn around and pat his head. Weston has his faults, but he hasn't stinted when it comes to Max. The car has a specially fitted pet booster seat in the rear, complete with a tether attached to his harness to keep him safe. Max licks my hand, then turns to glance out of the window. I swear, the puppy is more human than many of the two-legged variety of animals I've met... Present company included, of course. I shoot a sideways glance at the man in the seat next to me. His hair brushes against his collar, his beard seemingly fuller than what it was a few hours ago... Is he sprouting hair by the minute? Does it mean when he drags those whiskers across my pussy it will feel more intense than before? Ha, not possible. Whoever had said that once you go beard, you don't go back, was bloody right.

He raises his hand and drags his fingers through that hair on his chin. I gulp, then squeeze my thighs together. Come on, you can't be turned on by that simple act. I wriggle around in my seat. Get a life, woman. He misled you, remember? Made you think there was a storm outside that kept you marooned in the cabin, without electricity, when there was nothing of the kind taking place.

"What else did you lie to me about?" I mumble.

After that break-up in the bathroom... Could it be qualified as a break-up when we were never really together? Sure, in the carnal sense, I mean, but there was never any relationship between us, was there...?

Well, after the end of that relationship that never was and which shall never again be referred to by me, I'd stood there dumbstruck and naked and in the bath tub. The water had spilt over the sides and I had scrambled to shut off the tap. Of course, the alphahole had had the last say there, as well. Damn, but I hate the man. Hate his superiority complex, hate how, without even trying, he'd managed to turn my life upside down.

"What do you mean?" his voice rumbles over me. His presence thrums in that enclosed space. His larger-than-life persona pushes down on my shoulders, keeps me pinned to my side of the back seat.

"The storm," I mutter, "you lied to me."

"Not my fault you didn't check the weather."

"My phone didn't have a signal..." I bite the inside of my cheek. I could have tried harder. I could have checked online when I'd called Isla from the bathtub. Bloody bath tub; I hate bath tubs.

I'd clambered over the side of the tub, almost slipped and fallen, dried myself off, wrapped a towel around myself.

For the rest of the day we'd ignored each other. I'd made grilled sandwiches for lunch and we'd eaten them separately. I'd spent the rest of the day avoiding him... Cleaning the house... Or at least, trying to. Dinner had been soup and a pasta dish, the ingredients available, thanks to our trip to the supermarket. We'd eaten together at the dining table in the kitchen. He'd offered to help load up the dishwasher. I'd refused. And he'd headed outdoors with Max. I was reading in the living room, when he'd come in. He'd ignored me, headed off to the bedroom.

By the time I'd gone to bed, jerkface was under the covers...on his side of the bed, the white sheets pulled up to his waist, his sculpted chest all angles and planes, his biceps bulging from where he'd folded his arm behind his neck.

I'd almost crawled into bed right then, and cuddled up next to him... Not. Thankfully, I'd managed to retrieve my clothes from my bag, marched back into the bathroom to change. Dressed in pajamas and socks, I'd slipped between the sheets, after building a virtual fort between us with pillows and cushions. I'd fallen asleep almost at once... At least the sex had worn me out... Fringe benefits. I snort aloud.

"Care to share your thoughts?" he drawls. That voice... Dark and edgy and with an hint of mystery that had entranced me from the beginning, ripples down my spine. My nipples harden and my toes curl. I clutch my handbag to my chest. Hopefully, it will hide exactly how turned on I am. Gah! This is so not fair.

I rub at my temples, shake my head. "It's nothing," I respond.

"It's something." I sense him turn to me and tip my head so my heavy hair falls over my face. Anything to hide from him.

"Nothing of consequence," I insist.

"Whatever is in that bag, seems to be of consequence though."

I blink, shift the bag into a more comfortable position. "It's—"

"Don't say nothing," he growls.

"Cookies."

"Huh?" His forehead furrows.

"I baked cookies," I explain.

"Cookies?" He seems taken aback, "You made cookies?"

"We are going to see your family. I am a baker..." I raise my shoulders.

"That's why you were up early this morning?"

I nod. I'd remembered to charge my phone, and set an alarm, and woken up a few minutes before it had gone off. Guess those years of getting up before dawn and heading off to get my baking done for the day had come in handy. I'd switched off the alarm, crawled out of bed and out from under the weight of his arm.

He'd shoved aside the pillows at some point in the night and had pulled my body against his, and spooned me... No wonder I had slept well. I had turned and seen his features relaxed in sleep. His beard had seemed thicker, his pecs closer to a work of art, and that beautiful throat...that gorgeous throat... I'd moved in to inhale his scent at the base of his neck, where it would be the most potent. He'd stirred. I'd frozen. His muscles had relaxed and I'd scrambled off the bed. Lucky escape...

Was it, though? If he'd woken up then, would he have...taken me over his lap and spanked me? My sex clenches. I squeeze my thighs shut. Dip into my bag and pull out the tin—I'd emptied out the contents and repurposed it. I pop the lid and the scent of vanilla and chocolate, and the touch of cinnamon

I'd sprinkled on at the end, fills the space.

He reaches for one; I slap the lid on his fingers.

"Ow." He pulls back, shakes out his hand, "Do you want to break a finger in my good hand?"

"Did I succeed?" I bare my teeth.

"It'll take more than a batch of your cookies to bring me down," he retorts.

"Don't bet on it," I scoff.

"Hmm," he glares at the tin, then at my face, "my mother doesn't expect gifts."

"It's Christmas."

"My presence is gift enough."

My jaw drops, "Do you seriously believe that?"

"It's what she insists, every time."

"Of course, she'd say that. She's your mom, after all. Doesn't mean you shouldn't get them anything. Besides..." I peer up at him.

"Besides...?" he prompts.

"Besides, after spending time with you, I can vouch that your presence is less a gift and more of an unwelcome surprise." I snicker.

"Har har." He scowls. "Feeling cheeky this morning, are we?"

"Feeling grumpy, as always, I see?" I shake my head, "You could collapse soufflé, just by your proximity."

He stares at me. "What-fucking-ever."

"That so eloquent. Impressive go-to-word for Mr A-holasaurus." I snort.

"Woman, your metaphors are—"

"Stupid?"

"Creative." He nods, "I'll give you this round."

"Ooh." I hold up my fist.

He glares at me.

"Fist bump. Come on, come on," I coax him.

"Nope." He holds up his right hand, with the upright middle finger, "Injured, remember?"

"Aww." I deflate like the bloody soufflé I'd mentioned, and crap, now I'm hungry.

"Coming back to the topic at hand," he continues. "You could have bought my mother something on the way. We could have stopped at one of the stores in town."

"I believe in the personal touch," I retort. "Unlike you."

"Oh, trust me, when it comes to you, my touch is as personal as it gets." He smirks.

I draw in a breath. Patience, patience. Don't react. He's being this...overt to get a rise out of you. Don't stoop to his level... Can I be at eye-level with his crotch-candy though?... Eeeeagh, I did not think that.

I lower my chin, hiding behind my thick fall of hair. "Has your family always lived in Durham?"

He sighs loudly, then leans back.

Whew! Dodged that one. After how he'd pulled that cheap stunt of lying about the storm, I should seriously have been angrier... But for some reason...I'm not. Maybe I'm flattered that he lied to ensure I'd comply with his plan. But...what else did he lie about? I chew on my lower lip.

"My mother moved there after my siblings and I left home. I grew up in London," he explains. "After the incident..." he pauses.

I hold my breath. Is he going to tell me about himself? Is he going to share a little more of what goes on behind those colorless eyes of his? Weston doesn't come across as closed off... But his demeanor...that hard outlook of his hides so many secrets. I turn to him, "The kidnapping you mean?"

He nods, then rotates his neck from side to side, "I was one of the lucky ones. My parents rallied around me. Even my asshole of an older brother became protective for a period of time. And my younger sister? Well... She sensed something was amiss. She'd crawl into bed every night and comfort me while I sobbed myself to sleep."

"You...cried every night?"

"I was twelve." His lips twist. "The incident forced me grow up fast... But at night, when I couldn't hide from myself anymore, the demons would come out to play. I don't think I have slept properly since ... Until..." He trails off, then turns to me, a strange look on his face.

My throat dries. "Until?" I prompt.

"Until that first night in the cabin, when I spooned you in bed."

My cheeks flush. I turn, crack open the window, and the outside air rushes in. "Why are you telling me this now?"

"No reason," his voice is emotionless.

I turn to find he's staring ahead.

"Not long now," he says in that same colorless tone.

Right, guess that's me being put in my place, huh?

"Did they hurt you?"

"Who?"

I frown, "The...men who kidnapped you with the rest of the Seven."

"Are you really interested in finding out about it?"

I open my mouth, then shut it. "Guess not." I turn away once more, ball my fingers into fists, "I'm trying to be polite, that's all."

"Don't be."

I swallow, "We're going to see your family. We should, at least, put on a veneer of politeness."

"My mother would prefer it if we were to speak our minds; she can spot something fake from a mile off."

I turn on him, "And you think we can get away with..." I point between us, "this?"

His lips stretch in a smile that is not one at all, "Why do you think I asked you and not someone else?"

"I don't understand."

He turns, trains the full force of those grey-silver eyes on me, "There's enough chemistry between us to pull this off."

I open my mouth.

He raises his hand, "Don't deny it. We may not be able to stand each other, but you know what they say?"

"What?"

"There's a thin line between hate and a connection."

What a condescending jerk.

"From where I am, it's a 100% loathing," I force out the words.

"Good."

"Eh?"

"It'll seem realistic, after all. Nothing like make-up sex to cement a relationship, huh?"

Weston

Make-up sex? What the fuck am I talking about? Clearly this entire idea—which I'd pulled out of my arse, by the way—is a bad one.

The SUV crawls up the driveway of the Victorian house on the outskirts of Durham where my mother lives. The ivy covers most of the west wing, the leaves a burned red this time of the year.

The vehicle stops in front of the steps leading up to the house.

Before my driver can come around, she's pushed open the door and is hopping out. She opens the passenger door, hauls Max into her arms.

"I have his leash." I frown.

"I'm going to carry the little fella."

Right.

She hauls him closer to her face, "Hey baby, missed me, boy?"

Max licks her nose, her chin.

She laughs.

I scowl.

How dare another male intrude on my territory?

I growl deep in my throat.

Both Max and Amelie turn to me.

"Did you just growl?"

"So?" I glare at her.

She bites her lips, "Uh, you don't have to be jealous of Max." She tips her nose up.

"Me?" I laugh, "Woman, you are delusional."

"Now who's lying?" she scoffs.

"You seriously need to stop being obsessed with me."

She gapes at me, "You know what? This conversation is pointless." She straightens and stalks around the car, heading for the stairs. The dress she's wearing flies up and exposes a flash of her creamy thigh. She takes the steps, and I notice the dark line running up the back of her stockings. My dick twitches, my groin hardens, and this is so, not the fucking time. I don't want to walk into my family's home sporting a hard on.

I adjust myself, then duck out of the car.

Peter—Sinclair's chauffeur who's working with me since Sinclair is away, and because my finger's still bloody busted—walks around to pop open the lid of the trunk.

I turn and stalk her as she walks up the steps to the front door.

"She keeps you on your toes, huh?" Peter asks.

I tilt my head.

"The two of you remind me of how it was with Mr. Sterling and Ms. Summer before they got together."

"You're mistaken." I scowl, "There's nothing like that."

He places both of Amelie's suitcases, and a considerably smaller suitcase—i.e. mine—on the ground; he slaps the trunk shut.

I frown down at Amelie's pink frothy wardrobe on wheels. "You'd think she were packing for a month instead of two nights."

He chuckles, then reaches for the suitcase, but I shake my head, "I'll carry her load."

He peers up at me, "You do that, Sir."

I frown, open my mouth to ask what he means, but he's already walked off, with the rest of the luggage.

What-fucking-ever. My brain cells are, clearly, not functioning at full force, which is why I'd read between the lines. He didn't mean anything by that... He didn't. Did he?

I shake my head and follow Peter up the steps to where she stands, at an angle to the door.

I dump the bag, pause next to her, "Couldn't you have packed more sensibly?"

She turns to me, an expression of almost comical consternation on her face, "No. I need it all. I mean, you weren't helpful at all, gave me no pointers on what to wear, or what to expect, so I had to make sure I had all of my emergency clothes on hand."

"And that?" I point to the chef's toolkit that she has slung over her other shoulder.

She tucks it under her arm. "I don't go anywhere without this."

"Right." I drag my fingers through my hair, "Look, maybe this wasn't a good idea after all, I mean—"

The door opens. "Weston," my sister's voice calls out.

Next to me, Amelie stiffens. She swallows, clutches at her handbag. The skin stretches white across her knuckles. I should revel in her nervousness, in how out of her depth she seems. I mean, isn't that the point of this entire charade, to show her who is more superior in this relationship? Is there a relationship between us? And who, exactly, is out of their depth? Her? Or me?

I grip her shoulder. She peers up at me, and I hold her gaze before saying softly, "It will be fine." What will be fine? Why the hell am I trying to put her at ease?

She parts her lips, and fuck it, I can't resist. I lower my head and brush my mouth over hers. She draws in a breath and I deepen the kiss. Swipe my tongue inside to tangle with hers, draw of that chocolate and honey taste of hers. My head spins.

I break the kiss, survey her face. Flushed cheeks, dazed eyes. She blinks, sways. Good, that should take her mind off of the upcoming ordeal—I mean, the family stuff. Not that I don't want to spend time with them, but so many people all at once, can be a little overwhelming, especially since my family doesn't take shit from me.

There's a commotion behind me, then, "Unca Wes." Arms wrap around my legs. I glance down at my niece.

"Present... Christmas." The little imp smiles up at me. Well, one of us has our priorities right, at least.

"Phoenix," my sister calls out to her daughter, "let Uncle Wes and his friend inside the house, at least, and it's impolite to ask him what he's got for you. Speaking of," she turns to me, "I didn't realize you were bringing a guest." She looks between us.

Amelie's body goes even more rigid; she turns to me, "You didn't tell them?" Her gaze narrows on me and color flushes her cheeks.

Oh, this is going to be so much fun. That thing about keeping her off kilter? I intend to deliver on that.

"I like to be spontaneous," I allow my lips to curve.

Amelie makes a sound deep into her throat.

I train my gaze on my sister, "Kirsten this is Amelie. Amelie...this is my younger sister, Kirsten."

"Amelie," Kirsten's eyes bob between us. She shuffles her feet in that manner which is a dead giveaway that she's dying to quiz me... Not that I am going to allow that.

Max barks from his vantage point against Amelie's breasts. I seriously needed to have a man-to-man with that pooch.

Phoenix tugs on my hand. "Moosic..." she chants, "moooooosic."

"Hey, honey." I release my hold on Amelie, then bend to swing Phoenix up in my arms.

The little girl giggles, "Mooooosic."

"Music?" I turn to Kirsten for help.

"Yea, music," Kirsten sighs. "She's driving us mad with her music blocks."

"Mooooosic bo-k-ssss," Phoenix warbles. "Unca Wezz."

I chuck her under her chin and she giggles. "Play...play... Unca Wezz."

Right.

I glance toward Amelie, who smiles at the little girl. "Hey, baby doll," she coos, "What's your name?"

Phoenix blinks at Amelie, then holds out her arms.

"Oh." Amelie looks at Phoenix, then at me.

I reach over, fasten Max's leash to his collar. "Told ya so," I whisper into her ear.

She scowls, lowers Max to the floor, and her handbag slides down her arm.

"Let me get that." I grab the bag before it hits the floor.

Then I straighten and hand Phoenix over to her. Amelie cuddles Phoenix, and her other bag—the chef's toolkit—bumps her back. I reach for it; Amelie frowns.

"You can trust me," I snicker.

She raises one eyebrow, "Can I?"

"Of course, Sweetheart." I raise one eyebrow.

She opens her mouth, to protest, no doubt. I lean down, press another kiss to her lips, and slide the bag off of her shoulder in the same move.

I step back, swinging her chef's satchel over my other shoulder.

"Smooth," Kirsten laughs.

"Doggy," Phoenix pants.

Max woofs, wags his tail, pawing at Amelie as he tries to get to the little girl.

"Wait...." Amelie protests. Phoenix pats her cheek. Amelie glances down at her and her face breaks into a smile. "Hey pumpkin, what's your name?"

"Phe," she grins, jumping a little in Amelie's arms.

Amelie props her on her hip, "Hey, Phe." Amelie's smile widens, "Whatcha wearing on your head."

Phoenix touches the unicorn shaped hairband, "Pepper."

"Good name." She leans in closer, "What about your friend behind you?"

Phoenix gazes at her wide-eyed, "You...can see him?" She gulps.

"Yep, I can. What's his name?"

"Jack." Phoenix bobs her head, "Jack. Jack."

"Jack?" I turn to Kirsten.

Kirsten nods. "He's imaginary," she says in a low voice.

"Ah." I glance back at the woman, who bends her glossy blonde head toward the dark blonde-haired kid. Something hot stabs at my chest.

"You want one of your own, huh?" Kirsten nudges me.

"What?" I turn to her, "Of course, not."

Kirsten tilts her head, "Hmm." She looks me up and down. Seeing...what? The bags over my shoulders, the dog straining at the leash, the other end of which I hold onto with my uninjured hand...

I scowl at her, "You have a weird look on your face."

"I am not the one who's changed." She grins, then reaches up to pat my cheek. "Finally," she titters, "I can't tell you how I was looking forward to this day."

"You are not making any sense," I grumble.

"It's normal—so much happening in so little time," she waggles her head, "but when it's right, it's right, you know?"

"No," I glower.

The fuck is wrong with my sister? Had I grown another head on my way here?

"Hey," a new voice mumbles. I glance up as my eleven year old niece ambles into the room.

"Skye." I hold out my fist. "Whassup?"

She walks over, ignores me, then frowns at Amelie, "Who're you?"

"Skye!" Kirsten exclaims. "You apologize right now to Amelie, you hear me?"

Skye rolls her eyes, then sighs, "Yeah, fine, whatever. Sorry... Amelie. Pleased to meet you, Amelie. Hey, Uncle Wes." She tosses her head. "There," she jerks her chin in Kirsten's direction. "Happy now?" She turns on her heel and flounces off.

"Whoa." I blink. "What happened there?"

"Sorry." Kirsten turns red. "She's already turning into a teenager. I shudder to think how she's going to be in a few years' time."

She crosses over to Amelie, "Let's get you inside." She holds out her arms to Phoenix, who jumps back into Kirsten's arms.

"Mommy!" Phoenix throws her arms around Kirsten's neck, then strains in her grasp to peer at Max, "Doggy, doggy, play...play."

Kirsten lowers the little girl to the ground, "Come on, let's go in." She hitches her arm through Amelie's, "Was the trip okay?"

The three of them walk in.

I stare after them, then down at Max, who whines, and strains at his leash. Amelie's bag slides down to the crook of my arm. How the hell did I get stuck with this? Brilliant surgeon? Check. Obnoxious billionaire? You bet. Carrying my girlfriend's luggage into my family home? Wh-a-t? Time for a reality check. Why the fuck did I think this was a good idea? Who suggested this? Oh, wait, that was me.

Peter walks out. He glances down at the pink suitcase then at me,

"Keep this the fuck to yourself," I mutter. "Not a word to the rest of the Seven."

He chuckles, then schools his expression into one of indifference. "Of course, Sir, you can trust my discretion."

What-fucking-ever. I stalk forward, my progress somewhat impeded by the blasted tank on wheels that I pull along.

"Oh, Sir?"

I turn.

"The pink brings out the blonde in your beard."

Peter walks off.

Blonde hairs in my beard? I don't have blonde hairs in my beard. The only blonde hair my beard has been close to...is her pussy hair. Those luscious lower lips of hers that had indicated that she was a natural blonde, and fuck me, if that hadn't been a turn-on. My dick twitches in agreement. I pause. Nope, not going there. The last thing I need is walking in with a chub the size of England in my pants. I shake my head, and follow Max into the house. Of course, the bloody pooch has to lead the way.

He barks, tugs on his leash, which slips from my hand, He darts forward.

"Max." I quicken my pace.

Footsteps approach down the curved stairwell.

"Weston," a woman's voice calls out.

I pause, turn toward the woman who walks down the steps, the first love of my life, the one woman who has my complete irrevocable devotion.

I smile up at her.

Her features light up, "You came."

Amelie

I hear the sound of barking, the patter of nails on the wooden floor. I turn as Max races toward me, his leash dragging behind. "Hey, you." I bend down to pet the little guy, who jumps up and licks my face as if he hadn't done the same thing not five minutes ago. "Down, boy," I laugh.

Phoenix squats down to rub the puppy's back, "Doggy," she squeals. "Love doggy." She holds out her arms to Max, who jumps on her; the two collapse on the floor in a flurry of arms and legs and doggy barks and little girl exclamations of delight. My smile widens so big that my cheeks hurt. Damn, I love this. What are little girls made of? Sugar and spice and puppy dog tails. Ha! Why should only little boys have the right to dogs, huh? Talk about my own spin on the ol' nursery rhyme.

The hair on the back of my neck prickles. I glance up to find Weston walking forward to greet a woman approaching him. She's wearing a beautiful peacock-green colored dress that flows to below her knee.

He bends and kisses her cheek, "Mother."

I straighten, holding onto Max's leash. So, this is his Mum? Guess alphaholes have parents too... I mean, of course they do; it's just difficult to imagine Weston as a small boy...vulnerable and innocent.

She reaches up to touch his face, "Why do you look different?"

He frowns down at her, "It's the beard, perhaps?"

She tilts her head, the gesture so similar to Weston's, my throat closes. There's no doubt about the blood relationship between the two.

"That's not it." She steps back, takes him in, "It's not the handbag you're carrying either." She giggles.

He shuffles his feet. I blink. I mean, I've never seen him this uncomfortable before. I stifle the giggle that rises up. Trust a mom to put her son in his place huh?

He straightens and turns to me.

I stiffen. Not that I am doing anything wrong, but I bet it seems like I was staring at him, which I wasn't. Okay, I was. I clutch Max's leash. He whines, pulls toward Weston. "Shh, Max," I whisper to him, "Not now."

Weston turns to me; he jerks his chin.

I shake my head.

He glares at me.

I pale.

He holds out his hand.

I sigh. Okay, hell, I'd been hoping to put off this meeting with his family... Not that they are my in-laws or anything, but authority figures of any kind? I run a mile. And not because my own Ma was a strict disciplinarian—okay, maybe it is that. It doesn't take a shrink to tell me my issues with not wanting to conform have to do with my home and the convent school I was educated in. Yeah, the nuns wouldn't be happy with how I've turned out. I purse my lips.

"Amelie," Weston's tone lowers to a hush. To anyone else, I'll bet it sounds normal, but damn, if I don't recognize the demand in it. Shit, I'd left home because I wanted to be independent, I thought... Until I met him, and the kind of disciplining Weston has in mind... Hell, if I don't respond to it from that place deep inside that had resisted being told what to do. My head spins. Is that why I want his kind of dominance? Because I had hankered for it... A structure that imposes boundaries within which I can be myself... Had I held onto the illusion of control until I met a man who I trusted enough to hand it over to? Is that man Weston? I gulp.

Weston frowns, "You okay?" I hear his voice across the short distance.

Max whines, brushes against my leg. I bend, scratch his ear, then straighten. Best to treat this like breaking an egg. Just aim for the center, tap it against the side of the bowl, do your best... Either way it's going to break, you just want to be around to catch the yolk. Me and my stupid metaphors. I walk forward, Max straining at the leash.

When I reach them, I pause. "I'm Amelie." I hold out my hand, "Pleased to meet you."

Weston's mother smiles. The lines etched around her eyes deepen. "What a pretty name."

She takes my hand between both of hers.

"That's very kind of you to say so," I reply, schooling my features into a neutral expression, "and thank you for having me."

Max yelps, she glances at him, and her face breaks into a broad grin. Her features brighten and those grey eyes sparkle. The resemblance between her and Weston becomes more pronounced. Strange, huh? Considering Mr Grumpy-grump's face rarely wears an expression that's not borderline angry.

"And who's this?"

"Max," I reply.

She releases my hand, bends down to pat the puppy. He wags his tail, jumps up at her.

"Is he yours?"

"Uh, he belongs to my friend Summer and her husband."

"Ah, the Sinclairs." She straightens, "Is that how the two of you met?"

"Yes," I say.

"No," Weston declares.

We stare at each other, for a beat, another. I scowl at him. This is what happens when you don't get your stories right. And jerkalope here, didn't want to talk about it before-hand.

I tuck my elbows into my side, open my eyes wide, stare at the alphahole. He got us into this one, he can dig us out of it. This should be good.

His mother chuckles, "Which is it, then?"

"I saw her shopping for groceries at my local supermarket. She was talking to herself as she decided which brand of chocolate to buy for baking, and that was it."

"Oh," I blink. Damn, but he sounds so sincere. I almost believe it myself.

"Ah." His mother nods. "Chocolate and sex—the unbeatable combination."

"Wha—?" I gape at her.

"Mother," Weston admonishes.

She laughs, "It's not like you were conceived through immaculate conception." She chuckles and looks at me, "I hope I didn't shock you."

"No...Yes." I chew the inside of my cheek, "I mean, it's not shocking, except it came from you, so..."

"Ah," she grins, "you mean from a woman in her fifties. We're supposed to know our place, take care of our grandkids, and leave the running of the world to our husbands and sons."

I hunch my shoulders. Shit, what is the right response here, "No, I think it's women, and especially those in the prime of their life, who have brought up children to face the world, and who have stood by their men, supported them while following their own passions, who wield the power."

She tilts her head, then laughs. "Good save." She chuckles, "Call me Rosie." She pulls me in for a hug.

I take it. "Rosie." I nod.

Phew! Guess I passed that test... Whatever that was.

She releases me, and steps back, "You can take him off the leash, dear."

I stare at her.

"Weston, I mean." Her eyes twinkle.

"Ah," I open and shut my mouth.

"Just messing with you," she chuckles, then glances at Max.

Right. Is that where Weston gets his warped sense of humor, not to mention his dominance?

I unhook the leash from Max's collar. Max bounds off, toward the living space at the far end of the hallway, following the sound of Phoenix's laughter.

I twist the leash around my palm, wondering what to do with it. Weston places his hand on mine; I look up. One side of his lips kicks up. Is that supposed to be reassuring? The warmth from his touch sinks into my blood. I draw in a breath and my heartbeat slows. How strange. This man... Who I am not sure how to react to... Who I am sure I hate... Who I have definite feelings for... When did his presence become so reassuring?

He twines his fingers with mine and the leash slips from my grasp. He catches it, glances around. A maid wearing a uniform materializes. Huh? Of course, they'd have staff. They are rich and the house... Well, it seems the kind that has been in their family for generations. "Master Weston?" The older woman smiles.

"Mary, how are you?" He hands the leash over to her.

"I'm very good, Sir." Her smile widens. "The luggage has been sent to your suite already," she adds.

"Excellent," he grins at her.

Wow. That's two smiles in as many minutes. Seems the alphahole can lose the obnoxiousness on occasion... Just not with me.

"How is Veronica?" he asks Mary.

"Grown up and at university. She has her own life now."

"You miss her, huh?"

Mary raises her shoulders, "Always. But I'm also glad to have her out of my hair." She chuckles.

She turns to Rosie, "Dinner is served Ma'am."

Rosie touches my arm, "Shall we?"

Weston

"You're not sleeping on the couch." I growl at her.

Dinner had been mercifully quiet. Kirsten had taken Phe and Skye up to get them ready for bed. Max had mercifully tagged along, not wanting to part from the girls.

Which means we are alone, in my room, and I intend to take full advantage of that.

"Excuse me?" She frowns up at me.

"You heard me," I drawl. "Get your sweet tush into bed." I jerk my thumb over my shoulder, pointing at the massive four-poster that occupies the center of the room.

"We are not together; this is all a farce." She glowers, "Have you forgotten that you wanted me to come here to put on a front with your family? I have done that, and now I want some privacy."

"No." I fold my arms over chest.

She gapes, "What...what do you mean?"

"Exactly that." I glance down my nose at her, "We need to keep up the pretense."

"In here?" She glances around the spacious suite that takes up the entire top floor of the house. It also comes equipped with its own kitchen, a fact I had pointed out to her earlier. Why was that? Why does it matter to me that she feels at home in this space? I shake my head, narrow my gaze on the woman who scowls up at me.

"No-one's going to come in here," she insists.

"You don't know that. One slip-up, and this entire charade will amount to nothing."

"That's all this is—a farce." She juts out a hip, props her hand on it, "So why the hell can't you allow me to sleep on my own?"

"Because..." You're mine, is what I want to say, but fuck that. I have no claim to her. I can't call her mine. I don't want to have any relationship with her, do I? So why the hell am I being this unreasonable? I crack my neck, draw in a breath, "As long as you are here, under my roof, you do as I say."

"It's not your roof," she growls.

"It belongs to my family," I retort.

"I don't care."

"You should, because in one second you are going to be breaking a record, one that you'll remember for the rest of your life."

She balks, "Wh...what do you mean?"

"Just try to walk out of that door, and I'll have you on your back and make you orgasm so fast, and so many times, that you'll forget all about the world outside this bedroom."

Her chest heaves, her face pales, she swallows hard, and clenches her fists by her sides, "You wouldn't dare."

"You know better than to challenge me, Princess."

"I'm not your princess."

"You're right," I look her up and down, "you're the woman I am paying to keep me company."

She falters, then pulls her shoulders back, "You forget that we no longer have an arrangement."

"So why are you here?"

She bites the inside of her cheek, "Because..."

"Because?"

"Uh, I didn't want you to let your family down."

"Bull-fucking-shit," my words crackle through the space.

She winces. "Keep your voice down," she hisses at me. "You may not care about your family hearing us, but I do."

"The walls of this suite are thick enough for you to scream all night long and no one would notice."

She swallows, twists her fingers together, "You're lying."

"Want to try it out, hmm?" I take a step toward her; she skitters back.

I tilt my head.

She holds my gaze.

I widen my stance.

She tips her chin, "You...you don't scare me."

"So you keep saying."

"We are here with your family; your sister and nieces are sleeping on the floor below. You won't try anything with them so close."

"You think I'll stop because of that?"

"I saw you with them, Weston." She narrows her gaze, "You respect your mother, you love your nieces, you'd do anything to protect your sister... You're not half as much of an unfeeling man as you make yourself out to be."

"You're right about that."

"I... I am?"

I nod, "I'm much worse." I lunge forward.

She screams, pivots, then makes a run for the door.

I swoop down toward her, grab her across the waist and throw her over my shoulder.

"Let me go, you oaf," she yells.

I stalk toward the bed.

She wriggles, brings her fists down on my back. The jolt travels down to my cock, which is already erect. Is it wrong that I am getting off on her struggle? On her curvy butt that wriggles so near my face. I tilt my head to nuzzle the side of her hips.

She stills. "Did you..." Her voice cracks, "Did you just do what I think, you did?"

I bring down my hand on her arse.

She howls, "What the fuck?"

"Language, Princess." I smirk, "And don't question me again."

Her body tenses, all of her muscles coil, and tension rolls off of her in waves. Wait for it. Wait for it. She bucks her body, then digs her knee into my chest with enough force that my breath catches. She lowers her head, buries her teeth in my back. Pin pricks of pain race from the contact. My dick throbs and my groin hardens. I change direction and head for the ensuite bath.

"The hell are you doing?" she yells again.

"Not so worried about waking up the family now, huh?" I chuckle.

"You douche, how dare you use your strength against me?"

"Because I like to play dirty?" Because I am losing my mind, that's why.

The thought of her walking out of here, never looking back... Hell no. My chest tightens. No way, am I letting that happen. And it's not my ego speaking... It's the fear that I'll never see her again. Never scent her gorgeous essence, never hold her curves, bury myself in her sweet cunt; never pit my will against hers. I stumble, then right myself.

The challenge... That's what attracted me to her. It's why I keep taunting her, trying to get a rise out of her, and why I can't let go of her either. What do I want to do with her? I want to get a rise out of her. Revel in her spirit, that fire inside of her that could burn through my past, rejuvenate me, give me a reason to move forward. I want to live fully, to feel for the first time in my life. I want her. Only her. I march into the bathroom, turn on the shower.

"Let go of me," her scream slices through my ear drum.

"Stop that," I growl.

"You stop what you're doing and release me this instant."

"Your wish is my command." I swing her around, plonk her down under the shower. She opens her mouth and the water pelts her face. Her scream is cut off in a series of unintelligible words.

"I can't hear you," I taunt.

She kicks out, I angle away, and she tips over.

I grasp her shoulder and keep her upright.

She swings at me, connects with the arm of my injured hand. Pain explodes behind my eyes.

"Fuck!"

I loosen my grip and she throws herself at me. Her weight connects with my chest. I stagger back, hit the wall of the shower cubicle. She hooks her leg around my waist, hauls herself up, and climbs me like she's a cat and I am her personal scratching post... Fuck. She lowers her head, digs her teeth into my neck, on the side of my injured finger.

"You little hellion!" I grab the back of her neck, tug. She doesn't let go. I apply pressure; she holds on. Pain shoots down my injured arm and my finger hurts. I squeeze down, her shoulders tremble, and her body arches. She gasps and her hold loosens. I pull her back, lower my face to hers, "I am going to teach you a lesson that you'll never forget."

Amelie

Water from the shower drums against me. His grey gaze clashes with mine. His features twist into an expression of rage...? Of arousal? His nostrils flare. "I am going to fuck you like you are mine."

Am I his?

Is he mine?

Do I want him to fuck me?

No.

No.

"Yes." I peel back my lips, "Finally."

He crashes his mouth into mine, thrusts his tongue inside, sucks on me, demands that I open myself to him, that I give in to him. No, no. I can't. Yes, you can. Show him you won't back down, that you're not scared of what he does to you. That you will not turn and hide from the emotions he evokes in you. I tip up my chin, wind my arms around his neck, dig my thighs into his waist, press my melting center to the hardness that tents his pants.

"Fuck me," his harsh whisper chafes my skin and my nerve endings flare. My brain cells seem to evaporate. Poof, I am smoke. I am one melting, writhing mass of need in his arms.

Take me. Tear into me. Sink into me. Push all thoughts out of my head. I don't want to think, don't want to worry about the future, the past. All that matters is me, here, with him, clinging to him, holding on with every single strand of strength in my body. Him. I want him. Only him. I tear my mouth from his, "Fuck me."

Before the words are out of my mouth, he's flipped positions. My back presses into the wall. The weight of him pins me. His massive body cuts off the water. The blood drums in my ears; my pulse thuds against my neck, my wrists, at my ankles... The beat between my legs grows, louder, needier, angrier. "Now," I huff. "Do it."

His lips twist. He brings his hand up to curl his large fingers around my neck. I gulp. Shit, I'd asked... Demanded that he fuck me. Isn't that, like, against the rules of dominance with this man? Am I not supposed to ask for what I want?

His fingers meet around the diameter of my neck. He presses his thumb into the pulse that skitters at the base of my throat. "Aren't you forgetting something?"

I frown.

He tilts his head.

I lower my chin.

He glares at me and the blood drains from my face, straight to my cunt. My head spins. My throat closes. I flick out my tongue to touch my lips; his gaze drops to my mouth.

He growls and my stomach seems to bottom out. Oh, my God. This man... He's too hot, too much. Too everything.

"Do it," he barks.

I hesitate.

"Or not." He steps back.

I lose my grasp around his waist; my legs begin to slide down. No, no, no. I want this. I do. "Please," I gasp.

"Please what?" His fingers tighten around my neck and my airflow slows. I open my mouth, try to breathe. My lungs burn. I thrust my thighs into his, hold on. Don't let go. He's testing you. Don't give in; not yet.

"I... I..." I try to form the words, but my brain cells don't comply. "Wes... I..."

"Want me to help you?"

I nod.

"Want me to play with your pretty cunt?" He tilts his hips and his thick length stabs my sensitized core.

I moan. I'm not proud. I tried to resist, tried to hold onto the last shred of my dignity that lies in tatters around me now. "Yes," I beg. "Yes."

"Want me to squeeze your butt," he grips my arse, "before I cram my fingers into your arsehole?" He drags his fingers down the valley between my butt cheeks. His touch sinks through the sodden mess of my clothes, my panties, into that empty part of me inside, that curls in on itself, throbbing with a need that only Doc Grumpyface can fulfill.

"Don't stop," I whine.

"Want me to..." He brings his hand around, and grabs my pussy.

I wordlessly push my core forward, begin to fuck his palm like the out-of-my-head, sex-starved, stupid idiot that I am.

He hauls me up, his right hand around my neck—apparently, his injured finger does nothing to restrain his movements; with his other, he grips my pussy—pins me against the wall, and stares into my face.

My feet don't touch the ground, and I should be scared. This position implies exactly what we are—me at his disposal, at his mercy, his to do with as he pleases. His grasp is firm enough to prop me up, allowing enough air to reach my lungs that I don't suffocate, and yet... The lowered oxygen heightens my reactions, my sensitivity to his every move. I watch him watch me strain against that large hand at my core, and all of my nerve-endings seem to catch fire all at once.

He slides his palm under me so his fingers are flat against my butt. He presses his thumb through my tights and my panties into my swollen nub. Sparks explode behind my eyes. I throw my head back and pant. He rubs circles with his thumb around my clit. My pulse rate ratchets up.

"Look at me," his command whips through my thoughts.

I lower my face, crack my eyes open.

"Who do you belong to?"

"You."

"Who do you come for?"

"You."

"Who will you shatter for?"

"You," I groan, "Only you."

"Shatter for me, my Princess. Right fucking now."

He releases the hold on my neck and my climax explodes up my spine. Spots of white fold in to my line of sight. My pussy clenches; moisture floods between my legs. I hear the sound of someone wailing... Me? Is that me? My ears pop; my throat closes. A whine pours from me.

"Good, girl." He bends, licks my lips, "I am going to fuck you now."

Wh-a-a-t?

I blink as he lowers me to the floor. My knees give way; he holds me up with his fingers around my neck. My shoulders slump, I should say something... Do something...?

He reaches around to shut off the shower, then grabs the hem of my dress, pulls it over my head, and tosses it aside.

He glances down at the tights, reaches for the waistband with his injured hand. He pauses. I hook my fingers in the waistband of my tights and tug them down along with my panties. The lycra sticks around my thighs. Shit, and I'd worn them in the hope of seeming sophisticated. Go figure! I try to peel them off, but the damn thing resists. Shit! I yank it down further, manage to twist it around my knees. Another tug and I shove it down to my ankles, peel it off. Whew! I straighten, and with a low growling sound he's on me.

He lowers himself to his knees, pushes his face into my pussy and fastens his mouth on my melting core. "OMG." I yell, "Wes, Wes... Wes." I chant his name as he stabs his tongue inside my channel, swipes his tongue up from my backhole to my clit. He bites on my clit and I arch off the wall. OMFG! This man's tongue should be worshipped; also his mouth, and his dick, and his digits... Gah! He slides his finger inside my melting pussy and I shudder. My knees seem to give away. I begin to slide down the wall, dig my fingers into his hair for purchase and tug on it. He growls. My nerve endings spark. Ooh, I like that. A lot, actually. I yank at that luxurious hair on his head.

He peers up at me, "You know you'll have to pay for that, huh?"

"Promises, promises." I smack my lips.

His nostrils flare. He rises to his feet, and keeps rising. I mean, he is tall. I know that, but in that enclosed space he is larger than life. A lethal, vital, sex machine of a man. My sex clenches, heat coils low in my belly, emptiness gnaws deep inside. I need him. Want him... Yearn for him to fill me up and put me out of my misery. "Wes," I groan.

"Here baby, right here."

He plants his thigh between my legs.

"I am going to make this so fucking good for you, Princess." He thrusts his fingers...two...three inside my pussy.

I gasp; my knees buckle. One thing I can confirm. Weston-built-like Adonis-Kincaid, always delivers.

He wraps his fingers around my neck, holds me upright, even as he shoves the fingers of his other hand in and out of me. I moan, reach for his shoulders. He doesn't stop; he scissors his fingers inside of me. Goosebumps dot my skin; a trembling begins from the soles of my feet, inches upward. He releases his hold on my neck, then turns me around. What the—? I sense his hot breath on the curve of my hip a second before he pries my butt cheeks apart and rims his tongue around my backhole. Oh, my God. The trembling pulsates from where he slides his tongue in and out of me. He slips his palm between my hips and the shower wall, then grinds the heel of his hand against my pussy.

"Weston," his name is torn from my lips. I sense his lips curve against my arse... Is that even possible? Then he thrusts his fingers inside my pussy, and I explode. The orgasm sweeps up my thighs, my spine. I slap my palm against the shower wall, hold onto his forearm with my other hand. He continues to lick me, shove his fingers in and out of me, extending the climax, which seems to go on and on. He pulls away his hand, removes his tongue, and just like that, my orgasm fades. No way, he can't command my body with such...finesse, can he? My knees give way, for real this time. His arms come around me. He turns me toward him, pinches my chin, so I look up at him.

"Wow," I gasp, "that was..." I swallow, "It was..."

"Just the beginning."

"Huh?" My head spins. "I... I don't think I can..."

"You can."

He grins down at me, that toe curling, sex clenching, scalp tingling smirk that sends a surge of heat racing up my spine.

"Are you a sex god?" I mumble. Hell, did I blurt that out? Must be my sex-addled brain that's speaking. Not my fault. Gah.

"That's Dr Sex God to you." He laughs, "And you're welcome, again."

"Huh?" Do I want to know why? Don't ask him; don't. "For what?"

"For the third, fourth and fifth orgasm that you are going to experience."

"No." I blink.

"Yes." His lips curl. He reaches behind him, shuts off the shower, then steps back and rakes his gaze down my naked body. I will not cover myself, will not hide what he's already pinched and massaged and teased and licked and sucked and... I press my thighs together.

"Hmm," he smirks.

"You going to take off your clothes, or what?" I mutter.

He unbuttons his shirt, whips it off, then unfastens his belt. My gaze drops to his crotch. Don't stare; look away, you slut. He shoves down his pants and his boxers, kicks them aside. He straightens and I gulp. OMFG. I take in his cock that stands to attention against his stomach. It's thick and wide, and longer than I remember it to be. How had I managed to take him down my throat?

I must have made a strangled noise, for he chuckles. "It will fit," he assures me, "I'll make it."

That's what I'm afraid of.

I sidle away and toward the door of the shower cubicle.

"Where do you think you're going?" he drawls.

"Ah, I...uh... I need to pee."

"Will you pee on me?"

"What?" I stare at him, "Are you serious?"

He laughs, "No, but coming to think of it..." He scratches his chin, "Can I pee on you, instead?"

"No," I stutter. "Is that, like, your kink or something?"

He frowns, "Never thought of it before, but," he looks me up and down, "you have to admit, it's an effective way of marking my territory."

My jaw drops, "You're crazy."

He steps forward, plants himself in the doorway, "Crazy is what I feel every time Max insists on occupying your attention."

I frown, then stiffen, "Wow, you're jealous."

He frowns.

"You resent that Max prefers my company to yours."

He folds his arms over his broad chest, "You done?"

I plant my hands on my hips. "Come on," I wheedle, "at least, admit that you don't want Max anywhere near me."

"You're wrong."

"Oh?"

He nods. "I don't want any male—no man or animal of any kind—near you."

I swallow. My heart begins to race. I know he's dominant, and an alpha, and demanding... But this crazy possessive side of him? Wow, it's hot as fuck. We stare at each other. Water drips from the shower onto the ground. I swallow and the hair on the back of my neck rises. Say something...anything to break the silence. I lower my arms to my sides, "Do...do you mean that?" I ask.

He tilts his head, drums his fingers on his chest, then straightens, "Want me to show you?"

31

Weston

What the fuck am I playing at? Why are you allowing her to see how much she affects you? Peeing on her? Seriously? Fucking fuck, it's not something that had crossed my mind... Not before her. Is that how much I want to possess her? Is that how much I want to imprint myself on every cell of her body? My vision narrows. The hair on my forearms rises. This crazy-ass need to own her... It's new, it's different, it's real. I bend my knees, peer into her face.

Her pupils are blown; the blue in them has deepened to an almost purple. Her cheeks are flushed, her pulse skitters at the base of her neck. "Do you, Princess?"

"I..." She bites the inside of her cheek, then lowers her chin, "I do."

"I didn't hear you."

She draws in a breath, tips up her chin. She takes a step forward until her toes bump mine. "I want you to show how much you want me, what you'll do to possess me, how much you need to ensure that no one will have me like you do."

"Good." I step away from the entrance of the shower stall, jerk my chin, "After you."

She frowns, then walks past me. I follow her past the bath tub, out the door of the ensuite, into the bedroom. She approaches the foot of the bed.

"Stop," I call out.

She pauses, angles her body.

"Don't turn around."

She trembles, but obeys.

I stalk over to her, wrap the towel I'd snatched on my way out of the bathroom around her shoulders, drag it down her back, over the lush curves of her butt, her strong calves, about those shapely ankles—that I want locked around my neck, fast.

She gasps.

I straighten, then circle around to her front.

Her chest rises and falls.

I lower my gaze to her chest and her shoulders quiver. I pat the towel about her creamy breasts; her nipples pucker. I lower my head, bite down on the pebbled flesh. She moans.

A droplet of water slides down the valley between her breasts. I lick it up, then follow the trail of another down to her belly button. I curl my tongue into the indentation; she groans. Lower my face to her pussy and close my mouth around the delectable flesh. She gasps, and the sound of her pleasure percolates into my cells, filters through my blood, straight to my balls.

I straighten, peer into her face.

"Get on the bed—on your back, legs apart, pussy exposed, hands behind your neck, so you can't touch yourself," I growl.

Her muscles quiver.

"Do it," I snap.

She scrambles up on the bed, turns around, lies flat, spreads her knees, locks her fingers behind her neck.

I smile, "My, aren't you the obedient one today."

She glowers at me and I widen my stance. I draw the towel, now damp with the water from her body, down my chest, my stomach, my thighs. Her gaze follows my every move, her pupils dilated, breasts swollen. I toss aside the towel, lower my gaze to her pussy, to where the evidence of her arousal drips down her inner thigh. My dick throbs; my groin hardens.

I lean over, scoop up her cum, and suck on it.

She whines.

"Want some?"

She nods.

I tilt my head, arch an eyebrow. "Maybe later." I smirk, "If you've been good enough, that is."

She groans, mumbles something under her breath.

"What's that, Princess?"

She stares at me, then presses her lips together.

I laugh, "You're learning fast."

I fist my cock, swipe it from root to tip. She glances at it and her lips part.

"Want a taste of this?"

She pouts, doesn't reply.

"Damn, but you beat me at my own game, huh?"

She scowls.

I chuckle. Then walk around the bed to the side table, pull it open and get a condom.

I slip it on, walk back to the foot of the bed.

"Soft fuck or hard fuck?"

She purses her lips.

"Both?" I tilt my head, "Neither?"

She shakes her head.

"One after the other, maybe?"

She swallows; her chest rises and falls.

"Maybe I should decide, huh?" I tap a finger to my chin. "Perhaps I should surprise you?"

I lean over, grab her by her ankles.

She squeaks.

I pull her forward, until her hips are almost at the edge. I kneel on the bed, draw her legs over my shoulders, position my dick at her entrance.

Her belly quivers, her thighs spasm, and goosebumps flare on her skin. Good, I am not the only one who's not going to be able to walk away from this unaffected. "You ready, Princess?"

She tips her chin up, opens her mouth. I plunge inside her. Her entire body bucks. She flings out her arms, grabs hold of the sheets. I wait, wait for her to adjust to my size. Her eyelids flutter and a bead of sweat trickles down her temple. "Eyes on me," I order.

She looks up, holds my gaze. The pleasure and hunger, and that edge of desperation in them, mirrors the strange confluence of emotions inside of me. I grip her thighs and hold them further apart.

Her breathing grows shallow, but she jerks her head, and I begin to fuck her in earnest. I plunge into her again and again. The bed shudders with each thrust. The headboard slams into the wall, punctuated by her cries, her moans, her gasps, her whines, her wails. Each sound from her beautiful lips sinks into my blood, curls around my heart, hacks away at the walls I have built up against the world.

My God, this woman... She tears me apart. The scent of her, the taste of her, the sweet poison of her cunt...will be my death. I pull back, stay poised at the edge of her channel, move over her, until my face is close to hers. My lips above hers, breathing in her perfume, her essence. The very breath that we share ties us together.

I kick my hips forward, sink into her. "Come," I command, and she arches up and off the bed. I fit my mouth to hers, draw from her scream as she breaks apart under me. I sink in and out of her, drawing out the aftermath of her orgasm, reveling in her complete submission. My chest hurts, my temples throb, my balls draw up and I let myself come inside of her.

I collapse forward on my elbows. A bead of sweat trickles down my chin and plops on her cheek. Her eyeballs move behind her closed eyelids. I pull out of her, tie the condom, then walk over to the waste basket and toss it in. When I return to the bed, I pull the covers over her, slip in between the sheets and pull her to me.

I spoon her, our bodies in sync from throat to chest to hips. I throw my leg over hers and fall asleep.

When I wake up, I am on my own.

I glance at the dent in the pillows, the mussed-up sheets, the scent of sex, of chocolate and cinnamon, is heavy in the air. Her scent. My dick lengthens. Shit, haven't I had enough of her? My fingertips tingle. Why the hell do I want to touch her, pull her to me and hold her, then bury myself inside her again and again? I shake my head. The fuck is wrong with me?

I sit up, swing my legs over the side of the bed. I head for the walk-in closet, step in and pull on a pair of sweat pants. When I step out, I hear a sound from behind the door that leads to the kitchen. I head toward it and the scent of chocolate deepens. I wasn't dreaming then? I step inside, come to a stop.

She stands at the counter, back to me, wearing a shirt—my shirt. It falls to half-way down her thighs, clings to the swell of her butt. The valley between her arsecheeks is a dark shadow that calls to me. I curl my fingers into fists. Fuck, get a grip on your desires, asshole. I take a step forward. She throws her head back, sways those ample hips from side to side, bumps, grinds. I reach down adjust the thickness that tents my crotch. Jesus H Christ, what is she up to now?

She flicks her head from side to side, holds up her spatula—that same infernal spatula she'd threatened me with the first time I saw her at the cabin. I move toward her. She lowers her chin and screeches. What the fuck? I stare as she croons under her breath, then rotates her body in a figure eight. Huh, is that what they call twerking? I grab my very interested dick, pull on it as she moves her butt in the opposite direction. Sweat beads my forehead. Fuck, she only has to twitch that gorgeous arse and this asshole will come running. Fuck.

I stalk to her. She angles her body, lowers her head and sings into the spatula, the lyrics from a famous Christmas anthem—so famous that even I recognize it.

I shake my head. "Are you singing Last Christmas by Wham!?"

She howls out the next set of lyrics in answer.

I wince. As gorgeous as her pussy is, as sassy as her temperament is, as beautifully sharp as her mind is... Her singing voice...? Well, let's just say I sing better, and I've been asked not to sing.

I close the distance between us, place a hand on her shoulder.

She screams, turns, and brings the spatula down on me.

Amelie

The spatula connects with his hand... His injured hand. His shoulders bunch and the color fades from his cheeks. To his credit, he doesn't cry out in pain. His big body goes solid; his chest planes seem to expand and grow bigger as he draws in a breath. Then he takes a step back, another, until the backs of his knees connect with one of the stools at the breakfast bar. He sinks down into it, brings his hand up to his chest and cradles it there. Sweat beads his forehead.

"Ow," he mumbles.

"Bloody apple crumble," I wheeze. The spatula slips from my hand, falls to the floor, bounces once. Goopy chocolate sprays across the floor, dots the edges of his sweats.

"Oh. My," I gasp, "Ohmygod." I take a step forward and my foot slides on the chocolate crepe batter. I stumble, then right myself. "Oh, hell," I cry. "I am so sorry. So sorry. I didn't mean it." I leap forward, reach for his hand.

He jerks back.

I freeze.

"I didn't mean it. You surprised me," I blubber, "Did I hurt you? Ohmigod, omigod, of course, I hurt you. Oh my—"

"Stop," he barks out the command.

I stutter, "I'm sorry, I really am."

"You mean you didn't hurt me on purpose?"

I open and close my mouth. "How could you think that?" I cry. "Do you really think I would—?"

One side of his mouth curls.

I purse my lips together. "You horrible man." I step toward him.

He holds up his good hand, "Stop, before you make it worse."

"Oh." A pressure builds behind my eyes. "Is it bad? Did I break it again?"

"It hadn't healed enough for that to happen." He grunts, "No, you hit the finger in the same place it broke the first time around."

"I didn't." I scowl. I hadn't hit his finger, only his palm, I swear. I stare at his finger in the splint, then back up at his face. "You're so adept at working around that, that I forget sometimes you are injured."

"Is that a compliment for my dexterity?" His lips kick up.

"Something like that." I stare at his features. His color's definitely better than it was a minute ago. "Do you want any painkillers?" I shuffle my weight from foot to foot, "Maybe some of the chocolate cookies I baked and brought here?"

"Haven't you given them to Mother?" He frowns.

I glance away, twist my fingers together. "You were right. It was a stupid idea. I should have ordered something from the shops or stopped on the way here to buy something."

"It was a thoughtful gesture," he replies.

I shoot him a sideways glance. Is he, like, pulling my leg?

He meets my gaze, holds up his hand and winces.

"Oh." My chest tightens. "It's hurting, isn't it? Is it bleeding? Sure I can't get you something for the pain?" I step forward. He widens his stance. I slip in between his legs, glance at his injured palm. "Can you, uh, wiggle the other fingers or something?"

He bends the others, shows me the bird by default.

"Guess you're feeling all right, huh?" I slide back, but he moves his thighs in, traps me in place.

"Oh." I gulp.

"Hmm," he tilts his head, "were you serious about your earlier offer?"

Which one?"

"About making the pain better."

I chew the inside of my cheeks, survey his features, which take on an expression of innocence. As if. I'd bet my last chocolate éclair that he has something up his sleeve.

"Depends," I venture.

"On what?"

"On what you want me to do."

"I'll only tell you if you agree to it."

"I can't agree to it unless you tell me what it's about."

"Trust me." His eyes gleam.

Ha, I draw in a breath. "Famous last words," I mumble.

"I heard that." He holds up his uninjured hand. "If you don't want to do it, you don't need to."

"Really?"

He nods, "I swear on chocolate."

Hmm. I frown, "You don't like chocolate."

"But you do."

"You're supposed to swear on something you hold dear." I huff.

"I swear on you."

My mouth drops open. Oh, my. Did he say that? He didn't. Should I ask him to repeat it? Nah, ignore it.

"Fine." I swipe my hair over my head, "What is the thing you want of me? What should I do to make the pain better?"

He holds up his injured finger, "Kiss it."

"That's all?"

"That's all."

"Okay." I draw in a breath, lower my head, and press my lips to his finger. I straighten and he tightens the net formed by his thighs, pulls me closer. My core brushes the prominent tent at his crotch, the one I have been trying to ignore.

"I did what you asked," I say, my voice breathless, "let me go."

"That's not the only place it hurts." He sticks out his lower lip.

"No?" I bite the inside of my cheek.

Weston has the kind of pillowy lower lip made for a pout, but honestly, this is the first time he's pulled that one on me.

Apparently, it takes a rap from a spatula to turn him more amicable. Note to self: next time, aim for his hard head. That might knock some sense into him, hmm?

"No." He shakes his head, "What about the finger between my legs."

I stare at him for half a second, then groan. "Eeyuck, your lines are getting worse."

"And you're getting better at easing my pain."

I shake my head, "So, you want a blow job, before breakfast?"

"Definitely before breakfast, and during and after too."

I squeeze my eyes shut, "I'll pretend you didn't say that."

"You promised," he wheedles. "Come on, Princess, just a kiss. Take the frog out of the well; show it the world."

I laugh, "That was almost clever."

"Right?" He smirks; his chest seems to swell with how pleased he is with himself. This man? I don't know if I should slap him or kiss him. Or both, one after the other.

I frown.

He chuckles, "You hurt me; it's up to you to make it better."

He has a point there.

I drop my gaze to his crotch, then to his face.

His gaze narrows.

I bite down on my lower lip, and those grey eyes lighten, a sure hint that he's aroused. I squeeze my thighs together. So am I. He raises his hand, rubs his thumb over my lower lip, until I release it. "You are not allowed to hurt that; only I have the permission to do that."

"Oh." His words coil around my heart and my blood begins to pound in my veins. That possessiveness in him? It kills me every time. I reach forward, palm him through his pants. He groans. His chest planes seem to harden.

I rub at his length, and I swear, his dick thickens.

"Take it out," he murmurs.

I swallow, slide my fingers down his waistband and curl my fingers around his shaft. The muscles of his belly jump. I push down the waistband; the heavy length of him fills my palm. The vein on the underside throbs, the head swollen and angry. Moisture beads the slit.

"Suck me off," he orders.

I bend my head, lick my tongue around the head. The salty, tangy taste of him fills my mouth. I peer up at him. "I want..." I swallow, "Can I...?"

"What is it?"

I reach around him, scoop up some of the chocolate mixture from the table, rub it across the head of his cock.

"Jesus," he breathes.

I hold his gaze, lower my head again and take him inside my mouth.

"Fucking, fuck." He digs his fingers into my hair, tugs. My scalp hurts. Goosebumps ripple down my spine. I lick the chocolate off his dick and the dark taste of cocoa, edged with his cum, the musky taste of Weston, swirls over my tongue. I swallow; he draws in a breath. He loosens the hold of his thighs around me and I sink to my knees. I grip his thigh for support, squeeze the base of his dick, and his entire body seems to grow rock solid.

"Take me down your throat," he growls.

I bob my head forward, and gag. Saliva drips from the edges of my mouth and my lungs burn. Jesus, he's too big. Will I ever get used to his size?

"Breathe through your nose," he directs.

I swallow, and his fingers dig into my scalp. Shockwaves of lust race across my skin. I moan, take in a breath, then another.

"Eyes on me."

I peer up at him, at those colorless eyes that reflect back what I am—his woman, his slave, his to do with as he wants. And what do I want? Him. All of him. His corrupted tastes, his filthy ways, that tenderness he hides deep inside and reveals to his nieces, his family, to Max. I want that. I want to be at the center of his world, command his attention as he demands mine.

I tilt my head and he slips further down my throat. My chest heaves, my breasts ache, and that empty sensation between my legs intensifies.

His features twist. He brings his hand to my face, rubs away the drool from my chin. He cups my cheek, and something like tenderness glitters in those eyes. He tugs on my hair; I pull back. His dick slips out with a pop. He hauls me up to my feet, peers into my face. "What are you doing to me?" he whispers.

"Whatever it is," I lean in close enough for us to share breath, "I feel the same."

His eyebrows knit. He searches my face again. The raw intensity of his gaze sweeps through my mind, pushes away all other thoughts. He bridges the distance between us, then closes his mouth over mine.

Weston

It wasn't supposed to be like this. This sweetness. This feeling of absolute surrender from her that punches me in the gut. My heart begins to pound and the blood thuds at my temples. She parts her lips; I deepen the kiss, swipe my tongue inside her mouth, draw from her taste, suck on her lips... And she gives and gives. A hot sensation coils in my chest.

Without taking my mouth from hers, I bend my knees, grip her under her thighs and lift her up. She wraps her legs around my waist. Her soft core cradles my dick, her breasts thrust up and into my chest. I tilt my head, crush my lips to hers. Her scent fills my senses, her taste goes to my head. I stalk forward and into the bedroom. She winds her arms about my shoulders, tilts her chin up. The softness of her mouth, the heat of her pussy, her pebbled nipples that are imprinted into my skin—all of it sinks into my blood. A pressure builds behind my rib cage. I lower her to the bed, but she doesn't let go.

I lean over her, supporting my weight on my elbows. I press her down into the mattress, thrust my tongue down her throat, drink from her, wanting more...more. I reach down, position my throbbing shaft at the entrance of her pussy.

She moans deep in her throat, digs her heels into my back. The condom. I tear my mouth from hers. "Protection," I mutter.

"I'm on birth control." She stares up, blue eyes darkened to an azure, stormy clouds in their depths. "Come inside me," she whispers, "I want you,

Weston."

"Like this?"

"Only like this." She pushes her hips up, her melting core opening, giving, needing.

"Fuck." I kick my hips forward, and slide into her, all the way in.

Her body jerks and the breath leaves her in a rush. I hold her gaze and begin to move, thrusting harder with each shove, plunge, thrust, propelling forward again and again. She grips me with her thighs, buries her fingers in my hair and tugs. I look deeply into her eyes, into the horizon I've seen all this time, the one that had seemed so far away when it was always right here. In front of me. Under me. With me... Next to me. "Come with me," I push into her, impale her, bury myself so deeply that my balls slap against her thighs.

She opens her mouth in a wordless scream; her body shudders and moisture fills her channel and bathes my dick, as I come inside of her. I thrust a few more times, as her body trembles in the aftermath of the climax, then reach down, scoop up the liquid that spills from us. I hold it to her lips. She sucks on it, swallows.

"How do we taste?" I ask.

"Of sin and chocolate," her lips quirk, "of cruelty and togetherness; of lust and secrets." Her voice lowers, "A strength to do what it takes."

"Can you take what I am going to do to you?" I wonder aloud.

"What?" She frowns.

I pull out of her.

She lowers her legs. I lean back on my knees, then stand and step away, over to the side of the bed. "Get up," I jerk my chin at her.

Her forehead creases, but she sits up. Her shirt—my shirt—that she wears is pushed up about her waist and her pussy glistens with the evidence of our combined cum. The sleeve slips down one shoulder, baring the reddened skin of her chest. Skin I'd touched, sucked, marked, fondled...lips I'd worshipped, breasts I'd cupped, nipples I'd pinched. I step back, rake my gaze one last time over the concave of her stomach, the curve of her hips, the creamy expanse of her thighs, the delicate nip of her ankle, her toes, her hitched breath as she swings her legs over and straightens.

"You can go now," I tell her.

"Wait," she straightens her shirt, "what do you mean?"

"Leave," I jerk my chin toward the door.

"W...where?" she stutters, "What just happened."

Everything. "Nothing," I growl.

She takes a step forward, "That... What took place between us... It was different. I was sure you felt something for me. I know that you want me."

"So?" I pull the waistband of my sweats up my waist. "I want many women... Doesn't mean I have to keep them around."

"I am not one of them," she snarls.

"Oh?" I look her up and down, "Just because my dick loves you," I smirk, "because I see your face and my dick gets hard, I hear your voice and my dick gets hard, I know you're in the next room and my dick gets hard... Doesn't mean I feel the same."

"You're not making any sense." She twists her fingers together. "I know you're scared. You've never allowed yourself to open up to another—"

"You think I opened up to you?"

"You did." She steps close and our toes bump, her nipples brush up against me; that chocolate and honey of her scent intensifies. My heart begins to pound and my chest hurts. Shit. Let go of her, get her out of here. Walk away; don't look back. Release her from that stupid-ass arrangement that never was.

"You'll get your money. All of it," I snap.

She blinks, "Excuse me?"

"The million a day for six days? It's yours."

"You think this was only about money?"

It had to be. "What else could it be about?"

"Did you think, for even one second, that maybe I wanted to be with you?"

"You wanted to be shut up with me in a cabin with no electricity, over Christmas?"

"Why not?"

"You wanted to spend Christmas getting to know my family?"

"It's the first time I've felt at home anywhere." She sets her jaw.

My guts twist. Shit, this isn't easy. Why do I feel like I am tearing out my heart? Why the hell do I care that she seems close to a break down? You've barely met her... You know everything about her. I know nothing of what she wants... She wants you, that's clear. She needs you as much as you are drawn to her. She senses the connection that binds you together...

And that is the fucking problem. I don't want it. I can do without it. I have enough demons of my own to contend with. I don't need this beautiful, gorgeous angel who swept in and threatens to upset my carefully structured life... Which had, by the way, gone down the shitter since she'd flounced into that cabin and turned my life upside down.

"Too bad; they are not yours."

"Too bad for you." She tips up her chin, "I'm yours. You know it and it scares you."

"You think I am scared?" I laugh.

"I think you are petrified. For the first time, you don't have a plan and it terrifies the hell out of you."

"The only thing that terrifies me is that I'll have to hold you while you have a breakdown, and trust me, Princess, that's not on my list of most-wanted things to do right now."

"I don't believe you." She clenches her fists by her side. "All of this is an act."

"That..." I tilt my head in the direction of the bed, "was an act. Guess I'm good, huh? I take credit."

"For what?"

"I won the bet with myself."

"What bet?"

"Making you fall in love with me... Remember what I told you?"

She squeezes her eyes shut, "That you'd break my heart."

"Have I, Princess?"

She stiffens, opens her eyes, stares straight into mine, "Mine is not the only heart that's breaking; and you know what else?"

I tilt my head.

"You care about me. You're in love with me, but you don't want to admit it. By the time you realize it, it will be too late. You'll come begging for forgiveness, and guess what I am going to do then?"

Sweat beads my palm... Tell her to leave, to take her chocolate scent, her crazy-ass satchel of baking tools, her penchant for swearing in a vocabulary that consists solely of desserts, and walk out of here. Don't look back at her. Don't indulge her questions. Don't ask her what she means by that tirade.

"What?" I growl, "What the fuck would you do then?"

She reaches behind her, grabs the box of cookies she'd baked and empties it over my head, "Is that answer enough for you?"

Turning, she walks out.

Amelie

What the hell had happened there? One second, he'd been inside of me, his cock nestled in my pussy, his lips on mine, my legs tangled about him... The next, he'd ordered me to leave.

If there were a classic case of a man who was running scared that would be Weston Fucking Kincaid. Alphahole extraordinaire. Douchebag of the highest order. Bloody fruitcake, who doesn't know his arse from his head... No. I shake my head. Reprobate snackadoodle who has his head stuck so far up his arse, he has no idea how good the pie is. I sniff. Not even when said pie hits him in the face, and splatters its contents over his beautiful mouth, and he licks it off and— OMG, what am I thinking?

I stumble down the stairs, almost miss a step, then right myself, slip on the next one, and come to a halt at the landing. My heart races, my pulse pounds, and a pressure boils behind my eyes. I will not cry; will not.

There's a patter of paws on the wooden floor. Max comes bounding out of the open doors of the suite adjacent to the landing.

I bend down, gather him up, then sink down to sit on the step. "Hey little fella, did you miss me? Did ya now?" I rub his head, hold him close. A tear runs down my cheek; Max licks it up. He whines, then pushes his nose into the crook of my neck. I hug his little body closely as more tears flow down my face. Shit, stop it, stop it. Not your fault if he's such an ass, a completely obnoxious man, Mr. Scrooge McFuck... Gah! Just because one of my favorite authors had released a book about a similar a-hole with that name doesn't mean I have to call him that, huh?

I swallow down the ball of emotion in my throat. I have to get out of here, return to my life... Spend Christmas alone? My heart begins to thud. How could he do this? How? A sob catches in my chest. I glance around, then down at myself. Shit, I am still wearing his shirt—nothing else. I had left everything behind in that alphahole's room. No way, am I going back for it.

Max barks, wriggles in my hold. "Oh, sorry little guy, did I crush you, huh?" I set him down, he darts forward toward the double doors that lead into the suite. Kirsten bends to pat him. Max brushes past her and rushes inside.

She straightens, then takes in my appearance.

I flush, "Umm... Uh, it's not like what it seems."

She tilts her head, "Why don't you come in and tell me about it?"

Twenty minutes later, I curl my legs under me, and take a sip of the fragrant cup of hot chocolate—no, it's never too early in the day for comfort food—that she'd handed me.

Max places his paw on my borrowed PJ's, and stares up at me. "I swear he has a sixth sense, huh?"

"Mum, why was Auntie Amelie crying?" Phoenix asks in a loud whisper.

Kirsten, pats her shoulder, "Because, uh, she had a fight."

"Lover's quarrel, huh?" Skye wanders into the living room, her specs too big for her face. She has a book in her hand.

"Don't you have homework to do?" Kirsten scolds her.

"I've completed my math assignment."

"What about Latin?"

"I hate Latin."

"Does she have to study Latin?" I ask.

"At her school, yes." Kirsten's forehead furrows, then turns to Skye, "Go on, finish it."

"But... M-o-m," she wails, once more seeming her eleven-year-old self.

"I don't need to study Latin to become a vet."

"You want to become a vet?"

She smiles, "I looove animals." She snaps her fingers; Max perks up, jumps off the sofa and races toward her.

"She and animals." Kirsten shakes her head, "I swear, she is a dog whisperer."

"And a cat one, and a hedgehog one," Skye adds.

"Hedgehog?" Kirsten scowls, "Young lady, if I find any more of those creatures in your room...I'll..."

"Relax, Ma, I was only kidding you," she smirks. Her features resemble her uncle's, aka the alphahole, aka the man who'd fucked me so thoroughly a few seconds ago... I blink. That tightness in my chest returns. I lower my chin, hide my face once again in my mug.

Kirsten draws in a breath, "Back to your studies, with you."

"Whatever." She returns to her room, Max at her heels.

"Can I do my homework too?" Phoenix beams up at her Mom.

"Go on then." Kirsten pulls Phe close, kisses her on the cheek. Phoenix turns to leave, then turns and runs to me. I place my mug back on the table, just in time, for she throws her arms around me.

"Oh," I hug the little girl back, "thanks, baby."

She kisses me on the cheek, then turns and races away.

"Kids," Kirsten sinks back in the arm chair, "they can sense when you're unhappy, you know?"

I nod. "They are both beautiful; congratulations."

"Thanks." She beams. "Their father's the disciplinarian; I spoil them I'm afraid."

"When will he be back?"

"Patrick?" Her face takes on a dreamy look, "Tomorrow, or tonight, if he can. He's on a business trip with our oldest brother."

"Really?"

She frowns, "I take it, Weston didn't mention that they work together?"

I shake my head.

"My father started a media company, that Liam now heads up."

"That's your oldest sibling?"

She nods, "Patrick works with him. Weston... Well, after the incident, he changed. He needed to do something more meaningful with his life."

"Is that why he became a heart surgeon?" I ask, "Or was that to protect his own heart?"

She stares at me.

I flush. "Umm, sorry, didn't mean for it to come out that way, it's just..."

She waves her hand, "No offense taken. I was surprised, is all. I never thought about it like that, but you may be onto something." She pauses, as if to commiserate with me. "I know how obnoxious my brother can be."

"That's putting it mildly." I mutter.

"I assume he's told you about the incident?" she asks.

"Some." I reply, my tone cautious. "He mentioned he and six of his friends were kidnapped and held captive for nearly a month when he was twelve, and during that time, each of them was exposed to some horrific punishment meted out to each of them by the kidnappers. It's why he has a trigger when it comes to clocks and time-keeping devices," I swallow, "I guess."

She nods. "After the cops rescued Weston and the other boys from the kidnappers," she leans forward, "he felt like he had been given a new lease on life. He wanted to make sure he made the most of the opportunity. It's one of the reasons he wanted to become a surgeon." She crinkles her forehead, "Then our father died of an heart attack and that strengthened his resolve."

So, I'd been right about the second part, at least. I meet her gaze, "He seems to think it's because it gives him control over life and death."

"Do you believe him?" she scoffs.

"I am not sure what to make of him," I say honestly.

She looks me up and down, "So you guys had a fight this morning?"

"More than that." I heave out a sigh.

To her credit, she hadn't been taken aback when she'd found me standing by the doorway to her suite. She hadn't asked me any questions either. She'd loaned me her clothes, then handed me the cup of hot chocolate. Hell, she hadn't even been surprised that I'd asked her for cocoa, instead of tea... And that, puts her right at the top of my list.

"What happened between you two?" she asks.

"I..." I glance away, "I think we broke up."

"Fights are normal. They're healthy in a relationship—"

"This is more than that." I jump up and begin to pace. "He told me to leave."

"The room?" her tone sharpens.

"His suite, his life... He told me it was over."

"He told you so, in no uncertain terms?"

Had he? I turn to her. "Yes," I reply.

"I don't believe it," she scowls. "I saw the way he looks at you—"

"How?" I fold my arms around my waist. "How does he look at me?"

"Like he wants to eat you up?"

"Yeah." My cheeks heat. "I mean, we don't have any issues in that, uh, department."

"The kind of chemistry between you two? It could boil water at fifty paces."

I laugh, "I thought I was the only one who made cooking analogies."

"I've been spending too much at home with the kids, ensuring dinner's on the table when my husband arrives from work every evening."

"Do you regret it?"

"Not for a second." She leans back in her chair, reaches for her mug of tea. "I had a corporate career as a lawyer. I enjoyed it, but I wanted more. I needed the entire 360 experience—home, kids... I'll go back to practicing part-time when the kids are older."

"And you'll be fine with that?"

"It's all about balance, Amelie." She smiles, "Once they are old enough to leave home, I am sure I'll go back to practicing full time."

"And you don't see it as a compromise?" I head back to the couch, drop into it.

"For whom?" She chuckles, "I have it all, as far as I can see."

And I have nothing. I twist my fingers together in front of me.

Her features twist, "Hell, I didn't mean it that way. The last thing I want to do is hurt your feelings by rubbing in my..." she circles her hand, "...all this, in your face."

"You're not." I lean forward and touch her knee. "Honestly, you aren't. I appreciate your giving me the time to recover, and for the clothes."

"Anytime." She takes my hand in hers, "I like you, Amelie."

I laugh, "You've known me all of two seconds."

"I go by my gut, and unlike my brother, I actually heed what my instincts tell me."

"Too bad that idiot McDick has no such inclinations." I take a deep breath, "Well, I guess I need to head off."

"Where will you go?"

"I need to call my friend Isla, make arrangements to stay with her. I also need my clothes, which are—"

"Stay here."

"What?" I attempt to withdraw my hand, but she doesn't let go. "I mean it," she says. "Stay with me, as my guest. We have the entire floor, and the guest room is free."

I stare at her, "But—"

"We'd love to have you."

"You don't need to say that..."

"I never say anything I don't mean." Her features take on a haughty look, one so familiar, one I've seen on his face. Shit, staying here, surrounded by his family, where their every action would remind me of the man I need to try to forget? No, just no. Not that I don't like Kirsten, but... To be so near him, and yet, not with him? Gah. I'd have to OD on chocolates to get through the ordeal, and that's definitely not something I can afford, not if I hope to get through the festive season with some semblance of a waistline.

"Thank you," I turn my palm over and clasp hers, "but no thank you."

Her lips droop. She peers into my eyes, then lets out a breath, "There's nothing I can do to convince you, huh?"

I shake my head.

"One night." She lowers her chin. "Stay for dinner tonight, meet Liam and Patrick."

I frown, open my mouth to decline, and she drops her gaze to my pajamas. "You owe me."

"You don't play fair, do you?" Just like him.

"It's genetic. Our father ingrained the habit of negotiation at the dining table, I'm afraid."

She rises to her feet.

"Where are you going?" I ask.

"To get your things from Weston's suite."

35

Weston

"You seem nervous, ol' chap," Damian drawls at me from the screen of my phone.

"And you seem full of shit, as usual," I mutter, as I pace in front of the fire in the living room of my mother's home. I'd gone for a run, and when I'd returned, Amelie's clothes and bags had gone from the bedroom. Guess she'd left, after all.

I'd sat on the bed in a daze and wondered if I'd done the right thing.

Yeah, I had. Of course, I had. I didn't need her staying and complicating the situation, aka the state of my feelings for her, further. I'd worked out at the gym after that, pushed myself as much as I could, considering I couldn't do weights yet with my broken finger. Then I had showered and changed into formal clothes for the traditional family dinner at home.

I run my finger around the collar of my shirt. Not that I dislike suits... But hell, if I don't feel more comfortable in scrubs. There is a certain freedom that comes from not having to pretend, when all the power and control is at your fingertips as you perform a surgery, knowing the life of a human depends on you. It is the best adrenaline rush—a responsibility I never take lightly, walking on the edge of a thrill that I crave. One slip up and things would never be the same. Did I slip up with her? I scowl. Fuck that. I am not second guessing my actions, no way.

"Fake girlfriend, slash fiancée, slash wife-to-be not helping with your problem then?" Damian smirks.

"What problem?" I growl.

"That you can't get it up, of course."

I frown, "Where do you get your asinine ideas from?"

"The same place you come up with your brainwaves of sharing a cabin with a woman you've met only once before." He chuckles.

"About that," I crack my neck, "it's over."

"Oh, yeah?" Damian tilts his head, "Hold on, I'm adding Arpad to the call."

"Don't..." I begin to protest, when Arpad's face appears in a window. "Man, and I thought I was bad at relationships, this has to be a record, even for you," he snickers.

"Fuck off," I growl.

"So, you think it's over, but it's not really over?" Damian pipes in.

"I am not going to explain myself."

"What are friends for, if you can't use our shoulders to cry on... Or not." Arpad's screen shakes and droplets of water splash the surface.

"Where the fuck are you?"

"On my yacht, enjoying everything life has to offer, unlike you."

"Why the fuck do I take your calls?" I grumble.

"Because you have something on your mind, and need to vent, like a girl?" Damian laughs.

"Because you are heart-broken?" Arpad snickers.

"Okay, bye," I hold my finger over the screen.

"Ooh, someone's antsy. Did we hurt your feelings? Are you upset you're not getting married like Saint and Sinner before you?"

"You look grumpy. Not jerking off either, are you?"

I shake my head, "Fuck that, and fuck you two," and fuck the woman who put me in this situation, where I am not able to string together two words. Fucking fuck!

I hear the pattering of paws on the floor, then Max jumps up on the sofa and shoves his face in mine. "Hey," I protest, but he licks my mouth, then turns and peers into the screen.

"Hello, ol' boy," Damian chuckles. "You keeping Uncle Weston company while he fucks up his life?"

"A woman and a dog?" Arpad chuckles, "Should I fetch your slippers and dressing gown next ol' chap?"

"Jesus, fuck." I am not sure what I'd intended to accomplish through this conversation, but it wasn't being at the mercy of a mutt and two of my 'friends.'

"At least, I saved the Father from the burden of a virtual wedding." I grouse.

"Speaking of," Arpad drawls, "I'm adding Edward to the call."

No, fuck, no. Why do I insist on calling my 'friends,' knowing I'll be put through the wringer each time?

"Someone mention my name?" Edward's face flickers onto the screen.

"I was just leaving," I grumble.

"You want to hear this." Edward gazes at me with those clear eyes of his which have seen so much and which have yet managed to retain a modicum of innocence. Enough for him to sleep with his thoughts at night, at least.

"How do you manage it?" I snap out.

"You mean, hold down a conversion without losing my wits?"

"That too," I grunt. "How do you always seem so upbeat and energetic?"

"Umm...Maybe because he has no worldly attachments?" Damian offers.

I stare at the Father, who jerks his chin, "I realized the only way out of the aftermath of the incident, was to be true to myself at all times," he says.

"What if the only thing that can soothe my mind is the one thing I must never have?" I mutter.

"Are we talking about someone in particular or a metaphor?"

"What do you think?" I mutter.

Silence stretches across the space. Neither of the other two assholes respond with an off-the-cuff remark. Thank fuck for that. Perhaps it had been the Father I had been waiting for. Guess that's why I'd agreed to this call, which was supposed to be about 7A investments and FOK Media—which stood for Full of Kindness by the way—the companies that the seven of us own.

"I think you're fighting your future," Edward's tone is serious.

"I make my own future," I insist.

He quirks his lips, "You believe that, after everything you've been through?"

"It's because of everything I've been through that I believe it."

Edward tilts his head, "You can't control everything around you."

"Is that why you took the easy way out and gave up the real world for the spiritual one?"

Edward pales. Damian stiffens. Arpad's silent disapproval communicates through the screen.

"Fucking hell." I drag my fingers through my hair. "I didn't mean that Father," I mumble.

"You did," Edward's voice is calm. "I'm glad you are able to speak your mind. In such matters, clear, concise communication is the only way forward."

"What do you mean?" I peer into the screen, trying to discern his features. "Tell me, Father."

"Some of that honesty you displayed earlier... That's what you need to bring to your relationship with her."

"Eh?" I shake my head, "You're making absolutely no sense."

"You know I am." Edward's lips quirk, "Hand on heart, ask yourself what it is that you must do in this situation."

"Haven't I been asking myself that all along? Would I be asking you this question if the answer was at all clear to me?"

"You're the business man here, Weston. Your gut knows what it wants; your heart simply has to fall in line."

"You're not shoddy in the business space yourself." I crack my neck. "You've held your own in all of the business decisions we've made thus far."

"Don't change the topic," Edward admonishes. "What is it that your gut says you should do now?"

"What if it's not clear to me for the first time, huh?"

"Wrong answer," Edward snaps. "You're beginning to piss me off."

I blink. Edward angry? It never happens. That he swore at me? I can count on my fingers the number of times he's done that. "I am not sure what to say," I rasp.

"You don't have to say anything, and you do know what you have to do. Your stubborn-ass head is getting in the way. You're trying to think about this along rational lines, when you know what you have to do."

I laugh, "Have you been spending much time with Saint?" I ask. "You're speaking in riddles."

Edward shakes this head, "Stop deflecting; it won't work." He frowns, "You going to follow your gut and your heart on this? Or are you going to spend the rest of your years regretting the one decision you should have made, which would have changed the course of your life, but you didn't because you were too much of a pussy?"

I stare at him. "I can't believe you said that." I shake my head. "You, of all people, should know I don't shy away from hard decisions."

"But this is much more than that." He tilts his head, "It's, perhaps, not your decision to make. Perhaps this time, you have to allow the circumstances to wash over you, and go with the flow?"

I laugh. As if I would ever do that? I haven't come this far in life to bow before events, not if I have my way. "I'm not sure what you're implying but —"

The screen pixelates and my voice echoes back at me. Huh? Bloody technology, always fails you when you need it the most. The connection restores.

"Hey man." Damian peers back at me from the screen.

Arpad jerks his chin. "Still here for my sins," he grumbles.

"Where's Edward?" I frown.

"Seems he dropped off?" Damian mutters, "Perhaps he's had enough of you acting like a fool, and decided to cut out?"

"Yeah, well, fuck that." And fuck him. My heart begins to race. "Not my decision to make, huh? We'll see." I toss my head.

"You coming out to London for the New Year's party?" Damian asks.

"I'll be there."

"Are you bringing her?"

"That's up to her." I frown. The hair on the back of my neck rises and a tingle runs down my spine. "I need to go, guys."

I hang up and turn. My gaze widens. "What are you doing here?"

36

Amelie

I tip up my chin and march into the room. What the hell am I doing here? Why had I allowed Kirsten to convince me to stay? He frowns as I walk past him to the bar, and pour myself some sparkling water. Yeah, I need my wits about me. I'm not going to fuck this up, or give the alphahole the time of the day either.

I glance around the beautifully furnished living room. The painting above the fire place is definitely an original, the settee in the room is made of plush leather and strewn with cushions, giving it a homey look. The wooden floor gleams, no doubt, polished every day by minions. I take in the corners of the room, the other walls—no clocks. Of course, not. Is his family aware of Weston's trigger? Had they done away with all time pieces? Of course, they know about his affliction, right?

Footsteps sound behind me as Weston prowls over, "I thought I told you to leave?"

A ripple runs past my nerve endings. Don't show how nervous you are. Don't let on how much his nearness affects you.

I turn, glance around him. "Hey, Kirsten," I wave at his sister.

"Come on over, babe, you gotta see what Phe has drawn for you."

"Coming." I march past him, head high, spine straight, my heart booming in my rib cage. He locks his fingers around my wrist.

I squeak.

"Don't ignore me," he growls under his breath. That harsh edge to his voice? Gah! My nerve endings all flare at once.

I stiffen, glance sideways. "Let go of me," I whisper.

"You don't tell me what to do."

"And you don't get to tell me what to do anymore. You told me to leave, remember?"

"And you disobeyed me."

"You're not my keeper, not even my lover. Any right you had over me, you forfeited right then."

"Have I now?" His fingers tighten on my wrist—and he's using his left hand, which is not his dominant hand, but it might as well be. Is any part of this guy less than 100% assertive? And why am I going all gooey inside? Hell, he told me to leave, and just before Christmas. What kind of a monster does that? And why the hell does my body refuse to behave around him?

"Yes, you did." I raise my gaze, force myself to see this through, "I'm done with you."

He frowns and something flickers in his gaze. "Amelie, I—"

"Aunteee Amelieeee." Phe runs across the room and throws herself at me.

I tug my hand, but Weston still doesn't release it. I half bend, rub the little girl's hair. "Hey, baby, watcha have there for me?"

She holds up the craft paper, showing an outline of a princess that she's colored in, complete with tiara. "Who's this?"

"It's you." She smiles widely. "Princess Amelie."

"Awww." My heart stutters. I tug on my hand again, and this time, Weston releases me. I lower myself to a squat as he takes my drink from my hand. I ignore the gesture, accept the drawing from Phe. "It's beautiful."

"So pretty," Phoenix giggles.

"Yes, you are." I pull the little girl close and kiss her cheek loudly.

She bursts out laughing, then pulls away. I rise to my feet, glance at the drawing. "Aww," I sigh, "it really is pretty."

"You're prettier," Weston's deep rumble surrounds me. I shiver. Hell, this really was a bad idea.

I begin to walk away.

"Amelie," he calls out.

Don't stop; don't.

"Your drink."

I wave a hand in the air, "You have it."

I walk toward Kirsten, joining her and the girls. Skye has her nose buried in a book, as usual. She glances up at me, then at the drawing. She snorts under her breath, turns back to her reading.

Kirsten grimaces, then mouths 'sorry.'

I laugh. I remember being far worse at her age. Of course, my parents, being the strict disciplinarians they were, didn't help. It's why I had rebelled every inch of the way. Christmas at home had been quiet, my parents not wanting to change their routine much, even for the festive season. Perhaps there is comfort in everyday chores? More likely, they were so content in each other's company, I'd never fit in with them. Always the third wheel, the outsider looking in. Then they'd retired to Spain; and with that, all expectation of my visiting them for Christmas had been dropped—on both our sides. Our communication had dwindled down to the occasional phone calls, then that had stopped too.

Don't get me wrong, they did their best for me, always provided for me, gave me everything I needed... Except a sense of belonging... The kind of warmth I find here. Max runs into the room, heads straight for me and jumps up.

"Hey boy," I lift him into my arms. "Missed me huh?" He licks my face, and I giggle, "Wow, so much affection, and you saw me what, three minutes ago, huh?"

I glance up and meet Weston's gaze. He raises the glass—the one he had taken from me—and brings it to his lips. He drains the water, then lowers the glass and licks his lips.

I swallow. Shit, what craziness is this, that his every glance is filled with undertones? A crazy sexual tension that will never abate between us. Too bad... He is an alphahole who will never change colors.

"Patrick," Kirsten cries out, then moves forward to greet the man who's just walked in. He opens his arms wide as Phe races for him. He catches the little girl, swings her high and she squeals. "Daddy, you're home," Phe cries.

"I told you I'd be." He kisses her on the cheek, lowers her to the floor, then turning, sweeps his wife into a kiss.

"Ugh," Skye makes a gagging sound, then turns back to her book, which she's reading standing up, by the way.

"Hey, sweetheart, a kiss for your old man?" Patrick grins at her. Skye glances up, sighs, then walks forward and offers her cheek. Patrick hugs her close, and Skye seems to thaw enough to put her arm around him to hug him.

I can't stop the giggle that bounces out of me.

Warmth envelops me, and I don't need to turn round to know that Weston has moved in to stand behind me. "You went against my order."

I snort. "What you going to do about it?" I tip up my chin, "Oh, and I am here because Kirsten asked me to stay. I'll be gone tomorrow, and then we'll never have to meet each other again." I thrust Max at him.

Weston grabs the puppy, mostly because I took him by surprise, no doubt.

Max whines, wriggles around. Weston sets him down and he prances toward the girls.

He straightens, glares at me, "You're still on my turf."

"Whatever." I throw my hands up, pivot and flounce toward the door. Wide shoulders fill the door and a tall man walks in. His features are vaguely familiar. Huh?

He glances at me, and his face lights up, "Amelie." He strides toward me.

I blink up, trying to place him. "Hunter?"

"How are you?" He places his hands on my shoulders, then bends to kiss me on each cheek. "This evening just got more exciting," he whispers in my ear.

I chuckle, pat his shoulder, "What are you doing here?"

"Yes, that's what I'd like to know." Weston stalks forward to glare at him. The two men are the same height. Hunter wears a suit that is every bit as well cut as Weston's. His dark hair curls over his collar. He's every bit as handsome as Weston. So why the hell don't I feel the same attraction toward him?

He glances between us, then grins, "I was invited."

"Who the fuck by?" Weston snaps.

"By me."

Another man stalks into the room. I blink. His features, his build, that bored, annoyed perma-dick face... It could be Weston, only it isn't. The creases around his eyes are deeper, his gaze so cold that I shiver. I take a step back and Weston's warmth cocoons me. His big palm rests on my waist and I don't push it off. His touch grounds me in the face of his darker, older sibling walking through the door."

"Liam," Weston drawls, confirming my suspicion.

"Weston," Liam jerks his chin. His gaze rests on me for a second; there's no change in expression on his face, no acknowledgement that he's seen me. And I thought Weston was a jerk? I bite the inside of my cheek. "Hunter's with me," Liam tilt his head. "I am supporting his campaign to run for Prime Minister."

"Thought this was meant to be family only," Weston growls.

Liam barely glances in my direction, "Considering you have your latest piece here, you shouldn't speak, huh?"

I wince. Weston's big body stiffens behind me. Anger thrums from him and he takes a step forward. "Apologize to her," he growls.

I blink. Go figure. Alphahole here, gets all macho and protective when faced with the threat of an enemy. Or perhaps he wants to save face because I'm here as his guest... Except, I'm not.

I turn on him. "I don't need you to fight my battles," I snap, then turn to Liam. "For your information, I am here because Kirsten invited me to stay." I step forward, tip my chin up, "And I don't really care for your impoliteness...and for your apology, even less."

"Liam," a female voice whips through the space.

I look around him and wince. It's Rosie. Of course, it's their mother. That's all I need. What a nightmare. Why did I accept Kirsten's invitation to stay, again?

Phe skips over to me, then slips her hand through mine. I meet her gaze. She tugs on my arm, I bend down, and she whispers, "You're not leaving, are you?"

I draw in a breath, then shake my head. "Not yet," I whisper back.

I straighten as Rosie walks into the room. She glances between her sons, "Everything okay?" There's a warning edge to her voice.

"Yes, Mother," Liam grates out.

She turns to Weston, who hesitates. She tilts her head, and Weston pulls back his shoulders, gives Liam a hard look. "Apologize first," he insists.

I am about to tell him to forget it, when Liam walks over to me. He takes my shoulders then bends to kiss my cheek. "I am sorry about my earlier remark," he says, "I'm afraid Weston tends to get on my nerves. I didn't mean to insult you that way."

He straightens. Weston tugs me closer so I am out of Liam's reach.

Liam looks between us and smirks, then walks around us toward the dining room. What the hell was that? Apology my foot. He may have sounded earnest, but that condescending look on his face? Jesus, he is one tough customer.

Rosie turns to Weston, who draws in a breath. He walks over to her, kisses her cheek, "We're good, Mother."

"Good." She pats his cheek. "Let's eat." She walks toward the dining room.

OMG, now that's power, huh? She's got these alphas to heel, and that's a talent she'd have learned early. And how, I mean, seriously, how does she do it? She's the true leader here.

Hunter, Kirsten and Patrick follow. Phe skips forward, with Skye trailing behind.

Weston turns on me and the scowl on his face deepens. He bends his knees, thrusts his face into mine, "I've called the car service. They'll be here after dinner for you. Don't find an excuse to stay back this time, you get me?"

Weston

Why the hell is she sitting next to him? I frown across the table as Hunter leans over to say something to Amelie. She giggles, her cheeks rosy. From his company? From the wine? From the warmth in the fireplace, maybe?

I stab my fork into the chestnut and bring it to my mouth. "Why is she talking to him?" I grumble under my breath.

"Because unlike you, she has manners and knows when to be polite, especially at family dinners." Kirsten nudges me with her elbow, "Can't take your eyes off her, huh?"

"Of course, not." I glance down at my plate, "This food is fucking bland."

"Lost your appetite, huh?" She snickers.

I glower, "Don't try to get a rise out of me."

"I thought I was the only one who could," she replies, "until—"

"Until?"

"Her, of course," she chuckles.

I don't need to look up to know she's glanced across at the pesky, curvy woman who I'd invited into my life. Holy fuck, what the hell had I been thinking? "Why is she still here?" I roll my shoulders.

"I can't believe you asked her to leave, and so close to Christmas."

"It's two days to Christmas," I grumble. "Enough time for her to join her family, if she chooses."

"You're a class-A douche," she hisses at me. "Is it because you're in love with her that you're being so terrible to her? Is that why you're going out of your way to insult her, to ensure she'll never look at you again?"

"No, to the first, and as to the second... Well, that's my nature."

"Ha," she snorts. "You can't pull off your mean-ass persona with me, dear brother. You and I are too close for that."

And isn't that the truth. Kirsten is two years younger than me, close enough for us to hang out together. Growing up, I was her protector and she was my shadow, who tagged along with me on all my boyhood adventures. Unlike Liam, who at eight years older than me, was someone I hadn't gotten to know as well. There'd always been a chasm between us, which had only increased after our father had passed on.

I blow out a breath. "I'm not in love with her," I insist again.

"Keep telling yourself lies; that's a specialty of yours, huh?"

"Don't push me on this one," I say through clenched teeth.

Amelie's giggle reaches me. I glance up to find her leaning into Hunter. I clench my hand around my fork, which slips from my fingers and smashes into the plate. The clash rings out and everyone at the table turns to glance at me.

"Sorry, still getting used to using my non-dominant hand for every day stuff," I scowl.

Amelie straightens, glances at me and away. Good. At least, she's heeding the warning.

"Your finger troubling you, much?" my mother asks.

I glance down at my right hand. "The cast comes off next week, then a few more weeks of therapy and I should be back at work by mid-January, at the latest," I reply.

"How did the accident take place?" Liam asks from his position at the foot of the table.

After father passed, Mother assumed the responsibility of running the business, until Liam took over. She still holds veto power on the board and is the head of the family.

"I was forced off the road," I reply.

"Forced off?" Liam frowns.

"No need to concern yourself. I am looking into it, with the Seven."

"The Seven." His lips twitch, "You place too much importance on their friendship."

"At least I have friends, unlike you," I shoot back, then wince. Shit, a few minutes in the company of my family, and hell, if the old insecurities don't come tumbling back.

"I'm focused on my goals, on preserving and growing the family name. I'd do anything for it."

"Including getting married and producing an heir, no doubt?" I scowl.

"If that's what's needed of me, I won't shirk my duties." Liam wipes the edges of his lips with his napkin.

"You're getting married?" Amelie leans forward, her gaze sparkling. "Who's the lucky woman?"

"Someone I haven't met yet," he says coolly.

"So, you don't know her, but you're marrying her?" She frowns.

"Until he does, he doesn't get to take over the family business," Kirsten explains. "Nor, for that matter, can Weston."

"Huh?" Amelie scowls across the table.

I stiffen, nudge Kirsten with my knee. She shuffles away. Fuck! Why do little sisters always have to be such a pain?

"Explain," Amelie insists.

"Until both of my brothers marry, and specifically for Liam, until he produces an heir, they cannot get access to the family business—"

"—Or to their trust funds," my mother completes the sentence. "It's tradition," she elaborates. "Something decreed by my husband's grandfather, and which I hope my sons will honor."

"And Kirsten?" Amelie asks.

"I don't count," she smirks. "Only a woman, after all, and all that."

"And you know your father changed his will to ensure that you inherit your share of the money," Mother retorts.

"I don't get access to the company," she protests.

"Do you want access to the company?"

"Guess not," she admits. "Still, it would have been nice if Dad had given me the choice."

"He made sure you'd be taken care of—"

"Not that Kirsten would have lacked for anything, as long as I am here." Patrick folds his arm around her and pulls her close.

Amelie's features grow wistful and she glances from Kirsten to me. I glare at her, she bites down on her lower lip, and damn it, of course, my cock instantly notices.

I hold her gaze. She looks away, raises her glass, "A toast to Kirsten and Patrick." She smiles.

I glance over to my mother, who seems surprised. Then she surprises me, by raising her glass. "A toast." She coughs, rubs at her chest.

"You okay?" I frown.

"Never been better," she smiles, the skin stretching around her mouth. A gleam of sweat glistens on her forehead. She raises her glass in her left hand, her dominant hand, which trembles. All of my senses pop. My visions, tunnels. Even before the glass slips from her fingers, I rise, then rush over to her. I catch her as she sinks into her chair, her breathing ragged, her skin pallid.

"Liam," I snap at my brother, "call an ambulance."

He jumps to his feet so fast, his chair topples over with a crash. He pulls out his phone, walks away as he dials.

I hear the sound of Max barking. Phe begins to cry, then is hushed. More chairs being shoved back, the slap of footsteps on the floor, then Hunter and Patrick crowd me. "Move back," I snap, and they comply.

"Weston," my mother whispers as I lower her to the ground. Sweat beads her upper lip, "Weston." She coughs again.

"Don't talk," I say.

I reach for my mother's wrist to check her pulse and glimpse the steel band attached to her watch—the bloody watch that my father presented to her when they got married; the one she'd put away after the incident, when she'd found out about my trigger. Why the hell is she wearing it? My heart begins to race, the blood thundering at my temples. I stare at the watch—the hands on the face, the big hand moving fast, so fast, the small hand following pace, the countdown for my life as my kidnapper had hauled me into the small room across the corridor from where I had been imprisoned with the rest, as he'd tied me to the chair, attached the rigged clock to my chest. "Will you survive it this time? Follow the countdown, the ticking of the clock as it edges closer to the end."

He'd ripped off my blindfold—the light had cast his face in shadow so I hadn't been able to get a good look at him—then left me with only the ticking for company, and I had screamed against the gag, tried to pull free. "If you move, the bomb goes off. If you disturb the clock, it goes off. If you so much as breathe too hard...it goes off. Hell, if you so much as live...it may go off... Will you survive this round?" His voice echoes through my head. I stare at the moving hands of the watch.

"What do you think, Weston?" my kidnapper asks. "Will you live or will you die this round?"

Live or die?

Do I want to die?

What do I have to live for? Why can't someone rescue me and put me out of my misery? If I get out of here, I'll never allow anyone else to control my life...never. Never.

"Weston?"

Never relinquish your power. Never.

"Weston!" Something connects with my cheek. I fall back, glance up into familiar blue eyes. The eyes of an angel. The blue of the ocean, the sky. The only place where I could be safe, where I can soar above it all, away from here, away from these memories, the clocks that tick down to my demise.

"Weston." Those blue eyes blaze at me; silver sparks in their depths. Huh? "You need to help her. Snap out of your shock. Now!" She raises her palm, then slaps me again, and again.

I blink. "Amelie?"

"Thank God," she cries. She pinches my chin, turns my face to where my mother is sprawled on the floor, her hand extended. I press my thumb to her wrist. There's no pulse.

"Mother!" I touch her shoulder. "Rosie," I call out her name but she doesn't respond.

Fuck, fuck, fuck. I tilt her head back, lift the tip of her chin and, lean in closer. Her chest doesn't move. I listen over her mouth and nose for breathing sounds, hold my cheek over her nose. Fuck, she's not breathing.

I place the heel of my left hand on the center of her chest, place the heel of the other hand on top of the first hand, interlace my fingers, My injured finger screams in protest—I ignore it. I push down with my arms and hands, using my body weight to compress her chest.

Tick-tock-tick-tock- Push-now-push-now.

My own personal song that has a rhythm that corresponds to the compressions per minute required for the rhythm.

Tick-tock-tick-tock. Push-now-push-now.

Sweat beads my brow; pain sears my arm. I reject it, continue with the momentum.

Tick-tock-tick-tock-push-now-push-now.

I count to 30 compressions, then tilt her head, lift her chin up, pinch her nose. I seal my mouth over hers, blow. Check to make sure that her chest rises. Blow again twice. Then back to chest compressions, count to 30, followed by 2 rescue breaths.

"Weston?"

I focus on my mother's face. Come on, come on, breathe.

"Weston, the paramedics are here."

Breathe. Breathe. I continue to push down to the rhythm in my head. Tick-tock-tick-tock-breathe-now-breathe-now.

"Weston!" Arms grab my shoulders. I wince; pain radiates from my injured finger; a coldness coils in my gut. I am pulled back. I lower my injured arm to my side, watch as the paramedics take over, blocking out the view of my mother. "It's my fault," I gasp.

"What? No." Amelie's face fills my line of sight. "Weston, it's nobody's fault."

"I froze," I mumble under my breath.

"Weston." Amelie cups my cheek, "Baby, look at me."

"The one time I needed to be in control of my senses, and I lost it. I couldn't move, couldn't breathe... All I could think of was—"

"The incident," she whispers. "Oh, baby, stop torturing yourself."

I raise my gaze to her face, "What's it to you?"

"What?"

"Why are you still here? Didn't I tell you to leave?"

"Weston, man, get a grip on yourself." Hunter touches my shoulder and something inside of me snaps. I rise to my feet, plant my uninjured fist in his face.

He reels back. Fire burns a trail up my arm from the burst skin on my knuckles. "Fuck." That hurt like a bitch, but what-fucking ever. "You keep the fuck away from her, you hear me."

"Man, you have this all wrong." Hunter puts up his hands; blood drips from his cut lip. Good.

"Weston," Amelie shoves herself between us, "what's wrong with you?"

"You," I growl. "You're what's wrong." Fuck you, what the hell are you doing? Making sure you cut all ties with her, huh? You could have accepted her tenderness, her compassion, her softness—that always seems to make you unravel, that makes you weak. She makes me want everything I swore I don't need. Fuck me. And fuck her and, "Fuck all of you." I stumble back.

She grabs hold of my suit jacket. "Weston, please stop," she sobs.

"Look at you," I snarl, "all empathetic and shit, when really all you want is my money. Admit it."

"No."

"Don't lie, that's why you accepted my deal. Its why you came here, why you're still here. Because you think I'll succumb to your charms? That perhaps I'll settle down and play happy family with you? Well, you can think again. That's not what I want."

"You don't mean it."

"You're right." Shut the fuck up. you wanker. What the fuck are you saying? Don't do it; don't do it. "I do want it."

Her chin wobbles, "You do?"

I nod, "Just not with you."

"At least you are being honest." Her features crumple and tears drip from her eyes. She wipes them away, straightens herself, "You may as well admit that you thought up this arrangement, because you wanted to fake a marriage in order to access your trust fund."

As if I need the family money? I am doing fine, more than fine, on my own steam.

I glare at her.

She tips her head back.

I flatten my lips. "Fine," I snap. "That's why I came up with this idea of a fake relationship. I should have known you were all wrong for it."

"Fine." She pulls herself up to her full height, "There's one more thing I need to tell you."

"Oh?"

She nods. "Go fuck yourself."

She brushes past me, walks out of the room, my house, my life... My everything.

My vision tunnels and my heart hammers so fast, I am sure I am having a cardiac as well. Stop her; stop her. I step toward her. Liam plants his body in my path.

"Get out of my way," I growl.

"Get ahold of yourself first." Liam grabs my shoulders. I shake him off, raise my fist—the wrong one—the one with my injured finger in a splint. Fuck. He swerves; my hand grazes his face. Pain crashes behind my eyes. The next moment something slams into my face, the world tilts, and darkness pulls me under.

Weston

"You're a wanker, you ass," Damian frowns down at me.

I tilt my chin up from where I am sprawled out on the examination table.

"Welcome back, Sleeping Beauty," Arpad drawls from the other side.

This scenario is all wrong. As a doctor, I am used to being in there, with the action, inside the OR, where I use my talent, my wits, my instinct, to save lives. Instead, I am sprawled out here...like the loser I am. Loser, fucking loser.

I try to sit up, and my entire body protests. I wince. Damian touches my shoulder. "Take it easy, Kincaid," he cautions.

"Fuck off," I mutter. What's wrong with me? I shoved her away. I knew what I was doing, I was aware of it. I had done it while in full possession of my senses. I hadn't been able to stop myself. What should I have said instead? Please stay; don't go. All the shit I threw your way? Those were my issues, not yours. My insecurities, my bloody fallacies about myself. I thought I was invincible, invulnerable, I thought I could control my fate, I thought... I could live without your touch, your kisses, your beautiful cunt... your spirit, your sass, your lips that clung to mine, your heart...your tender heart, your fun-loving attitude, that I admit, sometimes got on my nerves. I mean, can anyone be that chirpy, that happy all the time? What hurts of your own had you been hiding underneath? I'd never bothered to find out... And now, it is too late.

"Too late," I mumble.

"What's that?" Damian lowers his head to my eye level. "The fuck did you say?" he demands.

"It's too fucking late." I drag my fingers through my hair. "I let her go, man."

"Who are you talking about?"

My head whirls; I squeeze my eyes shut to stop it. Run an internal check on my vitals—pain in my right shoulder and my left, my left eye hurts like a bitch, my broken finger is numb and my chest... The band around my chest, that hollow sensation in my abdomen... I straighten, "Mother, how is she? Is she...?" I swallow. Don't say it; don't think it. "Is she...?" I swallow down the ball of emotion in my throat. Shit, since when did I become this weak? This unable to take on my share of the burden for my family? This selfish that I am slumped in a corner worrying about myself... My bloody love life, which isn't... It is more than that. Hell. I sit up; my head spins, "Whoa." I slouch down again, "The hell is wrong with me?"

"They had to sedate you."

"What?"

"You had a bit of a breakdown, ol' chap?"

"What?"

"You lost it there," Arpad's somber voice reaches me.

"You're not making any sense, man." I straighten. My shoulder hurts like a bitch—my right shoulder. I glance down at my injured finger; the splint has been replaced by a fresh one.

"Yeah," Damian drawls. "You hit Liam, who decked you. They hauled you into another ambulance, brought you here. You were lucky that you didn't fracture that finger again, though you're going to have to wear that splint for a while longer."

Right!

"And my mother?"

"She's fine," Damian replies.

"She had a—"

"She didn't," He shakes his head.

"What?" I scowl, "She had a cardiac arrest."

"She didn't."

"I don't understand." I scowl.

"She had symptoms resembling a cardiac arrest, but your CPR saved her. But it wasn't a cardiac arrest."

"You are not making any sense."

"She was poisoned."

"What?" I shake my head. "How did that happen?"

"They are trying to find out."

"The food we ate." I rub the back of my neck "The rest of us are fine?"

"Everyone else is, as far as I know," Damian confirms.

"She was targeted," Arpad offers.

"Do they know who did it?" I glance between them. The two men exchange glances.

"What are you thinking?" I growl.

Damian glances down at me, "Who has a vendetta against the Seven?"

"The Mafia," I breathe.

Arpad's features harden; he doesn't comment.

"Fucking asspricks." My stomach churns. Sweat beads my forehead. "They changed our lives... Traumatized us. Hell, I thought I'd gotten over my bloody trigger...but fucking-fuck... I froze when I saw my mother's watch."

"We heard," Damian replies, his tone quiet.

"I couldn't help her." A ball of emotion closes my throat.

"From what we heard, you gave her CPR, which saved her life."

"I didn't do enough." I rake my fingers through my hair.

"Aren't you hearing what we're trying to tell you, asshole? It wasn't your fault."

"Right," I draw in a breath, "I get it." I swing my legs over the side. "I need to go see her,"

Arpad stops me with an arm on my shoulder. "She doesn't want to see you."

"What?"

"No one in your family wants you there."

"Excuse me? Are you joking?"

"Not after how you acted with her..."

"What? You just said my CPR saved her. Why are they pissed at me?"

"Amelie."

"She's not their concern."

"By all accounts, she is now."

"The fuck do you mean?"

"She's in there with them," Arpad adds.

My heart begins to race. Shit, can I put this right somehow? Have I been given another chance? If I can get to her and explain my actions... I rise to my feet and the world lurches around me. "Fucking fuck." My legs give way under me and I crash back onto the examination table.

"Man, you're pathetic." Damian glowers down at me. "They don't want to see you. You don't want to go there; it could get ugly."

"They're my family; they'll see me," I insist.

"You sure?"

"I mean, so I was, uh—unreasonable with her."

"You think?"

"Okay, I was an ass. I hurt her—"

"More like broke her heart. What were you thinking? Asking her to leave in front of everyone? A moose would have more sense than you."

"A moose?"

"It's Christmas, and all that," he explains.

"Right." I lurch back up to my feet; my legs seem to hold me this time. I take a step forward, sway. Damian grabs my shoulder. I shake it off, "I can fucking do this on my own."

"Fine, man, whatever." He exchanges a look with Arpad, who shakes his head.

"You bitches have anything to say, you can say it to my face."

"Still crotchety in his old age," Arpad mutters.

"If you cunts can't help me, then you can fuck off," I growl, step toward the exit of the room. By the time I reach the doorway I am panting. I grab the doorframe; sweat beads my forehead. Shit, the fuck is wrong with me? My shoulder hurts, but my fractured finger seems to have gone numb, thank fuck. I propel myself forward, make it into the corridor and crash into a nurse. The young woman straightens, shoots me an annoyed glance, then blinks. "Dr Kincaid?"

Thank fuck. She recognizes me from when I'd done my residency in this very hospital. I need all the breaks I can get; so long as I reach her in time.

I glance down at the nurse's badge. "Marcy," I kick my lips up in a smile, "Can you help me?"

She flutters her eyelids and my gag reflex kicks in. Shit, has to be the drugs I am on. It's no wonder I feel like I am flying. It's also the only reason that I can't tolerate another woman putting the moves on me. Yeah, nothing to do with the fact that a sassy, curvy, pastry chef has entranced me. Sure, keep telling yourself that, fuckhead. My head spins. I put out my hand to steady myself and Marcy grabs it. Fuck, this is not right—me touching another woman. The fuck is wrong with you Kincaid? Eyes on the prize, remember, and right now, I need help in getting to where Amelie...and my mother, and yeah, the entire family is.

I hold onto Marcy's shoulder, "Can you help me?"

Amelie

"How dare he do this?" I mumble under my breath. How dare he tell me that he doesn't want me, doesn't want a future with me? Get over it; get over him. Every time he's pushed me away, I've returned to him. Like an ant attracted to sugar, like cream on milk, like jelly on the floor—gah, stop. Even my metaphors are beginning to sound pathetic. Just leave, before he hurts you further. Pulls away at any final shred of self-respect you have left, before he destroys your confidence completely.

"Did you say something?" Kirsten asks me from her perch on the chair opposite me. We are in the waiting room of the hospital in Durham, where the ambulance had taken Rosie.

I'd seen Liam deck Weston, had seen him crumple to the ground, had lost my shit and run to him, then had ridden with him in the second ambulance to the hospital.

Once the doctors had confirmed that he was going to be okay, I had turned to leave, but Kirsten had stopped me. She'd insisted I stay with them while they waited for the 'all clear' from the surgeon so they could visit with Rosie.

"I think I should leave." I turn to her, "This is a family matter."

"You are family," she insists. "My asshole brother may not see it yet, but he loves you."

"Does he?" I chuckle, but it's completely devoid of humor. "He has a funny way of showing it."

She searches my features; her own soften. She takes my hand in hers, "Sweetheart, I understand how upset you must be with his behavior. I have no words to apologize for god-knows-what-all he's said and done to you. All I can say is, please be patient with him."

"You think I'd be here otherwise?" I swallow. "Only, I'm not sure it's helping."

"Oh, it is, more than you can imagine." She hesitates, "You're the first woman he's brought home. Ever."

"Oh." I swallow, "I... I am...?" My heart begins to beat faster. Does it mean anything? Does it? No.

"That was part of the pretense." I say. "So he could show you all that he intended to settle down. After all, he needs to get married to claim his inheritance, right?"

"Only he doesn't need the money," Kirsten points out. "He's rich enough, not to mention successful enough, in his own right."

"That's true." I admit. "But it doesn't negate that he asked me to pose as his fake girlfriend. Why did he have to boil down the attraction between us to that? Why did he have to turn it into something so...transactional?"

"He can't seem to stop destroying what's dearest to him." Kirsten smiles at me, but it's a sad smile. She holds my hand between her palms.

"Tell me about it," I choke out. "I've tried; I really have. When it comes to him, I seem to have some self-destructive tendencies of my own."

"The chemistry between the two of you..." She fans herself, "Honestly, it's off the charts. I see the way he follows you around with his eyes, like he wants to eat you up."

I redden. "Is it that obvious?"

"You have no idea." Her lips quirk. "It's different, it's special, it's something that's not easy to come by... Maybe once in a lifetime, even."

"You think I don't know that?" I tug on my hand and she releases it. I drag my fingers through my hair. Shit, somewhere during the last few hours, my hair had loosened from the chignon I'd pulled it into. Bet I look a sight, to match how I am feeling inside—beaten, broken, sad... Hell. This isn't why I had left London. This is not what I had bargained for when he'd walked into the cabin naked, swept into my life like a freshly baked baguette which I couldn't keep away from. OMFG, that's it then. That last metaphor... Hell, why does it remind me about certain parts of him which are as beautifully endowed? As thick... As gorgeous to put my mouth on. I rise to my feet.

Kirsten glances up at me. "Where are you going?"

"I... I can't do this." I swallow, "You understand, don't you? If I want to come out of this with even some small part of me intact, I need to go." I turn to leave.

"It's the incident," her voice follows me.

I pause, then turn to her. "So I am told," I say.

"You said he mentioned it to you, but has he told you what they did to him?" she queries.

I shake my head.

"Maybe you should ask him."

"Maybe," I tilt my head, "maybe not." Maybe I've had enough of Weston and his entire family—much as I have come to like them, Kirsten especially, and the kids, and hell, even his mother... She's something—formidable, strong, a true matriarch who holds them together. For good or bad, they are a unit. They fight and hate each other, and when there is a crisis like this, they come together too. They have each other's backs.

Something I've never had. I'm not part of a family; I have my own, but I've never belonged there. Is that why I had wanted to start a company, a business of my own? To create a family, of sorts? Is that what has driven me thus far? Had I sensed that about Weston, and was that one of the reasons I had been attracted to him. That and his gorgeous, beautiful dick, of course, and that caring demeanor of his, which he hides so bloody well. If it had not been for Max, and how he'd taken care of his nieces... Or how he'd been toward his mother, hell, I'd have missed that completely. All in all... It is time to put this behind me, to go home to the future I would build for myself.

I turn, walk toward the exit.

"Amelie," Liam's voice stops me.

I turn to find him striding toward me. "Are you leaving?" He frowns. Those features, so like Weston's, tighten. A lump forms in my throat. Shit, this is not good. Just because he reminds me of the alphahole, who I must try to forget, doesn't mean I need to get all teary.

"Yes," I straighten my spine, "I must go."

"Have you spoken to Weston?" He tilts his head. His dark gaze, so like Weston's yet not, sweeps over my features. No, he's not Weston. He's colder, darker, unfeeling. Weston has that sly hint of humor in his eyes, that hint of wickedness which tempers that mean edge—not that he couldn't be horrible, but always, always there was that playfulness that peeked out, that sentiment that compelled me to tug on it and unravel the man inside... The one I love. "Bloody hell." I bring my hand to my mouth.

"What's wrong?" he asks.

"Nothing." Everything.

A shiver runs down my spine. What have I done? How could I have fallen in love with that...that grumpy ass? A hollow sensation permeates my legs. I stumble. He grips my shoulder and rights me. "Are you okay?" he asks.

"No, I am not," I whisper.

Weston's voice slices through the air. "Get away from her."

I stiffen. Don't turn; don't face him, until you have gotten ahold of yourself.

He sounds so close to me that I draw in a breath.

The hair on the back of my neck rises, and heat invades my back, a sure indication that he's standing not far from me.

I pull away from Liam, who doesn't let go. The hell? I frown up at him, and his gaze widens. His lips quirk. Huh? Is he toying with Weston? I tilt my head; he subtly shakes his. "About time you decided to make an appearance," he drawls.

"Take your hands off of her," Weston snaps. My nerve endings crackle and I shuffle back, but Liam's hold stops me.

"Or what?" He raises his gaze to meet Weston's. "What are you going to do, little brother?"

"I am going to kill you." Weston's voice is even—no emotion, no sentiment. The hard edge to it ripples over my skin. Shit, he isn't joking.

"Let me go," I hiss at Liam, who steps back.

He tilts his head, not breaking eye contact with Weston. "What's got your knickers in a twist, huh?"

"Step aside, Amelie," Weston growls. My heart begins to race. I take in his features, the messed-up hair, those grey eyes, almost colorless, a clear indication that he's in the grip of emotions. When he's like this, he tends to lose control. He doesn't care how much his actions could hurt him, or those around him. He's like a wounded animal, ready to hit out at whoever, whatever seems to be a threat.

"Wes," I whisper.

He raises his fist...his left fist... Shit. If he wounds that...it will take him even longer to heal. What if he wrecks any of the fingers of his intact hand? Already, he's going to be laid up longer than anticipated with his unhealed injury.

"Wes," I grip at his sleeve.

His gaze on Liam, he lowers his chin. "I am going to take you down, motherfucker," he growls.

"Not sure I'd use that adjective considering we are brothers," Liam chuckles.

"How dare you put your hand on her."

"What's it to you? Thought you weren't interested in her."

Weston's features harden.

"None of your business," he snarls. A vein throbs at his forehead. "Come within an inch of her and I'll deck you."

"Oh, I'll do better than that." Liam leans in closer, "In fact, I might make a play for her. After all, you've relinquished your claim on—"

Weston swings.

I gasp.

Liam laughs.

I stand on tip-toe, throw my arms around Weston's shoulders... Or as much of him as I can reach, considering how big he is. "Stop it," I snap. "Now."

He blinks, arm raised. Huh? The alphahole stopped in his tracks? Guess Rosie's not the only one who's able to bring them to heel. Maybe I picked up something from her, after all.

"Wes," I lean into him, push my breasts into his chest, dig my fingers into his uninjured shoulder, "look at me, babe."

His big body shudders; his chest planes seem to go rock hard.

"I should fucking thrash him for laying a finger on you."

"But you won't," I declare.

I peer up, to see his throat move as he swallows. The tendons of his beautiful throat flex; the pulse beats at the base of his neck. I reach up and kiss him there, suck on that space where his scent is most profound. Dark edginess, cool pine, warm cloves... My senses cloud with Weston.

"Wes," I tip my chin up, "kiss me."

He glances down, those colorless eyes filled with an emotion... A hint of something that is so very close to... No, not that. He doesn't feel that for me. Oh, he wants me all right, he lusts for me, needs to possess me and claim me, so no one else can, but love... Ha! The alphahole only loves himself. "Kiss me," I insist. "Do it."

He drops his head, closes his mouth over mine. He swipes his tongue in between my lips and drinks from me. He curves his arm around my shoulders, yanks me to him, crushes me to that beautiful, broad, gorgeous chest of his, and kisses me, and kisses me. My head spins; I swear I see stars. He kisses me until my knees tremble, and I hold onto his sleeves, and then I am kissing him back. I open my mouth wider, grind my pelvis into the hard column that tents his pants and I pour myself into that connection between us, where his mouth takes from me and I offer myself up... Completely, wholly, absolutely. His hand comes up to cup my neck, he tilts his head, softens the kiss, until it's his lips on mine, nibbling on my mouth, brushing over mine, tasting of me, inviting me, enticing me, to slide my tongue inside his mouth, to partake of him, to drink from him, to open myself to accept what he is offering—his past, my life, our future together, what I am, what he is, a shared path, for he is mine. And I am his. His, and only his. I tear my mouth from his, so fast that my teeth catch on his lip.

He winces.

I stare at the drop of blood that blooms on his lower lip.

"I'm sorry," I whisper.

"I'm not." His lips curl.

"I am leaving you." I peer into his eyes.

"No." He frowns.

"Yes," I reply, "let go of me."

"What?" He shakes his head. "I can't."

"You can," I thrust out my chin, "and you will."

"No fucking way," he growls.

"Yes, way." My lips tremble and my voice cracks, "Goodbye, Wes."

He looks into my eyes, really looks, and the color fades from his cheeks. "Princess," he whispers. His fingers curve around the nape of my neck. A shiver runs down my back and my sex clenches. Hell, when he does that... Holds me like I am his, promises with his gaze to fuck me like I am his... When he stares at me like I am the only thing in the world that matters... Then I know...

It's time I get away from him. I hadn't meant to fall in love with him... How could I allow myself to feel so much when I was still the woman he'd paid to bring home to meet his family? I don't mean anything to him. I'd been a challenge... Someone to seduce, to buy with his wealth and use as a fuck-toy to pass the time. Hell. The pressure builds at my temples. I am only making this worse on myself. I need time away, time to process everything that has happened. I needed to get away from here.

"Please," I mumble, "let me have this."

His throat bobs and the skin around his eyes creases. Then he lowers his hand.

I step back, walk around him.

"Princess."

I pause.

"This isn't over."

I turn to him, "Yes, it is. You know it is."

His features twist.

I turn, head for the exit.

Christmas Day

Weston

I stare into the amber liquid at the bottom of my glass. Fuck, fucking fuck. I'd stood back and let her walk away. I hadn't gone after her. I'd held my balls in my hand and allowed her to leave. Am I a man? Can I call myself a male worth his manhood? I hadn't stopped her; I hadn't. Bloody fuck. Why hadn't I? For once in my life, I had faltered. I had stood by, and for the second time, let her walk out, and this time, there is no going back. I'd had my chance and I had blown it. I had allowed my emotions to get the better of me.

When she'd stared into my eyes and pleaded with me to allow her to win... I had wanted her to. Not that this is a game, or a war. Okay, so maybe it is a fight between us—this push and pull. This constant thrum of arousal that laces the air, that connects us and makes us want to go head-to-head... Even as I want to yank her to me and kiss her, and suck on those sweet-sugary tits of hers, bury my fingers in her moist pussy, dip my tongue in the crevasse of her belly button, sink to my knees in front of her, thrust my head between her legs and ravish her, please her, make her come.

Hell... Her happiness and her needs, they come first. Her confidence? I never want to shake that. Her sass and fire, her independence? They are a fucking turn on. It's what had challenged me. It's why I had noticed her in the first place. In a world filled with compliance, she had stood out. She had baited me, hated me, pushed me away, and that had only aroused me further.

I'd wanted to...what? Curb her? Tie her to me? I should have known better. A free spirit like Amelie needs to be nurtured, to be allowed to soar as she wants... And I'd be in the background watching, applauding, encouraging, paving her way... Fuck. I shake my head. What am I thinking? What happened to the dominant surgeon who didn't give a fuck about anyone else...except his patients? To be fair, I'd cared for them, but they had been a way to nourish my ego. Fuck. Everything in my life so far has been one long trip to soothe that scared boy inside of me. The one who had never recovered from the incident.

So, I was kidnapped.

I was hurt.

I was...abused. Mentally and emotionally.

Fuck, fuck, fuck. So what? Shit happens; deal with it. How could I have allowed those few days to color my life so completely? Enough to not recognize the only good thing that had come my way. Her.

"Bloody fuck." I drain my glass then hurl it against the wall of the living room. The glass bounces off of the hard surface, hits the floor, bounces again, comes to a rest at my feet. Go figure. Can't do even one thing properly, can you? I kick the offending object and it rolls toward the door. A booted foot stops it.

I groan. "Fuck off," I grunt.

"Merry Christmas to you too," Damian's chirpy voice echoes through the drumming in my head.

Fuck.

I turn away, head toward the bar in the corner of the living room. I grab a glass, reach for the bottle, miss it, swoop down on it. Finally! I pour myself a healthy measure of Macallan's. Fuck that. I fill the snifter to the top. Set the bottle down on the bar counter with a thwack.

"Careful, ol' chap. That whiskey's older than you."

"So's your nagging," I growl.

"Seen yourself in the mirror lately?" Damian continues.

I frown, "Heard yourself lately?"

"No need to, ol' chap." He smirks. "I rest confident in the power of my good looks."

"Jesus," I swear, "Can you hear yourself?" I wince.

"No sweeter sound in the world, right?" He grins.

I stare up at him. "Did you just say that?"

"What?" He frowns.

"Have you any idea how pompous you sound, you prat?"

"So?" He straightens his arm, tugs on the sleeve of the white button-down that shows below his jacket.

"So?" I raise the shoulders, "So it's bloody off-putting."

Damian frowns. "Who are you, and what have you done to my douchebag wanker of a friend?" he mutters.

"I'll let you know when I find the fuck out." I bring the glass to my lips, take a sip, then grimace. Maybe it wasn't a good idea to substitute alcohol for coffee. I hadn't stopped drinking since I'd dragged my sorry ass home, after seeing my mother in the hospital yesterday.

They'd discharged her this morning, thank fuck. The poison, whatever it was, had vanished from her system. It had left her weak, but she was stable. Thank the bloody gods. I'd lost one parent already; I'm not ready to lose another. I don't want to lose her. "Fuck." I raise the glass, down half of it. Sweat breaks on my brow. My left hand—so far unhurt. Maybe I need to remedy that? Sure, go for it, wipe out the career you've worked so hard to build, huh? Why not, while you're at it, light a flame to everything you've achieved thus far... All of it is nothing, meaningless without her. I slap the glass onto the bar potty it cracks. Huh? The amber liquid bleeds out onto the mahogany counter top.

"You all right?" Damian's voice is concerned.

"Yes. No." I plant my elbows on the bar, in the whiskey which seeps into my sleeves, but whatever. Why the fuck should I care that I smell like a distillery? It's not like she's there to bury her nose in my chest, to rub her cheek into my shoulder, turn her face into my arm pit and coil into me like the feline, sensuous woman she is. "Go away," I moan, then bury my head between my palms. If I press my hands tightly against my ears, would it block out the sound of her laughter? I snicker. Getting delusional now, huh? You've gone mental; admit it.

"Wes," Damian grips my shoulder, "you've gotta get yourself in hand."

"For what?" I mutter, "I let her leave. Didn't have the balls to go after her either."

"Maybe you aren't ready yet for this relationship."

I stiffen. "The fuck do you mean?"

"She was too good for you, ol' chap."

That she was.

"She's someone who deserves better."

"She deserves the best," I agree.

"And you're all wrong for her."

"Clearly."

"You did the right thing."

Huh? I scowl.

"If you can't make her happy, you should let her go. If she comes back to you—"

"—She won't," I mumble. "She bloody hates me."

"I hate you. The world doesn't like you, man, it's normal."

"Thanks," I grumble. "Nice to know I can trust you to have my back."

"Always," I hear the laughter in his voice, turn and shoot him a glance.

His features are schooled into a serious expression, which is seriously weird. Which also means he's trying to rile me.

"The fuck's on your mind?" I growl.

"Me?" He points to himself, "Nothing, man. I'm not the one with a broken heart—"

"I break hearts. I don't get mine broken..." my voice trails off.

He nods. "Sadly, I believe you've crossed over to the dark side."

"What?"

"You remember the thing that had its claws into first Jace, then Sinner, and then Saint?"

"No, I don't." I scowl, and I thought I was delusional?

"I'm afraid you've fallen prey to it as well."

I straighten, lower my chin to my chest, "I have no idea what you're talking about. And it's not because I'm a bit hungover—"

"A bit?" He snorts, "Don't you have to stop drinking before you can be hungover?"

I glare at him. "Okay, my head is pounding, and clearly, I've poisoned myself with enough alcohol that I may spontaneously combust at any time—"

"Attaboy." He pats my shoulder, "Tell it like it is. I knew you'd come through."

I shake off his hand, "You're bloody creepy when you go all paternal."

"Me, paternal?" he laughs.

"Stranger things have happened." I roll my shoulders. My stomach copies the motion. "Shit." I wipe the sweat from my upper lip, "I don't think I'm feeling that well."

"Wonder why that is, huh?" Liam stalks in.

"Oh, bloody fuck," I groan. "Thought you'd crawled away under whatever rock you'd been found under."

He shakes his head, "Man, you've gone and done it now."

"What?"

Damian chuckles.

"What?" I ask again.

Liam folds his arms over his chest, "Shit or get off the pot."

"Eloquent, as always." I grimace.

His dark gaze takes in my features, "You look like hell."

"Still better-looking than you."

His forehead crinkles, "Why do I even bother with you, huh?"

"Because you know, at heart, I am the one destined for greatness."

"You've proved that already," he mutters. "You got your way in the end—became a surgeon, saved lives. You make the difference between life and death. You saved mother's life."

He comes forward, grips my shoulder, "Thank you."

Is he for real? "Did you just go all polite as fuck on me?" I scowl.

Liam's features twist, "Guess not even soulless bastards can resist the spirit of Christmas, huh?"

"You mean it, don't you?" I shake my head in disbelief. "You're actually thanking me for the first time ever, that I can remember."

"It is the first time," he confirms. "You can thank your woman for that."

"My woman?"

He nods. "Seeing you fall apart—"

"I didn't fall apart—" I snarl.

"—then give in, for the first time in my living memory, showed me, you have a human side. You're not as obnoxious as you come across."

The headache between my temples intensifies. Should I even bother to make sense of what is happening around here?

Arpad saunters in. "What are you still doing here?" He asks.

"That was my next question," Damian chuckles.

"I don't care either way, by the way," Liam drawls.

I glower. He steps back, then brushes his sleeve, as if to rid himself of all trace of contact. Wanker. Hold on... That's what I was...or had been... Then she'd swept in, and damn, if all those carefully built walls hadn't come collapsing around me like confetti. Did I just think confetti? Does that word even exist in my vocabulary?

Liam turns to leave, then shoots me a look over his shoulder.

"Oh, and Mother said to invite her over when you see her." He stalks off.

"When am I going to see who?" I glower.

"You gonna enlighten him?" Damian smirks.

"Nah, it's inevitable. It's more fun to watch him fight it." Arpad leans his hip against the bar.

Damian glances at me, "Tick-tock, ol' chap."

The blood drains from my face. I stumble, then right myself.

"Fuck." Damian leans forward to grab my shoulder, "I'm sorry, I didn't mean to say it like that. Of all people, I should have remembered about your triggers."

"Fuck that," I growl. "The Mafia; they broke into her bakery."

"When?" Damian straightens.

"She mentioned it to me, when we first met."

"But you weren't connected with her—"

"They'd have seen her at Sinclair's, then at Saint's wedding." I squeeze the bridge of my nose. "If they have been watching us—"

"They may have followed her to the cabin—" Arpad mutters.

"Which was broken into." My heart begins to race. "Fuck. And I let her leave. She's home, alone. If something happens to her..."

"It won't."

"By now, they must realize she means something to me. I brought her to meet my family, after all." Fuck. I'd put her in the path of danger.

"The cops—" Arpad ventures.

"We can't trust them," I growl. "We know they are connected with the Mafia. One leak and—" I don't voice my fears. "Besides, no way am I waiting around here. I need to make sure she is safe."

I stalk past them, toward the door.

"I have to go to her."

"Hold on," Damian calls after me, "You're not planning on driving, are you?"

"Yesterday I wanted cookies. Today I am eating cookies. Yay! Follow your dreams."

-From Amelie's diary

Amelie

"I am such a loser," I cry into the phone as I pace my apartment.

"Wait, hold on, back up," Isla calms me. "Start from the beginning."

I balance the phone, with Isla peering out at me from the screen, on the kitchen table, "Kirsten called me a car—okay a limo. It was a freakin' limo service that she ordered to get me from Durham to London. Can you believe it? That's how these rich folks live, and clearly, I am not one of them."

"Who's Kirsten?" Isla asks.

"The alphahole's sister."

"So, we are back to calling him alphahole, huh?"

"Weston fucking a-hole Kincaid," I growl into the phone. "I never want to hear his name again."

"Urm," Isla clears her throat.

"Don't say it—" I warn her.

"I was only going to say that you just mentioned this name."

"That's what I was afraid of." I wrap the strands of my hair around my palm, "I mean, not that I am complaining about the limo, or anything."

"Of course, not."

"Not after I found the liquor bar in the back of the car."

"I assume you did it justice?" she snickers,

"Yeah," I hiccough. "Oops, sorry." I walk to the kitchen, fill a mug with water—because hell, I always drink water from coffee mugs. That's my little rebellious streak, right there. I sip from the mug, and walk over to the window of my studio apartment. The view is nothing like that from the cabin, or from Weston's mother's home. How funny I'd never been to his place. Where does he even live in London? It's official, I am in love with a man whose neuroses I know better than the basic stuff, you know, like his address, his favorite color. That's me, I do everything upside down, like my life. Fuck me now. I hiccough again. "Sorry again," I mumble.

"The bar in the limo?" Isla reminds me. "I assume you drank of all the whiskey?"

"Nope," I say, all smug. "No whiskey for me. Never touching that stuff, from now on."

"O-k-a-y."

"I sucked down all the champagne because I am celebrating."

"You are?"

"Yeap." I walk back to the shelves in the corner of what passes for my kitchen space, and open the door. Scrounge around. There. I retrieve the boxed wine I'd been gifted with, God knows when. Now is the time to open it. I unscrew it, peel back the plastic seal thingy, then look around for a glass, and fuck it! I tilt it to my mouth, draw from it. The cold liquid hits my gullet and I almost gag. Ugh! Is that vinegar or what? "Argh," I gasp.

"What's wrong?"

"Nothing." I place the boxed vinegar-that-had-once-been-wine back on the shelf and eye it. Do I dare drink more of it, or not? Shit, I can't even decide on the small things in life anymore. My mind is well and truly broken, thanks to that, that... "Idiot." I swear down the phone. "Fucking wanker that he is. A tool. A reprobate. A prick of the first order."

"That, he is," Isla agrees. "So what are you doing back in your apartment?"

"Haven't you heard anything I just told you?" I cry.

"I have, doll, and I think you love that about him."

"Oh." I pull out a chair and sit down with a thump. "That's true, right?"

"So, what made you walk out on him?"

"He was...just insufferable," I snap.

"And?"

"And cock-headed."

"Which is an asset, I assume?"

I hear the smirk in her voice, "Isla, honestly..."

"Admit it, the sex was great."

"Off-the-walls hot," I admit.

"And despite his money, he decided to focus on becoming a doctor."

"True," I admit, reluctantly.

"And he's good with dogs."

"And kids."

"And kids," she agrees. "So?"

"So?"

"What didn't you like about him?"

"Well, I fell in love with him, for one."

"Hmm."

"What?"

"I mean, that was bound to happen. You set yourself up for that, girlfriend, when you agreed to go along with his fake relationship thingy."

"Hello, it was supposed to only be for a few days, and it was contingent on my never sleeping with him."

"That was clever of him, huh?"

"Was it?" I scrunch up my forehead. "You think so?"

"Of course, babe. He used reverse psychology on you. I mean, tell you not to sleep with him and—"

"—and of course, I'd only want to sleep with him." I reach for the wine, swig from it. Grimace. Argh! It's worse than I thought. I set it back with a thump, then jump up and begin to pace.

"And then, he took me home to see his family."

"At Christmas."

"At Christmas." I rake my fingers through my hair. "And he was really cute with his nieces. Hell, the man reads Harry Potter."

She shrieks, "Whaat?"

I wince. "Pipe down," I plead. "You almost burst my eardrum there."

"He reads Harry Potter? How many men do you know who read Harry Potter?"

"He was reading it because he wanted to be able to discuss it with his niece."

"No," she breathes.

"Yes." I hang my head.

"So, he fucks like a god, saves lives like he is God, and reads the kind of books that—"

"—make me want to worship his brain. Yeah," I scowl. When she puts it like that... "I mean, he's not perfect, you know."

"No?"

"He has a beard. I mean, it's unkempt, which is fine if you go in for that sexy just-rolled-out-bed-on-Christmas-morning look."

"Sexy Santa," she snickers.

What I wouldn't give to see him in nothing but a Santa hat.

"Don't call him sexy," I pout.

"But he is," she protests.

"I mean, I can call him sexy, but not you."

She stares at me.

"What?" I frown.

"Nothing." She clears her throat, "What else do you not like about him?"

"He's overbearing, dominant, uh, commands me do stuff, overrides me a lot, hates chocolate—"

"Are you sure?"

"Well, he did eat the chocolate banana muffin batter I made," I offer.

She gives me a perplexed look. "Muffin batter?"

"It's a long story..."

"Okaaay... So, he hates chocolate, but he ate what you made anyway."

"Hmm." And he did say that he was coming around to its taste especially when he licked it off my lips. My cheeks heat. Then he wouldn't let me out of his sight because he wanted to keep me safe. Okay, so I won't tell her that. I bite the inside of my cheek. What else? What else?

"He made his brother apologize to me for being rude."

"Now that's not very gentlemanly is it?" she chuckles.

"Shut up." I wipe my hand across my face. What else? "He did tell me that he wants a future, but not with me."

"You sure? Maybe he was angry or something."

"He was." I hunch my shoulders, "But I can't let that pass, can I? I mean, people speak the truth in the heat of the moment."

"Maybe he wanted to hurt you?"

"And I emptied my box of cookies on his head."

"You did?" She giggles.

"And told him to fuck off."

"Good."

"I should have told him to fuck off more."

"You still can."

"And he doesn't love me."

Isla stares at me, "Did you tell him that you love him?"

"No, of course not."

"Then how can you expect him to reciprocate?"

"Whose side are you on?" I scowl.

"Sweetie, you know I'll always back you up. And I am not saying there is no fault on his side, or that it wasn't wrong of him to have turned your relationship into a barter game of sorts...but—"

"But?"

"It seems there's something between the two of you that's powerful, and if I were in your shoes..."

I tilt my head, "You would...?"

She draws in a breath, "I wouldn't let go of a chance at true happiness that easily. I mean, I'd pursue that guy and sit on him, until he confessed his feelings."

"You would too," I giggle.

"Not that I've been in your shoes."

"Not yet," I smirk.

"Not that I don't want a man or anything...but..."

"But?"

"I'm not in a hurry. The single life's pretty fun too, you know? And as long as I have my book boyfriends..."

"That's what I used to think." I purse my lips, "Then that real life a-hole comes along, and damn, if he doesn't spoil all the book Romeos for me."

"Aww sweetie," she murmurs, "what are you doing there all alone? Why don't you come over to my place?"

I pause.

"I mean, I am only an hour away, if you drive."

"I left my car back at the cabin." Hell, I knew I should have asked the driver to drop me off at the cabin and driven myself here... But yeah, the stupid champagne had gone to my head by then, and I had alternated between giggling and crying. Why do I always make the wrong decisions, huh?

"You could call for a taxi?"

The thought of dragging myself out of here and getting dressed and facing her family— Not that I don't like Isla's parents. They're awesome, actually. But to have to put on a face to the world, right now? Nah, no way. I'd rather spend the time baking, and if I happen to eat a lot of what I make? Well, too bad. Life is short, after all. And stressed spelled backwards is desserts, and Mary had a little lamb and the mouse ran up the clock. Shit, time out. Stop with the nursery rhymes. Stop thinking about anything to do with that asshole, okay?

"It's fine." I swallow, "I think I'm better off on my own."

"You sure?" She frowns.

"Yeah," I nod. "I'll have a bath and then bake, and I'll feel better then, for sure."

"I don't think you should be on your own now."

"I'll be good." I shake my hair back from my face. "Once I start the baking, I'll lose track of everything."

"But—"

"I'll be fine." I reach for the phone, "I promise."

"You sure?"

I hunch my shoulders, pull my lips up in a smile. "See?" I point at my face, "I'm good."

"Hmm." Isla peers up at me. Someone calls her name and she looks off camera, "I'm coming Mom." She turns back to me, "Gotta go, doll."

"Right."

"Bye."

I blow her a kiss.

She cuts the call. I place the phone down, then glance around the place. Only one way to deal with this. Fuck the a-hole. Fuck the a-hole. I did fuck him, remember? No, like really fuck him. Gah. I spring up so fast my chair screeches back on its legs. Oopsie. I bring up my play list on the phone, put it on speaker. Then turn on the oven. What should I bake, huh?

Two hours later, I've pulled the pies out of the oven, left them to cool on the wire mesh. Also, I've chugged down the horrible, almost-vinegary boxed wine, and another bottle of wine. Gah. So not a good idea. My stomach rolls and I grab my middle. Argh, maybe a hot bath will help, huh? I march into the bathroom, run the water, toss in a few bath bombs—chocolate, of course. I light the candles, then head back to the kitchen for the wine... Of course, I'm out. Gah! The corner shop should be open and have wine, huh? Should I?

Shouldn't I? Fuck that. It's Christmas, after all. I run back to the bathroom, turn off the water, then head over to the shop across the street, pick up one... okay, three bottles of wine, pay the man behind the counter.

"Merry Christmas," he choruses, eyes twinkling.

"And to you." I smile at him, then head back. When I reach home, the door to my apartment is ajar. WTF? My heart begins to race. Is it the same thief who broke into the bakery? Is he back? Gah. I turn to leave. A noise reaches me from the direction of the kitchen. He's in the kitchen. In the kitchen? My pies? No frigging way am I letting him eat them. I made them for myself.

For me. Moi. I deserve that bloody treat after the last few days I've had. I glance around for a weapon. What can I use? I curl my fingers around the bottle of wine, push open the door to my apartment, then creep past the living room. I reach the doorway to the kitchen, pause. His back is to me. His broad shoulders are clad in a black, long-sleeved Henley that clings to the planes of his back which flex, move, ripple with each of his movements. His narrow waist, that tight butt, those powerful thighs outlined in his jeans. He blocks out the sight of the dining table... Where I'd left the pies to cool. His legs are spread apart and the muscles of his triceps flex as he jerks his arm back-forth-back... What the hell? He can't be doing what I think he is. Is he? I take a step forward. He freezes. Shoots me a glance over his shoulder.

"You?" I swallow, "What are you doing?"

Weston

"What the hell do you think?" I growl at her, hold her gaze. Don't let her look down; don't allow her to see what the hell you've gotten into here. Caught with your dick in a pie...and by the woman you're in love with...? Hold the fuck on there. Firstly, that isn't a metaphor—being caught with my dick in a pie, I mean. And I know what you're thinking, and fuck, but I can promise it wasn't inspired by a certain, uh, notorious movie. I mean, I am past the stage of being pimply-faced and ready to shag everything that moves...because I only want to be inside one woman, her... Or, uh! A pie baked by her. Bloody fuck, this is a shit show.

"I... I am not sure what you're doing here?" She takes a step forward, and every muscle in my body solidifies... Except uh, a particular part of me that's throbbing inside the sweet, moist, center of a certain dessert that was baked by her. I mean, can you blame me? Peter had driven me here, and I'd told him to leave, confident that I was spending the night here. Hey a man can hope, right? It is Christmas, after all. I'd walked in here, and the entire place had smelled festive... and of her—that sweet sugary scent of hers mixed with the scent of apple pie, which happens to be my favorite, and all of it had gone to my head... Or rather, to my groin, and she hadn't been around, so I'd done the next logical thing. I'd reached for the pie she'd baked, buried myself in its center. Not that it's a replacement... Far from it, but needs must and all that. It's what she's reduced me to, a man...standing in front of a woman he loves—no, no, no, not love, never love, in lust—yeah, that's better; a man in lust, standing in front of his woman with his dick caught in a pie, that she'd baked.

Fuck.

This is all her fucking fault.

I glare at her.

She pales. Her chin wobbles and she bites down on her lower lip, and fuck, if my dick doesn't jump again; inside the goddamn pie I hold with my left hand, in a position that if she came around and saw, it would be very clear what I am up to.

"Don't come closer," I snap. Bloody hell, that's a first—me asking a woman to stay away from me. Not that it matters, of course, because she sidles closer. Bloody woman, can never do what she's told.

"Stop," I growl. "Stay where you are."

She frowns. "My apartment." She huffs, "I can do what I want."

"Wrong."

She blinks. "I rent this flat, you ass."

"Guess who owns the apartment block?"

Her forehead crinkles, then she opens her mouth and shuts it again.

"Well," I smirk, "made the connection yet?"

"You," she swallows, "you own it?"

"Finally." I raise my gaze skywards, "Took you long enough to get that, huh? What's wrong, you eat too much dessert? All that cream gone to your head?" The fuck? The connection between my mouth and my brain has well and truly snapped, that I am hurling insults at her... Shut the fuck up, you wanker. But fuck, I have to distract her, and what else is a man supposed to do when he's caught with his cock in his hand... Technically, in a warm, soft, juicy, moist confectionary, but you get the picture, huh?

Color sears her cheeks.

"Is that how you got in?"

"I got in because you left the door open." I growl, and my chest tightens, "Do you know how dangerous that is?"

"Did you...did you find out I live here and decide to buy the place?" She frowns.

"Don't flatter yourself," I reply. "It's merely a coincidence, I assure you."

She flattens her lips, "Is it also a coincidence that you're standing like that?" She takes a sideways step; I mirror her movements, in the opposite direction.

"Like what?" I twist my body. Thank fuck for all those gym sessions, not to mention working out with Saint at his horse ranch. My shoulders are wide enough to cover what the rest of my body is up to—I hope?

"Like," she chews the inside of her lip, "like you're holding your...uh.. your..."

"Dick?" I supply. Fuck, yeah. Clearly, she's not going to let go of it, and damned if I am going to be apologetic about being found out. I turn around, allow her to have the full-frontal view. She lowers her gaze to where I hold the plate with the pie in front of my groin...with my dick stuck inside.

She gulps, the sound audible in the silence. Awesome. This is when she tells me to fuck off... Or better still, turns and runs screaming, huh? Instead, she licks her lips. "Why did you stop?" she asks.

"Huh?" I blink, "Excuse me?"

"You heard me." She squeezes her fingers around the bottle of wine, "Why don't you finish what you started?"

"I will, on one condition."

She tilts her head, her gaze locked onto where my dick is sunken into the pie.

"Amelie," I snap.

"What?" She raises her gaze to mine, her pupils blown, her lips parted.

Jesus, I may have just met my match in food kink. Well, figures. She's a baker. I couldn't have picked better.

"Join me," I growl.

"How?" Her forehead crinkles, "How do you mean?"

I glance at the bottle of wine, then back at her.

"No." Her gaze widens.

"Yes."

"No way," she mutters. "I'm not putting that...inside...."

I thrust my hips forward and my cock sinks into the warm, moist, stickiness of the pie. A groan rumbles up my throat.

A whine bleeds from her.

I scowl at her, then at the bottle, "Do it."

"But."

"Now," I snap.

She gulps, pulls the bottle of wine from the brown paper bag. She unscrews it, drops the cap on the floor, then takes a gulp.

"Good girl," I growl.

She draws in a breath, then walks to the table, on the opposite side from me, and places the bottle on it, then hesitates again.

This woman, is she hell bent on killing me? "What is it?" I huff.

She glances toward the doorway, "Uh, I left the door to the apartment ajar when I came in... shouldn't I shut it?"

"Leave it," I order her.

"But—"

My balls ache, my groin hardens, and a snarl rips from me, "I swear, if you don't take off your clothes right now, I'll—"

She unbuttons her coat, tosses it on the chair, then reaches behind to unzip her dress. The material slithers down around her ankles; she steps out of it.

She straightens and the sight of the triangle of pink fabric between her creamy thighs—"Jesus, fuck." The blood drains to my cock, I pull the pie close, and my shaft sinks into the moist center. I stare at the shadow of her flesh outlined against the crotch of her panties, "Take it off," I command. "Don't stop, Amelie."

"Or what?"

I jerk my chin up to her face. Her lips twitch.

"You don't want to tease me."

"Oh?"

I nod, "You have two choices here."

"Do I?"

I allow my mouth to curl, "Either you fuck the bottle and get fucked in the arse by me, or—"

Her chest heaves.

"Or, you fuck the bottle and I fuck you in the cunt, then in the arse."

"Choices, choices," her voice wobbles.

"Take that bloody wine bottle and ride it, Amelie, or I swear, I'll spank you so much you won't be able to sit down for months."

She scoffs, "You exaggerate."

"Do I?" I lower my eyebrows, "Give me a chance to demonstrate just how much I enjoy delivering on my threats." I peel back my lips, "Do it, Amelie. One chance to get my hand on that beautiful curved behind, Princess."

"Jeez," she swipes her hair over her shoulder, "some people have no sense of humor."

"Humor, huh?" I pump my hips forward, impale the bloody apple pie—the hell am I doing? Fucking an inanimate object, when the focus of my obsession is right in front of my eyes.

She shivers, my thigh muscles spasm, and this entire scene is bloody wrong... and so fucking right. "Don't keep me waiting," I grind out.

She swoops down, grabs the wine bottle, brings it to her mouth, then proceeds to close her lips around it, taking it in—as she had my cock, previously. Holy mother of all that's dear to me... That has to be the hottest thing I have ever seen— No, Amelie pulling the bottle out of her mouth, only to lower it between her thighs? That... I swallow. That is bloody erotic. And it shouldn't be. I mean, it is a woman—my woman, turning me on, by easing herself down onto the neck of the bottle. It is not what I expected from her. It's everything I wanted her to do.

My cock lengthens. I grip my fingers around the damned plate of apple pie and follow her movements. In-out-in... She parts her legs, sinks down onto the bottle, the length of which disappears inside her pussy.

My shaft jerks; a pressure coils in my balls.

"Jesus, Princess," I snarl, "you're fucking turning me on."

Her breasts rise and fall, she straightens, lifts her gaze to mine, holds the connection, then impales herself again. She groans and the blue of her irises fades, leaving behind large pupils so black, they seem to take up most of her irises. My throat closes and my heart begins to race. I stare into her eyes, kick my hips forward again. Her movements intensify; so do mine. A bead of sweat trickles down her throat, trails down the shadow between her breasts. My pulse thrums; the blood pumps in my veins. I grip the plate of pie, push into the melting core, again and again. My balls draw up, the pressure in my groin tightens, harder, further, my senses pop, my vision narrows. "Come," I growl.

And she throws her head back, arches her spine, and reveals the slim column of her throat; a shudder grips her body, her thighs clench, a low keening moan spills from her lips, and I can't stop myself. My balls draw up and I come, shooting my load inside the fucking pie. I straighten, slap the plate with the dessert onto the table.

Her legs seem to weaken. She sways, then raises the bottle of wine from between her legs. Her knuckles are white and her hand trembles. She blinks, then licks her lips. She tips up her chin; I crook my finger at her.

She hesitates.

I jerk my chin. She takes a step forward, and another. She closes the distance, pauses in front of me. Tips the bottle of wine to her lips and drinks from it. Her throat moves as she swallows; a drop of red trickles down her chin. I scoop it up, bring it to my mouth and suck on it.

Her gaze follows my actions; her lips part. She holds out the bottle of wine to me. Is she daring me? Does she think she can match me step for step? Does she? I snatch the bottle from her, raise it to my mouth and chug down a mouthful. The complex notes of wood and cherries, chocolate and honey.

I lower the bottle. "Perfect with pie," I declare.

"Isn't it?" Her lips quirk.

She reaches for the serving spade on the table.

"What are you doing?" I growl.

"What do you think?" She cuts off a slice, brings it to her mouth, "Should I eat it?"

The fuck? I glare at the piece of pie, then at her face.

"You wouldn't."

"Wouldn't I?" She tilts her head.

Woman's enjoying it. The thought of her eating the evidence of my arousal? It's a fucking turn on... Hotter than anything I have experienced before.

"Will you?" I lower my chin.

"You daring me?" She raises the slice, "What would you do if I ate this?"

"What do you want me to do?" I counter.

"I want you to—" She glances at the pie, then at my face, "I want you to let me take the lead in bed."

Amelie

His forehead crinkles. He glares at my face, and the skin around his eyes tightens. He's considering it. He's actually thinking about it? A dominant man like him... Would he give in to this? Does he want me to eat this...proof of his desire? Does he think I won't? Am I going to do this? I hold his stare. Say the word; do it. A bead of sweat slides down my temple. His gaze darts to it, then back to my eyes.

"Do it," his voice is casual, his stance relaxed. Huh? Does he think I won't? Is he the only one who can get away with playing games? He's so sure that I won't surprise him, he raises the bottle of wine, swigs from it, then licks his mouth. "Mmm," he smacks his lips together. "Wine and the honey of your cum," he says. "This has to be my favorite drink ever.

I raise the pie to my mouth.

His gaze intensifies.

Bite off a piece.

He freezes.

I chew on it, swallow, his chest rises and falls.

I bite off another piece, chew on it.

His shoulders bunch. His chest planes seem to harden, and he draws himself up to his full height. "Eat it all," he commands.

His rough voice chafes across my nerve endings. My sex clenches. I squeeze my thighs together, stuff the rest of the piece into my mouth.

He curls his lips. "Swallow," he growls, and moisture pools between my legs. Hell, only Weston fucking Kincaid could make that order sound so filthy, so bloody naughty. I gulp down the food in my mouth.

"Open," his voice is rough, his breathing uneven. I part my lips; he raises the bottle of wine to my mouth. "Drink," his voice lowers to a hush. Hell, why do I get the feeling that he's planning something...a scene that's out of my dirtiest fantasies?

Rolling around in the aftermath of my dessert? Check.

Slurping down wine that tastes of my arousal and his mouth? Double check.

Pulling back with suddenness so the wine spills across my chest? You bet.

"Oops," I murmur, glance down at where the wine blots the cloth of my bra. "I think I am going to have to take it off."

"Hmm." He raises the bottle to his lips, drinks from it. "I have a better idea, Princess."

"You do?" I peer up at him from under my eyelashes.

"I do." He nods. He holds up the bottle; my gaze widens. He tilts it, I open my mouth to protest, but already he's poured the wine on my hair.

"What the—" I splutter, "What are you doing?"

"Worshipping you, of course," his voice is sincere, his tone husky.

I take in his features as the liquid drips down my cheeks, my chin, splashes onto my breasts, clings to the cloth that covers my crotch.

"Weston," his name emerges, breathy from my throat. Damn, if I don't sound aroused and turned on—I glance down to where his erect dick—make that two of us. "Weston?" I swallow. What am I asking of him? What do I want from him? "You...you going to deliver on your promise?"

He smirks, "What do you think?"

"I think," I raise a finger to his cheek, drag it down the luxuriant growth of beard on his chin, "you look like Santa Claus."

He stares, then chuckles, "Have you been a naughty girl, Princess?"

"Oh," I shift my weight from foot to foot, "I tried, Santa. I promise, I wanted to be good...but then...I met this man."

"A man, huh?" He leans forward until his chest grazes my breasts, nipples hard, and surely, outlined by the sodden bra, which, if he'd look down, he'd see. But he isn't, because he's staring into my eyes.

He lowers the now empty bottle to the table with a soft thump. "Pray, tell me more about this...encounter of yours," he breathes. The warmth from his body surrounds me; his big, aching, gorgeous shoulders shut out the rest of the world. He bends his knees, thrusts his face into mine, "Don't make me wait." His voice is low, with an edge of that cruelty that is so Weston, which rolls down my spine.

I shiver. "He..." I clear my throat, "He's the most annoying, most obnoxious, most full-of-himself, egoistical—"

His biceps flex; the next instant he grabs my pussy. A whine bleeds from me, "Ah," I stutter, "He's... he's..."

His mouth curls. "He is...?" he prompts me as he begins to massage my core.

"Hard," I mumble. "So hard."

He grinds the heel of his hand against my clit and goosebumps flare on my skin. I shiver, "And sexy, and dominant, and knows just what to do to arouse me to fever pitch, and when he tells me that he'll let me lead in bed, I know that he—"

He digs his finger into my melting channel through the cloth and I groan.

"You were saying—?" he smirks.

"Was I?" I blink.

"Yep." He nods, "Something about wanting to lead in bed?"

"Yeah," I swallow, "this once."

He fixes his left palm around the nape of my neck, then lifts me up by the hold on my pussy, and plants me on the pie. I squeak, wriggle my hips around, trying to evade the moist filling. He tightens his grip on my pussy. He pushes down with his other hand, and I still.

"Look at me," he growls.

I glance up, trace his features with my gaze—that patrician hooked nose, those clear eyes, the lush dark hair that flows about his shoulders, that pouty lower lip that I want to suck on. I lean up, he holds me in place with his hold on the nape of my neck. His strength is awesome, like really awesome. Why didn't I realize how he could overpower me with minimal resistance?

I reach for his cock, but he clicks his tongue, "So impatient." He snickers.

I scowl. "But I want to touch you."

"Not yet."

"You made a promise."

"And you know what kills me?" He shakes his head, "You actually expect me to keep it too."

"Won't you?" I peer up at him, "Won't you let me take the lead?"

"Nope." He shakes his head.

"But you said—"

"I lied."

Of course, he did. I mean, if he'd allowed me to actually set the pace, I'd have... Thrown myself at him, climbed him, impaled myself on his dick like he'd fucked that pie. The pie... Hell. I wriggle around, and the filling sticks to my behind. "Weston, uh, the filling is getting into all the places it shouldn't," I mumble.

"On the contrary." He grins, "It's filling up exactly the right areas, which I am going to enjoy licking."

"Oh," I gulp; my core clenches. Jesus, is he going to enact the picture he painted right now in my mind?

"Oh, yes." He mocks my strangled exclamation. "And that's only the beginning... Once you are clean, I plan to fill you up with my dick in your pussy, my fingers in your arsehole, and my tongue in your mouth. I am going to make sure every hole in your body bears my imprint. Then I am going to fuck you so hard, you won't know where you begin and where I end, you'll lose sight of what day it is, what time—" he swallows, "what time—" His voice roughens, "What time—"

"What time of day it is," I supply, "whether I am indoors or not, what the weather is like outside, what—"

He releases my pussy, only to plant his big body between my legs, forcing my thighs to widen.

"What ingredients I use in an apple pie—" What the hell am I warbling on about?

He thrusts his dick inside of me, filling me, stretching me, packing me to the brim, with such confidence that I gasp.

"Wes, I... I..."

"Complete the sentence." He glares at my features, "Do it."

"I..." I swallow, "I...want..."

"What?" He brings his free hand to my breast, squeezes it. Sensations radiate outward from the contact. My pussy clenches around his dick and his grin widens. "You were saying?" he prompts, "Something about the apple pie —"

"Fuck the apple pie," I mutter.

"Did that already." He chuckles.

"Sheesh," I grumble, "are you for real?"

"Does this feel real?" He pinches my nipple and I yelp. He bends his head, sucks on it, and I feel the pull deep down in my womb. Everything he does seems to awaken parts of me that had hitherto been happy to exist without communicating with me.

"Weston," I gasp, "you're forgetting something."

He releases my breast, glares up at me, "I am?" He blinks, then his forehead smooths, "I am."

He turns his head, fastens his mouth around my other breast. He sucks on my nipple, curls his tongue around the pebbled bud, bites down with his sharp teeth, and I yell, dig my fingers in his hair and tug.

He grunts and his dick lengthens further inside of me—is that even possible? He continues to lave my nipple, sucking on it, dragging his teeth around the tender flesh, then opens his mouth wider, taking in as much of my breast as he can fit. Heat, lust, pleasure, pain... All of it... None of it... A confluence of emotions whirls inside, tugging at my lower belly, arrowing to my cunt, which clamps tighter around his engorged flesh. Of course, he is pleasuring me, but ultimately, he is the beneficiary. How could someone be so...on target all the time in how he plays my body?

"Weston," I pant, "Please, please, please, please—"

He pulls out of me, raises his head, steps away.

"What the hell?" I blink, "You come back here and fuck me, you hear me?"

"Are you telling me what to do?" His lips quirk.

"You bet I am, you pussy tease, you—" I squeak, for he's grabbed my hips and flipped me over. I am on my arms and knees, butt pushed out in his face. The hell? Then a wetness sinks into my pussy, up my slit, across the valley between my arsecheeks.

"No," I shudder, "Weston, no."

He stops, "No?"

"No," I huff. "I mean, yes. Don't stop, whatever it is that you're doing, don't, oh!" He licks my puckered hole and my entire body trembles. It's filthy, and dirty and it's hot. So bloody hot. "Oh, my God," I breathe. "Oh, my, G-o-d." I yelp, for he swipes his tongue down to my cunt, then licks his way back up to my forbidden hole and back, again and again. My knees tremble and my elbows wobble. I sink down to support my face on my arms. "Wes," I gasp, "oh, you're, I'm—" My entire body seems to shudder. "I'm—"

"Don't you dare come," he growls against my sensitive clit, right before he bites on it. I howl, the sound muffled against my arms. My shoulder shudder, I slide my knees apart, thrust out my arse, giving him more access. He can eat me out like the sweetest of desserts, lick me, suck on me, insert his tongue into my pussy and drink of me. A trembling grips my legs, my back. He begins to fuck my backhole in earnest, shoving his tongue inside, curling it in, before he pulls out and bites on my butt. I huff.

"You taste fucking amazing," he mutters, "like apple pie and my cum."

I chuckle. Now that, would be one hell of a dish to put on the menu of my next pop-up delivery special. He grips my thighs, pushes them further apart. I crack open my eyes, stare down from across the length of my body, to between my legs, to where he swirls his tongue up my inner thigh, licking off the crumbs, then the other side. He meets my gaze, licks his lips, then declares, "I am going in for seconds."

Weston

"I am going to fuck you with my tongue." I take in her flushed face, her parted lips, her heaving breasts, "You ready, Princess?"

She blinks. "Do I have a choice?" she moans.

"Nope." I smile in anticipation, smack my lips together. Her breathing grows shallow, she licks her lower lip mirroring my desire, and my cock throbs, reminding me I needed to get on with the program. I'd promised to clean her up, before filling her up again, and I'm a man of my word—when it suits me, of course. I smirk, thrust my face into her pussy and close my mouth around her cunt. She moans, her thighs tremble, and liquid heat streams from her wet channel. I slurp it up, shove my tongue inside her cunt, mirror how I want to fuck her with my shaft—in-out-in— until her entire body shudders, and again.

She groans. "Weston, please..." she whines.

Yeah, I know the feeling. I reach down to grab my cock, pump it once, scoop up some of the pre-cum from the weeping head, then slide my fingers inside her backhole.

"Oh," she wheezes, then pounds her tiny fist into the table, "I'm coming, I'm—"

I tear my mouth from her pussy, grasp her waist and haul her off of the table and onto her feet in front of me. Her legs seem to give way. I hold her up, kick her legs apart, then scoop up her cum and ease it into her backhole.

"Wes..." she moans, "I haven't... I mean... I can't..."

"You can," I growl.

I add a second finger inside of her, and she groans, "It's too much...It's—"

"Not enough." I pull out my fingers, scoop up some of the mashed-up apple and smear it into her puckered hole.

"Oh." She grips the edge of the table, lowers her chin to her chest.

"Relax," I command, then press my palm into the center of her spine. I apply pressure and she bends over, placing her cheek on the table.

"Beautiful." I praise her.

She pushes her hair behind her ear. "Be gentle," she whispers.

"Is that what you want?" I stare at her, "Is that what you truly want, Princess?"

She swallows, then squeezes her eyes shut.

"Tell me," I repeat. "You wanted to take the lead. This is me giving you the choice to direct the proceedings. Do you want it tender or do you want me to take you like you are mine?"

She nods.

"Which one?" I ask.

"Both," she replies. "I want you to take me like I am yours, and I want to take it like you are mine." She cracks her eyelids open. "Please," she whispers.

My heart begins to race, my chest tightens, and something hot twists my heart. Fuck. Emotions, feelings, a strange melting sensation that steals up my spine, encircles my ribcage, bears down on my shoulders. I bend over her, until my chest is flush with her back, "You fucking destroy me, you know that?" I press my lips to hers and kiss her. I wrap my fingers around the nape of her neck, tilt my head, ease my tongue inside her mouth, and open myself up to her.

She draws in a breath—my breath, then parts her lips, sucks on my tongue and kisses me back. That melting sensation? It extends to my stomach, my belly, my extremities.

I ease my dick inside her puckered hole.

She groans. I swallow the small sound, bring my hand around to strum her cunt. Good thing it's only my middle finger which is broken. Leaves me plenty of others to play with her clit, slide my forefinger into her pussy, and begin to finger fuck her. She parts her legs, opens her mouth wider. I kiss her in earnest, dance my tongue over hers, allow her to drink from me as I thrust my hips and notch my dick further inside of her. A whine wells up her throat.

I drink of it, wind my fingers about her neck, and apply pressure.

Her pulse races at the base of her throat and her chest rises and falls. I slide my thumb inside her pussy, scissor my fingers in her channel. She groans, clenches around my dick, and I fucking see stars. Sweat beads my upper lip, slides down my temple. I dig my heels into the floor, flex my thighs, wait...wait for her to adjust to my size, tear my mouth from hers and kiss her nose, her cheek, her eyelashes, which flutter. "You're perfect, Princess," I whisper, "gorgeous, beautiful, inside and out."

She shudders, opens her mouth, then closes it again. I kiss her on her lips, on her chin, nibble my way up to her earlobe and suck on it.

A moan wheezes from her.

I ease my tongue inside her ear and she trembles. Drag my tongue about the shell of her ear and her entire body bucks. I bite down on her earlobe and she cries out. Her inner muscles give and I slip inside, filling her to the hilt.

A groan erupts from me... Or maybe that was her.

"Jesus." I press my cheek to hers, "You're so tight, so hot...so much everything." My pulse begin to race. "I want you." I mumble half to myself, "I've never needed anything as much as I need you. I have to fuck you, make you mine as completely as I am yours."

She draws in a breath. "Why," she asks, "why do you want me?"

"Because I love you." I snap my eyes open, "Of course, whatever is said in coitus...stays in coitus." I mutter, "I mean, anything said in the heat of passion is—"

"The naked truth?" She stares at me from under hooded eyes. "Will you get out of your own way for bloody once and accept what it is you feel for me?" she snaps.

I glare back at her, but she doesn't back down, "Admit it, alphahole, you fucking love me."

"Love to fuck you," I agree.

"You ache for me." Her lips quirk.

"For the rapier-sharp edge of your mind that I love to challenge."

"You can't live without me," her voice is smug.

I scowl. "Adore your pussy." I rotate my fingers inside of her, and color smears her cheeks. "And your arse, which belongs to me, by the way," I inform her, even as I pull out, then thrust inside her with enough impact that her entire body jolts up the table.

"Stop deflecting," she pants.

"Stop talking," I retort.

"Thought you loved my sassy comebacks," she mutters.

"Love your sassy arse." I propel my hips forward, begin to fuck her in earnest.

Her eyes roll back in her head. "Fuck," she groans, "it hurts."

I frown, begin to pull out, "Maybe I should have waited... Should have prepared you better. I could—"

She lowers her chin, trains those blue eyes on me. "Don't you dare," she growls. "You bloody well finish what you fucking started."

Thank fuck. My dick lengthens. I grit my teeth, stay poised at her entrance.

"Another thing I crush on..." I force the words out through gritted teeth, "Who'd have thought your potty mouth would turn me so on?"

"Thought it was all of me? The entire package?" She flutters her eyelashes at me. "Come on, give credit where it's due, Doc. Give me the satisfaction of hearing it from the horse's mouth."

"You calling me a horse?" I arch an eyebrow, then thrust forward and inside of her.

"Oh." She squeezes her eyes shut. "That..." she gulps, "that feels so fucking good."

She bites down on her lower lip, and fuck her, but I can't resist her when she does that. I lower my head, lick her mouth. "Look at me," I order.

She cracks open her eyelids, and those shining baby blues of her stare into my soul.

"Stay with me," I whisper, then propel my hips forward. My balls slap against the underside of her butt, and I sink into her. Her spine arches and her gaze grows frantic. A ripple speeds up her body. Oh, she's close, so close. I tear my mouth from hers. "Come," I growl, and her pussy clenches around my fingers.

Moisture slides out from between her thighs as she shudders. Her eyelids flutter and I click my tongue, "Open your eyes, darlin'."

She tips her chin up, and I hold her gaze, as I thrust forward. My balls draw up, my cock lengthens, the tension in my groin explodes out, and I come inside of her.

I slump forward, hold my weight up on my elbows, then lower my lips to hers.

"Wow," she whispers against my mouth. "That was something."

"Yeah," I kiss her, "it was."

I pull out of her and she winces. I pull her up, then scoop her into my arms.

"You okay?"

She gazes up at me, her cheeks flushed, her hair stuck to her forehead, her eyes glazed.

"Princess?" I ask again. "Talk to me."

"Hmm." She snuggles into my chest. "Do I have to?" she mumbles, then yawns so loudly her jaws crack.

"I wore you out, huh?" I stalk out of the kitchen.

"Where are you...going?" She yawns again.

"Where's the shower?" I ask.

"Mmmm... That way." She jerks her chin to the side.

I walk down the hallway, reach the bathroom door and shoulder it open.

"I don't think I can stay awake." Her eyelids flutter.

"Just as long as you're awake when I fuck you again."

Okay, maybe not. I prop her up in the shower, turn on the water, soap her up, and wash every inch of her delectable body. She falls asleep in my arms halfway through. That doesn't stop me from slipping my throbbing dick inside of her and taking her. Or again later... When I've dried her and myself off and pulled the covers over her naked body—after I've made sure to close and lock the door to her apartment and ensured all of the windows are safely shut—I slip in beside her, curl my body around hers and try to fall asleep.

Only I can't, because I have a raging hard-on. Her proximity does that to me—turns me on, twists me inside out until I am sure I am one big, seething mass of need. I pull her leg up and over my hip, then guide myself inside of her soft pussy. A sense of peace, of rightness, steals over me. Fuck, this is what I've been missing all along—this melding sensation as I sink into her melting channel, and finish myself off in a few strokes, as I orgasm inside of her and she stirs. I curve my arm around her waist, pull her close and fall asleep with my dick nestled within her warmth.

Twelve o'clock.

Eleven o'clock.

Ten o'clock.

The goddam timer—an old fashioned clock fitted to run backwards—as my kidnapper had informed me, never stops counting down.

Every hour it helpfully rings out the time, so even though I am blindfolded, I have no choice but to follow along in my head.

Nine o'clock

Eight o'clock

Seven o'clock

Every hour brings me closer to the time when my kidnapper is going to come through the door.

Six o'clock

Five o'clock

Four o'clock

Twelve hours, that's how long he'd said he'd be away.

Three o'clock

Two o'clock

One o'clock

The timer passes the twelve-hour mark, and stops. The silence stretches. A beat, another.

My heart begins to race and sweat pools in my armpits. I tug my wrists against my bindings, and pain shoots up my arms. I draw in a breath and the acrid taste of fear fills my mouth. Something is wrong.

Why hasn't the bomb gone off as he'd said it would? Why hasn't my kidnapper returned for that matter? My throat closes, my hands and feet grow cold.

Today, I won't survive the beating. Today, something is different. Today is the day when he finishes it. When he doesn't stop electrocuting me until...my heart gives out.

My heart pounds in my chest, my pulse races, and my stomach coils in knots. The pressure builds at my temples. What's he going to do to me when he gets here?

My head spins and coldness grips my arms and legs... I won't last the day. I have to get through today. Need to focus, focus. Stay still; count down again.

Twelve o'clock.

Eleven o'clock.

Ten o'clock.

My heart beat slows and my pulse steadies. How strange. My biggest nemesis is also the only way I can calm my mind. Stay still, in the moment. You can't give up. Not yet. The door creaks open. I jolt upright. The change in the air indicates he's in the room. Footsteps approach as the door snicks shut. The hair at the back of my neck rises. Fuck. He's here, he's going to hit me...any moment. The floorboard creaks to my right, to the left, behind me. He circles me, comes closer.

"What should I do with you?" he mutters. "Leave you in your filth or put you out of your misery?"

Let me go, I try to say, the words muffled by my gag. Let me the fuck go, you asshole.

"Weston. Weston," he says. "When will you realize that resistance is futile?"

I yank my wrists against my bindings, strain the muscles of my legs. The ropes around my ankles dig into my skin. The ticking of the clock around my chest fills my ears...my mind. It grows louder, ricocheting inside of my head. The fuck is he up to? Why the hell is he not untying me?

He pats my head; I jerk away. The time-bomb around my chest beeps.

"Oops," he laughs, "sorry." He chuckles, "Forgot for a second there that you had to be absolutely still." He shuffles his feet, "Remember what I said about your being let go in twelve hours?"

I nod.

"Guess what? Today is your lucky day."

I stiffen.

"Today is the day I leave you here, with an hour to countdown. When it hits one o'clock... Boom!" He claps his hands together.

My shoulders bunch and the blood pumps in my ears. My heart hammers so loud, I am sure I am going to be sick. Let me out of here. Let me out.

"Sorry, my boy. Some things are best left up to fate, you understand?"

No. What the fuck is he talking about? I lean forward, shake my head. No, don't leave me here, don't.

His footsteps recede.

Stop. Don't go.

"Oh, I forgot to tell you." His voice reaches me from the direction of the doorway.

"If you're lucky, the bomb may not go off."

Bloody piece of shit, he's fucking toying with me. It won't go off. It won't. The door shuts behind him, leaving me with the ticking of the bloody clock. Tick-tock. Tick-tock.

Three o'clock.

Two 'o clock.

So close. An hour to countdown. An hour to my death. Or not? Any moment now. Any moment.

"Weston?" A man's voice calls out, "Weston, you in there?"

The door slams open and I jerk up.

"What the fuck?"

Stay back, don't come close. The bomb—it's going to detonate, it's going to—

"Weston?"

I tug on my bindings, but they don't give. Fuck this, if I'm going to die, I'm not taking another innocent life down with me. The ticking of the bomb seems to get louder... Or is that hammering in my chest? Sweat slithers down my spine. I tug my feet, strain at my restraints. The chair lurches forward. Tick-tock-tick-tock. The timebomb stops. Then—

"Weston?"

I snap my eyes open.

"Wes?" Her worried gaze holds mine. Her blonde hair is tangled about her shoulders. I rake my gaze down to her bare breasts, to her belly, to where her thighs grip my waist.

"Wes?" She reaches down to touch my face.

I pull away. "Don't," I clear my throat.

"You going to tell me about what happened when you were kidnapped?" she prods. "Is that what your nightmare was about?"

"What's it to you?" I grind my teeth together so hard that pain shoots up my jaw.

"You have to ask me that, after everything we've been through? After you told me that you love me?"

"About that..." I frown, "I didn't—"

"Shut up," she snaps.

"The fuck?" I growl, "You dare tell me to shut up?"

"Oh, I dare more." She smirks. "I dare to fuck you while you are tied up."

"Tied up?" I frown, then pull at my arms, which are bound above me. I glance up, tug at one leg, then the other. "You bound me to the bed?"

"Close." She smiles, "I bound you to the bed spread-eagled."

Amelie

What the hell am I doing? I reach down between us, massage his erect shaft. His chest planes lock and his shoulder muscles ripple. "You think you're going to get away with this?" he growls.

My heart begins to race. My throat closes. The taste of fear coats my tongue and I swallow it down.

"Correction." I allow my lips to curl, "I know I am going to get away with this." I swipe my fingers up his dick to where the swollen head throbs. I squeeze and his hips buck. I drag my thumb across the slit and his body jolts.

"Amelie," he warns.

"Weston," I echo his tone.

I slide my other hand down to cup his balls.

His throat moves as he swallows. "You really, really don't want to do this." His voice lowers to that hush as he speaks, to that edge of meanness which chafes at my nerve endings, that ripples down my belly, then coils in between my legs. Moisture laces my core. His gaze intensifies and his nostrils flare. Hell, as usual, he's so tuned into me, he can sense my arousal.

I squeeze his balls; he grunts. I slide back, lower my head, close my mouth around his shaft. His thigh muscles spasm and his entire body seems to go still. I hold his gaze, bob my head, take him in until his length bumps the back of my throat.

"Fuck." His jaw tics; his shoulder muscles bunch. "You don't know what you are doing," he snarls.

I rise up, so his dick plops out with a wet sound, "On the contrary." I lick the angry head of his cock, "I have a very good idea what I am doing to you."

I swirl my tongue around the rim of the angry throbbing head; he growls.

I drag my teeth across the sensitive skin; his body bucks.

"Oh." I blink. This is fun. It seems I can elicit a response with the smallest action.

I slide my tongue down the length of his shaft; sweat beads his forehead.

"Are you hot?" I ask.

"The fuck do you think?" he snarls.

I giggle. I can't help it, honestly. To see this virile, dominant alphahole laid low by a touch... Mmm. It's sweet revenge. I weigh his balls in my hand, then drag my finger down between his butt-cheeks to tease his backhole.

He grunts, "Fucking fuck." A vein throbs at his temple, his biceps bulge and the veins of his forearms ripple.

Holy shit, he's not going to break free, is he?

He yanks at his bindings which tighten, but hold—Whoa, guess the knock-off Ferragamo scarves are of good quality, after all.

His thigh muscles tense as he pulls on the bindings that circle his ankles. The bed frame creaks, but he stays tied.

The breath rushes out of me. Gah, that was close. I lower my face to his groin, begin to give him head. I take him down my throat—gag—breathe through your nose, breathe through your nose—I pull back, glance up to find his gaze fixed on me. A vein throbs at his temple; color highlights his cheeks. Wow. He seems aroused and angry—but definitely turned on.

"That all you got, babe?" His lips twist, "Giving up so easily, hmm?"

I frown. Typical of him to turn this into a competition, huh?

I prop my elbows on his hips, swirl my tongue around his cock. "You taste," I frown, "you taste like dark chocolate with a dash of sea salt."

He groans, "Jesus, woman, only you could compare my dick to a dessert."

"It's good," I offer, "I mean, you could do with a trim—"

"The fuck are you talking about?" he scowls.

"I mean the hair on your chin, you dummy." I chuckle, "What did you think?"

"I think when I get loose, I am going to turn you over my knee and spank you."

"Hmm." I dip my head, take him in, swipe my tongue up his cock, then pull back. His balls harden and his shaft lengthens, "Oh," I blink, "that's interesting." I massage that engorged part of him.

"The fuck?" he snarls. "What the hell do you think you're doing?"

"Having my cake and eating it too." I chuckle. My, but I am full of terrible sayings, but hey, if the shoe fits. I raise my shoulders, open my mouth, and take him down my throat again.

"Fuck." His swearing fills the air above me. His cock jumps. Heat seems to leap off of his chest and slam into my shoulders, pinning me in place. I gasp, rise up and position myself above his erect shaft.

He growls low in his throat, the sound a rumble that hints at an inner conflict. He peels back his lips and his teeth glint against his skin. His shoulder muscles seem to broaden, his big body tenses, waiting, waiting...for me to make my move. Holy shit... This is true power. Holding the most responsive part of him in my hand...before I sink down and impale myself on his very erect, very hard cock.

"Ah." I throw my head back, breathe in as I adjust to his size. He'd fucked me earlier, but damn, if his every penetration doesn't feel like the first time.

"Ride me," he growls. "Fuck my dick and make yourself come."

His words sink into my blood. I rise up, slam myself down onto his dick. The entire bed creaks. I clench my insides around his shaft, and he groans.

"Amelie," his voice is strained.

I lower my gaze to his face, hold onto his hips for leverage, then I begin to ride him. I raise and lower myself again and again. I don't break the connection between our eyes. His grey eyes reflect back the heat, the tension, the absolute and complete need to own him that grips me. His heart, his soul, his every emotion. I clench my pussy, squeeze my thighs together. "Weston." Only when I hear my voice do I realize I've breathed his name aloud.

"Don't stop," he replies. "Don't you dare stop, until you come."

I swallow, brace myself, then lift up and sink back down at the same moment that he thrusts upward and into me. His cock fills me, stretches me. His gaze burns into me, and I can all but taste his intensity as his big body stiffens, as his shaft jerks inside of me. He pistons his hips upward—fucking me, cramming into me, setting off pin pricks of heat that radiate out from my core, up my spine. The trembling crashes over me, and I gasp, and strain for release. Close, so close.

"Come," he growls, and I shatter. My climax smashes into me. White noise fills my ears, my mind. When I come to, I'm on my back and he's braced over me.

"How?" I frown, "You got free."

"You didn't think your scarves were strong enough to hold me, did you?"

"So, all this time—?"

He nods, "I pretended to be tied down."

I scowl, "You allowed me to take the lead?"

"This once." He dips his head, kisses me. "Don't expect it to happen again."

"Yeah, yeah," I mutter, "Of course, the Big Bad Alpha Claus isn't going to allow this helpless woman to get away with anything."

"Helpless, my ass!" he scoffs. "You're dangerous, is what you are."

"Why, you flatter me." I flutter my eyelashes.

"And you..." He peers into my face, his features intense, "You..." He swallows, "I love you."

"Oh." A fierce something flares in my chest. Heat sears my cheeks. Holy shit, am I blushing? No, I am not. Of course, not.

"Aren't you forgetting something?" he growls.

"Am I?" I tilt my head, "Max is not here, so we don't have to take him for a walk. I showered last night, so I guess I can skip today, and it's Christmas today. Of course, Merry Christmas, Mr. Alpha Claus."

"Merry-fucking-Christmas," he rumbles, "but that's not what I mean."

"No?" I chew the inside of my cheek; my heart flutters in my chest like I'm just about to eat a freshly-baked chocolate croissant. Yum. Only one thing gives me more pleasure. "Umm." I screw up my face, "Let me think... Let me think... Am I forgetting something?" I raise my shoulders, "Nope."

He runs his fingers up my side, "Is that right?"

I giggle. "That's right."

He digs his fingers into my ribcage, and I snort. "Please... Don't—" I gasp.

"My, my, how ticklish you are, little Red."

"All the better to laugh with you, Mr. Claus." I chuckle, then scream, as he tickles my armpits. The laughter wells up my throat. I wriggle around, try to avoid him, but he leans his weight on me.

I howl.

He laughs louder. He holds me captive under him, proceeds to tickle me until I lose my breath. "Stop... No more..." I pant, "Please."

He pauses and his chest heaves. He glares at me, takes in my features. "You're the most beautiful present I have ever received for Christmas," he whispers.

My heart literally melts in my chest. Okay, not literally, but I mean, come on... That was bloody unexpected. I cup his cheek, urge his face closer, "I am still waiting for my gift."

"Oh?"

I nod, "Tell me what happened when you were kidnapped."

He blinks, then his features shutter.

Hell, me and my big mouth. Why did I have to go spoil that perfect moment? He pulls back, shoves off the bed and glances around the room.

I sit up, "Weston, I'm sorry."

He spots his pants and steps into them. Shit, he's leaving... After all that? He loves me. He'd made love to me. Hell, he'd taken my ass... And damn him... It had taken courage to allow him to do that... I'd enjoyed it...but honestly, it had been a leap of faith to trust him with that... And now...what? He decides to up and leave? And why the hell am I apologizing?

He heads for the door. I jump up on my knees; the bloody sheet is wound around me... How the hell did that happen? "Weston stop right there."

He reaches the exit.

"Stop," I yell. "You can't just leave."

He pauses, then turns to glare at me with that look of superior disdain that I hate.

"Don't tell me what to do," he growls.

Argh! I throw up my hands, "You and your stupid dick-headed ideas."

"Didn't see you complaining earlier when I had you pinned on said dickhead," he snaps back.

"Don't change the topic."

He opens his mouth to speak.

I hold up my hand, "What did I say, to get you all hot under the collar, huh?" I scowl. "What's wrong with my asking you about the incident that clearly impacted you so much you're having nightmares to this day?"

He draws himself up to his full height, which only draws my attention to the width of those beautiful shoulders, those eight—no ten-pack abs—ten pack? I mean, who has a ten pack? Is that even a thing? Apparently, yes, I have the evidence right here in front of me.

He widens his stance, "You can't see it, can you?"

"What?"

"You're so involved in your emotions, your need to find out all my secrets. You have no idea how much it hurts to bring it up, do you?"

"If we are..." I pause. Say it. Should I say it? Whatever. I have nothing to lose, except my future... Yeah, fine, if I can't say what's on my mind with him, then this, whatever is between us, is worth nothing. I draw in a breath, "If we are going to have a future, then I need to know about this."

"That's where you are wrong."

My heart begins to race.

Don't say it. Don't say it.

"I said I loved you," he rolls his shoulders, "doesn't mean we have anything keeping us together."

Turning, he leaves.

Weston

Nice one. Get right to the heart of it, twist her guts and deliver her a sucker punch. You're a piece of work, you know that? Fuck! I stalk out of the apartment block. My bare feet hit the sidewalk. Huh? I'd forgotten to put on my shoes, apparently. I drop my shoes on the concrete, reach for the socks. And, of course, I've forgotten them. I shove my feet into my shoes—take a step forward, the backs of the shoes bite into my heels. Great, I'm sure to get blisters. Good. I deserve that...and more, much more for what I just did. What the fuck happened there? She asked me a simple question and I freaked. Not that I hadn't discussed the goddamn incident with the Seven in the years since—and with the shrink my mother had insisted I see. I'd hated it then...but they'd taken no shit from me. Good for them. I thought I'd dealt with the aftermath of what had happened...but apparently, not.

First, I'd frozen when my mother had collapsed...

Then the realization that I love her—fuck! I stumble, then right myself. I love her.

I've fallen for her.

When had she snuck up under my skin, coiled her scent around my heart, wormed her way into my every waking thought? Somewhere between her walking in on me naked at the cabin and apple-pie gate, I'd opened myself up to her in a way I had never done before. Her sass, her ability to hold her own against me, the way she fights to hold onto every inch of her dignity, that need inside of her to be dominated in bed, even as she blazes forward, trying to build her business.

She is a smart cookie, my woman. Takes no shit from anyone, and that includes me. It's one of the things I love—the fact that I can be myself with her, secure in the knowledge that she'll give back as good as she gets. Fuck. I drag my fingers through my hair... I left her and haven't stopped thinking about her. How can I already miss her? Her laughter, the way she wrinkles up her nose when she's thinking, how she talks in her sleep... How her features scrunch up before she climaxes, how she draws herself up to her full height, tips up her chin and assumes that haughty ice-princess persona when she is pissed off with me.

How her features had crumpled when I'd told there was nothing keeping us together. I squeeze the bridge of my nose. Why the hell had I said that? Bloody ego of mine. No way, could I stand to share my weakness with her, huh? Would it have been so fucking terrible to tell her what had happened during the time I had been held hostage as a boy? Why the fuck is it so difficult to talk about it still, huh? All the bloody therapy in the world had clearly not helped. Maybe there is a part inside of me that's broken and nothing can fix it—except her. She could have, had I given her a chance. But I'd opted to lash out at her—at the one person who is more important to me than life itself. Fuck. I rake my fingers through my hair, move forward. My foot connects with something on the ground. There's a dull thud. I look down to find coins spilled on the ground, and next to it a steel can is overturned.

"Sorry." I bend, scoop up the money and drop it back into the container.

"Got a cigarette?" a voice asks.

I glance up at the homeless man seated behind the receptacle. He has a Santa hat perched on his head. Had she actually nicknamed me Alpha Claus? I smirk. Talk about being kinky. But hell, if my North Pole hadn't been a snug fit in her stocking. I shake my head. The hell am I thinking?

"Oy," he waves his hand in front of my face, "got a smoke?"

I blink, shake my head, "Huh? Nope, sorry."

"Spare some change instead?" He peruses my features, "You okay there, man?"

"Sure," I mutter, shove my fingers in my pants pocket, come up empty. Search the other pocket and pull out my phone. Huh. "Guess I forgot my wallet." I glance back at her apartment block—okay, technically my block. But fuck, if I am going back there, not after that scene. Best to give her time to cool off, and then what? Beg her forgiveness? Fuck that. If she can't accept me the way I am...then too fucking bad. Her loss. And yours. A fine curvy, gorgeous, love-of-my-life-sized loss. "Fuck," I swear aloud.

"You need a drink," Homeless man drawls.

'Yeah."

"Or maybe two," he offers.

I roll my shoulders, "Sounds about right." Why not? Liquor seems to be the way forward. Days and weeks and months of pouring myself into liquid amnesia. At least, I am old enough to cope that way... Hadn't had that luxury in my teenage years when my brain had turned to mush after the incident. It wasn't until I had found my calling as a surgeon, that I'd found a goal in life, a way to ground myself and keep moving forward. Until her—she is what makes it all worthwhile. Someone I can take care of, protect, share my fears, my deepest desires... Someone with whom I can build a future. "Bloody fuck," I growl. Why the hell can't I stop thinking about her? This is not good at all. "Not good."

"Women, huh?" Homeless man folds his legs under himself to sit cross-legged. I stare at his bare feet. There's something wrong with this picture. I frown. "Your shoes," I say, "what happened to them?"

"Got stolen." He raises his shoulders, "Shit happens." He scratches his jaw—which is cleanshaven? That's what it is. I glance down at his feet again. His toenails are clean and cut short, so I hadn't been mistaken. This guy is finicky about his grooming.

"Take mine." I reach for my shoe, tug it off and offer it to him.

He eyes it warily, then takes it from me and slips it on. "Imagine that; it fits." He chuckles.

I slip off the other one; he shoves his other foot into it.

The shoes do look good on him, actually. I tilt my head, stare up into his features. His eyes are clear...a glitter of intelligence in their depths.

"What happened to you?" he asks.

I frown, "What do you mean?"

He points at my middle finger in its splint.

"That?" I crack my neck, "Someone ran me off the road."

"The world's a dangerous place." He nods. "Gotta take care of what's yours."

I nod. "You're onto something there."

"Thanks for the shoes." He shakes his head and the bells at the end of his Santa hat jingle. "Merry Christmas."

"Sure. Whatfuckingevery, man."

I rise to my feet. A man jostles my shoulder as he passes.

"The fuck?" I turn to watch him hurry into her apartment block. I frown. Clearly, this isn't my day. I turn to leave.

"You've got to see what's in front of your eyes," Homeless Guy calls after me.

I pause.

"When we two parted

In silence and tears,

Half broken-hearted

To sever for years," his voice fills the space.

I turn on him.

He holds my gaze.

"Pale grew thy cheek and cold,

Colder thy kiss;

Truly that hour foretold

Sorrow to this," he recites.

"What the fuck was that about?" I growl.

"Byron." He blinks.

My heartbeat ratchets up, "Who the fuck are you talking about?"

"Lord Byron, the poet," he replies. "Who did you think it was?"

I shake my head. Of course, it was the poet. This fucker has no connection to the Byron that the Seven had identified as the head of the Mafia... The ones responsible for kidnapping us and changing our fucking lives. Does he?

"Don't delay." He turns to stare up at the apartment block.

I follow his gaze to the window on the first floor, her apartment. A man's shoulders fill the space.

"The fuck?" I straighten, stare at the window. There's no one there. I didn't imagine that. I didn't.

Had she replaced me that quickly? I'd barely left and she'd found someone else to take my place? Someone else to bring her to orgasm, to hold her when she shatters, someone else to gaze into those baby blues of hers and declare his love for her as he holds her in his arms? "How dare she?" I stalk forward, retrace my steps to the apartment block.

Amelie

What the hell had happened? One second, he'd been tickling me and we'd been laughing together. The next, he'd rolled off me, off my bed, headed out of the apartment—and what the hell was that whole thing about not having a future together? Did he mean it? That that... Dumbass fruitcake. That... Mother-trifle... Argh! I can't even get my insults together.

I stand in the middle of the kitchen surveying the remnants of the apple pie—now crumbled all over the dining table. I fold my arms around my waist, over the shirt I'd slipped on, his shirt... Because Mr Alpha dickhead had marched out leaving it behind. I glance out the window. He had to be cold with that bare chest of his exposed to the elements. No doubt, every woman who passed him would ogle him. No doubt, he'd indulge them too and preen.

I curl my fingers into fists and my fingernails dig into my palms. The hell is wrong with me? Why do I already miss him? Do I want to see him again? Why the hell do I want to spend time with a man who is an obnoxious, full-of-himself prat of the highest order. I lean forward, scoop up a crumb of the apple pie. I suck on my finger and the familiar taste of sweet and savory fills my mouth, interspersed with that edgy, darkness that is him. I stare at my wet finger—

That's what it is. He is the contrast to my forced self-confidence. I mean, I can try to pretend to the world that I have it all under control. I can live by the “fake it 'til I make it” motto, which I had embraced as my own so long ago—

Except, I could never fool him.

He'd cut through all that sassiness, all that bravado I present to the world, and known me. He'd seen me for what I am. A woman who wants to be taken, to be possessed, to be taken care of. With him... I trust him to take control. Only with him can I find the strength to surrender completely; and he...? He'd known what I needed even before I had. He'd seen me for the eclair I am. All hard on the outside, but drop me in water and I'll dissolve and impart my sweetness to my surroundings—no wait, that metaphor is all wrong—I mean, hard on the outside, soft on the inside... Well, partially... There is more to me than that. I am more like a sticky toffee pudding—mess with me and I'll screw you up bad... Hell, what am I thinking?

Fact is, there's something between us—something hot and vital and real, something that attracts us to each other even as the contrasts highlight how different we are. I hate him. I love him. I can't live without him. I stiffen. Damn, why the hell did I have to go and fall for the wrong man? At least, he'd confessed he loves me—right before he'd walked out on me. Why the hell can't he let me in on his secrets? Can't he see I want to understand him? That I want to spend my life with him? And he wants it too; he does. Only the alphahole has too much of a bloody ego to see it.

I kick the chair in front of me, which topples over. Pain shoots through my foot. "Ow." I hop around on one foot, then fall against the table, which creaks, put out a hand to right myself, and my fingers brush against the spatula I had used earlier. It hits the kitchen timer, which rolls over. Ah, just what I am looking for.

I snatch up the egg-timer, rotate the dial, and the ticking of the countdown fills the room. I turn toward the oven when the thud of a footstep vibrates behind me. My heart slams into my chest. Is it him? Is he back? The dense scent of a man's cologne fills my senses.

I've smelled this scent before; it's someone else. Someone who is in my kitchen, with me. My hackles rise. I grab the spatula on the table, turn as a hand closes over my mouth. I scream but the sound emerges muffled. My heart begins to thud. My throat closes. Let go of me, let go. I swipe at his arm with my weapon of choice. His grip over my face tightens. I pull my knee up to kick back at him. He grabs me around my waist.

"Stop struggling or I'll hurt you," he snarls in my ear. His voice is sharp, an edge of desperation heightening his tone. Hell, this man is dangerous. He wouldn't hesitate to follow up on his promise.

I slump in his grasp. He begins to drag me across the kitchen when I hear, "Amelie?" Weston's voice calls out from the direction of the living room, "Where the fuck are you? Who the fuck are you with? Couldn't wait to get me out your hair and invite your lover in, huh?"

His footsteps approach. OMG, it's him. I need to get his attention. If I can just manage to get this intruder's hand off of my mouth... I begin to struggle in earnest, hit out with my leg, pull back my elbow, and it connects with his stomach.

He grunts, then begins to drag me toward the cupboard in the corner. No way, no way am I letting him get me in there. I bite down on his hand. He swears but doesn't release me. He yanks on my hair so hard that I see stars. Pain ricochets down my spine and tears of frustration fill my eyes. Dammit, I am not giving in like this. I refuse to be a damsel in distress. Fuck this. I double up my knee then kick back. I connect with his shin, and pain thuds up my leg. The bastard huffs out a breath. His grip loosens. Finally! I wrench my face to the side, then scream.

"Amelie." Weston barges into the room.

The intruder swings around, putting me in front of him. He swings his arm around my neck, yanks me against him. He's tall and broad; the heat of his body curls over me and my skin crawls. "Let me...go." I cough, swipe at his arm with my spatula. He grabs it, wrenches it from my hold, then throws it at Weston, who steps aside in a move so graceful that I blink. The man can move...and not just in bed. If I get out of this alive, I am going to sit on him, in said bed, and ensure that we not leave that space for weeks.

Weston glances at me, "You okay?" His voice is toneless. His features are hard. Gone is the kinky doctor, the demanding lover, the son who cares for his mother... In its place, is a man far more lethal than the intruder who has me in his grasp.

"Amelie?" Weston snaps, "Answer me."

"Yes." I squeak, then clear my throat. "I am fine."

He turns his gaze to the man who holds me captive.

"What do you want?" he asks. "If it's money, let me get to my wallet—" He takes a step forward.

The man swoops out his hand, grabs a knife from the rack next to the cooking range. He presses its edge to my neck and the blood drains from my face. No, no, no, this can't be happening. My pulse rate ratchets up, my heart hammering so hard in my chest, I am sure it's going to jump out. My head spins. No, I will not faint, no way. I bite down on the inside of my cheek, draw in a breath, then another. The silence stretches. A beat, another.

The ticking of the countdown clock fills the space. Weston's gaze darts to the egg timer—his face pales. A nerve throbs at his temple, beating in tandem with the stupid tick-tock of the timer. Ugh, why did I have to wind it up? Because I could? Because I thought I was alone. Because I was being spiteful... Gah! Death by kitchen timer... Nooo, that's like a terrible B-grade screamer movie. I am not going out this way, not without a fight. I raise my hand and the intruder presses the knife deeper. Pinpricks of pain spark out from the cut and I feel a drop of blood trickling down my throat. The ball of emotion in my chest seems to expand. I try to swallow, but find my mouth is too dry. Hell, do something, anything.

I stare at Weston, at the sweat that glistens on his forehead. Look at me, look at me, I urge him in my mind. Please baby, tear your gaze away from that stupid egg timer—if we get out of this, I promise I'll throw away every single, stupid timer in the house... I'll switch to those silent ones, the newer digital ones even—I cringe. Okay, so they are not my favorite, but no choice. Needs must, and all that. The intruder grips my arm, urges me to take a step forward.

Weston doesn't move—the muscles of his massive shoulders lock and his chest planes could be hewn out of rock. Everything within him seems riveted by that horrible timer. OMFG, what the hell am I going to do now?

The intruder nudges me and I move forward, closer...closer to where Weston stands, rooted to the spot. His jaw tics and the tendons of his throat bulge. His arms are locked into his sides—frozen in the moment that he'd spotted the timer.

How long did I set it for? Ten minutes? Five? Oh God, please let it be for five or less. Why did I have to touch that stupid thing? Can I rewind back this morning...to the time in bed, when he had reached for me and tickled me until I couldn't stop laughing? Had it been just this morning? And why hadn't I thrown my arms and legs around him, clung to him and not let him leave? We could have still been in bed, all toasty and warm, and fucked each other until we'd collapsed again. Yes, that's what I want when this is over—an entire non-stop marathon of make-up sex. Weston, darling, please hold on, just a few more minutes, just a— The intruder shoves me forward, I stumble, slip on some of the remnants of the apple pie that are still on the ground. My legs slide out from under me, and I scream.

There's a blur of action. I sense Weston move—he swoops down, grabs the egg-timer, hurls it toward me.

48

Weston

The egg-timer rings as it sails through the air. It grazes the forehead of the intruder—who's wearing a mask. Of course, he is. Motherfucker! And my aim with my left hand sucks! Jesus, and I call myself a surgeon? When I most need precision, I am fucking hampered by the bloody splint. The asshole sways, then the knife slips from his fingers and crashes to the ground.

Amelie lurches forward. She stumbles and my heart slams into my ribcage. I jump forward, reach her as she collapses. I yank her to my side and behind me.

I raise my hand at the bastard, who's still standing. Why the hell is he still standing? I bury my fist in his face. He howls. I swing my fist at him again, he arches back, and I graze his shoulder. He straightens, then swings at me. I raise my left arm, deflect the blow. He comes at me again. I swear, angle my body to protect her. He lands a punch in my shoulder. At least it's the unhurt arm. I grunt, try to weave away. Behind me, Amelie stiffens and wriggles in my grasp. I turn my face—big mistake, asshole lands one in the side of my head. Sparks flare between my eyes. I growl, shake my head.

Amelie snarls, tugs in my grasp. "Let me go," she whispers.

"No," I growl, pull away as the bastard tries to deck me again.

"Unhand me, you macho ass." She pulls away, but I refuse to release her. She buries her teeth in my bicep. The fuck?

I grunt, loosen my hold on her, just as the intruder buries his fist in my other shoulder. A growl rips from me; my entire arm throbs...especially the motherfucking middle finger in a splint—"F-u-u-c-k!" I shake my head, focus my attention on the motherfucker. I curl my fist—my bloody left fist—swing at him, land a hit, then again. He grunts, lumbers backward. I head butt him, and he crashes into the counter behind him.

I raise my arm as Amelie yells, "Take that you bastard." She heaves the spatula at the stranger, catches him in the nose. He howls, presses his palm to his face, pushes away, turns and lurches around the dining table. "You bloody prick, you dare break into my apartment?" She grabs the next available weapon—which happens to be the other pie—the one left to cool on the counter behind her. She throws it at the retreating figure, catches him in the shoulder. He grunts, stumbles, steadies himself at the doorframe—asshole's wearing gloves as well.

"You think I am afraid? Huh? You think you can come in here and invade my space... you... you..."

"Dickhead?" I supply.

"No, that's an insult I reserve for you," she cries.

She glances around, reaches for another knife, throws it at him...misses. The blade embeds in the doorframe.

The intruder runs out of the kitchen. The next second, the door to the apartment slams behind him.

"You fucking prick, you horrible, mangy-faced, skiving, conniving, dodgy cocksucker—" She grabs hold of a whisk, hurls it at the door, picks up the pastry brush and throws it, then reaches for a wooden spoon.

I reach for her, "Amelie."

"Randy, ass-whipped... ignominious—" She throws the spoon in the direction of the door, but it only makes it halfway over before hitting the floor. She stumbles forward, reaches for the cookie cutter. I grab her wrist. She swings at me, her gaze wild, hair flowing about her shoulders.

"Princess, stop," I admonish her. She stabs the rolling pin in my chest, "Ouch." I grunt, press down with my fingers, "He's gone, Buttercup."

"What if he comes back?" she pants.

"He won't," I promise.

"What if he does?" she insists.

I lower her hand, slide the rolling pin from her fingers, "Then, uh, I promise to defend us from him, with—" I raise the rolling pin, "This?" I frown.

She glances at it, then at my face. "That's ridiculous." She giggles.

"It is, huh?" I quirk my lips, then hold up the blasted thing in a defensive gesture, "Well then, am I Westley enough for you?"

"No." She shakes her head, "I prefer you as Weston."

"And I fucking love you, any which way." I peruse her flushed features. "Even armed with deadly kitchen utensils—"

"Baking tools," she corrects me.

"What-fucking-ever." I fling the rolling pin aside, hold out my arms.

She jumps up and into my embrace.

"Fucking hell, Buttercup, you fucking bloody scared me," I say as I scoop her up.

She wraps her legs around my waist. "You stupid oaf, you left me, in the bed, on my own." She hiccoughs.

"Yeah, I am that and more," I agree. "You can call me any bloody insult under the sun and I deserve it all."

"He...he..." She buries her face in my chest, "He held a knife to my throat, oh, my God!" Her entire body shakes, her shoulders treble and my heart, my bloody heart stutters.

"Shh." I brush my cheek against her hair, "Shh, babe, I am here."

"You turned your back on...", she mumbles. "You walked out. How could you do that?" She digs her fingers into my shoulders and I wince.

Fuck, that's how much of a weak motherfucker I have become. I can't even hold up to being mauled by my woman. I reach the table, lower her onto it.

She clings to me. "Don't leave me," she mumbles between gusts of sobbing.

"Don't cry, Princess, please." I hold her close, wrap my arms around her. She doesn't let go, just buries her face in my chest and sobs. I try to pull back, and she only sobs louder.

"Babe," I mutter, "I just want to make sure that you're not hurt."

"You hurt me." She hiccups, "You ass, you broke my heart."

"I am so sorry, Cookie, I truly am."

"Huh?" She leans back in the circle of my arms. "Say that again."

"I am sorry?"

"No after that."

"I truly am?" I frown.

"No, you stupid goof, in between those two phrases."

"What did I say?" I blink.

"A word beginning with C?"

"Cunt?" I smirk.

She slaps my shoulder.

I wince. "Ouch, easy there, darling. I'm afraid he managed to get in a few hits as well."

"You'll survive," she grumbles. "Say it, you idiot, the nickname you just used."

"You mean Caramel?"

"No."

"Candy."

"Nooooo," she growls.

"Cherry pie?"

"You are such a tease." She digs her fingers in the shoulder of my hurt arm.

"Hey," I wince, "you're hurting me."

"Good," she huffs, "you deserve it."

"I do," I agree.

She blinks, "Wow, you're actually agreeing that you are a jerkface?"

"Yep."

"And a dickhead?"

"But I am your dickhead, darling Cookie."

"I like that name best." She sniffs, "Especially when you kiss me after saying it."

I survey the skin of throat, which seems unbroken, thank fuck.

"How dare that bastard threaten you with a knife." I trace my thumb over the pulse that flutters at the base of her throat. "When I get my hands on him —"

"You will not go after him," she scolds.

"I must," I reply. "He came after what belongs to me."

"Do I belong to you?" she asks.

"Of course, you do." I run my finger down the hollow between her breasts, around her nipples.

"What are you doing?" Her voice is breathless.

"Uh, taking care of you."

"He didn't hurt me there."

My vision tunnels, "Bastard touched you. I am going to kill him, I—"

She grips the 'V' of the shirt—my shirt, and tugs. The buttons pop and the shirt gapes to reveal the creamy curves of her breasts.

"What are you doing?" I stare at the curves, the nipples that she reveals when she shoves the shirt down her arms.

"Cookie," I breathe, take in the spread in front of my eyes. My throat closes. I stare at the blush that colors her gorgeous skin, her pink nipples that harden into plum-colored pebbles. I bend down, close my mouth around one, and tug. She moans. I bite down and she cries out. I suck on her sweet flesh and she sinks her fingers into my hair. I kiss one breast, then the other, straighten and peer into her face. "You're mine, Princess, my woman."

Her pupils dilate and her breathing grows shallow.

I pull away and she frowns, "Where are you going?"

"To lock the door to the apartment."

"No." She scissoring her legs around my waist. "Don't go." She grabs my arms. "Please." Her lips tremble, "Stay with me."

"You're safe, Cookie."

"Only as long as I am with you, Wes." She leans in, drags her tongue around my nipple. I groan. She bites down on the nub with her sharp teeth and I feel it all the way to my cock. My dick lengthens in my pants. The tent at my crotch stabs into her core, still covered by my shirt and her panties.

"Fuck," I growl, "I really should secure the place first."

"You really should check out how wet I am for you."

I reach down between her legs, push aside her panties, and my knuckles graze her melting core.

She pants and I groan, "You're mine, Amelie. Only mine."

I lower my zipper, grab my cock and position it at the entrance to her channel.

"Mine to make love to, to bring to climax over and over again, mine to claim." I kick my hips forward, thrust inside her moist channel. My balls slap against her inner thigh, pressure builds in my groin.

Then the doorbell rings.

49

Amelie

"Expecting someone?" He pulls out of me, the head of his fat dick poised at the entrance to my pussy.

I groan, dig my fingers into his tight flank. "Ignore it!" I plead.

His nostrils flare and the skin pulls tightly across his cheeks. "Sure you're not expecting any lovers? Anyone I need to know about?" He massages the curve of my hip.

I shiver. "You're the only one in my life, Doc," I moan.

"Damn fucking right." He pounds into me again, with such force the entire table shakes. The mixing bowl crashes to the ground, rolls, then comes to a stop.

In the silence that follows I can't stop the giggle that bursts from my throat.

"You think it's funny?" He frowns.

"No," I chuckle.

He pulls out, then sinks back into me. "Yes," I gasp, "yes, it is actually."

"Clearly, I am not doing this right, if you are thinking about something else other than how I am going to tear your pussy apart, how I am going to sink inside you so deep you'll feel like you are splitting in half."

He pumps his hips forward, rams into me, and his balls slap against my inner thigh. Oh, hell! A moan spills from my lips. I reach up, wind my arms around him... Well, as much as I can reach, that is. This man is so broad, I reach maybe halfway around his back.

"Wes." I pant... "Please."

"You're fucking killing me, Princess." He bends his knees, loops his arms under my knees, and pulls my legs up and over his shoulders.

Instantly, he slips deeper inside, the crown of his cock hitting that secret part of me—one I didn't even know existed until now. "Oh." I open and close my mouth. "Oh, my," I gasp.

"When I saw that motherfucker with his hands on you, my heart stopped." He growls, "I swear, if you do that to me again, I'll—"

"You'll?"

"I'll chain you to my bed and never let you go until I've fucked every hole in your body over and over again, until I've covered you under layers of apple pie and licked them all off of your skin, off every gorgeous curve, from between your legs, from the tops of your breasts, the slope of your butt, the turn of your ankles, the valley between your arse-cheeks. Then I'll fuck you until I take you to the edge, but I won't let you come. I'll start all over again, this time with chocolate, then cream, then work my way through every ingredient of your dessert repertoire."

"Oh." I blink. My pussy clenches around his dick.

"You like that, hmm?"

"I..." I gulp, "I..."

He smirks, "I am going to fuck you now."

I blink, stare up into those hard features—a flush smears his cheeks, those gray eyes are pools of desire, of lust, of everything I've always wanted and hoped for but never thought possible. I see myself reflected in them—him, me, us... Our future. "Wes," I groan, "don't stop, don't—"

He thrusts forward, impaling me. His shaft fills me, stretches me, his girth imprinting every ridge, every hard inch of him against every millimeter of my sensitive channel. Goosebumps flare on my skin, and pinpricks of pleasure and sparks of heat shoot out from the contact. He slams into me again and I cry out, throw my head back, hold onto him and wait, wait— He begins to fuck me with domination, with precision, with that complete self-assurance that is so Weston. "Oh, my God. Oh, my God. Oh, my God," I chant.

"That's me, baby." He pulls out. "Never forget."

He propels his hips forward, sinks into me, hitting that place inside again and I howl, "Wes, please. I'm, I'm going to—"

"Come with me, Princess," he growls, and I shatter. The climax screams over me, and I cry out again. He kisses me, absorbs the noise I make, as he continues to fuck in and out of me, before sinking into me once more. He tears his mouth from mine. "Look at me," he growls.

I force my eyes to open, meet his gaze as he spills himself inside of me with a grunt, his features contorted into an expression of dominance and ecstasy that is so very Wes. He leans his forehead against mine.

My eyelids flutter shut as I float down from the space he always takes me whenever we make love, where everything is golden and happy and peaceful, save for my heart that hammers. The blood pounds at my temples; it mirrors the thump-thump-thump in his chest.

There's more banging, then the sound of the door to the apartment being pulled open.

"You there, Amelie?" A woman's voice calls out.

I snap my eyes open, "Oh, hell—" I gasp, "It's—"

"Amelie!" The voice sounds closer, "Where are you? My flight got in earlier than expected, I'm—Oh... OH!" There's the sound of a startled exclamation, "Oh, I'm sorry."

I turn my head over my shoulder and heat flushes my face. "Julia," I exclaim.

"Ah..." My friend glances from me to Weston, then back at me, "Umm... I'm so sorry..." She averts her eyes, "Ah, my flight just got in... I came in straight from the airport...uh! Why don't I go get coffees for all of us? I'll be right back."

"Wait, Julia..." I shove at Weston who, of course, doesn't budge an inch.

"It's fine, don't worry." She turns away, waves her hand in the air, "It's all good, honest. I'll, uh, be right back." She scampers off.

I turn to Wes, "Let me go." I slap at his shoulder.

"No," he smirks, "in case you've forgotten, I'm still inside of you."

His dick pulses inside of me and I blink, "You're hard again? How's that possible, you just ah, came..."

"So?" He bends his knees and kisses me, "Merry fucking-Christmas, by the way."

"You can say that again." I throw my arms around him and kiss him back, "Please can we get dressed, before she returns?"

Ten minutes later, I watch him in the mirror in my bedroom. He'd jumped in the shower a few minutes ago, and now he shrugs into the shirt I'd rescued from the kitchen floor.

He does up the buttons—the one's that had survived when I had ripped it off earlier. Gah! Had I actually done that? Around him I seemed to turn into some kind of sex addict. But can you blame me? I stare at the gorgeous planes of his chest being hidden by the fabric. My throat dries. The pleasant ache between my legs intensifies. I'll never get enough of him, never.

He tugs on the lapel of his shirt. "I can keep this off, if you prefer." His lips curl.

"Not a chance." I close the gap between us, then stab my finger into his rock-hard abs, "I don't feel like sharing right now. Besides, this picture-perfect cut physique belongs to me, you get me?"

He chuckles, "My, my, how possessive you sound, little Red?"

"All the better to scratch you with." I drag my fingernail down the demarcation between his pecs. Why the hell can't I keep my hands off of him?

"I can't wait to see you in scrubs," I mutter.

"I am sure I can oblige." He smirks, "kinky doctor-patient games are my specialty."

"And here I thought it was food kink that got you off." I widen my gaze.

"When it comes to you, babe, everything I do takes on another dimension." He runs his big palm down the curve of my waist and slaps my butt.

"Whoa, whoa," I protest. "What's that for?"

"Keeping you warm." He massages my arse, then cups the other cheek with his free hand and squeezes. My sex instantly clenches. He drags me up on my tiptoes, and the tent in his crotch pokes me.

"You're hard," I mumble.

"You're soft." His grip on my backside tightens and my nipples instantly pucker. Moisture pools between my thighs. "This is not the time," I half protest. "Julia will be back any moment."

He groans, "I think I much prefer the cabin. At least, I could have you to myself there."

I chuckle, "I'll always remember it as the place where I walked in on you naked."

"If I had my way, you and I would be naked for a month, on an island in the middle of nowhere."

"Just as long as there is an oven where I can bake." I warn.

"I'd rather see you baking in the sun... Naked, of course."

I shake my head, "Don't you think of anything but sex?"

"Do you?" He chuckles.

"I think you're fast becoming my favorite dessert, Doc Kincaid," I reply.

"You know you are always mine." He laughs and his features light up. His hair is all mussed up, thanks to me—I'd clung to it, when he'd insisted on going down on me, one last time before he'd released me. Seriously, the man is insatiable. The soreness between my legs is testament to that—and the hickeys on my neck, the bitemarks on my breasts—which is why I am wearing this long-sleeved turtle-neck sweater and a fresh pair of jeans. I glance down at his bare feet, "Did you lose your shoes?"

"Gave them to the homeless guy outside the apartment building."

A warm feeling seizes my chest. "You did that?" I ask. "You gave the shoes you were wearing to someone who needed them?"

He raises his shoulders, then widens his stance. "Don't go reading anything into it," he mutters. "It seemed like the thing to do; no big deal."

I scan his features, "I don't know of too many people who'd do that, you know?"

He cracks his neck in a gesture I am beginning to recognize. He does it when he's embarrassed and trying to hide it.

"You're full of shit Dr. Kinky-as-hell-Caid," I say. "You try so hard to come across all dominant and hard-ass, but in reality, you're like... like..."

"Like?"

"A Jammie dodger."

"A Jammie dodger?"

I nod, "One of those cookies which is double-layered, and hard on the outside, but is filled with sweet gooey jam in the center."

"Hmm." His eyes gleam. "You can taste my jam any day, baby."

"Eeyugh," I make a gagging sound, "I left myself open to that, didn't I? Will I never learn?" I groan.

"It's too easy to tease you." He steps closer, "You're the jam to my cookie; the pumpkin to my pie, the chocolate in my toffee."

"Thought you hated chocolate?" I swallow.

He bridges the distance between us, draws me to him, "That's what I thought too." He searches my face, "But then I tasted you and—"

"And?" I whisper.

"I realized it was missing an ingredient."

"Which is?"

He lowers his face to mine. His breath mixes with mine, our eyelashes tangle, our feet bump, he parts his lips, and the doorbell rings again.

"It's Julia," I groan. "I have to get the door."

50

Weston

She twists her body. My grasp loosens and she pulls away, then pivots and scrambles for the door.

"You," I mutter to the empty room, "it was you that I missed."

Jesus, fuck, can you hear yourself? Did you just confess that you were incomplete without her? Was I? How much do I need her in my life? Could I go on without her? A future without her would be...bleak, dull, no patches of color, no scent of complex notes, no flavors that beckon and open up my senses. Without her... I am less than half the man I could be... I rub the back of my neck. What the fuck? What just happened? Why is my heart thumping? The blood pounds at my temples and my shoulder muscles knot.

Without her... There is no future... There is no me... Bloody hell. I rotate my head, dig my fingers into my hair and tug on it. I can't leave here without her, no way. I don't know what the future holds, but if I don't keep her close... I'll never have a chance of finding out either. As long as she is with me... I stand a chance, at having everything I didn't even know I had wanted... She makes me chuckle, lightens the load I've carried alone for so long. I want her by my side, in my house, in my bed. My ring on her finger, her hand in mine, her body writhing under me as I bury myself inside of her, as I try to tame her, hold her down and fuck her, as I open myself up to her and claim her. I am going to chain her to my side in a way that she'll never leave. I have to do it. Have to get her to see things my way. That her future is mine, that I am her future, that she is my... Everything.

The band around my chest tightens and a ball of emotions fills my throat. A pressure builds behind my eyes, fuck... This...this thing that tears me apart inside and twists my guts, that buries its weight in my stomach, knots my insides and coils in my chest...dries up my throat and hardens my balls. It has to be... It has to be...fucking love. I grab my hair and tug on it. I'd said it out loud earlier, but I'd shrugged it off as something you say in the heat of the moment. But this...this gasping for breath, this sensation of my heart having been scooped out of my body, this nervousness inside of me that grows and grows, even as a desperation tightens my skin, my shoulders, my spine... All of it points to the fact that I am a fucking goner. I am in love... Bloody fuck, I am... And there's nothing I can do about it. My heart begins to pound so hard against my rib cage, I am sure I must be having a cardiac... Except I know I am not... It's the emotional shock causing my palms to sweat. My thigh muscles bunch. I lower my hand, not surprised to find that my fingers are shaking. I stalk out of the bedroom into the tiny living room space.

She faces Julia, who offers her a coffee from the takeaway tray. "I don't want to impose," she mutters.

Amelie curls both of her palms around the paper cup. "It's no imposition," she says.

"No, it isn't," I agree.

Both women turn to me.

Amelie frowns.

Julia tilts her head. "We haven't met, I'm Julia," she says.

I walk forward, halt next to Amelie, "I'm Amelie's boyfriend." Yep, I am well and truly pussy whipped. Since when had my identity become secondary to my position in her life, eh?

Amelie draws in a breath.

Julia smiles. "Good to meet you, Amelie's boyfriend." She holds out the tray of coffee.

"Thank you." I accept one of the cups, swig from it. Damn, but why couldn't it contain a shot of whiskey, at the very least? I suck down more of the coffee.

"You two been dating long?" she asks.

"Yes," I reply.

"No." Amelie shoots me a glance, her gaze narrowed.

"Long enough for me to ask her to move in with me." I smile.

Julia looks between us. "Congratulations." She holds out a hand. Amelie ignores it.

"You... you..." She gapes at me.

"You're coming with me." I say simply.

"I'm not," she splutters, tries to pull away.

I tug her closer, tuck her into my side, and tiny thing that she is, she fits right there, plastered against me.

"Come on babe," I plead, "I can't leave you here, not after the break-in."

"Break in?" Julia exclaims.

"Yeah," I reply, without taking my gaze from Amelie's face. "Someone broke into the apartment earlier today."

"It...it was the same man who forced his way into my bakery." Amelie swallows.

"He was wearing a mask," I remind her. "How can you be sure?"

"I'm sure." She nods. "I... uh, recognized the scent of his cologne."

"You did, huh?" Something hot stabs at my chest. Whoa, what the fuck? Why the hell am I all twisted up inside because she smelled another man's aftershave? This is bloody ridiculous. "That settles it," I growl. "You're not staying here a second longer. You're coming with me."

Her gaze narrows, "I don't think so."

"Yes, you are," I snap.

Her features pinch and she sets her jaw. Fuck, I can't let her go all obstinate on me. Not that I don't mind whipping it out of her, but well, we have company—not that it would stop me, but Julia is her girlfriend, and the one thing I've learned from the rest of the Seven hooking up, is that, you did not show down your woman in front of her friends.

My woman. Mine. I draw her even closer.

She tilts her chin up, "What are you doing?"

"Convincing you." I lower my head, press my mouth to hers, keep the kiss soft, coaxing. I nibble on her lower lip, and when she gasps, I swipe my tongue inside her mouth, just a quick in and out, enough to remind her what is in store if she comes with me, enough to communicate that I need her, want her. A whine tumbles from her lips. My dick instantly lengthens. I tighten my hold on her shoulders, lessen the intensity of the kiss, pull back, brush her lips with mine one more time. "See, that's all settled."

"Oh." Her eyelids flutter, "Wes—"

"Don't say no." I peer into her face, "Come home with me."

She holds my gaze, her chin wobbles, then she nods. "Okay."

Okay! The breath I'd not been aware of holding wheezes out. What the bloody fuck? Had I been nervous as I'd waited for her reply? Had I actually given her a choice? And if she had refused? Would I have left...? No, I'd have parked myself here and ensured there was security around the clock. Not that I have anything against this flat... Except there is no telling if the intruder will be back. Besides, I want her in my space, in my bed. I have to be inside of her again.

I stare at her, and her pupils dilate. She licks her lower lip, and her breathing goes ragged.

"Right, get what you need," I say.

She turns, then gasps, "Oh, my God, Jules. I can't leave you here."

"What rubbish." Julia looks between us. "I'll be fine."

"No way, am I letting you stay here. What if the intruder returns?"

"I'll lock the door from the inside," she insists.

"It's not safe," Amelie shuffles her feet, "I don't feel comfortable leaving you here."

I frown. I can't allow her to stay on, but I don't want Julia to come with us either, not when I want Amelie to myself... No way, am I sharing her with anyone else... Not yet... Not for a while, which means... There is only one way out. "I have an idea."

51

Amelie

"Holy fuck." I stare out of the window at the view of Tower Bridge from the window of Weston's penthouse.

He'd informed me that I was on his guest list, so I could come and go as I please. Also, my fingerprints had been added to the fancy-ass security thingy on the front door to the apartment. So I had to simply touch my palm to the lock pad provided and—wowza!—the door would open to let me in. Oh, he'd let me try it and it had worked on the way in. Woo. That is some fancy shit. The kind of security only the seriously well off could afford.

Don't get me wrong, I knew he was loaded...and talented, and over-the-top dominant...but this... All this luxury that surrounds me... It's too much. When we were at the cabin, London had seemed so far away. It had been easy to forget about daily life, my debts, my growing business, the fact that he is so bloody out of my league. And at my apartment... Well, that had been my turf. I had felt more in control maybe... Which is a laugh, considering it has been broken into. It is also the place where he told me he loves me.

"Did you mean what you said?"

I hear the words and curse myself. Why the hell can't you filter your thoughts, bitch? Why is it so important to know what he feels for you? He wants me. He was taking no argument about leaving me behind at the apartment either. So, he lusts after my body... I mean, that's good, right? It's a start. The fact that he finds me attractive? Heat sears my back, then his big arm wraps me around my waist. He pulls me back and flush against his big chest. Instantly, I feel tiny and cherished and taken care of. Big mistake. He is going to lure me in, fuck me senseless, keep me in a sex-induced haze, and when I wake up from it, I will regret every little piece of me I had shared with him.

"Do you actually want to know the answer to your question?"

Of course, he knows what I was referring to... And yeah, I definitely want to know the answer.

"No."

I shake my head.

"Liar," He pulls me close so my back is plastered against his perfect chest. Heat from his body cocoons me, sinks into my blood.

My toes curl. My thighs clench. Get your mind out of the gutter, you slut. "Umm," I hesitate. "It was nice of you to have a security system put in my flat, and on such short notice."

Yeah, he'd made one phone call and in half an hour, his security consultant had arrived, armed with an array of devices. She'd checked out the place, then rigged it with enough alarms and sensors to satisfy his exacting demands. It had taken less than two hours from start to finish, during which time, Julia and Weston had gotten along well. I'd watched from the sidelines as he'd charmed her, put my friend at ease, so that by the time it was time to leave, she was completely convinced that this was the right move for me. Well, apparently, he saves that hard-headed, demanding alphahole side of his for me... Not that I am complaining. It is part of his appeal—I admit, that firm hand of his is a bloody turn on for me. If only I could always live in this sex-haze of a bubble, huh?

He wraps both of his arms around my shoulders, enveloping me in that gorgeous scent of his. "You're deflecting, babe." He bends to nibble on the shell of my ear.

I shiver.

"Didn't think you were such a coward." He blows in my ear, and I shiver. Bloody hell, with him, every part of me turns into an erogenous zone. Bet I've sprouted nerve endings where none existed before... All the better to sense you with, Mr. Wolf.

He spreads his fingers over my stomach. The width of his palm is so wide that the tip of his thumb brushes the underside of my breast. My nipple instantly pebbles. Stupid, stupid, that I am so responsive to him.

I pull away from him. Of course, he doesn't let me budge, not a millimeter. Against his strength, I am helpless. His force of will, his confidence... How is it possible that he always seems to know what he wants? Unlike me. My entire life is a two steps forward, one back kind of scenario. "Let me go," I mumble.

"Not a chance," he growls. The edge of his voice shivers down my spine, sinks into my center.

"Wes," I plead, "you're making this very hard."

"I'll make it simple." He releases me, only to flip me around. "Look at me."

I stare at his chest, the smattering of hair that peppers the dent between his perfect abs. We'd walked in and I had headed for the view and lost my composure. Now, when I lean in and press my nose into his skin and inhale, notes of sweetness mixed in with his darker scent fills my senses. "You smell like us," I whisper, draw in another breath, then bend and lick him. "You taste like honey and chocolate bomb overlaid with cinnamon and cloves and a dash of vanilla." Yum!

A groan rumbles up his chest.

"Woman you've got to stop comparing me to desserts."

"Oh?" I glance up at him, "Shall I compare thee to a summer's day instead?"

"Shakespeare?" He tilts his head.

I stare up at that perfect visage, that strong jaw, the mean upper lip that hints at the dominance inside that drew me to him...those thick eyebrows, the eyelashes that fringe his keen gaze. Everything about him is right, more than right. He is the complete package—he fits me; body, mind and soul, and damn it... This is all wrong. I can never have him, could never keep him. What do I have that could hold his attention? Why does he have to understand me so well? Tears knock against the back of my eyes.

"What's wrong?" He frowns.

"I don't belong here."

"You belong with me."

"I don't want you."

"You do."

"I can't do...this."

"What?"

"Whatever this is." I wave my hand in the air, "Playing house...or rather playing mansion—or whatever it is the other half calls it."

"Is that what you think this is?" He seems perplexed.

"Isn't it?"

"Maybe," he concedes. "Maybe not." He releases me, then steps back. He'd changed clothes, and now his tailored slacks mold his thighs and cling to that spectacular butt as he paces the floor in his Italian shoes—how many of them does he have in his closet, huh?

He drags his fingers through his hair, drawing my attention to how his biceps bulge against his button-down shirt. My mouth waters. Whoa down girl, haven't you feasted on his delectable body enough? And that's the problem. I'd prefer to lick his sculpted abs—and uh, other parts of him—over chocolate. Shit, I am so screwed.

"I am not sure what this is between us," he concedes.

"You're not?" I blink. The asshole is always bloody sure of himself. He rolls his shoulders now, then cracks his neck, then pivots to face me, with his eyebrows knitted into a look I can only describe as confusion. This is a first.

"I'm not," he confirms my suspicion. "When I walked in and realized you were in danger, when he held that knife to your neck, something changed."

"It did?"

"I thought I'd failed you. If something had happened to you, I could have never forgiven myself."

"You're not my keeper," I mutter. "I've taken care of myself for so long."

"And look where that has gotten you." He scowls.

"What?" I blink, "Did you just say what I think you did?"

"Look," He holds up his hands, "I'm not saying you haven't tried your best, but I could make things much easier for you with my money, my contacts."

I swallow and something hot stabs at my chest. My throat closes and my eyes burn. Why the hell had I thought anything had changed? Because he'd chased that goddam burglar from my apartment? No, hold on, I'd played a part in that too. Because he'd ensured that my friend would be safe in my apartment? That was because he wanted me close, where he could keep an eye on me, take care of me, control me. That's what this is about.

He wants me here so I can be his little fuck toy. He'd have his way with me... Oh, yeah, I'd enjoy every second of it too.. And then what? He'd throw me away? Well, he'd have paid me for my time...

And I don't want it. I'd rather live in debt for the rest of my life, than be obligated to him.

Not that it wasn't part of the arrangement. I mean, I'd gone into it with my eyes open, not realizing I was giving him what he needed—a way to manipulate me.

Whatever the future might hold for us, whatever there could be between us... As long as the money stands between us...the money I had accepted...it would always be a relationship which would be measured, a connection which had a number attached to it... It's too finite. Too tangible. Too...restrictive. Something that goes against how I had lived my life, the future I wanted for myself. I want him, all right, but not at the cost of my self-respect.

If I stay, and accept the money, and allow him to treat me like one of his other women, someone whose bond is tainted by the materialistic aspects of life... We don't stand a chance. Not the way I want.

"This...is all wrong," I say.

He closes the distance between us, "I don't agree."

"I don't want your money."

He stares, "Excuse me?"

"I don't like how it makes everything too easy."

"Are you kidding me?" He scowls. "That's what it is meant for—to pave the way, to achieve dreams, to help you get what you want."

"I can do it on my own." I tip up my chin. "I will achieve my goals, on my own merit."

"What are you saying?" He glowers, "You're not making any sense to me."

"For the first time since I met you, I am making sense to myself."

His gaze widens, "So you admit that I affect you?"

I throw up my hands, "That has never been in dispute. I mean, come on, it's clear we can't keep our hands off of each other. Put us in a room and we'll end up in bed. Hell, I hear your voice on the phone and I'm wet."

"You are, huh?" He smirks and his shoulder muscles seem to broaden.

"OMG!" I slap my forehead, "Of course, you'd choose to focus on the more obvious. Of everything I said, is that the only thing you heard?"

"You want me; I want you. We're good together." He raises his shoulders, "What else is there?"

"Everything." I swallow, "And nothing." I peer into his face, "After all that we've been through, you still don't get it, do you?"

"Is this about the money?" He scowls, "Because if that's the case, I'll double what I am paying you."

"Money?" A chill spreads across my skin. "You think it's about the money?"

"I'll triple it."

"Triple?" I stare, "You'll triple the money?" Is he for real? Isn't he hearing anything I am trying to communicate to him? And I thought he got me?

"That's eighteen million pounds in your bank account on New Year's Day."

I cough. That's a bloody hell of a lot of money. I'd never see that in this lifetime, for sure. If I accepted it, I'd never be able to live with myself. I'd hate myself every day for the rest of my life. Besides, what's the difference between one million and eighteen million, huh? Other than the zeroes? That's the thing with money. The more you have of it, the less it does for you. Nope, I may have been blinded by what the money could have done for me—could still do for me, but not anymore.

"I'll throw in this penthouse," he growls. "Hell, say the word and I'll sign it over to you."

I open my mouth, then purse my lips together, "Good bye, Weston."

I brush past him, spot my suitcases by the door of the living room. He'd had his driver deliver my suitcases to this address. Sneaky bastard had planned it all along... How did I miss it? How come I didn't see through him? I was an acquisition for him. A possession. Hell, he even dropped the 'L' word in the height of passion, hoping it would convince me to give in to him. Well, fuck him, and his money and his bloody view—which is spectacular, I've never seen that view of London in real life before and will probably never do so again. Tears prick the backs of my eyes. Get out before you bawl your eyes out over that ass.

I ignore my luggage; it will only delay me, and I don't want that. I have Peter's contact details; I'll ask him to deliver it home. I'm sure Weston won't stop him, will he? I hesitate. Too bad. I'll have to risk it then. I am not stopping here for one second more. I grab my chef's satchel from the coffee table, tuck my handbag into my side, then head for the door.

"Don't you want to check out the kitchen?" He calls out.

I pause. "What?"

"The kitchen," he says, "it's to your right."

I stare straight ahead. Focus my gaze on the double doors to this blasted, beautiful penthouse. Get out of here, get out of here. I take a step forward.

"It has a never-before-used double oven that you have to see."

"It does?"

"You bet." He walks past me, heads toward what I assume is the kitchen.

"And all the ingredients you'd need to bake apple pies..."

I swallow.

"Macaroons," he drawls.

I tighten my grip on my bag.

"Triple chocolate cake," he adds.

I turn to him, "Nothing I can't do in my kitchen."

"With this view?" He jerks his chin toward the kitchen, "Not to mention, the complete range of baking tools that you'll need to whip up your specialties."

"You know how I feel about your flaunting your wealth in my face, right?"

"Who said anything about money? This is simply a fully-equipped kitchen, crying out for the right chef to inaugurate it and give it purpose."

I frown. How the hell does he know exactly how to get to me? I mean, his words... They are like coffee in the morning, like oats for granola bars, like custard for fruit salad, argh! Stop it...your comparisons suck. Besides, I don't plan to stay. I'll take a peek, check out the kitchen... I mean, it's only a few minutes more, right?

Weston

She glances at the big-ass oven—the sleek, professional one, perfect for a baker to use at home, the one I'd had installed yesterday... Whew! She hates my money, but fuck, if it doesn't have its advantages. I've never given the money a second thought, to be fair. Perhaps, it's what comes from being born into wealth... And my career as a heart surgeon? Let's just say, it pays well. And I had invested with the Seven. We had chosen our ventures carefully, especially FOK media which had been a passion project and an investment, which is already paying dividends. So, fuck if I am going to apologize for the money that was mine by birth and which I had helped multiply through my hard work. I get where she's coming from though. She wants to strike out on her own... And I am not stopping her. I'm simply removing obstacles from her way, giving her the best chance of success. Doesn't she realize that? Why can't she accept the fact that everything that is mine is hers? If I could serve up the world on a platter to her, I'd do it. I stiffen. Do I think that? All that emo shit that I'd been sure was not for me...? Clearly, I'm rolling in that shit, thanks to Ms. Chocolate Cookie... Hell, I've even accepted the presence of chocolate in my life, and Christmas, and all that shit that has never mattered before? I want it all...with her. That's it. I need help—need to figure out how to solve this conundrum that I have worked myself into.

I pull out my phone, pace the floor of my bedroom, as I dial Damian's number.

"Motherfucker!" he says as his greeting.

"Merry fucking Christmas to you too, asshole," I reply.

"Yeah, yeah, same to you with knobs on." He yawns, "What are you doing on the phone with me? I thought you'd be shacked up with your bride in the penthouse."

"Jesus, I'm not married man. Far from it."

"Why aren't you?"

"What the fuck are you talking about?"

"Straight question, man." He yawns again. "Why don't you put a ring on her finger, put the two of you out of your misery, and let the rest of us get some sleep, huh?"

"Whoa, whoa." I cough. "You're not mincing any words here. What's up? You got a woman there you're eager to get back to?"

"What do you think?" He chuckles.

Yeah, he's with someone.

"Look I need your advice," I mutter.

"I gave it to you already. Don't expect me to make your decisions for you."

"Christ," I mutter, "what's prompted this level of candidness."

"Maybe it's the Christmas spirit, bro." I hear him move around. "Maybe I am tired of watching you screw up over and over again." His footsteps thud on the wooden floor, then the rustle of clothes reaches me. "Hold on." I hear the sound of muffled voices, then he comes back on the call. "So, where were we?"

"You sent her away, huh?" I ask.

"Bros before hoes and all that..." he replies, "Also, she's not the one, so..." I sense him raise his shoulders.

"How do you know that she isn't?"

"When you know, you know," he says, "and you do know, you just don't want to accept it."

"You're full of platitudes," I grumble.

"And you're full of shit," he retorts. "Why the hell don't you have a conversation with her?"

"I've tried, believe me."

"Have you, though?"

"What?"

"Told her how you feel. Have you done that?"

"I told her I love her."

There's silence, then he says, "How did you say it?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean, did you say it like you meant it?"

"Of course," I think... "only she didn't say it back."

"She didn't?"

"Nope." I begin to pace, "Maybe she doesn't feel the same way. I mean, I'm not the easiest when it comes to matters of the heart."

He bursts out laughing, "Says the heart surgeon."

"Har, har." I continue, "It's because I am so intimately conversant with that particular organ that I am wary of it."

"Have you thought of the possibility that maybe she doesn't love you?"

"What do you think, I'm stupid?"

"Do I need to answer that question?"

"Don't bother." My stomach ties itself in knots. "She probably doesn't, man, and that's fine. Perhaps in time, she'll develop feelings for me."

"Who are you and what have you done to Dr Asshole Kincaid?"

Heat flushes my neck, "Fuck off, man. If you have something to say, say it."

"You're pussy-whipped."

"You have no idea." I squeeze the bridge of my nose, "It's why I offered to triple the money I'd agreed to pay her—"

"What?" he explodes. "You did what?"

"You heard me," I mumble. A hollow feeling coils in my chest. I squeeze the bridge of my nose, "Fuck, I shouldn't have done that, huh?"

"The opposite, man. You need to take the money out of the equation."

"What do you mean?"

"Change the tone of the relationship."

"How?"

"Replace it with something...that means more to you than money... Offer that up to her... Something that you'd never have imagined giving to anyone else, or giving up for someone else." He pauses, "It could also be something that's ingrained in you... perhaps a habit which you'd change for her?"

I blink. "That...that's profound, bro."

"Sometimes I surprise myself." He laughs. "It's easier to be objective when it comes to other's problems, know what I mean?"

"Yeah," I blow out a breath. "I have to do this, right?"

"You bet," he replies, "it's time you left behind the boy who was kidnapped for good."

"Q: What do you call a lamb covered in chocolate?

A: Candy Baa."

-From Amelie's diary

Amelie

I slide the tray of chocolate cookies out of the oven. Yeah, I've been here for a half hour already. What can I say? I'm a sucker. And it doesn't take me much time to mix up the cookie batter. Not when all of the ingredients, and more, are available... And the oven...? Whoa!

I rake my gaze over the sparkling steel surface of the top of the range oven... The man has his faults, but he hadn't compromised when it came to the kitchen. I turn to glance out of the window; the evening light of the city pours in through the large panes. I can see the Thames and the bridge. OMG, Tower Bridge gleams as it picks up the rays from the setting sun. The entire scene is almost surreal, and beautiful, and completely not what I am used to.

But you could...you could stay here, bake in this kitchen every day, sleep in his bed every night, have him fuck you and bring you to orgasm. Hell, bet he'd even proclaim his love again and probably mean it this time... You could have everything you've dreamed of... So why the hell are you holding out? That fucking independent spirit of mine... Why the hell do I have to be this adamant?

It had seemed all right to take his money earlier... But that was before I realized I want more, want him to want me for who I am. A cakehead, who has to figure out things her own way, without help or interference... At least, he'd left me alone to get on with the baking. Where is he anyway? Why hasn't he checked in on me yet?

I place the cookies on the cooling trays I'd found.

I had been on the verge of leaving and he'd managed to stall me. Clever man—he knows me too well. I smile at the thought, until I realize it's not true. If he really knew me, he'd know what I want from him. He wouldn't be trying to buy me. Suddenly, I want to cry. I need to get out of here.

I walk toward the door, then pause. I wonder what else he has in this big-ass place? Should I explore? Shouldn't I leave instead? I pause... But the cookies. Okay, I'll stay until the cookies have cooled.

I set the alarm on my phone, pocket it, then creep out of the kitchen. I head for the living room; he's not there. Turn and walk into the next room. It's a playroom, filled with toys. Bet Phe spends a lot of time in here.

I walk into the next room—a study filled with books where an eleven-year-old pre-teen would love to spend time. Yep, this is Skye's. I guess his family comes over to visit often. Does he babysit his nieces? Of course, he does.

I head into the adjacent room. The scent of cigar smoke and something else—his scent, those heavy testosterone notes tease my nostrils. This is his space, a study, more of a man-cave, complete with volumes of medical journals on the shelves.

I peruse the titles, glance down. Huh? He has an entire shelf filled with the Harry Potter books. So, he liked to read them for pleasure? Aww. A warmth trickles through my chest. I stiffen. No, you cannot allow yourself to soften. Damn it, maybe this hadn't been such a good idea.

I'd hoped to find something that would incriminate him, allow me to nurture my need to have a low opinion of him. Instead, all signs confirm that this is a man who loves his family, who has the kind of quirks I enjoy. And yeah, he is a surgeon, and he does save lives. I hunch my shoulders. The man is bloody complex and too attractive, and I don't stand a chance. This had been a bad idea. Speaking of, where the hell is the Doc? Had he been so confident that I would stay, that he'd left? Had he done it to give me some down time? To cool off maybe, and come to my senses? Typical male manipulation. I huff. He knew if he left me alone in his space, I'd investigate it. I reach the doors to his bedroom, hesitate. Go on, do it. A quick peek, that's all it is.

I shove open the doors, enter a room which I swear is as big as my apartment. My feet sink into the carpet that stretches out toward a massive king-sized bed in the center. To one side, sliding doors open onto a terrace, beyond which is the inevitable spectacular view of Tower Bridge. And at the far end? That has to be a walk-in closet. I march toward it, push open the doors and peek in. It's filled with an array of his pants, shirts, ties, suits, scrubs, his designer shoes. No watches, of course. I know, now, why he doesn't keep those accessories. Also, one entire side of the closet is cleared out. For what? Did someone else just move out? Or had he been so sure that I'd move in with him? Presumptuous, much?

As I near the kitchen, the scent of freshly baked cookies teases my nostrils. My mouth waters and my belly grumbles. I hasten my pace, head for the oven. Ha, life's so much better when you have cookies in your hand. And really, I should have left, but procrastibaking is my specialty. You know, when you have a million things to do, but you put it on the back burner and prefer to bake? I snort, then brush my hand over the apron that I'd pulled on. It's a designer piece, that much I can tell. Who makes designer aprons? More to the point, who buys them? Weston fucking Kincaid does, that's who.

I lean over the cookies, inhale the heady perfume. OMG, almost as good as fucking... Well, that's what I used to think. Then I'd met Weston and okay...baking is my second favorite pasttime now, the first being, riding his monster dick, licking the frosting off of his penis... Stop, stop. Enough already. Change of topic, focus on something else. I reach for a cookie and bring it to my mouth.

"Is that for me?"

His voice sounds so close, I squeak. The cookie slips from my fingers. He swoops down catches it.

"Good save," I mutter as he straightens and turns to me.

He glances at the piece of cookie in between his fingers, then raises it and holds it to my lips.

"Open." His gaze is fixed on my face. He peruses my features, searching... searching for... What? My compliance? That I'll throw myself at his feet and ask him to fuck me? That I'll reveal my feelings? Tell him how I've fallen for him, that I want a future with him? Have I allowed him to distract me because I don't want to leave? Because I already miss him—his large body that pins me down and allows me to be weak... Secure in the knowledge that he'll catch me. He'll take care of me... I know that...but I want more. I part my lips and he pops the cookie in. I bite down. The soft texture melts in my mouth. I lick my lips. He lowers his gaze to my mouth, watches me with that intensity that's so Weston. I chew, swallow, open my mouth. He feeds me more of the cookie. I chew, swallow again. This time, his breath catches. The tendons of his throat move, his shoulders bunch. "Amelie," his voice is harsh and soft at the same time.

"Don't." I should turn away. This is where I walk away and never look back. Write off the past few days, count this Christmas as a lost cause, then go home to my apartment—now secure, thanks to him—and bake until I can't see straight. Then swallow down enough wine that I don't remember much of the immediate future. Go through the motions in life... Move on... Pick myself up again and plod forward, one freaking step at a time.

He holds up the last piece of the cookie.

I shake my head, "You have it."

He glances at it then pops it into his mouth. He chews on it and that's when it sinks in.

"It has chocolate," I mutter.

He raises his shoulders, "So?"

"Thought you didn't like it?"

"Told you I was coming around to it." He bends his knees and peers into my face, "In fact, it's fast becoming my second favorite dessert to eat."

My heart stutters. One stupid bit of praise from him and my heart literally seems to melt, like the chocolate in those stupid cookies.

Don't ask him. Don't.

"What's the first?" I mumble.

"What do you think?" His lips curve.

My cheeks heat. My belly flutters. Don't blush. Don't let him see how much that compliment pleases me. I swipe my hair over my shoulder. "Don't think that you can get back in my good graces by praising my cooking."

"Baking" he corrects me.

"Right." I drag my fingers through my hair. Why the hell do I get the feeling that everything is out of my control, right now? "It's time I left."

I brush past him.

"Stop," he calls out, then softly adds, "Don't leave, Cookie."

I hunch my shoulders, keep my gaze trained on the door. You don't want this, don't want him like this. You are a big girl; you can move forward on your own. You don't need any alphahole to jerk you around and think he can buy you with money.

"Princess," his coaxing voice follows me, "I'll let you take the lead."

Weston

What the fuck? Did I actually say that? And I meant it, too. Anything to make her stay.

Why can't you tell her how much she means to you? Well, I am about to show her that. And isn't showing better than telling, and all that fucking emo stuff that women believe in?

She pauses at the door, hesitates.

"I mean it." I keep my voice firm. "You can do what you want with me, and I won't stop you. I'll let you take the lead in bed."

She turns to glance at me, "You will?"

"Yep." I jerk my chin.

"Right now?"

"The deal's valid for the next ten seconds."

"Deal, huh?" She frowns.

Fuck, seems I can't change my vocabulary that easily. Go on, you can do this, for her sake. Tone it down, asshole. Keep it easy; don't show how much you need her to retrace her steps, and return to you. And once she does... I'm never letting her go. I am going to find a way to tie her to me. Yep, I have to. Don't fuck this up! I loosen my shoulders, force my muscles to relax. "Okay, not a deal then, an open invitation."

"Invitation?" She chews on her lower lip. Damn her, why does she have to seem so enticing? I force my attention off of my throbbing groin, narrow my gaze on her.

"Anything you need, babe." I hold up my hands in what I hope comes across as an unthreatening gesture, "You name it, you can have it."

She frowns, "What's the catch?"

"No catch."

"I don't believe it."

"Better believe it." I allow my lips to curve.

She stares at my face.

"What?"

"Did you actually smile without smirking?"

"I don't smirk..." I protest.

She arches an eyebrow.

"Okay, maybe sometimes," I concede.

"All the time," she grumbles. "I've never known you not to smirk, not that it isn't hot in a mean kind of way—"

"Aha, so you do find it hot?" My mouth curls.

"I rest my case," she snaps.

Bloody fuck, what the hell does she want me to do? Change my personality overnight? It's taken thirty-three odd years to cultivate this dickface persona. But for her... I'd give that up too... Only with her, that is. To the rest of the world, I'd still be the asshole surgeon with the bad attitude... But for her... I'd do anything.

Does that include letting go of control...for a tiny window in time...allowing her to have her way with me? My balls tighten; my skin crawls. Giving up choice? Not something I'd ever imagined doing...not before her. Only for her.

She is my woman and she'll get her satisfaction when, where and how she needs it. Everyone else will deal...and that includes me. Fuck. I wipe the smile off my face. "Better?"

She raises her shoulders. "Maybe," she takes another step forward, "maybe not."

"I know something that will make it better." I begin to smirk again.

She scowls.

I grimace, school all expression from my face. Best to keep my mouth shut, lock my muscles, dig my feet into the floor. I stay still... Wait... Wait for her to come to me, to tip her head back and meet my gaze.

"Anything, huh?" She drags a finger down my chest, down to my waistband, in the direction of where my cock tents the crotch of my pants.

Blood rush to my groin; pinpricks of heat follow in the path of her touch. "Anything," I growl.

She unbuckles my belt, and my dick thrusts against its restraints. Fuck, at this rate, I am going to come in my pants and she's barely touched me yet. My fingers tingle. I raise my hand.

She glances at it, then at me, "You promised," she reminds me.

I curl my fingers into a fist, then raise my hands and lock them behind my neck, "Indeed." I keep my gaze trained on her face.

Her pupils dilate and color pinks her cheeks. She lowers the zipper, then shoves my pants and my boxers down in one sweep.

The breath catches in my chest as I kick aside my clothes.

She reaches down and winds her fingers around my throbbing dick. My groin hardens, my balls tighten, and I grip my hands together. Don't release them. Don't reach for her. Don't push her down onto her knees. Don't ask her to take you inside that gorgeous mouth and don't ask her to suck you off... Don't. She reaches for her shirt and whips it off.

I stare. "What are you doing?"

"What do you think?" She pulls off her bra, then shoves off her boots, and wriggles out of her jeans and panties. Her full tits jiggle as she straightens. She runs her hand down her stomach, to where her pink pussy glistens. She strums her lower lips and my cock jumps in response.

"Huh?" She stares down at her crotch, then drags her fingers up to the swollen bud of her clit. My dick lengthens, I bunch my shoulders, and my balls grow impossibly hard.

"Jesus," I snarl.

"You shouldn't swear using his name on Christmas Day."

"If you don't get on with what you have in mind, I am going to—"

"Going to?" She flutters her eyelashes, "What will you do?"

I narrow my gaze. Why that sassy, little sex kitten. Apparently, giving Princess Buttercup a long leash means she thinks she can run away with it, huh? I glare at her. She pales, but doesn't break the eye contact. "Well," she asks, "shall I continue?"

"Do it," I growl.

"Hmm." She pushes a finger into her cheek, "You don't seem like you're having a good time."

"Doesn't matter." I dig my fingers into the palm of my hand, draw in a breath, count down the time.

Twelve o'clock.

Eleven o'clock.

Ten—

"What are you doing?" she frowns.

"Counting down the time in my mind.

"Why would you do that?"

"It's a technique that helps me find equilibrium."

"And yet clocks trigger you?"

"They used to."

"But not anymore?" She nods, "You didn't flinch when the egg timer rang in my kitchen."

"I may have been too busy saving someone's arse to notice." I mutter.

"You mean someone's gorgeous arse, right?" She wrinkles her nose at me. Fucking adorable. My heart stutters... It bloody stutters. Damian was right, I am pussy-whipped... And I want to whip her pussy too, every chance I get.

"Someone's curvy, beautiful, egg-shaped bottom, to be precise," I reply.

"My butt isn't egg-shaped."

"Wanna bet?" I drawl. "It's as smooth, and as curvy as that blasted egg timer you have—which, by the way, is a hideous piece of kitchenware, with no aesthetic sense."

"Are you saying my butt is ugly?"

"You are not butt-ugly, no," I clarify. "But if you don't get on with your seduction routine—I promise the marks I'll leave on your backside will not be pretty."

"You promised that I could lead," she scoffs.

"But you're not," I snap. "You're talking your mouth off, when you could be putting said orifice to much better use."

She throws up her hands, "Are you going to let me do this my way or not?"

"Fine, fine." I crack my neck. "What fucking ever. Take your time, dawdle, say whatever comes into your mind, while I suffer in silence."

"Hardly suffering and it's not like you've stopped speaking either."

True. I scowl, "You seem to bring out the worst in me, Buttercup."

"As do you." She chuckles, then glances around her before heading to the refrigerator. She pulls out a bottle of milk, then shuts the door and walks toward me.

"Anything, huh?" She asks.

I glance at the white liquid in the bottle, then up to her face, "Anything."
She holds up the bottle, tilts it over my chest.

Amelie

What the hell am I doing? I should have left an hour ago. Yet, here I am—first seduced by his kitchen, and now, by the man himself, who stands in front of me, naked as the day he was born, cock thrust up and out at me. OMFG, his dick... I've seen it up close, I've had it down my throat, inside my pussy, my asshole... And yet, I swear as the milk pours down his chest, pools in the nest of hair at his groin, and drips down from his balls... I've never seen something this... erotic. This hot. This...gorgeous...almost as orgasmic as the sight of a triple chocolate cake lathered in freshly whipped cream.

A moan wells up my throat and my breathing goes ragged. I empty the rest of the milk on him, place the bottle on the island, then lean in and trace a path between the demarcation of his pecs, down his concave stomach. I dip my tongue inside his belly button; his abs ripple. Holy fuck. This... This is too much fun. The way his body responds to my touch? Wow... That's power. All six-feet four-inches of alpha hunk, at my mercy. Mine to do with as I want. Mine to tease, mine to hold and squeeze. Mine to climb up and wrap myself around him, if I want.

I bring my palm up and weigh his balls; a groan rips out of him. Every muscle in his body solidifies. I drag my tongue along the hair that arrows down to his shaft. His dick jumps and his thigh muscles spasm. I circle around to the underside then trace the path to its logical end, the tip of his dick. I close my mouth around him and he swears, "Fucking fuck, you're killing me, Princess."

I haven't even started.

I straighten, then turn and march back to the refrigerator. The hair on the back of my neck rises, and I know he's stalking me, watching my every move, waiting for me to push him to the edge, and I will...but first, I want to have some fun. He'd teased me and taunted me and I am going to return the favor.

I pull open the refrigerator. Oh, yeah! I straighten, pivot with the bowl of Jell-o—who'd made it? A housekeeper? Does he have a housekeeper? Of course he does. He's rich, remember? Filthy rich. Well, fuck that. I'm rich too, when it comes to talent. I can bake like a goddess and I can tease like a slut.

I bump my hip against the refrigerator door to shut it, then run a finger around the rim of the bowl. His gaze narrows and his nostrils flare. He glances at the quivering gelatin, then up at my face. He tilts his head, a warning look in his eyes. A shiver runs down my spine. Oh, he's going to get back at me for this, I'm sure... But whatever... I'm not going to stop, not when I am having so much fun. I amble over to him, wriggle my hips when I stop in front of him. His chest rises and falls. I dip a couple of fingers into the gelatin, scoop some of it out, and hold it up to his mouth. "Open," I command.

"Lick or suck, Princess?" he growls.

"Whatever you please," I breathe. A bead of sweat runs down his temple. Moisture beads my upper lip. Hell, is the heating on in here, or what? He lowers his head, closes his mouth around my fingertips. I feel the tug all the way down to my cunt. A moan spills from my lips. His mouth curves, he licks his tongue about my fingertips, swallows, then nips on my fingers. Moisture oozes between my legs. Oh, shit. I'm as turned on as he is. This was supposed to be his punishment... Ha! How stupid of me. The only person who will come out at the losing end of this bargain is me. I turn, place the bowl of Jell-o on the island, then grab my panties and pull them on.

"What are you doing?"

I don't reply, shrug into my jeans, find my bra and pull it on.

"Princess?"

"Shut up," I mutter, "I know what you're doing."

"Oh?"

I nod. "You're trying to lure me into staying."

"Am I?" he growls.

I snatch up my blouse, shrug into it. "Yes, you are." Tears knock at the back of my eyes, and honestly... I don't know why. I mean, why the hell should I feel like the entire world is ending? I could stay; he wants me to stay... But that would be empty, wouldn't it? I'd still be only a possession to him, something he had bought.

"Amelie, talk to me." He frowns. "What the hell is going on in that pretty head of yours?"

"Nothing, asshole." I toss my hair over my shoulders. "You can take your...your penthouse and fancy kitchen and oven, and all your privileged-as-hell shit, and stuff it where the sun don't shine."

"Princess..." he takes a step forward; I hold up my hand.

"Don't you dare," I snarl. "Don't you fucking say anything. Don't try to stop me. At least this once, would you stick to your word, and stay right there, until I am gone? This once, can you allow me to leave with a modicum of self-respect?"

He stares at me, his features wearing an expression of frustration. "Amelie, please."

I flip him my middle finger, then grab my phone, snatch up my chef's satchel and my hand bag from where I had placed them on the kitchen island and march out.

I squeeze my eyes shut. The woman I love walked out. I hadn't had the balls to tell her how much I cared for her; all I'd been worried about was emptying said balls into her. I lower my arms to my sides.

I should have stopped her; should have hauled her over my shoulder and marched into the bedroom, where I'd have thrown her on her back and thrust into her, kept her pinned down until she forgot all about leaving me... About the money, and her business and my bloody ego, which, as per usual, stood in the way. Jesus, couldn't I have said something...anything to stop her from leaving?

Woulda. Coulda. Shoulda. Since when had I begun to over-analyze my reactions, huh? Gone are the days when I'd forge ahead, not caring who I offended. Hell, I had never cared about how my actions affected those around me.

Apparently, she affects me in more ways than I care to admit. Not the least of which is how my groin knots, my cock thickening as I yearn to be inside of her. I grab my shaft and squeeze, swipe it from root to head with practiced skill. Only, it's not doing it for me at all. I need something more, something warmer, moister, something that would clasp me the way her cunt had when I had thrust into her and taken her.

I glance around, take in the empty milk bottle, the bowl of Jell-o—my cock jerks, bombarded by images of how she'd scooped up the gelatin and offered it to me, her lips parted, tongue caught in concentration between her teeth.

The princess had challenged me. Me. The alphahole who has never allowed any woman to take the lead... I'd handed it to her, and she had left me. I hunch my shoulders, reach for the Jell-o, scoop up some from the center. Hmm, this has possibilities, huh? Except... I tilt my head. The damn Jell-o is too bouncy and it's bound to fall apart. No, I need something else. I plop the Jell-o back, glance around, and spot the basket of fruits in the center of the island... Hmm... I reach for a peach, glare at it. Apparently, doing it to the apple pie had not been enough. Here I am, searching for more substitutes for her pussy. The last time, I'd resorted to such desperate measures, I'd been...fifteen? And horny as fuck. Nothing has changed...

Except, now I know how it feels to make love to my woman. Jesus, the fuck is wrong with me? Getting sappy and sentimental over her? Thankfully, I still have my balls... Time I put them to good use, huh? I stare at the peach, what if I were to scoop out some of the pulp in the center along with the stone? Hmm... This won't do at all... One more thing that has changed since I was fifteen... My bloody cock is twice the size it had been... Okay, three times if you measure the length of the hardon that I'm sporting. Fuck.

I toss the peach aside, reach for the watermelon. Desperate times and all that... I glare at it, pump my cock again. Am I going to do this? Fuck a bloody watermelon? Would it be cheating on her if I did? A fruit is an inanimate object, right? As in, it doesn't have feelings, in the technical sense of the word, so it can't reciprocate sentiments... So, it does not constitute being unfaithful if I stick my dick in it, does it? I frown down at the offending fruit, massage its curved circumference. It's smooth...too smooth... Too cold... Nothing like the living flesh of her butt, the slight indentation of the dimple in the center of one arsecheek, that I had caressed before I'd cupped her backside and squeezed, then hauled her up so she could wind those gorgeous legs around my waist, before I'd pushed her up against the nearest hard surface and—

Fuck. Stop this line of thinking, you prick. It should be her heart you're focusing on. Her needs. The fact that she had thrown my money back at me... Hell, no one had done that before. But she isn't like anyone else I've ever encountered. Amelie...with her sass and her wit, and her habit of swearing by using names of desserts. Jesus, she is more delectable than any creation I've ever sampled. And I had let her leave. Again... I...

If I had stopped her, she'd have never forgiven me. She'd pleaded with me to let her leave...and I had... I'd stood there and watched her flounce out. What do they say? Something about, if you love someone let them go. If they return, they belong to you... And if they don't...?

Fuck that. No way, am I going to stand around here while she...figures out her feelings... I take a step forward, then stop. Wow, even my thoughts are dismissive of her feelings. And if I go after her...? I'd coerce her, bulldoze over her feelings, her choices... Hell, I'd ensure that she comes around to my way of thinking...and that... Fuck... This is not the time for my alphaholish, caveman-ish behavior. I mean, that's what I am. No excuses but... I hadn't become a surgeon without knowing when it was time to pull back.

I can't lose her.

I have to be strategic.

Have to trust...hope that she'll come back. And she will. She has to. I snatch up my phone from the corner of the island, dial my banker's number. When he comes on the line, I tell him to cease all further payments to her accounts. I am not surprised when he informs me that the money I'd sent through earlier had been returned electronically by her already. Yeah... Buttercup knows how to get a move on me.

I toss my phone aside, roll my shoulders. She'll return to me; she has to. The connection between us is too strong. She wouldn't ignore it... Would she? Nah! She'll get my message, get what I've been trying to communicate to her... Which is...that I can't live without her. She'll figure it out. She is smart, switched on. The love of my life has a razor-sharp mind. Surely, she'll glean what I was trying to communicate with her. Meanwhile... I glance toward the liquor cabinet. Only one thing a man can do when forced to bide his time. I stalk toward the bar, grab a bottle of whiskey and twist it open. I raise it to my lips.

Amelie

*"Past pleasure doubles present pain,
To sorrow adds regret,
Regret and hope are both in vain,
I ask but to — forget."*

I take in the words scrawled on the board held by the homeless man. I'd ridden the elevator down, and walked out of the apartment building.

Every step I'd taken had echoed the thumping of my heart. I am doing this. Really doing this. I am leaving him. Good thing I had gone online and returned the money already. A few days ago, I'd checked my bank account and the zeroes in my account had brought home exactly how much I stood to gain from this relationship. I could pay off my debts, expand my business, ensure my parents are taken care of for the rest of their lives... And he'd always take me for granted. He'd known that I could be bought. Next time we came to an impasse... He'd know how to get his way. Throw more money my way...

And no, it's not only the money that binds us. There is so much more—emotions and conflicts and a buzzing physical attraction that shows no sign of abating. There is so much there to build on... But the money...would always be a barrier... Unless he looks past it. Unless I take a risk, and leave him... Give him space to figure out his shit, while I do the same thing. I'd pushed forward, and had almost stumbled across the outstretched legs of the homeless guy.

"Excuse me," I mutter and step around him... Which is when I spot his shoes: tailormade, Italian leather, spotless, and polished to within an inch of its life. They seem familiar. Huh? I stare at them. Where have I seen them before?

"Pretty fancy, huh?" Homeless guy chortles, "Think these will impress the ladies?"

I glance up at his face. "I am sure they'd have an impact," I say. "Where did you get them?"

He frowns, "You mean, what's a man like me doing with shoes like these?"

My cheeks heat. Hell, that hadn't come out polite at all, had it? "I meant, uh... They seem familiar. Someone I know had a similar pair."

"Boyfriend?" He asks.

"He's...ah, currently no friend," I mutter.

"Ach!" he cackles, "Had a fall out with your man, huh?"

"Maybe, probably." I raise my shoulders, "He's an arrogant so-and-so. Know what I mean? He thinks he can buy anything."

"Not you, obviously." He nods.

"Exactly... See?" I flick my hair over my shoulder, "And he claims to love me."

"Do you?" he shoots back.

"Huh?" I frown, "Do I what?"

"Do you love him?"

"Yes," I reply. "Wait, I mean... No... I mean, yes...but..."

"No buts." He tilts his head up, pulls his legs up to sit cross-legged, "You gotta tell him that."

"I do?" I scowl.

"Absolutely," he jerks his chin, "better to take the risk and be sorry than to be a coward and—"

"Regret it," I complete his statement. "Yeah... Well..." I glance away. A pressure builds behind my eyes and my heart begins to race. What the hell is wrong with me? This constant back and forth... This not knowing my own mind... It's bloody tiring. So much easier to plan out a menu and bake. Even though the outcome of a dish is not completely in my hands, at least I can control the environment... Decide the ingredients. And if I change something, hell, I know the risks of what I'm doing. But with him...? I can't predict a thing. Not my reaction to him, not his ability to throw me off guard... Well, except for that sizzling attraction between us that throbs and ties us together. For better or for worse—that is one thing I can count on. The one ingredient that would never fail to liven up the dish... I mean, the relationship... I mean... I blink, turn to him. "I should, right?" I ask.

He lowers his board to the ground, then glances toward the apartment. "Go on, then."

I take in his features, those intelligent eyes undeniable, despite his unkempt whiskers.

"Who are you?" I frown. "What are you doing here?"

"All the world's a stage and we are but actors," he chuckles.

"First Byron, then Shakespeare?" I stare at him. "You have a thing for poets?"

"Or for pompous wankers who churned out pretentious shit."

"Sounds like someone I know," I mumble.

"Don't we all?" He rises to his feet, sketches an exaggerated bow, "Don't delay, young lady." He snatches his hat with the change inside and slams it on his dreadlocks. "Goodbye." He hauls the board over his shoulder and walks off.

"Bye." I turn, retrace my steps toward the apartment. What a strange man. He was well educated, no doubt about it. And his accent... I could have sworn he sounded almost posh. And when he'd smiled...his teeth were perfect. Which is bloody odd in England. I mean, when was the last time I'd met anyone with even teeth... Other than the alphahole... And the Seven...who had clearly spent a fortune on the dentist. But normal people like me... Hell... We can't afford that kind of dental work. So how had the homeless guy swung that, huh? I turn to call out, but the sidewalk is empty. Geez, he must have doubled his speed to get away from me or something. I shake my head. The shoes did fit him though. Chalk it up as one more good deed for Dr Grumpy McDick. He has his redeeming points... A lot of them, actually.

Too bad it isn't enough... Is it? I shake my head. Stop overthinking this. Just march back for the last time and tell him how you feel. As easy as baking banana bread, which would be done in double-quick time in his oven. Fine, fine... Don't think about his kitchen, or his equipment... No, definitely don't think about the tool he hides in his pants either. Get on with it; don't back out, bitch. I stomp inside the apartment, and head for the elevator door, which glides open. Shit, even the elements are working with me on this.

I reach the penthouse, push the door open and walk in. I cross the living room, pause only to place my satchel and handbag on the center table, then peek into the kitchen. There's no one there. Hmm. I pivot, head for the bedroom, when I spot movement. I pivot head toward the sliding doors at the far end of the living room, pulling them aside. I step outside and onto the terrace, walk another few steps and spot the hot tub... This one's sunken into the decking with steps leading down, and at the other end of it...is him. I'm drawn to him like chocolate to a clean surface... know what I mean? I pause at the tub.

He's sprawled in the water that froths around his waist, the bubbles covering the bottom half of his body. Not that I have any doubt about the state of his undress. He leans back, raises a bottle of whiskey. His biceps bulge and his shoulders flex. He brings the bottle to his mouth, swigs from it. The tendons of his throat move as he swallows.

I am instantly wet.

He raises his other hand, places a cigar between his lips. I rake my gaze over his features, watch him watch me with unblinking eyes, as I take another step forward. I reach the edge of the tub. The water writhes below me. My heartbeat writhes in my chest.

He glares at me from under hooded eyelids. He lowers the cigar, blows out a cloud of cigar smoke. The scent of cloves and spices, of darkness and lust, passion and fucking... Hell... I'll always associate the scent of cigar smoke with wild, out-of-my-head desire.

He doesn't move, doesn't say a word.

I shuffle closer, my toe brushing against something smooth. There's a plop as it falls in. I glance down to find an egg timer floating on the surface.

I bend my knees, reach over and scoop it up.

He glances down at the object, then up at my face. His lips twist, he swallows and opens his mouth, and I'm sure he's going to say something. Instead, he takes another swig from the bottle of whiskey. The skin across his knuckles stretches white... Huh? I peer across the distance and at his features... Lines radiate from the corners of his eyes, and the hollows under his cheekbones seem more pronounced. Why had I not noticed that before?

He keeps his gaze focused on my face, the skin around his mouth tightening. That's it—something's on his mind. But what? Why would the most confident man I have ever met seem unsure of himself.

"Why are you so on edge?" I laugh nervously. "I'd think you were going to pop a marriage proposal or something," I mutter, "if I didn't know you better."

His face pales. My gaze widens. I take in the way he holds onto the whiskey bottle. The skin of his knuckles stretch white. Then the bottle slips from his grasp, hits the decking and rolls away... "Fuck." He swears, then straightens. His lips twist. An expression I can't fathom grips his features.

"Holy shit." I gasp, "Is that what you are going to do...? I gulp. "No way. You aren't, are you?"

Again, he glares at the stupid egg timer I am holding. What the hell? I stare down at the curved object, raise it, fiddle around with it. I twist it and it comes apart in my hands, revealing something shiny, something with a perfectly-cut sapphire that winks back at me.

My throat dries. My heart begins to thud. "What...what is this?" I squeak.

"A fucking gummy bear," he growls, "what do you think it is?"

"I... I..." I glance at the ring, then back at him, then at the ring again.

"How... how long have you been planning this?"

"Since I met you?" He tilts his head, "Strike that. From before I met you. The ring was my grandmother's."

"Oh!"

"You mean oh, yes, don't you?" he drawls.

"Wait, wait." I draw in a breath. Stay calm, don't lose it now. Need time to think, just a bloody second here. I tip up my chin, train my gaze on him, "How did you rig the timer to accommodate it, considering I was gone for less than half an hour?"

He yawns.

"Of course. You repair clocks, so you could adjust a stupid egg timer, huh?" I pout.

"Not apologizing for the fact that I pulled off an almost-miracle, babe." He thrusts out his chest, "Besides it is Christmas."

"Wow," I stare. "Seems you're getting into the spirit of the season, after all?"

"As you are coming around to the idea of our wedding."

"Yes." I nod.

"So, it's settled then." He grins.

"What?" I shake my head. "No, no, no, I didn't mean it that way. I mean, not yet... I mean... What the hell!" I exclaim. "This can't be happening."

"It is." He shakes out his palm—the one with which he'd gripped the whiskey bottle.

"Did you hurt your good hand? I ask.

"I've been hurting in other places since I met you," he grumbles.

"Anyone ever tell you, you have the manners of an oaf?" I scowl.

"Only you, babe." He rises to his feet—the water pours off of those sculpted abs, his concave stomach, drips off of that spectacular cock. Oh, my God! I swallow, take a step back, stumble, drop the ring, let go of the pieces that formerly constituted the egg timer, swoop down, catch the ring. I straighten the ring, slip it onto my left ring finger. I blink, open my eyes in surprise. "It fits."

"Of course, it does," he snaps.

"Presumptuous, much?" I huff, turn my hand this way and that. The heart of the ring glows with silver sparks. Wow. My pulse thuds at my temples; my stomach bottoms out. OMFG, does this mean, what I think it does?

"You're marrying me," he growls. "What's so presumptuous about that?"

"I haven't said yes."

He looks at my hand then back at my face. "You're wearing the ring. Are you saying no?"

"You haven't asked...you...you...ass!" I yell.

He blows out a breath, stalks his way across the length of the sunken pool to where I stand. He glances into my eyes. Despite the fact that I am standing on a higher level, we are at the same height... That's how fucking big my asshole is. I gulp; he frowns. His chest rises and falls, then he reaches out and takes my left hand.

Weston

"I won't take no for an answer," I tell her.

She scowls, tugs at her hand. I hold on. Fuck, get a grip, asshole. Stop thinking about yourself. Get rid of the fear that she'll refuse you and leave... Nope, not this time. I'm not going to fuck this up, nope. I've conducted quadruple bypass surgeries... This...this should be a cakewalk... Not.

I shake my head, bring my other hand up, and enclose her slim palm between my much larger ones.

I clear my throat. She glances at me, and suddenly, my scalp feels too tight. My heart hammers and my muscles tense. I rotate my shoulders, bend my knee and press it into the side of the pool.

"Amelie," I peer up into her face, "will you be the chocolate to my whiskey, the caramel to my bourbon—?"

She blinks.

"—the spice to my tea, the fruit filling to my pie—"

Her lower lip trembles... Huh? Is that a good sign?

"—the butterscotch to my toffee," I raise one eyebrow, "the cookie to my coffee?"

She giggles, then slaps a hand over her mouth.

I allow a smirk to curl my lips, lower my head and brush my mouth over her knuckles, "Well?" I tilt my head up at her, "Amelie, will you marry me?"

"Not good enough," she replies.

"What?" I blink.

"You can do better than that."

"What the fuck?" I growl.

She shakes her hair from her face, "Go on, Mr, Alphahole. Why should I marry you?"

"Because I'll make you happy?"

"So can others."

"Because you can cook in that bloody kitchen with the oven I had installed specifically for you?"

"You...you did?" Her gaze widens. Damn, if I don't see heart-shaped little icons in place of her irises.

"It was nothing," I mumble. Why the hell had that popped out? Hadn't meant to blurt that out.

She looks away, then back at me. "What else?" she asks, her voice an octave lower than earlier. That's good. I am on the right track... Go on, motherfucker, lay it out. It's now or never, you loser.

"Because every time I see you, I can't see a way around fucking you, giving it to you until you're a whimpering gooey mess in my arms?"

"Oh!" She trembles. "Keep going," she says, her voice breathy.

I turn her palm face up in mine, bend and lick the skin between her fingers.

She shudders.

I drag my tongue down to her fingertip and kiss it.

"Because we're going to fuck right now in this pool, then on the decking, in the living room, in my bed, on the bloody kitchen island...on every surface in my home, and when the sun comes up tomorrow, we'll know every nook," kiss, "cranny," kiss, "crevasse of each other's bodies."

She makes a humming sound deep in her throat.

"You like that hmm?" I smirk.

"Much better," She agrees. "You're getting the hang of it, Mr. Alpha Claus, but it's not enough."

"You're right," I agree.

"I am?" She frowns.

"I haven't told you yet, how I'm going to walk you places, my Buttercup, up the aisle, into each day of our future lives...ease you into bed every night, wake you up with my tongue inside your melting pussy every morn—"

She chokes out a laugh, "And you were doing so well."

"Right?" I grimace, "I can't help myself, my sweet Cookie. When I see you, I lose sight of myself. When I scent you, I ache to be inside of you. And when I see you in pain," I swallow, "I want to turn the world upside down until I soothe it all away."

"Oh," she stutters, "that...that was romantic."

"I'm not done yet."

"No?"

"Not even remotely." I allow my lips to curve, mirror the happiness that filters through her gaze, "I'll take care of you, I'll love you, shield you from the elements, ease obstructions from your path—"

She frowns.

"Because that would be my prerogative." I declare.

"If that's not what I want?"

"We could discuss it," I say slowly.

"We could?"

"Perhaps."

Her forehead creases and she tugs on her hand again. My heart rate gallops. "I won't do anything you don't want me to," I add.

"Hmm."

"I promise." I hold up my right palm, "We can fight over it, then kiss and have hot make-up sex."

"As long as you don't steamroll me into agreeing." She frowns.

"As long as we agree to disagree," I say at the same time.

She huffs.

I twine my fingers through hers, "Come on, babe. Allow me to help; it's what I do best."

"I want to build my business on my own merit, you know?"

"And I understand and completely get that...but if I can pave the way so you spend your time on the actual creation and less on fighting through roadblocks?"

She shuffles her feet, then glances at me. "For every pound you spend on paying off my debts, you'll also put one toward a scholarship for someone less privileged who wants to study baking at a school of their choice."

"Done," I blow out a breath. "You can manage this each year through FOK media, a division of 7A investments that was set up for exactly such causes."

She blinks. "You agree?"

I straighten my shoulders, "If that makes you happy..."

"This makes me happy." She sinks down onto the decking, sticks her legs into the hot tub and, parts her legs. Finally, fuck! I move into the 'V' between her thighs.

"You make me fucking happy," I hold her gaze, peer into those baby blues which mean more to me than life itself. "It was a time bomb," I say. "They wrapped a timebomb around me and left me in a locked room for days."

Her chin wobbles, her face pales. "The kidnappers?" she whispers. "They did that?"

I nod. "If I so much as moved or breathed wrong it could go off, so they said."

"What...what happened next?"

"My kidnapper... I couldn't see his face because I was blindfolded... Which didn't help, because I could imagine the moving hands of the clock in my mind." I swallow; my fingers tremble.

She grips my hand, and warmth chases away the ice that had crept into my veins. I focus on her beautiful face, those flushed features. "He kept coming in and torturing me, sometimes beating on my legs, sometimes hooking me up to electricity. Each session was timed, it lasted precisely an hour, all of which was counted down precisely by the clock." I chuckle, the sound harsh. "The torture went on for days I thought, but it was really only for forty-eight hours, so I found out later."

She gasps, "Oh, Wes." She places her palm over my chest, "Baby, I'm so sorry."

I focus on her gaze, the silverly sparks in her eyes. "That last time..." I force out the words, "he said he'd be back in twelve hours. I counted down the time, past the twelve hour mark. He was late. I knew then, he was going to kill me. He came in and started raging at me, told me he was going to kill me. He hooked me up to the electrodes. I sensed him move away to start the electricity. I knew there was no way I was going to survive that session. I prayed that my heart would give out before the pain got too bad. He switched on the electricity, and left."

"Wes, no." She throws her arms about me, "Oh my God, that's terrible." She presses her cheek into my chest and moisture dampens my skin. She's weeping, for me? Something inside of me dissolves. I fit my knuckle under her chin, tip up her head.

"The cops arrived within minutes of that... They broke through, switched off the electricity, had their best bomb disposal expert dismantle the one around my chest. Turns out, it was a hoax all along."

"What?" She gasps, "I mean it's a good thing, but still... That bastard."

"Yeah." I cup her cheek, "I escaped with no outward scars... I was lucky, unlike some of the Seven."

"It's why you guys are so close."

"Close? Ha!" I smirk, "The only person I want to be close to is you, baby."

I lower my head, brush my lips over hers. "You're welcome, by the way," I whisper.

"For what?"

"For the three words you were going to tell me earlier, but didn't, and which you are going to reward me with now."

"Reward you?" She pouts.

"Yep." I reach down, lower the zipper on her jeans. She grips my shoulders, rises up, and I yank down the pants and panties, ease them over her hips, then step back and pull them off of those gorgeous legs. I stare at the pink flesh between those beautiful thighs. "For the orgasms I am going to bring you to in the next hour."

"So sure of yourself. If you think you can trick me into—"

I step between her legs, hook her knees over my arms, pull them up and over my shoulders, then notch my dick against her pussy, "Into?"

"Saying that I want you—"

I lunge forward, impale her in one motion. She stutters, then her pussy clamps around my dick.

"Say it," I growl.

"I... I need you," she gasps.

I pull out of her, stay poised at the entrance to her channel. "Look at me," I pant.

She raises her head, sears me with those beautiful blue eyes.

"Princess," I lower my head to hers, share my breath with hers, brush my lips over hers "I want to hear you scream out those three words." I kick my hips forward, sink into her.

She curves her spine, throws her head back, "I love you," she yells. "Love you, love you... Only you."

My vision tunnels; blood beats at my temples. I haul her to me, kiss her hard. Then, I begin to fuck her in earnest—thrust into her, bury myself in her sweet pussy again and again. Bring my arms around her, pull her to me as, with a last ferocious drive of my hips, I sink inside of her. "Come," I growl.

Amelie

His command slices through my mind. His voice echoes in my subconscious. Heat from his body slams into me, sinks into my blood. Everything in me snaps tight, then I shatter. Moisture gushes out from between my thighs as the climax sweeps me up, higher and higher. I throw my head back and scream, I love you, I love you. Or maybe I just chant that in my head.

Black specks flicker at the edges of my vision. Above me, his shoulders draw back, his chest muscles harden, his body shudders, his cock thickens inside of me, then with a harsh groan, he comes inside of me. I slump against his chest, am half aware that he hauls me up in his arms, steps out of the hot tub and carries me inside. I must have snoozed, for when I open my eyes next, I am tucked into his side in his bed. I rub my cheek into his hair-roughened chest. "I would have told you anyway," I mumble.

"Hmm?" He rubs lazy circles over my upper arm.

I glance up to find him sprawled against the sheets, eyes closed. He has one hand flung behind his neck. A slight smile curves his lips. So, this is how it is to see the brute relax... In his den, surrounded by his possessions, in the arms of his woman. His woman. I reach up, cup his cheek.

"I love you," I whisper.

He smirks. "I know."

I hit his shoulder.

He laughs, cracks open his eyelids, "I adore you, Princess."

"Oh." I open and close my mouth, shake my head.

"What?" he grunts.

"Nothing."

"Say it," he drawls, "I promise I won't bite."

I purse my lips, scan his relaxed features, "I can't get used to this emo version of you."

He sighs, "No pleasing some people."

"Not that I don't want you to be nice to me and all that," I explain.

"Actually, I think you don't." He grins, then lowers his gaze to my breasts.

"What's that supposed to mean?"

"It means." He flips me over onto my back and my breath hitches. His eyes gleam and his big shoulders seem to swell further, if that is even possible. He glances up at the headboard, then back at me.

"Don't you dare," I huff.

"You challenging me?"

"Maybe," I mumble as a frisson of heat runs up my spine.

He glances around, then rolls off of the bed. I lower my arms. He turns to me, points his finger, and says, "Stay."

"Bossy," I grumble.

"You ain't seen nothin' yet."

He stalks over to the walk in closet. I hear him rummaging around, then silence. A few seconds later he walks out.

I gasp. "Oh my."

"Like it?" He stands there in his scrubs. The green material molds to his torso, outlines the cut abs of his chest, tents at his crotch—ha! so what's new?—and clings to his powerful thighs.

"You look—"

"Hot?"

"I was going to say yummy."

"Is everything a food reference to you?" He laughs.

"Is everything about getting the last word with you?"

He tilts his head, "Except with you."

"Oh?"

"You know it's true, babe. After all, I let you get away with chocolate."

"Someone had to change your mind about the devil's food." I chuckle.

"So you decided to feed it to the devil himself?"

"Are you the devil?"

"Where you are concerned, I am your lover and your protector, your lord and master, your to-be husband."

I curl the fingers of my left hand around the ring, "I haven't said yes to marrying you yet."

"Oh, you are about to." He raises his hand, and I spot the black ties he holds in his grasp.

"What...what's that for?"

He grins at me and his eyes glint. He stalks around the bed, then places his knee on the bed, throws his leg over my waist and straddles me.

"Wes." I draw in a breath.

"Trust me, Cookie." He leans over and ties my wrists to the headboard. Then rolls off of the bed and walks away again. What the hell?

He returns holding an egg timer in his hand.

"How many of those things do you have?"

"Enough." He grins. "Since you seem to have a penchant for the blasted thing, I figured I'd buy enough to see us through the rest of our lives together."

My heart stutters. OMG, did he use all the words that I've wanted to hear from him? "You're awfully confident." I tip up my chin.

"Nothing I can't deliver on, Princess." He winds up the egg timer. The ticking down of the timer fills the room.

"Doesn't that sound trigger you?" I ask.

"I'm changing it's association in my head." He places the timer on the side table, then climbs onto the bed and straddles me. "Close your eyes." he raises the second necktie he holds in his hand.

"B... but." My heart begins to race. My mouth dries. I can't stop the trembling that runs up my spine. "Wes."

"Trust me." He leans in and kisses me, a hard reassuring kiss, that sinks into my blood. I am instantly wet and he hasn't even started.

He peers in my features, "Okay?"

"Okay."

He leans over and wraps the tie around my eyes. Darkness engulfs me. My senses pop. The ticking of the timer heats my blood. "W...Wes?" I whine.

"I'm here." He cups my cheek, then his lips meet mine again. He licks my mouth, then whispers. "I forgot to tell you one thing."

"What?"

"You won't come until the timer rings."

Weston

"Not fair," she gasps, craning her neck toward me.

"All's fair in bed." I lower my head and kiss her breast. She moans; the sound travels down my spine and my guts churn. My heart begins to race. I cup her other breast and my fingers tremble.

The ticking of the clock grows louder; my stomach hollows out. Maybe this had not been a good idea. I close my mouth around her nipple and bite down.

She gasps.

My groin hardens.

I drag my mouth down her stomach, to her belly button, flick my tongue in and out of the indentation.

She moans. Her thighs tremble. I grip the curve of her waist, nibble kisses to the apex between her legs. I blow on her pussy and her body bucks, "Weston," she pleads.

The sound of her voice slices through the noise in my head. This time it is about her. Not about what the bastard did to me. Not about how he'd tied the ticking timebomb to my chest and left me. I hook my arms under her knees, pull her legs over my shoulders.

I smooth my hands down her trembling thighs, and cup her pussy, "Mine," I growl, "only mine." I lower my head, swipe my tongue up her lower lips.

She whines.

I curve my tongue around the swollen bud of her clit; she shivers. Slide my hand down to squeeze her arse cheek.

Her entire body shudders.

I slide my finger inside her backhole; she bucks.

I insert my tongue inside her channel, ease it in and out of her. Bring my free hand to her clit and pinch it.

"Oh, hell, oh, hell." She digs the heels of her feet into my back, thrusts her pelvis up and into my face. The sweet scent of her tugs at my nostrils, the warmth of her juices coats my tongue. My belly clenches and my dick lengthens as the ticking of the clock counts down in the background.

I need more, more.

"Wes?"

The tick-tock of the clock grows louder. My fingers clench; a bead of sweat slides down my back. I drag my mouth up and to her face and kiss her deeply. She opens her mouth to me, and I thrust my tongue inside. I drink from her, that addicting, honeyed essence of her, mixed with the taste of her cum. My belly trembles, I dig my knees into bed, ease a finger inside her channel and bear down.

"Weston," she screams, "Oh, my God, Wes."

More, I need more. I need her warmth, her happy-go-lucky nature, her sass and fire. I need all of her, subsumed into me. I need her to ground me. I release her lips, then reach up and tear the blindfold from her.

She blinks, then her gaze narrows on me.

"What's wrong?" she asks. "Wes?"

"Nothing." I mumble.

"Something is."

"I need..." I frown.

"Me, take me, Wes." Her chest heaves, "Please, baby, come inside me."

Her blue eyes gaze into mine, the silver sparks in their depths similar to the sapphire I'd bought her... Except she is here, vital, real... Nothing else in my past, or my future, matters. Only her.

I loosen the drawstring on my pants, then grasp my dick, and notch it against her wet opening.

"Amelie." I brush my lips over hers. "I love you," I say. "I love it when you smile at me. I love it even more when I am the reason for your smile."

Those sappy words? Yep, that's me. Alphahole extraordinaire felled by a woman who is the sassiest, brightest, most special woman I have ever met.

"Oh, Wes," she sighs, "I love you too."

I slide inside her; she trembles. I stay there, allowing her to adjust to my size. I ease my tongue inside her mouth, tangle my tongue with hers, bring my other hand up to untie her bindings. She wraps her arms about my shoulders, pulls me closer. I prop myself on one elbow to keep my weight off of her. I hold her gaze, keep the connection, as I pull out of her, then thrust back in. Her pussy clenches around me. She digs her fingers into the back of my scalp, tugs on my hair. My cock jerks, thickens, and I begin to fuck her in earnest. In and out of her, as I slide a finger inside her backhole.

She groans and I swallow the sound, continue to kiss her, as I kick my hips forward, impale her to the bed. My balls harden, a pressure building in my groin. I don't stop. I thrust into her, again and again. She arches her spine, pushes up to meet me. Locks her ankles around me, flattens her breasts against my chest planes, strains against me, consumes me.

The ticking of the clock fades. I tear my mouth from hers, "I'll never get enough of you. Not until every inch of you is married to every inch of me, and not even then. Not until I've broken you completely, and myself. Until every part of you bears the imprint of me, every cell in your body recognizes that you are mine. Mine. Only mine, you get me?"

She nods. "Only yours," she whispers. "Always yours, love you Wes—"

I kick my hips forward and bury myself inside her with such force that the entire bed shakes. The headboard slams into the wall; somewhere something crashes to the floor. The timer rings as I growl, "Come with me, Princess."

Her mouth opens in a silent cry. She holds my gaze as she shatters, as her body trembles under me, as my orgasm takes hold and I come inside of her.

Her chest heaves, sweat beads her upper lip, and I bend down and lick it up. "Yum." I smack my lips. "How the hell do you manage to taste so sweet?"

"How the hell do you manage to turn sex into an orgy each and every time, my love?"

"Hmm." I bump my neck to hers. "Love it when you talk dirty to me, babe."

"Love it when you—" She blinks. "Did you hear that?"

I frown, "What?"

"Did somebody call your name?"

I angle my head, "Don't hear anything."

I reach down to kiss her again, when, "Weston, where the fuck are you, asshole?" Damian's voice reaches me from the direction of the doorway.

I groan, "The fuck?"

She giggles, "Looks like your friends decided to pay you a visit on Christmas day?"

"Something I can do without." I grouse.

"Weston... Hey...oops. Sorry, man," Damian apologizes.

I turn, glare at where Damian stands in the doorway, face averted.

"I didn't see anything. I promise."

"Fuck off," I growl.

"A bit too late, old chap."

"Where the fuck is the wanker?" Another voice—Arpad's calls out.

"If he thinks he can spend Christmas on his own, he's got another think coming. What's he up to— Oh hell, did we interrupt something?" Is that Edward?

I grab a pillow, throw it in the direction of the doorway. "Back the fuck off, you tossers."

"Sorry."

"Didn't mean any harm."

"You ah—finish what you started. We'll be at your bar."

The voices fade.

"Close the fucking door behind you," I call out.

The door slams shut.

This is what happens when your friends have unrestricted access to your apartment, something I intend to rectify at the first opportunity. I draw in a breath, glance down at my fiancée, "Where were we, babe?"

"We need to get out there." She stabs a finger in my chest.

I lower my head to hers, "In good time."

Knock knock!

Who's there?

Imogen.

Imogen who?

Imogen life without chocolate... (and Weston...)

-From Amelie's diary

Amelie

I walk into Weston's living room just as the doorbell rings.

Weston—who's changed into slacks and shirt— opens it as Saint, Sinclair and Jace walk in carrying a massive Christmas tree wrapped in a net. Weston leads them to the far corner of the room, where they cut off the net and proceed to set it up.

Weston turns to me, crooks a finger. I frown; he smirks. I mentally throw up my hands, walk over to join him. He wraps his arm around me tugs me into his side.

"Did you plan this?" I ask.

"What?" He grins.

"All this." I jerk my chin toward the Christmas tree currently being set up by his three friends, then to the bar where the other three are having an argument about the latest cricket scores.

The doorbell rings again, then the door is pushed open, and Isla walks in, followed by Sienna—Jace's wife, who pushes a pram with their newborn son.

Victoria follows her.

She smooths her hands down the green dress, as always, looking like she's stepped off a catwalk. She pauses halfway into the room, when Saint looks up. He closes the distance between them and pulls her into a kiss. His large hand covers her stomach protectively. Yep, these two are next in line to have a baby.

"Oh! How romantic." Isla waves a hand in front of her face. She turns to me and her face cracks into a big smile. "Well then, did you two make up your differences?"

"What differences?" Weston smirks, pulling me in for a kiss.

She chuckles, then her gaze widens, "Oh wow!" She gasps, then walks over to us, "Is that what I think it is?" She stares down at my hand.

I hold out my palm. She grabs my fingers and squeezes. "Ouch," I gripe.

"That's one big-ass ring, you bitch." She leans back, glowers at me, "You were holding out on me?"

"Relax," I assure her, "It happened only a few hours ago. He proposed—"

She squeals so loudly that everyone else in the room turns to us.

"Omigod, omigod." She claps her hands, " This is awesome! Another wedding to plan."

"Ah...no." I shake my head.

"What do you mean?" she asks.

"No way, am I going in for the whole song and dance of a society wedding."

"But Amelie," she whines, "you only get married once."

"Which is why it's going to be something low key, and romantic... Something with a specially-crafted menu of desserts."

Weston, bends his head. "Will it have cock pops?" he whispers.

"Chocolate cockups," I correct him.

"What-fucking-ever," He grumbles, "as long as you bake them only for us, and only you eat them."

"Possessive, hmm?"

"Just don't want anyone else's mouth on my penis, except yours."

"You got a deal." I grin.

"What did I miss?" Summer flounces in, hair flowing around her. She's in a festive onesie with glitter threaded through almost every inch of it.

"Woman, you're too bright for me." Sinclair prowls toward her. He makes a grab for her, but she evades him and giggles. He swoops down, hauls her close and she melts into his arms. They kiss, until her phone begins to ring. She tries to pull free, but he doesn't let her go. "Sinner," she mumbles against his mouth, "I need to get this."

"Fuck it," he responds.

"It may be Karma. I've been hoping that she'd call."

He releases her lips, but holds her in the circle of his arms.

She pulls out her phone from her bag, "Hello?" she says. Her face brightens. "Karma!" she exclaims. "Where have you been? I was beginning to get worried."

She listens for a second, raises her gaze to Sinner.

He frowns down at her. Everything okay? He mouths.

She raises her shoulders. "You sure, you're fine?" she asks, then listens to the reply. "So you won't be home for the New Year either?"

Her lips curve down. "Aww honey, I miss you." She listens some more. "Well if that's what you want..." She tips up her chin, a worried set to her features. "Right, okay. Well I'll see you soon, I hope. You take care, sweetheart, oh! And Merry Christmas." She cuts the call.

"How is Karma?" I call out to her. "When is she coming back?"

Summer turns to me, "She sounded... Fine... I guess." Her forehead furrows. "She's staying on in Sicily for a while longer."

"Ooh." Isla rubs her hands together, "That's so romantic. Maybe her new boyfriend doesn't want to let go of her, huh?"

"Maybe," Summer says slowly. "I wish she'd come home. I want to meet him, you know? Make sure he's treating her right."

"I'm sure she's fine, babe." Sinclair kisses the top of her head. "He's probably being possessive, that's all."

She snorts, "You should know."

"You bet." Sinclair smirks, "Once you find the woman of your dreams, you never let her out of your sight, or out of your bed. You make sure you keep her satisfied enough that she never wants to leave your side; you—"

"Enough." She turns in his arms, slaps a hand on his mouth, "Honestly Sin, you have no filter."

"Not when it comes to you, I don't." He grins down at her.

"But when it comes to you, I know exactly what turns you on."

His eyes gleam, "And what's that?"

"You're all about the chase, my love."

"Am I now?" His lips curl.

"Yep." She tips up her head, "Like now—"

She yanks back in his grasp. His grasp loosens, and she pivots and takes off toward the inner rooms.

"What the—" He seems startled. "You come back here Summer, and finish what you started," he growls.

"Not happening." She laughs, "You going soft, Sin? Worried you've lost the edge? Bet you can't catch me." She disappears around the corner.

His jaw drops, "Why you little..." He takes off in hot pursuit.

There's another knock on the front door; it swings open, then Julia walks in. She glances around the room, then spots me. Her face brightens.

"Jules." I wave at her, "What are you doing here?"

"I invited her." Weston brushes his lips over my hair. Seems Dr. Alpha Claus can't keep his hands off of me, huh? I snuggle into his side. "Thanks," I say. "And by that, I assume you knew this little get together was happening?"

"I had an inkling."

"Is that my Christmas gift?" Damian draws abreast. I look up to find his gaze arrested by Julia.

"She's my friend," I warn him.

He tilts his head, a considering expression on his features. "She's hot," He declares.

"She's off-limits to you, douche," Weston glowers at him.

"Shouldn't the woman have a say in that?" Damian interrupts.

"As long as Amelie gives you the go ahead..." Weston raises his shoulders.

Damian turns to me, "Well?" He smiles, "What do you say?"

"Do you promise to treat her right?" I scan his features. "Promise you won't hurt her."

"I promise to treat her however she wants me to." He smirks.

"Hmm." I frown. "Julia doesn't suffer fools gladly."

"And, rock stars?" His grin widens, "what does she think of them?"

"Why don't you ask me directly?" Julia's voice interrupts us.

Damian pivots to face her, "Better still, how about I show you...?"

#DamianSavage can I have your babies?

#DamianSavage you're my baby daddy, so what if your last album sucked?

Damian

"Shaving foam," I hold out my hand.

Riley clambers onto the chair and gets the can. She shakes it, then piles the foam into my outstretched palm.

"Thanks, Poppet." I slather it on, then smear the residue across her face.

She shrieks, "Ugh, Daddy." She wipes the foam off of her face and makes a gagging sound.

I laugh, then wipe my hands clean before gliding the razor up my chin.

She perches on the bathroom counter, "You're so handsome, Daddy."

I chuckle, "You're biased, sweetheart." I tilt my head and run the razor up the other cheek.

"I'm not." She shakes her head. "Even my teacher thinks so."

"Your teacher?" I narrow my gaze on her.

She jerks her chin, "She's always asking me about you."

"She is?" I frown. That's what comes from being famous; everyone seems to think they have a claim on you. And because I'm a single dad, every woman seems to want to use Riley to get to me.

She scrunches up her nose, "I think she wants to kiss you."

Wha—I lower my razor and stare at her.

How does she know about kissing? Is it normal for a five-year-old to know about that? Who could I ask about it? Not my friends; none of them are single dads so they'd have no idea what I'm talking about. Add that to the list of queries I need to investigate online. I blow out a breath. Why the hell is she growing up so quickly?

"Do you have to go?" She pouts.

"I promised Uncle Weston I'll be there for his Christmas Party."

"B...but," she purses her lips, "I want you to stay home and watch Frozen with me."

Frozen? Again. I wince. "You can watch it with Meredith." The only person I'd trust to babysit my precious little girl. Hell, she'd rightened me out when I was at my most rebellious. If anyone could take care of Riley, it would be her.

"But she's not as much fun as you, Daddy," Riley whines.

I frown at her. "Don't trouble Meredith while I am gone."

She juts out her lower lip. Uh-oh. I know that look. It means trouble. My daughter has an unbending spirit, which is all too familiar, for I was the same way. Still am. Dare me not to do something, and hell, if I don't want to rush in to prove a point. Not much fun from the other side of the fence now, is it, ol' chap. I heave out a sigh. "Riley," I warn, "promise you'll behave."

She huffs, then winds the hem of her dress about her fingers. "When will you be back?" she asks.

"Not until later." I glance at my reflection in the mirror. How the hell am I going to manage her at fifteen if she is such a handful at five? Maybe I need to get her to socialize more with kids her age. Is it spending so much time with me that is making her grow up so quickly?

"Will you be home in time to tuck me in, Daddy?" she whines.

"I don't think so." I shoot her a sideways glance, "Remember, I was going to stay out tonight while Meredith takes care of you?"

"But I don't want Meredith." She folds her arms over her chest, "I want you, Daddy, you."

I take in her scrunched-up features, her too bright eyes, and a part of me wants to give in, to agree that I'll be back in time to tuck her in. Would that mean I am giving in too easily? Wouldn't I be spoiling her if I agreed to her demands so quickly?

"Maybe..." I wipe the remnants of the shaving foam from my face with a towel, "Maybe just today, Meredith could tuck you in?"

Her chin trembles. "But I want you to read to me at bedtime."

I swallow the lump in my throat, then rinse the razor under the tap. "I did read to you yesterday," I remind her. "It's just one evening Riley."

"But...but, I don't want to wake up and not find you at home." A tear slides down her cheek, "I feel safer when you are here, Daddy. Otherwise, I have nightmares. Please, can't you come home tonight?"

I take in her pinched features, her furrowed forehead, and a hot sensation stabs at my chest. This little girl has me wrapped so tightly around her finger, I'd do anything for her. No way, can I stand to see her unhappy. I'd give anything to put a smile on her face. "Fine." I heave out a breath, "Fine, I'll be back home tonight—"

"Yay!" She claps her hands together.

"On one condition," I hold up my finger.

"Uh-oh." She folds her arms over her chest, suddenly looking more like a teenager than ever. "Am I in trouble, Daddy?"

"Not yet," I grab a towel and wipe my face, "but you will be if I come back home and I find you still up."

"B...but..." she blinks, "don't I have to be awake for you to read to me?"

I gape at her. What the—? Did she just try to twist my words around? When did she get this clever? "I said," I pronounce my words slowly, "that I'll be home at some point tonight, not that I'll be home in time to read to you."

"But I want to see your face before I go to bed, Daddy," she pouts.

"Riley," I warn her. "Didn't you say that you are all grown up? Grown up girls go to bed on their own. They don't wait up for their fathers to come back home before they go to sleep."

She blinks rapidly, and her shoulders slump, "Guess I'm not grown up then." She peers up at me from under her eyelashes. "If you promise to be back in time to read to me, I'll promise not to trouble Meredith."

What the—? The little imp is bargaining with me? Only this little girl could get away with something like that.

"Why you little monkey." I scoop her up and pretend to tickle her.

She shrieks, "Daddy, stop, stop—" She bursts out into peals of laughter. "Daddy, please..." She giggles and my heart blooms.

Just like that, everything is right with the world.

I hold her close and press my forehead to hers. "I'll be back home tonight, but I don't want you to wait up."

She pouts, "But Daddy—"

"Or I can be home in time to read to you and then you don't get pancakes for breakfast Sunday morning."

"But I loooove pancakes," she protests.

"You gotta choose, Riley." I tilt my head, cross my fingers mentally. "Which one is it gonna be?"

She sighs, a big gust that blows her hair up from her forehead. "Fine, I'll let Meredith read to me tonight."

"And you promise not to trouble her, or stay up until I come home?"

She pouts, and I hold her gaze, keep my features calm.

"Okay, fine, I won't stay up until then."

"And you won't cause trouble for her?"

She lowers her chin.

"Riley," I warn her again.

She purses her lips, "I won't cause trouble for her." She peers up at me from under her eyelashes. "But I get to choose the book she reads."

I open and shut my mouth. Jesus, was I this difficult growing up? This stubborn? At least, I know where she gets it from. My daughter's a chip off the old block. Warmth fills my chest. I've delivered many chart-topping hits in my career, but my proudest creation is, without doubt, this lively little bundle right here.

"You don't want pancakes?" I tilt my head and hold her gaze.

She juts out her chin, then, "Fine, fine." She throws up her hands, in a very grown-up gesture. "You choose the book, just as long as I can see you when I wake up."

Julia

"Did you know that hating someone feels disturbingly similar to loving them?" the female radio announcer asks her co-host.

"You mean when your stomach twists at the thought of that person and your chest hurts?" The man responds.

"Oh, so you do get it?" she exclaims.

"I thought that was heartburn." He chuckles.

She groans, "Wolfbane you suck, you know that?"

"It's Wolfe, and PS, that's only one of my many talents, darling Poison Ivy."

"It's Ivy," she retorts, "and if you're listening, don't forget to tune into the next episode of this guest edition of the Daily Date, where we invite you to speed date on air. Send your application via email to—"

I switch off the ignition of the Volkswagen, and the radio shuts off. Speed date...and that, too, on-air? Who'd set themselves up for that torture, huh? The only thing worse will be walking into this party where I don't know most of the guests. I glance up at the imposing building that overlooks the Thames. What the hell am I doing here?

I should be back at my apartment—okay, technically my friend, Amelie's apartment. Right about now, I'd like nothing better than to be tucked into bed and sleeping; instead, I'd accepted Amelie's boyfriend's invitation to a Christmas gathering because... Well, I don't want to disappoint them. Besides, I do want to see her, and if that means having to put up with a bunch of strangers, well then, guess I'll simply have to suck it up.

I get out of the car, walk into the reception area of the apartment block. The porter glances up at me.

"Julia Andrews here to see—"

"I know." He smiles. "They're in the penthouse." He jerks his chin toward the bank of elevators, "I was told to expect you."

Right. And of course, it had to be the penthouse. Where else do full-of-themselves, upper-class prats live, huh? Okay, come on. So maybe I shouldn't judge them before meeting them. Yeah, best save that for later. I chuckle as I ride up the elevator to the top floor. I step out, and straight into a living room filled with so much natural light that I blink. Talk about being on display, huh? The floor-to-ceiling windows at the far end reveal a view of London that makes me catch my breath. I walk forward, then pause when I spot Amelie, and next to her, a familiar face. Wha—? No, it can't be, can it?

He glances in my direction and my pulse begins to thud.

He stares at me and the full blast of those arctic blue eyes slams into my chest. I gulp; my stomach twists. The rays from the setting sun casts the lower half of his face in shadow. His shoulders bunch as he glares across the short distance that separates us.

He tilts his head, and I take in the hollows beneath those cheekbones, the hooked nose, that prominent jawline, that beautiful throat with tendons that flex, the hollow at the base of his throat, and that sculpted chest... That gorgeous eight pack, which obviously, I cannot see through his T-shirt, but I know is there because the last time I saw it was on the celebrity gossip sites. I blink. No, it can't be. Is it...is he who I think he is? I frown; he glowers back.

He props his hands on his hips and his biceps stretch the sleeves of his leather jacket, which only enhances the breadth of his massive shoulders.

He widens his stance, drawing my attention to those narrow hips, the powerful thighs clad in jeans with the kind of distressed look that he must have paid thousands to get just right.

He slides his hand into the pocket of his jeans, outlining the length of what he's packing... And trust me when I tell you that all of those accounts by the paparazzi don't do justice to Damian 'Big D' Savage. Bad boy rock star, famous for his onstage tantrums and offstage dalliances. What's he doing here?

I move forward. Damian's scowl deepens. What's his problem?

He rakes his gaze down my face, to my chest, down to my hips, my ankles, then says something to Amelie.

Amelie frowns at him, then jerks her chin in my direction.

Gah! Are they talking about me? No. No way. He can't be interested in me, can he?

I drag my fingers through my shoulder length hair. My fingernail catches on a knot. Damn. I should have, at least, made an attempt to freshen up before coming here, huh? Except, I couldn't be bothered. Not after the debacle that my life has turned out to be.

I'd gone to Australia, excited to be with my boyfriend and looking forward to exploring an entire freaking new continent. I had returned heartbroken, with no savings and in urgent need of a job to pay my bills. Welcome to my sorry-ass life, peeps. That's why I've sworn off men. And that includes hot as hell, macho rock icons as well... Right?

I straighten my spine, hitch my backpack over my shoulder, then proceed toward Amelie. She pulls her hair to one side of her face and blue fire flashes on her left ring finger. Well, hell, so her boyfriend proposed, huh? Good for him. Unlike my ex, who'd decided he'd rather have sex with another woman, never mind that I was bound to walk in on them. Yep, my life is one never-ending cliché.

"Julia doesn't suffer fools gladly," I hear her tell Damian.

"And rock stars?" Damian grins back at her. "What does she think of them?"

What the hell—? Why is he talking about me as if I am not in the room?

"Why don't you ask me directly?" I challenge.

Damian jerks his chin up, "Better still, how about I show you...?"

"Show me, huh?" I plant my hands on my hips, "You ain't got nothin' that I haven't seen before."

"Don't bet on it." The too-full-of-himself asshole stares down that hooked nose at me. His blue gaze narrows and those cerulean eyes seem to bore into my soul. A shiver runs up my spine. This man? His presence is potent. He leans in close and the heat of his body slams into my chest. All of my nerve endings seem to fire at once. Damn him. Why am I so drawn to him?

"I don't bet." I school my features into a mask of indifference. "I prefer certainties—a path to my goal, one from which I never veer."

"Is that a challenge?" He curls his lips, and that smirk... OMG. That upper lip of his seems to thin further. Combined with that puffy lower lip, that square jaw, the tendons of his gorgeous throat that stand out in relief and highlight the hollow at the base of his throat... Hell... He's lethal, all right. And too handsome to be real. Guys like him exist on the covers of magazines, in online memes that I drool over in secret. Nah, he occupies a different world, a rarefied space I have no intention of joining. So what, if I am attracted to him?

"Take it any way you like." I raise a shoulder. "I don't care."

There is an indrawn breath. I turn to find Amelie staring at me with huge eyes. She shakes her head, moves toward me, only her fiancé pulls her back. He whispers in her ear. She blinks and her cheeks turn pink. He pivots her around and they walk off, leaving me alone with this reprobate of the first order...aka, this big, grumpy male who glares at me with... Something like intent in his eyes.

The hair on the back of my neck rises. My stomach trembles. "Ah... I... I guess I should circulate among the guests. Uh... Don't want to seem impolite or anything, know what I mean?"

I turn to leave, take a step forward, then another. Okay... Maybe this is going to be fine. I'll just sidle out of here and— Warm fingers encircle my wrist. I am pulled around, and hauled up against the massive chest of the afore-mentioned douche canoe... My breasts are plastered against those ripped abs, which I can feel through the T-shirt he wears under his jacket. I gulp and my knees tremble... They bloody tremble. "Let go of me," I demand.

"Make me."

"What?" I narrow my gaze on that sinful-as-fuck face. "You release me right now or else—"

"Or else?" He peels back his lips and his teeth gleam against the tan of his sculpted features. At my silence, he continues, "You were saying—"

"That this is a misunderstanding." I huff. "I am not interested in you."

"Neither am I in you." He widens his stance.

"Doesn't seem that way from where I am, buster."

"How much control on your anger can you muster?" He tilts his head.

"Just because you think—mistakenly—that you're superior?" I flip my hair over my shoulder.

"I am going to break through your tightly controlled exterior."

"Wait." I gape, "Did you rhyme your words to mine?"

"So did you."

"No, I didn't."

"Yes, you did." He grins and my stupid heart stutters. It bloody stutters.

He peers down into my face, his blue eyes glittering. "So much sass," he growls. "I wonder how it would be to peel back the mask you wear to the world, to unveil the passion that lurks under the surface, to show you how it could be if the right man were to touch you in your secret places, the ones you think you have hidden away," his voice lowers to a hush, "but which I can see, feel, touch, suck..."

My core clenches. I swear my panties self-combust.

"I don't care for self-obsessed, insufferable, prats," I declare. "You've got the wrong woman."

He lowers his head until our eyelashes tangle. "I don't think so, baby."

"You're no Johnny," I stammer.

"Huh." His forehead wrinkles, "Dirty Dancing?"

"Oh," I blink, "you...you placed the reference?"

"Rock star, remember?" He relaxes his hold and I put some space between us.

"Like I could forget. Though, considering you are not on social media anymore, I'm beginning to think that you want the rest of the world to."

"You've been stalking me?" His lips curl.

"Of course, not."

"So how did you know that I pulled my social media accounts?"

"It was, uh...all over the news."

He stares at me.

I redden. "You couldn't miss it. Biggest news of the decade: the rock star who decided to disappear from the media's eye, cancelled his concert dates, decided to focus on—"

He tilts his head.

"On his personal life," I mutter.

He glares at me. I throw up my hands, "Yes, fine. Okay, so I did read up on everything I found, but only because I loved your earlier albums—" Hello. Understatement of the year. I've downloaded all of his music and I listen to it on repeat. Not that I'd ever confess that to him. "I admit, I wondered what happened, that you decided to go into hiding..." And how I'd love to help him find his mojo again. He can use his mojo on me anytime. In fact, he can use the other parts of him too, especially the one that's rumored to be eleven inches long. At least, meeting the rock star has improved my sense of humor. I snicker.

He frowns. "Do I look like I am in hiding?"

I am more interested in what you have hiding in your pants. Gah! I hope he's not a mind-reader. I step back. He grabs my shoulder and holds me in place, then lowers his head to my neck and sniffs.

"What the—?" I gasp, "Did you just sniff me?"

"Your scent," he rumbles. "It reminds me of clay and vanilla; soft and creamy, yet so spicy." He frowns, "Why the hell do you smell of playdoh?"

"None of your business."

"You work with clay," he accuses me. "Are you a potter?"

"I'm a clay artist, you idiot." In my own time, and when I'm not too busy being a nanny, but he doesn't need to know that. Not that being a nanny is not something to be proud of. It's just, he's an artiste...and famous, and hell, if I don't want to match up to his creative level.

"Hmm." He takes in my features, then leans in closer, closer. He drags his tongue up the side of my cheek.

My breath catches. That was bold, and weird, and okay, such a dominant gesture... My belly trembles. "You...you..."

"You taste bloody delicious." He smacks his lips. "Can I lick you again?"

Yes.

Yes.

"No." I splutter, then snap back my shoulders. "How dare you?" I blink at him. "How could you—?"

"You can say it." He lowers his voice to a hush.

"What?"

"Tell me how much you want to touch me, put your hands on me." He smirks.

The blood rushes to my cheeks, my fingers tremble, and my toes curl. What the hell? One flirtatious glance from him and I'm melting into a puddle of slurry. One more second in his presence and I'll likely throw myself at him and beg him to play me like his favorite guitar. Ugh, get your mind out of the gutter... Or rather, out of his pants. A chuckle bubbles up and I swallow it down. "Keep your distance," I insist.

"Or what?"

"Or," I hold up my fists, "I'll unleash my Krav Maga powers on you."

"Krav Maga?" He blinks. "The form of self-defense favored by the Israeli secret service?"

I nod. "I've learned it, I uh..." I move back; he follows.

"Have you now?" He lowers his voice to a hush and my thighs clench.

Whoa, this is not good. I shouldn't have this over-the-top reaction to a man I've just met... In real life. In reel life—on screen and online... Well, that's a different matter altogether. Not that I am going to reveal that. No way. Best I leave while I have some dignity intact.

I angle my body away from him, "I... I have to go."

"No," he snaps.

"What?"

"You're not leaving," he tells me.

"What the—?" My jaw drops. "Of course, I am."

"Oh?" He tilts his head and his eyes gleam. "Don't challenge me." He looks me up and down, and damn it, I'm instantly wet. My knees tremble, my toes curl, and a rush of heat sweeps up my spine. What the hell is this reaction to this... Full-of-himself, hot-as-Hades, larger-than-life male? And why did I just think all of those adjectives in one sentence? That's it, I've gotta get out of here. Now.

"Goodbye." I turn; then squeak when he grips my shoulder and yanks me around and to him until I am pressed to him from toe to thighs to chest.

Something hard stabs into the cradle of my core. I draw in a sharp breath. Hell, did I say eleven inches? Nope. No way. This is surely bigger. The man's seriously packing a monster something in his pants and nothing I've read has done any justice to the real thing. So, this is what they mean by there are three of us in this relationship? I chuckle, then turn it into a snort.

His frown deepens, but there's a twinkle of amusement in his eyes.

"I shall call you lover, and you're welcome."

"I'm not and... For what?"

"Not yet," he corrects me, "and...for the kiss." He smirks.

"What kiss?" I scowl, "And you have some ego presuming—"

He swoops down and closes his mouth over mine.

Damian

The sweet scent of eucalyptus fills my senses. The taste of her, like lush oranges, coats my tongue, fills my lips, drips into my bloodstream. My head spins and my groin hardens. I tilt my head, deepen the kiss. She moans at the back of her throat and the sound wraps around my ribcage. My heart begins to race. I drag her up, widen my stance to take her weight, then wrap my arms around her slim body and nip on her lower lip.

She gasps, opens her mouth, and I swoop in.

I dance my tongue over hers, splay the fingers of my palm across her waist, down to the curve of her butt. I squeeze her arse and she shudders. I suck on her essence, draw breath from her mouth, and offer her mine in return. I bend her backward and push my hips forward, intent on taking her, right here, right now. A growl rips out of me. I tear my mouth from hers, "Bedroom. Now."

She stiffens. "What did you say?"

"I don't repeat myself, sugar." I allow my lips to kick up. "I want inside of you."

"And I want..." Her lips—swollen with the pressure of my kiss—tremble. She flutters her eyelids... "...want..." She inhales.

"What is it?" I glare at her. "Say it."

Her gaze narrows, "...to kick you in the nuts."

I sense her bend her knee, and twist my body aside; I pivot her around at the same time, flip her over to my front so her hips are flush against my crotch. I wrench her arms in front of her and shackle her wrists with my fingers so she's imprisoned in the circle of my arms.

"You were saying?"

"I wasn't," she snarls. "And you're overstepping your boundaries."

I laugh, "I haven't even started. And isn't it time you were honest with yourself?"

"About what?"

"About how you find me irresistible. It's natural, after all."

"Is it?" She glances up at me.

I nod. "It's normal for someone like you to find my presence overwhelming."

"Overwhelming?" She opens and shuts her mouth.

"Yep." I take in her flushed features, the spark that lights up her green eyes, turning them into pools of gold-tinged fire. "I mean, it happens. After all, my charisma, my larger-than-life persona—"

"Your smaller than normal weenie, for which you are clearly compensating with your words."

I smirk. "Aww, come on baby, you and I both know that this—" I push my hips forward, ensuring that every inch of my throbbing length is imprinted against her curves, "is the opposite of small and unlike anything you've seen before."

"A status I mean to keep." Color smears her cheeks.

Is she blushing? She makes a choking sound in her throat... Okay... Oops, maybe not.

"You don't mean it." I smirk.

"I do," she says through gritted teeth, "and if you don't let go of me right now, I'll—"

"You'll?"

"Hey, you two. Are you coming into the kitchen to taste the dessert Amelie created?"

I jerk my chin toward the entrance to the kitchen, where Weston glances between us.

"Unhand me," she huffs.

"In my own time."

"Julia," Amelie calls out from next to Weston, "you okay?"

"Yes, she is," I reply.

"What the hell?" she splutters. "She's speaking to me, not you, you..."

you..."

"We'll be right there. Why don't you go along? We'll follow," I tell them.

"Jules?" Amelie frowns, "Should I wait?"

"Tell her you're fine, and that you'll be along soon enough," I command.

"Why should I lie?" She glowers.

"Because it's the truth," I lie.

"Not."

I click my tongue. "That's the first thing you're changing, this inability to speak your mind."

"Oh, I am more than capable of saying what's on my mind. And right now, you don't want to read my thoughts, trust me."

"On the contrary." I release her, take a step back, only to circle her wrist with my fingers and tug.

She squeaks, but her body follows my direction as I twirl her around to face me, bend her arm behind her, and curve her back. I lean in close enough for us to share breath. "I want to know every last thought of yours, your deepest most intimate secrets, your fears, your desires, what you hate, what you run from..." I frown. "What are you running from?" I lock my gaze with hers, peer into the depths of her green gaze, past the golden embers that crackle and swirl. My breath catches in my chest and sweat pops on my brow. The hell? What am I doing? Why am I holding her captive?

She can do as she wants. I don't know her. I have no claim on her. If I want a woman, all I need to do is snap my fingers and she'll throw herself on the floor, part her legs and offer up everything I desire... Except, I don't. The thrill of success, of fame, of easy lays and meaningless shags that took a piece of my soul with every interaction... All of it pales in comparison to the vital, feisty woman I hold in my arms. How curious. How not what I need right now. What an irritation this is getting to be.

Why the hell had I kissed her in the first place?

I release her and she stumbles back. "Not that I care." I flick my fingers over the front of my leather jacket. "Have a nice life." I brush past her, head toward where Amelie and Weston track my progress. "Your friend was just coming." No pun unintended. I compose my features into a polite facade.

"Rockstar," her voice reaches me.

I swagger forward.

"Aren't you forgetting something?"

Likely not. I always pay my debts, never let another get in the way, nor play with my emotions, so no, I don't think I am. I move forward.

Footsteps sound behind me, then she draws abreast.

"Stop," she demands.

I chuckle. No one tells me what to do. Definitely not my friends. Absolutely not this chit of a woman I've just met.

"If you don't, you'll never find out about the proposition I have for you."

Julia

"Proposition, huh?" He stiffens, then pivots and fixes me with the full force of his blue eyes. Storm clouds before the rain falls, the depths of the sea that I had gazed into, on a trip to Byron Bay. I blink and the mirage clears.

"Wouldn't you like to know?" I force out the words through a throat gone dry.

A slow smirk curls his lips. He bends to thrust his face into mine, "You tell me, babe." He drags a finger down my cheek, "Would I?"

"I think..." I tip up my chin, "you're intrigued." I tug on my earlobe, then shuffle my feet.

"Is that what this is about?" He hooks his finger in the V of my blouse, "You trying to catch my attention? If so, you have it, sugar."

What am I doing? I should have let him walk away, then left here and begun job hunting in earnest. I should be searching for my next job as a nanny, while working on my clay artistry skills. And then what? A lifetime of taking care of others' children...? Not that I don't thrive on that. When I am with little ones, something raging inside of me quietens. This need to give, to nurture, that is so much a part of me, finds an outlet.

Other girls dream of being doctors and pilots... Me? I want kids of my own, a large family, a husband... None of which is looking likely very soon, so... Considering I caught the eye of this... Man, who is definitely out of my comfort zone... My one chance to live voraciously.

To throw caution to the wind and indulge myself in all the ways he'd offered. I mean, why not? I've walked the straight and narrow, and look where that has gotten me? Single, with no prospect of a relationship in sight, while my friends are settling down. Not that it is any reason to offer myself up to this god-like man... Ugh, I am pathetic, putting him up on a pedestal.

So, he is a rock star...and tabloid fodder, a face that launched a thousand memes... And me, the stupid woman who tilts her chin up and declares, "One night."

"What?" he frowns.

"You heard me." Thank god, my voice doesn't tremble, "Give me one night; you and me."

He takes in my features. "You're serious?"

I curl my fingers into a fist at my side, "Why? Are you scared about the earlier reaction you had to me?"

"Reaction, huh?" He tilts his head, "I am sorry to tell you, babe, that kiss did nothing for me."

"So what was that column in your pants when you were plastered to me?"

He looks me up and down, "A physiological reaction brought on by my nearness to a woman, who," he smirks, "just happened to be you, in this situation."

Jerk.

He chuckles, and heat flushes my cheeks. "That's not true and you know it," I mutter.

"Is that right?" he drawls.

I draw in a breath, then jut out my chin, "Prove it."

"What?"

"Prove that you didn't feel anything when you kissed me." What are you doing? Did you just ask him to kiss you again? What the hell, you complete idiot. But do you blame me? That kiss...was something. And how the hell can he deny that it affected him? Maybe I'd imagined that crazy reaction to him. The only way to be sure is to kiss him again, right?

His glance drops to my mouth, "You sure?"

No.

No.

"Yes." I chuckle, "Wouldn't be asking otherwise, now would I?"

"I don't know." He leans in, gets in my space. "It seems to me, you are a sucker for punishment."

"And you're avoiding the challenge."

"Julia?" Amelie calls out, "You guys coming?"

"Two minutes." I hold up my hand.

He smirks. "It will take us a lot longer than that to finish."

I peer at him from under my eyelashes, "Considering you haven't even started—"

He lowers his head until his lips are almost on mine. Almost. His shoulders block out the sight of the room. Heat from his big body pours over me, cocoons me, pulls me in closer, closer. Or maybe it's he who closes the remaining distance between us. Our noses bump, our eyelashes entwine. His lips part; I lick mine.

Then he straightens, "Sorry, not sorry, babe. You're not my type. No offense." He turns away, heads into the kitchen.

I blink, sway for a second. What the hell? How dare he? He's toying with me, is he? I pivot, march into the kitchen, "You stop right there, Rockstar—" Six faces turn to glance at me.

"Uh..." I flush. "Hey..." I clear my throat, "I mean, hello. I mean, I didn't mean it that way. I mean..." I bury my face in my hands. "Forget it. Rewind. Maybe it's best I leave... Come back in and start all over again," I mumble, then backtrack from the scene of my humiliation.

"Jules." Amelie hurries over, and grabs my arm. "Everyone, meet my friend Julia." She turns me to face the crowd of interested people.

There is a chorus of hellos.

I raise a limp hand, "Hi." I wave. "I'm Julia. Call me Jules," I shuffle my feet.

"Lovely to meet you, Jules," a woman with dark hair flowing to her waist calls out. "It's good to have you with us for Christmas."

I jerk my chin, "It's, ah, nice to be here too." I cringe. Nice? Couldn't I have come up with some other adjective? Anything else to enliven the status of my boring life?

Thankfully, the rest don't seem to notice. They turn away to talk amongst themselves. Everyone, including the rock star, who turns his back on me. Is that good or bad? At least, I am not at the receiving end of those glowering glares of his...the panty-melting kind, I mean... Which, I admit, I miss already. Damn it, why am I so shaken? I rub my fingers on the fabric of my jeans-clad thigh.

"I think it's best I leave while I still have some dignity intact," I mumble. "Not that I have any left. What the hell was I thinking earlier?"

"I don't think you were thinking at all." Amelie chuckles.

"You're right about that." I scowl. I had reacted to the presence of the dominating, larger-than-life male who prowls over to join the other men clustered on the other side of the island. And why the hell am I still watching him. "I... I shouldn't have come."

"What nonsense." Amelie winds her arm through mine, "I want you here with me. After all, it's not every day that a woman gets engaged, huh?" She holds up her hand and I stare at the sapphire that glitters on the ring around her finger.

"It's gorgeous," I say sincerely, even as my heart twists inside of my chest. Shit, I will not be envious, will not. She deserves all the happiness in the world. I turn and throw my arms around her. "Congratulations." I squeeze her shoulders. "How did you meet him?"

"We met at Summer's wedding, then ended up double-booking the same cottage over the festive season."

"No," I gasp.

"Yes." She nods. "I thought the sparks between Weston and I were pretty explosive, but I've changed my mind."

"Oh?" I lean back, peer into her face, "Why's that?"

"Because, the chemistry between you and Damian is enough to set this house on fire." She stares at me meaningfully.

"Hmm." I glance away, unable to meet her eyes. There's something between me and the rock star, all right. Some crazy connection that's throwing me off kilter and making me act so out of character. One night. Had I actually propositioned him? What the hell had I been thinking? My cheeks flush. Good thing he'd snubbed me, huh?

The same woman who'd welcomed me earlier totters over to us in her stilettos. "Hi," she says in a breathless voice, "I'm Isla."

"Jules." I shake her hand.

She pulls me in for a hug, "Soooo nice to meet you." Her embrace is warm and effusive.

"Hey," I pat her back, "so, you're Amelie's friend, huh?"

"As are you." She leans back, her face wreathed in a big smile, "Which makes us friends-in-law, huh?" She giggles.

I blink. Wow, the optimism pouring off of this woman... No wonder, she and Amelie get along. Unlike me... The cynical, non-believer in love, or men, for that matter. Hell, I so don't belong here. "I need a drink," I declare.

"That's my girl." Isla grabs my arm and drags me to the corner of the room...opposite from where the rest of the crowd—including the rock star—is huddled. "What do you fancy?" She rubs her hands together.

"Why don't you let me do this?" I reach for the bottle of tequila, pour it into the blender, follow it up with the lime juice, the orange liqueur. I add in the agave and the syrup, followed by kosher salt, then blend it all together.

"You've done this before," Isla comments.

"Yep." The one thing good about being in Australia... I had partied my ass off...when I was not working. Which had been a surprise. I was—am—a loner, but being in a foreign country had been freeing. I could let go of my inhibitions. Somehow, it had felt like I wouldn't be judged.

I pour the mixture into the margarita glasses that Isla helpfully provides, then top them off with garnish. "Here you go."

"Ooh, this looks good." Isla gulps down a mouthful, then smacks her lips, "Woman, I almost came from that sip."

I giggle. "If only it were that easy."

"Tell me about it." She shakes her head, "Have you ever come with someone fingering you?"

"Never," I shake my head.

We both turn to Amelie, whose cheeks redden.

"Oh, don't even ask her." Isla tosses her hair over her shoulder. "Bitch has a new fiancé, who is a surgeon, so he's clearly good with his fingers, in more ways than one."

"Who's good with his fingers?" A woman in a pink onesie with glitter down the front saunters over to join us.

"Nothing you need to worry about, Summer," Isla scoffs. She leans in close to me. "And another who clearly has had too many O's, courtesy of her rich bastard of a husband," she says in a whisper loud enough for the rest of them to hear.

"Not my fault that the Seven are men of many talents." Summer chuckles.

"The Seven?" I tilt my head.

"That's what the media calls the guys." Amelie nods toward the men. "And that includes your rock star." She smirks.

"Not my rock star."

"Oh, are we talking about the encounter between Damian and Julia?" Another woman, a brunette in a perfectly-tailored dress, glides over to us.

"We are not," I snap.

"Yep," Isla confirms.

"Totally." Amelie nods.

"Gosh, that was some kiss, huh?" Summer fans herself.

Heat sears the back of my neck. Of course, they'd all noticed that. I offer the brunette a glass of the cocktail, and she declines. "I'm sticking to water." She points to her glass. "I'm Victoria, by the way."

"Are you also pregnant?" I joke.

"I am, actually." She nods.

I splutter, then cough and place my drink back on the island. "Jeez, sorry."

"No worries." She chuckles, "I'm still getting used to the idea, myself."

I glance at her flat belly, "Are you in the first trimester?"

"I am." She nods. "I'd have preferred for the others not to know until later, but the Seven are so close..."

"Or maybe they just like to pretend that way," Isla scoffs. "The way they get into arguments with each other, you'd think they were enemies."

"Wanker," a male voice rings out from behind us as if to punctuate her words.

There's the sound of something crashing into wood. I glance up to find Damian and another man as tall as he is, with dark hair and piercing eyes, engaged in arm wrestling.

"The other one's called Sinclair; he belongs to me," Summer chirps. "Who do you think will win, by the way? Yours or mine?"

"Mine," I reply, then press my lips together. "I mean, he's not mine." I jerk my chin toward the rock star.

"Freudian slip, huh?" Isla exchanges a glance with Summer.

"Freudian nothing," I scoff. "I'm simply punch drunk with jet lag, is all." And maybe a little bit worried about finding my next job. Okay, I am very worried about my situation. The money in my bank account will barely stretch to a few more weeks. No way, am I going to borrow from my family. My mum had warned me against taking off with my boyfriend. I'd ignored her, to my detriment.

Wouldn't she love to say I told you so, now. My shoulders sag. That's not fair. She's not like that, but I'm too embarrassed to tell her. As for borrowing from Amelie? Nope. She is already doing so much for me. No, I need to find a job quickly, though the agencies I'd called prior to travelling home to London had warned me there weren't any live positions at the moment. None had sounded very hopeful about an assignment coming up soon either. And hell, if I don't need a job quickly.

"Or maybe you're reeling from that kiss, huh?" Isla chortles.

I groan. "Can we pretend that never happened?"

"Nope." Summer laughs.

Isla chuckles. "Remember, I've seen each of the women here succumb to one of the Seven. Once they set their sights on you, you don't stand a chance."

"And you?" I frown. "What about you?"

"I'm busy building my wedding planning business." She gathers her long hair over one shoulder. "I don't have time for such shenanigans."

"Like we did?" Amelie snorts. "But trust me, when you know...you know."

"That's how it was for you and Weston, huh?" I ask.

"I met him and I had this sinking feeling..." She presses a hand to her stomach. "I was hot and cold all at once, know what I mean?"

"Isn't that normal in London weather?" I say dryly.

She laughs, "Oh, trust me, it's a completely different sensation." She looks me up and down, "Is that how you felt when you saw Damian?"

"Nope," I lie, then chug down the rest of my margarita, cough, and place the now-empty, soup-dish proportioned glass back on the counter.

"Prove it," Isla challenges.

"What?"

"Show us that whatever is between the two of you didn't affect you."

"What are you talking about?" I half laugh.

"You heard me, girlfriend." She taps a finger on her chin. "Demonstrate that he doesn't make your knees go weak and your pussy all moist."

"Isla," I scold. "Mind your, uh, p's and q's."

Isla chokes on her drink.

Amelie slow blinks, "Keep up the bad jokes and you'll have won all of us over in no time."

"All of whom?"

She makes a circular motion with her fingers, "The collective."

"Is there a collective?"

"Given you've already caught Daddy D's eye, I'd say you are on your way to becoming one of us," Victoria adds.

"Daddy D?" I frown, "Why do you call him that?" That's not how the media refers to him, at least.

Summer, Victoria and Amelie exchange glances. Then Summer pipes up, "It's because he's the oldest of the Seven."

"He's not that old." I scoff, "He's what, thirty-two?" That's what his Wikipedia page indicates. What? So, I sneaked a peak, or two, at it.

"He's closer to thirty-five," Amelie offers.

Isla wrinkles her nose. "Though you have to admit, the years sit well on him. Imagine you could be bratty with him," she waggles her eyebrows, "and Daddy D would be only too happy to dole out the punishments, huh? Bet you'd enjoy that too."

I throw up my hands, "Seriously, you guys need to stop with the trying to get us together." Speaking of, I turn back to where Damian and Sinclair are arm-wrestling.

Damian's neck ripples with tendons. He leans in, jaw clenched. The biceps of his arm bulge and he growls deep in his throat. A shiver runs down my spine; moisture laces my core.

Gosh, the rock star going all caveman-like is bloody hot. And somehow, so different from what I expected him to be. His social media used to be about him on stage performing, or recording in his studio, or else on the red carpet, accompanying one celebrity or another. There isn't much more of his personal life in the scene I am looking at right now. So why does it feel so intimate? I am merely a stranger who ran into him by chance. Providence. Kismet. Whatever you want to call it. And what are you going to do about it, huh? You going to take fate into your own hands and do something with it?

Damian's shoulders stretch the width of his T-shirt. A vein throbs at his temple, then he smashes Sinclair's fist into the surface of the island. "I won," he fist-pumps in the air.

Sinclair straightens in his suit, which seems to have been tailor-made for him. There is so much designer wear in the room—the kind you don't normally see on catwalks because they are created exclusively for the kind of men that these Seven are.

"Where are the others?" I frown.

"Others?" Isla enquires.

"You all referred to Seven. I count four in the room."

"Baron's the secret one. No one knows about his whereabouts," Summer muses.

"And Arpad and the Father aren't here," Victoria supplies.

"Hold on." I turn to her, "Did you say Father?"

Isla nods. "Edward's a priest," she replies. "The incident impacted him so much, it urged him to find his calling, apparently."

"The incident?" I tilt my head.

Amelie nods, "The Seven were kidnapped together and held for ransom when they were in their pre-teens. And that kind of shared experience... It binds you together for life. Know what I mean?"

"I let you win this round. Doesn't mean I'll go easy on you next time," Sinclair's cold voice cuts through the space.

Damian chortles in response.

"Excuses, excuses." He pokes a finger in Sinclair's chest, "You're getting soft, you wanker. Admit it, the old ball and chain is weighing you down."

"Perhaps it's giving me a purpose?" Sinclair glances past him at Summer. His features light up in a smile that's so open, so real, so everything, that my heart thumps in my chest.

He prowls past Damian, and heads to her. Summer meets him half-way and the two kiss.

The women behind me ooh and aah. A ball of emotion blocks my throat. Damn it, what's wrong with me? It's just a man kissing his wife, and pulling her to him and ravaging her mouth thoroughly. Jesus, that's hot as hell, and now I feel like a voyeur. I glance past them to where Damian watches, a bored look in his eyes.

"Go get a room, you guys," he taunts.

Sinclair straightens, then grins down at Summer. "I think I might do just that." He swoops down and tosses her up over his shoulder.

She yelps, "Sinner, what the hell?"

Sinclair raps her on her backside and she squeaks, "Sinner, behave."

"Not what you told me the last time I took you over my knee, my darling wife."

My cheeks heat.

He marches past me, carrying the now-giggling Summer. No doubt, to make hot, heavy love to her. My belly knots and sensations ripple down my spine. Damn it, there is way too much chemistry between the couples in this room, not to mention all that testosterone from the gathered men.

"Well, look who we have here." A new male voice sounds behind me. I turn and have to look up, all the way up, to meet the piercing gaze of another man.

Julia

"I'm Arpad." He holds out his hand.

"You're one of the Seven." I place my palm in his much larger one.

"My reputation precedes me?" He smirks, then bends to kiss my knuckles. I blink. Gosh, each one of the Seven is more lethal than the last. I mean, put them all together, and honestly, no woman stands a chance. It's like having a range of delectable thoroughbreds preening and vying for attention. Not that any of them are horses... Well, okay, they are stallions, all of them, especially the man who's glowering at me from the sidelines. Continuing to ignore Damian, I focus my attention on Arpad, "So what are you doing here?"

"Yeah, something I want to know as well." A hard voice sounds from somewhere behind and above me. Heat sears my back, curls around me, rolls straight down to the triangle of heated flesh between my legs. I shiver.

Arpad looks from me to the man standing behind me. "Rockstar," he drawls, "something bothering you?"

"You," Damian snaps.

I gasp, turn to shoot the rock star a glance.

He glares at Arpad, who chuckles. "I see all that time you've spent on R&R isn't doing much for your disposition. Not that I blame you, considering your Christmas single flopped."

Damian growls. He actually growls. "Fuck off, Beauchamp."

Arpad's lips twist, "If you fancy a fight, I'd be only too happy to oblige."

"Oh, yeah?" Damian steps up to stand chest to chest with the other guy. "Don't think I'll back down."

"I'm counting on it." Arpad flicks open the buttons on his long-sleeved shirt, then rolls up his cuffs.

Damian shrugs out of his leather jacket—Why the hell did he put it back on?—and hands it to me. "Are you really going to do this?" I hiss.

He doesn't reply. Typical. I grab his jacket— Why the hell am I doing that? I should simply throw it down on the floor and walk away. Instead, I slip it on. It's big enough to dwarf me, and his scent... Oh, his spicy, dark essence envelops me, and I swear, my ovaries spasm.

"Step back," Damian orders.

"What?"

He turns, leans in toward me, and I skitter back.

His lips kick up in that smirk that would give Billy Idol a run for his money... And Damian Savage has far more presence.

"Good." He nods. "Now stay there."

"What the—?" I scowl, take a step forward, when Isla grabs my hand.

"Stay," she insists.

"But."

"Trust me." She lowers her voice, "You don't want to poke the beast right now."

I stare at her, "You make him sound like some primitive species."

"Which is what they are. Primal to the core, especially when it comes to their women."

"You have much experience?"

"Only from the outside," she firms her lips. "It's also why I've sworn never to be mixed up with them."

"Famous last words," Amelie drawls. "That's what I told myself, and now look." She waves her left hand in the air.

Isla makes a gagging sound. "I'm so tired of all my friends falling for one of the Seven, which is why I am so pleased you are here, Julia." She hooks her arm with mine.

"You are?"

She nods. "You're not going to get caught up with that self-entitled rock star."

"I'm not?"

She shakes her head. "You have too much common sense to become another of his conquests."

I frown, "You mean, I'm not his type?"

"You are the kind of woman who'd rather take things into her own hands, and set your own terms."

"So, I should go after him, rather than the other way around?" I muse.

"All I'm saying is, don't give in too easily," Isla urges. "Rock star or not, make him work before allowing him close to you."

"Only, don't think it's easy to get one of the Seven out of your mind, once you get involved with them." Victoria slips onto one of the barstools, places her glass of water on the island. "I set out to seduce Saint—but then I fell too." She jerks her chin in the direction of the large glowering man who stands with his arms crossed over his chest.

"I don't see you protesting much, girlfriend," Isla huffs.

"At some point, I realized it was best to give in and enjoy the ride." Amelie looks at me. "Know what I mean?"

"Are you trying to tell me something?" I frown.

"What I am saying..." Victoria smiles—with that soul-deep contented smile that only those who have found their other halves seem to wear like it is some kind of secret, which I admit, from where I am standing, it is.

"You're saying...?" I prompt her.

"That you best not underestimate what entangling in any form with the Seven means," Victoria replies. "Once you step into their circle of influence, you won't be able to catch your breath. The force of their personalities will overwhelm you, and by the time you come to your senses, it'll be too late."

I clear my throat, "You make it sound like they are some kind of cult."

"Not a cult." Her features grow serious. "But they are a tribe. These men are wild beasts who wear a veneer of sophistication so they may pretend to fit into society."

O-k-a-y.

"They may fight with each other, but because of the incident, they'll always be united in ways we can never understand," Amelie adds.

"So," I turn to where Damian and Arpad circle each other in the space that the rest of the men have cleared, "they are still hurting from the trauma of the past?"

She nods. "Which means, when the right woman comes along... Well, let's just say, it accelerates the healing process in a way that is life changing."

Damian throws a blow, Arpad ducks, then drops down and kicks the rock star's legs out from under him. I draw in a breath, take a step forward, but Damian springs up to his feet and lands his fist in Arpad's pretty face. Blood explodes from Arpad's nose and he staggers back. Damian cracks his neck, raises his arms in mock victory, "You're going soft, Beauchamp."

Arpad shakes his head, says something unintelligible.

Damian laughs, "Guess the round is mine then."

"Now's your chance," Isla coaxes.

"What?"

"If you want to take your future into your own hands, instead of allowing the Seven to get to you, this is your opportunity."

Too late. Damian has already made an impact on me. The chemistry between us is off-the-charts crazy. She's right about one thing, though. I am done being an onlooker to my own life. This time, I am going to steer my own fate. I am going to throw caution to the wind, live life to the fullest, and then walk away with my ego and my heart intact.

One last dalliance before I find a good man to settle down with and live my quiet, boring life.

I hitch my bag over my shoulder, then walk forward, still wearing his jacket. "Hey, Rockstar," I call out. "This is your last chance to accept my challenge. You in or out? Do you have the balls?"

Weston whistles.

Saint snickers.

Damian jerks his head toward me, "Balls, huh? I'll show you my balls all right, sugar. I—"

That's when Arpad closes the distance and lands a punch to Damian's head.

Damian

I come to with a start to find I am on my back on the floor of the kitchen of Weston's apartment. "Bloody hell." The pain ripples down my spine. I raise my hand and my knuckles throb; my shoulder screams in protest. "What the hell happened?" I open my eyes and her green gaze clashes with mine. Delicately arched eyebrows, an upturned nose, pink lips that curve in a bow so perfect it should be illegal. She flicks out her tongue to lick her lips and I feel the tug all the way to my groin. "Juliet?"

"You are no Romeo," she scoffs.

"You don't know that yet."

"I know that you can't hold a fight." She frowns.

"Only because you distracted me," I sneer.

"Not my fault that you have the attention span of a child."

"Child is the father of man, after all," I mutter. What the hell? Did I just say that out loud? Clearly, that blow to my head ruffled up my brains, not to mention my thinking process.

"And Daffodils are my favorite flower," she grouses.

"Not bad. You got the Wordsworth reference." I smirk.

Damn it, my cheeks hurt, and clearly, I am a bloody mess.

"Didn't take you for the poetic kind." She sniffs. "And, actually, I do prefer the Bard to Wordsworth."

I open my mouth and she frowns. "Don't say the obvious."

"You don't know what I was going to say," I point out.

"I do," she grumbles, "and yes, my mother loved his plays. She wanted to call me Juliet. My dad thought Juliet a bit much, so they settled for Julia." She smiles a little. "It's one of the things my mom and I like to do together."

"What else do you do together?" I peer into her face. "Other than read Shakespeare?"

"None of your business."

"You sure?" I look her up and down. "After all, you're the one who challenged me, despite being a stranger."

"Hardly a stranger," she huffs.

"Just because you see me on tabloid headlines doesn't mean you know me."

"Just because I look like the quiet, mousy kind—

"You, and mousy? Have you seen yourself in a mirror?" I laugh, then wince when my right eye throbs, "Ouch."

"Frozen peas." She glances up, speaks to someone out of my line of sight, "Is there a bag of frozen something to put on his bruised eye?"

"Arpad, asshole," I groan. "I am going to get you for this, mofo."

Arpad thrusts his face into my line of sight, "Looking none the worse for wear, Savage." He grins, "Apparently, I upgraded your pretty boy looks."

"Apparently, you don't value your life." I swipe out with my fist; he swerves.

"My, my, getting beaten didn't do much for your temperament, I see," he muses.

"Sod off." I lurch up to sitting position, the world sways, my stomach churns, and... No fucking way, am I going to be sick. I shake my head and the ringing in my ears worsens. How the hell did I manage to get myself into this situation?

"Here, let me." Julia reaches over with a bag of frozen peas in her hand. I snatch it from her, hold it to my aching eye. The pain instantly recedes. I pin her with my open eye. "This is all your fault," I glare at her. "If you hadn't called out to me, I wouldn't have turned and given this joker here an opening."

"Don't flatter yourself." Arpad chuckles, "I would have beaten you anyway, though I confess, your girlfriend's presence sure helped distract you."

"Not my girlfriend," I protest.

"He's the last person I'd choose for a boyfriend," she snaps at the same time.

I frown up at her, "Not the impression I got earlier, babe."

"The proposition I had in mind was not of the relationship variety."

"Oh?" I lower the bag of peas, "Funny, I'd put you down for the rainbows and unicorns and shit kind of woman."

"Umm." Arpad stares between us, "You two sure you don't want to borrow one of Weston's spare rooms? He has enough of them, god knows. And by the way, do you promise to name your first born after me?"

"Shut up," I say at the same time as her.

She scowls at me.

I glower back at her.

Arpad rises to his feet. "Uh, I guess I need to see a man about a dog."

"Don't come back in a hurry," I call out after his retreating figure.

"I think Victoria needs me." Saint prowls away in Arpad's wake.

"I'll be right outside, Jules," Isla calls out. "You need any help—"

"She won't," I snap.

"Uh, okay," Isla says brightly, "but, you know, if you want back-up..."

"I don't." Julia turns to her. "In the state that the rock star is right now, I doubt he poses any danger to me."

What the hell? How dare she dismiss me that easily?

"Hold on a second." I lean forward, then groan when my hurt eye chooses that moment to set off a series of spasms that thud against my brain. "Ow," I groan.

"Like I said," she nods to her friend, "I think my virtue is safe for the moment." She smiles.

Isla pivots and leaves.

"I'll show you how safe you are with me," I reach for her with my free hand.

She scoots back, shakes her head. "Now, now, you're hardly in a position to misbehave, Rockstar. At least, wait for the swelling of your eye to go down."

"The only thing swollen is between my legs, and trust me, it's not going away. As for anything going down..."

She sucks in a breath and flushes, then shakes her head. "Stop joking around."

"Who's joking? I'm being very serious." I look her up and down. "Since I met you, you've been a pain in my side, and in other parts, and by the way, that proposition of yours? It's unacceptable."

"It is?"

"Yeah." I nod. "I don't need a night. Give me an hour and I'll draw enough orgasms from you to last you a lifetime."

"My, my," she scoffs, "someone has a big ego."

"Not the only thing that is big—"

She opens her mouth to respond.

I raise my hand. "And you know it's true, considering you've been stalking me online."

She reddens. "I haven't."

I click my tongue. "Don't lie now, and by the way, the answer is yes."

"Yes?"

"To the question you have in your mind."

"Which is?"

"That it's eleven inches."

She drops her gaze to my crotch. "So, not in competition with Dirk Diggler, then?"

"Very good, though if there were a competition, I'd win." I nod. "Not that I'd have expected you to have watched Boogie Nights."

"Because I'm female?" She scowls.

"No, because it's considered porn in polite circles, and also, you're welcome."

She jerks her chin up, her cheeks fiery. "For what?" She clears her throat.

"For the chance to touch it." I smirk.

"Aargh," she makes a gagging sound, but her cheeks go pink, "As if I want to do that." She swipes her hair over her shoulder.

"Sure, you do." I toss the bag of peas aside, hold out my hand.

She glances at my palm, and her features grow wary.

"I won't bite," I assure her.

"I wouldn't bet on it."

"You're right," I tilt my head, "I can't make that promise where you are concerned. In fact, I am sure by the time the hour is over, I'll have eaten you out many times over."

"What the—" She throws up her hands. "Can't believe you said that out aloud."

"Believe it, baby, and I am just getting started."

She stares, then firms her lips and shakes her head. "Maybe this was a bad idea."

"Maybe you're getting cold feet."

"Maybe..." Her gaze narrows. "Maybe I finally realized how uncivilized a man you are."

"Maybe that's what attracts you to me." I reach toward her.

She evades me, then springs up to her feet.

I grab her ankle, and she tumbles straight into my lap.

"What the—?" she splutters, her hair about her shoulders.

"Well, hello there," I purr.

She pushes against my chest.

I wrap my arms more tightly around her. "Lost your nerve, hmm? Didn't take you for a coward."

She tips up her chin and her green eyes glow with an inner fire. There she is. There's the fighting spirit in her that has made this encounter so much more enjoyable from the beginning.

"Didn't take you for a...a..."

"Handsome, charismatic, larger-than-life personality?" I offer.

"More like an obnoxious, over-the-top, sleazy douche."

I allow another smirk to curl my lips. "I think the lady doth protest too much."

"Do you always speak in such archaic prose?"

"Only when I am in your presence." I chuckle.

"Hmm." She peers up at me from her position in my lap, and yeah, we are both on the floor of Weston's kitchen, considering I'd gone down like a light when Arpad, that bastard, had KO'd me—a favor which, by the way, I am going to return with compounded interest. You can count on it.

"Well?" I tilt my head. "You have until I count to five."

"Five?" She wrinkles up her forehead. "What do you mean?"

"Stay and be kissed, or run away, and we'll forget that you chickened-out on your so-called proposition."

She pouts, her lips twisting into a sexy 'O' that has my groin tightening further.

"Five." I start the countdown.

She scans my features, her gaze landing on my lips. "I think..." she swallows, "I think that—"

"Four."

She licks her lips, glances left, then right.

"Three."

She wriggles her bottom against the thickness that tents my groin.

A growl rips up my chest. "Two."

I lean in; she gulps.

I hold her gaze and her pupils dilate. Her chest heaves. The pulse at the base of her throat increases the intensity of its pace.

I lower my mouth to hers, stop when there's less than a millimeter that separates us. "One." I press my lips to hers. That's when my phone pings.

Julia

"Your phone." I gasp and sidle back.

"Fuck that." He swoops down, clamps his fingers on my neck. "You had your chance to leave, Flower. You lost it; now, you're mine."

"And you are what, a cave man?" I huff.

"Only when it comes to you." His eyebrows knit; he scrutinizes my features. "What is it about you, that makes me want to tear through your tightly controlled veneer and expose the passion that seethes under the surface?"

"Who uses verbs like seethe?" I scoff.

"I'm a song writer, and a rock star, remember?"

"You forgot the 'has-been' part," I retort.

His jaw tics and a vein throbs at his temple. His blue eyes blaze with silver sparks that flare and coil, then fade away, leaving a mirrored coldness in their wake.

"So, the flower has thorns, huh?" He peruses my features. "I have you in my grasp. May as well make the most of it, hmm?"

He lowers his face. I turn my head, or try to, only to find I can't move, because he tightens his grasp on my neck, so I have no choice but to meet his kiss head on. I clamp my lips shut.

He swipes his tongue across my mouth. A shiver runs down my spine, my belly trembles, my limbs shake, and damn him, but this nearness to him... It's potent—a drugging, mind-melding kind of force that draws me to him, that coaxes me to open myself up, throw myself at him and ask him to lick the lips between my legs too. Gah, what the hell? Now I am thinking in pornographic detail, something I don't normally indulge in. Clearly, it's his proximity that's affecting me. "Please," I whisper against his beautiful mouth. "Please ..."

He brings up his other hand to cup my cheek. "What is it?"

Heat sinks into my blood, arrows to the space around my heart. My core clenches, my toes curl... Jesus, somehow his gentleness is even more potent than his brute force.

I raise my hand, wrap my fingers around his wide wrist. The rough hairs abrade my skin. Goosebumps pop on my forearms.

He stays quiet, his lips so close to mine that if I lean in a millimeter more our noses will bump. He stares into my eyes, holding my gaze, searching inside of me, finding the parts of me I have never before revealed to the world.

"Please," I whisper. "Please...don't."

"Don't what?"

"Don't stop."

He closes the distance between us, fits his mouth to mine. I open my lips, and he thrusts his tongue inside, draws on my breath, sucks on me like I am the last note in one of his songs. I close my eyes, tilt my chin up, grip his shoulder and move in closer. Push my breasts into his chest. A shudder grips him. He tears his mouth from mine, "Leave here with me."

He meets my gaze and my mouth dries; my belly trembles. How can his smirk be so hot, so filled with a promise that I don't dare acknowledge?

"I don't do this normally," I tip up my chin. "I'm not that kind of a woman."

Why the hell do I care what he thinks of me? I'd all but told him that I was up for a fling, so why the hell am I delaying now?

"What kind?" He frowns.

"You know... The kind who sleeps around?" I mumble.

"There's no chance of either of us sleeping tonight." His lips curl.

"Oh."

"Keep your mouth open and I won't be able to resist stuffing it." His grin widens. "And it won't be with Christmas pudding, either."

My core clenches and my pulse thuds at my temples. Why the hell is his crudeness such a turn on?

He drags my hand to his crotch, massages his impressive length.

I squeeze his hardness and he draws in a sharp breath.

"It's gonna feel even better when I'm inside of you," he growls.

"I really never jump into bed with strangers," I feel compelled to say.

"And yet it was you who proposed we spend a night together," he points out.

"About that..." My cheeks heat, "I've never done that before; this is the first time I've been this bold."

"I know," he rumbles.

"You do?"

He nods, "But then, you also know a lot about me, don't you?" He stares into my eyes and heat flushes my cheeks.

"You...you're right," I mumble. "I may have, uh, had a small crush on you."

He stares.

"Okay, fine, so maybe I followed your coverage in the press."

He clicks his tongue.

"Fine, fine." I throw up my hands. "I stalked your social media. I know you have a type that you go for."

"What type is that?"

"Blonde, curvy, willowy."

He looks me up and down, "You'll do."

"Jerk." I scramble away and jump to my feet. "Forget this conversation ever happened."

"A bit late for that, Flower."

I grab my backpack from where I'd dropped it on the floor earlier, then turn to leave.

He wraps his fingers around my ankle again. "One hour," he repeats. "Give me one hour, and if, at the end of it, you are still standing, you can leave."

I glance down to where his thick fingers shackle me. "Is that a threat?"

"A promise."

"One hour?" I purse my lips.

"Starting now." His eyes gleam. He releases his grip on my ankle and rises to his feet...and keeps rising.

"Just one hour?" I search his features.

"That's all I'm asking for." He holds out his hand. He sounds sincere; bet it's all an act though. I stare down at his hand, then back at his face.

"Well?" he coaxes, lips curved in a smile that could charm the panties off of many a woman. And has. The bad news—my knickers are damp too. Damn it, I can't accept. And if I refuse? I'll never forgive myself for passing up the opportunity to find out what it was to be brought to orgasm by Big D alphahole himself. Besides, I'm the one who'd started this insane sequence of events. I can't back out now, can I? I jerk my chin.

"Is that a yes?"

I nod again.

"I need to hear you say it."

"Yes." I swallow, reach for his hand, when he pulls back.

"I changed my mind."

"What?" I blink, as he bends his knees, then scoops me up and throws me over his shoulder.

"Hey," I squeal, "put me down."

"You promised me an hour. Now we do things my way."

"What if I don't...want to?"

He stalks toward the door of the kitchen. "Trust me, Flower. I promise, you won't regret it."

8

Julia

"Famous last words." I glance around the apartment on the 65th floor of The Shard. Bloody hell, this has to be the only apartment at this level in London. I mean, I had no idea there were apartments in The Shard—the tallest building in London—but there you go. You learn something new every day. Like...the fact that I hadn't resisted him as he'd hauled me out of Weston's apartment and into the elevator. We'd ridden down in silence and then he'd led me to his bike.

Yep! The big bad rock star drives a road hog... A massive Harley, which had been pure sex between my thighs... Okay, almost as sexy as having Mr. Grumpyants Rockstar there... Gah, stop thinking about that.

He'd made a smooth exit from the Christmas Party. I have to give him credit for that. Not that I'd wanted to be there a second longer. Not when almost everyone there had seemed to be in love, or one half of a devoted couple, not to mention the level of bromance that exists between the men... They hate each other, and clearly, would also do anything for each other... The kind of circle of friends I've always longed for...and never had. Well, except for Amelie, who is one of the few who's survived the transition from childhood to adulthood. So, there's that.

Both she and Isla had stepped in as Damian had carried me out. They'd asked me if I was okay, and I'd assured them I was in full possession of my faculties and was leaving with Damian of my own free will... Ha! If only that were true.

I dig my feet into the lush carpet in the apartment. This is bloody prime real estate in the heart of London. I knew this guy was successful, but somehow, being here in his place...brings home just how out of my league he is. I walk over to the floor to ceiling windows that comprise an entire side wall of the bedroom. London stretches out below me... Picture postcard perfect... Unlike my bloody life, which is turning out to be the fodder of a B-grade romance movie... Minus the happy ending, which this association with out-of-my league, sexy-as-hell rock star guarantees I will not have.

I place my palm against the glass, which feels cool to my touch. Why the hell am I so feverish? Besides... I pull out my phone from my backpack. Forty minutes of the allocated sixty have already passed, and I haven't orgasmed once. Maybe he changed his mind, huh? Perhaps this is just a way of... What? Showing me the inside of his bedroom? I shake my hair back from my shoulders. Nah, that doesn't make sense. He'd all but whisked me here, without giving me the slightest chance to reconsider, so where the hell is he?

He'd stepped out into the other room to make a few calls, he'd said, and that had been—I look at my phone— ten minutes ago now.

"Miss me?" Heat sears my back at the same time that his voice sounds from behind me.

I swallow and my knees threaten to buckle. I drop the phone into my backpack, then lower it to the floor. "Of course, not," I stammer.

"Liar." He places his face close to mine. "You can leave anytime."

"I know."

"I'm not keeping you here."

I start to turn my head, but he clicks his tongue, "Keep looking ahead."

"But—"

I sense him shake his head. "Eyes forward," he orders.

"I am not your possession...something that you can manipulate," I protest.

"You sure about that, Flower?"

"I hate that name."

"Lying again?"

I stiffen, "Of course, not. Why would I? I—"

He steps away. The heat of his body recedes and a chill crawls up my spine. I shiver, stay poised, forehead pressed into the long floor-to-ceiling windows.

"Why are you here?"

The rough edge of his voice wraps about my shoulders, sinks into my blood. My toes curl. Hell, why am I turned on by the harsh edge of his tone, huh?

"You know why," I mumble.

"I didn't hear you." I hear the smirk in his voice. Jerk.

"I said, you know why," I repeat, a little louder this time.

"Do I?"

"Of course, you do," I snap.

"Then say it aloud. Ask me for what you want."

I bite on the inside of my lip. I want to ask him. I do, but damn him, he knows why I am here, so why is he making me repeat it? "No," I mumble under my breath.

"What's that?"

"I said, no!'

Whack! Pain grips my backside. "What the hell—?" I howl. "You slapped me?" I turn my head to see his face, ready to rip into him.

He jerks his chin up. "Stay facing forward."

I grit my teeth and comply. "Why...?" I stutter, "Why did you—?"

"You don't get to ask the questions." He spansks me again.

I cry out. "Oh, and you can?" I sputter.

He slaps my butt and the pain blooms up my spine. Tears spring up in my eyes, and moisture blooms between my legs. What the hell? I've never been spanked before... Hell, all of my previous partners have been... Civilized, disciplined... Boring? I shake my head. No, no, no, don't go there. I want him to hold the door open for me, just as long as he slaps my ass when I walk past him. What the hell am I thinking? I mean, don't get me wrong. I'd prefer a man who breaks the headboard of my bed rather than my heart, right?

I snicker aloud, then sense him straighten behind me. "What's so funny?"

"Nothing," I mumble.

"Something is." He palms my butt.

I shiver. "You...you...don't want to know."

"Oh, but I do." He drags his knuckles up the valley between my butt cheeks and I shudder. "Damian," I whisper, "please..."

"Please what?"

"Please don't."

He slaps my arse again and I whimper. He spansks each arse cheek one after the other. I groan. He does it again. I press my forehead into the glass, flatten my palm against the glass barrier and thrust my butt out. More. I want more.

He steps back. "Your time is up."

"Bu...but... We spent most of the hour in transit to get here."

"London traffic." He shakes his head. "It can be a bitch, right?"

"But what about my, uh...my..."

"Say it, babe." I hear the grin in his voice. What a bastard. He knows why he invited me here. What does he want me to do, beg for my orgasms?

"That would be a start."

"So now you can read my mind?" I huff.

"I wouldn't be as successful as I am if I weren't perceptive."

"An aptitude you've clearly lost, considering your last two albums were flops, as was your Christmas single."

Silence. A beat, then another. The hair on the nape of my neck rises.

"You're right."

"I am?"

"Of course. It's no secret that my career is in the toilet, but I'll tell you one thing I'm still good at."

"What?"

"Denying bratty women their orgasms."

"No, no, no!" I turn, and this time he doesn't stop me.

"Yes." He nods, then turns to leave.

"Don't you dare, Rockstar," I snarl. "You come right back here and finish what you started."

"Oh, that reminds me. I forgot... One more thing..." He glares at me over his shoulder. "You won't come until I give you permission." Turning, he stalks off.

Damian

"What the fuck was I thinking?" I grab my dick and pump it once, then again. The cold water pours over me. I wince as goosebumps dot my skin. Not that any of it helps with the bloody hard-on that I've had since refusing to put her and myself out of this insane misery. Since I'd left the apartment last night, I had jerked off at least four times, but not even that had helped.

I pound my forehead into the wall of the shower.

Pain shoots through my head. Not that it helps with the problem between my legs. I swipe my cock from base to head again. The water beats against my shoulders, runs down my chest, drips from my balls. I'd all but come in my pants yesterday, and that had been from spanking her. The curve of her butt, the indentation between her arse cheeks, the way she'd thrust out her hips to fit into the palm of my hand. Fuck. The blood rushes to my groin and my shaft lengthens.

Her scent had filled my senses, her soft hair flowing about her face, reflecting the glow of the city that had poured in through the windows. Good thing I hadn't brought her home. If I had, I wouldn't have been able to turn and leave as I had. Her anger and frustration had been palpable in the hotel room, and her arousal—by god, that sweet, sugary scent of her had been overpowering in that space.

Enough to make me want to turn and march right back and take her against that window. To turn her back to face the pane, part her thighs, and sink into her moist softness. She'd have taken all of me in as I'd pumped into her, sheathed myself in her tight channel, even as I'd strummed her clit, eased a finger into her backhole, and worked my thumb into her mouth. I'd have taken her completely, utterly, thoroughly, have pleased her and brought her to the edge. Then I'd have pulled out and come all over her clothes. Those tomboyish clothes that she wore—jeans and a shapeless shirt... The kind that made me want to tear them off of her to see what she was hiding. Her curves, her dips and hollows, the contour of her gorgeous waist, the sweet indentation between her thighs. I'd have torn off her garments, dropped on my knees and pleased her with my mouth. I'd have licked her slit from arsehole to the honey of her pussy, pinched her clit, woven my tongue in and out of her, bitten down on her melting flesh and commanded her to finally come.

My balls draw up, my cock thickens, and I climax. I shoot my load against the wall. The water pours over me, washing away the evidence. I stay there, shoulders clenched, thighs so fucking hard that the muscles threaten to go into spasm at any moment.

I turn off the shower, reach for my towel and step out. Wrapping it around my waist, I walk to the door, fling it open and step out. I pull on jeans and a T-shirt from the closet, before I head down to my studio.

I pass my guitar on the stand in the corner, hesitate, then stalk toward it. I lift the Stratocaster, then I notch the strap over my shoulder, fit the beauty under my arm. It's almost as satisfying as strumming the lips of her cunt, playing the arch of her spine as I dip her under... Mine, all mine.

A touch, a look, her lust drips down my throat as I devour her soul.

Her body is my damnation.

Her breath my rhythm,

The curve of her belly my devastation,

The sweet flesh between her legs my salvation...

Starlight in a darkened sky,

A spark that destroys,

How far will I go to make her mine...? Only mine.

I pause, the echo of the notes dying away as I hear my daughter's voice come through the baby-cam sitting on the side table.

Shit, I'd been busy jerking off, then composing, while my daughter needed my attention. What kind of a father does that make me, hmm? I place the guitar back on the stand. Then pivot and stalk out of the room.

I race down the hallway and up to the door on the far end, push it open, and walk into my daughter's bedroom. She's sitting up in bed, her hair tumbling over her shoulders, her features pinched. "Daddy," she mumbles, her lower lip quivering.

"Hey, sweetheart." I sink down onto the bed. "What's wrong, baby?"

"I... I had a nightmare."

"The same one as last time?" I frown.

She nods, "I ... I dreamed that you left me."

"But I didn't. See, here I am." I wipe the tears from her soft cheeks. My heart twists. "Don't cry, baby," I murmur. "Daddy's here's now." I scoop her up into my arms.

She clings to my shoulders. "Dad," her voice hitches, "I... I don't want to be a baby."

"You're only five, Riley. You're allowed." I pat her back as she hiccoughs.

"B...but I want to grow up fast, so I can take care of you."

I frown, "Take care of me?"

"I know how sad you are that Mummy left us."

I am sad, but not for the reasons she thinks. "I am fine, sweetheart. You needn't worry about me."

How does my little girl always sound so much more mature than her years? Is it because her mother left us, forcing her to grow up overnight? Is it because I was a shit father, too engrossed in my career?

I had tried to manage releasing albums while doing my best by Riley, but I had quickly discovered that being a single father doesn't go well with being a rock star. So, I'd cut down on tours and appearances to stay home and take care of her.

The result... My albums had flopped, and the Christmas single I had been counting on had bombed. It had been a disaster, the kind of low I hadn't experienced since my early years when...

Right after the incident, I had gone on a bender, ready to wreck my life. I had survived it, thanks to music... Question is, would that same music be the end of me? The pressure to deliver another hit is stifling. It's not for the money—of which, thanks to the investments I've made with the rest of the Seven, I have more than enough of. It is about salvaging my ego, proving myself as an artist again.

I have to do it, for myself. For Riley... So when she looks back, she won't remember her father as a failure. If I flop, it would mean all the time I spent away from her wasn't worth anything, and that... that would be too painful. No, the only way I can justify the time I lost with her is to be successful.

Somehow, I have to come through, if not for myself, then for my daughter. I want her to be proud of me.

I rise up to my feet, carry Riley with me to the window. "I am not going anywhere, Poppet, I promise, and you don't need to worry about me."

She leans back and stares up into my face, "Can I have pancakes for breakfast?"

"You bet."

"With strawberries and jam."

I stare, "Who has pancakes with jam?"

"I do, Daddy. I do."

"Hmm." I frown past her at the gates to my home, where I see a car pulling up. What the hell? Who could it be? A woman gets out of the car—a pink Volkswagen. Do they even make them in that color?

The sunlight glints off her hair so dark that blue sparks seem to light up the air. Juliet? What's she doing here? She walks up to the panel by the gate and leans in. The intercom connected to my phone buzzes.

I place Riley on the floor. "Go on, and brush your teeth. I'll see you in the kitchen."

"Okay, Daddy." Riley bustles off in the direction of the bathroom.

I head for the staircase, taking the steps two at a time. Reaching the front door, I depress the button on the side that unlocks the gates, then swing the door open.

I lean a shoulder against the door frame as she parks the car in the driveway. She gets out of the car, hauls her backpack over her shoulder and approaches the house. She notices me, comes to a stop at the bottom of the steps.

"What are you doing here?" She frowns.

"What are you doing here?" I scowl.

"I am here for my next assignment."

"Assignment?"

"I am a nanny." She glowers up at me.

"I thought you were a potter?"

"A clay artist." She all but stamps her feet. So fucking cute. My lips twitch.

"Hold on a second," I hold up my hand. "So, you're a potter and a nanny?"

She draws in a breath. "Yes," she grits out. "Being a nanny is my full-time job; being a clay artist is my hobby."

"So, you're a nanny potter?"

"You make me sound like Harry Potter," she grumbles.

"Just as long as you're not a pothead."

"Of course, not." She draws herself up to her full height. "I am responsible, and very good with kids. I can provide you with references." She scrambles around in her ragged backpack, the same one she had last night, and which she insists on carrying over one shoulder, and why had I noticed that?

She produces a sheaf of papers.

"Why would I need to see your references?"

"Uh," she scowls, "because I am here to take care of your daughter."

"No." I straighten.

"No?" Her jaw drops. "What do you mean, no?"

"I don't need a nanny. Goodbye."

I begin to close the door.

She throws up her hand. "Wait, I'm not making this up. The agency told me I was being sent to take care of the daughter of a well-known celebrity."

"I didn't ask any agency for a nanny."

"But... but..." Her forehead crinkles. "They called me and sent me an email to confirm." She whips out her phone, starts up the steps to offer it to me.

"I'm not interested," I growl.

She pauses, one foot on the step above. "What?"

I peer over my shoulder, then step forward and close the door behind me. "I didn't ask for a nanny."

"Are you sure you didn't ask and forget?"

"Are you accusing me of a faulty memory?"

"I am saying," she takes a deep breath, "that I need this assignment."

"Too many debts, huh?"

She straightens her shoulders. "What do you mean?"

"You certainly left Australia in a hurry after your boyfriend dumped you, and in the middle of the bush, no less. You barely had enough money to buy your ticket back home. And not only do your student debts beckon, but your failed aspiration to be a—what was it?" I snap my fingers. "A potter." I nod.

"Your failure to become a potter haunts you."

"Fuck you," she snarls.

"No, thank you."

The color leaches from her face, "How... How do you know all of this?"

"I make it a point to find out everything about those I come in contact with."

Especially when it's a curvy sprite, with wide innocent eyes, who I can't get out of my mind.

"Must be fun to have such a trusting nature." She drops the phone into her bag. "So, I have a few student loans, and a jerk of an ex. Big deal." She swipes her hair over her shoulder and her fingers tremble. "It's not uncommon."

"A £100,000 debt that you'll spend the next twenty years paying off."

"So?" Her chin wobbles.

"So, good luck with that." I pivot, reach for the door handle.

"Stop," her voice is choked.

I allow my lips to twist, then push open the door.

"Wait... You... You are right."

"Oh?" I say without turning around.

"I need this job."

"Hmm."

"If I don't get this position, I am in a lot of trouble."

If you get this role, you are in so much more trouble. I push open the door and step through.

"I...need this assignment," she pleads. "The agency doesn't have any other role for me at the moment. Hell, there aren't any roles going for a nanny anywhere in London, it seems." She shakes her head, a look of disbelief in her eyes. "Trust me, if there were an alternative to this, I'd take it."

I pause, glare at her over my shoulder, "How far will you go to get this job?"

"I'll," she swallows, "I'll do a...anything."

"You sure about that, Flower?"

"It's not like I have a choice, do I?" she grumbles. "I mean, I'd rather go throw myself off a bridge, but then—"

My heart begins to race. I turn, march down the steps so quickly that she pauses mid-step and stumbles. I swoop out my hand and grab hold of her bicep. "What the fuck did you just say?"

"I... I..."

I haul her up to her tiptoes, then lean down and thrust my face into hers. "Say it," I dare her.

"I... I didn't mean it," she stutters.

"Don't ever talk like that again."

"O—okay."

"Good." I peer into her features. I should let go of her. I need to get back inside to take care of my daughter, and yet, with her scent in my nostrils, the curve of her arm under my fingers, those big green eyes that hold mine, the lips that tremble and call to me, to close the distance and close my mouth over hers... I... I lean in close enough for our eyelashes to entwine, for us to inhale a shared breath. Kiss her, kiss her... Do it. No bloody way! If I do, I am lost, and she is a distraction I cannot afford. Not now. Not when I need to take care of my motherless child and a career that is fast unravelling unless I do something to turn it around. On the other hand, I've never felt as alive as I do in her presence.

Only one way out. I need to turn this situation to my advantage. If I can use her sweetness, her vitality to kickstart my muse... Then huh, why not? As long as she benefits from it too... Yeah, that would make this a transaction that's beneficial for both of us, right?

I hold her gaze, then lower mine to take in her rose bud lips. "I have an arrangement in mind."

"Oh? You mean being a nanny to your daughter?"

"Only if you pass my test first."

"Test?"

"An hour with me every day for the next six days, doing everything I want."

She stares at me. "What does that involve?"

I glare at her face, then slide my gaze down her breasts, to the space between her legs. By the time I raise my gaze to her face, her cheeks are flushed.

"Well? You did say that you'd do anything."

She tips up her chin, "Anything but that."

"That's not what you said earlier, when I left you at the apartment yesterday. In fact, if I recall correctly, you pleaded with me to finish what I started."

Her cheeks heat; her breathing grows shallow. Bet she recalls how I'd smacked her butt, huh? My fingers tingle, and I curl them into fists at my sides. "So, what do you say, Flower?"

She glances at me, then shakes her head.

"No, thank you, I'll just have to figure this out another way." She turns to leave.

What the fuck? No one turns me down. No one. Especially not this tiny little thing who needs this gig as much as I need to make a success of my next album.

"A hundred thousand pounds for each day you spend with me."

10

Julia

"Excuse me?" I choke out.

"You heard me," he says through gritted teeth.

I pivot to face him, "I... I am not sure I heard right."

"What did you hear?"

"A hundred thousand pounds?" I blink at him. "Per day? One hour per day?"

He nods.

"To be a nanny?" I slowly blink.

"I told you, I don't engage nannies for my daughter."

"Why not?"

"I don't like her getting close to people who'll one day leave her. I want to avoid further heartbreaks in her life."

"Heartbreak?" So, someone else had left his daughter and him... Was it his wife? But he'd never been married. If he had, surely, I'd have heard of it. But then, I hadn't known he had a daughter until just now. How had he managed to keep that from the media? So, who is he talking about then?

"Your daughter's mother," I burst out.

He freezes; his gaze narrows. He regards me with a cool expression. "What about her?"

"Where is she? Isn't she around to take care of your daughter?"

"What interest is that to you?"

I swallow, then hold my papers close to my chest, "I prefer to get all of the facts before I engage in any kind of, uh, arrangement."

He folds his arms, leans a hip against the door jamb. "Very wise." He rakes his gaze across my features, "She's no longer in the picture."

"Hmm." I shuffle my feet, then hitch the bag over my shoulder. For all the media's best efforts to infringe on his privacy, Damian has, apparently, managed to keep his personal life a secret. What else do I not know about him?

The band around my chest tightens.

Shit, why the hell am I jealous now? If I could find another assignment, I would turn him down and walk away, but there's nothing else on the horizon... Except this gig as a possible nanny for the daughter of this irresistible jerk-ass of a rock star... Or not? What the hell is he suggesting with this set-up anyway, huh?

"Well?" He frowns.

"Was she... Is she your girlfriend?"

He hesitates, then replies, "Yes." He rakes his fingers through his hair. "Yes, she was."

Holy shit, so he hadn't married her. And he is no longer with her. A warm sensation blooms in my chest.

"Any more questions?" He glares at me and I shiver. That edge of meanness in his gaze; it's such a turn on. I rub my thighs together.

His nostrils flare, and one side of his lips curls. "So, we have a deal, then?"

"What?" I blink, "No... Not yet... I mean, you're not making any sense. That much money to spend such a short period of time with me? It's—" I shake my head, "it's bonkers."

"Tell me about it," he takes a step toward me and I stumble back. He grabs hold of my shoulder, and pin pricks of heat sizzle out from his touch. My core clenches.

He rights me, then lowers his hand, and of course, I miss it already.

His jaw tics, he firms his lips, then shoves his hands into his pockets. We stare at each other for a second and goosebumps break out on my skin. The air between us is so charged that if he were to touch me again, I am sure I'd come on the spot. Ugh, stop that. "I am really not sure what you're offering me," I finally say.

"It's simple." He leans back on the heels of his feet as if he wants to put distance between us.

Good, I don't want anything to do with this man, either... Except, damn it! This chemistry between us is intense. The kind I've been dreaming about, but which I was sure only existed in romance novels. I mean, there is a 'one' for everybody, right? So what, if the men I meet, including the ones I am attracted to, like the a-hole in front of me, turn out to be douches of the first order, eh?

Daddy Grumpypants looks me up and down, and I resist the urge to wipe my sweaty palms on the front of my pants.

"Trust me. Where you are concerned, nothing is simple," I scoff.

"That's stating the obvious." He smirks. "So, are you in or out?"

"What are you talking about?"

"You rhyming your words with mine?" He drawls.

"Of course not, you...you swine."

He quirks an eyebrow.

"I... I couldn't help it." I throw up my hands, "You are doing my head in."

"You and me both, Flower." His jaw firms. "And this meeting is over." He turns to go.

"Wait," I cry out. "You can't leave me like this."

"Like what?" He smirks over his shoulder.

"You...you know." I flush.

"No." He shakes his head. "I made you an offer; you turned it down. That's the end of our non-relationship. Have a good life." He heads toward the house and every cell in my body snaps to attention.

No, no, no, no. He can't just... Stalk off and leave me hanging. And why the hell had I obeyed his order, huh? I'd spent the night tossing and turning, sure that I had been running a fever. Only...a part of me had known better. I'd wanted to bring myself to climax, but every time I came to the edge, his earlier command had held me back from it. My body seems to have a mind of its own. One which insists on following his direction. It is forcing me to comply... Aargh! Stop, stop. Tell him what you want.

"Orgasm," I blurt out.

He pauses.

"At least let me come, please?" I curl my fingers at my sides.

He angles his body. "So," he drums his fingers on his chest, "you want me to give you permission to achieve satisfaction?"

Asshole's gloating, but whatever, as long as I can somehow relieve this burning, clawing sensation in my center. I jerk my chin in his direction and his eyes gleam.

"On one condition," he purrs.

"What?"

"You accept my proposition."

"A...a hundred thousand pounds for every day I spend with you?"

"Which would come down to, normally, an hour a day, which is all I can spare." He nods his head toward the house. "Occasionally, it might be more."

Of course, he has to take care of his daughter.

"No Sundays, though," he adds. "I have a full schedule on Sundays and won't have time for—" he gestures to the space between us.

"Wouldn't it be easier to simply have a trial period for me as the nanny for your daughter—?"

"No." He straightens. "Take it or leave it."

He turns to go.

I call out, "Wait."

He pauses.

"For how long?"

He angles his body, glares at me over his shoulder, "Until New Year's Eve."

"That's..."

"Today's December 26th... Boxing Day," he reminds me.

"I know," I snap. "That's five days?"

"Six including today."

"So, six hours?"

"More or less."

"How many...orgasms is that?"

"That's for you to lose track of." He laughs.

"And you'll pay me for each day?"

"Of course."

"You sure you can afford it?" I frown. He's not poor, but he's going through a rocky patch in his career... Well, okay, this is also me making conversation so I can buy myself some time.

"You sure you can afford to ignore it?" he scoffs.

"No."

"Good. It's a deal then." He holds out his hand.

I ignore it. "What's in it for you?"

He glances down at my breasts, then at my crotch. By the time he glares at my face, my mouth is dry, my pussy wet, my scalp tingling as if someone has run their fingernails across it.

"Right." I nod. "Can I think about it?"

"Nope."

My jaw drops.

"Decide in the next second or this is over... Not that there ever was anything between us."

I narrow my eyes, "I think you protest too much. There definitely is a lot between us—which is the only reason you are suggesting this insane arrangement."

"Oh?" He yawns. "Keep kidding yourself, sweetheart. You're nothing but a convenient hole to wring satisfaction from."

I draw myself up to my full height. "Fuck you, asshole."

"Alphahole." He smirks.

"A-class douche canoe." I tip up my chin, "You know what? You can stuff your stupid-ass proposal in your darkest part."

"You mean my heart?"

"Only you'd say that," I splutter.

"Listen, I have to go attend to my daughter. Why don't you...uh, head on to the greenhouse? I'll meet you there."

"Greenhouse?"

"Yes."

"You want me to wait there?"

"Unless you'd rather wait here?"

"Don't do that."

"What?" He frowns.

"Rhyme your stupid sentences with mine."

"Where you're concerned, that's not the only thing I hope to rhyme with." He snickers.

I make a gagging sound. "That was a terrible pun."

"You're right." He raises his hands. "I really have to get back." He jerks his chin in the direction of his garden. "Go on." He turns to leave, glances back over his shoulder. "Or not...your choice."

Turning, he marches inside and shuts the door on me.

Motherfucker actually had the gall to not invite me inside. I stare at the door a second longer. Maybe I should bang on it and demand that he let me in? And then what? He's only going to refuse me... Or tell me the deal is off. Or worse, he'd allow me in and then I'd be in the same space as him...and his daughter? A tiny version of him, with all of his presence and none of his cynicism. I swallow... Nope, I'd be a goner all over again.

Maybe this is better... I won't risk breaking my heart twice over, for I am very sure that his daughter would be as adorable as he is. Hang on, did I just refer to him as adorable? Jesus, I am tying myself in knots. I turn, head for the greenhouse in the corner of the sprawling grounds when the gates swing open. A car draws up and parks near the house. A woman slides out. She smooths her gray hair, hauls a designer bag over her shoulder, then pauses when she sees me.

"Hello there." She smiles. "Were you visiting Damian?"

"Umm," I hitch my backpack over my shoulder, "I'm still visiting him." I shuffle my feet.

"Why don't you come on in?" she nods toward the house.

"He, ah, asked me to wait in the greenhouse."

"The greenhouse?" She glances over to the structure at the far end of the yard, then back at me. "Hmm." She scrunches up her forehead. "He didn't want you to come in, huh?"

"He didn't," I confirm. "Is that normal?" I ask. "I mean, clearly, you are allowed in...so..."

"I'm the assistant to the Seven, so I came by with some papers for him to sign."

"Right. I'm Julia...Julia Andrews."

"Andrews?" Her forehead wrinkles.

"I know..." I grumble. "No relationship to the actress, at all, or to Julie & Julia, or to Juliet from Romeo and Juliet."

"Of course, not. You'll get your Happily Ever After, unlike her."

"I will?"

"Of course, dear." She holds out her hand, and I take it. "I'm Meredith, by the way."

"Nice to meet you, Meredith." I release her arm. "Guess I should be going along then."

"Julia," she calls after me, "don't be too hard on Damian."

"What does it matter what I think about him?" I turn.

"Just a..." she looks me up and down, "just a feeling." She studies me a moment longer, then finally says, "Just give him a chance, okay?"

I prop my hands on my hips. "Why is it that all of you women seem to think he needs to be handled with kid gloves?"

"That's not what I meant; quite the opposite."

"Oh?" I step toward her. "Explain."

"He'll push you away, ensure that you hate him because of his actions."

"I already do," I inform her.

"It's all a front." She leans in closer. "The incident, you see... It didn't break him."

"It didn't?"

She shakes her head, "He managed to survive it. In fact, he made a complete recovery, after therapy. It was what happened after that, which snapped his confidence."

"You're joking." I chuckle, "I haven't met a more obnoxious, more over-the-top alpha than Damian 'Big D' Savage."

"Big D?"

My cheeks warm. "Just what the media calls him."

"The media?"

"Yeah." I wave my hand. "You know, what I read about in the tabloids on social media..."

She fixes me with a steady gaze that reminds me all too much of my mother. It's probably why I rebelled so much growing up, enough to give up a well-paying position and take off with an almost virtual stranger to the other end of the world... Eek, stop that, don't blame your parents for your lack of a career. I mean, I did want to be a nanny. I love kids, wouldn't have come this far if my natural child whispering instincts hadn't kicked in when I was younger. It's just, I want more. Children of my own, a chance to pursue my creative aspirations. Gah! Stop that self-pity.

"You can't blame me, the man practically invented headline news with his crazy antics—"

"Until he didn't."

"Right." He did go quiet for a couple of years, then bounced back with his disastrous albums. Hold-on-a-sec... "The time when he disappeared from the news, when he was supposed to be off the grid, composing his next release —"

She nods.

"What happened during that time?"

"Not my secret to tell."

"And his daughter?"

"He mentioned his daughter to you?" She frowns.

"Why? Doesn't he talk about his daughter to people?"

"Not to strangers—" Her features clear. "Oh." She looks me up and down. "Oh, so I was right then."

"I don't like the sound of that Oh." I half chuckle. "And what do you mean, exactly, by that?"

"No, no, don't mistake me, my dear." She closes the distance between us, grabs my hand, "This is good, Julia."

"It is?"

Yep." She nods. "Very, very good."

"I... Umm, you're making me nervous, Meredith."

"Don't be." She smiles, and her features light up. "You have no idea how much progress you've made with him."

"Progress?" My head begins to spin. "What do you mean?" What the hell did I miss? Why do I get the feeling there's something very obvious that I'm not getting?

"I mean, he's invited you home, someone outside of the Seven." She taps her foot on the ground. "That's a first."

Oh! "He never invites anyone else home?"

She shakes her head.

"How about the women he's seen with?"

"All a front."

"Really?"

"They were nothing special, not like you."

"Not like me?"

"He asked you home, didn't he?"

"Not exactly." I glance at the door. "Considering he didn't let me in."

"He will. It's only a matter of time."

"What if I don't want to continue being associated with him?"

"Well, that," she glances at the door then back at me, "that would be a pity, but it's your choice, of course. You need to think of yourself first."

"I do?"

She nods. "I mean, he is an overpowering man. All the Seven are. It takes a special kind of woman to catch their attention."

"Right."

"It takes an even stronger personality to hold their interest."

"You mean, I'm not special or strong?"

"Not what I said." Her face grows serious. "You need to think carefully about if you want to be involved with him. The Seven, you see, are the kind of men who, once they set their eyes on their women, will not back down. They will not stop until they get what they want. And you have to be either able to go toe-to-toe with them and hold your own against them or—"

"Or?"

"You may as well cut your losses and leave now."

"Are you asking me to leave?"

"He asked you to stay, didn't he?"

"He did." I frown at her, take in her shrewd gaze, the straight cut of her dress, her expensive shoes. "Who are you to him, anyway?"

"Let's just say, I am the one who helps the Seven to keep their offices running smoothly."

"You are more than their assistant, aren't you?"

"Whatever gave you that idea?" She chuckles, reaches into her handbag, then thrusts a card into my hand. "If you need anything, just call."

"Why would I need anything?" I frown.

"A friendly voice, a need to speak... We could all do with a friend on the other side of the phone, right?"

"Right." I pocket the card. Why do I get the feeling that there's something very obvious here that I am missing?

"I'd better get along then." She heads up the steps, then pauses, to glance at me over her shoulder, "Oh, and Julia?"

"Call me Jules."

"Jules," she nods at me, "it's the ones who are the most hurt who need the most love."

"You mean Damian?"

"I mean," her grin broadens, "don't forget what I told you earlier... Don't let him push you around."

Julia

"You haven't left?"

His hard voice chafes across my skin and all of my nerve endings seem to pop at once. I turn so quickly that a cloud of butterflies rises up from where they'd settled on my skin.

"Oh, you scared me." I press a hand to my chest.

"Were you expecting someone else?" He smirks.

"I was kind of hoping you had forgotten about me," I retort.

"No chance of that happening." He laughs, then swoops out a hand so quickly, I flinch. He scoops up something from my cheek, shows it to me. An eyelash.

"Make a wish." His voice is low and edgy and soft. How the hell can he be so many things at once? I close my eyes, then blow.

When I look up, he's staring at me, his nostrils flared, a look of something like...desire in his eyes. I glance away, then back at him. "Damian," I swallow, "who's taking care of your daughter, while you're here?"

He straightens, schools his features back into that look of indifference I am coming to realize is a mask, one he's perfected over the years, the image he likes to project to the world. Same way as I'd prefer people to think of me as happy-go-lucky, a wanderer... A nanny, always borrowing a family to call her own rather than making one for herself. Does that make me a cuckoo? The bird that lays eggs in another's nest and has them bring up its chicks as their own. No, that's backward. That doesn't make sense.

"Meredith's with her," he replies.

"Does she help out with your daughter?"

"Sometimes." He takes a step back, then folds his arms over his big chest.

"Is that her name?" I jerk toward the cursive tattoo that peeks out from around his left forearm.

"Whose?"

"Your daughter's."

He glares at me, and a shiver runs down my spine. Jesus, when he looks at me, all angry and grumpy, it's so fucking hot. I swallow, hold his gaze. Well, I am not going to run scared from jerk-ass, here. "Go on," I coax, "you can tell me. You won't be struck by lightning if you do."

He doesn't respond.

"It's a joke." I raise my shoulders. "You were supposed to laugh."

"Hmph." He widens his stance. His features take on a strange look before he shakes it off and resumes a look of bored indifference.

Silence stretches, a beat, another. A cloud of butterflies takes wing from the flowers nearby. I follow them as they dance over to another set of flowers in the corner of the green house.

"This place." I clear my throat, "It's beautiful."

"You're beautiful."

I turn my head to find his gaze on my face. I redden. "Uh, thanks." I tuck a strand of hair behind my ear, "When you said greenhouse, I didn't realize it would be so...enchanted. Did you build it by yourself?"

"I had help," he drawls. "And yes, that's my daughter's name."

"Riley is a beautiful name," I offer. "How old is she?"

His forehead scrunches. He draws himself up to his full height. "Have you thought about my proposal?"

I tilt my head. "One hour a day for six days, huh?"

"That's six hundred thousand pounds in the bank at the end of it."

Whew! That's a hell of a lot of money. Enough to pay off my debts, allow my mother to retire from her job, get a fresh start, focus on becoming a pottery artist and not worry about paying my bills. And yet, when I'd wanted to spend the night with him, it had been because... I'd desired him, had felt a connection with him when he'd kissed me. He'd taken that and turned it into something sordid. Something transactional, where he wants to buy me.

It is a lot of money he's offering; but really, is that all I am worth? Can I place a value on myself...with such ease? Besides, I'm not seriously considering this, am I? Would I sell myself, for cold hard cash?

"Well?" His voice cuts through my thoughts, "What do you think?"

"It's not enough," I inform him.

"Excuse me?" He frowns.

"You want me for an hour a day for six days, for some unfathomable reason. Well, it's going to cost you."

"Oh?" He peruses my features, something inscrutable in his eyes. As if I am following a script he already knows, one that I am finding my way through, blindfolded.

"How much?" He drums his fingers on his chest, "Tell me quickly. I don't have all day."

I grip my fingers tightly together and sweat pools under my armpits. "One million," I say under my breath.

He holds a hand behind his ear, "What was that?"

"One million for all six days." I draw myself up to my full height. "Take it or leave it."

"Well then," he yawns, "you'd better get going."

"Oh." I stare at him. Disappointment and something else, a strange sensation like I had missed the one thing that could have changed my life completely, twists my insides. I open my mouth to speak, and he lifts an eyebrow.

"Never mind." I shove my hair back from my face, hitch my backpack over my shoulder. "Goodbye." I brush past him and head for the doorway.

"One million pounds." His voice follows me.

I don't stop.

"Per day."

"What?" I stumble, then right myself. "What did you say?"

His lips twist, "Exactly what you heard."

I pivot to face him, "One million pounds per day, for six days?" I blink, then pull on my earlobe.

His grin widens. "Good." He closes the distance between us, "See you at six pm."

"Hold on. What the hell? I didn't agree to—"

"Sure, you did," he replies.

"No, I didn't."

"You tugged on your earlobe," he points out.

"What?"

"You do that when you've inwardly come to a decision."

"I... I do?"

"Yep." He smirks down at me, "You're too easy to read, Flower."

"Just because I quoted from Wordsworth, once..."

"It's also your eyes."

"What?"

"They're green like the new shoots that come up from the ground in early spring."

"Wow," I breathe, "who'd have thought an obnoxious d-bag like you could be romantic."

"Don't let my words fool you." He half turns, then shoves his hands inside his pockets.

"Your biggest hit was a love song."

He winces, "It was a rock ballad."

"One with some sexy, angsty verses that had everyone going gaga over it."

"Including you?"

"Never." I snicker. "A little too sappy for my liking."

"So, you prefer not to face your emotions, huh?"

"And you?" I close the distance between us. "Do you ever face your feelings?"

"All the time." His features close. "Every fucking time I think I've found peace, something happens that reminds me how everything can change in the blink of an eye."

"Is that why you think money can buy everything?"

"Doesn't it?"

I twist my fingers together, wanting to deny it, but hell if, he doesn't have me there. One million pounds per day for six days. OMG, OMG. My heart begins to thud and my pulse rate ratchets up. That's... Way more money than I thought I'd see in my life... Ever. It is... A lifechanging amount.

I lick my lips, and he locks his gaze onto my mouth, "Open."

"What—"

He shoves his thumb inside my mouth. "Suck on it," he orders.

I swallow, my nipples harden, the flesh between my legs buzzes with anticipation, with recklessness, with need... A gnawing something opens up low in my belly. I close my lips around his digit, suck on it. I swirl my tongue around the pad of his thumb, absorb the salty taste of him. The dark edginess that sinks into my blood heads straight for that churning, yearning pit that gnaws at my core.

His chest rises and falls; his nostrils flare. He presses down on my lower lip, and I open my mouth. He inserts his thumb deeper inside. I swallow. His breathing grows ragged; a bead of sweat slides down his throat along the demarcation between his sculpted pecs. Moisture pools between my thighs. A moan bleeds from me... Needy, wanting... A kind of hunger I've never faced before... Will never again.

Holy hell, what kind of draw does this man...this almost-stranger have on me? He's barely touched me and I am ready to self-combust.

He draws out his thumb, then brings it to his mouth and sucks on it. He drags his digit across his lower lip and I can't stop the groan that spills from my throat.

His lips kick up in a smile. He wipes his finger across the fabric of his pants. "You'll do nicely."

Turning, he heads for the exit.

I stare after him. What the bloody hell—how dare he? Had he...? "Don't you leave," I cry. "Not again." I curl my fingers at my sides. How had I let myself be taken in, all over again? "Damian, you bastard—"

He pivots, prowls over to me.

My heart begins to thud, my pulse races, and the flesh between my thighs clenches. He holds out his hand. "Give it to me," he demands.

"Wh...what?"

"Your phone." He curls his lips. "What did you think?"

"I will not."

"Either you give it to me or I take it. Your choice."

Anger thuds at my temples and something very close to hate crawls up my spine. "Just because you're bigger than me, don't think you can bully me."

"Bully you?" He laughs. "I haven't even started, sweetheart." He crooks his fingers, "Don't keep me waiting, doll."

I frown.

"Your phone." He bends his knees, peers into my face. "Now," his voice lowers to a hush, the dark edge of his tone sinking into my blood. My belly trembles. My scalp tingles. I pull out my phone, hold it out to him.

"Unlock it."

"You mean you don't know my password?"

"Hmm." His brow crinkles, "Good point, I need to rectify that."

"Jesus." I stare. "I was joking."

"I wasn't."

"You wouldn't invade my privacy that way..."

He stares.

"Would you?" Of course, he would. Nothing is beyond the reach of this alpha male. He can have any woman he wants, so why the hell had he extended this stupid-ass agreement thing to me? "It makes no sense," I shake my head, as I unlock my phone.

"Don't try to discern the pattern of a plan that's clearly above your pay grade." He smirks.

My jaw drops. Bloody hell... What an ass. "Why... You..."

He snatches the phone from my hand. His fingers move over the screen, then he slides it back into my open backpack. "All set," he declares, then turns and prowls toward the exit.

"That's it?" I demand. "You're going to leave me here and walk away?"

He raises a hand, "Save the small talk for later, sweets."

My vision tunnels, anger slams into my chest. "Wait!" I call out after him.

"Did you place the call to my agency, and then get cold feet when you saw me?" I demand.

He halts, then glares at me over his shoulder, "Why would I do that, hmm?"

"Because you want me at your mercy?"

"I had you at my mercy earlier. I was the one who left, remember?"

Can't deny that.

He strides over to me, then bends his knees and thrusts his face into mine. "I'm not sorry for buying you," he whispers, "and I am not sorry for everything I am going to do to you."

My core clenches. "Is that a threat?" I breathe.

"A promise." His lips curl. My ribcage tightens. Hell, every nuance of his expression is hot and sexy and a bloody turn on. I am fighting a battle I can't win... Not without preparing for it, and right now, I am so out of my depth, it's not funny.

"And by the time I'm done with you, you won't be either."

I raise my hand, intent on slapping him, but he grabs my wrist.

"Let me go," I hiss.

"Don't tell me what to do."

"You're crazy," I insist.

"Takes one to know one."

"Oh, so now we're on the same level?"

"No," he mutters almost to himself. "You're on a different plane, one where we can never see eye to eye, and that's what makes whatever is between us a challenge, one I can't resist. I won't stop until I've broken you down, until I've figured out what makes you tick, until I have you melting and crawling and begging for my mercy, and even then, I won't release you. Not until I have sampled that sweet essence inside of you, bathed in the passion you keep hidden inside of you, until I have used the creativity that you harbor to fire mine, until I have your thoughts, your words, your every cry as you orgasm, trapped in my cells."

"What, the—" I blink, "What are you talking about?"

His lips twist, "Wouldn't you like to find out?"

He releases me so suddenly that I land on the ground, on my arse.

Turning, he stalks off again.

"Damian," I call out after him, "I know you didn't mean that earlier insult."

He reaches the door to the greenhouse.

I wipe the sweat from my face, and scramble to my feet. "This isn't over, not by a long shot. You're not the complete jerk hole you make yourself out to be, you know. You messed with the wrong woman though. I am going to get to the bottom of your secrets. I won't stop until I bring you to your knees," I yell.

He throws open the door. A gust of cool breeze wafts in and goosebumps pop on my skin. I shiver, wrap my hands around my waist.

"Knock yourself out, sweets," he drawls, then surveys me over his shoulder. "Just make sure you're not wearing panties."

Damian

You'll do nicely? What the hell was that about? What had I been thinking when I'd tossed out those words? Not to mention, that speech about her being a challenge?

I had been as cruel as fuck. No wonder she'd been so furious. Flower has a temper, all right...and a fighting spirit...not to mention, impressive negotiation skills. That back and forth there, I hadn't expected. It had been oddly stimulating too. Pitting my wits against hers had made me feel alive in a way I hadn't felt for months. I want to revel in her vitality, draw on it, imbibe it and allow it to fan the flames of something that has died inside of me.

Doesn't forgive the fact that I hurt her.

A half hour after I'd left her, I'd glanced out the window and seen her drive off. Thankfully, she'd given herself time to cool off before leaving. Good. No way, did I want her distracted while driving. It's the only reason I've put my people on her. They'll keep her safe... And ensure if she meets anyone else that I'll be the first to know.

I am protecting my investment, that's all. Hey, it is an agreement that we came to, and I intend to honor every part of mine. By the time we come to the new year, she'll be rich and I'll be... Well, hopefully, I'll have managed to write enough songs to fill an album.

I glare at my reflection in the mirror of the rundown dressing room of the gym in central London owned by Jace. A close friend of the Seven, he and his wife Sienna had moved to London from LA when Sienna was pregnant, partly so they could be close to Sienna's sister Bella who is studying in the city.

He was the first to fall for the family trap, followed closely by Sinclair, then Saint and Weston. Shit is going down fast and I don't plan to be part of that particular train. Nope. I have more than enough on my plate, trying to resurrect my career...and taking care of my daughter. Maybe it's stupid that I insist on being a hands-on parent, but I am determined to make up for the time I lost with her. I am going to ensure that Riley will never feel the absence of her mother. Speaking of, I glance up at the clock on the wall.

I have half an hour to work out, before I leave for my six pm with one sexy, hot-as-fuck woman who owes me a few orgasms—or is it the other way around? I chuckle. The look on her face when I had left her earlier...Clearly, she had been turned on and frustrated as hell. Good. That's how I felt too, after all. Though, the lack of fulfillment had clearly sparked me to write, which is a bloody good sign, considering I've been blocked for nearly six months.

Six months since I have composed anything worth stringing into a tune... Six months since I have picked up my guitar... Then, one encounter with her, seeing her writhe under me, spanking her arse as I had brought her to the edge, had seemed to break something inside of me... Or rather, break through the fog I had been mired in, enough to spark the beginning of a song... Something... The first inkling of a star in the night sky, the first scent of bread baking in the oven, the heady sensation of a child's first kick in the womb, hinting at the promise of a new life. Holy shit. I blink, then grab for my phone and key in the words. This is good, bloody good. I sink down onto the bench, continue writing out the stream of consciousness... It's garbled... but it's a start. Get it the fuck down, get down the words...the flow. Ride it as far as you can. Catch the wave, motherfucker. Don't screw this up.

"What the hell are you chuckling about, asshole?" A familiar voice reaches me from the direction of the door.

"Fuck off," I growl back, then focus on my screen.

The next moment an arm reaches over my shoulder and grabs the phone from me.

"Hey," I protest, "give that back."

"Not a chance in hell, brother." Arpad walks backward, reading through what I'd written. "Holy shit, Savage, this is some emo stuff."

The back of my neck heats. I jump up to my feet, stalk after him. "And you're going to be in some serious shit if you don't return my phone to me."

Arpad glances up, "Lost your balls already, huh?"

"The fuck you talking about?"

"You in love, bro?"

"You lost your mind, bro?"

"When was the last time you wrote such sentimental lyrics...hmm?" He pretends to think, "For that matter, when was the last time you wrote anything?"

No shit! "Those are not my words, you prick, and besides, it's none of your bloody business." I reach for my phone; he tosses it over my head.

"What the fuck?" I turn to find Edward has snatched the phone from the air.

He reads the screen and his eyebrows rise. "You wrote this?" He glances up at me.

"Nope." I glower at the Father. "It's. Not. Mine."

"Oh?" Edward scans it, "Where did you find these lyrics, they're..."

I set my jaw. If he makes fun of them, I am going to—

"They're not bad." The Father tilts his head.

"Not bad?" I splutter.

"They're very good, actually." He chuckles.

"They are?" I stiffen. "Is that good good, or bad good?"

"It's bad good, which makes it good good..." Edward tosses the phone back at me. "In fact, it's so good, it makes me wonder what prompted you to write it."

I glower at him.

"Not that you wrote it," he placates me.

Bastard.

"But if you had written it," Arpad picks up the narrative, clever bugger that he is. He raises an appraising eyebrow. "I'd wonder, what sparked it."

The back of my neck heats. Shit, no way. Now I am embarrassed when my asshole friends compliment me on my words. Like I am in kindergarten or something. I glance away, then back at them. "Nothing... Everything..." I raise my shoulders, pocket the phone. "Does it matter how it happened?" I mumble.

"Something prompts you to break your creative block?" Edward surveys my features, "Yeah, I'd think it's significant."

"It's her, isn't it?" Arpad drawls. "She inspired the ol' muse, I take it?"

"Who are you talking about?" I narrow my gaze. "And that's none of your business."

"You know who I'm talking about," Arpad barks a laugh, "and going by your touchy reaction, I take it I was right?"

I glower at him.

"Thought so." He nods, "You going to keep her around a while longer then?"

"Maybe..."

"You come to some kind of an arrangement with her yet?"

"Why does it have to be an arrangement?" I snap. "Why couldn't it be a normal relationship?"

"You and normal?" He chuckles, "Hello, you are one of the Seven. Have we ever done anything in the normal way?"

He has a point there.

"So," the asshole persists, "it is an arrangement?"

"It's not not an arrangement," I finally concede.

"Good grief, you're resorting to hiding behind wordplay. Thought you saved that for the stage." Arpad chuckles. "Clearly, the situation is far worse than it seems."

"Oh, fuck off." I crack my neck. "I got inspired, I wrote a few words. Big fucking deal."

"It is, though." Edward walks toward me. His features wear an almost understanding look... Which I'd hate on anyone else, but this is Edward. The one of us Seven to have suffered the most from the incident. No wonder it turned him off life, in general... Though he'd deny it, of course. For him, the church is his calling, serving God is his passion, which is noble of him, of course. If only I didn't get the sense that he is avoiding the real issues at hand. Not that this is the time to tell him, not when I am facing a crisis of my own. And is that what this is, a crisis?

I firm my lips. "Something you want to get off your chest, Father?" I tilt my head.

Edward pauses in front of me. He peers into my features. "It's different."

"What is?"

"The lyrics you wrote?" He purses his lips. "It's the first thing that's you."

"Like I give a fuck."

"Everything you wrote before this came from a place of anger, but this..."

His forehead furrows, "It's raw, it's the words of a man who's finding there's more to life than the selfish focus on himself."

"What else is there to life?" I roll my shoulders "Except sex and drugs and rock n' roll."

"Love." Edward's lips kick up.

"Love?" I laugh. "You're not in church, Father."

"Stop trying so hard, Damian," his voice is soft. "Sometimes you need to enjoy what you have in front of you."

"And I thought the Rockstar was getting overly emotional. Jeez, Edward, between the two of you, I hope it doesn't catch on." Arpad glances between us. "Glad things are clearer for me—the open sea, the wind in my hair. I don't need much else."

"It's also called escape." I smirk. "What are you running from, dipshit?"

"The same thing as you, dickwad," he chuckles.

We stare at each other, then he jerks his chin toward the open door and to the boxing ring in the center of the main room, "Wanna fight it out?"

I crack my knuckles. "Thought you'd never ask."

Edward glances between us. "Mind if I stick around to watch two grown men make utter asses of themselves?"

Arpad cracks his knuckles.

I draw myself up to my full height.

"So, you enjoyed the little surprise I sent your way, huh?"

"Wait." I blink. "What are you—?" I stiffen. "It was you?" I snap. "You sent Julia to me?"

He nods.

"You called up her agency and asked for her to be my nanny?"

"Bingo." He pretends to shoot at me while making a popping sound.

"The fuck?" I growl. "Why the hell would you do that?"

"'Cause the sparks between the two of you that day were intense, 'cause it was the first time I'd seen you interested in something other than your own grief?" He folds his arms across his chest, "Because, apparently, I care about you enough not to see you fuck up your life?"

"Oh?"

"Not that you deserve it, of course," he nods. "In fact, I think I should start by rearranging your pretty features. It may help wring some sympathy from your to-be girlfriend."

"Don't talk about her, you piece of shit."

He laughs "You angry enough to give me a proper fight this time?"
I step forward and bury my fist in his face.

Julia

Alphahole: Strip.

Alphahole: On your hands and knees. Arse in the air.

Alphahole: Don't ignore my commands or you'll pay for it.

"What the hell?" I stare at the text messages on my phone, then around the room. I'm back at the bedroom in the apartment he'd taken me to the first time. It's five minutes to six pm, and hell, I'm early. Not by much, but why the hell couldn't I have waited and made an entrance?

My phone vibrates again.

Alphahole: Why haven't you taken off your clothes yet?

"What the—?" How does he know what I'm up to? Are there—I straighten, glance around the room—are there cameras here? Surely not. Or... I glance at the mirror on the wall opposite the bed... Hmm... Bet that's where it's hidden. Two can play a game here, huh?

I shove the phone into my purse. Yeah, okay. So I had dressed up a little. I mean, you can't blame a woman for taking care of her appearance when she is going to spend some time with a rock god, huh? Not that it matters, considering the man isn't here... Except for his orders by text messages... which, admittedly, are hot. Hmm. And, of course, I do want those orgasms he promised me... I'm not in this only for the money, after all.

I still don't understand, though. What does he get from this? Unless he gets off on watching me come? I stiffen. It's what he'd implied earlier... Only I hadn't believed him... Maybe... Maybe he is observing me even now? I wouldn't put it past him to have cameras in this place. Perhaps, he has one in this mirror, and is staring at me right now?

I watch my reflection as I raise my chin, run my tongue across my lips, then reach for the strap of my dress. I lower it down one shoulder, then the other, allow it to drop. I let the fabric pool around my ankles, kick it aside. I weigh my heavy breasts, run my hand down my belly to cup the flesh between my legs. This won't do; something is missing. I turn, head for my bag, pull out my phone and switch to one of his songs. The song that wasn't his most famous, but which has always been my favorite.

The strains fill the air. His harsh voice croons out the words; they pour over me, wrap around my shoulders, slither down my chest, into the dip of my navel, down into the hollow between my legs.

I place the phone on the nightstand, walk around to stand midway between the foot of the bed and the mirror.

I grind my hips in tandem to the slow rhythm of the song, once, twice. Narrow my gaze on my reflection in the mirror...knowing, no wanting, him to be on the other side of it.

Look at me, Rockstar. Know what you are missing, every second that you are not here with me.

I reach behind me, unhook my bra and shrug it off. I cup the underside of my breasts, massage them, throw my head back and forth as I pinch my nipples. Then bring the mounds together, imagining what it would feel like if he were to slide his dick in the valley between them. A hot flush spreads across my skin, my core clenches, and moisture beads my center. I drag my palm down my belly, hook my fingers under the band of my panties. I slide them down my legs, and step out of them. Hold up the lacy briefs in my fingers before dropping them to one side.

I straighten, part my legs, and slide my fingers between my thighs to play with my pussy lips. I bring my other hand up to my breast, squeeze the nipple again. A groan spills from my lips; a shiver of lust runs down my spine.

I sway to the music, slide my finger inside my channel, bring my other hand up to my hair. I wrap the strands around my palm and tug. Another moan wells up my throat. My breathing grows ragged. I dig my fingers into my scalp, shudder as goosebumps rise on my skin. I thrust another finger inside of myself, and a third, the girth stretching my entrance. I curl my digits inside like he would if he were here. He'd shove his fat cock inside of me—in and out, and in again, and keep going.

He'd slam his dick inside my pussy, again and again, not letting up, not when my knees tremble, not when my thighs spasm, and not when moisture pools in my core and overflows to run down my thighs. Not when I throw my head back, close my eyes and pant, shake with the pressure that builds at the base of my spine and fills my womb and snaps tighter, tighter, edging me closer to the edge... Closer.

"You will not come."

His voice whips through my mind. Asshole. As if he could command me when he isn't here. Why should I obey him anyway, huh? So what, if I am wound tighter than the rock star ever has been on stage in front of his adoring millions? He'd perform duo rhyme and I am performing for him... And for me... Yep, no doubt about it. I am enjoying being able to scrape my fingernails across my scalp, widen my stance as I shove my fingers in and out of my pussy, as I bend my spine backward, dig my feet—still in the fuck-me pumps I chose for this occasion—into the floor and aim higher, higher for that release that lingers on the horizon.

"Your orgasm belongs to me, Flower."

I snap my eyes open.

"Your mind may defy me, but your body knows how to follow my command."

Heat sears my back, envelops me, curls around my waist, down into the hollow between my thighs. "D...Damian," I gasp.

"Were you expecting someone else?"

"N...no."

"Why did you stop?"

"What?" I blink.

"You were giving me a show, weren't you, Flower?"

I stare forward into the mirror, at how his blue eyes blaze as he holds my gaze. His large shoulders block out everything else as he towers over me. He's dressed in a leather jacket and jeans, heavy motorcycle boots on his feet. His hair is tousled. Did he ride here on his bike? He props his arms on his hips, lowers his gaze to my pussy.

"Keep going," he growls. "Fuck yourself for me."

I stare at his features, slide my fingers in and out of myself. Color sears his cheeks; his nostrils flare. He lowers his hands to his sides, curls his fingers into fists. I press my thumb into my clit; his chest rises and falls. I cup my breast with my other hand and squeeze my nipple.

He inhales sharply.

I work a fourth finger into my channel and my entire body convulses. OMFG. He raises his gaze to meet mine in the mirror, his blue gaze deepening to a shade of almost cerulean.

He reaches around to place his big hand on mine. I shiver. Goosebumps dot my skin.

"Damian," I whisper.

He lowers his head to nuzzle the curve of my shoulder and my belly trembles. "Damian," I gasp again.

"When you say my name like that, it fucking turns me on, you know that?" He presses himself against me and the hard length of his arousal stabs into the curve of my hips. I groan, throw my head back against his chest as he squeezes my arse.

I shudder. "Damian," I whine.

"Don't stop," he commands.

I swallow, continue to shove my fingers in and out of myself. His hard fingers engulf mine, making the gesture somehow more intimate, like it is him fucking me. He slides the fingers of his other hand into the valley between my butt cheeks and I groan. He pushes a finger into my backhole. I can't stop the moan that whines from me.

"Damian...please." My fingers tremble and my knees knock together. He tightens his grasp on my hand which is between my legs. The force of it pushes my fingers deeper inside my channel. I gasp. A trembling begins at my toes, flows up my calves, my thighs.

"Oh, Damian," I moan.

"Open your eyes," he orders.

I flutter open my eyelids—when had I closed them, hmm?—meet his gaze in the mirror. His burning blue gaze holds mine.

He presses a kiss to the curve of my neck, then parts his lips and bites down on my skin. Pain pinches my nerve endings, shoots straight to my core. He curls his fingers around mine, pushes them into me, and again. He proceeds to fuck me with my own hand, even as he keeps my backhole plugged with his own. He releases his hold on my neck, only to bend in close. He places his lips next to my ear, gazes deep into my eyes in the mirror. "Come," he growls.

The climax crashes over me; sparks flash behind my eyes. Moisture gushes out from between my thighs. I hear the sound of someone scream... I know it's me... It can't be. Have I ever sounded so unfiltered? So completely consumed by the moment. By him. By the passion that ignites between us, by the heat in his gaze that holds me in place as the orgasm smashes into me. I tip up my chin, thrust out my breasts.

"Damian!" I cry out as the climax recedes, leaving me empty. So empty. My knees give out from under me. I fall into him, slide down, and he steadies me with his hold on my hand and my fingers still inside of me. He holds me upright with his grip on my pussy, licks the shell of my ear, and fuck, that's hot. And erotic. And for all that, he hasn't even fucked me... Not in the conventional sense.

"Jesus," I whisper.

"Nothing to do with him." He smirks. "And you're welcome."

"I haven't thanked you yet," I jut out my chin.

"Oh, you will, before the hour is out. That is, if you have any voice left." He releases me, only to flip me around. He drops to his knees, shoves his head in between my legs, and swipes his tongue up my pussy. I cry out, grab at his thick hair, and hold on.

He squeezes my butt cheeks. I pant.

He slides his tongue inside my melting channel. I moan. My belly trembles and my toes curl. "Damian, Damian," I chant as he tongues me in and out, and in and out. He inserts his finger into my backhole, closes his mouth over my swollen core. I howl, bend over his head, try to close my thighs. A chuckle rumbles up his chest. He proceeds to eat me out, suck on my clit, before shoving two fingers into my channel. "Damian, no," I howl.

His lips curve against my center—or I swear that's what he must have done—for the next moment, he adds two more fingers inside my sensitive core. He curls his fingers and I explode. The climax grips me, and I clamp my pussy around his fingers, grab hold of tufts of his hair as the sensations smash into me, then fade away. Leaving the sound of my heartbeat pumping in my ears. My bones seem to melt; all of my brain cells have surely self-combusted. I can't think, can't do anything except slump against his broad shoulders. I sense him move, crack open my eyes to find he's scooped me up and carried me to the bed. He tucks me under the covers. "Sleep, Flower." He kisses my forehead, then turns to leave.

I grab his wrist. "Stay," I whisper.

He hesitates.

"Just for a few minutes."

"I need to leave to take care of my daughter."

"Of course."

This man, he's the most macho man I've ever met, and yet, every single night, he makes it a point to be home to put his daughter to bed. I'd been so caught up in his media image that this...caring side of him...is a surprise. What's worse, it makes him even more irresistible. And that... That isn't fair, at all. I twine my fingers with his, brush my thumb across the roughened skin of his knuckles.

"You've been fighting again?" I yawn.

"Fucking Arpad," he says without heat. "The man knows how to get to me."

"You two close?"

The song on my phone switches to another; he reaches over to shut it off.

"Why did you pick that one?" he asks.

"It's from your first album. Your earlier work was so much better than your later tracks, not that I didn't like them, but somehow your later songs seemed to—"

"Lack heart?" He winces, then chuckles, "At least, you're honest."

"Your turn." I glance up into his face, take in his features, which seem almost relaxed. Apparently, getting me off, relaxed him too. "You can tell me." I half smile. "I won't tell anyone."

"He and I, we were together through most of the incident."

"You supported each other through it?"

"More like fought each other, and that helped us stay alive."

"Oh?" I frown. "You mean the two of you had to trade blows when you were kidnapped."

"Not only." His features close. Damn it, and we'd been getting along so well.

"I need to go," he insists.

But I don't want you to leave. I bring his hand to my face, kiss the broken skin across his fingers. "There, that should help."

"Is that a fact based in science?" He chuckles.

"You bet." I yawn so loudly my jaws crack. "Damn," I whisper, "apparently, orgasms make me sleepy."

"And even more alluring."

"Did you say alluring?" I frown. "Your vocabulary never ceases to amaze me."

"Now I know why my parents paid for my expensive private school tuition." He laughs.

"Why?" I mumble.

"It was just so I could impress you, of course." He laughs, then bends in to brush a kiss over each of my eyelids. "Sleep, Flower. When you awaken, you'll feel better."

Darkness pulls me under. When I awake, I am alone.

"But Daddy, Salad wants to read Calvin and Hobbes." Riley folds her arms over her chest.

I glance up from the copy of Alice in Wonderland that I had been trying to read out loud—'trying' being the operative word here, for Riley is having none of it. "You're too young for Calvin and Hobbes."

"But Mommy read to me from it."

Ah. I bite the inside of my cheek. How do I tell her that her mom made a mistake? Not that I could come out and admit it openly, huh? So, what should I tell her? That Calvin and Hobbes has the kind of language that is just a little too mature for her.

"Daddy," Riley's bottom lip quivers. "you promised..."

"I promised I'd read to you."

"From a book of my choice," she lisps. She only does that when she's upset. Shit. A tear rolls down her cheek.

"Don't cry, baby." I push the book aside, then scoop her up in my arms. "I promise I'll read Calvin and Hobbes to you, just not yet."

"But...but..."

I cuddle her closely as I lie down on the bed. "Alice had a white rabbit, you know."

"White...white wabbit?" she gazes up at me with her big blue eyes so like mine.

Damn, she sounds so young. Well, she is young. Except, she normally sounds so much older than her years that I forget. Then she lapses into the language of her younger years, and damn, if my heart doesn't almost break. "Yeah, she followed the white rabbit down the hole and that's when her adventures began."

"Ad—ventures."

"Yep, she meets a crazy queen, a mad hatter—"

"What's a hatter?"

"Someone who makes hats."

"You wear a hat..."

"A cap," I correct her. "A baseball cap."

"What's the difference?"

"A cap? Well, uh, it has a rim that doesn't go all the way around, unlike a bowler hat."

"A bowler hat?"

"Yeah, you know... The thing that the twins wear in the adventures of TinTin."

"TinTin?" She sits up, "Who's TinTin?"

"TinTin has a dog called Snowy."

She scrunches up her features, "D-a-a-d, I want a dog."

Shit, no way, can I deal with a dog on top of a kid. Christ, how did we land on TinTin anyway? Weren't we talking about Alice and her adventures?

"There's a dog in Alice's Adventures in Wonderland too." I think.

"Really?"

"Yep." I pick up the book in relief. "Here, let me read to you..."

Ten minutes later, she's fast asleep... Shit, there is no dog in Alice's Adventures... Fuck, if I couldn't do with my own version of a white rabbit though. The kind you imbibe, not the dildo... Shit, don't think of a dildo when you're putting your daughter to sleep, you ass.

I slide out of the bed. Riley stirs. I freeze, wait until her breathing deepens. Whew! If you'd told me a few years ago that I'd be turning down gigs to spend time with my daughter... W-e-l-l, I'd have laughed long and hard. The final joke is on me, though. I smooth the cover about my daughter's shoulders. Her cheeks are rosy, her cherubic face relaxed in sleep. She's so fucking gorgeous. Fuck, don't swear—not even by way of thinking, in relation to her. Bloody hell, this parenting thing? I suck at it.

I back away from the bed, close the door behind me, keeping it slightly ajar, exactly how Riley prefers it. I head down the steps toward the kitchen.

The empty kitchen where Meredith put aside dinner in the fridge, no doubt. She's taken to coming by more and more often. Clearly, she's worried about me. Hell, she treats all Seven of us as part of her extended family. She'd helped us after the incident, given us a place to hang out away from our homes where we could be ourselves without the constant worried attentions of our close families, or worse, the kind of indifference that came from parents who couldn't cope with what had happened. Like mine. They'd been alright though, I suppose. They'd taken me to shrinks, helped me to deal with it. Just... They had never been able to stop treating me with kid gloves. The result? I had rebelled in the typical way...

I had left home at eighteen to form a rock band. It hadn't been easy, but the challenge of it...had kept me going. And the Seven. All of them had encouraged me. Even that fucker, Baron, who'd preferred to leave the rest of us behind as he travelled across the world to wherever the hell he is right now... He'd made sure to send me a letter congratulating me when my first album had been a hit.

Now that I am scraping rock bottom... Yeah—a rock star bottom, I suppose. I can call it that. I snicker—Well, now that I am as close to the starting point as I had been, in terms of being a failure, that is... I have nothing to lose, huh? I can simply follow my instinct, give tune to the kinds of words I wouldn't have been caught dead writing before... At least, I am writing, thanks to her. I walk into my study and make sure the baby-cam is switched on, so I have eyes and ears on my angel.

Then strum my guitar as I begin to compose the rhythm for the words that have been buzzing in my head from earlier.

Space, presence, amalgamation of a lifetime.

I take,

You yield.

My presence fills your void.

Balance...

I claim the openings you leave.

The chase,

The hunt,

The thrill of the beyond.

Taking, moving, taking, moving.

Empty as a dance without a partner.

Demented as a man without his wife...

What the hell? My fingers slip on the chords, the sound jarring in the empty space. Wife? Where did that thought come from? I place the guitar on the couch, then jump up to my feet. Shit, this wasn't meant to happen. This... this itch inside of me, the crawling, damning need that lodges in my gut and aches to get out and I cannot, will not, let it... I hope.

I snatch up my phone and dial.

"Hello, motherfucker." Arpad's voice comes through.

"Hello to you, too," I blow out a breath.

There's a pause, then he switches to video. His face appears on screen.

"What's wrong?"

"What could be wrong?" I rub the back of my neck.

"You wouldn't be calling if there wasn't something."

"True," I concede.

"Your stalker bothering you again?" He scowls.

"It's been quiet on that front." I sigh. Maybe too quiet. Not that I am complaining. I'd gone off social media but it hadn't deterred the die-hard fans from trying to track down where I live. One of them had sent me threatening notes, then had been caught trying to sneak onto my property a few months ago. It's why I'd had Karina beef up the security around the house; and why I had cancelled my gigs and all engagements to stay home. No one can protect my daughter the way I can, after all. And no way, am I going to let anything happen to her.

"What are you going to do about it?" He frowns.

"About what?"

"Her."

I scowl, "Why the hell did you have to send her to me?"

"Why would I not?"

"You're deflecting."

"And you're still in mourning."

"Fuck that," I hunch my shoulders.

He pauses, "It wasn't your fault, Damian."

"You don't know that. If I had handled things differently, if I had made more time for my family, things would have been different."

"You can't change the past, but you can affect the future. It's in your hands."

"Is that why you saw fit to steer things around, so I couldn't avoid her?"

He clicks his tongue, "You forget things so quickly."

"What do you mean?"

"Remember, I said that if Weston and Amelie decided to get married, you'd have no choice but to accept the gift I sent you."

I pause. "Motherfucker," I swear out aloud. "She's not an inanimate object you bastard."

"But she is a gift, and she's what you need right now."

"Oh?" I stare at his face on the screen. "The fuck you think you are, playing with our lives?"

"Someone has to, considering you don't want to move on from where you've been stuck for too long."

"Jesus, Arpad." I shake my head. "This...is all wrong. You shouldn't have done this."

"Why not?" he retorts. "You were too much of a loser to take what was right in front of you. Left to yourself, you'd have never seen her again."

"And rightly so. She deserves fucking better."

"That's for her to decide."

"She's better, away from me."

"That's your decision."

"Huh?" I stare at him.

"I've done my part," he raises his shoulders, "the rest is up to you."

27th December

Julia

"Bastard!" It's six pm, and once again, I stand in between the mirror and the bed in the same room as yesterday. Only he hasn't texted me yet.

Why hasn't he texted me, yet?

I glance down at my phone, then throw it on the bed. I will not allow him to see how anxious I am. Will not allow him to find out just how pissed off I am that he didn't call me after yesterday. Hell, when I awoke, he was gone. Which I expected, but not even a note left behind. I'd woken up a few hours later to find I was alone and covered in the sheets. The mattress next to me was cold and uncreased so I know he never laid down beside me. He'd simply taken my orgasms—okay, so I had given them to him freely—and he'd gone. "Asshole."

No doubt, if he were here, he'd ask me to call him Alphahole. A title that, strangely, does fit him. Only Damian fucking Savage would have the ego to claim that label, and with no sign of irony either. He'd mean it... He actually believes every single legend the media spins about him. Well, the length of his cock, for one... Not that I have seen it yet... I've felt it, learned the shape of it through his pants...but he hasn't even taken off his clothes yet. Hmm. He's devoted himself to my pleasure, it seems. And not that I am complaining, but that yummy body of his? I definitely want to see more of it.

Just as I want to find out more about the man and his daughter. I could call up Amelie or Isla and ask, I suppose. But somehow that doesn't seem right. I want him to tell me about his life...want to get to know the man who pays for my company better. Hell. If only I didn't need the money. But damn it, I can't turn away from the millions he's dangled in front of me. I'd checked my bank account, and already, the number of zeroes in it had confirmed that Damian is a man of his word—Ha! And if that's the case, why isn't he here already?

I pick up the phone and look at the clock. It's already been ten minutes since I got here. Ten minutes without his touch on my skin, his fingers in my pussy, the imprint of his shaft against the softness of my belly... And damn it, today I want more. I need more. I need to get him to share more of what lurks behind those blazing blue eyes.

I need to do something different. Need to get him to react. But how? I glance around the space—the wide headboard on the massive king-sized bed that takes up most of the room. I run my fingers down the scarf I draped around my neck before leaving home. Hmm... What if I surprise him? Or is that what he expects from me? To do the unexpected because he hasn't asked something specific of me? Maybe... But hell, if I am going to pace the room waiting for him... I am going to take some control of the situation—something he doesn't want, but too bad.

I grab the bedspread, throw it over the mirror. Good, now he has no idea what he's walking into. I head for the bowl of fruit kept on the coffee table by the settee, pick up one, then I walk over to the bed. I shed my clothes, making sure to keep my heels on—yeah, I'd dressed again for that asshole—then I climb onto the bed.

Damian

Six-twenty p.m. I'd have delayed it further, except she'd cut off all visual to the room. She'd thrown the bedspread over the mirror, and the app I'd been using to track her, courtesy of the camera in the frame of the mirror, had gone dark. How the hell had she guessed the location of the camera anyway? The woman is resourceful. And smart. Of course, she is. It's why she'd intrigued me from the moment I'd seen her. I use my keycard to let myself into the apartment.

I walk through the living room, lit by the glow of the city lights coming into the space, and step into the bedroom...and stop. My breath catches. Blood rushes to my groin. "What the fuck?"

I stalk to the foot of the bed and glance down at my woman on her hands and knees, on the bed, facing away from me. I take in the curve of her arse, emphasized by the light that flows into the room... The flesh of her thighs, the sweep of her calves, her feet clad in fuck-me shoes. A growl rips out of me. "What the hell are you doing?"

She glances over her shoulder and I catch sight of the apple she holds in her mouth. Her green eyes gleam. Her pink lips contrast with the red of the skin of the apple. Her neck is arched, her shoulders pulled back.

I take in the unpainted fingernails, her palms pressed into the bed. The globes of her pert breasts mirror the shape of the apple, her nipples dark, their color a contrast to the white of the sheets on the bed. I drag my gaze down her belly to the lushness of her hips and the sight of the ripe flesh between her legs. Moisture glistens against her lower lips and I know she's ready for me.

"How dare you start without me?" I growl.

She draws in a breath and the apple slips from her mouth.

"Don't let go of the fruit, or you'll regret what I am going to do to you even more."

Her gaze widens. A hint of something like fear glimmers in her eyes.

She quickly grabs the apple, puts it back in her mouth. Good.

"Eyes forward!" I order.

She blinks, hesitates. I swoop down and slap her arse.

She cries out, or at least I presume she does, for its muffled by the bloody apple in her mouth...Jesus, what the hell had she been thinking? Why is she offering herself up like that to me? Doesn't she know I am less Adam and more the serpent in the Garden of Eden...?

"Remember what I said, Flower? Don't let the apple fall."

I slap her arse again and again. Left cheek, then right, then left. Pause.

I step back, survey the reddened bloom of her butt, my fingerprints clearly standing out against her pale skin. Moisture drips down her inner thighs. "That turned you on, hmm?"

She trembles. I reach down and kiss the curve of her butt; she shudders. I press another kiss to her other arsecheeks and she shivers.

"Remember," I whisper against her skin, "hold onto the apple."

I straighten, undo the buckle of my belt.

She stiffens, turns her head.

I click my tongue, "Don't turn."

She stares ahead.

I slide out my belt, and the whine of the leather across the waistband is loud in the space.

She curves her back, clenches her butt.

"Three lashes, Flower," I drawl, "and you'd better not orgasm."

She tips up her chin. I snap the belt. The leather connects with her backside. Her entire body jerks. Her thighs spasm. I straighten, then lower the belt again. The crack of the strap against her skin leaves a pink welt across her butt. My cock lengthens. Fuck me.

This...thing inside of me, this need to see her ready and open and willing...for me... Why the hell have I never felt it with anyone else before? A hum winds down my spine and my groin hardens. I lower my arm and lay the last lash across her butt. She jolts, the apple rolls from her mouth, and a cry spills from her lips. All of my senses pop. I grab her hips, flip her around, then bury my mouth in her pussy. I drag my tongue up to her swollen clit and she screams out.

She tries to pull away. I grip the backs of her thighs, pull her close, until my face is jammed in between her folded legs. I thrust my tongue inside her melting channel. She grips my hair and tugs. The pain shivers down my spine, and my balls harden. I lick my tongue up her pussy lips again and again, bite down on her clit, and she arches her back off of the bed.

"Damian," she cries out, and fuck, my name from her lips... It's sweeter than the screams of adoring crowds as I face them from on stage.

I tear my mouth from her pussy, rise up and over her, fit my mouth to hers, thrust my fingers knuckle-deep inside her channel, wrap my other palm around the back of her neck, my fingers resting on the pulse points on either side, and kiss her and fuck her with my fingers, in and out, in and out. Her core clenches around my fingers; her mouth opens further as I dance my tongue across hers. She strains against me, pushes her nipples into my chest, parts her legs wider as she tilts her hips, pushes her pelvis up, coaxes me to grind the heel of my palm into her cunt. A groan trembles up her throat. I tear my mouth from hers, peer into her eyes, pupils blown, the green now merely a circle that rings her dark irises.

"Come," I order, and she shatters. Her features twist, her lips part, and her muscles tauten as moisture floods from her center.

I pull my fingers out, ease them into her mouth. "Lick me off," I command.

She wraps her tongue around my digits, in the creases between them, across the junction where my fingers meet my palm. The slide of the wetness sinks into my blood, arrows straight to my cock. This woman... Nothing with her is predictable. Just when I think that I have her tamed, she springs a surprise that completely floors me. She holds my gaze as a tear slides from the corner of her eyes. I bend and lick it up.

She releases my fingers, tips up her chin. "Why did you do that?"

She's come apart under me, and yet, there's nothing timid or submissive about her...yet. "You don't get to ask me the questions." I increase the pressure of my fingers around her neck. She swallows.

"Understand?" I lower my face to hers, until our lips almost touch, "Answer me."

"Yes," she whispers.

"Good." I release her, then slide back and off the bed. Straightening, I tug on my shirtsleeve.

"You're already dressed in your formal clothes?" She frowns.

I glance at my watch. "Don't want to be late." I jerk my chin toward the closet at the far end of the room, "Get dressed, remember we have a wedding to attend?"

17

Julia

"Do you Amelie Elizabeth Abram take Weston George Kincaid to be your lawfully wedded husband?"

Weston glances down at his bride, his features lit up with such adoration that my heart skitters. Jesus, all that love in the air. Is it possible for someone to feel so much love for his wife-to-be?

"I do." Amelie giggles.

Her simple, knee-length, off-the-shoulder, white dress should seem almost too casual, except she wears the glow that seems to often characterize brides.

Damian stands to attention on the opposite side of the gathering, not a single bone in his body relaxed.

The entire wedding has clearly been planned to be a small intimate affair, on the ranch owned by Saint and his cousin Tinkerbelle. The weather is freezing, but the space is surrounded by freestanding outdoor heaters, which cast a circle of warmth around us.

"You may now kiss the bride."

Before Edward has completed his statement, Weston swoops down, drags Amelie up to her toes, lowers his head, and kisses her.

Applause breaks out from the assembled group. Sinclair pulls Summer into his side. She tips her head up and he presses his lips to her forehead. The puppy she holds in her arms whines. Summer holds the dog up to Sinclair who scratches the little fella about his ears.

The dog barks, Summer lowers him to the ground, and he bounds over to where a little girl, bends to play with him. Behind her, a tall man frowns down at the scene as if he's not quite sure what to make of it. "That's Liam," Isla whispers to me.

"Is he perpetually angry?" I frown.

"He's scary," Isla shivers, "in a mean, dominant, cold, sexy, tear-your-panties-off and not take no for an answer—" her chest heaves, "obsessive, compulsive, calculating, single-minded," her tone grows raspy, "fuck you until you can't walk straight for days, kind of way."

"You mean he's a high-functioning sociopath?"

"Hmm." She looks him up and down. "More like a sexy, stalkerish, manipulative, psychopath who just happens to be a billionaire."

"How can you find that hot?"

"I don't." She turns to me. "I mean, not really."

I stare at her.

She blushes. "I mean, come on. Damian's just as controlling, as self-assured, as provocative, as fine a specimen as they come—"

"He's better than that," I mumble.

"As much of a harsh, yummy, vigorous, macho, eight-pack-abbed—"

I snap my head in her direction, "How do you know that he has an eight-pack?"

"He is tabloid fodder." She raises her shoulders.

"Keep your eyes off his abs, his corded forearms, not to mention that beautiful, sculpted, whiskered jaw that leaves rug burn in its wake—"

"Whoa, you did it then?" Isla turns on me so quickly that I retreat from her.

"Woman, you'll get whiplash, if you keep that up," I hiss.

"Admit it," she crows. "You shagged that fine piece of arse. Please say, you did."

My fingers tingle and my sex clenches. "No." I feign disinterest.

"No way." Her gaze widens. "Tell me you didn't pass up the opportunity to test drive that fine piece of machinery."

"Down girl," I mutter. "Let's just enjoy the wedding without getting all hot and bothered."

"As if that's going to be possible when you're surrounded by all of this testosterone. Not to mention, all that dopamine that the couples in love are transmitting all around us."

Next to us, Jace whispers in Sienna's ear and she blushes. Next to them their baby sleeps in his pram.

Saint wraps his arm around Victoria, tilts her chin up to his and kisses her.

Isla sighs. Yeah, you and me both, girlfriend. Don't I know the feeling? If only there were someone special out there for me... The hair on the back of my neck rises. I glance up and across the room to where Mr. Smoldering Gaze Rockstar leans his hip against a wall. Clearly, he'd rather be anywhere else but here. Clearly, a marriage—not even one of his best friend's, carries much significance to him.

"The way he eats you up with his gaze," Isla shakes her head. "You sure nothing happened between the two of you, yet?"

"Not...sure," I reply under my breath.

"What does that mean?" I hear the confusion in her voice but don't glance up. I know how that sounds... But hell, how else do I classify what almost happened between us?

"You mean, you guys haven't done it yet?" she probes.

"We haven't not done it," I offer.

She huffs. "You are talking in riddles. Like the rest of the women did once they hooked up with one of the Seven."

"I haven't hooked up with him," I insist.

"Of course, the chemistry between the two of you is just a mistake, then?"

"It must be," I mumble, my gaze captivated by the beautiful profile of the man who'd captured my imagination from the moment I'd seen him first perform on stage.

He shoves a hand in the pocket of his beautifully-cut slacks. Surely, they must have been cut to his physique while he was standing in front of the tailor, who, no doubt, wept as he stitched them to fit every powerful muscle of those sinewed legs— Gah! Stop drooling you idiot. It's just cloth, fabric that many others wear, except on Damian f'ing Savage, formal pants and button-downs seem to be poetry in motion. What the hell am I thinking? I shake my head; he jerks his chin up and locks his gaze with mine. Those blue eyes of his seem to penetrate my heart, my skin, my soul. My throat closes and a bead of sweat slides down my spine.

Around me, confetti rains down on the newly married couple.

Damian straightens and his shoulder seem to bulge. His biceps flex, stretching in the full sleeves of his formal wear. He doesn't take his gaze off of me. My heart begins to thud. He brings up his thumb and runs it across his bottom lip, and bloody hell, my entire body seems to snap to attention. My belly clenches and moisture pools between my legs. What the—? What kind of hold does he have on me?

"Nice dress, by the way," Isla whispers.

"What?"

"Your gown."

"Oh, it's borrowed."

"From whom?"

"Uh, Damian told me to wear it."

"Damian?" she whisper-screams. "So, you did spend time with him, after all?"

"Shh," I grab her arm, "you'll attract attention."

"So I should." She stares at me. "Tell me all, bitch."

"There's nothing to tell." I glance back at the space where I'd last seen Damian, and find the space is empty. Huh?

"Well?" She shakes off my hold, only to grab my arm instead, "So you did shag him?"

"No," I snap. "Uh, we've done stuff, just not that."

"I don't understand."

"Tell me about it." I glance around the space as Weston and Amelie accept congratulations from the rest of the crowd. I should go up and wish her well too. Except, damn it, I can't, not yet. Not when I'm not sure what I've gotten myself into. Not sure if I have a job to go to, either... Shit, a job I needed. Why the hell couldn't he let me see his daughter? Am I so abhorrent to him? A shapeless piece of clay? Well, I certainly feel dowdy, compared to the glowing faces in this room.

"You okay?" Isla hisses.

"No. Yes." I swallow, "I don't know." Tears prick the backs of my eyes. No, no, no. "I... I need a moment."

I step back from her and she releases her grasp on me.

"Where are the restrooms?"

"First floor, to the far right." She searches my face, "Want me to come with you?"

"No." I shake my head. "I'll be fine, I just need to get away." I turn, skirt the crowd, and head inside. The sounds of laughter and conversation fade as I walk across the beautiful lounge, head up the steps and to the right of the hallway. Follow it to the door that's partially ajar at the end. I peek inside, then gasp when a warm hand descends on my shoulder. I'm pushed inside so abruptly that I stumble. I turn to find Damian leaning against the door. He lowers his hand to grasp the doorknob and a lock snaps into place.

"Wh...what are you doing?"

He unhooks his belt and the buckle clanks as he pulls it off. My nerve-endings pop. I drop my gaze to his crotch, to where the evidence of his desire tents the fabric of his pants. OMFG, it's not possible that he's as big as he seems, is he? My toes curl. My scalp tingles. I dig my heels into the floor, curl my fingers into fists at my sides.

"On your knees," he orders.

My jaw drops. "You're crazy."

"For you."

I glance up at his face and his lips twist.

"You're joking," I whisper. "Not even you can be that much of a bastard."

"Oh, good, so I don't need to pretend." He wipes all expression off his face. "Do it," he snaps.

My thighs tremble and my knees hit the floor with a thump that sends pain shooting up my legs.

"Touch yourself."

I gape.

He tilts his head, "You don't want me to come there."

I tilt up my chin. "On the contrary," I raise my gaze to his face, and flinch. The skin is drawn tightly over his cheekbones, his jaw tics, and the creases around his eyes seem to deepen. He seems like a man possessed, one who is this close to losing control, and I am not sure why.

"What...what did I do?" I whisper.

"What makes you think it's something you did, hmm?"

"Isn't it?"

"Yours is not to question why."

"—But to do or die?" I joke.

He draws in a breath; the planes of his chest seem to flex.

In two steps, he closes the distance between us, grabs the hair at the back of my head and tugs. Pain lances down my spine, arrows straight to the emptiness that crawls in my core.

"I told you never to talk about dying, didn't I?"

I stare up into his face. His jaw tics, his features twist, and he looks like a man who's seen a ghost. Oh, hell. "I'm sorry," I whisper. "I didn't mean to bring back memories—"

"I told you not to speak," he snaps.

"You didn't," I protest.

"It's understood."

"What? Now I'm supposed to read your mind?" I huff.

"Nope, now you take the punishment I am going to mete out to you."

Damian

"Show me your pussy."

"What?" Color smears her cheeks.

"You heard me."

What the hell are you doing, asshole? Let her go, get away from her, turn around and head back home—to...my daughter? My life...shorn of all creativity, one filled with responsibilities that weigh heavily on me. A life filled with yearning for something...more.

I love my daughter—the light of my life, the one who makes it all worthwhile... And if I don't work another day in my life, she'll be provided for. But would she be proud of the music I've created so far? Would she see my fall from the pinnacle of success I'd once occupied? Would she remember me as a failure...one who couldn't compose anymore? And the songs I have out there... They are hardly the kind I'd want her to listen to. I have to come up with more, so much more, something that will ensure that she sees me in a new light. The kind of father I've always wanted to be, one she'll remember with pride. With the kind of emotion I'd wanted to feel for my own parents and hadn't quite been able to, given the distance that had grown between us since the incident.

No, I want more for my daughter. I have to do right by her. I have to make her proud of me if it is the last thing I do... And this sassy, proud woman is going to help me with that. She will play a key role in helping me reinvent myself. So what, if I am being selfish about it? I owe it to myself, don't I? I simply have to make sure she benefits from this arrangement too.

"Do it, Flower," I coax her. Where the hell did that come from? I am not supposed to show her any mercy, yet here I am requesting her to fall in line with my plans. I shake my head, straighten my shoulders. "Don't keep me waiting." I lower the pitch of my voice.

She shivers, then slides her hand under her gown, flips it up.

"Fuck." I stare at the pink flesh exposed between her thighs. "What the hell? You didn't wear panties?"

"Neither did you."

I tilt my head. "Not in the habit of wearing frilly underwear, not even for you."

She flushes. "You know what I mean."

"No, I don't."

"I mean...that." She jerks her chin toward my open fly.

"What?"

"You're gonna make me spell it out?"

"Anything to see you squirm, sweetheart." I chuckle.

"Asshole."

I click my tongue. "You know how I prefer alphahole, or even Master would do very nicely."

"Go fuck yourself."

I laugh, "I'd much rather see you fuck yourself."

"Argh." She throws up her hands, and her dress flows down around her knees.

"Now you've done it."

"What?"

"You disobeyed my command."

"I...I didn't."

I glance down to where her dress covers the sweet flesh she'd exposed earlier.

She follows my gaze, then pales, "It...it was a mistake."

That's for sure. "Oh?" I take a step forward.

She stumbles to her feet. "Honest, I... I didn't mean to."

I move toward her. Her gaze flicks around the bathroom.

"Don't even think about it," I murmur.

"You... You don't know what I am thinking about."

"Don't I?"

"If you did, you wouldn't be standing there talking to me."

I close the distance between us.

She squeaks, dodges around me and makes for the door. She grabs the handle, twists it, then swears. "Why the hell isn't it opening?"

"Guess."

She turns around, then stares at the key I show her. I slip it into the pocket of my slacks.

She swallows audibly. "Oh, hell."

"Indeed." I quirk my finger at her, "Come 'ere."

She shakes her head.

I draw in a breath. "You're making this more difficult on yourself."

"And you're t...talking in riddles."

"Nervous?"

"Of course, not." She hiccups. "Oops." She slaps a palm to her mouth.

"Did you just hiccup?" I frown.

"Not me." She hiccups again.

I chuckle. "Such a little liar."

"I'm not." She glowers at me.

A tiny line appears between her eyebrows. Fucking adorable. Wait. Hold on. Back up. I did not just think of her as adorable. WTF?

"Prove it."

"What...what do you mean?"

"Come closer."

"No, thank you." She folds her hands together in front of herself. "I'm, uh, good right where I am."

"Don't say I didn't warn you." I move toward her.

She squeaks, then darts toward the window on the side.

"What the hell—?"

She grapples with the sash lock of the window pane.

I reach her, clamp my hand around the nape of her neck.

She shudders, tries to wriggle away.

I increase the pressure about her nape, and she lowers her forehead to the glass. "Please," she whispers.

"Please what?"

"Please let me go."

I slap her butt.

She studders, "Wh...what was that for?"

"Lying again?"

"I'm not."

I take a step back, hold her still with my grip on her neck.

"Last chance," I snap.

"For what?"

"To tell the truth."

"I... I don't understand."

I take aim, then bring down my palm with such force on her arse that her entire body jerks. She rises to the tips of her toes. Her hair flows around her shoulders. "Ohmygod," she screams.

"Wrong answer." I spank the curve of her butt again and again.

She howls. "Stop," she gasps.

"Answer me first."

"What's the question."

"Do I make you nervous?"

"Yes."

"Do I turn you on?"

"Yes."

"Will you defy me again?"

"Yes," she stutters, then gasps. "No, no, you bastard, I won't. I'll do what you tell me to."

"Too late, Flower." I hook my finger into the V of the neckline at the back of her dress and tug. The material rips, the sound slicing through the space.

Goosebumps rise on her skin. "What the hell—?" She turns her head and I tear the flimsy material from neck to hem. The fabric parts, leaving the exposed length of her body from shoulder to hip to the cleft between her thighs to the turn of her beautiful ankles. My groin hardens; my cock lengthens.

She kicks back. I angle my body to avoid her, then plant my thigh between her legs. She wriggles her arse, and Jesus, the warmth of her center sinks through the fabric of my slacks. I lean in, press the weight of my crotch into her back. A trembling grips her. She plants her palm flat against the pane.

Below us, a white mare gallops by, followed by a dark stallion. Nature in action, the dominant and the female with whom he was meant to mate. I place my cheek close to hers, and another shudder rolls up her spine. "Shh," I whisper, "I won't hurt you."

"Oh?" She turns to glare at me, the green of her eyes burning bright, "What do you call this then?"

"Taming the shrew."

"I am no shrew," she protests.

"Sure could have fooled me, sweetheart, for you definitely need a firm hand."

"I don't need anything from you. I don't need you," she snarls.

"Wrong." I lower my head and nip on her lip.

She moans.

I rub my thumb over the pulse that flutters at the hollow of her neck. Her pulse rate ratchets up; the sweet scent of her arousal deepens. I slide my other hand between her legs. "You're fucking soaking." I press little kisses to the corner of her mouth, make my way up to the shell of her ear. I bite her ear lobe and her entire body jolts. "See how you respond to me?"

"That's...uh.... Just physical."

"That's a start."

"For what?"

"For what's coming next."

"Which is?"

I thrust two fingers inside her pussy. She yells. The sound slices straight to my gut, and goddamn me, but I am so hard, and I can't wait any longer. I need to taste her, I need to have her falling apart on my fingers, on my tongue. "I want you helpless and broken and shattered for me to pick up the pieces. Only me. You understand?"

"No," she snaps.

"Yes." I release my hold on her neck, only to sink to my knees between her legs. I squeeze her butt cheeks, then thrust my tongue inside her pussy.

OMG. OMG. He curls his tongue inside of me and I groan. He flicks his tongue across my pussy lips, and I push my forehead into the glass. There's a whinnying sound from far below. I glance down to find the mare prancing about as the stallion stalks her. Jeez, talk about life imitating nature. Or is that life imitating art? Whatever it is, nature unfolds her drama down in the field, and up here, my very own racehorse of an alpha begins to thrust his tongue in and out of me, fucking me with his tongue. "Oh, God," I groan. He picks up speed.

He slides a finger into my puckered hole, then thrusts his wide palm between me and the window pane. He fastens his fingers across my core and I gasp, "Damian." I try to turn. He pinches my clit and I yell, "No, goddamn it, no."

He pulls his fingers from inside of me. Cool air envelops my heated flesh. What the—? I glance over my shoulder to find he's stalked to the shower cubicle. He wrenches open the door, grabs one of the bottles from the receptacle inside.

"What are you doing?"

He pivots. "Eyes forward," he commands.

I take in the bottle of conditioner that he uncorks as he marches over to me.

"No." I swallow.

A smile pulls at his lips, and it's not the good kind. I gulp, "D...Damian?"

"Yes, Flower?" His grin widens.

"You...you won't."

"Is that a challenge?" He stares into my face.

"I hate you," I mumble.

He pauses, widens his stance. "Leave."

"What?"

"You heard me." He jerks his chin toward the door, "Go."

"You...you don't mean it."

"Have I ever said anything that I don't mean to you?"

"N...never."

"Right." He cracks his neck. "So, stay and let me take your arse, or turn and go. Your choice."

Is it though? Considering I have no clothes to wear.

I take in his flushed cheeks, the hard tendons of his sculpted neck, the V of his skin exposed by the lapels of his shirt, the smattering of dark hair that arrows down to the part of him that I haven't yet seen.

"I'll stay."

His eyes gleam.

"On one condition," I force out the words.

"You don't get to call the shots."

"You haven't heard what I'm going to say."

"Hmph." He flattens his lips, "What is it?"

"Take off your shirt."

"That's it?"

"And your pants..."

"No."

"What?"

"I don't undress in front of strangers."

"I'm hardly a stranger, you ass," I scowl. "You've had your tongue inside of me."

He smacks his lips, "And you taste so fucking good, Flower."

I redden, then push my thighs together. Why the hell do I find that so hot? I stare at him and he seems to relent.

"Okay, this once." He unbuttons his shirt and the lapels gape in the front. I take in those cut abs, the hollow of his belly, the massive tent over his crotch.

"Happy?" He smirks.

"No," I grouse.

"Too bad." He jerks his chin, "Face forward."

I hesitate.

"Flower," he warns.

I huff, then turn to glance forward.

"So, you're staying?"

His voice is right behind me. The heat of his body envelops me, and the hair on my nape prickles. I know what's coming, and damn him. I don't want him to do it, and yet, I have to find out how it would be to be taken by him.

"Why don't you want to fuck me?" I demand.

"Newsflash," he growls. "I am gonna fuck your arse." Cold liquid pours down the valley between my butt cheeks.

I shiver. My belly knots. "Th...that's not what I mean. Why don't you want to..." I hesitate, "Want to—"

"Tear into your luscious pussy?"

"Jesus," I breathe, "you have a filthy mouth."

"One you love, admit it."

"You have me there," I draw in a breath. "I don't know why those uncouth words from you turn me on."

"Don't beat yourself about it." He leans in, kisses my shoulder.

The tenderness in that gesture. I blink. Wow. I glance at him sideways. "It's not what I am used to," I mumble. "I mean, I've been with men—"

He slaps my arse.

"Hey," I protest.

"Don't fucking talk about anyone else when I'm with you." He glares at me.

"But I mean—"

He wraps his fingers around my neck in a gesture I'm coming to recognize as the hallmark of his dominance. It's hot, I'll admit. It's what sets him apart from anyone else I've been with... Well, not only, but it's the confidence with which he handles my body, how he massages the cold liquid of the conditioner in between my butt cheeks, and works his finger inside my backhole, then follows it up with a second digit...while he holds my gaze, and intensifies the pressure on the back of my neck just enough so I tip up my chin and push out my butt.

"Good girl," he grunts. And my nipples harden; my pussy clenches. The blue of his eyes deepens.

He works a third finger inside of me and I gasp, "Oh, my... Oh wow, Damian... Oh..."

"How does it feel?"

"F-full," I stutter. "It's too much. I can't."

"You can." His lips curl, "I'll make sure."

A shiver runs up my spine. "What if it hurts?" I whine.

"It will," he promises.

"What?" I gape, "If you think you're selling this to me, you're mistaken."

He lowers his head and bites me on the bridge of where my shoulder meets my neck.

"Ow," I yelp. "That hurts, as well."

"Just priming you, babe."

"I'm not a steak."

He chuckles, "You're softer." He curls his finger inside of me and I snap my head back and against his shoulder.

"Not to mention, fucking hot." He does something with his fingers, a jerky circling motion that sets off a burst of sensation that sweeps up my spine. "And tight. So tight." His voice seems to break. Did it? Nah, not possible.

Sparks flare behind my eyes. "Oh, my god," I gasp.

"I'll take that as a compliment," His chuckle rumbles up my spine. My nerve endings seem to pop, all at once, and moisture pools between my legs.

"I'm so empty." I slap my hand over my mouth. Did I just say that aloud?

How is it that when he touches me, I lose all of my filters, all of my carefully planned forward momentum mantras, the ones I picked up from self-help books along the way. Clearly, none of the authors of those books had come up against a real-life obstacle like Damian, someone who'd sweep through all the barriers, who'd get under your skin and turn every preconceived notion you had about yourself upside down. "Do it," I snarl.

"You forgot the magic word."

"Are you serious?" I angle my body to steal a glance at him, but he keeps me immobile with that warm hand of his that's still fixed on my nape, like I'm a bloody kitten. Hell, I feel as powerless and as pathetically needy. "Damian," I whine.

"Say the word, Flower."

I lick my lips. "This is stupid."

"Not the word I was looking for."

He withdraws his fingers, and my stomach clenches; my thighs spasm. That feeling of emptiness multiples—no, quadruples—in my belly. "Fine, fine, whatever," I huff. "Please, Damian, fuck my ar—"

The hard crown of his dick nudges my backhole, then he breaches me.

"Ow," I protest. "It hurts. It hurts." I pull away—or rather try to wriggle away from him, try being the operative word, for he wraps a heavy hand around my center, pulls me flush against his hard chest, then coaxes me to turn my chin up and toward him. "Damian—"

He closes his mouth over mine. He stays as is, his hard length throbbing inside of me, allowing me to adjust to his size... As if that's ever going to happen.

He curls his fingers around my neck again, then reaches down to play with my pussy. He dances his fingers down my core then back up to pinch my clit. I gasp, draw in a breath, and he slips further inside my backchannel. A moan wells up, and he swallows it down. He sucks on my tongue, while his fingers play with my core, and his hard cock... OMG... He pulls out, then thrusts back inside, there's a pinch and I gasp.

"Take a deep breath," he commands.

I follow his direction, draw in a breath and release it, then again. My muscles relax. I unclench and he slips in deeper. He thrusts two fingers inside my soaking channel and I shudder.

Goosebumps flare on my skin and a trembling grips my legs.

I throw my arm up and around his shoulders, hold on as he releases my pussy, only to hook his arm under my knee. He pulls up my leg, presses it into the window.

And the angle of my body allows him to slide in further. The fullness is unlike anything I have experienced before. Not that I have that much experience, but still... This... What he's doing to me... It's different, balancing me on the edge of pain and pleasure, that in-between place where all I can do is moan his name, "Damian," I plead, "Please."

I tip up my chin, meet his gaze. He glares down at me, so close that I notice the dot on his left pupil. It's something so intimate, something only a lover would notice... Or an enemy. "What am I to you?"

"You're mine." He growls.

"Damian," I whisper, then reach up to cup his cheek. "Damian."

His features twist and a vein throbs at his temple. "I hate what you do to me," his voice whispers over my skin.

I frown. "Damian, what do you—?"

He thrusts in with enough force that my entire body jolts. At the same time, he tightens the hold around my neck, enough that my oxygen peters out. Darkness closes in on the edges of my vision as he begins to fuck my arse in earnest. In and out of me, again and again. My pussy clenches, heat sears my spine, I curl my toes, dig my fingers into his back, and gasp and moan and cry out. He doesn't stop. He pushes into me, all the way in, filling me in a way that I wouldn't have thought possible. Oh my God, I'm going to—

"Come." He releases his hold on my leg, thrusts his fingers inside my pussy. "Come all over my fingers," he insists. "Now," he snaps at the same time that he releases his hold on my neck and the climax crashes over me.

My orgasm sweeps up my legs, my torso, as the oxygen inflates my lungs. I throw back my head and howl as blue sparks flare behind my closed eyes. The climax goes on and on, and I hold onto him. Unable to keep my knee pressed into the window, I lower my leg, tightening the hold on his dick. He lowers his head and bites me on my shoulder and the pain shoots down to my belly. A second orgasm slithers up my spine, this one gentler, more mellow as it shivers over me. I slump and he wraps his big arms around me. Holds me as his dick throbs inside me still. Vibrations grip my back, a humming reaches my ears.

"Damian," I whisper.

"Shh." He kisses the top of my head, then pulls out of me.

I glance up and meet his gaze. "You didn't come," I point out.

"I know." His voice is matter of fact.

"I am beginning to think you are never going to orgasm in my presence."

He tilts his head, "Now that you point it out..."

"What are you afraid of?" I scowl.

"Myself." His features turn bleak, the skin stretching across his cheeks, highlighting the hollows under his eyes.

"Who hurt you?" I burst out. "Who turned you into this..."

"This?"

"Unfeeling monster?"

"That the best you can do?" He turns me, then scoops me up in his arms. I glance up at the jut of his chin, the weeks-old growth of whiskers that he'd trimmed for this occasion.

"The Seven, they are important to you?"

"They are family." He stalks over to the bath tub, lowers me to sit on the edge. He leans past me, turns on the taps, the hot water runs, and steam fills the room.

"You okay?"

I nod, glance up at his shuttered features.

"Good." He cleans himself up with a paper towel, then tucks himself inside, and zips up. "I'll send Isla with a change of clothes for you."

Turning, he leaves.

20

Damian

What the fuck was that about? Did I actually call her mine? What gives me the right to do so? Not that gut wrenching orgasm where she had come all over my fingers. Not the way she'd called my name as she'd writhed on my dick, and thrust her butt against my pelvis and thrown her head back and orgasmed, and again when I had bitten into her shoulder. I had bitten her... Fuck! Not once, but twice, and both times her body had fallen apart under my ministrations.

As she comes for me

As she begs me

As she struggles under me

As the world outside stops

As my life ignites

As she calls out my name... All I can think is she is Mine. Only mine.

"Fuck that." She's not. She doesn't belong to me. She is merely a conduit for my creativity. The siren song for my muse, the inspiration for my next move. Fuck, now I am thinking in lyrics... an abundance of riches—the poetry that pours out of me every time she climaxes. "What the hell am I thinking?"

"That's what I'd like to know."

I stare down at the man who stands at the bottom of the staircase.

"What the fuck do you mean?" I take the steps two at a time, reach the landing, and brush past Arpad.

He grabs my shoulder, "Not so fast."

I turn on him, "Keep your hands to yourself pal."

"What's gotten into you, man?" He holds up his hands, his forehead furrowed.

"Nothing." Everything. Especially that dark-haired witch who's clearly cast some kind of a spell on me.

"What were you doing up there?"

"None of your business," I snap. Good thing the walls of the ranch are thick enough that no one had heard her scream. No one but me, that is. I can't stop the smirk that curls my lips.

"So, it's like that, huh?" He chuckles. "And PS, your belt's undone."

I swear aloud, then fasten my belt. "Get off my balls man." I pivot and stalk forward, Arpad on my heels. "Shit, can't you go fly a kite or something?"

"I don't fly kites... Never did, not even when I was a boy. And neither did you, by the way, pal."

"Yeah, yeah." I stalk forward to the door that leads to the patio where the rest of the crowd are still gathered.

Spotting Isla, I head for her, Arpad right behind. "Jesus, man, cut me a break," I snap.

"Trust me, where you're headed, you need a wing man."

"Go fuck yourself."

"Not interested." He chuckles.

"I forget you have a woman you are too much of a pussy to seal the deal with."

He grabs my shoulder, turns me around, "Shut the fuck up."

"You want a fight, you motherfucker?" I growl.

"I want you to take back what you said."

"No," I bare my teeth.

He throws a punch. I duck. "Hold on, I need to first take care of something else."

I stalk toward Isla. "Julia," I jerk my chin in the direction of the house, "she needs your help."

"What happened?" She frowns.

"She's, uh, up in the bathroom."

"What did you do to her?"

"Nothing she didn't want done," I insist.

"I don't believe you." She frowns. "Did you hurt her?"

I stare at her, then look away.

"Motherfucker," she snarls. "Why the hell are you toying with her?"

"I'm not." I slide a finger under my collar. "Look, it's complicated, okay?"

"You bet your ass it is, buddy." She folds her arms over her chest. "I swear, sometimes I can't thank my stars enough that I'm not entangled with a man."

"Is that right?" Liam prowls over to stand next to her. "You sure about that?"

She flinches, then glances at him sideways. "Hello, Mr. Not-one-of-the-Seven."

"Liam," he says through gritted teeth. "My name is Liam."

"Goodbye Mr. Whatever-your-name-is." She flounces off. "And newsflash, I'm not interested."

"What the fuck?" He stares after her.

"What the fuck?" I frown at him. "You sweet on her or something, man?"

"I don't do sweet anything." He turns those cold eyes on me and I bloody believe him. The Seven of us are ruthless and have seen enough to know that life's not easy, and each of us have our ways, albeit unorthodox, to cope with that, but this man...? He was born with the proverbial silver spoon in his mouth and has had a privileged existence, by all counts, so why the hell do I get the impression that he's as tortured as us, if not more?

"Not that I care," I growl, "Except Isla is Amelie and Summer's friend, both of whom married into the circle, which means she comes under the protection of the Seven, so you better not mess with her, man."

"And Julia?" He scratches his jaw, "What about her?"

"Don't talk about her." I widen my stance, "If I were you, I'd stay the fuck away from her."

He chuckles, "And if I were you, I'd duck."

"Why would I?" The hair on my forearms rises.

I angle away, but not quickly enough, for Arpad's fist connects with my shoulder. Liam steps aside. I grunt, then grab Arpad's arm and throw him over my shoulder.

He hits the ground, lays there winded, then jumps up, and turns to me.

We circle each other, as the rest of the men close in.

"Who's the more frustrated, you think?" Sinner drawls.

"I don't know, man. They both look angry enough to kill each other." Saint chuckles.

"Do you think we should leave them to it?" Weston asks. "They deserve it, considering they disrupted my wedding."

"They make for free entertainment, at least," Edward responds, his voice mild.

Arpad shakes his head, "Can you believe this?"

"We're surrounded by married folk," I roll my shoulders, "all ball-and-chained up and shit."

"Hey," Summer objects.

I wince. "Present company excluded, of course." I raise my hands.

"You women don't count as women anymore," Arpad offers.

"What the hell does that mean?" Victoria frowns. "What are we, if we aren't women?"

"He means you are the wives and fiancées... So—"

"So?" Amelie glowers between me and Arpad, "Are you guys trying to say that the married slash engaged among the Seven are less because of that?"

"You're right, Edward. This is entertaining," Weston quips.

"Umm." I rub the back of my neck.

"Shit, I can't believe that you hesitated." Sinclair chuckles. "Man, even I am not brave enough to take on the might of a woman."

"See." Summer pats his cheek. "He's changed, hasn't he?"

Sinclair shoots me a look over her head, his features wearing an agonized look.

I laugh, then turn it into a cough. I cover my mouth, "Umm, hey, didn't mean no harm, folks. Honest."

"Yeah," Arpad straightens, "just me and Rockstar here, blowing off steam." He nods.

I step toward him, at the same time that he closes the distance between us. I throw an arm around his shoulders. "See, all made up."

"Aww, you guys gonna kiss or something?" Saint taunts.

"Nope, don't want to make Julia jealous," Arpad retorts.

"The fuck you talking about?" I lower my arm and stare at him.

He rolls his shoulders, "Just telling it like it is, brother."

"There's nothing to tell here." I glare at him, "Not unless you count one sorry excuse of a man, who's carried around his feelings for a woman for years and not dared to confess it."

"That's it." Arpad pivots, hooks his leg around mine, tugs at the same time he shoves at my shoulder. The world tilts. The next moment, my back hits the ground. Pain shudders through me. "Fuck," I swear.

"Get up," Arpad growls from above me.

I spring up, shake my head to clear it, then charge him. I head butt him; he grunts, grabs me in a headlock. We struggle, evenly matched, break apart, then circle each other.

"Haven't seen you this upset in a long time," Arpad bares his teeth.

"I'm not the one carrying a torch."

"No, you're simply too scared to grab what's right in front of you."

"Fuck you," I growl.

"No, thank you," he shoots back.

"Shit," I straighten, "this is pointless."

Arpad rolls his shoulders, "It's bloody confounding, is what it is." He drags his fingers through his hair.

"I need a drink," I mutter.

"So do I." He holds out a hand.

"Don't push your luck, man," I growl.

"What happened here?" Amelie glances between us.

"What?" I frown.

"What?" Arpad dusts off the front of his jacket.

"And I thought women were temperamental?" Summer heaves a sigh.

"Just as things were beginning to get interesting, too," Victoria cries.

Saint wraps his arm around her. "Come on, darlin'. You shouldn't get stressed in your condition."

"I'm pregnant, not sick," she protests, but allows Saint to lead her away.

"What now?" I frown.

Arpad glances past me, "If I were you, I'd definitely get out."

"What the fuck do you mean?"

The back of my neck prickles and all of my senses pop. What the hell? Is she here?

"Damian, you motherfucker! You stupid-ass, good-for-nothing loser of a Rockstar." A voice that could only belong to the one woman I'd been trying to get away from rings out.

Silence descends on the crowd. I draw in a breath.

"Turn around and face me, you coward."

Julia's voice sounds closer. Guess there's no rest for the wicked huh?

I turn, just as she plants her fist in my side.

21

Julia

"How dare you?" My fist connects with his hard chest, but he barely moves. He doesn't blink, or seem surprised. What the hell? Not even his breathing changes.

"You ass." I punch his side again; pain shivers up my arm. I pull back, then aim for his groin this time. My fist connects with his rock-hard abdomen. He draws in a breath. A reaction, finally. I pull back, raise my fist again. He swoops down, grabs my wrist, then turns me around and hauls me against him.

"Calm down," his hard voice sounds near my ear.

"I will bloody not," I growl, trying to kick him.

He sidesteps but I catch him in the shin anyway. He curses under his breath. "The fuck is wrong with you?" he snaps.

"The fuck is wrong with you?" I shove the hair out of my eyes. "You left me on my own after...you...you..."

"I?"

"You know." I swallow, then glance around and take in the varying expressions of interest among the assembled faces. Bloody hell. Of course, we were the highlight of the afternoon. Likely, we'd usurped the attention from the bride and groom.

"Sorry," I direct my apologies at Amelie, who shakes her head.

"Don't worry," she mouths at me, then glances up at the man behind me who has me pinned to him. "You okay?" she asks me.

No.

No.

"Yeah," I tell them.

"You sure?" She stares between me and Damian, who pulls me closer.

"What? Don't you trust me with your friend?" He laughs. "Rest assured, I'll make sure she's taken care of."

"Hmm." She narrows her gaze at him, then points a finger in his direction, "I'll hold you to that."

I ensure that my features stay calm as she heads into the house, followed by the rest of the crowd; then I turn on the asshole who restrains me. "Let go," I hiss.

"No."

"I need to get out of here."

"So do I," he agrees.

"I'm not going anywhere with you," I snarl.

"You should have thought of that before you made a spectacle of yourself, and PS, what the fuck are you wearing?"

"What did you expect?" I hiss. "You left me there and walked off. And what's wrong with what I'm wearing?" I glance down at the plaid shirt and the too-short jeans and ballet pumps that Amelie had loaned me, courtesy of Tinkerbell.

"I sent your friend to help you, and I like the fit of these jeans against your arse."

"Should I thank you for that?" I scoff, "And stop talking about my butt."

"It would be a start." He lowers his voice, "And I haven't stopped thinking about it, considering I was your first there, after all."

"And yet you left me?" I bite the inside of my cheek.

"What did you expect? A post-coital cuddle, a kiss, a pat on the head."

"How about simple decency...you...you oaf?"

I swallow the thick lump of something that clogs my chest. What the hell had I been thinking rushing out here? When Isla had found me curled up in the bath tub having a good cry, it had been the last straw. Not that I don't appreciate her consoling me...but damn it! I am tired of being taken for granted by the world, by my life, by this obnoxious grumpy-pants rock star who, damn it... I still want to shag. Gah!

"The reason I came out here was to dare you," I snap.

"What?"

"I dare you to pose for me."

"What do you mean 'pose for me'?"

"Let me sculpt you."

"What do you mean? Like, out of clay?"

"No, out of toilet paper, you douche." I shake my head. "Yes, out of clay. I'm a clay artist, remember?"

"Thought you were a potter."

"A sculptor, actually."

"Is it me you're looking for?" he asks.

I still. "Did you paraphrase Hello! By Lionel Richie, in which she sculpts ___"

"His bust," he echoes my words.

I start; so does he.

He studies me for a moment. "So, do you like eighties music videos, or was that a lucky guess?"

"The first," I mumble.

"Hmm."

"So, will you pose for me?" I tilt my head.

"Maybe."

"Why is everything so difficult with you?"

"Because... It's you?" he offers. "You seem to bring out my dark side."

"You're no Luke Skywalker," I scoff.

"Thank God." He laughs. "I prefer a different kind of lightsaber, Flower."

"Eeugh." I make a gagging sound, "That was so, so, so bad."

"It was," he agrees. "If I release you, will you promise not to attack me?"

"Of course."

He releases me, takes a step back. I turn around and throw myself at him. I must surprise him this time, for he stumbles, then catches me by my shoulders.

"Stop," he commands.

"No." I try to kick at his shins.

He throws his arms around me, pulls me close to his chest, where the warmth of his body pours over me, where I can hear his heart hammer against his chest. Is he as aware of me as I am of him?

"Let me go." I strain in his hold and he plants his big palm around the nape of my neck to hold me captive. I am instantly wet.

Damn it, this shouldn't be happening. He's restraining me, he's holding me back, and I am turned on? What kind of depraved stupidity is it, that I find his ability to rein me in so primitive...so...bloody hot?

No way, am I going to stand for it.

I turn my face into the skin exposed by the 'V' of the lapels of his shirt. I draw in a deep breath, fill my lungs with the musky, cinnamon-laced male essence of his. I lick at the warm skin; he freezes. I bury my teeth in his chest and he laughs. He fucking laughs. I glance up to find his eyes gleaming; color smears his cheeks.

"Shit, that turned you on, didn't it?" I huff.

"Now you're getting to know me better." He grins and his teeth glint against his tanned skin. My belly flutters. Why the hell does he come across as so irresistible, even as he's preparing to take me apart bit by melting bit?

"No," I mumble.

"Yes." He nods. He applies enough pressure on my throat that I gasp.

"What...what are you doing?"

"Making sure that you understand my instructions, and PS, you're welcome."

"For what?"

"For saving you from being bored to death in this terribly august gathering."

"It's not August, you ass."

"You know what I mean," he pauses, "don't you?"

"Of course, I do," I huff. "I can't get over how archaic your prose is though, and I thought I was the only one who loved historicals."

"Hate historicals," he yawns, "but have a weakness for poetry. Comes with the territory. If it weren't for my lyrics, I wouldn't be here, after all, right?"

"Like I care."

"You should, for I hold your future in my hands."

"More like you need me, you bastard. It's why you keep wrenching orgasms out of me, after all."

His features close. "What do you mean?"

"That for some reason you like to... No, you need to, see me come. You have this strange compulsion to have me orgasm, to watch me fall apart under your ministrations. Makes me wonder if, in some strange way, it's not fueling your writing."

He glares at me, then releases me so suddenly that I stumble.

"I was right, huh?" I blink. "You really do think that my orgasms help you what—break through your creative deadlock?"

His nostrils flare. "I am not discussing this with you here."

"Then where?"

"You did mention wanting to sculpt me." He scowls.

"I...did."

"So, let's go to your studio."

"I...uh, I don't have one yet. I just flew in from Australia. haven't had time to, uh, set one up..." I bite down on my lower lip. Shit, this sounds like an excuse, but it's true. So why the hell does he narrow his gaze, look me up and down like he doesn't believe a word that I'm saying?

He grabs my upper arm, "Come on." He stalks forward, hauling me behind him.

"Hold on," I hiss. "I am getting tired of being dragged around by you, like I am a sack of potatoes."

"Be grateful I didn't throw you over my shoulder and whip your arse for your impertinence. Oh, wait. I already did that." He chuckles.

I scowl. "Can you get any more abhorrent?"

"Can you get any more cranky?"

"You're calling me cranky?" I yell, "You—"

"Julia, everything okay?" I glance up to find Isla planting herself in our path.

"Yeah, need some help?" Liam prowls up to place an arm around her shoulders.

She shakes it off. "Back off, this is my friend." She sets her jaw.

"And he's not," Liam drawls. "All the more reason I'd be happy to step in, if the situation demands."

"What?" I frown at him. "No, I... I'm good."

"You sure?" Liam glances between us. "Say the word and I—"

"You heard the lady," Damian growls. "Now, piss off."

"OMG," I throw up my hands, "I've had enough of this possessive caveman act."

"I haven't even started." Damian grabs my arm, "We're leaving. Julia's coming with me. End of story. Anyone have a problem with that?"

Silence; the crowd glances at us. Then Arpad scratches his jaw, "Can I borrow your bachelor pad at The Shard, considering you'll be wanting to move to a townhouse in Primrose Hill with the rest of the married folk?"

Damian stiffens, then draws himself up to his full height, "That won't be happening, I'm afraid. This is purely a transactional friends-with-benefits arrangement." He turns to me, "Besides, I've sworn never to marry."

22

Julia

"What the hell was that about?" I mumble into the helmet that the rock star had jammed on my head, along with the boots, gloves and heavy jacket—how the hell did he guess my size with such accuracy?— he'd asked me to don, before shoving me onto the bike that had been parked in the driveway of the ranch. Apparently, when you are stinking rich, you can get the hired help to drive your bike an hour out of the city to where you are, just so you have the pleasure of driving it home.

"What the hell was what about?" Damian's low drawl sounds in my ear.

I jump. Yeah, another thing you can buy when you're loaded, these techno-advanced head gear, aka helmets with built-in mics, that you can use to communicate with each other... While the bike purrs between my legs, setting off pin-pricks of lust up my spine.

"Jeez, do you have to go scaring me?" I grumble.

"Scaring you, huh?" He accelerates and the bike shoots forward.

I yelp, clamp my arms even tighter around his lean stomach, which I admit, is no hardship; especially since I am plastered to his broad back, with my thighs spread wide enough to accommodate the tight flanks of said Rockosaurus. He leans into a curve without slowing down, and I tighten my grip around him.

He chuckles.

Jerk.

"What's with that proclamation that you are never going to marry?" I burst out.

The tires squeal loudly enough that my eardrums reverberate with the vibration and the scent of burning rubber assails me through the protective covering of my helmet. Shit, either he's mad or this is just how he normally drives. "If you don't want to answer a question you only have to say so. I mean, you may have a death wish pal, but I don't. I—"

He slams on the brakes so suddenly that the back of the bike rises up in the air. I scream, hold onto him like he is the last mooring in a world gone mad. The bike rotates on its front wheel, does a complete 360 turn, before the back tire—the one I am positioned above—hits the tarmac, bounces once, then comes to a stop.

My limbs tremble and a bead of sweat runs down my spine. I bury my helmet-covered forehead into his back and stay where I am, not daring to move. I couldn't if I tried—my legs have gone to sleep, my fingers are frozen, despite the gloves, partly from fear, partly from the cold wind that had buffeted me as he'd torn his way up the road.

We stay there a beat, another.

There's not a house in sight, or another car. We'd been driving up a B road, one of those picturesque thoroughfares that run parallel to the highway. If there had been enough light, I would have noticed the vista of rolling hills and storybook cottages. No, strike that; even if it had been earlier in the day, I wouldn't have noticed the scenery, because I had been too busy reveling in the firm expanse of the back which I had been tucked into all this while—the planes of which clenched and unclenched as if there were a fight going on underneath his skin.

"Damian?" I finally venture. "You...you okay?"

He stays still, the motorcycle's engine throbbing underneath us. Then he switches it off and the silence that descends is almost painful to my ears. I swallow and my eardrums pop. That's better. "Damian?"

"How many times have I told you not to talk about dying?"

"I...I'm sorry."

"I'm not."

"Wh...what do you mean?"

"Get off the bike."

"What?"

"Do it," he snaps.

My muscles uncoil and sensations sizzle up my legs. Is it pins and needles of blood circulation being restored, or the primitive urge to comply with what he wants, when he wants, how...he wants? Holy hell, what's this insane need to comply with his every demand? Even the insane ones... Particularly the insane ones. Like this... I scramble off of the bike, stand next to him. "Give me that." He jerks his head toward my helmet. I take it off. A gust of wind blows my hair about my shoulders. He points at my jacket; I shrug off the protection. Goosebumps immediately shiver over my skin.

He tosses my stuff aside; then removes his helmet and throws it aside as well.

I wince. It's not my gear, but hell, if I don't appreciate the craftsmanship that went into it. "Hope the stuff is unbreakable," I mutter.

He doesn't respond. Instead, he lowers the kickstand of the Harley, leans the bike into it. He looks me up and down, then jerks his chin at my shirt, "Take it off."

I stiffen, "What? Here?"

"Where else?"

"Why would I do that?" I scowl.

"You want the job, remember?"

"And this is another...test I need to pass?" I frown.

"Maybe," he shrugs his shoulders, "maybe not."

Asshole's trying to dare me, huh? Is that what this is? Because I challenged him first? Likely, that's all it is. We'll see who blinks first, buster. I unhook the first button of my shirt, then the next. The cold wind instantly seeps down into the space between the fabric and my skin. My nipples tighten painfully... And it's not because he's following my progress...with those brooding, blue eyes of his.

I undo the last button on my shirt. He holds out his hand as I hand it over.

He takes in my bra—thank God I had worn one under the dress, then drops his gaze to my borrowed jeans. "Off with them."

"What?" I cry in horror. "No."

"Yes."

"Not here."

"There's no one here."

I glance around, don't see a single other person, or bird or insect, for that matter. I can do this. I am not gonna give in to whatever mindfuck thing he has got going on here. I lower the zipper of my jeans, then pause. Shit. "I don't have panties on," I gripe.

He tilts his head, and I shake my head, "Are you insane? I'm not going naked out here in the open."

"Thought you wanted to get close to nature and all that crap, which is why you went to Australia in the first place?"

"How do you know that?"

"It wasn't hard to guess." He raises his gaze to my face. "It's what women of a certain age do, when they're single and trying to find themselves. All that 'Eat Pray Love' shit, ya know?"

"You're a piece of shit, ya' know?" I spit out the words, then swoop my nails toward his face.

He laughs, hooks his fingers around my wrist, and tugs on me. The next second I am looking down at the ground, splayed across his thighs and over the gas tank of his bike, which means I'm forced to thrust out my butt, up closer to his face.

He palms my arse—thank God, I still have the jeans on.

A shiver of desire runs up my spine. Fuck me, but nothing new there, I guess. I mean, I do like it when he touches me...anywhere...everywhere... especially on that part of me which is the fleshiest, something which I've hated, but which he, apparently, has an unhealthy liking for.

"I am beginning to think you have a butt obsession," I huff.

"Only with yours."

I still.

Above me, he ceases stroking my flesh, his big palm covers my backside, and I swear, I can discern every single fingerprint of his through the seat of the fabric that separates us. Damnit, I changed my mind. I should have taken off my pants so he'd have easier access to the melting, aching core of me. I squeeze my thighs together, push my crotch into the still warm fuel tank.

"Did you know your figure was the first thing I noticed about you."

"Wha...what?" I blink.

"You're shaped like a guitar."

"You mean I have a big-ass arse?"

"A curvy, sexy, beautiful backside that I wanted to sink my teeth into." He slides back on the motorbike, then pulls down my jeans. Cool air hits my bare arse.

"What are you—?" I yell as he lowers his head and fastens his mouth on my butt, his sharp teeth digging into the flesh of my arsecheeks. I squirm, wriggle, try to pull away. He merely places his heavy arm across my lower back, "Hold still, darlin'. Don't want to hurt you, now."

"You already did that, you cock, when you sank your big dick in my arsehole," I snap.

He laughs, then slides his fingers across the valley between my buttcheeks. "Did it sting?"

"What do you think?"

"I think, you want me to fuck you again."

"I... I...do." I blink.

Shit, didn't mean for that to pop out. Here I am, splayed out across the lap of this rock star, in the middle of nowhere, and hell, if I can't stop myself from pushing my aching core into the smooth metal of the road hog under me and wishing it were something else entirely.

"So, you finally decided to come clean, huh?" I turn my head to find he's wearing an amused expression.

"No thanks to your Jenny from the Block routine."

His gaze widens, then he throws his head back and laughs, a full blown throaty, from-the-belly chuckle that rolls down my spine and arrows straight to that space which is constantly needy around him...i.e. my stupid pussy.

"You laughing at me?" I scowl.

"Just appreciative of the scenery." He grins. "And of your sense of humor."

"At least you placed the reference, I'll give you that."

"You mean the part where Ben Affleck bites J-Lo's luscious arse in the music video?" His lips kick up, "What's not to like? It's every teenaged boy's fantasy come true." He lowers his gaze down to my curved flesh, "As is this."

"Don't get ahead of yourself, motherfucker."

"Language." He clicks his tongue. "Not that your potty tongue doesn't turn me on, but I have other, better, uses for it."

My center instantly grows wetter, bloody hell. Everything he does and says is like a green signal to my hormones... Not even that... I simply have to think of him and my ovaries sit up and beg. Okay, not a pretty picture, and I'm definitely getting out of here. "Unhand me." I push against his thigh.

He holds me in place. "I'm not done yet, Flower," he drawls.

"But I am."

"Trust me, you're not." He flips me around so I'm peering up at the sky, arms flung out as I try to hold onto something to steady myself.

He yanks my pants down to around my ankles, then pulls them off.

He leans back, rakes his gaze down my naked body. "If only you could see yourself." His voice grows rough.

Heat flushes my skin, my nipples pebble further, and my core clenches.

He lowers his face to my stomach, then drags his unshaven chin across my lower belly.

I shudder as liquid heat blooms between my legs. I grasp at his hair, tug on it, then push it toward the aching emptiness that coils in my pussy.

"What's your hurry?" His lips curve against my stomach.

"I... I'm not in a hurry."

He slaps my pussy.

I cry out, "What the hell?"

"Thought I told you not to lie."

"I... I'm not..."

He slaps my core again. I arch up and into him, "Stop..."

He raises his head, "Do you want me to?"

I hold his gaze, peer into his burning blue gaze. "I don't know," I whisper.

"Good girl." His voice lowers to a hush, "I am going to eat you out, gonna suck on your sweet, swollen center, suck on your clit, and play with your swollen pussy lips, you get me?"

23

Damian

Her pupils dilate, her breathing grows shallow. "What's stopping you?" she tips up her chin and asks.

I bark out a laugh. Can't help it. This sassy little thing is laid out like a delectable meal, and yet, she can't back down. She's gotta go toe-to-toe with me, gotta dare me. Again.

"You, Flower." I peer into her eyes, "I want to watch how you react when I—"

I grip her waist, then raise her up, only to position her so she's straddling my hips.

"Oh," she gasps. "Wow."

"Is that a sound of appreciation, I hear."

"Just of surprise." She swipes her hair over her shoulder revealing the long line of her throat. I lean in and nuzzle her, right there, in the hollow between her clavicles. She shivers; goosebumps pop on her skin.

"Are you cold?"

"I'm naked, at the height of winter, in the middle of nowhere." She snorts, "What do you think?"

"Time to get you warm, huh?" I scoot her up the fuel tank, then press my palm to the middle of her chest. She obeys, beautifully. She stretches out, her head on the handlebars, her hair flowing over and down the headlight. I drag my hand down the valley between her breasts, over the slight curve of her belly to the warmth between her legs. She shudders, tries to close her thighs.

"Don't," I insist, "let me see you open for me, Flower."

She gulps, a flush spreads up her creamy skin, and arousal glints on the inside of her thigh. I scoop up the moisture, suck on it. She gasps.

I slide my finger inside her pussy and her entire body jerks. "Oh, Damian."

And there it is. When she says my name like it's a prayer, when she squints up at me, gaze wide, tits standing up, nipples perky and ready to be pulled and teased and sucked on by me. When I slide a second and third finger inside of her sweet cunt and begin to work my digits in and out of her, and she brings her hands up to cup her breasts and squeeze them together, making an inviting hollow, all thought goes out of my head. I reach down between us, lower the zipper on my pants. A gust of wind blows her hair across her face just then. She reaches for it.

"Don't," I order and she lowers her arm. "Squeeze your nipples."

She locks her forefinger and thumb around each diamond-hard tip and squeezes. A moan ripples up her throat. My dick hardens further as blood rushes to my groin. I grab my dick, take it out and squeeze it from base to crown.

"Damian, please," she groans again.

My shaft goes impossibly hard, my thighs spasm, the blood begins to pump at my temples behind my eyelids, at my wrists, even in my balls. I pull my fingers out of her, replace them with my cock.

She draws in a breath, tips her chin down, "Damian I—"

I thrust forward, breach her in one smooth movement.

She groans, "Oh, my God... Dami-aaan." She tries to wriggle away.

I grip her hips, hold her down "Easy." I glare at her. "Easy now."

"You're...too big."

"Just right for you."

"I... I can't..."

"You can."

I lock my gaze with hers, rub circles with my thumb into her clit, and stay...and stay... Allow her to adjust to my width, as she clenches around my cock. So hot, so tight. I grit my teeth, focus on not moving. Just a little more time, a few more seconds until she's ready.

She swallows, "Damian..." She licks her lips, "More."

My vision tunnels and all of my senses seem to pop. How the hell does she know exactly what to say to me? Something hot stabs at my chest, my ribcage tightens, and my breath catches in my throat. I slide forward, feed another inch of my length inside of her. "You're so beautiful." The breath rushes out of me. "Flower," I growl.

She wraps her fingers around each of my wrists, her touch sparking off a fresh need that swirls down my skin, lodges at the base of my spine.

"Julia," I growl.

"D... Damian?"

I squeeze my eyes shut... Shit, I'll never get used to her calling out my name... Something primal...primeval about it... Something so wrong...so right... So new and yet so familiar. Shit. Fuck... The tension in my balls grows impossibly big, the blood thuds at my temples, the beat growing louder, more insistent.

"Julia," I draw in a breath, "Julia..."

"I'm here, Damian."

I tighten my hold on her, dig my fingers into her soft skin. She's going to wear my marks there... Good. I want that. I want every part of her body to bear evidence of my possession, of how I made her writhe and throb and yearn and cry out as she begged for more of my cock. "Julia," I growl.

"Look at me, Damian. See how much I need you."

I snap my eyes open, hold onto the hunger in those beautiful green eyes. "I...am going to fuck you now."

"What?" She stares, "Bu...but...you are already—"

"I'm not even half-way in."

"Oh," she whimpers, "oh, God."

"Hold on, Julia."

"No.. Wait..."

I piston my hips forward, bury another inch inside of her and her entire body jerks, the motorcycle shudders, and I dig my heels into the ground to hold us upright. Shit, not the brightest idea, fucking her for the first time astride my bike... But hell, if this isn't another fantasy come true. I lean into her, push the hair from her face, thrust my thumb between her open lips. "Suck me," I command, and she draws my digit inside her hot little mouth as I pull out then pump inside of her, burying myself to the hilt.

She bites down on my digit and holds on, both of her hands wrapped around my forearm, as I begin to fuck her. I thrust into her, filling her, stretching her, feeding my cock inside her hungry pussy. "Fuck, Julia."

She moans deep inside her throat, and my balls draw up, and my groin tightens. I pull my thumb from her mouth, lean over her, hold my lips close to hers, then thrust forward and into her, as I bottom out, against her pelvic bone.

Her eyes roll back in her head, she wraps her legs around my waist, digs her heels into my back and cries out, "Oh. My. God. Damian."

I hook my arms under her thighs, prop her legs over my shoulders, then pull out, and thrust into her again. I propel my hips forward, slant my body and pump into her again and again. Her back arches off the bike; she grabs onto my arms, digs her fingernails into my skin. I'll be wearing her marks as surely as she wears mine.

"Come with me," I command, and she clamps her pussy around my dick. She thrusts her breasts up, nipples stabbing into my chest." Now," I snap, and she shatters, moisture flooding her core.

Shudders wrack her body, and she throws her head back and screams. I watch her as her shoulders jerk and her breasts tremble. I bend, nip at one nipple; she shivers. I kiss the valley between her breasts, lick her other nipple, and she whimpers. "Damian..."

"Shh." I nibble little kisses up her throat back to her lips, kiss her again and again. Tilt my mouth to hers, slide my tongue inside to play with hers. My cock jumps, my balls beg for release. I begin to move inside of her, thrusting into her hot channel, again and again. She flutters open her eyelids, entangles that soulful green gaze with mine. "You're fucking beautiful," I pull out then plunge inside her in one long, smooth stroke that has me buried inside her completely.

"Oh," she gasps.

"Bloody hell." I grit my teeth, hold her gaze, "I'm going to—"

"Come inside me," she gasps.

That's when I remember, I am not wearing a condom, and no way, am I going to come inside of her unprotected, not even if she's on the pill.

I pull out and come all over her chest, her breasts, across her chin and her face.

Her breath comes in pants, in tandem with mine. My heart thuds so hard in my ribcage, I am sure it's going to jump out. I glance down, then rub the goey mess into her skin, about her breasts, into her nipples, down her curvy waist, and between her legs. I scoop up some of the mix, hold it to her mouth; she licks it off. I lean down, then kiss her, taste myself and her, and our combined cum, interlaced with that honey of her taste, and, fuck, if that isn't the most erotic thing ever. My dick twitches against her core again. Her gaze widens, "Again?" she croaks.

That's when my phone alarm goes off.

Julia

I watch from the window of my apartment as Damian pulls away on his bike. He'd insisted on escorting me to my apartment door, and seeing me in, then kissed me—on the cheek—before he'd left, without any promises or anything to raise any expectations in me in terms of when I was going to see him next. Not that I had expected anything else...

Well, okay, so I had. I mean, hey, a woman is bound to get her expectations up after that crazy scene he orchestrated on his bike. Holy shit, he shagged me on his bike in the middle of nowhere, then rubbed his cum into me. He also pulled out a bandana and wiped me down before helping me back into my clothes.

We hadn't said a word to each other on the trip back—huh. Is that good or bad? It isn't good, but is it bad? I mean, he had orgasmed too, just not inside me. And he hadn't asked to fuck me again... And I hadn't invited him inside the apartment either.

How could I, when the alarm that had gone off on his phone had been a reminder that he needed to get home to take care of his daughter.

Turns out, when you're dating— Is this dating? Or should I call it fucking? Or perhaps it's the 'Damian's 100 Ways to Get Julia to Orgasm' game that we're playing? Well, whatever you want to call it, it's complicated, more than usual, when the guy in question is a famous rock star and a single dad, to boot.

And why the hell is he still holding me at arm's length from his kid?

Doesn't he trust me enough to take care of his child?

I drag my fingers through my hair and encounter a gummy piece of something... I slide it off, glance at it... It's the remnants of when he came all over me... My belly clenches. Why the hell had I found that hot...and filthy...but a turn on? I squeeze my thighs together... I mean, I'd fantasied about kink...but never been part of the kind of escapades the man seems to have in mind every time we meet. Yep, Damian f'ing Savage gets a freaking 1000+ when it comes to being innovative. And he isn't a selfish lover... I mean, he's been entirely focused on my orgasms all through... And when I'd confronted him about it... He hadn't denied that he loves to make me come. He seems to get some perverse pleasure out of it...Maybe more than that.
